Appearance:

For the Appellant: Craig Immel

Issued: November 7, 2011

Decision and Order

On October 13, 2011, Green Property Funds (GPF) filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (GO). In that determination, GO responded to a request for information that GPF filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require GO to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On August 23, 2011, GPF submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), for a copy of a proposal from Enersolv, LLC to the Caddo Tribe of Oklahoma (Enersolv Proposal). See DOE Headquarters FOIA Request Form from Craig Immel (August 23, 2011) (FOIA Request). DOE/FOIA forwarded the request to GO because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

GO conducted a search of its records but did not locate documents responsive to GPF's request. See E-mail from Carol Battershell, Manager, GO, to Craig Immel, GPF (September 12, 2011) (Determination Letter). On October 13, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received GPF's Appeal in which it requests an additional search for the Enersolv Proposal. See Letter from Craig Immel to OHA (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[1]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted GO to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. In its response, GO explained that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued the original award in October 2009 to the Caddo Tribe, of which Enersolv was a subcontractor or grantee. NNSA transferred the award to GO for monitoring and administration. See E-mail from Michele Harrington Altieri, Freedom of Information Officer, GO, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (October 24, 2011) (October 24 E-mail). GO conducted thorough searches of its records using the search terms "Caddo, 1638, Award Number DE-EE000168, and Enersolv." See October 24 E-mail. Of the 127 potentially responsive records that were found, there was no indication that the Caddo Nation of Oklahoma provided GO with the Enersolv Proposal.[2] Id.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that GO performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to GPF's request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, GPF's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Green Property Funds on October 13, 2011, OHA Case No. FIA-11-0002, is hereby denied.

[1] All OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

[2] In his FOIA Request, Mr. Immel states that the Enersolv proposal was sent to Ms. Polly Edwards, Environmental Director of the Caddo Nation of Oklahoma. See FOIA Request. Since Mr. Immel identified the Caddo Nation of Oklahoma as the potential holder of records, we suggest that he contact them to retrieve the information that he seeks.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

On October 17, 2011, Heart of America Northwest (HOAN or "Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Richland Operations Office (RO). In that determination, RO withheld information in response to a request for information that HOAN filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require RO to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On July 12, 2011, HOAN submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), and RO, for documents relating to Washington Department of Ecology's policy for the withholding or disclosure of DOE documents marked Official Use Only (OUO) or sensitive, in response to Public Record Act requests. See Letter from Ross Pearson, Legal Intern, HOAN (July 12, 2011) (FOIA Request). RO processed the request because any document responsive to HOAN's request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

RO conducted a search of its records and located one document responsive to HOAN's request. See Letter from Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, RO, to Ross Pearson, HOAN (August 23, 2011) (Determination Letter). In its Determination Letter, RO withheld portions of the document claiming that the responsive material was shielded under the attorney-client and deliberative process privileges of Exemption 5. See Determination Letter. In withholding the information, RO stated that the information withheld in the responsive document summarized communications between RO attorneys and their clients and was based upon expressed opinions on legal and policy matters. Id. at 2. RO also withheld portions of the document as non-responsive to HOAN's FOIA Request. Id.

On October 17, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received HOAN's Appeal, in which it requests an additional search for the requested information. See Letter from Alec Osenbach to OHA (Appeal Letter). HOAN also challenges RO's decision to withhold information under Exemption 5 and as non-responsive to its request. See E-mail from Gerry Pollet, Executive Director, HOAN to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (October 21, 2011).

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[1]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted RO to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to Dorothy Riehle, Freedom of Information Officer, RO (October 26, 2011). RO informed us that it conducted a manual search of its records in locations where documents would most likely be found. See E-mail from Dorothy Riehle, Freedom of Information Officer, RO, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (October 26, 2011) (October 26 E-mail). Specifically, files were searched in the Office of Chief Counsel in the Environmental Division; no responsive records were located. RO also conducted an electronic search of the Integrated Data

Management System (IDMS)[2] using the key words: Ecology, Washington State Department of Ecology, OUO, Official Use Only, and Office of the Attorney General. This search yielded one partially responsive document which was provided, in part, to the Appellant. Id.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that RO performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to HOAN's request.

B. Exemption 5 and "Non-Responsive" Withholdings

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. §1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

In withholding portions of the document from HOAN, RO relied upon both the "attorney-client" and "deliberative process" privileges of Exemption 5. Because, as discussed below, we find that the withheld information is subject to the attorney-client privilege, and thus protected by Exemption 5, we need not consider whether the deliberative process privilege is also applicable to the withheld information. See, e.g., Another Way BPA, TFA-0437 (2010).

An agency may withhold information under the attorney-client privilege if it is a "confidential communication . . . between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc., v. Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Although it fundamentally applies to facts divulged by a client to his attorney, the privilege also encompasses opinions given by an attorney to a client based upon, and thus reflecting, those facts. See, e.g., Jernigan v. Dep't of the Air Force, No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998). The privilege also encompasses communications between attorneys that reflect client-supplied information. See, e.g., Green v. IRS, 556 F. Supp 79, 85 (N.D. Ind. 1982). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. Clarke v. American Commerce Nat'l Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992). The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 291, 403-04 (1976). In other words, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. Power Wire Constructors, Case No. TFA-0312 (May 27, 2009).

After reviewing the document at issue, we have concluded that RO's determination in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from HOAN is a portion of an e-mail containing comments and opinions drafted by a RO environmental attorney to a manager in one of its client offices. The communication consists of confidential discussions regarding a negotiation involving a policy determination. As such, this communication consists of a legal opinion arising from facts shared between the RO attorney and his client and is properly protected pursuant to the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5.

Finally, HOAN challenges the withholding of information as "non-responsive." We have reviewed the redacted information, which consists of comments about the administrative record of a hazardous waste management permit. We determined that this information is not responsive to HOAN's FOIA Request and was therefore properly withheld. See, e.g., Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0295 (2009) (non-responsive material is not subject to disclosure under the FOIA); see also Northwest Technical Resources, Inc., Case No. VFA-0611 (2000).

C. Public Interest Determination

The fact that the requested material falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the withheld material in the document at issue, which consists of the opinion of a RO attorney given to assist a manager with a negotiation strategy prior to the formulation of an agency response. Release of this information would reveal the analysis that the attorney used to advise the manager on how to proceed during the crux of the negotiation. It would also reveal the manager's final position. We therefore find that RO properly invoked the attorney-client privilege to withhold the negotiation strategy information contained in the document.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that RO performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to HOAN's request. In addition, we find that RO properly withheld the responsive material pursuant to the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

Finally, we find that RO properly withheld information as non-responsive to HOAN's FOIA request. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied.

Decision and Order

On October 18, 2011, Len Latkovski ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR). In that determination, OIR responded to a request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On July 21, 2011, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), for records relating to certain Soviet cities. See DOE Headquarters FOIA Request Form from Len Latkovski (July 21, 2011) (FOIA Request). DOE/FOIA forwarded the request to the Office of History and Heritage Resources (History) in the Office of the Executive Secretariat because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

History conducted a search of its records but did not locate responsive documents. See E-mail from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Len Latkovski (September 13, 2011) (Determination Letter). On October 18, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received the Appellant's Appeal in which he requests an additional search for the information that he requested. See Letter from Len Latkovski to OHA (Appeal Letter).

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted OIR to ascertain the scope of History's search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA to Joan Ogbazghi, Information Access Specialist, OIR *(*November 7, 2011). In its response, History explained that it conducted thorough searches of its finding aids[2] using the Soviet city names that the Appellant provided. See E-mail from Terry Fehner, Historian, History, to Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA *(*November 14, 2011) (Fehner E-mail). There were no references found and no responsive documents were located. Id. Based on the foregoing, we find that History performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to the FOIA Request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, the Appeal should be denied.

Decision and Order

On November 1, 2011, National Security Archive (NSA or "Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR). In that determination, OIR withheld information in response to a request for information that NSA filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to conduct a further search and release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On May 6, 2010, NSA submitted a FOIA request to the Office of Information Resources at DOE Headquarters (OIR), for documents pertaining to U.S. preparations for the Fifteenth Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Fifth Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol held on December 7-18, 2009, in Copenhagen, Denmark. See Letter from Robert Wampler, Senior Fellow, NSA, to Carolyn Lawson, OIR (May 6, 2010) (FOIA Request). OIR forwarded the request to the Office of the Executive Secretariat (OES) and the Office of Policy and International Affairs (OPIA) because any documents responsive to the request, if they exist, would fall under the jurisdiction of those offices.

OES conducted a search of its records and did not locate responsive documents. See Letter from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Robert Wampler, NSA (September 29, 2011) (Determination Letter). OPIA conducted a search of its records and located 26 responsive documents. Id. In its Determination Letter, OIR released 22 of the OPIA documents in their entirety and withheld portions of two documents (labeled Documents 1 and 22) claiming that the responsive material was shielded under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.[1] See id. In withholding the information, OIR stated that the information withheld in the responsive documents contained comments that do not represent final agency policy on the matters that they discuss. Id.

On November 1, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received NSA's Appeal, in which it challenges OPIA's decision to withhold information under Exemption 5.[2] See Letter from Robert Wampler to OHA (Appeal Letter). NSA also challenges the search for responsive records and requests that DOE perform an additional search for briefing material and responsive records at the National Records Center. Id.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." *Miller v. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[3]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted OPIA to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents, specifically with regard to briefing material and other records that may be stored at an off-site records holding center. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Elmer Holt, OPIA, and Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (November 22, 2011); see also E-mail to Joan Ogbazghi, OIR, from Avery Webster, Attorney-

Examiner, OHA (November 22, 2011); Memo To File, dated November 25, 2011. We have not yet received a response, and, therefore, are remanding this matter to OIR for a determination of whether responsive documents are located at an off-site records holding center. Any additional responsive documents and briefing material that are located will be identified and released to NSA, or the basis for their withholding will be explained in a new determination letter, with specific reference to one or more FOIA exemptions.

B. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. §1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In withholding portions of the document from NSA, OPIA relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

We have reviewed Document 1, a letter to "Amanda" from "Elmer," consisting of five paragraphs. The withheld portions of Document 1 consist of opinions, analysis and comments drafted by an OPIA manager regarding "R&D" (research and development) and technology financing. The comments and opinions contained in the letter are clearly predecisional and deliberative. The letter was drafted to assist a DOE employee formulate recommendations. In addition, the document reflects the opinion of a DOE manager regarding a proposed agency position. These comments and opinions were subject to further agency review and do not represent the final agency decision. We therefore find that OPIA's determination in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. We further find, however, that the first six words of the fourth paragraph constitute segregable information. The information is factual and does not represent opinion that reflects OPIA's deliberative process. OPIA must segregate and release this information or claim another exemption, explaining the basis for their withholding in a new determination letter.

Document 22 consists of an electronic message (e-mail) chain with four e-mails regarding "Copenhagen talking point for S2 meeting with Ambassador Shankar on Dec. 15." We will discuss each e-mail in reverse chronological order, beginning at the top of the page.

E-mail 1, dated December 10, 2009, and sent at 10:49 am, consists of two sentences. The first sentence contains factual information concerning the Deputy Secretary's meeting with the Ambassador of India. The information contained in this sentence does not reveal the personal opinions, analyses, or recommendations of those individuals involved and as such, does not reflect OPIA's deliberative process. OPIA must either release this information or claim another exemption, explaining the basis for their withholding in a new determination letter. However, the second sentence consists of comments regarding possible future communications within the U.S. Government relating to the Deputy Secretary's future meeting with the Ambassador of India. As such, the second sentence is both predecisional and deliberative. It is predecisional because the comments were generated as part of a preparatory process in advance of the Deputy Secretary's meeting. It is also deliberative because it consists of internal deliberations regarding talking points to be provided to the Deputy Secretary in preparation for his meeting. We therefore find that the second sentence is protected under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

E-mail 2, dated December 3, 2009, and sent at 10:16 am, consists of three sentences which reference a meeting memorandum. We have reviewed this information and determined that the sentences contain factual information that does not represent opinion, analyses or recommendations that would reflect OPIA's deliberative process. OPIA must either release this information or claim another exemption, explaining the basis for their withholding in a new determination letter.

E-mail 3, dated December 3, 2009, and sent at 10:11 am, consists of two paragraphs. The first paragraph consists of opinion and comments regarding possible future communications within the U.S. Government relating to the Deputy Secretary's future meeting with the Ambassador of India. As such, the first paragraph is both predecisional and deliberative. It is predecisional because its comments were generated as part of a preparatory process in advance of the Deputy Secretary's meeting. It is also deliberative because it consists of opinion and internal deliberations between DOE personnel regarding talking points to be provided to the Deputy Secretary in preparation for his meeting. We therefore find that the first paragraph is protected under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. On the other hand, the information contained in the second paragraph is factual and does not represent opinion, analyses, or recommendations that reflect OPIA's deliberative process. OPIA must either release this information or claim another exemption, explaining the basis for their withholding in a new determination letter.

E-mail 4, dated December 3, 2009, and sent at 9:55 am, consists of one paragraph and five bullets of information that reference draft points of discussion at the Deputy Secretary's meeting. The second sentence of the first paragraph and the five bullets of information consist of opinion and comments regarding possible topics of discussion at a future meeting between the Deputy Secretary and the Ambassador of India. As such, this material is both predecisional and deliberative. The withheld text is predecisional since these e-mail comments were generated as part of a preparatory process in advance of the Deputy Secretary's meeting. Further, this information is deliberative since it consists of internal deliberations between DOE personnel regarding recommendations and talking points to be provided to the Deputy Secretary in preparation for a meeting. Given this, we find that this material is protected under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. On the other hand, the first and third sentences of the first paragraph contain factual information and do not represent opinion that reflects OPIA's deliberative process. OPIA must segregate and release this information or claim another exemption, explaining the basis for their withholding in a new determination letter.

C. Public Interest Determination

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should nonetheless release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. See Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2.

OPIA concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the information that we have identified in Document 1 and in the text of E-mails 1, 3 and 4 would have a chilling effect on the DOE's ability to consider similar issues in the future. Public revelation of preliminary employee deliberations regarding controversial issues could reduce the willingness of federal employees to make candid assessments and recommendations. Therefore, release of the Exemption 5 information that we have identified in Document 1 and the text of E-mails 1, 3 and 4 would not be in the public interest.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by The National Security Archive on November 1, 2011, OHA Case No. FIA-11-0006, is hereby granted in part, as described in Paragraphs (2) and (3), below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) The matter is remanded to the Office of Information Resources so that the request submitted by The National Security Archive may be forwarded to the Office of Policy and International Affairs for a determination whether additional responsive documents, as described above, exist.

(3) The National Security Archive's Appeal is hereby granted regarding Document 1 and E-mails 1, 2, 3 and 4 of Document 22. The Office of Policy and International Affairs must segregate and disclose portions of those documents, as indicated in the discussion above, or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

(4) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

On November 2, 2011, The Wall Street Journal (WSJ or "Appellant") filed an Appeal from two interim determinations issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR), in response to two requests for documents that Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to expedite the processing of Appellant's FOIA requests.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On September 23 and 26, 2011, Appellant filed two FOIA requests with OIR for records pertaining to the solar energy firm, Solyndra, LLC (Solyndra). Appellant's FOIA requests were assigned case processing numbers, HQ-2011-02010-F and HQ-2011-02017-F, respectively. In HQ-2011-02010-F, Appellant requested copies of "any documents, including term sheets and records detailing the terms, of a 2009 loan-guarantee and 2011 loan-guarantee restructuring given to Solyndra LLC by the Department of Energy under its loan-guarantee program." (FOIA Request A) In HQ-2011-02017-F, Appellant sought "access to any and all records and documents related to the Department of Energy's analysis and financial review of its investment in solar firm Solyndra LLC, including, but not limited to, a study performed for DOE by Navigant, a market research firm and other external reviews performed by consultants and firms on DOE's behalf." (FOIA Request B) In both requests, Appellant identified itself as a representative of the news media and requested expedited processing contending that "an urgency to inform the public concerning actual or alleged Federal Government activity exists." Requests at 1.

On October 3, 2011, OIR issued two Interim Determination Letters in which it denied Appellant's requests for expedited processing because Appellant had not demonstrated a "compelling need" for expedited processing. See Letters to Deborah Solomon, WSJ, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR. (Interim Determination Letters) While OIR agreed that Appellant is "primarily engaged in disseminating information," it found that the request did not identify "an actual activity that poses any particular urgency that requires the dissemination of information in an expedited manner." Interim Determination Letters at 1.

On November 2, 2011, Appellant submitted the present Appeals.[1]

II. Analysis

The only issues under consideration in the present Appeals are Appellant's requests for expedited processing. Appellant has made a number of arguments in support of its contention that it has a compelling need for expedited processing of its request. In its requests, Appellant asserted:

(1) Release of the requested information will contribute to the public's understanding of "the government's initial agreement with [Solyndra] and its subsequent agreement to take a secondary position to other investors in the firm." FOIA Request A at 2;

(2) "The public has an urgent need to know about DOE's loan-guarantee program, including the research and analysis it undertook ahead of granting a loan-guarantee to Solyndra…" FOIA Request B at 2.

In its Appeals, Appellant asserts that its requests meet the requirements set forth by the D.C. Circuit Court to determine whether a requestor has demonstrated an urgency to inform the public. Appeal at 1. In this regard, Appellant contends that its requests concern a matter of current exigency to the American public. According to Appellant, a search of Westlaw's news database for articles discussing DOE's loan guarantees to Solyndra indicates that more than 1,300 articles have been published in the last ninety days by news outlets. Id. at 2. Appellant further contends that failing to grant expedited processing would prevent the review of material for preparation of an article that would enhance public debate on potential legislative action (e.g., testimony by Secretary Chu and others at planned congressional hearings and legislative considerations measures). Id. at 3. Finally, Appellant argues that there is no question that its requests concern federal government activity, as they seek materials related to a federal agency's decision to grant loan guarantees by federal legislation to a particular company. Id. at 4.

[1] HQ-2011-02010-F has been designated as OHA Case No. FIA-11-0007, and HQ-2011-02017-F has been designated as OHA Case No. FIA-11-0008. This Decision will address both Appeals.

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, i.e., according to the order in which they are received. When an agency grants a requester expedited processing, that requester receives preference over previous requesters, by having its request moved ahead in line, thereby delaying the processing of earlier requests. Accordingly, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered when a requester is able to demonstrate "compelling need." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i)(I).

Under the FOIA, "compelling need" means:

> (I) that a failure to obtain requested records on an expedited basis under this paragraph could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life of or physical safety of an individual; or
> (II) with respect to a request made by a person primarily engaged in disseminating information, urgency to inform the public concerning actual or alleged Federal Government activity.

5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v) (emphasis added). The relevant legislative history indicates that the "specified categories for compelling need are intended to be narrowly applied." H.R. Rep. No. 104-795 at 26 (1996).

The present case clearly does not involve information which could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or safety of an individual. It does, however, involve a requester which OIR has determined to be a "person primarily engaged in disseminating information." Determination Letters at 1. Therefore, the question before us is whether Appellant has demonstrated "urgency to inform." The legislative history states:

> The standard of "urgency to inform" requires that the information requested should pertain to a matter of a current exigency to the American public and that a reasonable person might conclude that the consequences of delaying a response to a FOIA request would compromise a significant recognized interest. The public's right to know, although a significant and important value, would not by itself be sufficient to satisfy this standard.

H.R. Rep. No. 104-795, at 26 (1996). Accordingly, the D.C. Circuit Court has ruled that in order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform" and, thus, a "compelling need," at least three factors should be considered: "(1) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (2) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (3) whether the request concerns federal government activity." Al-Fayed v. CIA, 254 F.3d 300, 310 (D.C. Cir. 2001). In previous cases before this office, we have applied these factors in order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated that its request is entitled to expedited processing. See, e.g., Sierra Club, Case No. TFA-0488 (2011); Southeastern Legal Foundation, Inc., Case No. TFA-0389 (2010); Center for Investigative Reporting, Case No. TFA-0200 (2007).[2]

[2] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

Applying these factors to the present case, we find that WSJ has not demonstrated an "urgency to inform" within the meaning of FOIA. First, Appellant has not established that the requested information is a matter of current exigency to the American public. It is true that the public has an interest in the award of loan guarantees to Solyndra, DOE's loan guarantee program, and oversight of this type of financial support. However, "[t]he public's right to know, although a significant and important value, would not by itself be sufficient to satisfy [the "urgency to inform"] standard." Al-Fayed, 254 F.3d at 310.

Further, Appellant has not made clear that the requested information will not be useful if processed within the time frame of a normal FOIA request (i.e., 20 working days). Appellant argues that it has a significant recognized interest in enhancing public debate on potential legislative action and contends that failure to process its requests within the normal 20-day timeframe will stifle its participation. Appeal at 3. DOE's Loan Program Office has acknowledged that while the records responsive to Appellant's requests may be voluminous and exceedingly technical in nature, it will make "every effort" to process the FOIA Requests within 20 days. See Letters to Deborah Solomon, WSJ, from David Frantz, Director, Loan Guarantee Program Office (October 13, 2011). Moreover, Appellant acknowledges that there are a series of hearings examining the Solyndra loan guarantees that are "expected to continue" in which it may participate. Appeal at 3. Thus, the processing of Appellant's request within the normal 20-day deadline will not suppress its participation in public debate.

For the reasons set forth above, we cannot find that the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public or that processing the request within the time frame of a normal FOIA request would compromise a significant recognized interest. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed on November 2, 2011, by the Wall Street Journal, OHA Case Nos. FIA-11-0007 and FIA-11-0008, are hereby denied.

Issued: November 22, 2011

Decision and Order

On November 3, 2011, The National Security Archive (NSA or "Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge). In that determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On September 15, 2011, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to the Office of Information Resources at DOE Headquarters (OIR), for records concerning developments in the West German gas centrifuge program. See Letter from William Burr, NSA, to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR (FOIA Request). OIR forwarded the request to Oak Ridge for a search for responsive documents.

Oak Ridge conducted a search of its records but did not locate responsive documents. See E-mail from Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge, to William Burr, NSA (October 25, 2011) (Determination Letter). On November 3, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received NSA's Appeal, in which it requests an additional search for the information that it requested. See Letter from William Burr, NSA, to OHA (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[1]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted Oak Ridge to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge *(*November 7, 2011). In its response, Oak Ridge explained that it conducted thorough searches of the Oak Ridge classified vault, Oak Ridge National Laboratory, Paducah and Portsmouth Gaseous Diffusion Plants, the former Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant (K-25), and its archives, using electronic and paper finding aids such as SF-135 forms for record shipments and retention or destruction. See E-mail from Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge, to Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA *(*November 15, 2011). There were no responsive documents found within the scope of the request. Id. Based on the foregoing, we find that Oak Ridge performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal responsive documents in its possession.

In its Appeal, NSA requests that DOE conduct a search of its "historical files" for the information that it requested. See Appeal Letter. We contacted OIR to determine whether it should have sent NSA's request to other offices. See E-mail from Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR (November 15, 2011). OIR indicated that the FOIA Request should also have been assigned to the Office of History and Heritage Resources (History). See E-mail from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (November 15, 2011). In light of this information, we will remand this matter back to OIR for a search of History's files.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by The National Security Archive on November 2, 2011, OHA Case No. FIA-11-0009, is hereby granted in part, as described in Paragraph (2), below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) The matter is remanded to the Office of Information Resources so that the request submitted by The National Security Archive may be assigned to the Office of History and Heritage Resources to search for responsive documents, as described above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

On September 27, 2011, Sierra Club (or "Appellant") filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE or "agency") Loan Guarantee Programs Office (LGPO). In that determination, LGPO responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LGPO released a substantial amount of responsive information, but withheld responsive information under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release that information it has withheld to Appellant, and to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On January 5, 2010, Sierra Club submitted a FOIA request to the Office of Information Resources at DOE Headquarters (OIR), for information pertaining to DKRW Advanced Fuels' "Medicine Bow Fuel and Power LLC" project (Medicine Bow).[1] See DOE Headquarters FOIA Request Form from Andrea Issod (FOIA Request). Specifically, Sierra Club requested "all information in the DOE's file related to Medicine Bow's application for a federal loan guarantee, including the entire application that Medicine Bow submitted to DOE, and any other documents that DOE will review and use to draft the EIS [Environmental Impact Statement]." Id. OIR forwarded the request to the LGPO because any document responsive to the request, if it exists, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

LGPO conducted a search of its records and located approximately 200 responsive documents. See Letters from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Andrea Issod, Sierra Club (December 22, 2010, March 9, 2011, May 31, 2011, September 29, 2011) (First, Second, Third, and Final Determination Letters). Given the large scope of the FOIA request, LGPO provided partial responses to the FOIA Request on a rolling basis, as documents were located, reviewed, and made ready for release. In its first response, LGPO released one document consisting of 353 pages but withheld portions pursuant to Exemption 4. See First Determination Letter. In its second response, LGPO released 39 documents in their entirety. See Second Determination Letter. In its third response, LGPO released one document consisting of 300 pages but withheld portions pursuant to Exemption 4. See Third Determination Letter. In its final response, LGPO released approximately 150 documents but withheld portions pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6. See Final Determination Letter.

[1] The Medicine Bow project is a coal to liquids project using GE and Exxon technology to make gasoline from coal.

On November 3, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Sierra Club's Appeal, in which it challenges LGPO's decision in the First and Final Determination Letters to withhold information under Exemptions 4 and 6.[2] See Letter from David Bahr to OHA (Appeal Letter). Sierra Club argues that LGPO improperly applied Exemptions 4 and 6 to certain withheld information. Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). Only Exemptions 4 and 6 are at issue in the present case.

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In this case, DKRW was required to submit the documents in question as part of its participation in the agency's loan application process. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be met.

Under Exemption 4, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[3] The information submitted by DKRW, i.e., financing plans, business strategies, and procurement plans, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information. The second requirement is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., Case No. VFA-0591 (2000).[4] DKRW, a limited liability company, satisfies that definition. Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "confidential." Under National Parks, involuntarily-submitted withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future, or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, because the application process for the project required that the information be submitted, it is questionable that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future. The question, then, turns to whether release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information.

LGPO determined that release of the commercial and financial information contained in DKRW's loan applications and attachments would likely cause the company substantial competitive harm by granting undue advantage to DKRW's potential competitors who are now, due to consistently high oil prices, beginning to look at the same technologies for the production of gasoline. Given that the Medicine Bow project is the first of its kind, it is reasonable to conclude that the release of commercial, financial and proprietary information contained in the loan application would likely to cause substantial harm to DKRW's competitive position. See, e.g., Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, Case No. TFA-0479 (2011). Therefore, we find that LGPO properly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information in the released documents.

[3] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982) (Washington Post).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

Turning to the present case, the withheld information under Exemption 6 consists of personal information concerning members of the public such as those individuals' names, personal addresses, phone numbers and signatures. The Appellant challenges the propriety of these deletions.

It is well settled that privacy interests of members of the public can be violated when information is released that can be identified as applying to them. Washington Post, 456 U.S. 595, 602. Accordingly, when disclosure of information which applies to a particular individual is sought from Government records, an agency must determine whether release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of that person's privacy. Id. Therefore, LGPO correctly concluded that the individuals whose personal information appears in the responsive documents have a privacy interest which would be invaded if certain information was released to the public.

With regard to the names, personal addresses, phone numbers of members of the public, it is clear that release of this information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. Release of personal information such as names, addresses, and phone numbers would contribute little, if any, to public understanding of any matter of public concern. Because we have found a privacy interest in the names, addresses and phone numbers of members of the public and no public interest in their disclosure, we find that release of this information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

In several documents, LGPO redacted the signatures of certain individuals whose names had been released. Accordingly, those redactions do not protect the identity of the individual but rather the individual's privacy interest in his signature. Three federal district court decisions have discussed whether the release of an individual's signature would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See Calvert v. United States, 662 F. Supp. 2d 27 (D.D.C. 2009) (Urbina, J.); Trupei v. DEA, 2005 WL 3276290, *2 (D.D.C. September 27, 2005) (Sullivan, J.); Brannum v. Dominguez, 377 F. Supp. 2d 75, 84 (D.D.C. 2005) (Lamberth, J).

All three cases involved the signatures of federal employees. In Brannum, the court considered whether release of the names and signatures on personnel board documents would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personnel privacy. In the court's view, release of the names and signatures would create an opportunity for misappropriation of the signatures and make employees less likely to voluntarily serve on the board, while most likely not shedding any light on the board's performance. Id. Accordingly, the court upheld the withholding of the names and signatures. In Trupei and Calvert, the issue was whether the release of the signatures of law enforcement agents would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, where their names had already been released. In Trupei, the court ordered the release of the signature, citing the agency's release of signatures in another case involving the same plaintiff, and viewing the concern of misappropriation as "too speculative" to compromise a "substantial, rather than a de minimis, privacy interest." Trupei at 2. Trupei distinguished Brannum, stating that Brannum relied not only on the claim of misappropriation of the signatures but also on the claim that release of the names and signatures might make employees less likely to voluntarily serve on the board. Id. at 2 n.2. In Calvert, the court stated that the agency had not adequately shown that the threat to privacy in release of the signature was "real rather than speculative." Calvert at 32. As a result, the court denied the agency's motion for summary judgment, but did so without prejudice, thereby leaving open the possibility of a further showing on that issue.

In its determination letter, LGPO did not explain why it believed that the release of the signatures would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personnel privacy. Accordingly, consistent with Calvert, we are remanding the matter to LGPO to give it an opportunity to opine on this issue.[5]

C. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal case law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2.

In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency may withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Tom Marks, Case No. TFA-0379 (2010). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information we have deemed properly withheld under Exemption 4. With respect to the material that we determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 6, our analysis includes a determination that the public interest in disclosure does not outweigh the privacy interest at issue.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that LGPO properly withheld commercial, financial and proprietary information pursuant to Exemption 4 and names, addresses and phone numbers pursuant to Exemption 6 in the documents that it released to Sierra Club. However, we will remand this matter to LGPO to either release the signatures or to issue another determination to justify the continued withholding of this information under Exemption 6 or another exemption of the FOIA.[6]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Sierra Club, Case No. FIA-11-0010, is hereby granted in part, as described in Paragraph (2), below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) The matter is remanded to the Loan Guarantee Programs Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

[6] The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). We find that LGPO complied with the FOIA's segregability requirement by releasing to the Appellant all portions of the documents not withholdable under Exemptions 4 and 6, with the possible exception of the signatures. As indicated above, we have directed LGPO to again review the releasibility of that information.

Appearance:

For the Appellant: Janet Alyeshmerni

Issued: November 16, 2011

Decision and Order

On November 7, 2011, Janet Alyeshmerni (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on October 11, 2011, by the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In its determination, Oak Ridge released documents as responsive to the Appellant's request, but withheld portions of the documents under Exemption 6 of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appellant challenges the adequacy of the search for documents responsive to her request. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct an additional search for information.

On May 11, 2011, the Appellant filed a request with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in Atlanta, Georgia. In that request, she asked for a number of documents regarding her father's exposure to radiation, radioactivity, and beryllium. Request Letter dated May 11, 2011, from the Appellant to Katherine Norris, FOIA Officer, CDC. CDC recognized that some of the information it found responsive to the Appellant's request originated at DOE. Therefore, on June 28, 2011, the CDC forwarded 57 pages to DOE Headquarters (DOE/HQ) to review and issue a determination regarding their release. Transmittal Letter dated June 28, 2011, from Katherine Norris, CDC FOIA Officer to DOE FOIA Officer. DOE/HQ forwarded the 57 pages of documents to Oak Ridge for a determination regarding releasability on October 6, 2011. On October 11, 2011, Oak Ridge released the documents to the Appellant, withholding the names, social security numbers, and birthdates of individuals mentioned in the documents.

On November 7, 2011, the Appellant appealed to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Appeal Letter received November 7, 2011, from the Appellant to Director, OHA, DOE. In her Appeal, the Appellant did not challenge Oak Ridge's withholding of names, social security numbers, and birthdates. Id. Rather, the Appellant claimed that her request was denied because she did not receive anything responsive to her request. Id.

The Appellant's FOIA request concerned CDC records. The CDC sent to DOE/HQ 57 pages of responsive documents that originated with DOE for a response with respect to their releasability. 45 C.F.R. § 5.23.[*/] Accordingly, the October 11, 2011, Determination Letter from Oak Ridge concerns only the 57 pages that CDC referred to DOE. As stated above, the Appellant does not challenge DOE's withholding of information in those documents. Thus, the Appeal relates to the adequacy of the CDC search. OHA has no jurisdiction regarding the adequacy of CDC's search for responsive information. Therefore, we will dismiss the Appeal.

(1) The Appeal filed by Janet Alyeshmerni, Case No. FIA-11-0011, is hereby dismissed.

In the matter of Philip Premysler	)

	)	Case No.: FIA-11-0012

Issued: December 21, 2011

Decision and Order

On November 21, 2011, Philip Premysler ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL). In that determination, NETL withheld information in response to a request for information that Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require NETL to release the withheld information.

I. Background

On September 28, 2011, Appellant submitted a FOIA request to NETL in which the Appellant sought copies of all documents referenced in "Appendix A" of a Document entitled "Final Report on Review of Phillips Lighting Company 60 Watt L Prize[1] Submission." See E-mail from Philip Premysler, to Ann Dunlap, FOIA Officer (September 28, 2011) (FOIA Request).[2]

On October 26, 2011, NETL responded to Appellant's request. See Letter from Anthony V. Cugini, Director, NETL, to Philip Premysler (October 26, 2011) (Determination Letter). In its Determination Letter, NETL explained that it did not own the requested documents because the documents contained "raw data and testing results" of subcontractors. See id.

[1] The L-Prize refers to the L-Prize Bright Tomorrow Lighting Prize. The L-Prize was established under the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007.

[2] The documents listed in the Appendix and which are the subject of this appeal are: Sphere Results-Summary.xls (2 separate documents); LPrize60w-Gonio Results.doc; Final Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL) test report; PNNL Testing of ELCV dimmers; and PNNL L-Prize dimmer check.docx. We will refer to these documents collectively as "Documents."

On November 21, 2011, the Appellant appealed NETL's response to his FOIA Request. See Letter from Philip Premysler to OHA (Appeal Letter). Appellant asserts that because DOE funded the testing that produced the data, DOE does, in fact, "own" the data. See id.

II. Analysis

To determine whether documents are agency records subject to the FOIA, we ask (1) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA; and (2) whether the requested documents are "agency records." See, e.g., Faye Vlieger, Case No. TFA-0250 (April 11, 2008); Eugenie Reich, Case No. TFA-0213 (November 13, 2007). It is beyond dispute that NETL is part of DOE. See Minneapolis Star Tribune, Case No. TFA-0091 (April 5, 2005). As to whether the Documents are "agency records," the FOIA does not specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record. The United States Supreme Court addressed this issue in Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. The federal courts have identified four relevant factors to consider in determining whether a document was under an agency's control at the time of a request:

> (1) The intent of the document's creator to retain or relinquish control over the document;
> (2) The ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit;
> (3) The extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and
> (4) The degree to which the record was integrated into the agency's record system or files.

See, e.g., Burka v. Dep't of Health and Human Services, 87 F.3d 508, 515 (D.C.Cir. 1996); see also Donald A. Verrill, Case No. TFA-0364 (May 4, 2010).

Even in the event the DOE finds that documents are not agency records, it must also consider whether its contract with its contractors require that documents created in performance of the contract be provided for public disclosure. The DOE's FOIA regulations provide that when a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2). 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). Consequently, in determining whether requested records may be withheld from disclosure, an agency must also review the relevant contracts to determine if there are specific provisions defining ownership of documents created pursuant to the contract.

Based upon the information available to us, we are unable to determine if the Documents are in fact agency records. Therefore, we will remand this matter to NETL to make a new determination to the Appellant regarding the Documents using the analytic methodology provided above.[3] In its new Determination, NETL should make another finding as to whether the

[3] NETL further stated in its Determination Letter that if it did own the records, the information would have been

Documents are agency records. If it finds that the Documents are not agency records, it should issue another Determination Letter to the Individual stating an adequate basis for this finding. If NETL finds that the Documents are agency records, it should either release the records to the Appellant or cite an applicable FOIA Exemption justifying the withholding of the Documents.[4]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Philip Premysler on November 22, 2011, OHA Case No. FIA-11-0012, is hereby granted as described in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) The matter is remanded to the National Energy Technology Laboratory to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

withheld under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. See Determination Letter. Because NETL did not cite Exemption 4 as justification for withholding the Documents, we need not consider the applicability of Exemption 4 to the Documents in this Decision.

[4] Appellant also asserted in his Appeal that a search for responsive documents should have been conducted throughout all DOE. However, in the present case, it appears that all of the documents that have been requested have, in fact, been found. Consequently, given the facts of this case, any additional search for documents would be moot and we will not consider the Appellant's challenge to the adequacy of NETL's search.

Issued: December 14, 2011

Decision and Order

On November 22, 2011, National Security Archive (NSA or "Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR). In that determination, OIR responded to a request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On October 14, 2010, NSA submitted a FOIA request to the Office of Information Resources at DOE Headquarters (OIR), for documents relating to the Sixth Conference of the Parties (COP-6) to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and the resumed thirteenth sessions of the UNFCCC's subsidiary bodies, which were held in The Hague, the Netherlands, from 13-25 November 2000. See Letter from Robert Wampler, Senior Fellow, NSA, to Carolyn Lawson, OIR (October 14, 2010) (FOIA Request). Specifically, NSA requested that the scope of the search include documents prepared for the Secretary of Energy and any other agency officials who were involved in preparations for the conference or were part of the U.S. delegation to the conference. Id. NSA provided a list of individuals who participated in the conference: Margot Anderson, Director, Office of Policy; Richard A. Bradley, Senior Advisor on Global Change, Office of Policy; William Breed, Senior Environmental Scientist, Office of Policy and International Affairs (OPIA); Lisa Hanle, Economist, Office of Policy; Peter Karpoll, Senior Economist, Office of Policy; and Dan Reicher, Assistant Secretary for Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EERE).

OIR forwarded the request to OPIA and EERE because any documents responsive to the request, if they exist, would fall under the jurisdiction of those offices. OPIA and EERE conducted searches of its records and neither located responsive documents. See Letter from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Robert Wampler, NSA (October 26, 2011) (Determination Letter). On November 22, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received NSA's Appeal, in which it challenges the search for responsive records, including whether OPIA searched for responsive records at the National Records Center. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[1]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted OPIA and EERE to ascertain the scope of their search for responsive documents. See E-mail to Joan Ogbazghi, OIR, from Avery Webster, OHA (November 22, 2011); see also E-mails to Joan Ogbazghi, OIR; Edith Horne, OPIA; and Patrick Shipp, EERE, from Avery Webster, OHA (November 30, 2011) (December 5, 2011) (December 7, 2011). We have not yet received a response from OPIA, and, therefore, are remanding this matter to OIR for an explanation of OPIA's search for responsive documents and a determination of whether responsive documents are located at an off-site records holding center. The new determination letter should explain the parameters of the search of both on-site and off-site records, if any. Any additional responsive documents that are located will be identified and released to NSA, or the basis for their withholding will be explained in a new determination letter, with specific reference to one or more FOIA exemptions.

With regard to its search, EERE explained that the staff that was present during Dan Reicher's tenure was queried for information, and no results were found. See E-mail from Patrick Shipp, EERE, to Avery Webster, OHA (November 29, 2011). There was no external search for records requested because there was no indication from the staff members that documents were moved outside of the EERE offices. Id. EERE further informed us that Mr. Reicher's travel records were found, but were not responsive to the FOIA Request. Id. Based on the foregoing, we find that EERE performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to the FOIA Request. Accordingly, the search performed by EERE was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, this portion of the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by National Security Archive on November 22, 2011, OHA Case No. FIA-11-0013, is hereby granted in part, as described in Paragraph (2), below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) The matter is remanded to the Office of Information Resources so that the request submitted by National Security Archive may be forwarded to the Office of Policy and International Affairs for an explanation of its search for responsive records and a determination whether responsive documents, as described above, exist.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Appearance:

For the Appellant: Kim Zetter

Issued: December 12, 1011

Decision and Order

On November 28, 2011, Kim Zetter (Appellant) filed two Appeals from determinations issued to her on October 11, 2011, by the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In the determinations, Idaho found that it did not have any documents responsive to the Appellant's requests made under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to conduct an additional search for information.

On October 5, 2011, the Appellant filed two requests with Idaho. The first request, Request No. ID-2012-00118-F, was for "all documents, reports, testing plans and correspondence regarding the Stuxnet worm, also known as W32.Temphid and RootkitTmpHider." Request dated October 5, 2011, from Appellant to Idaho FOIA Officer. The second request, Request No. ID-2012-00119-F, was for "all documents, reports, testing plans, and correspondence regarding the so-called Aurora Generator Test, also called the Aurora Project, that Idaho National Laboratory conducted in 2007." Request dated October 5, 2011, from Appellant to Idaho FOIA Officer. On October 25, 2011, Idaho responded to both requests stating that it had no responsive documents and that the requests concerned Battelle Energy Alliance (BEA) "Work for Others" projects that were performed for the Department of Homeland Security (DHS).[1/] Determination Letters for Request Nos. ID-2012-00118-F and ID-2012-00119-F dated October 25, 2011, from Clayton Ogilvie, Idaho FOIA Officer, to Appellant.

On November 28, 2011, the Appellant appealed to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Appeal Letters received November 28, 2011, from the Appellant to Director, OHA, DOE. In her

[1/] Idaho cited to DOE Contract No. DE-AC07-05ID14517 and the DEAR § 970.5204-3, both of which refer to "Access To and Ownership of Records."

Appeals, the Appellant challenged Idaho's determination that the requested records were not DOE records. Id.

The Supreme Court has articulated a two-part test for determining what constitutes an "agency record" under the FOIA. An "agency record" is a record that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989).

Idaho has stated that it did not create or obtain the information at issue. The information is stored on a computer that is owned by DHS and is in the possession of BEA. Likewise, Idaho does not have possession[2/] or control of the information. The documents were created by BEA under the clause in its contract with Idaho that allows it to do "Work for Others,"[3/] in this case, DHS. DOE was not involved in the projects, other than they were conducted at the Idaho National Laboratory. As the Appellant quotes in her Appeal, under clause I.15 of the contract and the DEAR, government-owned records are defined as "all records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of this contract." DOE Contract No. DE-AC07-05ID14517, Clause I.15; DEAR § 970.5204-3, Clause I.15; Appeal Letter at 2 (emphasis added). Because the requested records were not generated by BEA in its performance of the contract between it and DOE, the records are not DOE records. Therefore, we will deny the Appeals.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed by Kim Zetter, Case Nos. FIA-11-0014 and FIA-11-0015, are hereby denied.

Filing Date: December 2, 2011	)	Case No.: FIA-11-0016

Issued: January 3, 2012

Decision and Order

On December 2, 2011, the La Cuna de Aztlan Sacred Sites Protection Circle Advisory Committee ("La Cuna") filed an appeal from determinations issued to it on September 15, 2011, and November 28, 2011, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO). In each determination, LGPO responded to a request for documents that La Cuna submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the La Cuna's FOIA request, LGPO identified and released a number of responsive documents, but withheld portions of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemption 4. This appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release the withheld information to La Cuna.

I. BACKGROUND

On April 13, 2011, La Cuna filed a FOIA request for information pertaining to any DOE loan guarantee to BrightSource Energy, Inc. (BrightSource), in connection with the Ivanpah Solar Energy Generating System (Ivanpah), including any loan guarantee application from BrightSource, and any documents supporting a loan guarantee to BrightSource. See Letter from Mekaela M. Gladden, Briggs Law Corporation, to FOIA Officer, DOE (April 13, 2011).

In partial responses issued on September 15, 2011, and November 28, 2011, LGPO released six documents from which information was withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. These six documents are (1) BrightSource's November 2008 Loan Guarantee Application; (2) an appendix to the application containing a detailed technical description of the projects for which it sought a loan guarantee; (3) an appendix to the application containing proposed terms of the loan guarantee; and (4) three documents dated January 29, 2010, in each of which the DOE "outlines the principal indicative terms and conditions" for a "potential" loan guarantee to BrightSource related to three separate solar thermal electric generating plants. The latter three documents each bear the signature of the Chief Executive Officer of BrightSource, indicating acceptance of the terms contained therein. See Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Mekaela M. Gladden, Briggs Law Corporation (September 15, 2011) (September Determination); Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Mekaela M. Gladden, Briggs Law Corporation (November 28, 2011) (November Determination).

As grounds for its Appeal, La Cuna cites the lack of a final response from LGPO and contends that, having received "only six documents" responsive to the request, "an excessive amount of time has lapsed without a complete response." Appeal at 2. La Cuna also objects to the fact that the documents released have been "heavily redacted." Id. It notes that many of the topics of information withheld from the documents were discussed in a press release issued by BrightSource, a copy of which the La Cuna provided with its appeal. Id. La Cuna argues that the fact that information is of a type discussed in a press release "weighs against a determination that such information is confidential and proprietary, ..." Id.

After our receipt of the present Appeal, LGPO provided for our review unredacted versions of each of the documents at issue in this matter, as well as the redacted documents that were released to La Cuna.

II. ANALYSIS

Where the DOE decides to withhold information in response to a FOIA request, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. These requirements aid the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's review of that appeal. Russ Choma, Case No. TFA-0495 (2011).

In the present case, LGPO clearly identified FOIA Exemption 4 as its basis for withholding information, and therefore its determinations met the second requirement above. With regard to the other two requirements, i.e., whether LGPO adequately identified the information it withheld from the Appellant and whether it adequately justified its withholdings, we find below that LGPO's determinations were adequate in certain respects, but not in others. As a result we will remand this matter to LGPO for a new determination.

A. Whether LGPO Adequately Identified the Information It Withheld

In applying Exemption 4 to the information withheld in its September and November determinations, LGPO identified the withheld information as "sensitive commercial information that is maintained in confidence by [Bright Source] and not available in public sources," including "financing plans, business strategies, and procurement plans." See September Determination at 1-2; November Determination at 1-2. Having reviewed the information that was withheld from the documents at issue, we find that LGPO's determination provided a reasonable description of much of the information withheld. There is, however, other information withheld from the Appellant to which the identified categories do not readily apply.

For example, nearly all of the information withheld from one of the six documents, an appendix to BrightSource's application, consists of design specifications used in BrightSource's "LPT technology," which uses mirrors to reflect and capture solar energy. In response to our query as to which of the identified categories of withheld information these design specifications belonged, LGPO stated that "they are detailed technical descriptions of project technology that contain trade secrets and information that would give a competitor insights into how BrightSource designs its products. It seems such information could fall in either the 'business strategy' or 'procurement plans' category." Email from LGPO to Steven Goering, OHA (December 20, 2011).

We disagree, and cannot find that any of these terms, "financing plans," "business strategies," or "procurement plans," reasonably describes the design specifications withheld from the appellant. LGPO explained that this "exact language is used in every response letter that describes information withheld under" Exemption 4. Id. However, because a variety of types of information can be withheld under Exemption 4, it is simply not sufficient to apply the same descriptor to information withheld in every case. Instead, the description contained in a determination must accurately reflect the actual information being withheld in that particular case.

This does not mean that the descriptions used must necessarily be more specific than those used in LGPO's determinations, but the information being withheld must at least reasonably fall into one of the categories of information listed in the determination.[1] In the present case, LGPO's description in its response to our office, "detailed technical descriptions of project technology," would have sufficed, had it been used in the November determination. On remand, LGPO should review the information it has redacted from the documents it has released and provide, in its new determination, an accurate accounting of the types of information being withheld.

B. Whether LGPO Adequately Justified the Information It Withheld

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

[1] Conversely, this issue cannot be addressed by merely providing, in every determination, the same exhaustive list of categories of information, unless all the categories listed apply to the actual information being withheld. As with a determination that too narrowly describes information being withheld, an overbroad description would not accurately reflect the information being withheld in a given case.

1. Whether the Information Withheld was Commercial or Financial Information

Under Exemption 4, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[2] Here, we find that requirement is met, as information contained in a loan guarantee application, as well the proposed or accepted terms of a loan guarantee, are, by their very nature, commercial or financial.

2. Whether the Information Withheld was Obtained from a Person

The second requirement is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., Case No. VFA-0591 (2000). BrightSource, a corporation, satisfies this definition of "person."

It is not as certain, however, that all of the withheld information at issue was "obtained from" BrightSource. Three of the documents at issue, BrightSource's loan guarantee application and two of its appendices, were submitted by BrightSource, and therefore the information contained in those documents was clearly obtained by the DOE from BrightSource. On the other hand, the other three documents, containing terms and conditions of a potential loan guarantee, originated from DOE, appear on DOE letterhead, and are addressed to BrightSource. We raised this issue with LGPO, which responded that it "is difficult to determine which exact terms were submitted by whom because presumably all of the terms within the term sheet were arrived at through negotiation and thus neither 'submitted by BrightSource' nor 'submitted by DOE.'" Email from LGPO to Steven Goering, OHA (December 20, 2011).

The federal courts have held that the fact that particular information was the subject of negotiation with the federal government does not necessarily preclude a finding that it was "obtained from a person" within the meaning of Exemption 4. Rather, the courts have looked to the identity of the party from whom the information originated. See, e.g., Public Citizen Health Research Group v. National Institutes of Health, 209 F. Supp. 2d 37, 44 (D.D.C. 2002) (concluding that although a licensee's final royalty rate was the result of negotiation with the government, that did not alter the fact that the licensee is the ultimate source of the information inasmuch as the licensee had to provide the information in the first instance); In Defense of Animals v. National Institutes of Health, 543 F. Supp. 2d 83, 102-103 (D.D.C. 2008) (concluding that incentive award payments negotiated by the parties were not "obtained from a person," because the agency failed to demonstrate that the contractor was the source of the information, and not the agency). Similarly, we have previously held that portions of agreements between the

[2] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

DOE and non-federal entities may be considered to have been "obtained from a person" when the non-federal entity was the source of the information. See, e.g., Research Focus, L.L.C., Case No. TFA-0247 (2008); William E. Logan, Jr. & Associates, Case No. VFA-0484 (1999).

Thus, we have found in a prior case that information withheld from similar documents was "obtained from a person," where "LGPO informed us that although the provisions in question were the subject of negotiations between the DOE and the three utilities, the utilities were the source of the information that was withheld." SACE, Case No. TFA-0442 (2011). In the present case, however, LGPO's response indicates that it has not determined whether BrightSource was the source of the information withheld from the documents at issue. On remand, if is it to continue to withhold information from these three documents, LGPO must make an affirmative finding that BrightSource was the source of the information being withheld, and therefore the information was "obtained from a person," as required under Exemption 4.

3. Whether the Information Withheld was Confidential

In order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must also be "confidential." As noted above, whether information is considered "confidential" turns in part on whether the information was voluntarily submitted. Though the act of responding to a government solicitation is clearly voluntary, the federal courts have found that information required to be provided in response to such a solicitation is involuntarily submitted. See, e.g., Mallinckrodt v. West, 140 F. Supp. 2d 1, 5 (D.D.C. 2000) (where agency solicitation "distinguished 'added value items' from other information by not including them within the category of information that 'must' be included," only that information required to be included was submitted involuntarily).

In this case, BrightSource was required to submit the information in question as part of its participation in the agency's loan application process. 10 C.F.R. § 609.6 ("In response to a solicitation or written invitation to submit an Application, an Applicant submitting an Application must meet all requirements and provide all information specified in the solicitation and/or invitation and this part."). Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be met to find the information withheld to be confidential.

Under National Parks, involuntarily submitted information is considered confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future, or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. Because the application process for the project required that the information be submitted, it is questionable that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future. The question, then, turns to whether release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information.

LGPO stated in its determinations that it withheld information under FOIA Exemption 4 because its release would cause substantial harm to Bright Source's competitive interests. Specifically, according to LGPO, disclosing financing information and strategies "would provide an unfair advantage to competitors by enabling competing power suppliers to estimate supply costs and use this information to bid against [Bright Source]." Disclosure of procurement plans "would enable the applicant's power vendors to compete unfairly towards providing future goods and services to [Bright Source], in addition to allowing vendors unlicensed use of [Bright Source's] original work product." Finally, public disclosure of financing information "would enable potential customers to exert undue leverage with regards to purchasing [Bright Source's] product." See September Determination at 2; November Determination at 2.

Having reviewed the information withheld in this case, we agree with LGPO that the documents in question contain information that, if released, would likely cause substantial competitive harm to BrightSource, including proprietary technical information, cost data, business plans, and risk assessments. We cannot make this finding, however, with respect to all of the information withheld from the Appellant.

First, some of the information withheld by LGPO is readily available in public sources, and therefore cannot be considered "confidential" under Exemption 4. For example, LGPO withheld the Federal Tax Identification Numbers of both BrightSource and Morgan Stanley BrightSource LLC, information that can be found on public websites, such as that of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. We brought this to the attention of LGPO, and they have agreed that this and other information withheld that is publicly available should be released. On remand, LGPO must release all such information.[3]

Second, there is information that was withheld by LGPO that, while not identical to that information made publicly available, is of a similar nature. In this regard, as we note above, the Appellant submitted with its appeal a copy of a press release issued by BrightSource on February 22, 2010 (Press Release), and argued that certain categories of information withheld by LGPO were topics of the press release.

LGPO points out that, while the subject matter of some of the information withheld is the same as some of the information in the press release, the information withheld contains specific data that is not included in the press release. Email from LGPO to Steven Goering, OHA (December 20, 2011). We agree with LGPO that such information should not automatically be considered non-confidential, unlike publicly available information. Nonetheless, the fact that similar information appears in a press release issued by the company should be taken into account in determining whether release of the information withheld would in fact likely cause substantial competitive harm to BrightSource.

Thus, for example, the press release states that, by using "dry-cooling," the Ivanpah project "will use only 100 acre feet of water per year, . . . 25 times less water than competing solar thermal technologies that use wet-cooling." Press Release at 4. Information withheld from Appendix B of BrightSource's loan guarantee quantifies the amount of water required by dry-cooling and that required by wet-cooling, but uses different units of measurement. As such, while the information is not the same, both the withheld information and the press release quantify the amount of water to be used by the project and the amount that would be used by wet-cooling. On remand, LGPO should consider, in light of the information contained in the press release, whether the release of similar information that was withheld would likely cause Bright Source substantial competitive harm.

[3] This includes previously withheld information that identifies BrightSource's patent filings, which are public and available at the web site of the U.S. Patent Office, as well as any information withheld that is also contained in those public filings. In addition, LGPO must release publicly available information that was withheld regarding the approval process for transmission access to the Ivanpah site, any clauses in Power Purchasing Agreements that are required by law to be included in all PPAs, and information that generically describes the roles and duties of governmental agencies. We pointed out specific examples of information that appears to be publicly available in an email to LGPO. Email from Steven Goering, OHA, to LGPO (December 19, 2011).

Finally, there is information that LGPO withheld from the Appellant that may in fact be confidential, but it is not apparent how the release of the information would likely cause substantial competitive harm to BrightSource. For example, from a section of its application discussing the meteorological considerations of siting a solar plant, LGPO withheld a quantification of the average amount of solar energy available to "[g]ood" solar energy sites. As this does not, on its face, appear to be data that are particular to BrightSource or obtained through some proprietary methodology, it is hard to understand how its release would likely cause substantial competitive harm to BrightSource. In response to our query, LGPO stated that it was awaiting a response from BrightSource regarding this particular information. On remand, LGPO can take into account any information or arguments by BrightSource before making an independent determination as to whether this information should be withheld under Exemption 4.

We also asked LGPO about particular clauses withheld from the documents containing terms and conditions of a potential loan guarantee, three of the documents at issue that are discussed above in Section II.B.2 of this decision. Email from Steven Goering, OHA, to LGPO (December 19, 2012). LGPO stated that BrightSource requested confidential treatment of this information, and indicated that the company was able to justify "the withholding of the information by describing the harm that would occur if the information were released." Email from LGPO to Steven Goering, OHA (December 20, 2011). If LGPO intends to continue to withhold this information, it should explain, in its new determination, how any of the specific harms to BrightSource's competitive interests cited in LGPO's determination letter would result from the release of the information in question.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, we are remanding this matter to LGPO for a new determination regarding its withholdings under FOIA Exemption 4. With respect to the fact that LGPO has not yet issued a final response to La Cuna's request, the DOE's regulations that implement the FOIA do not permit OHA to consider an appeal under these circumstances. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a) (OHA may consider appeals when a DOE office "has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that are no documents responsive to the request" or when an office "has denied a request for waiver of fees.") Accordingly, this portion of La Cuna's Appeal will be dismissed as not ripe for a determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on December 2, 2011, by the La Cuna de Aztlan Sacred Sites Protection Circle Advisory Committee, OHA Case No. FIA-11-0016, is hereby granted in part, as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and dismissed in part, as set forth in Paragraph (3) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Loan Guarantee Program Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) That portion of the present Appeal relating to the lack of a final response to the Appellant's request is hereby dismissed.

Decision and Order

On December 2, 2011, Scott A. Hodes (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a September 30, 2011, final determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of the Executive Secretariat (ES). ES responded to a Request for Information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, that Mr. Hodes filed with DOE on January 13, 2011. In its September 30, 2011, determination, which Mr. Hodes did not receive until November 4, 2011, ES identified 79 documents responsive to his request, provided 58 of them, and explained that the remaining 21 were to be reviewed by the originating organization within DOE. This Appeal, if granted, would require ES to conduct an additional search for responsive material.

I. BACKGROUND

On January 13, 2011, Mr. Hodes filed a request with DOE seeking documents relating to approval of indemnification clauses in government contracts. Appeal at 1. ES conducted a search of its records, including those of its History Division, and located 79 documents that contained responsive information. It determined that 21 of those documents had been created by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), and referred those 21 documents to NNSA for review and a determination regarding their releasability.

On September 30, 2011, ES issued a Determination Letter to Mr. Hodes in which it explained that it was releasing 37 documents to him in their entirety and 21 documents with portions withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. It further explained that NNSA would provide a determination to Mr. Hodes when it completed its review of a separate group of 21 documents that ES referred to it.

On December 2, 2011, Mr. Hodes filed the present Appeal. He has not appealed ES's application of Exemption 5 to withhold portions of 21 documents from disclosure. He has, however, challenged the completeness of ES's response, asserting that several of the documents released to him indicate on their face that they contained attachments that were not provided to him. He also raises on appeal the fact that NNSA has not yet issued a determination to him regarding the 21 documents that ES referred to NNSA.

II. ANALYSIS

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must conduct a search "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Valencia-Lucena v. U.S. Coast Guard, 180 F.3d 321, 325 (D.C. Cir. 1999), quoting Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Project on Government Oversight, Case No. TFA-0489 (2011).

To ascertain whether there were additional documents responsive to Mr. Hodes's request that ES had not provided in its initial determination letter, this office asked Mr. Hodes to provide a list of documents that he believed had attachments that had not been released to him. He provided such a list, which we forwarded to ES. ES has begun a search for the attachments Mr. Hodes listed, and has reported that it has already identified attachments that relate to the more recent documents already released to Mr. Hodes. A few of the responsive documents are quite old, and must be retrieved from storage to ascertain whether they contain attachments that may now be released to Mr. Hodes. We will therefore remand this matter to ES. After it has reviewed all the documents on the list that Mr. Hodes has provided, ES will issue a new determination letter in which it will provide any additional responsive documents to Mr. Hodes, or provide proper justification for the withholding of any such documents or portions thereof.

With respect to the fact that NNSA has not yet issued its determination regarding the 21 documents that ES referred for review, DOE's regulations that implement the FOIA do not permit OHA to consider an appeal under these circumstances. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a) (OHA may consider appeals when a DOE office "has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that are no documents responsive to the request" or when an office "has denied a request for waiver of fees.") Accordingly, this portion of Mr. Hodes's Appeal will be dismissed as not ripe for a determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Scott A. Hodes, FIA-11-0017, is hereby granted in part, as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and dismissed in part, as set forth in Paragraph (3) below.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Office of the Executive Secretariat for a search for additional documents responsive to Mr. Hodes's January 13, 2011, request as described in the above Decision. Upon completion of its search, the Office of the Executive Secretariat shall issue a new determination letter as set forth in the above Decision.

(3) That portion of Mr. Hodes's Appeal that relates to the 21 documents currently under review by the National Nuclear Security Administration is dismissed.

Issued: January 12, 2012

Decision and Order

On December 16, 2011, Robert M. Balick (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 28, 2011, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIR denied the Appellant's fee waiver request in connection with a request the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would waive the fees associated with the Appellant's request.

I. Background

On November 6, 2011, the Appellant filed a request with DOE for "[a]ll/any residual radiation data collected from the 3 nuclear test events – Longshot-1965, Milrow-1968 and Cannikin-1971 at Amchitka Island, Alaska." Request dated November 6, 2011, from Appellant to OIR. With the request, the Appellant asked for a waiver of the fees associated with the request. On November 28, 2011, OIR denied the fee waiver request.[1/] The Appellant filed this Appeal on December 16, 2011, asking that the fee waiver denial be overturned.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees if a requester can satisfy a two-part test. The requester must show that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute

[1/] OIR noted in its November 28, 2011, determination that the request had been sent to the Office of Environmental Management (EM) and the Office of Legacy Management (LM). On December 6, 2011, LM responded to the Appellant's request stating that it found voluminous documents and the associated fees would total $358.80. In his Appeal, the Appellant narrowed the scope of his request to include only documents associated with the Cannikin test. OIR has since forwarded the narrowed request on to the offices currently searching for information, including LM and the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA). E-mail dated December 23, 2011, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to John Montgomery, LM, Ben Jaramillo, NNSA, and Elizabeth Poe, NNSA.

significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8).

In analyzing the public-interest prong of the above two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following four factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).[2/]

A. Factors A and B

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 775 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994). Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Dep't of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). In the present case, OIR and the Appellant agree that the requested material concerns the operations and activities of the government and that the information would likely contribute to the public's understanding of a specifically identifiable government operation. Determination Letter dated November 28, 2011. Because the applicability of Factors A and B are not disputed, we will not further consider OIR's determination with regard to these issues.

B. Factor C

[2/] With regard to the commercial-interest prong for the determination of the appropriateness of granting a fee waiver, the Part 1004 regulations specify two factors to be considered in determining whether the disclosure of information is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requestor. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii) (whether the requestor has a commercial interest that would be furthered by the requested documents and, if so, whether the identified commercial interest is sufficiently large in comparison with the public interest in disclosure, such that any disclosure would be primarily in the commercial interest of the requestor). As discussed infra, because we find that the Appellant has not satisfied the public-interest prong, we need not discuss whether the disclosure of information at issue in this case satisfies the commercial-interest prong of the fee waiver test.

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. The party seeking a fee waiver must show that the disclosure of the requested information will "contribute to the public understanding" of "a reasonably broad audience of persons interested in the subject, as opposed to the individual understanding of the requester." Judicial Watch, Inc., v. Dep't of Justice, 185 F. Supp. 2d 54, 62 (D.D.C. 2002) quoting 28 C.F.R. § 16.11(k)(2)(iii). In assessing this factor, a court must consider the requester's "ability and intention to effectively convey" or disseminate the requested information to the public. Id. Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Roderick L. Ott, Case No. VFA-0288 (May 16, 1997) (Ott); see also Tod N. Rockefeller, Case No. VFA-0468 (January 21, 1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992).[3/] In his submission, the Appellant states that, "[m]any Amchitka Island workers are being treated for cancer of which the source is unknown. Disclosure of the requested information will aid in their treatments." Request Letter at 1. The Appellant does not state how he will disseminate the requested information, even to this relatively small number of interested individuals, the Amchitka Island workers. Consequently, OIR determined that the Appellant has not demonstrated his ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. We agree as the Appellant did not provide any further information regarding the dissemination of the information in his Appeal. Based on the information provided to us, we find that the Appellant has not satisfied the requirements of Factor C.

C. Factor D

Under Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, slip op. at 5 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 381 (1995)). In the present case, it is not readily apparent how the public's understanding of the activities or operations of the government will be significantly enhanced by the disclosure of the requested documents. The Appellant states that "[a]lthough most nuclear device testing is internationally forbidden by treaties, residual radioactivity will remain for centuries." Request Letter at 2. This statement does not show that granting of the fee waiver and, therefore, release of the information, will significantly enhance the public's understanding of the activities or operations of the government. As a result, the Appellants' request for a fee waiver does not satisfy Factor D.

III. Conclusion

After considering each of the above factors, we have determined that because of the Appellant's failure to demonstrate that he would disseminate the information in the documents and the unlikelihood of the documents contributing significantly to the public's understanding of government activities and operations, the public-interest prong of the fee waiver test has not been satisfied. Because the public-interest prong of the FOIA fee waiver test is not met, we need not address the commercial-interest prong. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

Decision and Order

On January 3, 2012, Kevin Leary ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Richland Operations Office (RO). In that determination, RO responded to a request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require RO to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On October 31, 2011, Appellant submitted a FOIA request to RO, for copies of e-mails, the associated metadata[1], and instant messages for Margot Voogd, Larry Romine and Bryan Foley, from August 1, 2005, through January 31, 2009. See Letter from Kevin Leary (October 31, 2011) (FOIA Request). RO informed Appellant that no documents existed. On November 18, 2011, Appellant specified that his request included any e-mails sent or received by the above-named individuals during the stated timeframe that were deleted and stored on DOE's server or back-up tapes. See E-mail from Dorothy Riehle, Freedom of Information Officer, RO, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (January 5, 2012) (January 5 E-mail).

RO conducted a search of its records but did not locate responsive documents. See Determination Letter. In its response, RO informed Appellant that its e-mail server maintains records for up to 24 days[2] unless there is pending litigation or some other investigative reason (such as human resources, cyber security, or counterintelligence) to keep the records. Id.

On January 3, 2012, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Appellant's Appeal in which he questions the validity of RO's response, and requests an additional search for the information that he requested. See Letter from Kevin Leary to OHA (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[3]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted RO to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to Dorothy Riehle, Freedom of Information Officer, RO (January 4, 2012). In its response, RO explained that a search was conducted using the names that the Appellant provided and no deleted e-mails or instant messages were found. See January 5 E-mail. RO informed us that its Chief Information Officer (CIO), the subject matter expert, confirmed that no e-mails relating to the named individuals were maintained for litigation or other purposes. Id. According to the CIO, unless saved, the e-mails are no longer retrievable from the e-mail server after 14 days from the date that they were created. See January 25 E-mail.

Based on the foregoing, we find that RO performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to the FOIA Request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Kevin Leary on January 3, 2012, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0001, is hereby denied.

Decision and Order

On January 3, 2012, Erik Lerche ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy ("DOE") Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy ("EERE"). In that determination, EERE responded to a request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require EERE to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On October 10, 2011, Appellant submitted a FOIA request for the addresses of the 42 houses weatherized under the Federal Weatherization Assistance Program ("WAP") in Page County, Virginia, from July 1, 2009, through June 30, 2011. See Letter from Erik Lerche to Robert Adams, WAP (October 10, 2011) (FOIA Request). The request was assigned to EERE's Office of Weatherization and Intergovernmental Programs ("OWIP") because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

EERE conducted a search of its records but did not locate responsive documents. See Letter from Kathleen B. Hogan, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Energy Efficiency, EERE, to Erik Lerche (December 12, 2011) (Determination Letter). In its response, EERE informed Appellant that OWIP does not require states to provide DOE with the addresses of weatherized homes and referred him to the rule which sets forth state requirements for maintaining the privacy of the WAP applicants. See id.

On January 3, 2012, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Appellant's Appeal in which he challenges EERE's response and requests release of the information that he requested. See Letter from Erik Lerche to OHA (Appeal Letter). Appellant argues that the public interest in disclosing the participant's addresses (i.e., public validation of the WAP program) outweighs their privacy interest in anonymity. Id. at 2-6.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." *Truitt v. Hogan, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Energy Efficiency, EERE *(*January 4, 2012). In its response, EERE explained that the WAP has no data in any database or other file that references the specific homes that were weatherized. See E-mail from Robert Adams, Supervisor, WAP *(*January 5, 2012) (Adams E-mail). According to EERE, the primary data is not maintained at the federal level but resides in the offices of the 1,007 subgrantees who provide direct services to families in need. Id.

Based on the foregoing, we find that EERE does not have the requested documents. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Filing Date: February 2, 2012	)

Issued: March 23, 2012

Decision and Order

On February 2, 2012, California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance (CANDO) filed appeals from two final determinations issued by the Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In those determinations, LGPO responded to requests for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LGPO released substantial amounts of information responsive to each of the requests, but withheld responsive information under FOIA Exemption 4. This Appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release to CANDO some of the information it withheld previously.

I. BACKGROUND

CANDO filed requests for information with LGPO seeking copies of ten specified documents related to loan guarantee contracts for the Agua Caliente and Gila Bend Solar Energy Projects. On October 31, and November 8, 2011, LGPO issued determination letters releasing copies of the documents CANDO requested regarding the Agua Caliente and Gila Bend projects, respectively. In both instances, however, LGPO withheld portions of the responsive documents under Exemption 4. On February 2, 2012, CANDO filed the present appeals contending that LGPO had improperly applied Exemption 4 to withhold the names and other identifying information concerning contractors and sub-contractors listed in those documents. We have assigned Case No. FIA-12-0004 to CANDO's appeal regarding the Gila Bend documents and Case No. FIA-12-0005 to its appeal regarding the Agua Caliente documents.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). Only Exemption 4 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential."

In its determination letter, LGPO contended that the information it withheld from CANDO is confidential rather than privileged. In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. In the present case, LGPO correctly concluded that the requested documents had been involuntarily submitted.

In responding to FOIA requests, an agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the documents at issue. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009).[1] Accordingly, if the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe). These requirements allow both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., Case No. VFA-0304 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's review of that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Moreover, it is well settled that if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, as in the present case, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., Case No. VFA-0155 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

In the present case, LGPO stated in its determination letters, which are virtually identical in content, that the information it redacted from the responsive documents "includes project cost, financing plans and business strategies, procurements plans, and marketing plans and analysis." It then specified the competitive harm that the disclosure of each of those categories of information would cause to the submitter of the information. LGPO did not specify that it had withheld the names and other information that identified contractors and sub-contractors in these documents. Nor did it offer any reasonably specific justification for withholding such information. Of the categories of withheld information it identified in its determination letters, "business strategies" and "procurement plans" are the only categories within which contractor and sub-contractor information might possibly fall. In its determination letters, LGPO provided no specific explanation of the competitive harm that disclosure of business strategies might cause, and stated that disclosure of procurement plans "would enable the applicant's power vendors to compete unfairly towards providing future goods and services to the applicant, in addition to allowing vendors unlicensed use of the applicant's original work product."

LGPO's determination letter regarding CANDO's request for the Gila Bend documents lacks the specificity required of an agency FOIA determination in two respects. First, it does not specify that names and other identifying information regarding contractors and sub-contractors have been withheld. Although such information might possibly fall within one of the broad withholding categories LGPO listed in its determination letter, even the informed requester would be hard pressed to reach this conclusion. LGPO's failure to identify with specificity the redacted information impedes the requester's ability to understand what information has been redacted from a document.[2] Moreover, the same lack of specificity does not permit a sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 4. See e.g. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (remanding matter for a new determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to withheld material). If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999). Because it did not specifically address how the disclosure of names and other information that identifies contractors and sub-contractors is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it has not met its burden of justifying the withholding of that material. Accordingly, we are remanding to LGPO CANDO's appeal regarding the Gila Bend documents. On remand, LGPO should either release the names and other information identifying contractors and sub-contractors that it redacted from the documents it provided to CANDO or issue a new determination in which it properly describes the information it is withholding and provides a sufficient explanation for concluding that its release would result in competitive harm.

With respect to the Agua Caliente documents, however, we reach a different result. LGPO has informed us that no names or other information that identifies contractors or sub-contractors was withheld, as no such information appears in those documents. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Janelle Jordan, LGPO, and William M. Schwartz, OHA (March 19, 2012). As a result, the challenge CANDO raises in its appeal of LGPO's determination regarding those documents lacks a factual basis and will be denied.

III. CONCLUSION

Our review of the contractor and sub-contractor information that LGPO withheld under Exemption 4 has revealed that LGPO failed to adequately describe some of the information it was withholding under Exemption 4 and failed to adequately justify its determination that release of that information would likely result in competitive harm to its submitter. Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to LGPO for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

Decision and Order

On February 14, 2012, Jon Lipsky filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on January 24, 2011, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (LM), in response to a request for documents that Mr. Lipsky filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LM identified one document responsive to Mr. Lipsky's request and released that document to him in its entirety. In his appeal, Mr. Lipsky challenges the adequacy of LM's search. This appeal, if granted, would require LM to perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In December 2011, Mr. Lipsky filed a FOIA request with LM for "a copy of the 1989 Multispectral Scanner Survey (MSS) of the former Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant." Electronic FOIA Request Form, December 14, 2011 (Initial Request) at 1. In its January 2012 response, LM informed Mr. Lipsky that its search for documents yielded one document, which LM released to Mr. Lipsky in its entirety. Letter from John V. Montgomery, LM, to Jon Lipsky, January 24, 2012 (Determination Letter) at 1. Mr. Lipsky filed the instant appeal challenging the adequacy of LM's search for documents. See Letter from Jon Lipsky to OHA, received February 14, 2012 (Appeal). In his Appeal, Mr. Lipsky contends that LM's response was inadequate. Specifically, Mr. Lipsky maintains in his Appeal that "the provided document (1) does not refer to the complete assessments by Acting Rocky Flats Manager Edward Goldberg …, (2) does not include August 1989 or later data, (3) does not refer to the 1981 MSS survey, (4) is not a multi-volume report, (5) does not reference cesium-137, (6) does not reference strontium-90, [and] (7) the Department of Energy provided no indication of excluded or exempted materials." Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[*]

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted LM to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. LM informed us that LM's FOIA processing personnel searched "the DOE-LM's Electronic Recordkeeping System (ERKS) for all information potentially responsive to the request. The DOE-LM ERKS is an electronic information system database containing records, finding aids, and information for all records in LM's custody." See LM Response to FOIA Appeal, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0007, received March 16, 2012. LM personnel searched the ERKS database using combinations of the keywords "multispectral," "scanner survey," "survey," and "1989." Id. The ERKS searches indicated that a box stored at a Federal Records Center (FRC) facility contained a document potentially responsive to the request. Id. LM retrieved the box from the FRC facility and located the responsive document, "A Multispectral Scanner Survey of the United States Department of Energy's Rocky Flats Plant, Golden, Colorado." Id. LM's search yielded no other documents responsive to Mr. Lipsky's request. Id. Based on this information, we find that LM performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Mr. Lipsky's FOIA request. Accordingly, the search was adequate and the instant Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

Decision and Order

On February 23, 2012, Carter & Burgess, Inc., (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on January 27, 2012, by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA released 73 documents responsive to requests the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA redacted portions of the released documents. This Appeal, if granted, would release the documents in full.

I. Background

On February 21, 2011, the Appellant filed 15 requests with NNSA. As all the requests referenced the same matter, NNSA consolidated its response. Determination Letter dated January 27, 2012, from NNSA to Andrew D. Keetch, Cantey Hanger, LLP, Appellant's Attorney. The documents at issue are copies of a Mutual Release and Settlement Agreement between Austin Commercial Contractors, L.P. (ACCLP) and Los Alamos National Security LLC (LANS), as well as a number of e-mails between LANS and DOE employees including the Settlement Agreement. NNSA withheld portions of the 73 responsive documents under Exemptions 4, 5, and 6 of the FOIA. Id. The Appellant challenges the withholding in those documents. Appeal dated February 22, 2012, from Andrew Keetch, to Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

Initially, the Appellant argues that the documents were between two private entities, ACCLP and LANS, and therefore, cannot fall within Exemptions 4, 5, or 6. Id. Secondly, the Appellant argues that because the two private entities arbitrated a construction contract before the Civilian Board of Contract Appeals, all FOIA exemptions have been waived. Id. at 2. Thirdly, the Appellant argues that Exemption 4 does not apply because "[d]isclosure of this information will not impair the government's ability to obtain information in the future." Id. at 4. Fourthly, the Appellant claims that because LANS is not an agency of the United States, all documents that involve LANS cannot qualify for protection under Exemption 5. Id. at 3. Finally, the Appellant contends that Exemption 6 is not applicable to any of the documents because it did not seek any information which would cause "injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Id. at 3.

II. Analysis

A. Agency Records

The Supreme Court has articulated a two-part test for determining what constitutes an "agency record" under the FOIA. An "agency record" is a record that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). As evidenced by NNSA's response, it had possession and control of the documents at the time of the request. Intuitively, if the documents are subject to the FOIA, then they must also be subject to the FOIA Exemptions. Accordingly, we will address NNSA's application of Exemptions 4, 5, and 6 to the withheld information in the pertinent sections below.

B. Waiver of FOIA Exemptions

Courts have routinely held that an agency has waived its protection under a FOIA exemption where there has been an official disclosure or direct acknowledgment by authorized government officials. Thus, waiver of the privilege to withhold information under the FOIA depends upon prior official release of the information or disclosure under circumstances in which an authorized government official allowed the information to be made public. See Wolf v. CIA, 473 F. 3d 370, 379-80 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that an agency waived its ability to refuse to confirm or deny the existence of responsive records pertaining to an individual because a top agency official had discussed that individual during congressional testimony); see also Simmons v. Dep't of Justice, 796 F.2d 709, 712 (4th Cir. 1986) (unauthorized disclosure does not constitute waiver).

In the instant case, the Appellant argues that because ACCLP and LANS arbitrated a construction contract dispute before the Civilian Board of Contract Appeals, all FOIA exemptions have been waived. Appeal Letter at 2. In other words, the Appellant claims that when a document has been produced or available through litigation, pertinent FOIA exemptions are waived. Appeal at 2, citing Goodrich Corp. v. EPA, 593 F. Supp. 2d 184 (D.D.C. 2009) and N.D. ex rel. Olson v. Andrus, 581 F.2d 177 (8th Cir. 1978). A clear reading of both cited cases shows that the documents in question were released by the governmental agency--not by a private entity. Here, at no time did an authorized government official allow the information to be made public. Therefore, we cannot accept the Appellant's argument that because ACCLP and LANS arbitrated the matter that is the heart of its requests, all FOIA exemptions have been waived.

C. Exemptions 4, 5, and 6

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R.

§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Exemptions 4, 5, and 6 are at issue in this Appeal.

1. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." Nat'l Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines that the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a "trade secret," a different analysis applies. The agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial, "obtained from a person" and "privileged or confidential."

The first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial." Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial as long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d 1290. The information submitted by LANS, i.e., financial information, business strategies, legal strategies, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information. The second requirement is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc., v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., Case No. TFA-591 (2000). LANS satisfies that definition.

Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "confidential." In this case, LANS was required to submit the documents in question as part of its contract with NNSA. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted." In order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be applied. Under National Parks, involuntarily-submitted withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770.

The Appellant argues that NNSA applied Exemption 4 too broadly because disclosure will not impair the government's ability to obtain the information in the future nor will it cause substantial harm to the competitive position of LANS. Appeal at 3. We agree that because the contract between NNSA and LANS required the information be submitted, it is not likely that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future.

We must address, however, whether release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information.

NNSA determined that release of the commercial and financial information contained in the documents would likely cause LANS substantial competitive harm. We believe that release of the information would give LANS' competitors an undue advantage when negotiating settlements in the future. In addition, release of the financial information would give LANS' competitors an undue advantage in bidding on future contracts against LANS. Therefore, we find that NNSA properly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information in the released documents.

2. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges, among others, that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

A communication between an agency and a private party is also an intra-agency communication when the "common interest" doctrine applies. Hunton & Williams v. Dep't of Justice, 590 F.3d 272, 277 (4th Cir. 2010); Hanson v. Agency for Int'l Dev., 372 F.3d 286 (4th Cir. 2004); accord Klamath, 532 U.S. at 10. The common interest doctrine applies when an agency and a private party share an interest and the two decide to cooperate in pursuit of the public interest. Hunton & Williams, 590 F.3d at 277-83. "[I]n a limited sense," the private party "becomes a part of the enterprise that the agency is carrying out." Id. at 280. Therefore, the communications "can be understood as 'intra-agency' for the purposes of Exemption 5." Id.

In Hunton & Williams, a technology company sued a manufacturer for patent infringement. Id. at 274. A trial court enjoined the manufacturer from making the infringing product. During the appeal, the agency and the manufacturer exchanged litigation-related information. The technology company filed a FOIA request for the communications between the agency and the manufacturer. Id. at 275. Under Exemption 5, the agency invoked a privilege to withhold the communications. On appeal, the technology company argued that the agency improperly withheld the communications because they were not inter-agency or intra-agency communications. Id. at 276-77.

The court held that under the common interest doctrine, the communications between the agency and the manufacturer were considered intra-agency communications. See id. at 282. The agency and the manufacturer shared an interest in the government's continued use of the manufacturer's products and decided to exchange information to further that goal. Therefore, the agency and the manufacturer "could rely on one another's advice, secure in the knowledge that privileged communications would remain just that." Id. at 282-83.

Here, NNSA is a federal agency that shares a common interest with a private party, LANS. As in Hunton & Williams, NNSA and LANS share a mutual interest since a decision adverse to LANS could result in increased costs borne by NNSA. For this reason, we find that the litigation-related information satisfies Klamath's first condition. Information satisfies Klamath's second condition if it falls within "civil discovery privileges," such as the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product privilege, or the deliberative process privilege. Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8 (citations omitted). NNSA invoked both the deliberative process privilege and the attorney work-product privilege to withhold the redacted information.

a. Deliberative Process Privilege

An agency may withhold information under the deliberative process privilege if it is "predecisional" and "deliberative." Coastal States Gas Corp, 617 F.2d at 866. "[Information] . . . is 'predecisional' if it precedes, in temporal sequence, the 'decision' to which it relates." Hinckley v. United States, 140 F.3d 277, 284 (D.C. Cir. 1998). We "must be able to pinpoint an agency decision or policy to which the [information] contributed." Id. Conversely, information which explains actions an agency has already taken is not predecisional. Ryan v. Dep't of Justice, 617 F.2d 781, 791 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Information may lose its predecisional status "if it is adopted, formally or informally, as the agency position . . . ." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

Information is deliberative if it "reflects the give-and-take" of the decision or policy-making process or "weigh[s] the pros and cons of agency adoption of one viewpoint or another." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The agency must identify the role the information plays in that process. Hinckley, 140 F.3d at 284 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). We "ask . . . whether the information is so candid or personal in nature that public disclosure is likely . . . to stifle honest and frank communication within the agency. . . ." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege does not exempt purely factual information from disclosure. Petroleum Info. Corp. v. Dep't of the Interior, 976 F.2d 1429, 1435 (D.C. Cir. 1992). However, "[t]o the extent that predecisional materials, even if 'factual' in form, reflect an agency's preliminary positions or ruminations about how to exercise discretion on some policy matter, they are protected under Exemption 5." Id. The deliberative process privilege routinely protects certain types of information, including "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege assures that agency employees will provide decision makers with their "uninhibited opinions" without fear that later disclosure may bring criticism. Id. The privilege also "protect[s] against premature disclosure of proposed policies before they have been . . . formulated or adopted" to avoid "misleading the public by dissemination of documents suggesting reasons and rationales . . . which were not in fact the ultimate reasons for the agency's action." Id. (citation omitted).

We find that NNSA properly invoked the deliberative process privilege to withhold portions of the documents. Many of these documents are e-mails that are predecisional – i.e., they precede the issuance of a final agency decision. The documents are also deliberative – i.e., they contain evaluation of the settlement agreement by the DOE prior to it being executed by ACCLP and LANS.

b. Attorney Work-Product Privilege

The attorney work product privilege protects from disclosure documents which reveal "the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation." FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3); see also Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511 (1947). The privilege is intended to preserve a zone of privacy in which a lawyer or other representative of a party can prepare and develop legal theories and strategies "with an eye toward litigation," free from unnecessary intrusion by their adversaries. Hickman, 329 U.S. at 510-11. "At its core, the work product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case." United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975).

We find that NNSA properly invoked the attorney work-product privilege to withhold portions of the documents in this case. Many of these documents contain the opinions, conclusions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of DOE or LANS concerning the subject matter of the requested documents. The documents also include the mental impressions of DOE attorneys.

c. Segregability

Notwithstanding the above the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such a record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). We reviewed the withheld information and did not find any non-exempt, segregable information.

d. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. NNSA concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the requested information would cause an unreasonable harm to NNSA's ongoing decision-making process. Therefore, release of the withheld information would not be in the public interest.

e. Conclusion on Exemption 5

We have reviewed a large sample of the documents from which information was withheld under Exemption 5. Given the nature and our review of the sample documents, we find that Exemption 5's deliberative process privilege and attorney work-product privilege were properly applied.

3. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990); see also Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees, 879 F.2d at 874.

a. Privacy Interest

NNSA invoked FOIA Exemption 6 to redact the names and contact information of LANS employees from the documents it released to the Appellant. The Appellant contends that the NNSA improperly withheld information under Exemption 6, contending, that "[t]here is no expectation of privacy, even by government contractors, because all information at issue was done in a person's capacity as an employee or representative and has no bearing on one's personal affairs." Appeal at 3.

It is well settled that the release of an individual's name to the public implicates a privacy interest under the FOIA. Associated Press v. Dep't of Justice, 549 F.3d 62, 65 (2d Cir. 2008). The privacy interests protected by the exemptions to FOIA are broadly construed. See Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. at 763. The Appellant's allegation that there is no expectation of privacy, even by government contractor employees, is erroneous. As stated above, courts have found a broad privacy interest. Therefore, NNSA correctly concluded that the contractor employees whose names appear in the documents have a legitimate expectation of privacy under the FOIA.

b. Public Interest

Having identified a privacy interest in the withheld information, it is necessary to determine whether there is a public interest in the disclosure of the information. Information falls within the public interest if it contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the government. See Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. at 775. Therefore, unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of information, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d at 879.

It is clear that release of the names of LANS employees would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. Release of the names and contact information of the LANS employees who assisted in the negotiation between LANS and ACCLP would contribute little, if any, to public understanding of the issues surrounding the negotiation or any other matter of public concern. The withheld names and contact information are contained in communications between LANS employees and the DOE who are forwarding information from one entity to another, rather than actually taking part in the workings of the DOE. The emails from which the privacy information was withheld are asking for a concurrence from the DOE. In no way does the Exemption 6 information withheld from these documents shed light on the operations and activities of the DOE. In the present case, we find that the public interest in the withheld information at issue here is minimal at best. The Appellant has not established how release of the identities of the contractor employees would serve any public interest. To the contrary, we find that release of the identifying information of the contractor employees would reveal little, if anything, to the public about the workings of the government.

c. Balancing Test

Because we have found a privacy interest in the names of the contractor employees and no public interest in their disclosure, we find that release of the contractor employee's names would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Therefore, NNSA properly withheld the information under Exemption 6.

D. Review of the Documents

We have reviewed a large sample of the documents from which information was redacted. NNSA appeared to be very careful with most of its redactions. Nonetheless, our review of the documents leads us to question some of the withholdings. In at least three instances, information was withheld and we cannot determine which Exemption was used. As an example, in Attachment 69 the names LANS and ACCLP were withheld. The redacted page references all three Exemptions for withholding information on the page. Because this information has previously been released, we are unclear why it was withheld on this document. Another example is Attachment 68, where the caption of the case, including the companies' names, before the Civilian Board of Contract Appeals was withheld. The redacted page references Exemptions 4 and 5 for withholding the information on the page. Again, because this information was released in other documents, we are unclear why it was withheld on this document. As a final example, Attachment 7 withholds the case caption, but page 2 of Attachment 6 releases it. The redacted page in Attachment 7 references Exemptions 4 and 5 for withholding the information on the page. On remand, NNSA should clarify these inconsistencies and either release the information or issue a determination explaining the basis for the withholding.

III. Conclusion

After considering the Appellant's arguments, we are convinced that NNSA properly withheld the redacted information from the documents under Exemptions 4, 5, and 6. The Appellant's argument that the documents are subject to the FOIA but not subject to the Exemptions because the documents were between two private entities lacks merit. It is intuitive that a document that is subject to release under the FOIA is also subject to the FOIA exemptions. Second, the Appellant's argument that NNSA has waived the right to use any exemptions to the FOIA because LANS and ACCLP were involved in arbitration is erroneous. The government did not undertake an authorized, official release of the documents. Third, we find that NNSA properly applied Exemptions 4, 5, and 6 of the FOIA to the withheld information. In those instances where pages indicate that two or more Exemptions were used to withhold information on the same page, we have reviewed the documents and found that no factual information could be segregated from the withheld information. Finally, NNSA inconsistently withheld some of the information, i.e., the case caption. For that reason, we will remand the matter to NNSA for a new determination. NNSA must review the documents for consistency of its withholdings. Accordingly, the Appeal should be granted in part and denied in all other respects.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Carter & Burgess, Inc., Case No. FIA-12-0008, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

Decision and Order

On February 29, 2012, Cynthia Brown filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on January 24, 2012, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (RO), in Richland, Washington, in response to a request for documents that Ms. Brown filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. RO did not locate any documents responsive to Ms. Brown's request. In her appeal, Ms. Brown challenges the adequacy of RO's search. This appeal, if granted, would require RO to perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In December 2011, Ms. Brown submitted a FOIA request to RO in which she sought records pertaining to her late mother. Letter from Dorothy Riehle, RO, to Cynthia Brown, January 24, 2012 (January Determination Letter) at 1. In a December 2011 determination letter, RO informed Ms. Brown that it located her late mother's medical record, and that the record would be released to her directly by CSC Hanford Occupational Health Services, a company that maintains occupational health records for the DOE's Hanford site. Id. On January 13, 2012, Ms. Brown submitted an email to RO, questioning why certain records pertaining to her mother were not provided to her. Id. Based on Ms. Brown's email, RO conducted a new search for responsive documents. In the January Determination Letter, RO informed Ms. Brown that the new search did not return any new records. Id.

Ms. Brown filed the instant appeal challenging the adequacy of RO's search. See Letter from Cynthia Brown to OHA, dated February 17, 2012 (Appeal). In her Appeal, Ms. Brown alleges that RO's search was inadequate because she did not receive all of the records which she sought. Appeal at 1. Specifically, Ms. Brown seeks certain missing records pertaining to her late mother's hospital stays. Id. at 2-5.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[*]

In reviewing the Appeal, we contacted RO to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See Email from Diane DeMoura, OHA, to Dorothy Riehle, RO, March 7, 2012. RO informed us that, after receiving Ms. Brown's January 13, 2012, email questioning why certain records she requested were missing, RO conducted a second search for responsive documents and located no new records. See Email from Dorothy Riehle, RO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, March 8, 2012. According to RO, "this search was conducted by those within the agency who are most familiar with the subject matter of the request, in locations where documents would most likely be found. Specifically, [RO] searched the files of CSC and the Records Holding Area which stores and maintains archive records for the Hanford site." Id. RO conducted the search using Ms. Brown's mother's name and social security number, and searched records both manually and electronically. Id. In addition, RO conducted a search of Ms. Brown's father's medical record, in case documents pertaining to Ms. Brown's mother were inadvertently misfiled. However, the search of Ms. Brown's father's medical record also yielded no responsive documents. Id.

Based on this information, we find that RO performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Brown's FOIA request, despite the fact that the search did not yield the records that she seeks. Accordingly, the search was adequate and the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on February 29, 2012, by Cynthia Brown, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0009, is hereby denied.

Issued: March 30, 2012

Decision and Order

On March 9, 2012, Hughes Socol Piers Resnick DYM, Ltd. (Hughes Socol) appealed a determination issued to it on February 15, 2012, by the Chicago Office of the Department of Energy (DOE). The Chicago Office had responded to a request that Hughes Socol had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Chicago Office had identified eight responsive documents, but it withheld them under FOIA Exemption 4. This appeal, if granted, would require the Chicago Office to release the withheld information to Hughes Socol.

I. Background

On January 19, 2012, Hughes Socol filed a FOIA request with the Chicago Office for "Disclosure Statements, and any amendments to them, submitted by UChicago-Argonne, LLC, operator of Argonne National Laboratory, between January 1, 2008 and January 1, 2012, that disclose cost accounting practices, including methods of distinguishing direct costs from indirect costs and the basis used for allocating indirect costs." Appeal Letter at 1.

The Chicago Office found the following eight documents:

1. Final version of the Disclosure Statement effective October 1, 2010 (submitted March 11, 2011);
2. Revised Disclosure Statement effective October 1, 2008 (submitted February 2, 2009);
3. Second revised Disclosure Statement effective October 1, 2007 (submitted June 26, 2008);
4. Revised Disclosure Statement effective October 1, 2007 (submitted March 28, 2008);
5. Updated version of the Disclosure Statement effective October 1, 2011 (submitted December 22, 2011);

6. Disclosure Statement effective October 1, 2010 (submitted July 30, 2010);
7. Revised Disclosure Statement effective October 1, 2009 (submitted March 5, 2010); and
8. Revised Disclosure Statement effective April 1, 2009 (submitted May 7, 2009).

Determination Letter at 1. The Chicago Office invoked Exemption 4 to withhold each document in its entirety. Id. It explained that the documents contain confidential commercial information from UChicago-Argonne, LLC, such as direct and indirect operation costs, employee benefit plans, depreciation and capitalization practices, deferred compensation, insurance costs, and other costs and credits. Releasing this information, the Chicago Office explained, would "likely . . . cause substantial harm to [UChicago-Argonne, LLC's] competitive position . . . by making known information to potential competitors for the Argonne National Laboratory Prime Contract to operate the Argonne facility that would enable such competitors to undercut Argonne's positions." Id. at 2.

On Appeal, Hughes Socol argues that the Disclosure Statements should be released for three reasons. First, the current Disclosure Statement supersedes six of the eight responsive documents. Thus, those six documents contain information that is stale, not competitive. Appeal Letter at 5. Second, it argues that the University of Chicago has managed the Argonne National Laboratory since 1946, under long-term contracts (the most recent ending on Sept. 30, 2015). Thus, it says, "The relevant 'market' is not characterized by actual competition." Id. Third, Hughes Socol notes that Congress has held hearings on the indirect costs of DOE facilities and the need for oversight. Thus, it says, the DOE should release the information out of a "compelling public interest." Id. at 6.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

1. The Chicago Office Properly Invoked Exemption 4 to Withhold the Disclosure Statements

Exemption 4 protects information from disclosure when it is a trade secret or when it is (i) commercial or financial; (ii) obtained from a person; and (iii) privileged or confidential. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4).

i. Commercial or Financial

Information is "commercial" if "it serves a 'commercial function' or is of a 'commercial nature.'" Nat'l Ass'n of Home Builders v. Norton, 309 F.3d 26, 38 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citations omitted).

The Disclosure Statements are commercial information. They serve a "commercial function" – they describe UChicago-Argonne, LLC's cost accounting practices and procedures for its business of running the Argonne National Laboratory.

ii. Obtained from a Person

"Person" includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, associations, and public or private organizations other than an agency. Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.3d 93, 95 (2d Cir. 1996) (applying the definition of person in 5 U.S.C. § 551(2)).

The Disclosure Statements were obtained "from a person." The FOIA's broad definition of a person includes business organizations such as UChicago-Argonne, LLC.

iii. Privileged or Confidential

The definition of "confidential" depends on whether the information was voluntarily or involuntarily submitted to the agency. See Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992). To determine whether a document was submitted voluntarily or involuntarily, the agency must rely upon "legal authority, rather than the parties' beliefs or intentions. . . ." Ctr. for Auto Safety v. Nat'l Highway Traffic Safety Admin., 244 F.3d 144, 149 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Information was submitted involuntarily where "any legal authority compel[led] its submission, including informal mandates that call[ed] for the submission of the information as a condition of doing business with the government." Lepelletier v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 977 F. Supp. 456, 460 n.3 (D.D.C. 1997), rev'd in part on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (1999).

Voluntarily submitted information is confidential if the submitter would not customarily release it to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project, 975 F.2d at 879. The agency has the burden of proving the submitter's custom. Id.

Involuntarily submitted information is confidential if releasing it is likely to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information or cause substantial harm to the submitter's competitive position. Nat'l Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). "Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial harm . . . cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents." Pub. Cit. Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

Here, the Disclosure Statements contain information submitted by UChicago-Argonne, LLC, and we find that that information is confidential. UChicago-Argonne, LLC submitted the information involuntarily because the government required it to complete the Disclosure Statements as part of a response to a solicitation from the government. See 48 C.F.R. 9903.202-1 (requiring Disclosure Statements from certain institutions receiving prime contracts). The information reflects UChicago-Argonne, LLC's business format, types of sales, methods of charging the government, and whether it charges the government average costs or another rate for materials and labor. Releasing this information would allow the competitors of UChicago-Argonne, LLC to know its bidding strategy, while UChicago-Argonne, LLC would not know the bidding strategy of its competitors. This asymmetry of information would likely cause substantial competitive harm to UChicago-Argonne, LLC, by allowing its competitors to submit lower bids.

2. Hughes Socol's Arguments

i. The Current Disclosure Statement Supersedes Six Others

Hughes Socol argues that six of the eight Disclosure Statements contain no competitive information because they have been superseded by more recent Disclosure Statements. Appeal Letter at 5.

We find this argument unpersuasive. Much of each Disclosure Statement consists of form responses with a series of boxes to check. Regardless of whether the responses changed between earlier and current Disclosure Statements, the responses still reveal the confidential commercial information that consists of UChicago-Argonne, LLC's proprietary business strategies.

ii. The Prime Contract Lacks Competition

Hughes Socol also argues that the University of Chicago has managed the Argonne National Laboratory since 1946, under long-term contracts (the most recent ending on Sept. 30, 2015). Thus, it says, "The relevant 'market' is not characterized by actual competition." Appeal Letter at 5.

We find this argument unpersuasive. When the current operating contract began in October 2006, a number of companies expressed interest.[1] The contract expires every 10 years. Moreover, at any time, a competitor may express interest, and the Chicago Office can terminate UChicago-Argonne, LLC's contract.[2]

iii. Releasing the Disclosure Statements Would Further the Public Interest

If the FOIA exempts information from mandatory disclosure, the DOE should generally release it if doing so would further the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Hughes Socol argues that releasing the Disclosure Statements would further the public interest. Appeal Letter at 6.

Even if that were so, agencies lack the discretion to release information properly withheld under Exemption 4. CNA Fin. Corp. v. Donovan, 830 F.2d 1132, 1151-52 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The Trade Secrets Act bars the agencies from the discretionary release of information covered by the Act. 18 U.S.C. § 1905. Exemption 4 co-extends with the Trade Secrets Act, so the Trade Secrets Act also bars the agencies from the discretionary release of information withheld under Exemption 4. CNA Fin. Corp., 830 F.2d at 1151-52.

B. Segregability

Even if the FOIA exempts documents from disclosure, non-exempt information that is "reasonably segregable" from those documents must be disclosed after the exempt information is redacted. Johnson v. Exec. Office for United States Attorneys, 310 F.3d 771, 776 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)).

[2] Id.

Exemption 4 protects UChicago-Argonne, LLC's confidential commercial information in the Disclosure Statements. But the Disclosure Statements also contain much additional, segregable information that Exemption 4 may not protect. For example, each Disclosure Statement contains instruction segments that contain no responses from UChicago-Argonne, LLC. We will remand this matter to the Chicago Office for it to release reasonably segregable information. It may do so by redacting UChicago-Argonne, LLC's responses from each Disclosure Statement.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Hughes Socol Piers Resnick DYM, Ltd. filed on March 9, 2012, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0010, is granted in part, as explained in Paragraph (2), below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Chicago Office for it to release reasonably segregable information to Hughes Socol Piers Resnick DYM, Ltd.

Decision and Order

On March 29, 2012, Preston P. Straub appealed a determination issued to him on February 14, 2012, by the Chicago Office of the Department of Energy (DOE). The Chicago Office had responded to a request that Mr. Straub had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Chicago Office located two documents but found that they are not agency records subject to release under the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the Chicago Office to review the requested documents as agency records and either release them or justify their withholding under the FOIA.

I. Background

UChicago-Argonne, LLC (UCA), a private contractor, manages and operates the Argonne National Laboratory for the DOE. Mr. Straub filed a FOIA request for "copies of any emails sent by [a particular UCA employee] on November 14th or 15th [of] 2011 which contain my name." Determination Letter at 1. Mr. Straub specified the division where the employee works and the e-mail address that the employee used. Id.

The Chicago Office denied Mr. Straub's FOIA request. It stated that the UCA found two documents. Determination Letter at 1. But the Chicago Office withheld them because they "are personal records, not agency records subject to [the] FOIA." Id. The documents consist of two e-mails that a contractor employee sent, using the contractor's e-mail program, only to private individuals outside of the government. E-mails from Mimi R. Bartos, FOIA/ PA Officer, Chicago Office, Department of Energy, Mar. 29, 2012 and April 9, 2012. The e-mails were not accessed by any other agency employee or contractor employee. Id.

On appeal, Mr. Straub states that the Chicago Office "erred" in withholding the documents. Appeal Letter at 1. He argues that he has a "fundamental right to [a] copy" of the e-mails because they (1) were "published from a .gov" e-mail address; (2) contain his name "for no proper governmental reason;" and (3) are not classified. Id.

II. Analysis

A. Whether the Documents at Issue are Agency Records – Subject to the FOIA – or Personal Records

Under the FOIA, an agency need only release agency records. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). It need not release personal records. Id. Here, we determine whether the requested e-mails are agency records or personal records.

The FOIA does not define "agency records." Instead, it lists examples of the types of information that agencies must make public, such as final opinions and administrative staff manuals. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a)(2)(A), (C). Personal records, on the other hand, are documents created by an agency employee but not attributable to the agency for purposes of the FOIA. Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1489 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

To distinguish agency records from personal records, we evaluate the "totality of the circumstances." Consumer Fed'n of Am. v. Dep't of Agric., 455 F.3d 283, 287 (D.C. Cir. 2006); accord BPA Watch, Case No. TFA-0263 (2008).[1] To evaluate the totality of the circumstances, we examine the creation, possession, control, and use of the document by an agency. Consumer Fed'n of Am., 455 F.3d at 287 (citing Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc., 742 F.2d at 1490).

In Consumer Fed'n of Am., the federation asked the U.S. Dep't of Agriculture (USDA) to release portions of the electronic appointment calendars of six agency officials. Consumer Fed'n of Am., 455 F.3d at 285. (The federation sought the portions for "all meetings with non-government individuals, businesses, trade associations and/or other organizations[,] and the subject of the meetings." Id.) Each of the six agency officials created and continually updated the electronic calendars on the USDA computer system to schedule meetings and prevent conflicts. Id. at 285-86, 292-93. Five of the calendars were distributed to agency secretaries, special assistants, and senior management. Id. at 286. The sixth calendar was distributed only to the employee's secretary. Id.

The court found that the five calendars were agency records but that the sixth was not. Consumer Fed'n of Am., 455 F.3d at 291-93. The five calendars were relied on by special assistants and senior management in running the daily operations of the USDA. Id. at 292. The sixth calendar was not similarly relied on in running daily operations; it was distributed to and relied on only by the employee's secretary. Id. at 293. The court noted that its "focus on use helps to ensure that a document subject to disclosure under the FOIA is an agency record and not an employee's record that happens to be located physically within an agency." Id. at 292 (citation and internal quotations removed).

Here, the requested e-mails resemble all six calendars of Consumer Fed'n of Am. in that the e-mails were also created and stored on a computer system owned by an agency.[2] But the e-mails were created by a contractor employee, not an agency employee. And the computer system is possessed by a contractor, not an agency. Most importantly, unlike the five calendars of Consumer Fed'n of Am. that were found to be agency records, no other employee (agency or contractor) received the e-mails and relied on them to conduct agency business. The e-mails were distributed and relied on even less than the sixth calendar of Consumer Fed'n of Am., which was distributed to and relied on by the employee's secretary and still found to be a personal record. Therefore, the totality of the circumstances shows that the requested e-mails are personal records, not agency records.

B. Mr. Straub's Arguments

As noted above, Mr. Straub argues that he has a "fundamental right" to the e-mails because they were sent from a government e-mail address, they contain his name for no "proper" purpose, and they are not classified. We address his arguments in turn.

The FOIA does not require disclosure of all e-mails sent from a government address. Next, the e-mails related to no government purpose, which supports our finding that they are personal records rather than agency records. Lastly, the FOIA does not require disclosure of all non-classified information.

III. Conclusion

The requested e-mails are personal records, not agency records subject to the FOIA. Therefore, we will deny Mr. Straub's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Preston P. Straub, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0011, on March 29, 2012, is hereby denied.

Issued: April 20, 2012

Decision and Order

On March 26, 2012, Another Way BPA filed appeals from three determinations issued to it on March 8, 2012, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). In those determinations, BPA responded to requests for documents that Another Way BPA filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to each of the three requests, BPA located numerous documents responsive to Another Way BPA's requests. BPA identified and released a number of responsive documents, but withheld portions of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. In its appeals, Another Way BPA challenges the adequacy of BPA's search, as well as the applicability of Exemption 5 to the withheld information. This appeal, if granted, would require BPA to (1) release the information it previously withheld under Exemption 5, and (2) perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Another Way BPA submitted FOIA requests to BPA for records pertaining to BPA's I-5 Corridor Reinforcement Project, also known as the I-5 Corridor Project, which proposes to build a high-voltage transmission line near the Interstate 5 corridor in southwestern Washington. In two of its requests, Another Way BPA requested emails, meeting agendas and minutes, planning documents, preliminary designs, CAD drawings, and mitigation plans for two proposed substations, the Pearl substation and the Troutdale substation. See Letters from Christina J. Munro, BPA, to Richard van Dijk, Another Way BPA, March 8, 2012 (collectively, the "Determination Letter"). In a third FOIA request, Another Way BPA requested emails, meeting agendas, minutes and strategies, and handwritten notes pertaining to a December 2011 Public Meeting, also referred to as a "listening meeting," held by BPA regarding the I-5 Corridor Reinforcement Project. See Determination Letter.

In its three March 2012 determinations, BPA identified numerous documents as responsive to the requests, and released some in their entirety and others with information withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. See Determination Letter. BPA withheld the remaining responsive documents in their entirety under FOIA Exemption 5. Id. In applying Exemption 5, BPA noted that the documents it withheld under Exemption 5 are "draft documents that discuss several options for the design/function" of proposed BPA substations. Id. BPA further noted that it withheld under FOIA Exemption 6 some "names and personal contact information (address, email, and/or phone numbers) of individual citizens who have expressed an interest in [the I-5 Corridor] Project, as well as the personal cell phone numbers and email addresses of various individuals working on this project." Id.

After receiving the Determination Letter and the accompanying released documents, Another Way BPA filed the instant appeals. With respect to the determinations pertaining to the requests for information regarding the proposed Pearl and Troutdale substations, the Appellant challenges both the adequacy of BPA's search, and BPA's withholding of information under FOIA Exemption 5.[1] See Email from Richard van Dijk, Another Way BPA, to OHA, March 26, 2012 (Appeals, Case Nos. FIA-12-0012 and FIA-12-0013). Specifically, the Appellant argues that the searches for records responsive to these requests cannot be adequate because, given the complexity of the I-5 Corridor Project and the two-year period of time for which the Appellant requested records, it is likely that more records exist. Id. In addition, the Appellant maintains that the Exemption 5 withholdings in each case were improper because decisions have been made regarding the Pearl and Troutdale substations and, therefore, documents generated regarding those substations can no longer be considered predecisional. Id. With respect to BPA's response regarding the December 2011 public meeting records, Another Way BPA alleges that BPA's search was inadequate because several BPA employees were seen taking notes during the meeting, and the documents released by BPA contained "only one unidentified person['s]" handwritten notes. See Email from Richard van Dijk, Another Way BPA, to OHA, March 26, 2012 (Appeal, Case No. FIA-12-0014).

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Searches

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not

[1] Another Way BPA did not challenge the Exemption 6 withholdings in the three determinations. Therefore, the Exemption 6 withholdings fall outside the scope of this Appeal and will not be considered.

hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[2]

In reviewing the instant appeals, we contacted BPA to ascertain the scope of its searches for responsive documents. See Email from Diane DeMoura, OHA, to Christina J. Munro, BPA, March 27, 2012. BPA informed us that the searches for records responsive to each of the three FOIA requests were conducted in a substantially similar manner. The requests were forwarded to the project manager for the I-5 Corridor Project. See Email from Paul Mautner, BPA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, April 13, 2012. The project manager then made a list of each person working on the project in question (the proposed Pearl substation, the proposed Troutdale substation, and the December 2011 Public Meeting), and emailed each of those individuals "requesting that they search all electronic and paper documents that they have or have access to related to the I-5 project." Id. With respect to the request for information on the proposed substations, the project manager specifically requested that those individuals search for emails, meeting agendas and minutes, preliminary designs, CAD drawings, tower designs, and mitigation plans for the period indicated by the Appellant (January 2008 through February 2010 for the Pearl substation, and January 2008 through July 2010 for the Troutdale substation). The project manager also directed those individuals to use the search terms "Pearl," " Troutdale," and "Sundial" in performing their searches. Id. As to the request for information pertaining to the December 2011 Public Meeting, the project manager specifically requested that the pertinent individuals search for emails, meeting agendas, minutes and strategies, including all documents from before and after the meeting, as well as any handwritten notes made during the meeting. Id. Finally, the project manager followed up with each of the individuals to ensure that they understood the request, and requested that they inform him if no responsive documents were located. Id.

Based on this information, we find that BPA performed an exhaustive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Appellant's FOIA requests, despite the fact that the searches did not yield the volume of information that the Appellant expected. Therefore, the search was adequate.

B. Exemption 5

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 866 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

The deliberative process privilege does not exempt purely factual information from disclosure. Petroleum Info. Corp. v. Dep't of the Interior, 976 F.2d 1429, 1435 (D.C. Cir. 1992). However, "[t]o the extent that predecisional materials, even if 'factual' in form, reflect an agency's preliminary positions or ruminations about how to exercise discretion on some policy matter, they are protected under Exemption 5." Id. The deliberative process privilege routinely protects certain types of information, including "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The deliberative process privilege assures that agency employees will provide decision makers with their "uninhibited opinions" without fear that later disclosure may bring criticism. Id. The privilege also "protect[s] against premature disclosure of proposed policies before they have been . . . formulated or adopted" to avoid "misleading the public by dissemination of documents suggesting reasons and rationales . . . which were not in fact the ultimate reasons for the agency's action." Id. (citation omitted).

In this case, we have reviewed the documents containing information that BPA withheld under Exemption 5 and find that BPA properly invoked the deliberative process privilege. The information that BPA withheld under Exemption 5 consists of email communications among individuals working on the I-5 Corridor Project containing recommendations, proposals, opinions, etc. The withheld information also includes draft designs and other related data. This information is clearly predecisional, because, despite the Appellant's contentions that decisions have been made regarding specific substations, the I-5 Corridor Project is an ongoing project and no final decisions have been rendered regarding if, and how, the project should proceed. See Email from Paul Mautner, BPA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, April 13, 2012. Moreover, the withheld information is deliberative because it is part of an internal BPA process used to evaluate and analyze the various alternatives at issue in this project. Id. Releasing such information could well compromise the ability and willingness of BPA employees to make honest and open recommendations regarding the I-5 Corridor Project or other similar projects in the future. Accordingly, we find that BPA properly applied Exemption 5 in withholding certain portions of documents that it released to the Appellant.

C. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should nonetheless release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. BPA concluded, and we agree, that discretionary release of the information withheld under Exemption 5 would cause harm to the agency's ongoing decision-making process. Therefore, discretionary release of the withheld information would not be in the public interest.

D. Segregability

Notwithstanding the above, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such a record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). BPA has informed us that it inadvertently withheld segregable portions of certain email communications. BPA has corrected this oversight by releasing that information to the Appellant. See Letter from Christina J. Munro, BPA, to Richard van Dijk, Another Way BPA, April 12, 2012. We reviewed the remaining withheld information and did not find any additional non-exempt, segregable information.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we have concluded that BPA's searches for records responsive to Another Way BPA's three FOIA requests were adequate. We have further found that BPA properly withheld information pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5 in the documents it released to the Appellant. Finally, BPA complied with the requirements of the FOIA by releasing to the Appellant all non-exempt portions of the responsive documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed on March 26, 2012, by Another Way BPA, OHA Case Nos. FIA-12-0012, FIA-12-0013, and FIA-12-0014, are hereby denied.

Decision and Order

On March 27, 2012, Local 94, IFPTE (Local 94), appealed a determination issued to it on March 2, 2012, by the Idaho Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE). The Idaho Operations Office had responded to a request for information filed by Local 94. The Idaho Operations Office found responsive agency records but withheld information under Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Exemptions 5, 6, and 7(C). This Appeal, if granted, would require the Idaho Operations Office to release the withheld information to Local 94.

I. Background

Local 94 asked the Idaho Operations Office to release "the results from the Human Capital Management Accountability Program (HCMAP) audit of the Idaho Operation's Human Resources Office," which was conducted in May 2011. Determination Letter at 1. The Idaho Operations Office released the HCMAP report with numerous redactions under FOIA Exemptions 5, 6, and 7(C). Id.

On Appeal, Local 94 challenges the appropriateness of invoking Exemption 7. Appeal Letter. Exemption 7 applies to law enforcement records, Local 94 explains, and the HCMAP report concerns no law enforcement. Further, Local 94 points out that the Idaho Operations Office failed to label each redaction with the exemption invoked. Local 94 asks for the Idaho Operations Office to label its redactions and withhold only appropriately exempted information. Id.

The Idaho Operations Office explained that it labeled no redactions with exemption numbers because Local 94 did not label its request for information a FOIA request. E-mail from Clayton Ogilvie, Office of Public Affairs, Idaho Operations Office, April 2, 2012.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Determination

Our review of the documents confirms that the Idaho Operations Office labeled no redactions with exemption numbers. Without knowing which exemption or exemptions the Idaho Operations Office invoked for each redaction, we cannot consider Local 94's appeal. When offices do not specify the exemption or exemptions invoked, we remand the request to the office with instruction to issue a new determination letter. Tom Marks, Case No. TFA-0288 (2009).* The new determination letter must specify the exemption or exemptions invoked for each redaction and how the exemption or exemptions apply so that Local 94 will know the rationale for each withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Local 94, IFPTE, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0016, on March 27, 2012, is hereby granted in part, as explained in Paragraph (2), and denied in all other respects.

(2) The Idaho Operations Office must issue a new determination letter consistent with the instructions in this Decision.

United States Department of Energy
Office of Hearings and Appeals

In the Matter of: Competitive Enterprise Institute
Filing Date: March 29, 2012	Case No.:	FIA-12-0017

Issued: April 16, 2012

Decision and Order

On March 29, 2012, the Competitive Enterprise Institute (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from two final determinations, one issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EE) on March 26, 2012, and the other issued by the DOE's Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs (CI) on March 15, 2012. In these determinations, EE and CI responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. EE released a substantial amount of responsive information, but withheld responsive information under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 6. CI indicated that it had conducted a search for responsive documents, but had not found any responsive information. This Appeal, if granted, would require EE to release that information it has withheld to the Appellant, and would require CI to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant filed a broad request for information with DOE Headquarters seeking all correspondence between a number of individuals and organizations and EE and CI.[1]

[1] Specifically, the request sought all "Correspondence and any memoranda, analysis, other communications cited therein or attached, which were created, received and/or held by DOE's Office of Congressional & Intergovernmental Affairs, or Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy, which were sent to or from any of the following: 1) the office(s) of Congressman Fortney "Pete" Stark; 2) the company Solyndra; 3) any of the following individuals, all of whom are identified in public records as being paid

DOE Headquarters referred the request to EE and CI. On March 15, 2012, CI issued a determination letter (the CI Determination Letter) in which it indicated that it had not located any documents that were responsive to the Appellant's request. On March 26, 2012, EE issued a partial determination letter (the EE Determination Letter) in which it released several documents to the Appellant. However, EE withheld portions of these documents under Exemptions 4 and 6. EE Determination Letter at 1-2.[2] On March 29, 2012, the Appellant filed the present appeal contending EE had improperly withheld information under Exemption 6, and that CI had not conducted a reasonable search for responsive documents.

Exemption 6

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). Only Exemption 6 is at issue in the present case.[3]

The information withheld by EE under Exemption 6 consists solely of an e-mail message authored by an EE official to a member of the public, with the subject heading: "Dinner." EE informed us that the author of this e-mail does not object to its release. April 9, 2012, representatives of and advocates for Solyndra before the federal government: i) Catherine Ransom; ii) Alex Mistri; iii) Gregg Rothschild; iv) Joe Pasetti; v) Victoria Sanville; vi) Andy Quinn; vii) Steve Ham; viii) Chris Fish; ix) Kyle Winslow; x) Steve McBee; xi) Angela Becker-Dippmann; 4) any individuals whose email addresses reflect affiliation with the entities cited below, all of whom are identified in public records as being paid representatives of and advocates for Solyndra before the federal government: i) Glover Park Group; ii) McAllister & Quinn; iii) McBee Strategic Consulting." Request at 1-2.

[2] The EE Determination Letter indicated that it is currently reviewing a number of other documents that it had identified as responsive to the Appellant's request. EE Determination Letter at 1. The present appeal concerns only those documents released to the Appellant in EE's March 26, 2012, Determination Letter.

[3] EE withheld portions of a patent application under Exemption 4 in its March 26, 2012, Determination Letter. The present appeal does not contest EE's withholdings under Exemption 4.

E-mail from Patrick Shipp, Office of Project Management and Evaluation, Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy to Steven L. Fine, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Accordingly, EE told us it would release the information it withheld under Exemption 6 to the Appellant in the near future. Id. Therefore that portion of the present Appeal concerning EE's withholdings under Exemption 6 is now moot and will be dismissed.

Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (2010) (remanding where the site office performed no search).

We contacted CI to gain additional information to evaluate the adequacy of its search. CI informed us that it conducted an extensive search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request. April 4, 2012, Letter from James Secreto, Office of Intergovernmental and Congressional Affairs to Steven L. Fine, Office of Hearings and Appeals at 1-3 (Secreto Letter). This search included two electronic searches of DOE's Headquarters E-mail database. Id. In addition, CI required each employee to conduct self-searches of both their e-mail and written correspondence records for responsive documents. Id.

The Appellant correctly notes that EE found a number of responsive documents while CI found none. The Appellant contends that CI is more likely than EE to have received responsive correspondence, and therefore CI's search is deficient on its face. CI however, has provided the following explanation:

> CI did not produce this correspondence because CI believed [EE] conducted a search of DOE's Office of the Executive Secretariat's Electronic Document Online Correspondence and Concurrence System and produced the responsive documents identified in those search results. Therefore, an additional search of the Electronic Document Online Correspondence and Concurrence System is unlikely to identify additional responsive documents that have not already been provided to [the Appellant] with [EE's] March 26, 2012 letter and production.

Secreto Letter at 3. EE informed this Office that it had included DOE's Office of the Executive Secretariat's Electronic Document Online Correspondence and Concurrence System in its search for responsive documents. April 10, 2012, E-mail from Patrick Shipp, Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy, to Steven L. Fine, Office of Hearings and Appeals.

After reviewing the search for responsive documents conducted by EE in response to the Appellant's initial request, we find that it was reasonably calculated to uncover any responsive documents and was therefore adequate.

III. CONCLUSION

Since EE stated that it will release that information it withheld under Exemption 6, we are dismissing that portion of the Appeal. Because we have found that CI's search for responsive documents was adequate, we require no further action by CI on that portion of the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Competitive Enterprise Institute, Case No. FIA-12-0017, is hereby dismissed in part and denied in all other aspects.

Decision and Order

On April 4, 2012, Mark D. Siciliano (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on March 8, 2012, by the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Idaho released one document responsive to the request the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to conduct an additional search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On February 14, 2012, the Appellant filed a request with DOE Headquarters (DOE/HQ). Request E-mail dated February 14, 2012, from Appellant to DOE/HQ. DOE/HQ forwarded the request to Idaho on February 17, 2012. Memorandum dated February 17, 2012, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, Office of Information Resources, DOE, to Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, Idaho. On March 8, 2012, Idaho responded to the request and released a copy of the Idaho's National and Homeland Security Internal Assessment Review along with its transmittal memo. Determination Letter dated March 8, 2012, from Clayton Ogilvie to Appellant. In the instant Appeal, the Appellant challenges Idaho's search for responsive documents. Appeal Letter dated March 28, 2012, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of

State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

A. Item One

The Appellant first asked for the "[f]inal report and all supporting information regarding an assessment . . . of [Idaho] that was conducted in the May-October, 2011 timeframe. Subject of the report concerned the business volume at [Idaho's National and Homeland Security Division] who experienced a significant downward trend in business." Request E-mail. Idaho responded to this request by releasing the final report and the transmittal memo. Determination Letter at 1. In his Appeal, the Appellant states that he asked for "ALL government owned documents that support the findings," not just the final report and transmittal memo. Appeal Letter at 2.

We contacted Idaho to find out what type of search it conducted and its understanding of the scope of the request. Idaho replied that it contacted the person with the most knowledge on the matter to resolve what information existed that was responsive to the request. Idaho was given a number of papers and determined that only the final report, along with its transmittal memo, was responsive to the Appellant's request. Idaho indicated that it understood the request to be for the final report and any information which supported the report's factual conclusion. E-mail dated April 19, 2012, from Clayton Ogilvie to Janet Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. In his Appeal, the Appellant contends that his request included "all supporting information, including emails, draft reports, interview notes, and all government owned documents." Appeal Letter at 1. Although a requester cannot broaden the request on Appeal, we do not believe that the Appellant has broadened his Appeal by asking for emails and interview notes. Snake River Alliance, Case No. TFA-0468 (2011); Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0641 (2001), citing F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1996); Energy Research Foundation, 22 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1992); Cox Newspapers, 22 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1992); Bernard Hanft, 21 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1991); John M. Seehaus, 21 DOE ¶ 80,135 (1991). Therefore, we will remand the matter to Idaho to conduct a search for "all supporting" documents, including emails and interview notes. "Drafts of the report," however, are not "supporting documents" and, therefore, are outside the scope of the request and this Appeal. If the Appellant seeks documents outside the scope of the request, the Appellant needs to file another request.

B. Item Two

Second, the Appellant asks for the "[f]inal report and supporting information regarding the Associate Laboratory Director of [Idaho's National and Homeland Security Division] (Dr. KP Ananth) requiring personnel to remain in a room against their will during an extended alarm drill including DOE/HQ assessment of [Idaho] and Battelle Energy Alliance's (BEA) Employee Concerns Programs." Request E-mail. Idaho responded that any responsive documents were maintained by BEA and were not agency records. Determination Letter at 1-2. In his Appeal, the Appellant claims that Idaho's claim that no government-owned documents exist is simply impossible. Appeal Letter at 2.

The Supreme Court has articulated a two-part test for determining what constitutes an "agency record" under the FOIA. An "agency record" is a record that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Idaho concluded that the records were neither in the possession or control of Idaho at the time of the request and, therefore, were not agency records. Determination Letter at 1-2. Further, Idaho determined that any documents that may exist were BEA's records under the contract between BEA and DOE. Determination Letter at 1. We agree.

However, the Appellant specifically asked for information from DOE/HQ, which did not conduct a search for responsive records. He supports his claim that documents may exist at DOE/HQ, stating that senior members from DOE/HQ conducted an investigation/assessment into the safety incident at Idaho, and those officials interviewed him. Given that DOE/HQ did not conduct a search for responsive records because it believed all records would be in Idaho, we will remand the matter to DOE/HQ for a determination about whether responsive documents exist at DOE/HQ.

C. Item Three

Third, the Appellant asks for the "[n]ames of individuals that have filed employee concerns with BEA and/or [Idaho] that have rescinded their complaints after 01, August 2011." Request E-mail. Idaho replied that it conferred with the Idaho Employee Concerns Program, which indicated that no employee filing a concern since August 1, 2011, has retracted or rescinded their complaint. Determination Letter at 2. The Appellant asks that OHA remand the matter to Idaho to revisit the request. He states, "[a]t a minimum, due to the importance of a healthy reporting culture, [Idaho] should be ordered to investigate this incident[2/] to determine the validity of this concern." Appeal Letter at 2. This is not a challenge to the adequacy of the search but rather a request for an investigation of an incident, a request that is outside the scope of a FOIA request or appeal. In any event, we believe that the search was reasonable. Idaho contacted the Idaho Employee Concerns Office, which stated that there was no responsive information, and the Appellant has provided no reason to believe otherwise. E-mail dated April 12, 2012, from Clayton Ogilvie to Janet Fishman. Accordingly, we will uphold Idaho's search for this information as reasonable.

III. Conclusion

After considering the Appellant's arguments, we believe that Idaho may possess emails and interview notes that are responsive to the first item of the request. Therefore, we will remand the matter to Idaho to issue a new determination after conducting a search for emails and interview notes. We are convinced that Idaho conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the information requested by the Appellant in items two and three of his request. However, DOE/HQ did not conduct a search for information responsive to the Appellant's second item. Accordingly, we will remand the matter to DOE/HQ for a search for documents responsive to [2/] We assume that the Appellant is referring to the incident he described above where he claims that employees were required to remain in a room where an alarm was blaring. We are unclear how this incident relates to complaints filed with the Employee Concerns Program.

Item two. As the foregoing indicates, the Appeal should be granted in part and denied in all other respects.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mark D. Siciliano, Case No. FIA-12-0019, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office and the Department of Energy Headquarters, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

Issued: April 27, 2012

Motion for Reconsideration

This Decision concerns a Request for Reconsideration filed with the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) by California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance (CANDO). In this Request, CANDO requests that OHA modify a Decision and Order that we issued in response to one of two appeals CANDO filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. See California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance, Case Nos. FIA-12-0004 and FIA-12-0005 (2012) (CANDO).[1]

I. BACKGROUND

CANDO filed requests for information with the Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) seeking copies of documents responsive to ten specified topics related to loan guarantee contracts for the Agua Caliente and Gila Bend Solar Energy Projects. On October 31, and November 8, 2011, LGPO issued determination letters releasing copies of the documents CANDO requested regarding the Agua Caliente and Gila Bend projects, respectively. In both instances, however, LGPO withheld portions of the responsive documents under Exemption 4 of the FOIA.[2] On February 2, 2012, CANDO filed appeals contending that LGPO had improperly applied Exemption 4 to withhold the names and other identifying information concerning contractors and sub-contractors listed in those documents.[3]

[2] Exemption 4 permits an agency to withhold from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4).

[3] CANDO did not challenge LGPO's application of Exemption 4 to withhold other information from the responsive documents.

On March 23, 2012, OHA issued a Decision and Order in which it addressed LGPO's determinations regarding both sets of documents that CANDO had requested. Regarding the Agua Caliente documents (Case No. FIA-12-0005), OHA determined, based on representations it received from LGPO, that "no names or other information that identified contractors or sub-contractors was withheld." CANDO at 4. Relying on those representations, OHA concluded that CANDO's contention on appeal did not apply to any of the information withheld from the Agua Caliente documents, and it denied CANDO's appeal with respect to those documents.

In its Request for Reconsideration, CANDO asserts that the material LGPO identified and provided as responsive to the fifth enumerated topic of its request for Agua Caliente documents bore deleted information that, in the context of the surrounding, unredacted portions of the information CANDO received, "appears to refer to contractors." Request for Reconsideration at 1.

II. ANALYSIS

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Tarek Farag, Case No. TFA-0385 (2010). We have deemed CANDO's current Request a Motion for Reconsideration. In reviewing Motions for Reconsideration, we look to OHA's procedural regulations regarding modification or rescission of its orders. See 10 C.F.R. Part 1003, Subpart E; see also Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0237 (2007). Those regulations provide that an application for modification or rescission of an order shall be processed only when the application "demonstrates that it is based on significantly changed circumstances." 10 C.F.R. § 1003.55(b)(1).

Significantly changed circumstances includes "the discovery of material facts that were not known or could not have been known" at the time of the original proceeding; "the discovery of a law, rule, regulation … that was in effect" at the time of the original proceeding "and which, if such had been made known to the OHA, would have been relevant to the proceeding and would have substantially altered the outcome;" or "a substantial change in the facts or circumstances upon which an outstanding and continuing order of the OHA affecting the applicant was issued, which change has occurred during the interval between the issuance of such order and the date of the application [for modification or rescission] and was caused by forces or circumstances beyond the control of the applicant." 10 C.F.R § 1003.55(b)(2).

Applying these standards to the case at hand, we find that CANDO has presented evidence in its Motion warranting modification or rescission of our prior decision in CANDO. After receiving CANDO's Motion, we obtained and reviewed an unredacted version of the Agua Caliente material LGPO provided to CANDO's fifth topic of its request: "A copy of the Technical Information Section C – Part II 2. Engineering and Construction Plans, a copy of the list of engineering design contractors and the construction contractors selected to perform the construction of the project . . ." Among the information withheld from the redacted version of the responsive material are the names of three finalists. According to the document, one of these three companies had not yet, but was to be, selected to serve as the Engineering and Construction

Plans (EPC) contractor for the project. Immediately following the first deletion of these companies' names, the text of the application states: "These EPC [Engineering and Construction Plans] companies are extremely qualified and experienced to serve as the EPC Contractor for the Project." Agua Caliente Application at 13.

As stated above, although LGPO withheld a significant amount of information from the responsive documents under Exemption 4, CANDO limited its appeal to LGPO's application of Exemption 4 specifically to "names of the contractors and subcontractors, and identifying information." We spoke with LGPO after we received this Motion for Reconsideration. LGPO informed us that the names deleted from the material responsive to the fifth topic of CANDO's request were not the names of selected contractors, but rather a list of companies from which the contractor was to be selected at a later date, and therefore not responsive to CANDO's request. Memoranda of Telephone Conversation between Janelle Jordan, LGPO, and William Schwartz, OHA (April 13, 2012); E-mail from Janelle Jordan to William Schwartz (April 16, 2012).

We reject LGPO's position. Because CANDO specifically requested the entire section of the application entitled "Agua Caliente/II/C/2/Engineering and Construction Plans," no portion of that section can be considered not responsive to the request. Moreover, because the names of potential contractors contained in that section are responsive to CANDO's request, LGPO must either release those names or adequately justify applying Exemption 4, or any other basis for withholding, to those names. [4] In our previous Decision, we stated that adequate justification for applying Exemption 4 to any information requires, as an initial step, a description of the withheld information that is sufficient to permit the requester to understand what information has been redacted from a document. CANDO at 3. LGPO failed to describe the information it withheld from CANDO to include the names and identifying information of contractors and subcontractors, both selected (in the Gila Bend documents) and potential (in the Agua Caliente documents). On remand, it must describe the information withheld from the Agua Caliente documents in a more detailed manner, and, for the reasons set forth in CANDO, explain to the requester how the disclosure of any potential as well as selected contractors or subcontractors contained in the Agua Caliente documents is likely to cause competitive harm to the applicant.

III. CONCLUSION

CANDO has presented material facts that were not known at the time of the appeal proceeding. It has therefore demonstrated "significantly changed circumstances" warranting modification of our decision in CANDO, Case No. FIA-12-0005 (2012). Consequently, the Motion for Reconsideration should be granted.

Accordingly, we are remanding to LGPO CANDO's appeal concerning its request for information about the Agua Caliente Solar Energy Project (Case No. FIA-12-0005). LGPO should, on remand, review its withholding of any names or identifying information regarding potential or selected contractors or subcontractors throughout the material it identified as responsive to that request, and either release that information or issue a new determination in which it properly describes the information it is withholding and provides a sufficient explanation for withholding the information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance (CANDO) on April 10, 2012, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0020, is granted.

(2) The Appeal filed by California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance in Case No. FIA-12-0005 is hereby remanded to the Loan Guarantee Program Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

On April 27, 2012, Thomas R. Thielen filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on March 9, 2012, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Thielen submitted under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require Richland to release additional responsive material.

I. Background

Mr. Thielen filed a request for information with the DOE's Richland Operations Office concerning an investigation of retaliation for raising a safety concern. In this request, he sought a copy of documents regarding a safety concern he raised to CH2M Hill Plateau Remediation Company (CHPRC). On March 9, 2012, Richland issued a determination letter which stated that, according to CHPRC's contract with DOE, CHPRC's employee concern records are the property of the contractor and not subject to the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act or Privacy Act. See Determination Letter at 1. Richland released a copy of Mr. Thielen's DOE employee concern file, but withheld portions of the investigation summary included in the file pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5) (Exemption (k)(5) of the Privacy Act). According to the DOE, the information deleted from this document was obtained from sources who were promised confidentiality in exchange for their information. Id. On April 27, 2012, Mr. Thielen filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). He contends that the withheld information should be released to him because (1) he was retaliated against by CHPRC; (2) statements made during an investigation were not true, defamed his character and damaged his reputation; and (3) he has the right to defend allegations made against him and to clear his name. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

Privacy Act Exemption (k)(5)

The Privacy Act was enacted to prevent the unnecessary dissemination of personal information compiled about individuals by federal agencies. Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). However, under the Privacy Act, agencies may provide that some systems of records are not subject to the Act's disclosure provisions, but only to the extent that those records fall under certain specified exemptions. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k).

In first-party requests such as this one, information responsive to the request is provided to the requester unless there is an exemption authorizing withholding. Applicable here is Privacy Act Exemption (k)(5).

Exemption (k)(5) of the Privacy Act permits the withholding of "investigatory material compiled solely for the purpose of determining suitability, eligibility or qualifications for Federal civilian employment, . . . or access to classified information, but only to the extent that the disclosure of such material would reveal the identity of a source who furnished information to the Government under an express promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5). See Robert H. Calhoun, 27 DOE ¶ 80,283 (2000). In creating Exemption (k)(5), Congress recognized the need to protect the sources of information to whom promises of confidentiality had been made. See Chey Temple, 25 DOE ¶ 80,194 (1996).

Richland informed us that the record requested by Mr. Thielen, his DOE employee concern file, was located in a system of records established under the Privacy Act, specifically DOE System of Records 3, Employee Concerns Program Records. See Appeal Letter; see also Record of E-mail Communication between Dorothy C. Riehle, Richland, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (May 8, 2012). Pursuant to Exemption (k)(5) of the Privacy Act, Richland deleted the names of witnesses who were interviewed during the course of an investigation, specific job titles that could be used to identify witnesses and specific comments made by the witnesses, if they could be used to identify the witnesses. Id. Richland further informed us that the witnesses whose names and job titles were deleted requested confidentiality at the time of the interview and that there was an expressed promise between the government and the individuals that the identity of the sources would be held in confidence. However, after a careful review, we find that Privacy Act Exemption (k)(5) does not apply to the Appellant's employee concern file at issue. The information in question is not "investigatory material compiled solely for the purpose of determining suitability, eligibility or qualifications for Federal civilian employment, . . . or access to classified information . . .", and therefore Richland's initial determination to withhold under Exemption (k)(5) was incorrect. At this point, there is no basis to withhold any portion of the requested information under the Privacy Act. Therefore we will remand this matter to Richland to either release the requested information in its entirety or justify withholding any portions of it under the Privacy Act. */

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Thomas R. Thielen, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0023, on April 27, 2012, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Department of Energy's Richland's Office for further consideration in accordance with the instructions contained in the foregoing decision.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Poli A. Marmolejos

*/ We note that courts have upheld the withholding of third-party personal information, including the identities of third parties, under the Privacy Act on the ground that the third-party information is not "about" the requester, and is therefore outside the scope of the Privacy Act and not subject to disclosure, pursuant to the Privacy Act's definition of a "record" as "any item, collection, or grouping of information about an individual . . ." (At 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(4)). Haddon v. Freeh, 31 F. Supp.2d 16, 22 (D. D.C. 1998). In addition, cases in which this issue have been raised typically require that agencies process first-party requests separately and independently under both the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). See Shapiro v. DEA, 762 F.2d 611, 612 (7th Cir. 1985). It is DOE's established policy and practice to comply with this requirement and process requests under both the Privacy Act and the FOIA. Accordingly, Mr. Thielen's request should have been processed under the FOIA as well as the Privacy Act. However, only if there were grounds to withhold under each statute would the information be withheld from a requester. Under the FOIA, it is clear that Exemption 6, which shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" would justify the withholding of the information Richland initially withheld from the Appellant under the Privacy Act: the names of witnesses, and their job titles and comments to the extent they would reveal the witnesses' identities. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). Release of this third-party information could result in harassment or harm to individuals who provided confidential information to the DOE. Furthermore, there would be no overriding public interest in disclosure. Accordingly, we determine here that the information at issue would appropriately be withheld under the FOIA. Nevertheless, since we have determined that Privacy Act Exemption (k)(5) cannot be applied to withhold that information from the Appellant, Richland may withhold that information only if, on remand, it justifies that withholding under the Privacy Act on another ground, such as the definition of "record" in 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(4). We also note that courts have recognized a privilege to protect information obtained based on promises of confidentiality when disclosure "would hamper the efficient operation of an important Government program." Machin v. Zuckert, 316 F.2d 336, 339 (D.C. Cir. 1963). Accord Cooper v. Dept. Of Navy, 558 F.2d 274, 277 (5th Cir. 1977) ("To permit a breach of assurances of confidentiality given in order to obtain answers to such questions as these may perhaps provide access to more information in that particular case, but common sense tells us that it will likely also assure that in future cases such information will never see the light of day and will be of use to no one.").

Issued: May 24, 2012

Decision and Order

On May 1, 2012, Len Latkovski ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR). In that determination, OIR responded to a request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to perform an additional search and require other DOE offices to search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On July 21, 2011, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to the OIR, for records relating to certain "closed" cities of the former Soviet Union during the years 1945-1960.[1] See DOE Headquarters FOIA Request Form from Len Latkovski (July 21, 2011) (FOIA Request). On September 13, 2011, OIR sent the Appellant a partial determination letter stating that it referred the request to the Office of History and Heritage Resources (Office of History) in the Office of the Executive Secretariat so that responsive documents, if existing, could be located. The letter went on to state that the Office of History could find no documents responsive to his request.[2]

[1] These are cities with travel and residency restrictions which were associated with the former Soviet Union's production of nuclear weapons and other defense and research projects.

[2] The Appellant appealed the adequacy of the search for responsive documents conducted by the Office of History. In a November 15, 2011, Decision and Order, OHA found that the Office of History had conducted an adequate search under the FOIA. Len Latkovski, Case No. FIA-11-0004 (November 15, 2011). OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

OIR subsequently decided to expand the search for documents responsive to the Appellant's FOIA Request to other DOE organizations.[3] On March 22, 2012, OIR issued the Appellant another determination letter stating that an additional search had been made at the DOE's Office of Health, Safety and Security (HSS) but that no responsive documents had been located at that Office. Determination Letter at 2. The Letter also informed the Appellant that additional searches were being conducted at DOE's Office of Intelligence and the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) and that the Appellant would receive responses from those offices regarding any responsive documents in their possession.[4] Determination Letter at 1.

In his May 1, 2012, Appeal of OIR's March 22 determination, the Appellant argues that the search for responsive documents was inadequate. Appeal Letter at 2. The Appellant asserts that an adequate search would consist of a search of various DOE agencies he lists in his appeal. Appeal Letter at 2.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA first contacted OIR to ascertain the scope of the HSS search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA to Joan Ogbazghi, Information Access Specialist, OIR (May 2, 2012). In its response, an official of HSS informed OHA that the only potential source of responsive records would be contained in its records of the Russian Health Studies Program (RHSP) and that those records would not have any references to the listed "closed" cities especially since the RHSP did not include any of these cities in its studies and that it only possessed records from 1994 onward. See E-mail from Barrett Fountos, Program Manager, Russian Health Studies Program, Office of Domestic and International Health Studies Program (May 10, 2012). Additionally, the official had conducted a prior manual search of files for similar documents, pursuant to another FOIA request, but found no responsive documents. Id. Given that HSS entrusted the search to a knowledgeable official as to the possible existence of responsive documents and that the official had a reasonable basis to conclude that such documents did not exist in HSS, we find that the search conducted by HSS was adequate for the purposes of the FOIA. See National Association of Home Builders, Case No. TFA-0401, slip op. at 3 (August 9, 2010) (knowledgeable official's determination that responsive documents were not maintained at a particular office held to constitute an adequate search under the FOIA).

[4] During the pendency of this Appeal, OIR requested that the Office of Scientific and Technical Information (OSTI) also conduct a search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request. See E-mail from Joan Ogbazghi, Information Access Specialist, OIR (May 15, 2012).

With regard to the Appellant's challenge to the scope of OIR's overall DOE-wide search for responsive documents, we find that this challenge must fail. OIR has forwarded the Appellant's request to the Office of History, HSS, NNSA, OSTI, and the Office of Intelligence. OIR's selection of these offices represents a reasonable determination as to where documents relating to the specified "closed" cities in the former Soviet Union might exist.[5] Consequently, we find that OIR's search for responsive documents throughout DOE is also adequate.[6]

Based on the foregoing, we find that HSS conducted an adequate search for responsive documents pursuant to the Appellant's FOIA Request. Additionally, we believe that OIR has conducted a DOE-wide search reasonably calculated to discover responsive documents. Therefore, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Len Latkovski on May 1, 2012, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0024, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

[5] The Individual will receive separate determinations from NNSA, OSTI, and the Office of Intelligence.

[6] We note that almost all of the offices or agencies the Appellant listed in his Appeal would have had their existing documents, if any, archived at the Office of History or the Office of Intelligence. E-mail from Joan Ogbazghi, Information Access Specialist, OIR to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner (May 16, 2012). The Appellant may appeal the determinations regarding his FOIA Request which will be issued by NNSA, OSTI, and the Office of Intelligence.

Filing Date: May 8, 2012	)

Issued: May 31, 2012

Decision and Order

On May 8, 2012, the Center for Contract Compliance ("CCC") filed an appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's (DOE) Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) issued on March 19, 2012. In its determination, LGPO responded to a request for documents that CCC submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the CCC's FOIA request, LGPO identified and released one responsive document, but withheld portions of the document pursuant to FOIA Exemption 4. This appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release the withheld information to CCC.

I. BACKGROUND

In a September 12, 2011, request, CCC sought documents related to the Desert Sunlight Solar Farm Project, a 550-megawatt solar photovoltaic (PV) power plant project to be constructed in Riverside County, California. See Letter from Branden Lopez, CCC, to Alexander Morris, FOIA Office, DOE (September 12, 2011). LGPO issued a partial response to the request on February 6, 2012, and a second response on March 19, 2012. Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Branden Lopez, CCC (March 19, 2012) (Determination).

With the latter determination, which is the subject of the present appeal, LGPO released, in part, one document responsive to a portion of CCC's request seeking the names of contractors and subcontractors to be used on the project. Withheld from the document, under FOIA Exemption 4, were the names of two subcontractors, with additional information pertaining to one of the subcontractors. Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

As grounds for its Appeal, CCC contends that the name of a contractor working on a project that has received a DOE loan guarantee is not a trade secret, and that such information is normally provided in response to requests for certified payroll records of contractors required to comply with the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act. CCC further asserts that the names of contractors do not constitute privileged commercial or financial information, as the names of contractors licensed in the State of California are among information that can be found in an online database maintained by the California State License Board.

II. ANALYSIS

In responding to FOIA requests, an agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the documents at issue. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009). [*] Accordingly, if the DOE decides to withhold information, the FOIA requires the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 251 (D.C. Cir. 1977). These requirements allow both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., Case No. VFA-0304 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's review of that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

To determine whether information is "confidential" under Exemption 4, the agency must first decide whether the information was voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

If an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., Case No. VFA-0155 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 680 (D.C. Cir. 1976) ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

To aid us in reviewing the present appeal, LGPO provided an unredacted copy of the document that it released, with redactions, to CCC. As such, we can see that LGPO withheld from the document the names of two subcontractors on the project in question, as well as the labor categories of two of the workers to be employed by one of the subcontractors on the project. However, the requester did not have the benefit of a specific identification of the information withheld, as LGPO's determination only generally referred to the withheld information as "subcontractor information" and "sensitive commercial information that is maintained in confidence by the applicant and not available in public sources," and that "[s]uch proprietary information being withheld includes confidential commercial information." Determination at 2.

Further, in explaining why the information in question was withheld, the determination provided an equally generic basis, stating that disclosure of the information "would cause substantial harm to the applicant's competitive interest and it is not the type of commercial information that is ordinarily released to the public." Id. LGPO's determination did not state whether the information withheld was voluntarily or involuntarily submitted, but instead invoked the standard bases, noted above, for withholding both types of information. Moreover, the determination simply stated that the release of information would cause competitive harm, while providing no reasons for believing such harm will result. As we state above, such a conclusory and generalized allegation cannot form the basis for the withholding of information under the FOIA.

Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to LGPO. On remand, LGPO should either release the information that it redacted from the document it provided to CCC or issue a new determination in which it properly describes the information it is withholding and provides a sufficient explanation for concluding that its release would result in competitive harm.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 8, 2012, by the Center for Contract Compliance, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0025, is hereby granted in part, as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Loan Guarantee Program Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

On May 8, 2012, Russell Carollo (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on April 19, 2012, by the Department of Energy's Office of Inspector General (OIG), in Washington, D.C., in response to a request for documents that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OIG, in its April 19, 2012, determination letter, informed the Appellant, inter alia, that it neither confirmed nor denied the existence of any records described in the Appellant's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIG to either release any discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In his February 24, 2012, FOIA request (Request), the Appellant asked for the following information:

1. "All correspondence with or concerning in any way Masters Capital Management and/or its CEO Michael Masters. This would include, but not limited to, congressional correspondence."
2. "All FOIA request letters from or concerning in any way Masters Capital Management and/or its CEO Michael Masters."
3. "All information related in any way to any complaints of any kind (including for fraud or suspicious activity), investigations, administrative actions and/or prosecutions involving Masters Capital Management and/or its CEO Michael Masters."
4. "Reports of any kind about or containing information related in any way to Masters Capital Management and/or its CEO Michael Masters."

See April 19, 2012, letter from John Hartman, Assistant Inspector General for Investigations, OIG, to Russell Carollo at 1 (Determination Letter). In its April 19, 2012, Determination Letter, OIG informed the Appellant that, with respect to one portion of his request, it neither confirmed or denied the existence of any such records described in the request.[1] Id. The Determination Letter, citing FOIA Exemption 7(C), 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(7)(C)[2] as support, went on to state that, lacking an individual's consent, an official acknowledgement of an investigation or an acknowledgment of the existence of investigatory records about an individual could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. In his Appeal, the Appellant challenges this portion of the OIG's determination.

II. Analysis

Courts have recognized, in the context of some FOIA requests, that even acknowledging that certain records are kept would jeopardize the privacy interests that FOIA exemptions are designed to protect and that a Glomar response neither confirming nor denying the existence of responsive records is appropriate. See, e.g., Antonelli v. FBI, 721 F.2d 615, 617 (7th Cir. 1983) (Antonelli). In reviewing the interests to be balanced to justify Exemption 7(C) protection, it is apparent that the request at issue might reveal whether an individual is the subject of an OIG law enforcement investigation.[3] The courts and OHA have consistently held that individuals have a strong privacy interest in avoiding the stigma of being associated with a law enforcement investigation. See, e.g., Fitzgibbon v. CIA, 911 F.2d. 755, 767 (D.C. Cir. 1990); Massey v. FBI, 3 F.3d 620, 624 (2d Cir. 1993); Westinghouse Savannah River Co., LLC, Case No. VFA-0556 (March 13, 2000), slip op. at 3 (Westinghouse).[4] This strong interest is balanced against the fact that the Appellant has not referenced any specific public interest that would be furthered by the release of the requested documents. Given these interests, I find that the potential privacy interest threatened by release of any potentially responsive documents greatly outweighs any generalized, non-specific, public interest that would be furthered by release of such potential documents. See Beck v. Dep't of Justice, 997 F.2d 1489, 1492-94 (D.C. Cir. 1994); Massey, 3 F.3d at 624; McNamera v. Dep't of Justice, 974 F. Supp. 956, 957-60 (W.D. Tex. 1997); Westinghouse, slip op. at 3. Consequently, any potentially responsive documents would be protected by FOIA Exemption 7(C). Using this rationale, the courts and OHA have upheld the use of a Glomar response where a FOIA request might reveal Exemption 7(C) information disclosing the identity of individuals who are subjects of investigations or are otherwise mentioned in law enforcement records and who have not previously waived their privacy rights. See, e.g., Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for the Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 775 (1989); Massey; Antonelli; Westinghouse.

[1] An agency response to a FOIA Request, which states that the agency "can neither confirm or deny" the existence of responsive records because the confirmation or denial of the existence of responsive records would, in and of itself, reveal exempt information or constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy is often called a Glomar response. See Phillippi v. CIA, 546 F.2d 1009, 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (raising issue of whether CIA could refuse to confirm or deny its ties to Howard Hughes' submarine retrieval ship, the Glomar Explorer). We will refer to OIG's response as a Glomar response.

[2] Exemption 7(c) of the FOIA protects records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes but only " to the extent that production of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

[3] OHA has consistently held that OIG is a law enforcement body and its investigations and reports are records compiled for law enforcement purposes within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Westinghouse Savannah River Co., LLC, Case No. VFA-0556 (March 13, 2000), slip op. at 2.

[4] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

We have spoken to an OIG official who was familiar with the processing of the Appellant's FOIA Request. After reviewing the subject matter of the Request, the method by which the Request was processed, and the OIG justification offered in the determination letter, we find that OIG appropriately invoked its Glomar response. Thus, we agree that providing any other response to the FOIA Request could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, such as that protected by Exemption 7(C). Consequently, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 8, 2012, by Russell Carollo, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0026, is hereby denied.

Decision and Order

On May 16, 2012, Gregory Korte, on behalf of USA Today, filed an appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR) issued on April 12, 2012. In its determination, OIR responded to a request for documents that Mr. Korte submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to expedite the processing of Mr. Korte's FOIA request.

I. BACKGROUND

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On March 30, 2012, Mr. Korte filed a request with OIR for records pertaining to a loan guarantee application filed by the United States Enrichment Corporation (USEC) for the American Centrifuge Project. Mr. Korte asked for expedited processing of the request, stating that the requested information was urgently needed to inform the public about Congressional oversight of energy loan guarantee and grant programs and would enhance public debate on a transportation reauthorization bill that included $106 million in research, demonstration, and development grants for the American Centrifuge Project.

OIR issued a determination on April 12, 2012, finding that Mr. Korte's request did not satisfy the requirements for expedited processing. Determination Letter from OIR to Mr. Korte (April 12, 2012) (Determination). Specifically, OIR found that Mr. Korte did not provide material establishing any threat to the life or safety of an individual that would justify expedited processing, or identify "any actual or alleged activity that poses any particular urgency that requires the dissemination of information in an expedited manner." Id. at 2-3. On May 16, 2010, we received Mr. Korte's Appeal of OIR's denial of expedited processing. Appeal Letter from Gregory Korte, USA Today, to OHA (May 8, 2012).

II. ANALYSIS

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up in line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when the failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs if the requester is primarily engaged in disseminating information and has an "urgency to inform" the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v). The request at issue in this Appeal clearly does not involve information which could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or safety of an individual. Therefore, our analysis turns to the second situation – the "urgency to inform."

In order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform" and, thus, a "compelling need," we consider at least three factors: (1) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (2) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (3) whether the request concerns federal government activity. Al-Fayed v. CIA, 254 F.3d 300, 310 (D.C.Cir. 2001); see also Southeastern Legal Foundation, Inc., Case No. TFA-0389 (2010);[*] Center for Investigative Reporting, Case No. TFA-0200 (2007).

In its determination, OIR cited the above three factors and, in denying Mr. Korte's request for expedited processing, found that the "request does not address factor two." Determination at 3. Mr. Korte, however, contends in his appeal that "USA Today did address this criterion, noting that Congress is considering legislation directly related to the American Centrifuge Project loan guarantee." Appeal at 1. Mr. Korte cites a federal court decision finding "a significant recognized interest in enhancing public debate on potential legislative action." Appeal at 1 (quoting Gerstein v. C.I.A., No. C-06-4643 MMC, 2006 WL 3462658, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 29, 2006)).

We agree with Mr. Korte that the courts have found sufficient urgency to grant expedited processing where there is a significant interest in quickly disseminating news regarding a subject currently under debate by Congress. In Gerstein, for example, the court granted expedited processing of a request for documents related to unauthorized disclosure of classified information, based upon the requester's assertion that members of Congress were considering legislation to address leaks of classified information and that the subject had been discussed in hearings before the Senate Intelligence Committee. Id. at *1, *7; see also Leadership Conference on Civil Rights v. Gonzales, 404 F. Supp. 2d 246, 260 (D.D.C. 2005) (granting expedited processing to requester who was "monitoring election law reform and coordinating the legislative campaign to reauthorize provisions of the Voting Rights Act"); American Civil Liberties Union v. United States Department of Justice, 321 F. Supp. 2d 24 (D.D.C. 2004) (granting expedited processing where a principal "aim of plaintiff's FOIA request is to provide information for the ongoing national debate about whether Congress should renew Section 215 and other Patriot Act surveillance provisions before they expire").

In the present case, Mr. Korte notes that the President > has included $150 million in his FY 2013 budget for a research and demonstration project for the centrifuge technology that is the subject of the loan application. There are now provisions pending in both the House and the Senate that would fund the project, with the expressed intent to provide a "bridge" to the loan guarantee. That is, there is a direct connection between the pending legislation and the requested records.

Appeal at 1-2. Subsequent to filing the present Appeal, Mr. Korte reported in USA Today that a "$150 million 'backdoor earmark' for a uranium processing facility survived a vote in the House on Friday, [May 18,] keeping the Ohio project alive while the company seeks $2 billion in federal loan guarantees." Gregory Korte, House Preserves 'Backdoor Earmark' for Ohio Nuclear Facility, USA Today, May 18, 2012, http://www.usatoday.com/news/washington/story/2012-05-18/USEC-earmark/55056188/1. The article noted that "the provision still must be negotiated with the Senate, which included similar language in a 2012 transportation bill." Id.

Given the pendency of legislation before Congress concerning funding of the American Centrifuge Project, we find that Mr. Korte has demonstrated a sufficient "urgency to inform" the public regarding the actions of the government with respect to the project. We therefore find that the DOE should grant Mr. Korte's request for expedited processing of his request for documents related to USEC's loan guarantee application. Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to OIR, which "shall process as soon as practicable" Mr. Korte's FOIA request. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(6)(E)(iii).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 16, 2012, by USA Today, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0028, is hereby granted in part, as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Office of Information Resources, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

Issued: June 8, 2012

Decision and Order

On May 16, 2012, Ryan Noah Shapiro filed an appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Intelligence and Counterintelligence (IN) issued on April 5, 2012. In its determination, IN responded to a request for documents that Mr. Shapiro submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from the DOE any "records that were prepared, received, transmitted, collected and/or maintained by the [DOE], the National Joint Terrorism Task Force, or any Joint Terrorism Task Force relating or referring to the 'analysis of the animal rights movement in the U.S.'" referenced in a May 11, 1989, letter from the director of the DOE's Office of Threat Assessment to a British law enforcement official. Letter from Ryan Noah Shapiro to DOE FOIA Requester Service Center (March 2, 2012) (quoting Letter from Robert A. O'Brien, Jr., Director, Office of Threat Assessment, Defense Programs, to Detective Superintendent Malcolm MacLeod, Scotland Yard (May 11, 1989)).[1] The request was referred to IN, which issued a determination stating that it had located no documents responsive to the request. Letter from Steven K. Black, Principal Deputy Director, IN, to Ryan Shapiro (April 5, 2002). In his Appeal of the determination, Mr. Shapiro contends that "the DOE conducted an inadequate search for records responsive to my request." Appeal at 1.

[1] Though the request referenced Joint Terrorism Task Forces, the DOE treated the request as one for documents in the possession of the DOE, which could include documents that had been "prepared, received, transmitted, collected and/or maintained" by the DOE or by a Joint Terrorism Task Force.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Natural Resources Defense Council, Case No. TFA-0127 (2005).[2] The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

We therefore contacted the DOE's Office of Information Resources (OIR) for information regarding the search that was performed in this case. OIR informed us that it initially considered referring Mr. Shapiro's request to the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), but NNSA told OIR that the request did not fall under its jurisdiction. See E-mail from Ben Jaramillo, NNSA, to Diana P. Ngo, OIR (March 14, 2012). OIR also inquired with the DOE's Office of History and Heritage Resources (OHHR), which informed OIR that the Office of Threat Assessment, from which originated the 1989 letter referenced above, had, by 1990, been transferred to the DOE's Office of Intelligence. Email from Terry Fehner, Office of History and Heritage Resources, to Diana Ngo (April 2, 2012). On this basis, OIR referred Mr. Shapiro's request to IN.

In reviewing the present Appeal, it became apparent to us that any documents responsive to Mr. Shapiro's request, if such documents still exist, would be located in whatever DOE office assumed the responsibilities of the former Office of Threat Assessment (OTA). We consulted a source that indicated that, although the OTA became a part of the DOE's Office of Intelligence in 1990, it was separated from that office as part of a 1994 reorganization. JEFFREY T. RICHELSON, THE U.S. INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY 133 (4th ed. 1999). OHHR confirmed the accuracy of this source, and informed us that, as of 1999, the functions of OTA appear to have resided within the DOE's Office of Security and Emergency Operations. Email from Terry Fehner, OHHR, to Steven Goering, OHA (May 24, 2012).

OHHR also provided us with contacts within the NNSA who might have knowledge of these matters, and we ultimately contacted a Senior Policy Advisor within the NNSA's Office of Counterterrorism and Counterproliferation. This official told us that the functions of OTA that would have been responsible for the documents being requested became part of NNSA upon its creation in 2000, but that any such documents would no longer exist, as they would have been disposed of several years ago. Email from Patrick Daly, NNSA Office of Counterterrorism and Counterproliferation, to Steven Goering, OHA (May 25, 2012). Nonetheless, this official coordinated a search of his office, after which he informed us that the office located no responsive documents. Email from Patrick Daly to Steven Goering (May 31, 2012).

[2] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

Based on the information available to us, we are now convinced that the DOE has conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the materials sought by Mr. Shapiro, and that this search was, therefore, adequate under the FOIA. Thus, we will deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 16, 2012, by Ryan Noah Shapiro, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0030, is hereby denied.

Decision and Order

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Patsy Cornwell Sherriff filed in response to a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) issued to her. In that determination, ORO replied to a request for documents that Ms. Sherriff submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the DOE conduct another search for responsive documents. [1]

In her FOIA request, Ms. Sherriff sought access to all medical records, absentee records, hospital reports, dosimetry badge readings, hazardous chemical readings, and radiation exposure records for her grandfather, William D. Goldsby, who was employed at the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant in Paducah, Kentucky from 1953 until his death in 1954. [2] She also requested information

2/ Ms. Sherriff also filed a similar request for documents relating to her father, Raleigh Cornwell, who also worked at the Paducah Plant. Although ORO processed the two requests separately, Ms. Sherriff's Appeal attempts to combine the two cases, as she is also requesting that documents relating to her father be located and released. For purposes of administrative concerning Mr. Goldsby's former employers. In response to this request, ORO released several documents that contained information concerning Mr. Goldsby's former employers. However, ORO was unable to locate any medical or hazardous material exposure information regarding Mr. Goldsby. In her Appeal, Ms. Sherriff challenges the adequacy of the search that was performed.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Mark D. Siciliano, Case No. FIA-12-0019 (2012); Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dept. of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985) (Miller); accord, Weisberg v. Dept. of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to obtain further information concerning the scope of the search that was performed, we contacted ORO. We were informed that Ms. Sherriff's request was referred to (i) the Oak Ridge Associated Universities, which operates a research hospital and the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, and which maintains records relating to beryllium exposure, (ii) the ORO's records holding area, and (iii) the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant. No medical or exposure records were located at these sites. However, ORO informed us that after reviewing Ms. Sherriff's Appeal, it had determined that an additional location at which responsive documents might be located had not been searched: the repository at which records from the former K-25 plant are being stored in Knoxville, Tennessee. Accordingly, we will remand this matter to ORO so that a search of the K-25 records repository can be performed. Upon completion of this search, ORO should issue a new determination to Ms. Sherriff setting forth the results of the new search. [3] efficiency, it would be inappropriate for the OHA to consider Appeals concerning separate FOIA requests under the same case number. Moreover, it is unclear whether ORO has issued a final determination regarding this second request. Therefore, this Decision considers only the determination that was issued to Ms. Sherriff regarding her request for records concerning her grandfather, William D. Goldsby, request number ORO-2012-00884-F.

3/ ORO has also informed us that it will search the K-25 records repository for documents relating to Ms. Sherriff's father, Raleigh L Cornwell. She is, of course, free to file new FOIA Appeals if the results of these searches are not satisfactory.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Patsy Cornwell Sherriff, OHA Case Number FIA-12-0032, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Oak Ridge Office for additional proceedings consistent with the directions set forth in this Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

This Decision concerns an Appeal that the National Security Archive (NSA) filed in response to a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR) issued to it. In that determination, the OIR replied to a request for documents that NSA submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the DOE conduct another search for responsive documents.[1]

In its FOIA request, NSA sought access to documents relating to the Bonn Climate Change talks held in August 2010. OIR determined that any responsive documents would be located in the Office of Policy and International Affairs (OPIA), and referred the request to that Office. OPIA conducted a search, and located one document that was responsive to the request. That document was released to NSA in its entirety. In its Appeal, NSA challenges the adequacy of the search. It claims that, in addition to OPIA, the DOE's retired records at the Washington National Records Center should have been searched.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Patsy Cornwell Sherriff, Case No. FIA-12-0032 (2012); Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985) (Miller); accord, Weisberg v. Dep't of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to obtain further information concerning the scope of the search that was performed, we contacted OIR and OPIA. OIR has agreed to expand the scope of the search that was performed to include the Washington National Records Center. See Memorandum of June 21, 2012, telephone conversation between James Little, Office of Hearings and Appeals, and Vera Dunmore, OIR. OPIA informed us that NSA's request was referred to Elmer Holt, a senior economist in that Office who participated in the conference. He notified us that he searched his records thoroughly and only found the one responsive document.[2] See Memorandum of June 21, 2012, telephone conference between Mr. Little and Mr. Holt, OPIA. Therefore we will remand this matter to OIR so that the search of the retired DOE records at the Washington National Records Center can be performed. Upon completion of this search, DOE should issue a new determination to NSA setting forth the results of the new search.

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by National Security Archive, OHA Case Number FIA-12-0034, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Information Resources for additional proceedings consistent with the directions set forth in this Decision.

[2] During our conversations with Mr. Holt, we learned that he has notes that he took for personal use at the conference and correspondence concerning the conference. However, he did not share those notes with other employees, nor were they ever maintained in an agency system of records. See Memorandum of June 27, 2012 telephone conversation between Mr. Little and Mr. Holt. Consequently, Mr. Holt's personal notes are not agency records and are therefore not subject to the FOIA.

Mr. Holt further informed us that the correspondence is of a logistical nature. Since NSA's request specifically excluded logistical or administrative materials, the correspondence was also properly identified as non-responsive.

Decision and Order

On June 25, 2012, Judicial Watch (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on May 31, 2012, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIR did not locate any documents responsive to the request the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to conduct an additional search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On April 30, 2012, the Appellant filed a request with OIR for "[a]ll communications with Nancy-Ann DeParle, any other member of the Obama administration, or any third party regarding the development and implementation of 'alternative administrative measures' to advance the President's [sic] dianpolicy goals in circumvention of the legislative branch of the federal government." Request dated April 30, 2012, from Appellant to OIR. On May 31, 2012, OIR responded that it could not locate any responsive information. Determination Letter dated May 31, 2012, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Appellant. In the instant Appeal, the Appellant challenges OIR's search for responsive documents. Appeal Letter dated June 25, 2012, from Appellant to Secretary Steven Chu, care of Poli Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Mark D. Siciliano, Case No. FIA-12-0019 (2012).[1/]

We contacted OIR to determine what type of search was conducted. OIR indicated that it asked the Office of the Chief Information Officer (CIO) to conduct a search of the email accounts belonging to Steven Chu, Daniel Poneman, and Arunava Majumdar, for information regarding "alternative administrative measure." Attachment to E-mail dated June 25, 2012, from Angelia Bowman, OIR, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA. The CIO found nothing responsive. Id. In addition, OIR conducted a search of the Electronic Document Online Correspondence and Concurrence System (eDOCS). Id. OIR conducted a search of the White House Congressional Correspondence folder within eDOCS, as well as all White House mail, including any correspondence from the President or his direct staff. E-mail dated June 26, 2012, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA. Finally, OIR conducted a search for the term "Deparle." Id. No responsive information was found. Id. After receiving a copy of the Appeal, OIR confirmed the previous findings that there were no responsive documents. Id. Based on additional information included in the Appeal but not in the original request,[2/] OIR conducted a further search of the eDOCS to look for anything related to "advanced drop-in aviation or marine biofuels." Id. Again, OIR found nothing responsive. Id.

As the foregoing indicates, OIR searched the proper database for records pertaining to the Appellant's request. OIR searched eDOCS, which contains both incoming and outgoing documents. E-mail dated June 27, 2012, from Alexander Morris to Janet R. H. Fishman. OIR used the proper search terms, including "alternative administrative measures" and "Deparle." It even extended its search based on information provided in the Appeal to include the terms "marine fuels" and "drop-in aviation." Id. We find that OIR conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

(1) The Appeal filed by Judicial Watch, Case No. FIA-12-0036, is hereby denied.

Decision and Order

On June 25, 2012, the National Security Archive (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 4, 2012, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIR did not locate any documents in responding to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On May 2, 2012, the Appellant requested documents related to the Tianjin Climate Change Talks held October 4 to 9, 2010. Request Letter from Robert A. Wampler, Senior Fellow, Appellant, to Carolyn Lawson, FOIA/Privacy Act Group, DOE. The Appellant indicated that the search for relevant documents would include anything prepared for the Secretary of Energy and any other agency officials. Id. The Appellant included a list of DOE officials who participated in the conference. Id.

On June 4, 2012, OIR responded stating that the request was assigned to the Office of Policy and International Affairs (PI), which conducted a search of its files and found nothing responsive. Determination Letter dated June 4, 2012, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, DOE, to Appellant. On June 25, 2012, the Appellant appealed the Determination, claiming that the search was insufficient and that it is unclear from the Determination whether PI searched retired DOE records stored at the Federal Records Center. Appeal Letter dated June 25, 2012, from Appellant to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Siciliano, Case No. FIA-12-0019 (2012).[1/]

We contacted PI to determine what type of search was conducted. Elmer Holt of PI, one of those individuals identified by the Appellant as having attended the conference, indicated that he searched his work e-mail account, documents stored on his computer, and hard copy files/papers/notes in his possession related to the activities taking place at the UNFCCC climate meeting in Tianjin, China, during the Fall of 2010. He did not locate any responsive documents. E-mail dated July 9, 2012, from Elmer Holt, PI, to Janet Fishman, OHA, DOE. He also indicated that he did not forward any documents to the Washington National Records Center for storage. E-mail dated July 11, 2012, from Elmer Holt to Janet Fishman. We also contacted Casey Delhotal and Richard Duke to determine what responsive records they might possess. They both stated that, although they were in Tianjin at the time of the summit, they were there because they "wanted to talk to National Development Reform Commission (who hosted the Tianjin conference) about Clean Energy Ministerial initiatives (a program completely separate from the United Nations Framework Commission on Climate Change conference). [They were] not part of the official U.S. negotiating team at the conference and did not have any of the documents produced by the State-lead negotiating team." E-mail dated July 11, 2012, from Casey Delhotal, PI, to Janet Fishman. Mr. Duke concurred with Dr. Delhotal that he was in Tianjin to meet with Chinese officials, not to attend the conference. E-mail dated July 12, 2012, from Richard Duke, Deputy Assistant Secretary, PI, to Janet Fishman.

The three people from DOE who the Appellant identified as having attended the conference searched their records for responsive information. Nothing responsive was found. Mr. Holt, who actually did attend the conference, indicated that he did not send anything to the Washington National Records Center. Dr. Delhotal and Mr. Duke indicated that they did not bring any records back with them as they were not in Tianjin to attend the conference. Based on the foregoing, we believe that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

Decision and Order

On July 3, 2012, Firas Shaikh filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Office of Information Resources (IR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, IR responded to a Request for Information that Mr. Shaikh filed under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008 (Request No. HQ-2011-00179-PA). IR released portions five responsive documents, but withheld other portions of these documents under Exemption (k)(1) of the Privacy Act and Exemptions 1, 3 and 6 of the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (FOIA). This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release to Mr. Shaikh only those portions of the documents that were withheld under FOIA Exemptions 3 and 6.

I. Background

Mr. Shaikh requested a copy of his personnel security file as maintained by the DOE. On May 1, 2012, the DOE responded with a partial determination, providing copies of 79 documents from his file. On May 22, 2012, IR issued a final determination letter regarding Documents 80 through 84, withholding portions of each document under the exemptions set forth in the above paragraph. On July 3, 2012, Mr. Shaikh submitted the present Appeal. Because our consideration of IR's withholdings under Privacy Act Exemption (k)(1) and FOIA Exemption 1 in this case requires consultation with the DOE's Office of Classification,[1] we determined that bifurcation of the present Appeal would allow for a more timely consideration of IR's withholdings under FOIA Exemptions 3 and 6. IR's withholdings under FOIA Exemptions 3 and 6 will therefore be considered in the present decision (OHA Case No. FIA-12-0038). Our consideration of IR's withholdings under Privacy Act Exemption (k)(1) and FOIA Exemption 1 will be considered in a separate decision that will be issued as OHA Case No. FIC-12-0001.

[1] Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 522(b)(1). Exemption (k)(1) of the Privacy Act exempts from disclosure information this is subject to the provisions of Exemption 1 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(1).

II. Analysis

The Privacy Act was enacted to prevent the unnecessary dissemination of personal information compiled about individuals by federal agencies. Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her that is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). Personnel security files, such as the one Mr. Shaikh requested, are maintained in one such system of records, DOE-43.[2] Courts have consistently recognized that requests of this type, where an individual is requesting information pertaining to him or her, are to be processed under both the Privacy Act and the FOIA, holding that each statute provides the requester with an independent basis for access to these records. Shapiro v. DEA, 762 F.2d 611, 612 (7th Cir. 1985); Blazy v. Tenet, 979 F. Supp. 10, 16 (D.D.C. 1997), summary affirmance granted, No. 97-5330, 1998 WL 315583 (D.C. Cir. May 12, 1998). Information about an individual contained in a system of records may be withheld from disclosure to that individual only when both the Privacy Act and the FOIA provide bases for withholding the information. See 5 U.S.C. § 552a(t) (prohibiting reliance on FOIA exemptions to withhold under the Privacy Act, and vice versa); Nat'l Whistleblower Ctr. v. Dep't of Health and Human Svcs., CIV. A. 10-2120 JEB, 2012 WL 1026725 at *4 (D.D.C. Mar. 28, 2012) (to withhold requested information subject to both acts, agency must demonstrate that it falls "within some exemption under each Act"). OHA has consistently followed this rule in its Decisions. See Thomas R. Thielen, Case No. FIA-12-0023 (June 28, 2012); Martin Salazar, Case No. VFA-0773 (Oct. 3, 2002); Mark J. Chugg, Case No. VFA-0714 (Feb. 14, 2002); Robert H. Calhoun, Jr., Case No. VFA-0571 (June 14, 2000); David R. Berg, Case No. VFA-0376 (April 2, 1998).[3]

In the present case, with respect to the information withheld from Mr. Shaikh pursuant to Exemptions 3 and 6 of the FOIA, IR has not provided any justification for withholding that information under the Privacy Act. Therefore, even if we were to uphold IR's application of the claimed FOIA exemptions to the withheld information, we could not find that the information had been properly withheld from Mr. Shaikh. This matter must be remanded to IR for a new determination. In that determination, IR will either justify withholding the information independently under the Privacy Act that it withheld under FOIA Exemptions 3 and 6 or release that information to Mr. Shaikh.

(1) The Appeal filed on July 3, 2012, by Firas Shaikh, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0038, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

[2] The Privacy Act defines the term "system of records" as " a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5).

(2) This matter is remanded to the Department of Energy's Office of Information Resources for further consideration in accordance with the instructions set forth in the foregoing decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

On July 12, 2012, the National Security Archive (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 21, 2012, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIR did not locate any documents in responding to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004 (Request No. HQ-2012-01104-F). The Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On April 17, 2012, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to the OIR, for documents relating to the "First Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, Held in Helsinki, Finland, on May 2-5, 1989." Request Letter dated April 17, 2012, from Robert Wampler, Senior Fellow, Appellant, to Carolyn Lawson, OIR.

OIR forwarded the request to the Office of Policy and International Affairs (OPIA) and to the Office of the Executive Secretariat (ES) because any documents responsive to the request, if they exist, would fall under the jurisdiction of those offices. ES advised OIR that it was not a matter under its jurisdiction and OIR sent a letter to the Appellant advising it of that fact. E-mail dated July 13, 2012, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. OPIA conducted searches of its records and failed to locate responsive documents. See Determination Letter dated June 21, 2012, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Appellant. On July 12, 2012, OHA received the Appellant's Appeal, in which it challenges the search for responsive records, including whether OPIA searched for responsive records at the National Records Center. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Mark D. Siciliano, Case No. FIA-12-0019 (2012).[*/]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA contacted OPIA to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. E-mail dated July 12, 2012, to Alexander Morris, from Janet Fishman; E-mail dated July 16, 2012, to Edith Horne, OPIA, from Janet Fishman. We have not yet received a response from OPIA, and, therefore, are remanding this matter to OIR for an explanation of OPIA's search for responsive documents and a determination of whether responsive documents are located at an off-site records holding center. The new determination letter should explain the parameters of the search of both on-site and off-site records, if any. Any responsive documents that are located will be identified and released to NSA, or the basis for their withholding will be explained in a new determination letter, with specific reference to one or more FOIA exemptions.

(1) The Appeal filed by National Security Archive, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0039, is hereby granted in part, as described in Paragraph (2), below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) The matter is remanded to the Office of Information Resources so that the request submitted by National Security Archive may be forwarded to the Office of Policy and International Affairs for an explanation of its search for responsive records and a determination whether responsive documents, as described above, exist.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Issued: August 16, 2012

Decision and Order

On July 17, 2012, the Idaho Conservation League (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 13, 2012, by the Department of Energy's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) (FOIA Request Number HQ-2012-00243-F), in response to a request for documents that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the Appellant's FOIA Request, BPA provided the Appellant with a number of documents in their entirety. However, BPA also withheld some documents in part. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the information withheld in the previously provided documents.

I. Background

On November 7, 2011, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request seeking the Project file for the Albeni Falls Dam Flexible Winter Operations Environmental Assessment. The request also included correspondence between agencies regarding this proposal as well as other materials related to the environmental assessment and the final decision. In a February 7, 2012, Determination Letter, BPA released some of the documents responsive to Appellant's request, but indicated that other documents were still under review. On February 22, 2012, BPA issued another Determination Letter releasing one additional document, but indicated that 66 documents which were responsive to the Appellant's request would be withheld under FOIA Exemption 5. On March 22, 2012, the Appellant appealed BPA's decision to withhold the 66 documents and on April 30, 2012, BPA responded by indicating that it would review the 66 documents again to determine if any additional documents could be released. On May 16, 2012, BPA released seven documents in their entirety, stated that 15 documents originated from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (the Corps) and that those documents would be forwarded to the Corps for a FOIA determination, and that the remaining of the 66 documents would be reviewed further for possible discretionary release. In a June 13, 2012, Determination Letter, BPA issued its final response to the Appellant's FOIA request, releasing 17 more documents in their entirety, releasing one partially redacted document, withholding two documents as non-responsive, withholding 25 documents in their entirety under Exemptions 5 an 6 and providing a list of the electronic file names for the 25 documents which were withheld in full. See June 13, 2012 Determination Letter.

On July 17, 2012, the Appellant filed the present appeal, asserting that (1) BPA failed to justify the withholding of deliberative documents under Exemption 5; (2) BPA failed to justify any withholdings under Exemption 6; (3) BPA failed to state why discretionary release of the 25 withheld documents is not appropriate; (4) BPA failed to determine whether non-exempt information could be segregated from the 25 withheld documents; and (5) BPA improperly withheld the 15 documents which were forwarded to the Corps. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

According to the FOIA, after conducting a search for responsive documents, an agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

An agency therefore has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (1) adequately describe the results of searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Servs., Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (1996) (RIS).[1] Generally a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its author and recipient. An index of documents need not, however, contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the documents. State of New York, Case No. TFA-0269 (2008). A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determination. RIS.

A. Adequacy of the Determination and the Adequacy of the Justifications

For our review of this Appeal, we obtained the documents that BPA withheld. After examining these documents, we conclude that BPA's determination letter is inadequate to permit the Appellant to file an informed appeal. As stated above, BPA withheld 25 documents in their entirety pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6, and withheld two documents as non-responsive. BPA provided the Appellant with an index listing the electronic file names of all 27 documents. However, as the Appellant has asserted, BPA has failed to identify which documents were withheld under FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6 and which documents are the two non-responsive documents. In addition, while BPA generally stated in its determination letter that Exemption 5 protects from mandatory disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters that would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency . . ." and incorporates both the deliberative process privilege and the attorney work-product privilege, it does not indicate whether any of the withheld documents are inter-or intra-agency documents nor does it specify which Exemption 5 privilege is being applied to the withheld documents. With respect to Exemption 6, while BPA states that the withheld information consists of names and personal contact information of individual citizens who have expressed an interest in the project at issue; again, it does not identify the documents to which BPA applied the exemption.

Moreover, BPA's description of the withheld documents is vague. Simply listing the electronic file name of a document is insufficient and does not adequately describe the subject mater. Again, the description of the document need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document, but rather a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date on which the document was produced, its authors and recipients. State of New York at 3.

In cases where agencies do not provide an adequate determination with respect to a FOIA request, we usually remand the request to the agency with instruction to issue a new determination so that the Appellant and our office will understand the rationale for withholding the information. Therefore, we will remand this matter to BPA to issue another determination which will inform the Appellant which documents are being withheld pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6 and adequately explain how Exemption 5 and 6 apply to the withheld documents.

B. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material and Discretionary Public Interest Disclosure

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). However, if factual material is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its release would reveal the agency's deliberative process, that material can be withheld. In its determination letter, BPA stated that it withheld 25 documents in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 5, but did not address the issue of segregability in the determination. This office reviewed a sample of material that was withheld in its entirety, and based on our review, we find that there may be some non-exempt, factual material in the responsive documents. BPA should consider what non-exempt, factual material may be segregated and released on remand.

In addition, the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Although, in its determination letter, BPA asserts Exemption 6 and states that there is no public interest in the disclosure of information because it does not shed any light on how BPA has performed it statutory duties, it does not provide a public interest analysis with respect to documents withheld pursuant to Exemption 5. This analysis should also be provided on remand. [2]

III. Conclusion

For all the reasons stated above, we will remand the matter to BPA to issue a new determination. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand it to BPA.

[2] With respect to the 15 documents which BPA asserts were improperly withheld and forwarded to the Corps to issue a determination, we find that BPA appropriately determined that these documents originated with the Corps and correctly forwarded the Appellant's request to the Corps for a direct response to the Appellant. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(c).

Decision and Order

On July 26, 2012, Cynthia Brown filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on July 6, 2012, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Health, Safety and Security (HSS), in Washington, DC (FOIA Request Case No. HQ-2012-01037-F), in response to a request for documents that Ms. Brown filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. HSS did not locate any documents responsive to Ms. Brown's request. In her appeal, Ms. Brown challenges the adequacy of HSS's search. This appeal, if granted, would require HSS to perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On March 22, 2012, Ms. Brown submitted a FOIA request to HSS at DOE Headquarters in which she sought records pertaining to her late mother.[1] HSS informed Ms. Brown in its July 2012 Determination Letter that HSS was unable to locate any additional documents. Letter from Patricia Worthington, Director of Health and Safety, HSS, to Cynthia Brown, July 6, 2012 (July 2012 Determination Letter) at 1.

Ms. Brown filed the instant appeal challenging the adequacy of HSS's search. See Letter from Cynthia Brown to OHA, dated July 26, 2012 (Appeal). In her Appeal, Ms. Brown alleges that HSS's search was inadequate because she did not receive a list of places searched, as well as information regarding a comprehensive list of relevant contracts.[2]

[1] In December 2011, Ms. Brown sent a similar FOIA request to the DOE's Richland Operations Office. As a result of that request, Ms. Brown was provided various records concerning her mother. See Cynthia Brown Case No. FIA-12-0009 (March 27, 2012).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (August 26, 2002).[3]

In reviewing the Appeal, we contacted HSS to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See Email from Pamela Pontillo, OHA, to Dr. Isaf Al-Nabulsi, HSS, August 1, 2012. Dr. Al-Nabulsi explained that HSS contacted Richland Operations Office (RO) because Ms. Brown's mother was a former employee at the Hanford site and her employment ended in 1945. According to Dr. Al-Nabulsi, RO contacted senior records personnel at Kadlec Hospital[4] and requested that they look for potentially responsive records relating to Ms. Brown's mother in their archives. Kadlec Hospital did not find any responsive material,[5] but RO suggested she might consider contacting the principal of an environmental consulting company who might have some relevant information. See Email from Dr. Isaf Al-Nabulsi, HSS, to Pamela Pontillo, OHA, August 6, 2012.

Dr. Al-Nabulsi also stated that DOE next contacted a senior research analyst from the Office of Legacy Management (LM) who was assigned to oversee HSS search efforts, with regard to Ms. Brown's request, because he was knowledgeable about and involved with the Human Radiation Experiments report dated July 1995.[6] We also contacted the senior research analyst

[2] In her Appeal, Ms. Brown states that in follow-up conference calls and e-mails with HSS, she provided website links and contract numbers to facilitate her request for a list of specific contracts in force between August 7-14, 1951, between the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) and the University of Chicago Labs and Clinics that might provide clues as to the location of documents responsive to her request.

[4] Kadlec Hospital was established in 1944 to care for workers in the Hanford, Washington area.

[5] HSS told Ms. Brown in a May 2012 conference call that because the physicians at Kadlec Hospital were not direct employees of the Manhattan Engineer District (MED) or the AEC, they typically retained those records created from research treatment studies, such as those that might have been created concerning Ms. Brown's mother.

[6] From 1995 through early FY 2006, the records supporting the report were accessioned to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). Because DOE no longer has custody of those records, it cannot search them.

to inquire about his scope of search for pertinent documents. The senior research analyst told us that he 1) searched all records in the custody of HSS that are stored at DOE's LM in Grand Junction, Colorado; 2) reviewed manual indexes to the records collected from Oak Ridge National Laboratory during the Human Radiation Experiments initiative and those searches did not locate any responsive documents; 3) contacted the DOE Oak Ridge federal records officer to inquire about any records that may still be in its custody but the records officer had no knowledge of the existence of such records; and, 4) contacted the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) which informed him that it did not possess any responsive documents to Ms. Brown's request.[7] See Email from Dr. Isaf Al-Nabulsi, HSS, to Pamela Pontillo, OHA, August 6, 2012.

In an effort to assist Ms. Brown, HSS, RO and LM participated in a telephone conversation with Ms. Brown on May 10, 2012, and DOE suggested that she submit a FOIA request to the U.S. Department of Defense, and a request for information to the Center for Cancer Research at Johns Hopkins University and at Purdue University. [8] See Email from Dr. Isaf Al-Nabulsi, HSS, to Pamela Pontillo, OHA, August 6, 2012.

We find that DOE personnel made inquiries beyond what the FOIA requires of them in searching for responsive documents. Based on information provided to us, we find that HSS performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Brown's FOIA request. HSS collaborated with knowledgeable officials to ascertain where responsive documents might exist and had searches made of those locations. Accordingly, we find that the search was adequate for purposes of the FOIA and the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 26, 2012, by Cynthia Brown, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0044, is hereby denied.

Decision and Order

On August 1, 2012, the National Security Archive ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (ROO). In that determination, ROO responded to an amended request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require ROO to perform an additional search and require other DOE offices to search for a specific report dealing with a natural uranium graphite reactor that was numbered KB-789.

I. Background

On June 8, 2012, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to DOE Headquarters asking for "a report prepared in early 1960 by the Atomic Energy Commission's Richland Operations Office evaluating the natural uranium-graphite reactor method for the production of plutonium for nuclear weapons" (Request). Request letter from William Burr, National Security Archive to FOIA Requester Service Center, DOE Headquarters at 1 (June 8, 2012). The DOE's Office of Information Resources (OIR) referred the Request to ROO as the location where it was most likely that a copy of the Report might be located. Memorandum from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR to Dorothy Riehle, ROO (June 11, 2012). On June 19, 2012, ROO, in response to the Request, provided the Appellant with a report entitled "The Nuclear Parameters of some Graphite – Natural Uranium Lattices Measured in the PCTR" (Graphite Report) Letter from Dorothy Riehle, Freedom of Information Act Officer, ROO to William Burr, National Security Archive (June 19, 2011).

In a June 28, 2012 E-mail, the Appellant informed ROO that the Graphite Report was not the report he sought with his Request. He asked to amend his Request to ask for a report numbered "KB-789" which was authored in early 1960 or late 1959 which evaluated the natural uranium graphite method (Report).[1] E-mail from William Burr, National Security Archive to Dorothy Riehle, ROO (June 28, 2012). In a July 11, 2012 letter, ROO informed the Individual that it was unable the locate the Report. Letter from Dorothy Riehle, ROO, to William Burr, National Security Archive (July 11, 2012) (Notification Letter).

In his Appeal, the Appellant asserts that the Report must exist somewhere within DOE and has submitted a portion of the AEC document that refers to the Report. The Appellant asks that a broader search be made of other DOE offices.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (August 26, 2002).[2]

During the processing of this Appeal, OHA first contacted ROO to ascertain the scope of the ROO's search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA to Dorothy Riehle, ROO (August 2, 2012). In response to this inquiry, ROO informed us that it consulted with its employees most likely to have knowledge concerning the location of the Report. ROO employees at the Records Holding Area conducted an electronic search of the DOE's Hanford, Washington site archive databases.[3] In its initial search of the electronic databases, the keywords: "natural uranium," "reactor," "natural," "uranium-graphite," "reactor route" were used to find documents originating from the early 1960's. Upon receiving additional information from the Appellant in his amended complaint, the employees also searched the databases using the term "KB-789." The only document that was located was the Graphite Report. E-mail from Dorothy Riehle, ROO, to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (August 2, 2012).

During our review of this Appeal, we provided a copy of the Appellant's revised Request (specifying report no. KB-789) to the OIR. OIR then initiated a search for the Report using the additional information provided by the Appellant. OIR determined that OH was the DOE HQ office most likely to possess the Report. An OH official then conducted a manual search in the file in the AEC Secretariat where the AEC Document was stored but did not find a copy of the

[1] The Appellant apparently discovered that the report he sought was numbered "KB-789" during the pendency of his original request. Specifically, a reference to the report - "KB-789" was contained in an Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) document (AEC Document) that had been provided to him in a previous FOIA Request to DOE. See E-mail from Terry Fehner, Office of History (OH), to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (August 20, 2012).

[2] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

Report. This official than searched AEC document holdings by using various electronic finding aids using the Report's document number (KB-789) as a key word but did not find the Report. Lastly, the official made a search of the AEC Secretariat card catalogue but could not find any reference to the Report. See E-mail from Terry Fehner, Office of the Secretariat, to Richard Cronin, OHA Attorney-Examiner (August 20, 2012).

After reviewing the details of the search that was conducted by ROO and OH, we conclude that their search for the Report was adequate for the purposes of the FOIA. ROO and OH searched its relevant document databases using search terms, based on the Appellant's Request. Given the description of the Report provided by the Appellant, we find that ROO and OH used database search terms that were likely to reveal the existence of the Report. Consequently, we find that ROO and OH conducted a search reasonably calculated to find the Report and thus, the Appellant's Appeal should be denied.

Decision and Order

On August 10, 2012, Larry W. Long (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on July 24, 2012, by the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE) (Request No. ORO-2012-01507-F). In that determination, Oak Ridge stated that it did not locate any documents responsive to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On April 17, 2012, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to Oak Ridge for copies of the Benefit Value Studies (Ben-Val Study) for URS | CH2M Oak Ridge LLC (UCOR) and Bechtel Jacobs Company, LLC, "Mercer or AON/Hewitt Studies,"[*/] and similar information from DOE. Request Letter dated June 13, 2012, from Appellant, to Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge. Oak Ridge, in response to the request, stated that the Ben-Val Study for UCOR and Bechtel Jacobs are contractor records, and therefore, not subject to the FOIA. Determination Letter dated July 24, 2012, from Amy Rothrock to Appellant. In addition, Oak Ridge indicated that any documents pertaining to the Mercer or AON/Hewitt studies were in the possession of procurement at DOE Headquarters. Id. Therefore, Oak Ridge forwarded that portion of the request to the Office of Information Resources at DOE Headquarters. Id. That portion of the request is not at issue in this Appeal.

* Because these documents are within the purview of DOE Headquarters, Oak Ridge did not know what "AON" stood for or whether Mercer was the full name of the company. E-mail dated August 29, 2012, from Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA).

On August 10, 2012, OHA received the Appellant's Appeal, which challenges Oak Ridge's claim that the documents are contractor records. Appeal Letter dated July 31, 2012, from Appellant to OHA, DOE.

II. Analysis

The Appellant challenges Oak Ridge's claim that all responsive documents are not "agency records" but rather contractor records and, therefore, not subject to the FOIA. The Supreme Court has articulated a two-part test for determining what constitutes an "agency record" under the FOIA. An "agency record" is a record that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Oak Ridge, after conferring with its procurement attorneys and the head of the Industrial Personnel Branch of its Human Resources Division, concluded that the records were neither in the possession nor control of Oak Ridge at the time of the request and, therefore, were not agency records. Determination Letter at 1-2

However, a finding that certain documents are not agency records does not end our inquiry. The DOE's FOIA regulations state:

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). The Appellant argues that UCOR could not have conducted the Ben-Val study without direction from the DOE because the study is only required to be conducted every three years. Appeal Letter at 1. He also argues that the Ben-Val study must be in DOE's possession. Oak Ridge determined that any documents that may exist were contractor records under the contract between UCOR and DOE. Determination Letter at 1; E-mail dated August 16, 2012, from Amy Rothrock to Janet Fishman, OHA, DOE. We have reviewed the pertinent contract clause and we agree with Oak Ridge's interpretation. The contract between UCOR and DOE clearly states that the components of the study, i.e., records on salary and employee benefits, are contractor records. DOE Contract No. DE-SC-0004645 (DEAR § 970.5204-3, "Access To And Ownership of Records"). In view of the explicit language of the contract, we must deny the Appeal.

For the reasons give above, we have determined that UCOR's records were not agency records. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Larry W. Long, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0046, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

On September 10, 2012, William B. Ray filed an appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (OR) issued on August 21, 2012. In its determination, OR responded to a request for documents that Mr. Ray submitted under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from OR a copy of his Personnel Security File. On April 13, 2012, OR provided Mr. Ray with certain documents responsive to his request. Letter from Larry C. Kelly, Manager, OR, to William Brian Ray (August 21, 2012) (Determination Letter). Mr. Ray, on April 18, 2012, requested a document referenced in one of the documents that OR had provided him, an opinion from OR's Office of Chief Counsel. On August 21, 2012, OR issued a determination stating that it was withholding this document in its entirety pursuant to 5 U.S.C. §§ 552a(d)(5) and 552a(k)(2) (Exemption (d)(5) and (k)(2) of the Privacy Act), and 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5 of the Freedom of Information Act). Id. In his Appeal, Mr. Ray contends that the document at issue is not exempt from disclosure under either the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) or Privacy Act.

II. Analysis

A. FOIA Exemption 5

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges, among others, that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In its determination, OR characterized the document in question as being subject to both the attorney work-product and attorney-client privileges. Determination Letter at 2.

The attorney work-product privilege protects from disclosure documents which reveal "the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation." FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3); see also Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511 (1947). The privilege is intended to preserve a zone of privacy in which a lawyer or other representative of a party can prepare and develop legal theories and strategies "with an eye toward litigation," free from unnecessary intrusion by their adversaries. Hickman, 329 U.S. at 510-11. "At its core, the work-product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case." United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975).

This privilege does not extend to every written document generated by an attorney or representative of a party. In order to be afforded protection under the attorney work-product privilege, a document must have been prepared either for trial or in anticipation of litigation. See, e.g., Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 865. A document is considered to be prepared in anticipation of litigation if, "in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation." Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller, and Richard L. Marcus, 8 Federal Practice and Procedure § 2024 (1994) (emphasis added) as cited in United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, 1202 (2nd Cir. 1998). The privilege is not limited to court proceedings, but extends to administrative proceedings as well. See e.g., Exxon Corp. v. Department of Energy, 585 F. Supp. 690, 700 (D.D.C. 1983).

With regard to the applicability of the attorney work-product privilege to the document at issue, the Appellant cites Adlman for the proposition that the Exemption 5 work-product privilege does not extend to > documents that are prepared in the ordinary course of business or that would have been created in essentially similar form irrespective of the litigation. It is well > established that work-product privilege does not apply to such documents. Even if such documents might also help in preparation for litigation, they do not qualify for protection because it could not fairly be said that they were created "because of" actual or impending litigation.

Adlman, 134 F.3d at 1202 (citations omitted); Appeal at 6-7. The Appellant argues that the document at issue in this case, an opinion from the OR's Office of Chief Counsel, was prepared in the ordinary course of business, and therefore is not shielded by the attorney work-product privilege. Appeal at 6.

We disagree. First, the Appellant states that the determination of "whether to suspend or continue Access Authorization is an everyday activity of [OR's] Access Authorization Branch." Id. The document in question, however, was prepared not by OR's Access Authorization Branch, but rather by OR's Office of Chief Counsel. Moreover, even if we were to assume, arguendo, that such documents are produced in the ordinary course of business of the Office of Chief Counsel, this fact would only be relevant if the document at issue "would have been created in essentially similar form irrespective of the litigation." Adlman, 134 F.3d at 1202.

It is clear from our review of the withheld document, however, that it contains the author's analysis of a case being considered under 10 C.F.R. Part 710, in particular concerning OR's proposal to conduct an Administrative Review proceeding, the procedures of which allow an individual to request a hearing before a DOE Hearing Officer "to present evidence in his own behalf, through witnesses, or by documents, or both; and . . . to be present during the entire hearing and be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel or representative of the individual's choosing . . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 710.21(b). Thus, there is no question that this document was created by the OR's Office of Chief Counsel in anticipation of, and solely because of the prospect of administrative litigation under 10 C.F.R. Part 710. As such, we find that it was properly withheld under the Exemption 5 attorney work-product privilege.

Though OR also invoked the attorney-client privilege in withholding the document at issue, we need not address the application of that privilege, as we have found a proper basis for the withholding of the document under the work-product privilege. We, therefore, turn to whether OR properly withheld the document under the Privacy Act.

B. Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5)

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). However, the Privacy Act also states that it does not "allow an individual access to any information compiled in reasonable anticipation of a civil action or proceeding." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(5). In its determination, OR states that the "Chief Counsel opinion was prepared in anticipation of a potential Personnel Security Hearing." Determination Letter at 1. For the reasons explained below, we conclude that the document in question was properly withheld under Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5).

First, the longstanding guidelines of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) regarding implementation of the Privacy Act state that the term "civil action or proceeding" as set forth in the Act "was intended to cover . . . quasi-judicial and preliminary judicial steps . . . ." Privacy Act Guidelines, 40 Fed. Reg. 28948, 28960 (July 9, 1975). Further, the OMB has, in another context, specifically recognized the "quasi-judicial nature of hearing and review functions" under 10 C.F.R. Part 710. Criteria and Procedures for Determining Eligibility for Access to Classified Matter or Special Nuclear Material, 59 Fed. Reg. 35178, 35179 (July 8, 1994).

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has cited the OMB Privacy Act guidelines in finding that "Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5) protects documents prepared in anticipation of quasi-judicial administrative hearings." Martin v. Office of Special Counsel, 819 F.2d 1181, 1188 (D.C. Cir. 1987). Though the court's holding did not rely solely on OMB's interpretation of Congress's intent, the court considered that interpretation worthy of its "attention and solicitude." Id.

Aside from the OMB guidelines, the court in Martin relied on its own reasoning that, of "all types of administrative hearings, quasi-judicial hearings are most like the formal civil actions Congress clearly and specifically intended to protect." Id. at 1188. At issue in Martin were documents prepared in anticipation of proceedings before the Merit System Protection Board (MSPB). The court noted similarities both in the functions of tribunals such as the MSPB, and found that "[w]hatever Congress may have intended for other types of administrative proceedings, it must have intended quasi-judicial hearings to fall within the term 'civil proceedings.'" Martin, 819 F.2d. at 1188.

The court in Martin stated that its holding specifically applied to documents prepared in anticipation of "adversarial proceedings, subject to the rules of evidence and with opportunity for discovery," all characteristics of proceedings before the MSPB. In this regard, we note that proceedings under Part 710 share similar characteristics with those before the MSPB. Part 710 hearings are adversarial in nature, with counsel for the DOE, on the one hand, "participating on behalf of and representing the Department of Energy," which has determined that there is "substantial doubt" regarding an individual's clearance eligibility, and the individual, on the other hand, presenting (often through legal counsel) "evidence in his own behalf, through witnesses, or by documents, or both," for "the purpose of affording the individual an opportunity of supporting his eligibility for access authorization; . . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 710.21(b).

Moreover, in Part 710 hearings, as in proceedings before the MSPB, formal rules of evidence do not apply, but the Federal Rules of Evidence may be used as a guide. 10 C.F.R. § 710.26(h); Bowen v. Department of Navy, 112 M.S.P.R. 607, 618 (2009) ("Although the Federal Rules of Evidence do not apply to Board proceedings, the Board will look to them for guidance"). And though the Part 710 regulations do not contain formal discovery procedures, the practice of this office in conducting Part 710 hearings allows for the pre-hearing exchange of documents, including the provision by the DOE Counsel to the individual of documents not being offered as hearing exhibits.

In sum, we find that, following the guidance of the OMB and the reasoning set forth in Martin, if not its explicit holding as applied to the MSPB, proceedings conducted under Part 710 are sufficiently similar to formal civil actions that they should be considered "civil proceedings" under Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5). As we discussed above, the document at issue in this case was prepared in anticipation of a Part 710 administrative review proceeding, and therefore we find that the document was properly withheld by OR under Exemption (d)(5).

Finally, as with our analysis above of OR's withholding under the FOIA, although OR also based its withholding of this document on Privacy Act Exemption (k)(2), we need not address the application of that Exemption here, as we have found that OR had a sufficient basis for withholding the document at issue under Exemption (d)(5). Thus, having found that OR properly withheld the requested document under both the FOIA and the Privacy Act, we will deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 12, 2012, by William B. Ray, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0049, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B) (FOIA) and 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1) (Privacy Act). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

Cause of Action (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) on August 6, 2012. In that determination, LGPO denied a request for information that the Appellant had submitted on June 12, 2012, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. LGPO withheld information that was responsive to the request after it determined that the information was protected from mandatory disclosure under FOIA Exemptions 3 and 4. This Appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release this information.

I. Background

On June 12, 2012, the Appellant requested "[A]ll documents referring or relating to requests, including the requests themselves, by U.S. Department of Energy Secretary Steven Chu or his representatives to the IRS for information concerning whether an applicant for a loan under any DOE program has a tax delinquent account." Request at 1 (footnotes omitted). The Appellant further requested that it be granted a waiver from search, review, and duplication fees pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii). Id. at 6.

On August 6, 2012, LGPO issued a determination in which it stated that it had identified an unspecified number of responsive documents, and stated that it was withholding these documents in their entirety.[1] LGPO stated that the responsive documents contained "[tax] return information" under 26 U.S.C. § 6103(a) and were therefore exempt from disclosure under Exemption 3. LGPO also contended that "information related to an applicant's tax account or any other tax information is confidential and if released could cause a substantial competitive harm to an applicant" and therefore is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4. Determination Letter at 2. LGPO neither assessed the Appellant with search, review, and duplication fees, nor granted it a fee waiver.

[1] LGPO did not provide any description of these withheld documents. It merely stated that they contained "tax account information." If the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v.

In its Appeal, the Appellant contends that the responsive documents should be released to it, because "It appears from the DOE's response that it misunderstands our request. Since the documents and information we seek constitute neither § 6103 "return information" nor information "related to an applicant's tax account," we respectfully appeal DOE's denial of our request." Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). Only Exemptions 3 and 4 are at issue in the present case.

A. Exemption 3

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides that an agency may withhold from disclosure information "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). It is well settled that 26 U.S.C. § 6103 meets these criteria. Tax Analysts

Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976)(Kleppe). These requirements allow both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., Case No. VFA-0304 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's review of that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992). Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. v. Internal Revenue Serv., 410 F.3d 715, 717 (D.C. Cir. 2005).

Federal law generally prohibits the disclosure of "return information." 26 U.S.C. § 6103, et seq. 26 U.S.C. § 6103(a) states in pertinent part: "Returns and return information shall be confidential, and . . . no officer or employee of the United States . . . shall disclose any return or return information obtained by him in any manner in connection with his service as such an officer or an employee or otherwise . . ." 26 U.S.C. § 6103(b) further defines return information as:

> [A] taxpayer's identity, the nature, source, or amount of his income, payments, receipts, deductions, exemptions, credits, assets, liabilities, net worth, tax liability, tax withheld, deficiencies, overassessments, or tax payments, whether the taxpayer's return was, is being, or will be examined or subject to other investigation or processing, or any other data, received by, recorded by, prepared by, furnished to, or collected by the Secretary with respect to a return or with respect to the determination of the existence, or possible existence, of liability (or the amount thereof) of any person under this title for any tax, penalty, interest, fine, forfeiture, or other imposition, or offense ... "

26 U.S.C. § 6103(b) (emphasis supplied). Accordingly, an agency may invoke Exemption 3 to withhold information that is confidential under 26 U.S.C. § 6103(a). Therefore, the LGPO properly invoked Exemption 3 to withhold any information that would reveal a loan applicant's tax return information if released. We have conducted an in camera review of the documents identified as responsive by the LGPO and find that small portions of these documents contain information that, if released, would reveal loan applicants' return information.

B. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential."[2]

[2] In the present case, LGPO does not contend that the information it is withholding is privileged, but rather contends that it is confidential.

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. In the present case, LGPO did not indicate whether the information it withheld was voluntarily submitted. The only basis supplied by LGPO for its withholding of the Application under Exemption 4 was its conclusory finding that release of the withheld information would cause substantial harm to loan applicants' competitive positions.

It is well settled that if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, as in the present case, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., Case No. VFA-0155 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA"). In the present case, LGPO merely parroted the language of the FOIA statute by stating, in conclusory fashion, that disclosure of the redacted information would result in substantial competitive harm. Determination Letter at 2. Such a statement does not provide a sufficient basis for a determination withholding information under Exemption 4. See e.g. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (remanding matter for a new determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to withheld material). If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999).

Therefore, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to LGPO. On remand, LGPO should either release the information it has redacted from the responsive documents solely under Exemption 4, or issue a new determination in which it properly describes the information it is withholding and provides a sufficient explanation for concluding that its release would be likely to result in substantial competitive harm.

C. Duty To Segregate

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such a record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). LGPO withheld the responsive documents in their entirety as tax return information. Our in camera review revealed that LGPO, by redacting the very small portion of each of these documents which identifies the loan applicant, could have released almost all of the withheld information without revealing any of the loan applicant's return information. Accordingly, we find that LGPO failed to comply with the FOIA's mandate that it release any reasonably segregable portions of the responsive document. On remand, LGPO should redact only identifying information from each responsive document, and then release the remaining portions of each responsive document or issue a new determination letter withholding such information under a different exemption.

III. CONCLUSION

We are remanding this matter to LGPO for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above. Accordingly, Cause of Action's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part. LGPO should also rule upon Cause of Action's request for a fee waiver before assessing it any search, duplication or processing fees.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Cause of Action on September 10, 2012, Case No. FIA-12-0050, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The Loan Guarantee Program Office shall issue a new determination either releasing the responsive documents discussed above, after redacting any identifying information pursuant to Exemption 3 of the Freedom of Information Act, or withholding that information under another appropriately justified exemption.

Decision and Order

On September 10, 2012, William Berger (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 10, 2012, by the Department of Energy's National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) (FOIA Request Number FOIA-2012-00160-K), in response to a request for documents that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA, in its August 10, 2012, Determination Letter, informed the Appellant, inter alia, that it neither confirmed nor denied the existence of any records described in the Appellant's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to either release any discovered documents or issue a new Determination Letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In his March 22, 2012, FOIA request (Request), the Appellant asked for the following information:

1. "The internal investigation OST conducted between February 27, 2012 and March 9, 2012. The investigation was in reference to alleged violations, including criminal allegations, conducted by Michael Rossetti and Paul Greoly. The investigation was conducted at Fort Chaffee, AR by Jeff Beck (Security Branch of OST) and James Allen (Special Investigator for Mr. Harrell), directly for the ADA, Mr. Harrell."

2. "The executive summary provided to Mr. Harrell with the findings of the allegations."

See Determination Letter. In its August 10, 2012, Determination Letter, NNSA informed the Appellant that it neither confirmed nor denied the existence of any such records described in the request.[1] Id. Citing FOIA Exemption 6, 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(6)[2], the Authorizing Official stated in the Determination Letter that an official acknowledgement of an investigation or an acknowledgment of the existence of investigatory records about an individual could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. In his Appeal, the Appellant challenges NNSA's determination.

II. Analysis

Courts have recognized, in the context of some FOIA requests, that even acknowledging that certain records exist would jeopardize the privacy interests that FOIA exemptions are designed to protect and that a Glomar response neither confirming nor denying the existence of responsive records is appropriate in such situations. See, e.g., Antonelli v. FBI, 721 F.2d 615, 617 (7th Cir. 1983) (Antonelli). Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized there to be a significant privacy interest in the mere confirmation or denial that an individual's name or other personal information is contained in investigative documents. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (finding that withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual). This strong privacy interest must be balanced against any specific public interest that would be furthered by the confirmation or denial of the existence of the requested documents. If the potential privacy interest outweighs the public interest that would be furthered by confirming or denying the existence of such documents, courts have held that agencies are justified in issuing a Glomar response neither confirming nor denying the existence of any responsive records. See Beck v. Dep't of Justice, 997 F.2d 1489, 1492-94 (D.C. Cir. 1994); McNamera v. Dep't of Justice, 974 F. Supp. 956, 957-60 (W.D. Tex. 1997). Using this rationale, the courts have upheld the use of a Glomar response where a FOIA request might reveal Exemption 6 information disclosing the identity of individuals who are subjects of investigations or are mentioned in law enforcement records and who have not previously waived their privacy rights. See, e.g., Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for the Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 775 (1989); Antonelli.

In reviewing the interests to be balanced to justify Exemption 6 protection, it is apparent that, if responsive documents were to exist, the request at issue might reveal the identities and personal information of individuals involved in an investigation. For this reason, the mere confirmation or denial of the existence of responsive documents could, in and of itself, reveal exempt information. The NNSA has not officially acknowledged the investigation cited by the Appellant ever occurred or that an executive summary of such an investigation was ever provided to Mr. Harrell. By confirming or denying the existence of responsive records, the NNSA would be confirming or denying the existence of the investigation, which would, in and of itself, reveal personal privacy information protected by FOIA Exemption 6. Furthermore, the Appellant has not referenced any specific public interest that would be furthered by the release of the requested documents, or by the NNSA's confirmation or denial of their existence.

After reviewing the subject matter of the Request, the method by which the Request was processed, the NNSA justification offered in the Determination Letter, and the interests to be balanced, we find that NNSA appropriately invoked its Glomar response, neither confirming nor denying the existence of the investigatory records sought by the Appellant. Thus, we agree that providing any other response to the FOIA Request would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, such as that protected by Exemption 6. Consequently, the Appeal will be denied.

Decision and Order

On September 17, 2012, the California Arizona Nevada District Organization (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on August 16, 2012, by the Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) (Request No. HQ-2012-00626-F). In that determination, LGPO released documents responsive to a request the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LGPO redacted portions of the released documents. This Appeal, if granted, would release the total hours worked and total pay received from the redacted documents.

I. Background

On January 13, 2012, the Appellant filed its request with DOE for a copy of all certified payroll reports, statements or compliance, fringe benefit statements, and statements of non-performance as submitted by the contractor who performed the erection of the collector assembly building on the Abengoa Solana project and by the contractor who performed the placement, tying and installation of the cooling tower basin foundation rebar only on the project. Request Letter dated January 13, 2012, from Michele Justice, Director, Appellant, to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE. On August 16, 2012, LGPO responded releasing responsive documents that had been redacted pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated August 16, 2012, from David G. Frantz, Acting Executive Director, LGPO, to Michele Justice, Appellant. The Appellant challenges the withholding of the total hours worked and total pay received in those documents. Appeal dated September 13, 2012, from Nina Fendel, Appellant's Attorney, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

In its Appeal, the Appellant makes a number of arguments:

1. LGPO failed to properly justify its withholdings.

2. The total hours worked and total wages received is segregable information and should be released.
3. Disclosure of the information is not likely to cause substantial harm to the competitive interest of the Employers.
4. Disclosure of the information is not likely to cause substantial harm to the interests of the DOE.
5. The information cannot be withheld under Exemption 6.[1]

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Exemptions 4 and 6 are at issue in this Appeal.

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." Nat'l Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines that the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a "trade secret," a different analysis applies. The agency must determine whether the information in question is "commercial or financial," "obtained from a person" and "privileged or confidential."

The first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial." Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial as long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1290. The information submitted by the contractors, i.e., payroll reports, statements of compliance, fringe benefits statements and statements of non-performance, clearly satisfy the definition of commercial or financial information. The second requirement is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc., v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., Case No. TFA-591 (2000).[2] The contractors satisfy that definition. Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "confidential." In this case, the contractors were required to submit the documents in question as part of its contract with LGPO. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted." In order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be applied. Under National Parks, involuntarily-submitted withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future; or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770.

The Appellant argues that LGPO misapplied Exemption 4 in redacting the total hours worked and total pay received because disclosure will not cause substantial harm to the interests of the DOE. However, LGPO did not claim that the release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain the information in the future. The standard set forth in National Parks is whether release of the information would impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or cause substantial competitive harm to the submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770.

We must address, however, whether release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information. LGPO determined that release of the commercial and financial information contained in the documents would likely cause the contractors substantial competitive harm. We believe that release of the information would give the contractors competitors an undue advantage when submitting proposals in the future. In addition, release of the financial information would give the contractors' competitors an undue advantage in bidding on future contracts. Therefore, we find that LGPO properly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information in the released documents and properly withheld the total hours worked and total pay received under Exemption 4.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990); see also Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees, 879 F.2d at 874.

LGPO invoked FOIA Exemption 6 to redact the information from the documents released to the Appellant. The Appellant contends that the LGPO improperly withheld the total hours worked and total pay received under Exemption 6, contending, that "[w]here all personal identifiers have been redacted from documents and it is not possible to identify the individual in question, there is no privacy interest in the number of hours worked, and the total pay received." Appeal at 8. We agree.

It is well settled that the release of an individual's name to the public implicates a privacy interest under the FOIA. Associated Press v. Dep't of Justice, 549 F.3d 62, 65 (2d Cir. 2008). The privacy interests protected by the exemptions to FOIA are broadly construed. See Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. at 763. Therefore, LGPO correctly concluded that the contractor employees whose names appear in the documents have a legitimate expectation of privacy under the FOIA. However, once the contractor employees' names and addresses and other identifying information have been removed from the documents, we do not find a privacy interest in the hours worked or pay received. Therefore, LGPO improperly relied on Exemption 6 to withhold this information.

III. Conclusion

After considering the Appellant's arguments, we are convinced that LGPO properly withheld the redacted information from the documents under Exemption 4. Although LGPO improperly used Exemption 6 to withhold the total hours worked and total pay received information, we will not remand the matter to that office for a new determination because the information was properly withheld under Exemption 4. Accordingly, the Appeal will be denied.

Decision and Order

On September 14, 2012, California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance (CANDO) filed an appeal from a final determination issued by the Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In this determination, LGPO responded to a request for information (Request) filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Pursuant to the Request, LGPO released four documents. One of the documents provided to CANDO, the Tonopah Document, described below, consisted of seven pages, of which information had been withheld in four of the pages. LGPO withheld the information pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release to CANDO a portion of the information withheld in the four pages.

I. BACKGROUND

On August 17, 2011, CANDO submitted a FOIA request (Request) for ten categories of documents related to a loan guarantee contract regarding the Crescent Dunes Solar Energy Project (Crescent Dunes[1]). One of the categories of requested documents (Category 5) asked for:

> 5. A copy of the Technical Information Section C-Part II, 2. Engineering and construction Plans, a copy of the list of engineering and design contractors and the construction contractors selected to perform the construction of the project....

Request at 1.

On August 15, 2012, LGPO issued a response (Response) to CANDO's request for documents. In its Response regarding Category 5, LGPO released, among other documents, a redacted copy of seven pages from a document entitled "Solar Reserve – Project Tonopah U.S. DOE Title XVII

[1] This project is also known as the Tonopah Solar Energy Project.

Loan Guarantee Program – Part I Application" (Tonopah Document).[2] LGPO stated that information was withheld from these four pages pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA.

On September 14, 2012, CANDO filed the present appeal contending that LGPO had improperly applied Exemption 4 to withhold "information concerning the engineering, design, and construction contractors and subcontractors", which CANDO alleged was withheld from the four redacted pages of the Tonopah document. CANDO argues that release of that information cannot be a trade secret or confidential commercial or financial information especially since construction has begun on the project.

II. ANALYSIS

In its present appeal, CANDO quoted LGPO's description of the information that it withheld from the Tonopah document. CANDO then stated that it "has no quarrel with the assertion of the (b)(4) exemption as it applies to the specified information; the problem is that nowhere does DOE address the reasons for withholding engineering, design, and construction contractor and subcontractor information." Appeal at 3-4.

We have obtained unredacted copies of the four pages where information was withheld. The redacted information does not contain the information that CANDO requests in its present appeal: "engineering, design, and construction contractor and subcontractor information." In addition, the redacted information does not contain any "list of engineering and design contractors and the construction contractors selected to perform the construction of the project," as requested by CANDO in its Request quoted above. As a result, the challenge CANDO raised in its appeal of LGPO's determination regarding these four pages lacks a factual basis and will be denied. See California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance, Case No. FIA-0004 (March 23, 2012).[3]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

Decision and Order

On September 25, 2012, Torres Consulting & Law Group, LLC, (Appellant) filed an Appeal from determinations issued to it on August 9, 2012, August 14, 2012 and August 21, 2012, by the Golden Field Office (Golden) of the Department of Energy (DOE) (Request Nos. GO-12-298, GO-12-299, and GO-12-300). In those determinations, Golden released documents responsive to the requests the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Golden withheld portions of the released documents under Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would release the employee wage rates and total hours worked, both daily and weekly, from the documents at issue.

I. Background

On July 31, 2012, the Appellant filed three requests with Golden for certified payroll records pertaining to "MTech Mechanical," "Weifield Group," and "Diamond Fire Protection." Request E-mail dated July 31, 2012, from Ashley Walkup, Appellant, to Michele Altieri, Golden. On August 9, 2012, Golden released the Weifield Group payroll records, but withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated August 9, 2012, from Golden to Ashley Walkup, Appellant. On August 14, 2012, Golden released the MTech Mechanical payroll records, but withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated August 14, 2012, from Golden to Ashley Walkup, Appellant. On August 21, 2012, Golden released the Diamond Fire Protection payroll records, but again withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated August 21, 2012, from Golden to Ashley Walkup, Appellant.

On September 17, 2012, the Appellant filed an Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) challenging only the information withheld under Exemption 4, i.e., the withholding of the employee wage rate and total hours worked both daily and weekly. Appeal Letter dated September 17, 2012, from Jim Barton, Appellant, to Director, OHA, DOE. The Appellant argues that release of this information will not allow a competitor to gain a "substantial competitive advantage in pricing future bids, even on exactly similar projects." Id. at 3.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Exemption 4 is at issue in this Appeal.

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." Nat'l Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines that the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a "trade secret," a different analysis applies. The agency must determine whether the information in question is "commercial or financial," "obtained from a person" and "privileged or confidential."

The Appellant is not challenging whether the information withheld, employee wage rate and total hours worked both daily and weekly, is either commercial or financial or obtained from a person. Appeal Letter at 2. We therefore must determine whether the information is privileged or confidential. For the reasons set forth below, we find that the information is confidential and therefore exempt from release under Exemption 4.

In this case, the contractors were required to submit the documents in question as part of their contracts with Golden. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted." Under National Parks, involuntarily-submitted withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future, or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In applying Exemption 4 to the documents at issue, Golden determined that release of the information would likely cause the contractors substantial competitive harm.

The Appellant states that the wage rate data from the certified payroll documents would not cause substantial competitive harm because all contractors are aware of the requirement to pay the prevailing wage rate and benefits as it is stipulated and incorporated into the project contract. Appeal Letter at 2. In addition, disclosure of the hours worked on a project's jobsite should not be protected under Exemption 4 because this information is readily observable on most projects and is the primary way to establish if a contractor complies with apprenticeship guidelines mandated by federal law. Id. Finally, the number of hours worked, daily and weekly, for a given employee demonstrates that the worker is being paid for every hour worked and that the contractor is not simply using a required base wage rate to back into Davis-Bacon Act compliance. Id. In sum, the Appellant argues that the wage rate, fringe benefits, and apprenticeship guidelines cannot be considered confidential and the release of the information would not cause a competitive disadvantage to the submitter.

Golden determined that release of the commercial and financial information contained in the documents would likely cause the contractors substantial competitive harm. We believe that release of the information would give the contractors competitors an undue advantage when submitting proposals in the future. In addition, release of the financial information would give the contractors' competitors an undue advantage in bidding on future contracts. Therefore, we find that Golden properly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information in the released documents and properly withheld the total hours worked and total pay received.

III. Conclusion

After considering the Appellant's arguments, we are convinced that Golden properly withheld the redacted information from the documents under Exemption 4. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

Issued: November 1, 2012

Decision and Order

On September 25, 2012, Tom Thielen filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 22, 2012, by the Department of Energy (DOE) Richland Operations Office (Richland) (Request No. PA 2012-00274). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Thielen submitted under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require Richland to release additional responsive material.

I. Background

Mr. Thielen previously filed a request seeking documents regarding a safety concern that he raised with his employer, CH2M Hill Plateau Remediation Company (CHPRC). In a March 2012 determination, Richland released to Mr. Thielen a copy of his employee concern file, but withheld certain portions of the investigation summary included in the file pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5) (Exemption (k)(5) of the Privacy Act). See Letter from Richland to Mr. Thielen (March 9, 2012) (March Determination) at 1. According to Richland, the withheld information was obtained from sources that were promised confidentiality in exchange for their information. Id. In April 2012, Mr. Thielen filed an Appeal of the March Determination with the DOE Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), challenging Richland's withholding of information in the investigation summary. See Letter from Mr. Thielen to OHA (April 27, 2012) (April Appeal).

In a June 28, 2012 decision, OHA issued a decision regarding the April Appeal. See Thomas R. Thielen, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0023 (2012).[1] In that case, we determined that Richland improperly applied Privacy Act Exemption (k)(5) in withholding information from the investigation summary in Mr. Thielen's employee concern file. Id. Specifically, we noted that Exemption (k)(5) permits the withholding of "investigatory material compiled solely for the purpose of determining suitability, eligibility or qualifications of Federal civilian employment . . . or access to classified information, but only to the extent that the disclosure of such material would reveal the identity of a source who furnished information to the Government under an express promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence . . . " Id. at 2 (quoting 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5)). After reviewing the withheld material, we determined that it did not fall within the scope of information that is exempt from disclosure under Exemption (k)(5) and, therefore, "Richland's initial determination to withhold under Exemption (k)(5) was incorrect." Id. In a footnote in that decision, we further noted that Richland did not process Mr. Thielen's request separately under both the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), as is required for first-party requests. See 5 U.S.C. §§552a(t)(1), (2); see also Shapiro v. DEA, 762 F.2d 611, 612 (7th Cir. 1985). In considering whether the information in question should have been released to Mr. Thielen under the FOIA, we concluded that FOIA Exemption 6 justifies withholding the information because the release of the information in question – names of witnesses, job titles, and other information which would reveal their identities – would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, and there is no overriding public interest in disclosure of such information. Thomas R. Thielen, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0023 at 2, n.*. Nonetheless, given our finding that Richland could not withhold the information under the Privacy Act under Exemption (k)(5), we remanded the matter back to Richland to either release the requested information in its entirety or justify the withholding of any portions under the Privacy Act. Id. at 3.

In accordance with our instructions in the June 28, 2012, decision, Richland issued a new determination to Mr. Thielen. See Letter from Richland to Mr. Thielen (August 22, 2012) (August Determination). In the August Determination, Richland again released to Mr. Thielen his employee concern file and withheld the same portions of the investigation summary that it withheld in the March Determination, but this time did so pursuant to FOIA Exemption 6 on the grounds that its release "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy by subjecting the third-party individuals to unwanted communications, harassment, intimidation, retaliation or other substantial privacy invasions by interested parties." Id. at 1. Richland further determined that there was no overriding public interest in disclosure. Id. at 2. Finally, Richland found that Mr. Thielen was not entitled to disclosure of the withheld information under the Privacy Act because the information in question "contains third party related information that is not about [Mr. Thielen]," or does not pertain to him. Id. at 1. According to Richland, the third party information is not responsive to Mr. Thielen's request because it "does not meet the Privacy's Act's definition of a 'record,' which includes 'any item, collection, or grouping of information about an individual' under 5 U.S.C.a(a)(4)." Id. (emphasis added).

Mr. Thielen filed the instant Appeal on September 25, 2012. Letter from Mr. Thielen to OHA (September 25, 2012) (September Appeal). In the September Appeal, Mr. Thielen challenges Richland's withholding of information under the Privacy Act.[2]

II. Analysis

[2] Mr. Thielen did not challenge Richland's withholding of the information in question pursuant to FOIA Exemption 6. Therefore, the issue of whether Richland properly applied FOIA Exemption 6 in withholding the information is outside of the scope of the instant Appeal and will not be considered.

The Privacy Act was enacted to prevent unnecessary dissemination of personal information compiled about individuals by federal agencies. Under the Privacy Act, an individual is entitled to "gain access to his record or to any information pertaining to him which is contained in the system [of records] . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(1). Under the Privacy Act, the term "record" means "any item, collection, or grouping of information about an individual that is maintained by an agency . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(4). Agencies may, however, provide that some systems of records are not subject to the Privacy Act's disclosure provisions, but only to the extent that those records fall under certain specified exemptions. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k).

At issue in this case is whether the withheld information included in the investigation summary in Mr. Thielen's employee concern file should be disclosed to Mr. Thielen under the Privacy Act's right of access provision, set forth at 5 U.S. C. § 552a(d)(1). The information in question includes the names and job titles of third-party witnesses, as well as statements by certain witnesses which, if disclosed, may reveal the witnesses' identities.

In considering requests for information under the Privacy Act, courts have consistently upheld the withholding of third-party personal information, including the identities of third parties, on the ground that such information is not "about" the requester and is, therefore, not the "record" of the requester, as defined in 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(4). For example, in DePlanche v. Califano, a father was denied access to the address of his minor children contained in his social security benefits file on the ground that the information was not "about" him, and therefore not his "record" as defined by the Privacy Act. DePlanche v. Califano, 549 F. Supp. 685, 695-96 (W.D. Mich. 1982). Similarly, other courts upheld the withholding of the identities of Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) agents included in requesters' records because those names did not constitute the requesters' "records" under the Privacy Act. See, e.g., Haddon v. Freeh, 31 F. Supp. 2d 16 (D.D.C. 1998); Nolan v. DOJ, 1991 WL 36547, at *10 (D. Colo. Mar. 18, 1991). In this regard, in Sussman v. U.S. Marshals Serv., the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, considering a first-party request for information under the Privacy Act, "interpret[ed] 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(1) to give parties access only to their own records, not to all information pertaining to them that happens to be contained in a system of records." Sussman v. U.S. Marshals Serv., 494 F.3d 1106, 1121 (D.C. Cir. 2007). The court explained that "[f]or an assemblage of data to qualify as one of [the requester's] records, it must not only contain his name or other identifying particulars but also be 'about' him." Id.

As noted above, on remand, Richland maintained that the withheld information was not "about" Mr. Thielen and, therefore, he was not entitled to its disclosure. We have carefully reviewed in camera the information in question. The withheld information appears in a document that Richland partially released to Mr. Thielen, titled "Referral Response Form," a summary of the investigation of Mr. Thielen's allegations in his employee concern complaint. The withheld names and job titles of third-party witnesses, as well as the withheld statements regarding the availability of certain witnesses for interviews, are very clearly not "about" Mr. Thielen, despite the fact that they are contained in his employee concern file. As such, that information does not constitute Mr. Thielen's "record" within the meaning of the Privacy Act. Therefore, Richland's withholding of that information was appropriate. We find, however, that the remaining withholdings are "about" Mr. Thielen because they are statements that specifically describe Mr.

Thielen and his work.[3] Moreover, the statements are maintained in a system of records, and are retrievable by Mr. Thielen's name. See E-mail from Dorothy Riehle, Richland, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 23, 2012) (confirming that the employee concerns file in question is retrievable by Mr. Thielen's name, but not the names or identifiers of witnesses or other interviewed parties). Therefore, we find that he is entitled to disclosure of that information under the Privacy Act's access provision, located at 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(1). Accordingly, we will remand this matter for further processing on this one narrow point. On remand, Richland should either release the withheld statements that we have identified as being "about" Mr. Thielen or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we have concluded that Richland appropriately withheld certain information from the responsive documents that it provided to Mr. Thielen on the ground that the information is not about Mr. Thielen and, therefore, not his record under the Privacy Act. We have further concluded, however, that two of the withheld statements are about Mr. Thielen and, as such, constitute his records under the Privacy Act. Consequently, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand this matter back to Richland for further processing regarding those two statements.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 25, 2012, by Tom Thielen, OHA Case No. FIA-12-0057, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy Richland Operations Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions contained in the foregoing decision.

In the Matter of California Arizona Nevada District Organization	)
Filing Date: October 2, 2012	)	Case No.: FIA-12-0059

Issued: October 31, 2012

Decision and Order

On October 2, 2012, the California Arizona Nevada District Organization (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on September 10, 2012, by the Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) (Request No. HQ-2011-01751-F). In that determination, LGPO released documents responsive to a request the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LGPO, however, withheld portions of the released documents under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 6. This Appeal, if granted, would release the withheld information.

I. Background

On December 9, 2011, the Appellant filed its updated request with DOE for a copy of all certified payroll reports, statements or compliance, fringe benefit statements, and statements of non-performance as submitted by two contractors: Millennium Reinforcing (MR) and Largo Concrete (Largo). Appeal at 1. On September 10, 2012, LGPO responded releasing 161 pages of responsive documents. However, LGPO redacted portions of those documents pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. LGPO withheld the names, social security numbers and other personally identifying information under Exemption 6. LGPO withheld the number of hours worked by each employee during each pay period and each employee's net and gross pay for each pay period under both Exemption 4 and Exemption 6. Determination Letter dated September 10, 2012, from David G. Frantz, Acting Executive Director, LGPO, to Appellant. The Appellant challenges the withholding of the total hours worked and total pay received in those documents.[1] Appeal at 1.

[1] The Appeal also claims that LGPO withheld: "fringe benefit payment statements." However, the 161 pages of responsive documents released to the Appellant appears to include a number of fringe benefit payment statements. See e.g., Responsive Documents at 1, 3, 18, and 21.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Only Exemptions 4 and 6 are at issue in this Appeal.

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen).

If the material does not constitute a "trade secret," a different analysis applies. The agency must determine whether the information in question is "commercial or financial," "obtained from a person" and "privileged or confidential." The first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial." Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial as long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1290. The payroll reports, statements of compliance, fringe benefits statements and statements of non-performance, at issue in the present case, clearly satisfy the definition of commercial or financial information. The second requirement is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc., v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., Case No. TFA-591 (2000).[2] The information at issue in the present case was obtained from Largo Concrete, an outside contractor, and therefore satisfies this definition. Finally, since the information at issue does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential."[3]

[3] In the present case, LGPO does not contend that the information it is withholding is privileged, but rather contends that it is confidential.

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). In the present case, LGPO did not indicate whether the information it withheld was voluntarily submitted. However, Largo was required by contract to submit the documents in question, therefore the information was involuntarily submitted. Since the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. The LGPO appears to have misapplied the National Park's test, stating:

> Release of this type of information would cause substantial financial and competitive harm to this Project as competing sub-contractors would utilize this information to respond to the bid request which would result in a less competitive process now and in the future. Such financial information, if released, would cause harm to the Project by resulting in a substantial increase of the Project cost.

Determination Letter at 2. The standard set forth in National Parks is whether release of the information would be likely to impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or cause substantial competitive harm to the submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. LGPO was attempting to protect its own financial interests and "the competitive process" rather than protecting the government's ability to obtain information in the future or to prevent the government's contactors from incurring substantial competitive harm.

However, our de novo review of the redacted information has convinced us that its release would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitter of the information. We believe that release of the information would give Largo's competitors an undue advantage when submitting proposals in the future. Armed with information about the submitter's labor costs and requirements, Largo's competitors could undercut it when bidding on future contracts. Therefore, we find that Exemption 4 could be properly applied to the withheld information in the released documents and the total hours worked and total pay received could be properly withheld under Exemption 4.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990); see also Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees, 879 F.2d at 874.

LGPO invoked FOIA Exemption 6 to redact the information from the documents released to the Appellant. The Appellant contends that the LGPO improperly withheld the total hours worked and total pay received under Exemption 6, contending, that "[w]here all personal identifiers have been redacted from documents and it is not possible to identify the individual in question, there is no privacy interest in the number of hours worked, and the total pay received." Appeal at 8. We agree.

It is well settled that the release of an individual's name to the public implicates a privacy interest under the FOIA. Associated Press v. Dep't of Justice, 549 F.3d 62, 65 (2d Cir. 2008). The privacy interests protected by the exemptions to FOIA are broadly construed. See Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. at 763. Therefore, LGPO correctly concluded that the contractor employees whose names appear in the documents have a legitimate expectation of privacy under the FOIA. However, once the contractor employees' names and addresses and other identifying information have been removed from the documents, we do not find a privacy interest in the hours worked or pay received. Therefore, LGPO improperly relied on Exemption 6 to withhold this information.

III. Conclusion

After considering the Appellant's arguments, we are convinced that LGPO properly withheld the redacted information from the documents under Exemption 4. Although LGPO improperly used Exemption 6 to withhold the total hours worked and total pay received information, we will not remand the matter to that office for a new determination because the information was properly withheld under Exemption 4. Accordingly, the Appeal will be denied.

Filing Date: October 4, 2012	)

Issued: November 1, 2012

Decision and Order

On October 4, 2012, California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance (CANDO) filed an appeal from a final determination issued by the Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, LGPO responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004 (Request No. HQ-2011-01750-F). LGPO released substantial amounts of information responsive to the request, but withheld responsive information under FOIA Exemption 4. This Appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release to CANDO some of the information it withheld previously.

I. BACKGROUND

CANDO filed a request for information with LGPO seeking copies of ten specified documents related to loan guarantee contracts for the Agua Caliente Solar Energy Project (Project).[1] On November 8, 2011, LGPO issued a determination letter releasing copies of the documents regarding the Project. However, LGPO withheld portions of the responsive documents under Exemption 4. On February 2, 2012, CANDO appealed LGPO's November 8 determination letter contending that LGPO had improperly applied Exemption 4 to withhold the names and other identifying information concerning contractors and sub-contractors listed in those documents. Following an initial OHA Decision denying CANDO's Appeal and a subsequent, successful Motion for Reconsideration filed by CANDO, LGPO issued another determination letter on September 5, 2012 (Determination Letter).[2] The Determination Letter stated that the names of the contractors and subcontractors contained in the Project's loan guarantee contract had been withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. The Determination Letter stated that the firm names were involuntarily submitted to the LGPO and that the loan guarantee applicant, First

[1] The original FOIA Request submitted by CANDO also asked for similar documents regarding the Gila Bend Solar Energy Project.

2 The somewhat involved procedural history of this appeal is described in California-Arizona-Nevada District Organization Contract Compliance, Case No. FIA-12-0020 (April 27, 2012).

Solar, normally keeps such information in confidence. LGPO went on to state:

> Specifically, the following information is not customarily made available to the public: identification of First Solar's project partners, vendors and contractors and the process used for selecting them, preapproval and post selection requirements, procedures for determining performance capabilities and granting permissions to work on the project at various levels, standards for project completion, including certification requirements, subcontractor facility inspection or training requirements. Consequently, official release of this information would enable First Solar's competition to derive anticipated project contributions, insight into First Solar's selection processes and consideration in a marketplace where the same partners, vendors and contractors are selected, and would provide insight into project costs/schedule to their competitors causing First Solar substantial, competitive harm . . . .

In its October 4 Appeal, CANDO argues that the names and identifying information of the contractors referenced in the documents were improperly withheld.[3] CANDO argues that the Determination does not allege sufficient competitive harm to withhold the names of the contractors and subcontractors pursuant to Exemption 4, especially since work has now begun on the Project.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). Only Exemption 4 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug

[3] CANDO does not challenge LGPO's withholding regarding the other information redacted in the documents at issue in this appeal.

Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential."

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In the present case, both parties agree that the withheld information has been involuntarily submitted. See CANDO October 4, 2012 Appeal at 4 n.2 (stating that providing the names of contractors under the loan guarantee program is required); Determination Letter at 2 (names of contractors were involuntarily submitted to DOE as part of loan guarantee program). Because the application process for the Project required that the information be submitted, it is questionable that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future. See Sierra Club, Case No. FIA-11-0010 (December 29, 2011).[4] Consequently, the question, under National Parks, turns to whether release of the contractor and subcontractor information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to First Solar, the loan applicant.

Our review of the unredacted pages indicates that three firm names were withheld from the pages provided to CANDO. These firm names are contained in a section that lists the firms from which First Solar intended to select the Project's Engineering, Procurement and Construction (EPC) contractor.[5] In past cases, OHA has recognized the competitive harm that could result from the release of subcontractor names. Larson Associates, Inc., Case No. VFA-0155 (June 18, 1996); Consultec, Inc., 24 DOE ¶ 80,140 (1994) (Consultec). Release of the names of subcontractors, or in this case, firms to be the Project's EPC contractor, could provide a competitive edge to contractors soliciting future business by providing them instant access to firms capable of functioning as an EPC contractor without expending the time and energy that First Solar expended in determining the firms' qualifications. Consultec, 24 DOE at 80,604. Further, competitors could use this information to lure away key employees from these firms to gain expertise. Id. For the reasons stated above, we find that LGPO properly applied Exemption 4 to the names of the candidate EPC firms contained in the documents at issue in this case. Consequently, we find that CANDO's Appeal should be denied.

[5] In the present case, it is apparent that the EPC contractor essentially functions as a subcontractor to First Solar. None of the firms whose names were withheld were selected to be the EPC contractor for the Project. First Solar ultimately elected to be the EPC contractor for the Project. Decision and Order

On October 9, 2012, John P. Newton ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from determinations issued to him on September 6, 2012, and September 12, 2012, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) (FOIA Request Numbers HQ-2012-01768-F & HQ-2012-01835-F). In those determinations, OIR responded to two requests for information filed by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Specifically, the Appellant appeals OIR's decisions not to grant expedited processing of his FOIA requests or to waive the fees associated with responding to the FOIA requests. Thus, this Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to expedite the processing of his FOIA requests and to grant the Appellant a fee waiver for all costs associated with his FOIA requests.

I. Background

On August 14, 2012, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request ("August 14 Request") to OIR seeking documents regarding DOE's investigation of his complaints about his supervisor at the Office of Inspector General (OIG) to support his worker's compensation claim with the United States Department of Labor (DOL). See Online Request from John P. Newton to FOIA Request Website (Aug. 14, 2012). Additionally, his FOIA request sought a waiver of all fees associated with processing the request. On September 2, 2012, the Appellant submitted another FOIA request ("September 2 Request"). In the September 2 Request, the Appellant requested copies of performance appraisals of criminal investigators and special agents within OIG, an expedited review of both his FOIA requests, and a fee waiver for processing the FOIA request.[1] See Online Request from John P. Newton to FOIA Request Website (Sept. 2, 2012).

[1] The Appellant styled the September 2 Request as an "Addendum" to his August 14 Request.

On September 6, 2012, OIR issued an interim response ("September 6 Response") to the Appellant's August 14 Request stating that, for fee determination purposes, it categorized the Appellant as "all other requesters" pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b)(4) and that accordingly, the Appellant would be entitled to two hours of search time and 100 pages of documents at no cost. The September 6 Response also denied the Appellant's request for expedited processing of his FOIA request on the grounds that he failed to identify a "compelling need" that would justify expedited processing and failed to identify himself as a person who is primarily engaged in the dissemination of information. On September 12, 2012, OIR issued an interim response ("September 12 Response") to the Appellant's September 2 Request. In its September 12 Response, OIR denied the Appellant's fee waiver request on the ground that the Appellant failed to specifically address the criteria listed in 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8) that would justify a fee waiver. OIR's September 12 Response also denied the Appellant's request for expedited processing for the September 2 Request for the same reasons outlined in its September 6 Response.

II. Analysis

A. Fee Waiver

FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8). In analyzing the public-interest prong of the two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i). While we agree with OIR that the Appellant did not address the four factors listed above in his two Requests, for the purposes of administrative efficiency, we will nevertheless review the Appellant's fee waiver request using information provided in his Appeal.

1. Factor A

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-1483 (1989); Faye Vlieger, Case No. TFA-0250 (2008). In the instant case, the requested information – DOE's investigation of the Appellant's complaints and performance appraisals of criminal investigators and agents – arguably concerns activities or operations of the government. Therefore, we find that the Appellant's August 14 and September 2 Requests satisfy Factor A.

2. Factor B

Factor B requires that disclosure of the requested information must likely contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Dep't of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). This factor focuses on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Roderick Ott, Case No. VFA-0288 (1997)[2]; see also Vlieger, Case No. TF-0250 (quoting Seehuus Assoc., 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) ("If the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate.")).

In the present case, the vast majority of the requested information does not appear to be publicly available. Specifically, the Appellant seeks documents concerning "internal and external OIG communications," "copies of travel authorizations and corresponding travel vouchers," for employees that he contends were involved with the investigation of his complaints, and performance appraisals for special agents and criminal investigators. Such information is not typically within the public domain or common knowledge among the general public, and accordingly, we find that the Appellant has satisfied Factor B.

3. Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding of the individual requester or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. Dep't of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). In assessing this factor, courts have considered the requester's "ability and intention to effectively convey" or disseminate the requested information to the public. Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Dep't of Justice, 185 F. Supp. 2d 54, 62 (D.D.C. 2002). Moreover, courts have also examined whether the requester has concrete plans for publishing or disseminating the requested information by reviewing the requester's identification of news media sources to release the information, purpose for seeking the information, and professional or personal contacts with any major news media companies. See Larson v. C.I.A., 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Ott, Case No. VFA-0288; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, Case No. VFA-0468 (1999).

In his Appeal, the Appellant contends that he will disseminate his findings with the news media and government oversight groups, such as Project on Government Oversight and FOIA sharing websites, such as, www.archive-it.org and www.foiaarchive.org. Appeal at 4. Additionally, the Appellant states that he will make the documents available to the public at the University of Washington Law Library. Id. However, the Appellant still fails to explain his "ability and intention to effectively convey" that information to the public. See Judicial Watch, Inc., 185 F. Supp. 2d at 62. The Appellant does not describe his expertise in the information requested such that he may effectively explain it to the public. Moreover, while he plans to provide his findings to various government oversight websites and one law library, those forums are not sufficient for reaching a broad audience of interested individuals, but rather appear to reach a narrow segment of interested persons. See Schrecker, 970 F. Supp. at 50; see also Brown v. USPTO, 445 F. Supp. 2d 1347, 1360 (M.D. Fla. 2006) ("Plaintiff does not, in his FOIA requests, discuss any plans to convey the information to the public beyond alluding to the website. Simply maintaining a website is not disseminating information to a broad audience of interested individuals."). The Appellant also fails to identify any personal or professional contacts with the government oversight groups, websites, or the law library, and accordingly, he cannot demonstrate how he would disseminate his findings in those forums. See Larson, 843 F.2d at 1483. Consequently, for the reasons stated above, we find that the Appellant has not satisfied Factor C.

Factor D requires that the requested documents contribute significantly to the public's understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, Case No. VFA-0288 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act at 381 (1995)).

We are not convinced that the public's understanding will be enhanced by the disclosure of the requested information. Significantly, the Appellant has not demonstrated how such information would contribute to the public's understanding of government operations and activities. Indeed, the Appellant clearly expresses that his request for those documents is to inform his own understanding of OIG's investigations so that he could support his EEO complaint and DOL worker's compensation claim. In his August 14 Request, the Appellant states that "the requested information is needed in furtherance of an official Department of Labor worker's compensation claim I filed regarding work related aggravation of pre-existing medical conditions." Online Request from John P. Newton to FOIA Request Website (Aug. 14, 2012). Further, in his September 2 Request, the Appellant asserts that "this FOIA request is made in furtherance of both official U.S. Department of Energy Equal Opportunity Employment (EEO) Complaint and U.S. Department of Labor Workers' Compensation Claim." Online Request from John P. Newton to FOIA Request Website (Sept. 2, 2012). Finally, in his Appeal, the Appellant writes that the requested information "concerns official internal DOE Office of Inspector General (OIG) operations that will likely affect my claims and complaint." Appeal at 1. He fails to mention the public in August 14 and September 2 Requests, and only barely does so in his Appeal to respond to OIR's denial of his fee waiver request. Further, the subject matter of the requests, documents relating to the Appellant's worker's compensation claim, and the performance appraisals of OIG investigators, do not, in themselves, suggest how the public's understanding of the government's operations and activities would be significantly enhanced.

Based on the foregoing, we find that the Appellant has not sufficiently demonstrated how the requested documents would contribute significantly to the public's understanding of the operations and activities of the government. Therefore, we find that OIR properly denied the Appellant a fee waiver for his failure to satisfy Factors C and D.[3]

B. Expedited Processing

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his request "up the line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i).

"Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an "urgency to inform" the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(6)(E)(v). In order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform," and hence a "compelling need," courts have considered at least three factors: (1) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (2) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (3) whether the request concerns federal government activity. Al-Fayed v. C.I.A., 254 F.3d.300, 310 (D.C. Cir. 2001).

In the present case, the Appellant concedes that there is no threat to anyone's life or physical safety. Appeal at 3. However, the Appellant contends that his FOIA request concerns a time-sensitive matter because the requested information is required to process his worker's compensation claim. Despite this argument, we find that neither of the Requests, which both center on the Appellant's worker's compensation claim, concern a matter of exigency to the American public to warrant expedited processing. See Al-Fayed, 254 F.3d. at 310. Given this, we find that OIR properly denied the Appellant's request for expedited processing of his FOIA request.

[3] Because we find that the Appellant has not met the "public interest" requirement for obtaining a fee waiver, we need not determine whether the Appellant's request for a fee waiver meets the "commercial interest" requirement. See Robert M. Balick, Case No. FIA-11-0018 (2012).

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Appellant on October 9, 2012, OHA Case Number FIA-12-0061, is hereby denied.

Issued: October 31, 2012

Decision and Order

On October 12, 2012, the Native Hawaiian Legal Corporation ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on September 11, 2012, by the Golden Field Office (GFO) of the United States Department of Energy (DOE) (FOIA Request Number GO-12-296). In its determination, the GFO responded to the Appellant's request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Specifically, the Appellant contends that additional documents exist that are responsive to its FOIA request. Thus, this Appeal, if granted, would require the GFO to provide the requested additional documents to the Appellant.

I. Background

On June 29, 2012, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA Requester Service Center at DOE Headquarters, for documents related to the Energy Agreement between the State of Hawaii, Division of Consumer Advocacy of the Department of Commerce and Consumer Affairs, and the Hawaiian Electric Companies ("Energy Agreement"), and specifically, the "Big Wind Projects" component of the Agreement. This request was forwarded to several DOE offices including the GFO. In its September 11, 2012, determination letter, the GFO provided the Appellant with 456 pages of documents, with some information redacted, pertaining to a wind grant awarded to the Hawaiian Electric Company (HECO) in 2009.[1]

The Appellant challenges the adequacy of the GFO's search and claims that, based on the information contained in HECO's wind grant application and related documents, additional documents should have been produced in response to its FOIA request. Specifically, the Appellant avers that the GFO should have provided the following documents: (1) status reports as required by DOE; (2) list of candidate monitoring locations, a monitoring and deployment plan, field campaign experience and recommendations report and a utility implementation plan; and (3) a transition assessment plan. Additionally, the Appellant believes that the following documents exist: (1) quarterly progress reports; (2) an annual special status report; (3) final scientific report; and (4) conference papers.

[1] The GFO also informed the Appellant that its FOIA request was also being processed by two other DOE offices – the DOE Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability and the DOE Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy.

In its response to the Appeal, the GFO asserts that the documents it provided to Appellant, were, in fact, not responsive to its FOIA request, but were provided to the Appellant as an accommodation. See Response from Kimberly L. Graber, Legal Counsel, and Michele Altieri, FOIA Officer, to Shiwali Patel, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Oct. 19, 2012 ("GFO Comment"). Specifically, the GFO states that the 456 pages of documents pertain to a HECO wind grant awarded in 2009 under a separate funding opportunity, Announcement DE-PS36-09GO9909, "20% Wind by 2030: Overcoming the Challenges," and is therefore, not related to the Energy Agreement that is the subject of the Appellant's FOIA request. [2] Id. at 2. As to the Appellant's FOIA Request, the GFO was unable to locate any responsive documents.

II. Analysis

As an initial matter, we find the Appellant's argument unavailing. As explained above, the named documents are related to the 2009 HECO wind grant application, and not the Energy Agreement that is the subject of the Appellant's FOIA request.[4] As these documents are non-responsive to the Appellant's FOIA request for documents relating to the Energy Agreement, they provide no evidence that the GFO's search in response to the Appellant's FOIA Request was inadequate.[5] Nevertheless, we conducted an examination of the GFO's search to determine the adequacy of its search in response to the Appellant's request for documents relating to the Energy Agreement.

[2] In that same vein, the GFO argues that the Appellant's enumeration of additional documents in its FOIA Appeal is essentially a new FOIA request. Id. at 4-5.

[3] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov.

[4] GFO advised the Appellant that if the Appellant wanted further information on the HECO wind grant, it would need to modify its FOIA request to specifically ask for documents related to that grant. Id. The Appellant declined to modify its FOIA request.

In response to our inquiries, the GFO informed us that a project officer with the GFO's Wind and Water Program conducted the search electronically through the Energy Efficiency Renewable Energy (EERE) Project Management Center Database. See E-mail from Michele Altieri, GFO FOIA/PA Officer, to Shiwali Patel, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Oct. 15, 2012. The following terms were used to electronically search the Database:

- "Energy Agreement among the State of Hawaii, Division of Consumer Advocacy of the Department of Commerce and Consumer Affairs and the Hawaiian Electric Companies."
- "Hawaiian Electric Company"
- "Hawaiian Electric"
- "Hawaiian"
- "Hawaii"
- "Big Wind"

Id.

Despite using these search terms, no responsive documents related to the Energy Agreement were found. See GFO Comment.

Based on the foregoing, we find that the GFO's search was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents in response to the Appellant's FOIA request concerning the Energy Agreement, and was therefore, adequate. The GFO's search of the six terms on the EERE Project Management Center Database includes all of the most obvious search terms that would likely uncover the requested documents specifically pertaining to the Energy Agreement. Further, the GFO does not enter into energy agreements such as the subject of the Appellant FOIA Request. Given the information provided to us, we find that the GFO conducted an adequate search under the FOIA for responsive documents.[6] Consequently, we will deny the Appellant's Appeal.

[5] Indeed, on August 13, 2012, the GFO sent an email informing the Appellant about the non-responsive documents. The email stated:

> As we discussed, using the above parameters, Golden has found 456 pages that while not directly related to the Energy Agreement, Hawaiian Big Wind projects or William Parks, do cover a wind project in Hawaii – "The 2009 grant application submitted for Funding Opportunity Number DE-PS36-09GO99009 – '20% Wind by 2030: Overcoming the Challenges' by the Hawaiian Electric Company entitled 'Hawaii Utility Integration initiatives (H.U.I.) to Enable Wind.'"

GFO Comment, Ex. E: E-mail from Michele Altieri, GFO FOIA/PA Officer, to Sharla Manley, Staff Attorney, Native Hawaiian Legal Corporation, Aug. 13, 2012.

[6] We note that the Appellant's FOIA Request is also being processed at the DOE Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability and the DOE Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy. When the Appellant receives determination from those offices it may appeal them to OHA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Appellant on October 12, 2012, OHA Case Number FIA-12-0063, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

On October 15, 2012, the Advanced Technology Corporation ("Appellant") filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on September 27, 2012, by the Oak Ridge Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) (FOIA Request Number ORO-2012-01563-F). In its determination, ORO responded to the Appellant's request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Specifically, the Appellant contends that there should be additional documents that are responsive to its FOIA request, which ORO has not produced. Thus, this Appeal, if granted, would require ORO to conduct another search for the documents that the Appellant requested.

I. Background

On June 27, 2012, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to ORO requesting copies of > email and fax correspondence between Roger Stoller, employee of ORNL [Oak Ridge National Laboratory], and members of ASTM International or others as a group or individually, including: Frontics, Kwang-ho Kim, Frontics [and] Dongil Kwon, Seoul National University specifically discussing Automated Ball Indentation (ABI), Instrumented Indentation Testing (IIT), Fahmy Haggag, or Advanced Technology Corporation (ATC) from 1997 to 2012.

On September 27, 2012, ORO issued a determination, informing the Appellant that after conducting a search, it found no records that responded to its request.

In the instant Appeal, the Appellant challenges the adequacy of ORO's search, stating that it possesses a copy of an email sent to Dr. Stoller from Kwang-ho Kim, dated April 26, 2010, which ORO should have produced in response to its June 27 FOIA request along with the email's attachments. The Appellant further states that it received documents sent to both of Dr. Stoller's email addresses at ORNL through a previous FOIA request, suggesting that additional responsive documents should have been located by ORO in response to its June 27 FOIA request.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must conduct a search "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Valencia-Lucena v. U.S. Coast Guard, 180 F.3d 321, 325 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (quoting Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990)). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Project on Government Oversight, Case No. TFA-0489 (2011).[1]

In response to our inquiries, ORO provided us with additional information to evaluate the reasonableness of its search. ORO informed us that it contacted Dr. Stoller, who stated that in May 2012, he produced all responsive documents – emails, email attachments, and faxes – to the Appellant pursuant to an earlier FOIA request (FOIA Request Number ORO-2012-00826). Email from Linda Chapman, Legal Assistant, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, to Shiwali Patel, OHR, Attorney-Examiner, Oct. 18, 2012. Dr. Stoller further asserted that in September 2012, upon receiving the June 27 FOIA request from the Appellant, he performed an electronic search of all of his emails using the names, firms, and institutions described in the June 27 FOIA request between the years 1997 and 2012. Id. However, he found no additional responsive records. After the Appellant filed the instant Appeal, Dr. Stoller conducted another search – this time of his email files in the UT-Battelle/ORNL servers – using the above-listed terms from the Appellant's June 27 FOIA request. Again, he did not find any new emails since the last production of documents to the Appellant in May 2012. Id. Dr. Stoller also informed ORO that he searched other possible locations that could have the requested documents, but he did not locate additional responsive documents.

In response to the Appellant's assertion that he had a copy of an email dated April 26, 2010, which was sent to Dr. Stoller from Mr. Kwang-ho Kim, Dr. Stoller avers that he did not retain that email and accordingly, he was not able to produce it in response to the Appellant's June 27 FOIA request.

Based on the foregoing, we are satisfied that ORO has conducted an adequate search for documents that are responsive to the Appellant's June 27 FOIA request. As stated above, the standard for agency search procedures is reasonableness, which "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files." Miller, 779 F.2d at 1384-85. Here, ORO has conducted a reasonable search as evidenced by the description of the search conducted by Dr. Stoller. Despite having already searched for and produced responsive documents based on the Appellant's previous

[1] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov.

FOIA request in May 2012, Dr. Stoller conducted two additional searches of his email files from 1997 to 2012 in response to the Appellant's June 27 FOIA request and October 15 Appeal. Still, he found no additional responsive documents. As Dr. Stoller demonstrated that he conducted a thorough electronic search of his email files using the above-listed terms, we find that ORO conducted an adequate search in response to the Appellant's June 27 FOIA request. Accordingly, we will deny the Appeal.

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Appellant on October 15, 2012, OHA Case Number FIA-12-0065, is hereby denied.

April 14, 1995

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Resources Defense Council

Case Number: KFA-0071

On January 27, 1987, the National Resources Defense Council (NRDC) filed an Appeal from a undated determination issued by the Program Support Division of the Office of Military Application (OMA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OMA denied, in part, three NRDC requests for information filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its Appeal, NRDC requests that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) order the release of the information withheld by OMA in its determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public, whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

Background

On September 4, 1985, NRDC filed a Request for Information with DOE Headquarters requesting unclassified computer-generated line graphs describing 11 types of information relating to the number, type and total warhead explosive yield of the United States' stockpile of nuclear weapons during the period Fiscal Year (FY) 1945 through FY 1985. <1> In this request, NRDC suggested that responsive classified graphs might be made unclassified by the deletion of the vertical axis. Subsequently, NRDC filed two other FOIA Requests for Information each dated September 16, 1985. One of the Requests sought copies of three documents entitled "Nuclear Weapons Production and Planning Directive" (Directive), "DOD/DOE Annual Report to the President on Nuclear Weapons Surety" (Report) and "A History of the Nuclear Weapons Stockpile" (History). The other Request sought documents regarding the numerical fraction of offensive or defensive strategic nuclear warheads contained in the total U.S. nuclear stockpile at the end of each year from FY 1957 through FY 1984 (force structure data). Each of the three Requests were subsequently referred to OMA for a response.

In its undated determination, which was received by NRDC on January 7, 1987, OMA identified the three documents requested by NRDC in one of its September 16 Requests and stated that these documents had been reviewed by the DOE's Office of Classification (OC). <2> Based upon OC's review, OMA released redacted versions of the Directive and the Report. OMA stated that the information redacted from each of these documents was classified and withholdable pursuant to Exemption 1 or 3 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. §

552(b)(1), (3). Additionally, OMA withheld the History in its entirety also citing Exemptions 1 and 3. <3> OMA stated that some of the withheld classified information contained in the three documents pertained to military plans, weapons, operations and programs to safeguard nuclear materials and facilities and that this information was withheld pursuant to Exemption 1. Further, OMA stated that this information was authorized to be kept secret in the interest of national security pursuant to criteria established by Executive Order 12356 §§ 1.3(a)(1) and (a)(7) and was properly classified pursuant to that Order. The remainder of the withheld classified information contained in each of the three documents related to the numbers, types and explosive yield of nuclear weapons produced by the United States along with the quantity of special nuclear materials produced. OMA asserted that this information was exempt from disclosure under Sections 141 through 146 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011, 2161-2166, which prohibit the disclosure of information on the design and manufacture of nuclear weapons, and was consequently withheld pursuant to Exemption 3. With regard to NRDC's requests for force structure data and unclassified line graphs, OMA stated that this material was contained in the History which was being withheld in its entirety.

In its Appeal, NRDC argues that OMA improperly redacted portions of the Report and Directive. Specifically, NRDC asserts that various pages of the Directive and Report, which were withheld in their entirety, must contain segregable information which should have been released to it. Further, NRDC asserts that OMA failed to cite a proper reason under the FOIA for withholding the requested force structure data and unclassified line graphs, and argues that the mere statement that material responsive to these requests was found in a classified document does not permit OMA to withhold any other responsive documents or relieve OMA of its duty to search for other responsive documents in its possession. Additionally, NRDC argues that other responsive documents must exist with regard to its request for force structure data and unclassified line graphs. In support of its claim that unclassified line graphs must exist, NRDC submitted unclassified line graphs which had been released to the public, namely graphs relating to total explosive yield and numbers of nuclear weapons in the US nuclear stockpile which had been previously supplied to the Senate (Senate Graphs) and the House of Representatives (House Graphs). Additionally, NRDC states that similar graphs have been provided to a private individual, a Mr. Wohlstetter, who has published these graphs (Wohlstetter Graphs) in an article he wrote in the Fall 1974 issue of Foreign Policy. Additionally, NRDC submitted a graph, with the vertical axis redacted, showing the US stockpile explosive yield during FY 1955 through 1985 (NRDC Graph) which it had obtained from OMA through a prior FOIA Request.

Analysis

Exemption 3 provides for withholding material:

specifically exempted from disclosure by statute ... provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld.

5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); See also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq., is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See William R. Bowling II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990).

The fact that a document contains material that is exempt from disclosure does not necessarily make the entire document exempt. The FOIA, as implemented, requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); See Mead Data Central, Inc. v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Government Accountability Project, 20 DOE ¶ 80,121 (1990). In the context of Exemption 3, this means that information not classified pursuant to an applicable Executive Order or required to be withheld by an Exemption 3 statute should ordinarily be released to the requester. See Founding Church of Scientology v. Bell, 603 F.2d. 945, 950-951 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (Exemption 1); Glen Milner, 20 DOE ¶ 80,122 (1990) (Exemption 1); San Jose Mercury News, 20 DOE ¶

80,119 (1990) (Exemption 3). However, the segregability provision does not require that unclassified portions of a document be released if a compilation of the individual unclassified items of information viewed together warrants classification of the whole document. See American Friends Service Committee v. Dep't of Defense, 831 F.2d. 441, 445-446 (3rd Cir. 1987).

The Director of Security Affairs (Director) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). <4> In his review of this Appeal, the Director instructed OD to reexamine the Report and Directive. Using the current classification guidance, OD determined that some of the information in the Directive that was previously withheld could now be released. With regard to the Report, OD determined, after obtaining the views of the Department of Defense (DOD), a co-originator of the Report, that additional information previously withheld could now also be released. The Director stated however that the bulk of the withheld material in the Report and Directive was still properly classified as restricted data, formerly restricted data or unclassified controlled nuclear information exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. The Director has provided us with newly redacted copies of the Report and Directive and these documents will be provided to NRDC under separate cover.

With regard to NRDC's request for force structure data, the Director agreed with NRDC that it had not been given an adequate reason for the denial of its request. The Director stated that all force structure data of the type requested by NRDC is information which is properly classified as Secret/Formerly Restricted Data and as such is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. <5>

With regard to NRDC's request for unclassified line graphs, the Director stated that the DOE does not possess unclassified line graphs of the various types requested by NRDC other than the House Graphs and the NRDC Graph, each of which NRDC already possesses. <6> The Director noted however that while classified line graphs exist which might be responsive to NRDC's request, it is not possible to declassify them by segregating or deleting an element of the graph because the non-classified portions of the graphs are so inextricably intertwined with classified material that attempting to convert a classified graph to an unclassified graph risks the unauthorized disclosure of the classified information. Further, the Director stated that the only way to produce a publicly releasable version of the graph would be to prepare a completely new graph, a task which an agency is not required to do under the FOIA. See Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 152 (1980). With regard to the graphs NRDC submitted, the Director stated that the Senate Graphs and most likely the Wohlstetter Graphs were created by the Department of Defense and that DOE does not possess these graphs. Further, the Director stated that the NRDC Graph was essentially identical to one of the House Graphs which had been previously released to the public.

Based on the Director's review we have determined that additional information may now be released to NRDC from the Directive and Report but that current classification guidelines require the continued withholding of the remainder of the material in these documents under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. With regard to NRDC's request for force structure data, we have determined, based upon the Director's review, that all force structure data possessed by the DOE is properly classified as Secret/Formerly Restricted Data and is thus exempt from disclosure by Exemption 3. Additionally, based upon the Director's review, we find that DOE possesses no responsive unclassified graphs other than the ones NRDC already possesses and that other potentially responsive line graphs are correctly classified under the current classification guidelines and are exempt under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. <7>

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the National Resources Defense Counsel on January 27, 1987, Case No. KFA-0071, is hereby granted as set forth in the foregoing Decision and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Office of Hearings and Appeals

<1>Specifically, NRDC requested line graphs regarding the following topics: (1) total number of strategic offensive and defensive warheads, (2) total number of strategic warheads, (3) total number of strategic defensive warheads, (4) total number of tactical warheads; (5) total number of nuclear warheads stockpiled; (6) total strategic offensive plus defensive explosive power yield (in megatonnage); (7) total yield of tactical nuclear weapons; (8) total strategic offensive weapon yield; (9) total strategic defensive yield; (10) strategic offensive equivalent yield; and (11) average strategic offensive weapon yield.

<3>OMA stated that almost all of the material contained in the History was classified and that the few small portions of the History which were not classified were so "inextricably intertwined" with the classified information that release of the non-classified information would not result in the disclosure of meaningful information.

<4>The Appeal from NRDC was received by OHA on January 27, 1987. OHA sent the Appeal to the Assistant Secretary for Defense Programs, the individual then authorized to make the final determination regarding FOIA Appeals concerning classified materials, on February 5, 1987. The Director's review of the Appeal was received by OHA on February 2, 1995.

<5>The Director stated that DOE force structure data was not available prior to Fiscal Year 1961.

<6>OMA's determination stated that information responsive to NRDC's request for unclassified line graphs was contained in the History. This was incorrect because there are no unclassified graphs contained in the History.

<7>Because the Director's review found that all of the material, other than the portions of the Directive and Report to be released to NRDC, was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA, we need not address the issue of whether Exemption 1 was properly applied to the withheld material.

August 23, 1996

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barton J. Bernstein

Date of Filing: April 5, 1991

On April 5, 1991, Barton Bernstein, a Professor of History at Stanford University, filed an Appeal from a January 30, 1991 determination issued by the Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque Operations) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Albuquerque Operations denied in part a request Professor Bernstein filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the requested information.

The FOIA requires that agency records that are held by federal agencies, and that have not been made public in an authorized fashion by a covered branch of the federal government, generally be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). In addition to this requirement, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9). These nine exemptions are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(b)(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents that may be exempt from mandatory disclosure will nonetheless be released to the public if the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On February 19, 1988, Professor Bernstein submitted a request for records concerning the "Thermonuclear Program" and the development of the so-called "super" (also known as the "thermonuclear" or "hydrogen") bomb. In particular, Professor Bernstein seeks information related to the creation of the "second lab" (Lawrence-Livermore National Laboratory) and the allocation of resources to the Los Alamos laboratory for work on the "superproject." Albuquerque Operations responded in part to this request on July 7, 1988 by releasing responsive unclassified records related to this request. It referred classified documents to the DOE's Office of Classification and Technology Policy for review as to their possible release. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.6. By January 30, 1991, Albuquerque Operations had received a response from the Office of Classification and wrote to Professor Bernstein with the results of the review of classified documents. Professor Bernstein received portions of forty-seven documents. Many of these documents had various deletions made pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). In these cases, the information was found to be "Restricted Data" which falls within the prohibitions against release confined in sections 141 through 146 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended. 42 U.S.C. §§ 2161-66. Professor Bernstein appeals the withholdings in eight of these documents. He states that several publications contain information that, he claims, argues in favor of full declassification of these documents. He also asserts that declassification is essential to his scholarly work analyzing the efforts to create the Lawrence-Livermore National Laboratory and that the documents involved are over forty years old.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA allows the withholding of information if specifically authorized by another federal statute. However, the withholding statute must meet strict statutory guidelines. Exemption 3 is properly invoked only where the withholding statute "(A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). A statute falls within the Exemption's coverage if it satisfies either of its standards. Richard Olin Berner, Note, The Effect of the 1976 Amendment to Exemption Three of the Freedom of Information Act, 76 Colum. L. Rev. 1029, 1042 (1976). The D.C. Circuit has stated that an Exemption 3 analysis under the FOIA is not dependent on the factual content of the documents at issue. Instead, the """sole issue for decision is the existence of a relevant statute and the inclusion of withheld material within the statute's coverage."" Fitzgibbon v. Central Intelligence Agency, 911 F.2d 755, 761 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (Fitzgibbon) (quoting Association of Retired Railroad Workers v. Railroad Retirement Bd., 830 F.2d 331, 336 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (quoting Goland v. Central Intelligence Agency, 607 F.2d 339, 350 (D.C. Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 927 (1980))). Thus, in Exemption 3 cases, the Supreme Court has established a two-prong standard of review for Exemption 3 cases. See Central Intelligence Agency v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 167 (1985) (Sims); see also Fitzgibbon, 911 F.2d at 761 (applying the Sims test). First, it must be determined whether the statute in question is a statute of exemption as contemplated by Exemption 3. Sims, 471 U.S. at 167. Second, the withheld material must satisfy the criteria of the particular exemption statute. Fitzgibbon, 911 F.2d at 761.

In this case, both criteria are satisfied. With regard to the first test, it is well established that the relevant portions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 constitute information withholding statutes that trigger the application of Exemption 3. When it last amended Exemption 3, Government in the Sunshine Act, Pub. L. No. 94-409, § 5(b), 90 Stat. 1241, 1247 (1976), Congress specifically listed these sections of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 as falling within the scope of Exemption 3. See H.R. Rep. No. 880, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1, at 23 (1976), reprinted in 1976 U.S.C.A.A.N. 2183, 2205. In compliance with the determination of Congress, we have frequently held that these sections are Exemption 3 withholding statutes. See, e.g., Esther Samra, 25 DOE ¶ 80,182 at 80,703 (1996); Natural Resources Defense Council, 23 DOE ¶ 80,153 at 80,630 (1993); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 at 80,643 (1992).

For the application of the second test, we referred this matter to the Director of Security Affairs (Director). The Director is the agency official designated to make the final DOE determination involving the release of classified information. DOE Order No. 1700.1, ¶ III.2.b. (Aug. 21, 1992); DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, § 1.l (Dec. 20, 1991). The Director reviewed the eight documents Professor Bernstein appealed and considered Professor Bernstein's arguments. He determined that all of the withheld data in two of the documents are still properly classified. Of the remaining six documents, the Director concluded that two can now be declassified in their entirety and the remaining four documents contain other information which can now be properly declassified.

In explaining the continued withholding of responsive material in this case, the Director states that, in accord with the spirit and language of the FOIA, he has made every effort to segregate and release to Professor Bernstein all unclassified material. See, e.g., National Resources Defense Council, 25 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,517 (1995). However, he notes that the remaining withheld portions contain nuclear weapon design and stockpile information. Such material, he states, is still properly classified as either "Restricted Data," which consists, in relevant part, of "all data concerning (1) design, manufacture, or utilization of atomic weapons," 42 U.S.C. § 2014(y), or "Formerly Restricted Data" which is information primarily related "to the military utilization of atomic weapons" or concerns "the atomic energy programs of other nations" and that has been officially removed from the "Restricted Data" classification. 42 U.S.C. § 2162(d), (e). Under these circumstances, the Director explains, there is no discretion under the Atomic

The Director rejected Professor Bernstein's argument that previously published material exists which warrants approval of his Appeal. He points out that, even if Professor Bernstein's contention that similar material was published elsewhere is true (a statement, the Director notes, that Professor Bernstein has provided no evidence to support, Hudson River Sloop Clearwater, Inc. v. Department of the Navy, 891 F.2d 414, 421 (2d Cir. 1989)), standing alone it would not provide a basis for declassifying properly classified information. Cf. Fitzgibbon, 911 F.2d at 765 (only the existence of public information "officially acknowledged" by agency under specific criteria will defeat otherwise proper withholding of material under Exemption 3). In addition, he states, if some published material is identical to classified material, it is DOE policy not to comment on its accuracy or similarity.

Professor Bernstein also asserted that the information is necessary for his scholarly research into the creation of a "second lab." In most cases the purpose for which information is sought is not relevant to the consideration of a FOIA request. As the courts have stated, "'Congress granted the scholar and the scoundrel equal rights of access to agency records.'" Aronson v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 822 F.2d 182, 186 (1st Cir. 1987) (quoting Durns v. Bureau of Prisons, 804 F.2d 701, 706 (D.C. Cir. 1986). The Director also notes that this claim has nothing to do with whether the withheld information was properly classified. In addition, he states that the deletions are minimal (usually no more than several words) and should present no impediment to Professor Bernstein's research.

Finally, the Director rejected the contention that the age of the withheld information mitigates in favor of declassification and release. The Director states that nuclear weapons and stockpile information classified as "Restricted Data" or "Formerly Restricted Data" under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 does not become less sensitive simply with age, but must undergo specific analysis as to its continued classification. Cf. Fitzgibbon, 911 F.2d at 764 (unlike Exemption 1 material, Exemption 3 information not necessarily affected by passage of time). In this case, the Director undertook that specific analysis and found that some withheld material continues to be properly classified and has made more precise deletions as appropriate.

In conclusion, the Director found that two documents of the six documents Professor Bernstein appealed now can be declassified and released in full. However, the six remaining documents still contain properly classified information that must be withheld. The Director found that four of the documents have information that now can be segregated, declassified, and released to Professor Bernstein. The Director also has determined that all of the deletions made in two of the documents are proper. Accordingly, Professor Bernstein's Appeal is denied in part and granted in part. Copies of the relevant documents, bearing all releasable information, will be provided to Professor Bernstein by this Office as attachments to the letter transmitting this Decision and Order.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal of Barton J. Bernstein. OHA Case No. LFA-0108, is hereby granted in part and denied in part as specified in the foregoing Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Glen Milner

Case Number: LFA-0159

On October 7, 1991, Glen Milner filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on September 19, 1991, by the Department of Energy's Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque). In that determination, Albuquerque denied in part a request for information that Mr. Milner had filed on August 16, 1987, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. This Appeal, if granted, would require Albuquerque to release the information that it withheld in the September 19, 1991 determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On August 16, 1987, Mr. Milner submitted a request under the FOIA to the Naval Sea Systems Command of the Department of Defense (DOD) for "all documents on record concerning required or recommended safety precautions for the shipment of explosive and/or nuclear missile components, [i]n particular, . . . a series of documents titled NAVSEA SWOP [Special Weapons Ordnance Publication] 45-51." NAVSEA SWOP 45- 51 and its six supplements A through F comprise a technical manual published by the Joint Nuclear Weapons Publication System under the authority of the Secretaries of the Navy, Army and Air Force, the Director of the Defense Special Weapons Agency (DSWA, formerly the Defense Nuclear Agency), and the DOE. The request for the document and supplements B through F was ultimately referred to the Albuquerque Operations Office of the DOE, and on September 19, 1991, Albuquerque issued a determination to Mr. Milner in which it released only the title and signature pages of each of the documents.(1) Most of the information withheld was determined to be Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information (UCNI) under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. The remaining withheld information was found to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 2 of the FOIA.

On October 7, 1991, Mr. Milner appealed Albuquerque's determination to the Office of Hearings and Appeals. The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld portions of the requested document. In his appeal, Mr. Milner contends that Albuquerque is "too protective of information regarding the shipment of nuclear weapons" and that the national security does not require such protection. He argues that citizens, particularly those living near the shipment routes, "have a right to know more about these shipments."

II. Analysis

Exemption 2 of the FOIA permits an agency to withhold from public disclosure material "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). Following the Supreme Court's decision in Department of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352 (1976), the courts have interpreted Exemption 2 to include two distinct categories of information. The first category, known as "low 2," includes information relating to internal matters of an agency in which the public could not reasonably be expected to have an interest, for example, information concerning lunch hours or parking regulations. Rose, 425 U.S. at 369-370. The second category, "high 2," encompasses information the disclosure of which "may risk circumvention of agency regulation." Id. at 369. Information may be withheld pursuant to "high 2" if (i) it is used for predominantly internal purposes, and (ii) its disclosure significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes. Crooker v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 670 F.2d 1051, 1074 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

Exemption 3 provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). Among the types of information of which dissemination is prohibited under the Atomic Energy Act is UCNI. 42 U.S.C. § 2168 (section 148 of the Atomic Energy Act). The portions that Albuquerque deleted from the requested documents under Exemption 3 were withheld on the grounds that they contain UCNI concerning the design, protection, handling, maintenance, and transportation of nuclear weapons.

The Director of Security Affairs (SA) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of SA reviewed those portions of the requested documents that the DOE withheld under Exemption 3, and confirmed Albuquerque's determination that the withheld information is properly considered UCNI and must continue to be withheld under Exemption 3.(2)

However, because the technical manual and its supplements are joint publications of the Department of Defense and the DOE, the Director of SA referred them to the DOD for supplementary review. The DOD, in turn, referred them to the DSWA for review on behalf of all DOD components. The DSWA reviewed the manual and all its supplements, including Supplement A. It concluded that each of them contained information on internal matters the disclosure of which could result in the circumvention of a regulation that would impede the agencies' abilities to perform their assigned roles and functions. The DSWA therefore maintains that this information should be withheld under Exemption 2 of the FOIA. In addition, it concluded that the same documents also contain information that should be protected from disclosure under 10 U.S.C. § 128, which protects the DOD equivalent of UCNI, and therefore withheld under Exemption 3.(3)

Although the specific exemptions and corresponding deletions differ from those that Albuquerque and the Office of Security Affairs previously identified, the DSWA concluded that only the following pages should be released to the public: the title pages; pages containing "List of Effective Pages," which reflect the latest changes; signature and authentication pages; "Certificate of Destruction of Publication" pages; and "Distribution Statement" pages. The denying official for the Department of Defense is Dr. George W. Ullrich, Deputy Director, DSWA. Because we only have jurisdiction to review FOIA determinations made by DOE officials, we cannot review the determination made by DSWA in this case. Therefore, even if we were to complete our review and overrule the initial DOE determination, we would be unable to release any of the information that the DOD now withholds.

Based on the DSWA's review we have determined that, except for the pages containing the administrative information described above, NAVSEA SWOP 45-51 and its supplements B through F must continue to be withheld. Although Mr. Milner has raised a number of arguments in his appeal to the general effect that the public interest requires the release of the documents he has requested, consideration of these arguments is fruitless under the circumstances of this case. Accordingly, Mr. Milner's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part. Copies of the administrative pages of the requested documents that contain the information now determined to be releasable will be delivered to Mr. Milner.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Glen Milner on October 7, 1991, Case No. LFA-0159, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The title pages, pages containing "List of Effective Pages," "Certificate of Destruction of Publication" pages, and "Distribution Statement" pages of the technical manual entitled NAVSEA SWOP 45-51 and its supplements B through F will be provided to Mr. Milner.

(1)Supplement A was initially identified as the only document responsive to Mr. Milner's request. The DOE reached a separate initial determination concerning that document, which was appealed in 1988. The final agency determination with respect to that document appears in Glen Milner, 22 DOE ¶ 80,177 (1993). Albuquerque did not review Supplement A in its September 19, 1991 determination because it had recently performed such a review and no significant change to the applicable classification guidance had occurred since that review.

(2)Those portions withheld under Exemption 2 were not sent to the Director of SA but, as explained below, we need not consider them on appeal.

(3)The DSWA also concluded that Supplement A contained, in addition, information currently and properly classified in the interest of national defense under Executive Order 12958 and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1, and information currently and properly classified under the Atomic Energy Act and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3.

July 11, 1995

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Albuquerque Journal

Case Number: LFA-0182

John Fleck, a journalist employed by the Albuquerque Journal, filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on January 8, 1992, by the Director of the Office of Arms Control and Nonproliferation Technology Support of the Department of Energy's Office of Defense Programs (now the Office of Arms Control and Nonproliferation of the DOE's Office of Nonproliferation and National Security). In that determination, the Director responded to a request for information that Mr. Fleck filed on November 20, 1991, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to review and release additional information that was not provided in the January 8, 1992 determination.

I. Background

In his November 20, 1991 request Mr. Fleck asked for a "report prepared for Congress to meet the requirements of Section 3151 of the National Defense Authorization Act of 1991 regarding verification of dismantlement of nuclear weapons." In his January 8, 1992 response to this request, the Director explained to Mr. Fleck that the National Defense Authorization Act required the President to appoint a Technical Advisory Committee on Fissile Materials and Nuclear Warhead Controls for the purpose of preparing the required Report. The Director stated in his letter that the President delegated the authority and responsibility for this Committee to the Secretary of Energy. Although the statute called for the Report to be unclassified, with classified appendices as necessary, the Director further explained that it was not feasible to produce the Report in this manner; instead, the Report was classified. An unclassified executive summary was produced in anticipation of public interest in the Report, and it was this executive summary, which was made a part of the July 1991 Report, that was provided to Mr. Fleck in response to his request. In his Appeal, Mr. Fleck points out that the determination letter did not indicate that any attempt was made to segregate and release any portions of the classified Report. As a result, he contends, he was denied some of the information responsive to his request because he was given only the executive summary of the Report, rather than an expurgated version of the full Report.

II. Analysis

The Freedom of Information Act provides that agencies make reasonably described records available to a requester, provided the request is made in accordance with published rules. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). In this case, Mr. Fleck 's request was described in such a manner that there is no doubt regarding what document was responsive to his request: the specified Report to Congress. The Director responded to the request by providing instead the executive summary of that Report, while implying that the Report itself was classified. His determination letter does not reflect why the Director addressed himself only to the executive summary. Under these circumstances, we find that the full Report, even if classified, is responsive to the request. Therefore, the Director should have made a determination regarding the disclosure of the full Report.

Before a response to a request for classified records is issued, the DOE regulations require the concurrence of the Director of Declassification. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.6. Because the Director did not consider the disclosure of the full Report, he did not seek the necessary review of that document by the Office of Declato Mr. Fleck's request for information. It is also evident that the Director did not attempt to provide any portion of the Report itself, but rather believed he had satisfied the request by releasing the executive summary alone. Because the classified Report is responsive to Mr. Fleck's request but has not yet been reviewed for possible release, we will remand this request to the Director of the Office of Arms Control and Nonproliferation for a new determination. We understand that the classified Report is being reviewed at this time by the Office of Declassification for a determination as to whether any portions may be declassified and released to the public. When the review has been completed, the Director of the Office of Arms Control and Nonproliferation shall issue a new determination to Mr. Fleck on the basis of that review. Accordingly, the Albuquerque Journal's Appeal will be granted.

(1) The Appeal filed by the Albuquerque Journal on January 29, 1992, Case No. LFA-0182, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph 2 below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Director of the Office of Arms Control and Nonproliferation, who shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

<1> Mr. Fleck correctly points out in his Appeal that the fact that a document contains material that is exempt from disclosure does not make the entire document exempt. However, in this case, no attempt had yet been made to determine whether it was possible to segregate releasable material from the full Report, because the Director appears not to have considered the full Report for release. When reviewing the Report on remand, the Office of Declassification will consider this issue of segregability.

June 22, 1995

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Ferenc M. Szasz

Ferenc M. Szasz filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 24, 1992, by the Assistant Archivist for the National Archives of the National Archives and Records Admininstration (NARA). In that determination, the Assistant Archivist denied a request for information that Professor Szasz filed on February 17, 1988, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. NARA withheld the documents it found to be responsive to Professor Szasz's request pursuant to a review of those documents by the predecessor of the Office of Declassification of the Department of Energy's Office of Security Affairs. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to direct the Assistant Archivist to release the information that was withheld in the November 24, 1992 determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In his February 17, 1988 request Professor Szasz asked NARA for "the reports contained in the Manhattan Project files 201 Peierls, R.W. Record Group 77 (MED) [Manhattan Engineering District], Entry 5." These reports, which NARA identified as four documents in its determination, are in fact six letters, all of which originated with the United Kingdom mission to the MED during the period 1943-1945. Mr. Peierls was a member of that UK mission. NARA referred the six letters to the DOE's Office of Classification, now the Office of Declassification, which sent the letters to the Chief, Joint Atomic Information Exchange Group (JAIEG), requesting that they be forwarded to the British Embassy for review.

On May 13, 1992, the British Embassy informed the JAIEG that "the UK decision . . . is to deny the release of all documents in their entirety." The JAIEG then returned the documents to the Office of Declassification with the UK recommendation. The Office of Declassification then informed NARA that the documents contained classified information that the DOE claimed to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). In addition, it informed NARA that, in light of the UK's recommendation to withhold the documents in their entirety, the DOE regarded the contents of the documents as foreign government information classified under section 1.3(a)(3) of Executive Order 12356 and exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C.

§ 552(b)(1). On November 24, 1992, NARA informed Professor Szasz that his request had been denied under Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA. In that determination, NARA also instructed him to appeal the Exemption 1 denial to the DOE before appealing any Exemption 3 denials to NARA.

Professor Szasz completed the filing of his Appeal with the DOE on January 14, 1993. In his Appeal, he does not present any specific arguments for the release of the letters in their entirety, but states that he would accept excerpted copies of these documents, with the sensitive information deleted.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12356, 3 C.F.R. 1982 Comp., p. 166, is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification of information concerning "foreign government information." Executive Order 12356, § 1.3(a)(3). Information properly classified under this Executive Order is exempt from mandatory disclosure by Exemption 1. See Peter Almquist, 21 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1991); Glen Milner, 20 DOE ¶ 80,166 (1990); Government Accountability Project, 20 DOE ¶ 80,121 (1990).

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). The Office of Declassification determined that significant portions of the six letters should be withheld under Exemption 3 because they contained information about the design and manufacture of nuclear weapons that has been classified as Restricted Data under the Atomic Energy Act and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure. "Restricted Data" is defined in part as "all data concerning (1) design, manufacture, or utilization of atomic weapons." 42 U.S.C. § 2014(y).

The Director of Security Affairs (Director of SA) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of National Security Information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of the Appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of SA reviewed the six letters and concluded that they should continue to be withheld from Professor Szasz in their entirety, because they are currently and properly classified under § 1.3(a)(3) of Executive Order 12356 and are therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA. In addition, the Director of SA has concluded that those portions of the letters initially identified as Restricted Data under the Atomic Energy Act are properly classified as such and therefore should still be withheld from Professor Szasz under Exemption 3 of the FOIA.

III. Conclusion

Based on the review performed by the Director of SA, we have determined that Executive Order 12356, which currently governs the protection of foreign government information, requires the continued withholding of the entire contents of the six letters responsive to Professor Szasz's request under the FOIA. Based on that same review, we have also determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the continued withholding of those portions of the letters that have been identified and properly classified as Restricted Data, as that term has been defined in the Atomic Energy Act. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information nevertheless, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemptions 1 and 3, the non-disclosure is required by statute or Executive Order. Accordingly, Professor Szasz's Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ferenc M. Szasz on January 19, 1993, Case No. LFA-0254, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:National Security Archive

Date of Filing: May 14, 1993

Case Number: LFA-0297

The National Security Archive filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 13, 1993, by the Director of Freedom of Information and Security Review, Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense. In that determination, the Director denied in part a request for information that the National Security Archive filed on May 6, 1988, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Some of the information deleted from the document released to the National Security Archive in that determination was withheld pursuant to a review of the documents by the predecessor of the Office of Declassification of the Department of Energy's Office of Security Affairs. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to instruct the Director to release the information that was withheld in the April 13, 1993 determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On May 6, 1988, Craig Keller of the National Security Archive submitted a request under the FOIA to the Department of Defense (DOD) for a document entitled "Positions and Statements on Disarmament, January 1961 - November 1969." On September 2, 1988, the Director, Freedom of Information and Security Review, DOD, sent the document to the DOE for classification review. In response to that request, the DOE advised the DOD on May 19, 1989, that the document contained classified information that it considered exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1), (3). On April 13, 1993, the DOD released to Mr. Keller a copy of the document he requested from which was withheld the information that the DOE claimed was exempt from disclosure under the FOIA as well as other information that the DOD claimed was exempt from disclosure.

In its Appeal to the DOE, the National Security Archive seeks the disclosure of those portions of the requested document that the DOD withheld at the request of the DOE. The National Security Archive contends that at least some of those portions have already been declassified and released, and that other withheld portions should now be declassified.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be dept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12356, 3 C.F.R. 1982 Comp., p. 166, is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification of information concerning military plans and intelligence activities. Executive Order 12356, § 1.3(a)(1), (4). Information properly classified under this Executive Order is exempt from mandatory disclosure by Exemption 1. See Paul G. Richards, 22 DOE ¶ 80,159 (1992); Peter Almquist, 21 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1991).

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). The portions that the DOE deleted from the requested document under Exemption 3 were withheld on the grounds that they contain information about nuclear weapons design that has been classified as Restricted Data under the Atomic Energy Act and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure.

Upon referral of the Appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Office of Declassification again reviewed those portions of the requested document for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA. That Office has now concluded that the document no longer contains any information that needs to remain classified by the DOE. It has advised the DOD of its determination and, pursuant to that advice, the DOD has released that information to the Appellant. See Letter from Clifford H. Bernath, Principal Deputy Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Public Affairs, to William Burr, National Security Archive, February 27, 1995. Accordingly, the National Security Archive's Appeal will be granted.

(1) The Appeal filed by the National Security Archive on May 14, 1993, Case No. LFA-0297, is hereby granted.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: A. Victorian

Case Number: LFA-0387

On May 31, 1994, Dr. A. Victorian filed an Appeal from a determination issued on April 6, 1994 by the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Military Application and Stockpile Support of the Department of Energy (DOE/MA). The determination concerned a request submitted by Dr. Victorian under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Dr. Victorian requests that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) order the release of the information withheld by DOE/MA.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). Department of Energy (DOE) regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public, whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In a July 2, 1992 FOIA request, Dr. Victorian sought information and records from the DOE pertaining to the DOE's FALCON program. <1> In its April 6, 1994 determination letter, DOE/MA provided Dr. Victorian with copies of two documents entitled "FALCON Reactor-Driven Laser Experiments Show Potential," (Experiments Document) and "DOE Reactor-Pumped Laser Research Program" (Laser Document). A copy of the Experiments Document was provided to Dr. Victorian in its entirety but portions of the Laser Document were deleted. In its determination letter, DOE/MA stated that the deleted portions of the Laser Document were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA. DOE/MA asserted that the portions of the Laser Document withheld pursuant to Exemption 1 consisted of information classified under section 1.3(a)(1) of Executive Order 12356 because release of the information could reasonably be expected to cause damage to the national security. DOE/MA went on to state that the remaining portions, which were withheld under Exemption 3 of the FOIA, consisted of information relating to nuclear energy-pumped laser weapons which was classified as restricted data under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011, 2161-2166.

In his Appeal, Dr. Victorian argues that the Laser Document was inappropriately classified. Dr. Victorian alleges that Secretary of Energy Hazel O'Leary promised in December 1993 to declassify documents regarding inertial confinement fusion (ICF) programs such as the DOE's FALCON program. Dr. Victorian also argues that the budget information contained in the Laser Document was inappropriately withheld under Exemption 1 of the FOIA because Secretary O'Leary had given assurances that budget information regarding ICF programs would be disclosed and that "laws" require most governmental agencies to be accountable for their use of tax-payer monies. Such withholding of budget information, Dr. Victorian asserts, leads the public to believe that such projects are so-called "Black" or secret projects.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive Order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12958, 60 Fed. Reg. 19825 (April 20, 1995), is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification of information concerning military plans and intelligence activities. Executive Order 12958, § 1.5(a), (c). Consequently, information properly classified under this Executive Order is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1.

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). The portions that the DOE deleted from the Laser Document under Exemption 3 were withheld on the grounds that they contain information classified as Restricted Data under the Atomic Energy Act and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure.

The fact that a document contains material that is exempt from disclosure does not necessarily make the entire document exempt. The FOIA, as implemented, requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); See Mead Data Central v. Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); Government Accountability Project, 20 DOE ¶ 80,121 (1990). In the context of Exemptions 1 and 3, this means information not classified pursuant an applicable Executive Order or required to be withheld by an Exemption 3 statute should ordinarily be released to the requestor. See Founding Church of Scientology v. Bell, 603 F.2d 945, 950-51 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (Exemption 1); Glen Milner, 20 DOE ¶ 80,122 (1990) (Exemption 1); San Jose Mercury News, 20 DOE ¶ 80,119 (1990) (Exemption 3).

The Director of Security Affairs (Director) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA Appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.1 (December 20, 1991). In his review of this Appeal, the Director instructed the Office of Declassification (OD) to reexamine the Laser Document. After the OD's examination, the Director determined that almost all of the Laser Document was properly withheld under Exemption 1 or 3 of the FOIA but that a small portion of the Laser Document which had been previously withheld could now be declassified and released to Dr. Victorian in order to assist him to understand the nature of the deleted portions of the Laser Document. Additionally, the Director stated that OD found that the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory budget information previously withheld in the Laser Document is now unclassified and should also provided to Dr. Victorian.

With regard to the remaining deleted portions of the Laser Document, the Director rejected the specific arguments put forth by Dr. Victorian. The Director states that Secretary O'Leary, in her December 1993 press conference, made no promise to declassify specific documents or any document containing ICF information. The Director notes that Secretary O'Leary stated that, with respect to the ICF program, the DOE had declassified certain facts such as information concerning laboratory ICF targets, calculations regarding experimental data on hydrodynamic instabilities on unclassified ICF targets, information relevant to energy applications of ICF and ICF equipment fabrication techniques. Further, the Director asserts that Secretary O'Leary has stated that some ICF information relating to weapons research would remain classified. The Director also rejects Dr. Victorian's argument that by withholding budget information, the DOE is attempting to hide the existence of the FALCON program, making it a so-called "Black" project. The Director states that the existence, purpose and goals of the FALCON program are unclassified and publicly known. <2>

In conclusion, the Director, upon review by OD, found that almost all of the withheld material was properly classified and withheld pursuant to Exemption 1 or 3 of the FOIA. However, a small portion of information in the Laser Document can now be declassified and released to Dr. Victorian. A newly redacted copy of the Laser Document will be sent to Dr. Victorian under separate cover.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Dr. A. Victorian on May 31, 1994, Case Number LFA-0387, is hereby granted as set forth in the foregoing Decision and denied in all other respects.

<1>The FALCON program is a DOE project to investigate nuclear energy-pumped laser weapon technology.

December 19, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: November 25, 2002

Case Number: TFA-0001

Barbara Schwarz filed Appeals from three letters issued by the various elements of the Department of Energy (DOE). Two of these letters responded to a request for information that Schwarz filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The third letter informed Ms. Schwarz that the DOE would no longer process FOIA requests that she filed until she paid processing fees that she owes to various federal government entities. As explained below, we will deny the first two Appeals and dismiss the third.

I. Response from the Golden Field Office

Background

Ms. Schwarz sent an e-mail to Richard Truly, Director of the DOE's National Renewable Energy Laboratory, in which she requested the following information:

[Whether] you or members of your staff have knowledge of Mark C. Rathbun (de Rothschild), or his family, or his attorneys, or Scientologists, or an Independent or Special Counsel, or other members of Congress asking you to investigate a secret German Nazi infiltration of the U.S. government, all Departments, numerous federal agencies and even courts, or State governments, or asked you to sponsor a new Committee, or Subcommittee, or federal agency, or office, to investigate this illegal infiltration. Inform me if they contacted you to find me as witness to their investigation and asked you to mail your FOIA/PA or other records on me to them.

Please mail me also under FOIA/PA records, that you Department, any office has on me, Barbara Schwarz, or misspelled version Schwartz from 1997 till present time, that you have not yet mailed to me. Search in all your office and agencies. Clarify the status of my "urgent request for information assistance and investigation,"(including FOIA/PA request) dated May 20, 2002, and mailed with USPS on May 20, 2002 to Secretary Spencer Abraham. What is the file number of this request? When do you process this request?

The Manager of the DOE's Golden Field Office responded to this request in a letter dated September 11, 2002. With respect to the first portion of her request, the Manager stated that Ms. Schwarz had requested knowledge rather than documents, and that the FOIA requires the production only of documents. Therefore, no documents could be provided that responded to her request. As for the second part of her request, the Manager stated that Golden had performed a thorough search for records on Ms. Schwarz, and had located none. Finally, he advised Ms. Schwarz to contact the DOE headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Group regarding the request she filed with Secretary Abraham.

In her appeal, Ms. Schwarz raises the following issues. First, she challenges Golden's determination that it had no records regarding her. Second, she believes that Golden must have some documents that demonstrate that Mr. Rathbun or members of his family, or their attorneys, or other individuals "requested [her] records from NREL or DOE Golden Field Office," because "the above named attorneys likely requested them in official letters and subpoenas." Third, because Golden "sent absolutely no evidence of any search," Ms. Schwarz requests records of the search it conducted in response to her request. Finally, Ms. Schwarz wants "to know why DOE, NREL does not want to investigate the matters of National Security, which I raised in [my request] and which concern DOE directly. I still insist on the investigation."

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to determine whether the search conducted for records concerning Ms. Schwarz was adequate, we contacted the Golden office. The Freedom of Information Officer for Golden informed us that he had searched its human resources, procurement and legal counsel offices, and that no documents were found that were responsive to this portion of the request. He also informed us that these three offices were the locations at Golden where information on Ms. Schwarz might reasonably be found, if any existed. We find that the search for information responsive to this portion of Ms. Schwarz's request was adequate and we will deny this portion of the appeal.

Concerning Ms. Schwarz's request for "knowledge" that certain individuals had asked Golden to investigate Nazi infiltration or to sponsor such an investigation, Golden informed us that it had not conducted a search at all, because "knowledge" would not be contained in documents, which are the proper subject of a request under the FOIA. Although we agree that Golden was technically correct in not undertaking a search for "knowledge," we reinterpreted Ms. Schwarz's request to include any documents that demonstrated that the named individuals had asked Golden to investigate Nazi infiltration or to sponsor such an investigation. We then requested that Golden conduct a search for documents responsive to that restatement of Ms. Schwarz's request. Golden performed a search and notified us that no responsive documents were found. It explained the manner of its search, which included posing this request to three high-level, long-term employees, each of whom had a broad knowledge and memory of Golden's operations, and who would reasonably know about any responsive documents if any existed at Golden. We find that the search for information responsive to this portion of Ms. Schwarz's request was adequate and we will deny this portion of the appeal.

Ms. Schwarz now requests "the search records that were generated during this search by NREL and Golden Field Office, e.g. work sheets, e-mail notes, computer printouts, logs, etc., any form of records that belong to me and that request. I also want to know in what offices was searched, who searched in what offices exactly, what records systems, to what names of mine, to what time period, and I want a search declaration/certificate by the searchers as to how the search was conducted." This request is for information that is beyond the scope of the original request and we will not address it in this appeal. If Ms. Schwarz wishes to request "the search records that were generated during this search by NREL and Golden Field Office," she must do so by filing a request for information with Golden directly. We note, however, that neither the FOIA nor the relevant DOE regulations requires the agency to supply a "search certificate" or a detailed description of the search that was conducted. Barbara Schwarz, [Case No. VFA-0536, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 (1999)]. Furthermore, we believe that requiring a "search declaration" at the administrative stage of review is unnecessary and unproductive.

Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0641, 28 DOE ¶ 80,140 (2001). Moreover, it is well settled that documents need not be created in response to a request for information under the FOIA. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 143 n.10 (1975). We will therefore deny this portion of the appeal.

Finally, we must dismiss Ms. Schwarz's concern that the Golden Field Office has ignored her demand for an investigation of matters of national security that she specified in her communications with that office. Her request for such action, and Golden's lack of response to that request, are beyond the scope of the FOIA and, consequently, our powers to review under the FOIA and the DOE's regulations that implement that law.

II. Response from the NNSA

The DOE's National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) received the same request for information as Mr. Truly of NREL. The NNSA's Freedom of Information Act Officer responded to this request in a letter dated September 9, 2002, stating that the NNSA "is not allowed to maintain any records on United States citizens that have no affiliation with the National Nuclear Security Administration," and that the NNSA does not conduct investigations. On September 15, 2002, Ms. Schwarz attempted to appeal that determination directly to the NNSA, and we will consider her appeal at this time. In her appeal, Ms. Schwarz raised the following issues. She contends that the NNSA conducted no search for records about her and failed to conduct an adequate search for subpoenas that Mr. Rathbun, his family, their attorneys, or other counsel had allegedly filed with the NNSA to obtain records about her. In addition, as she did in her appeal of the NREL determination discussed above, Ms. Schwarz now requests "the search records that you or your office generated to retrieve those records, and a search declaration/certificate as to how the search was conducted."

In order to determine whether the search conducted for records responsive to Ms. Schwarz's request was adequate, we contacted the NNSA. We learned that the Freedom of Information Act Officer did not conduct a search for responsive documents in this case, because he believes the NNSA does not maintain information of the type Ms. Schwarz requested. At our request, however, the NNSA performed a formal search for such records and located none. The FOIA Officer reported that his search of NNSA's FOIA case files located only documents related to the request currently under appeal: Ms. Schwarz's e-mail request for information, NNSA's September 9, 2002 response, and Ms. Schwarz's September 15, 2002 reply. The FOIA Officer also reported that he requested NNSA's Office of General Counsel search for subpoenas regarding information about Ms. Schwarz, and was informed that none exist. In addition, the NNSA's Office of General Counsel reported to us directly that it has no litigation files concerning Ms. Schwarz. Despite the fact that this search uncovered no documents responsive to Ms. Schwarz's request, we find that the search that the NNSA conducted was adequate and will deny this portion of the appeal.

As stated above, Ms. Schwarz now requests any records the NNSA generated in the course of retrieving records responsive to her request, and a "search declaration/certificate" regarding that search. For the same reasons set forth in the above section concerning Golden's response, we will deny this portion of her appeal.

III. Response from FOI/PA

Ms. Schwarz also appeals a letter she received from the Director of the Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Group. In that letter, dated October 2, 2002, the Director stated that the DOE would not begin to process several requests for information that Ms. Schwarz had filed with the DOE, because other agencies have informed the DOE that she has not paid fees assessed for processing FOIA requests at those agencies. In a letter dated October 20, 2002, Ms. Schwarz objects to the DOE's refusal to process her requests for information, declaring it to "completely unlawful and even unconstitutional."

We will not consider the arguments raised by the DOE or Ms. Schwarz regarding this impasse. The DOE's refusal to process Ms. Schwarz's requests for information does not fall within the type of determinations that we have jurisdiction to review on appeal. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a) (appeal authority when the DOE withholds a document in part or in full, or states there are no responsive documents, or denies a request for waiver of fees). Accordingly, we will dismiss the portion of the appeal that concerns the DOE's refusal to process requests for information. Under these circumstances, Ms. Schwarz has the right to file a complaint with the appropriate federal district court. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B), (6)(C).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz, Case No. TFA-0001, is hereby denied in part and dismissed in part.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Steven C. Vigg

Date of Filing: November 26, 2002

Case Number: TFA-0003

On November 26, 2002, Mr. Steven C. Vigg filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). The BPA issued this determination in response to a request that Mr. Vigg filed with the Department of Justice. In this determination, the Bonneville Power Administration released some responsive documents to Mr. Vigg but withheld others from him. The Appeal, if granted, would require that the information that the BPA withheld be released in full.

I. Background

Mr. Vigg filed a request in which he sought access to all information concerning allegations of misconduct against him by the BPA, allegations that were later determined by the Department of Justice (DOJ) to "lack prosecutive merit." Mr. Vigg filed his Freedom of Information Request with the Department of Justice. The DOJ located responsive documents and referred them to the DOE for its review. The DOE Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Group in turn forwarded the documents to the BPA. On October 8, 2002, the BPA issued a determination which provided Mr. Vigg with copies of some of the documents the DOJ provided. The BPA withheld a number of documents, finding that the information it was withholding was encompassed by Exemptions 5 and 7 of the FOIA.

In addition to the documents it received from the DOJ, the BPA also reviewed Mr. Vigg's Official Personnel File, and informed him that no additional documents responsive to his request were found in it.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Determination

After conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, the statute requires that the agency provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption(s) under which information was withheld. Research Information Services, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80, 139 (1996); Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,767 (1996). Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

In our review, we note that the October 8 Determination Letter failed to identify each responsive document that the BPA withheld. As discussed above, the BPA has an obligation to describe each document or portion of document withheld and the grounds for withholding it in a manner sufficient to allow the requester, and the reviewing authority, to understand the rationale for withholding the information. Because this was not done, Mr. Vigg cannot formulate an appeal concerning the documents withheld under Exemptions 5 and 7(C), nor can the OHA rule on the appropriateness of application of those exemptions to the withheld documents.

We also note that the BPA apparently did not attempt to segregate and release portions of the withheld documents that do not contain information of the types protected under the claimed exemptions. The FOIA requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material). The determination letter did not identify any segregable, non-exempt factual material, or state that no such information existed.

Consequently, we will remand this matter to the BPA. On remand, the BPA should attempt to segregate and release any portions of the relevant documents to which the claimed exemptions may not be applied. If any information is withheld, it must be described and its withholding must be justified as discussed above.

B. Adequacy of Search

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-95 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at BPA to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any additional documents existed that were responsive to Mr. Vigg's request. We were informed of the following. Upon receiving Mr. Vigg's request for information, Mr. Michael R. Sparks, Manager of Internal Audit at BPA, contacted the BPA's Office of General Counsel. Upon reviewing the documents submitted by the DOJ, Mr. Sparks determined that the only BPA Internal Audit Staff member who had worked on a 1996 investigation concerning the allegations Mr. Vigg named in his request was David Mattson.

The BPA then contacted Mr. Mattson, a BPA Auditor, who reported that he no longer had any files related to this FOIA request because he had disposed of them long ago. Mr. Mattson confirmed that everything he had developed during his 1996 investigation was contained in the Department of Justice package that was forwarded to the BPA office. Mr. Mattson also informed the BPA that no other files existed within the Internal Audit Office that related to this FOIA request.

Mr. Sparks then had the BPA's Office of General Counsel (OGC) review Mr. Vigg's OPF file. The OGC staff determined that the OPF file contained no responsive documents.

Based on this explanation of the search performed, we conclude that the BPA's search for documents responsive to Mr. Vigg's request met the "standard of reasonableness" established in the case law. Accordingly, we will deny the portion of Mr. Vigg's appeal that challenges the adequacy of the BPA's search.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on November 26, 2002 by Steven C. Vigg, OHA Case No. TFA-0003, is hereby granted except as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the BPA for segregation and release of any portions of those responsive documents that the BPA withheld in its October 8, 2002 determination. If the BPA determines that any information must continue to be withheld, it must provide adequate descriptions of all such information in accordance with the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Government Accountability Project

Case Number: TFA-0004

On November 21, 2002, Government Accountability Project (GAP) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it in response to a request for documents that it submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on October 24, 2002, by the DOE Oakland Operations Office (Oakland). This Appeal, if granted, would require that Oakland grant GAP a fee waiver.

I. Background

This Appeal concerns a FOIA request GAP originally filed with Oakland on August 27, 2002. GAP requested information reflecting the payment or reimbursement of money paid by DOE to any contractor in regard to any legal claims of two former employees of the contractor, Matthew Zipoli and Charles Quiñones. Request Letter dated August 27, 2002, from Thomas Carpenter, Director, Seattle Office, GAP, to Oakland. As authorized by the DOE FOIA Regulations, the request asked for a waiver of any fees associated with fulfilling the request. On September 10, 2002, Oakland sent GAP a letter asking for additional information to support the fee waiver request. Letter dated September 10, 2002, from RoseAnn Pelzner, FOIA Officer, Oakland, to Thomas Carpenter, GAP. GAP responded on October 10, 2002, providing arguments why it was entitled to a fee waiver for the information it was requesting. Letter dated October 10, 2002, from Clare Gilbert, Program Associate, GAP, to RoseAnn Pelzner. In response, Oakland denied GAP's fee waiver request but released eight responsive documents found in its two hour search allowed to "other requesters."[*/] Determination Letter dated October 24, 2002, from James S. Hirahara, Acting Deputy Manager, FOIA Authorizing Official, Oakland, to Clare Gilbert.

[*/] Other requesters are those requesters that are not commercial use requesters, educational and noncommercial scientific institutions, and representatives of the news media. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9 (b). All "other requesters" are required to pay the full reasonable direct cost of searching for and reproducing records that are responsive to the request, except that the first 100 pages of reproduction and the first two hours of search time are furnished without charge. Id. at § 1004.9 (b)(4).

GAP filed this Appeal on November 21, 2002, claiming that it was entitled to a fee waiver for this request and any future FOIA requests. Appeal Letter dated November 21, 2002, Clare Gilbert to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees for the processing of their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, it provides a two-pronged test for agencies to use in considering whether to waive fees. The two prongs can be summarized as the "public interest prong" and the "commercial interest" prong. See Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1998). The public interest prong requires an examination of whether disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii). The commercial interest prong asks whether the request is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. If it is, fees will not be waived. Id. The requester bears the burden of satisfying the two-pronged test for a fee waiver. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997).

As an initial matter, we note that decisions on fee waiver requests are made on a case by case basis. A requester cannot be granted a blanket fee waiver, even if it believes it will be requesting the same type of information in all requests. Consequently, we reject the GAP argument that because it has been granted fee waivers in the past, it should be granted a waiver in this case. GAP's past success in receiving fee waivers is not necessarily indicative of success in this case.

In order to determine whether the requester meets the public interest prong (i.e., whether disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities), the DOE considers four factors:

> (A) The subject of the request: whether the subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure;

> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i). A requester who satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong must then address the second prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his or her commercial interest. See Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,199 (1997).

In its Determination, Oakland found that although GAP did satisfy Factor A, it did not satisfy Factors B, C, or D of the public interest prong. Determination Letter at 2, 3. In its request, GAP asks for records reflecting the DOE reimbursement of its contractors's legal fees associated with the dismissal of two employees of the contractor. Oakland found that the request satisfied Factor A, in that it concerned an identifiable government operation. However, Oakland found that it did not satisfy Factor B because GAP did not show that the requested information contain a significant potential for benefitting the general public. Determination Letter at 2.

GAP argues in its Appeal it has satisfied all four Factors. In regard to Factor B, GAP contends that it has requested similar information in the past and been granted a fee waiver in those cases. It argues that the information it has gathered through the FOIA in the past has been used by national magazines and local newspapers in articles about the DOE whistleblower program, and claims that the information sought in this case would again shed light on that program. Appeal Letter at 3, 4. In regard to Factor C, GAP states that OHA has found in the past that GAP is able to disseminate the information publicly and Oakland's argument that there has been no showing of relevant whistleblower activities is irrelevant. Finally, GAP contests Oakland's finding that it does not satisfy Factor D. GAP states that the information it is requesting would reflect on DOE's claim that it is committed to zero tolerance for retaliation against whistleblowers. Appeal Letter at 6.

GAP argues that it should be granted a fee waiver because the information it is requesting will contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities, specifically, that the information requested will show the extent of the support that DOE is giving its contractors in whistleblower cases and will show that DOE does tolerate reprisals against whistleblowers. GAP's argument fails because it lacks a factual basis; there is no evidence in the record that the information GAP seeks relates in any way to whistleblower activity. In its determination, Oakland stated that no retaliation by the employer was established in this case. In its response to GAP's Appeal, Oakland stated that an arbitrator found that the contractor had cause to dismiss one of the employees and reprimand the other employee. No mention was made of the employees' status as whistleblowers. Response Letter from Jack Hug, Oakland, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, citing In Re Security Police Officers Association v. Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, report of arbitrator, December 13, 2002.

We agree with Oakland. There is nothing in the record to indicate that this case involves whistleblowers, other than an allegation by GAP that these employees were terminated because of whistleblower activities. No Part 708 complaint has been filed and as far as we know, none is contemplated. Therefore, release of the information would not shed any light on the reimbursement by DOE of a contractor's legal fee in a whistleblower situation. We agree with Oakland that GAP does not satisfy Factor B for this request.

GAP's argument regarding Factor B and public understanding is so remote and unlikely that even were we to find that GAP satisfied both Factors C and D, we would not grant it a fee waiver. Therefore, we will not address Factors C and D. We note however, that GAP does have a history of being able to disseminate the information it requests under the FOIA. However, as noted above, each request must be handled individually.

III. Conclusion

Oakland properly denied GAP's request for a fee waiver because GAP did not satisfy Factor B. Accordingly, the GAP Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Government Accountability Project on November 21, 2002, OHA Case Number TFA-0004, is hereby denied.

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Carole L. Norris
Date of Filing:	December 2, 2002
Case Number:	TFA-0005

On December 2, 2002, Carole L. Norris (Norris) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on October 18, 2002, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy. In her Appeal, Norris asserts that Richland failed to perform an adequate search for responsive documents in its possession regarding a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Request she submitted on September 24, 2002.

Background

On September 24, 2002, Norris filed a FOIA Request with Richland requesting copies of all "employment, occupational health and radiation exposure records of my deceased father, Thomas E. Fleming" (Fleming). Freedom of Information Request submitted by Carole L. Norris to Richland (September 24, 2002). Fleming had worked with a number of contractors at the DOE's Hanford, Washington site (Hanford). In its response to her FOIA Request, Richland sent Norris copies of a number of health records pertaining to her father.

In her Appeal, Norris asserts that while Richland provided her with some records, it did not provide records pertaining to each of her father's employers at the site and that consequently, Richland must have performed an inadequate search. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Warren Gray, OHA Staff Attorney, and Carole L. Norris (April 18, 2003).

Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ashok K. Kaushal, 27 DOE ¶ 80,189 (1999); Hobart T. Bolin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1998).

We contacted an official at Richland's Office of Communications, FOIA and Privacy Act Programs to ascertain the extent of the search that was conducted for responsive documents. When Richand received Norris's FOIA request it was forwarded, along with the enclosed death certificate, to the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation (HEHF). HEHF maintains the occupational health and medical records for employees at the Hanford site. HEHF found 44 pages of medical records all of which were provided to Norris. The request was also sent to Pacific Northwest Laboratory's (PNNL) radiation exposure records group and legal department. The radiation exposure records group maintains the Hanford Radiological Exposure Reporting System, which is the comprehensive database for radiation exposure records at DOE's Hanford site. 1/ The radiation exposure records group ultimately found records for Fleming while he was an employee of Atkinson Jones, a subcontractor at Hanford. The PNNL legal department contacted PNNL's human resources department in order to determine if Fleming was an employee of Battelle (the current prime contractor at Hanford) at PNNL. 2/ PNNL's search indicated that Fleming had not been an employee of Battelle.

The Richland official also forwarded Norris's request to two other Hanford employees who maintained the available Hanford employment records for trade employees, i.e., welders, pipe fitters, etc., and employees of former Hanford prime contractors and major subcontractors. These records are indexed by file cards listing employees' names. Records on Fleming were found in the employee records files of Kaiser Engineers (a Hanford subcontractor) and were provided to Norris. No records were found among the available DuPont records. 3/ The Richland official knew of no other location where responsive documents might exist.

Given this factual background, we find that Richland performed an adequate search in response to Norris's FOIA request. Richland undertook a search using the indexes and databases which were most likely to produce responsive records. The request was forwarded to organizations that were most likely to possess responsive documents and all such documents were forwarded to Norris. We find that Richland's search was reasonably calculated to discover all responsive documents and consequently we will deny Norris's appeal.

(1) The Appeal filed by Carole L. Norris on December 2, 2002, Case No. TFA-0005 is denied.

1/ The database contains records of employees who were monitored for radiation exposure at Hanford. It does not contain a listing for all employees who may have worked at Hanford.

2/ Battelle became the prime contractor at Hanford beginning in 1965.

3/ Richland earlier discovered that DuPont had removed all its personnel records from the Hanford site and these records were subsequently destroyed. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Sarah Prein, Richland, and Richard Cronin, OHA (May 14, 2003).

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Las Vegas Review-Journal
Dates of Filing:	December 11, 2002 December 30, 2002
Case Numbers	TFA-0007 TFA-0014

This Decision concerns two Appeals that were filed by The Las Vegas Review-Journal, a newspaper, from determinations that were issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management (Yucca Mountain) (Case No. TFA-0007) and by the Office of Inspector General (OIG) (Case No. TFA-0014). These determinations were issued in response to a request for information that the newspaper submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require that documents that these offices withheld in whole or in part be released, and that a new search for responsive documents be performed.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document that is exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In its FOIA request, The Review-Journal sought access to copies of all documents pertaining to (i) a settlement between Science Applications International Corporation (SAIC) and Mactec Inc., including the settlement agreement, (ii) the terms of the settlement agreement in Mitchell v. Mactec and the billing, payment and reimbursement of litigation fees in that case, (iii) the contracting of the Morgan, Lewis & Bockius law firm to conduct the Safety Conscious Work Environment (SCWE) Investigation and the firm's final report, and (iv) how two specified employee concerns were addressed. The newspaper also requested a copy of a May 18, 2001 letter from James Mattimoe to Lake Barrett and related documents concerning allegations of corruption in investigations conducted by the Yucca Mountain Concerns Program, six pieces of correspondence sent by Kristi Hodges to the OIG between October 2001 and January 2002, and Department of Labor communications pertaining to an investigation into an allegedly wrongful termination.

In its determination (Case No. TFA-0007), Yucca Mountain released a number of responsive documents to the newspaper. However, Yucca Mountain withheld other documents, in whole or in part, under Exemptions 4, 5, and 6 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4), (b)(5) and (b)(6), respectively. Yucca Mountain further determined that no documents pertaining to any settlement between SAIC and Mactec or correspondence between Kristi Hodges and OIG could be located in Yucca Mountain's records. Yucca Mountain referred the request for correspondence between Hodges and the OIG to that Office. As a result of this referral, OIG issued a Glomar response to the newspaper (Case No. TFA-0014). [1]

In its Appeals, The Review-Journal contests the withholding of documents pertaining to the settlement reached in the Mitchell v. Mactec litigation. The newspaper has also submitted releases signed by Hodges and two other individuals authorizing OIG to release the Hodges correspondence and Yucca Mountain to release information pertaining to the others that it withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. The Review-Journal further contends that the search for documents pertaining to any settlement between SAIC and Mactec was inadequate, and that the Yucca Mountain authorizing official who issued the determination in Case No. TFA-0007 should have recused himself because many of the documents requested involve him.

II. Analysis

A. Applicability of Exemptions 4 and 5

In its determination, Yucca Mountain withheld in their entirety legal bills in the Mitchell v. Mactec litigation that were submitted to the DOE for reimbursement and the settlement agreement in that litigation under Exemption 4. That Exemption shields from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information which is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n. v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Yucca Mountain found that the withheld documents are commercial in nature and consist of privileged attorney-client communications and attorney work product.

[1] In a Glomar response, the responding office neither confirms nor denies the existence of the documents sought, on the grounds that the mere acknowledgment of the existence of the documents could itself reveal information that the FOIA permits an agency to protect. The term "Glomar" refers to the first instance in which a federal court upheld the adequacy of such a response. See Phillippi v. CIA, 546 F.2d 1009 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (responding to a request for documents pertaining to a submarine retrieval ship named the Hughes Glomar Explorer by neither confirming nor denying the existence of such documents).

Yucca Mountain also withheld Attachment 3 of the SCWE Final Report in its entirety, and portions of the main body of that Report and of Attachment 2, along with the portions of its contract with Morgan, Lewis & Bockius that would reveal the hourly rates paid to the firm for producing the Report. Yucca Mountain concluded that this information consists of privileged attorney-client communications and attorney work product "that is not 'routinely' or 'normally' available to parties in litigation and, therefore, is exempt in its entirety under Exemption 5." Determination letter at 5.

Exemption 5 allows agencies to withhold "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). This Exemption is generally recognized as encompassing the attorney-client, attorney work product and governmental deliberative process privileges. See, e.g., Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). As previously stated, Yucca Mountain relied upon the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges encompassed by both Exemptions 4 and 5.

The attorney-client privilege exists to protect confidential communications between attorneys and their clients made for the purpose of securing or providing legal advice. In Re Grand Jury Proceedings 88-9 (MIA), 899 F.2d 1039 (11th Cir. 1990). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those disclosures necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Accordingly, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client.

The attorney work product privilege protects from disclosure documents which reveal the "mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3). This privilege is applicable to documents that were prepared by an attorney "in contemplation of litigation." Coastal States at 864.

It is well settled that attorney fee information is generally not privileged. See, e.g., Clark v. American Commerce National Bank, 974 F.2d 1039 (9th Cir. 1992) (Clark); United States v. Leventhal, 961 F.2d 936, 940 (11th Cir. 1992); Indian Law Resource Center, 477 F. Supp. 144, 147 (D.D.C. 1979). However, in those cases where a party has been able to show that the attorney billing statements at issue reveal litigation strategy, substantive communications or the specific nature of the services provided by the attorneys, such as research into particular areas of the law, courts have found them to be privileged. Clark, 974 F.2d at 129. Accordingly, we have held that information in expense records pertaining to the total amount charged by a law firm in a particular litigation, the attorneys' identities, their hourly rates, and the costs of travel, reporting services and document reproduction are generally not exempt from disclosure pursuant to the attorney-client or attorney work product privileges. See, e.g., William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,161 (1997); C.D. Varnadore, 24 DOE ¶ 80,123 (1994). Information that could reveal the litigation strategy, thoughts or impressions of the attorneys, however, such as dates and descriptions of the specific services provided and the monthly and daily totals of hours billed by each attorney, is protected from mandatory disclosure under these privileges. Id.

Applying these principles to the present case, we find that some of the withheld material is not subject to the attorney-client or attorney work product privileges. This non-exempt material includes information pertaining to the legal expenses charged in the Mitchell v. Mactec litigation, and pertaining to the attorneys' identities and hourly rates in documents concerning the contracting of the Morgan Lewis Bockius law firm to conduct the SCWE investigation. Based on the record before us, we cannot conclude that release of this information would reveal litigation strategy or the mental impressions, conclusions, or legal theories of the attorneys involved.

However, we find that Yucca Mountain correctly concluded that the settlement agreement in Mitchell v. Mactec and information reflecting the settlement amount or other terms of the agreement are attorney work product, and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure. The federal courts have held that information prepared by attorneys "in contemplation of litigation," Coastal States at 864, includes documents relating to possible settlements of litigation. See, e.g., United States v. Metropolitan St. Louis Sewer District, 952 F.2d 1040, 1045 (8th Cir. 1992). The courts have also recognized a separate civil discovery privilege for information relating to settlement negotiations. See, e.g., Olin Corp. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 603 F. Supp. 445, 449 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). The OHA has also determined that settlement documents are privileged and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure. Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,192 (1997) (IFOE); Peter T. Torell, 15 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1987). In reaching these determinations, we have concluded that the privilege exists, in large part, to encourage full disclosure between the parties involved in order to promote settlements rather than continued litigation. IFOE. We therefore conclude that Yucca Mountain properly withheld information relating to the settlement in Mitchell v. Mactec. Consequently, we will remand this matter to Yucca Mountain. On remand, Yucca Mountain should either release information pertaining to the legal expenses charged in the Mitchell v. Mactec litigation, and pertaining to the attorneys' identities and hourly rates in documents concerning the contracting of the Morgan Lewis Bockius law firm to conduct the SCWE investigation, or adequately justify withholding the information under another provision of the FOIA.

B. Exemption 6

In its determination, Yucca Mountain also withheld information pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Specifically, Yucca Mountain withheld portions of: (i) Attachment 2 of the SCWE Final Report; (ii) a May 18th, 2001 letter and attachments from James Mattimoe to Lake Barrett; (iii) three memoranda from "L.H. Barrett," dated January 10, March 22, and April 30, 2002; (iv) a fourth memorandum, undated, from "L.H. Barrett" to N.A. Voltura; (v) a memorandum from A. K. Walter to "Director OCRWM" dated November 17, 1999; and (vi) an enclosure dated March 3, 2000, to a letter from R.L. Toft to I. Itkin dated March 14, 2002.

Exemption 6 shields from mandatory disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982) (Washington Post). Furthermore, the term

"similar files" has been interpreted broadly by the Supreme Court to include all information that "applies to a particular individual." Washington Post, 456 U.S. at 602. Accordingly, Yucca Mountain withheld portions of the documents described above because it concluded that release of the information "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy interests." Determination letter at 4. Similarly, OIG neither confirmed nor denied the existence of the Kristi Hodges correspondence because "[l]acking an individual's consent . . ., even to acknowledge the existence of such records pertaining to an individual could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." OIG determination letter at 1.

As previously mentioned, The Review-Journal's Appeal in Case No. TFA-0007 included releases signed by James Mattimoe, the former Quality Assurance Manager for a DOE contractor, and Robert Clark, DOE's Quality Assurance manager for the Yucca Mountain Project. Each release authorizes Yucca Mountain to "disclose all quality assurance documents pertaining to [the subject's] correspondences . . . from 1999 to 2002 whether or not protected by the Privacy Act, the Freedom of Information Act, or any Department of Energy regulations or instructions," to the newspaper. Mattimoe and Clark releases at 1. Similarly, The Review-Journal has submitted, in conjunction with its Appeal in Case No. TFA-0014, a release signed by Kristi Hodges, which authorizes OIG "to disclose all six correspondences that were sent to that Office by [Hodges] between October 2001 and January 2002, whether or not protected by the Privacy Act, Freedom of Information Act, or any Department of Energy regulations or instructions," to the newspaper. Hodges release at 1.

Although these releases appear to adequately address Yucca Mountain's and OIG's privacy concerns, we will remand these matters to those Offices so that they may consider the releases for the first time. On remand, Yucca Mountain and OIG should review the releases and determine what effect those documents have on those Office's initial determinations. [2]

C. Adequacy of the Search

The Review-Journal further alleges that a document obtained from "other sources" indicates "that there were several corrective action reports that Yucca Mountain should have provided in response to the original request for 'all records, notes, letters, invoices and memorandums . . . pertaining to a settlement between the Department of Energy's Yucca Mountain project coordinator, SAIC, and subcontractor Mactec, Inc. of Golden, Colorado.'" Review-Journal Appeal at 1. According to the newspaper, these reports are LVMO-98-C-002, -005, -006, -010 and -101.

[2] In view of our decision to remand this matter to OIG, we need not determine whether their issuance of a Glomar determination was appropriate in this case. However, we note that not all correspondence to that Office raises the types of privacy interests that such a determination is designed to protect.

Yucca Mountain has informed us that it did not consider these documents to be responsive to The Review-Journal's request, and therefore did not process them under the FOIA. However, Yucca Mountain has agreed that, on remand, it will review these documents for possible release to the newspaper. See memorandum of February 7, 2003 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Diane Quenell, Yucca Mountain. We therefore need not address The Review-Journal's contention that the documents should have been provided in response to the newspaper's original request. The newspaper may request our review of the Yucca Mountain action in the event any portion of those documents are withheld.

D. Recusal of the Authorizing Official

The Review-Journal's final contention is that the authorizing official who issued the determination letter in Case No. TFA-0007 should have recused himself because many of the documents sought by the newspaper involve that official. However, the Review-Journal does not cite any part of the FOIA or of the DOE regulations, or any decision of a federal court or of this Office, requiring such a result. As a practical matter, a recusal requirement of the DOE would often prove unworkable, since documents requested under the FOIA often involve, in one way or another, most if not all of the employees of the office from which the documents are sought. We therefore reject The Review-Journal's contention that the authorizing official should have recused himself.

E. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we will remand Case Nos. TFA-0007 and TFA-0014 to Yucca Mountain and OIG, respectively. On remand, Yucca Mountain shall review the material that it withheld under Exemptions 4 and 5 (with the exception of the settlement agreement in Mitchell v. Mactec) under the guidelines set forth in section II.A of this Decision. Furthermore, Yucca Mountain should review corrective action reports LVMO-98-C-002, -005, -006, -010 and -101 for possible release to The Review-Journal under the FOIA. Finally, Yucca Mountain and OIG should review the releases submitted by the newspaper, make findings as to the effects of those releases on their original determinations, and issue revised determinations to The Review-Journal. Each new determination by Yucca Mountain and OIG is subject to being reviewed on appeal to this Office.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed by The Las Vegas Review-Journal on December 4, 2002 (TFA-0007) and December 30, 2002 (TFA-0014) are hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) These cases are hereby remanded to the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management and the Office of Inspector General, respectively, for further proceedings consistent with the guidelines set forth in the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates

Case Number: TFA-0008

On December 17, 2002, Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office (OR). In that determination, OR responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OR released several responsive documents in their entirety. However, OR withheld one responsive document under FOIA Exemption 3. This Appeal, if granted, would require OR to release that document to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On April 27, 2002, the Appellant filed a request for information with OR seeking a number of documents. Determination Letter at 1. On November 22, 2002, OR issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing a number of responsive documents to the Appellant and withholding one document, "the proposal submitted by UT-Battelle, LLC, . . . that resulted in UT-Battelle, LLC, receiving the contract for [managing and operating the Oak Ridge National Laboratory]" (the Proposal) in its entirety under FOIA Exemption 3. Determination Letter at 1. On December 17, 2002, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal challenging OR's withholding determination.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

Only Exemption 3 is at issue in the present case. Exemption 3 of the FOIA allows agencies to withhold information that is "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute [other than the FOIA itself] provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). As articulated by the Supreme Court in CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 167 (1985), application of Exemption 3 is a two-step process. First, an agency must determine whether the statutory provision in question satisfies the foregoing requirements of Exemption 3, and if so, the agency must next determine whether the subject information falls within the purview of that statutory provision. Id. See also Kelly, Anderson & Associates, Inc., Case No. VFA-0638, 28 DOE ¶ 80,137 (2001).

In its determination, OR relied upon the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997. Public Law 104-201, Section 821. Section 821 prohibits the release of a proposal submitted in response to a competitive solicitation. Id. However, this requirement "does not apply to any proposal that is set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract entered into between the [DOE] and the contractor that submitted the proposal." 10 U.S.C.A. § 2305. The Appellant correctly notes that the Proposal was in fact incorporated by reference into the contract between DOE and UT-Battelle. Contract No. DE-AC05-00OR22725 at Section H-15, Page 11 of 27 and Section I-71, Page 91 of 236. Accordingly, we find that the Proposal is not exempted from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997.

Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to OR. On remand, OR must promptly issue a new determination letter. The new determination letter must either release the Proposal to the Appellant or provide a thorough explanation of any other justification for withholding the Proposal (or portions thereof).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0008, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Oak Ridge Operations Office for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Thomas G. Boyes

Date of Filing: December 20, 2002

Case Number: TFA-0010

Thomas G. Boyes filed this Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Golden Field Office (GFO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination responded to a request for information Boyes filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Boyes challenges GFO's decision to withhold portions of documents responsive to his request.

BACKGROUND

Boyes submitted a request for "a copy of the grant awarded to the General Electric Company ... [and] all relevant materials related to this contract in its entirety." GFO responded by releasing some responsive documents and withholding others. Among the withheld documents were:

- a 30-page technical application, Volume I, entitled "The Design and Development of a 100 MVA HTS Generator for Commercial Entry," dated May 15, 2001;

- a 22-page business application, Volume II of the same title and date; and

- a five-page DOE analysis of General Electric Company's cost and rate structure under this cooperative agreement. 1/

GFO withheld the requested document pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). 2/

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request, except to the extent that such records (or portions of them) are protected from public disclosure by one of nine exemptions. 3/ 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3); 10 C.F.R. § 1004. These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970). Thus, "an agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987).

As noted above, GFO withheld material under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). GFO withheld some portions of the requested documents under the trade secrets prong of the Exemption, and the remaining portions

1/ GFO did release the title pages of the technical application and business application.

2/ GFO also withheld a one-page draft letter from DOE to the General Electric Company pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Exemption 5 includes within its scope intra-agency documents that contain predecisonal information. Boyes' Appeal does not challenge the withholding of the draft letter, so we will not consider in this Decision whether it is protected by Exemption 5.

3/ The FOIA also provides for three special law enforcement record exclusions, which are not relevant to this case.

under the confidential commercial or financial information prong. We will therefore consider GFO's determination under both prongs.

Trade Secrets

In the Determination Letter, GFO stated that portions of the requested material, apparently including the document entitled "The Design and Development of a 100 MVA HTS Generator for Commercial Entry," contained trade secrets. If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). Therefore, in order to ascertain whether this portion of the requested materials qualifies for protection under Exemption 4, we need only determine whether this portion contains one or more trade secrets.

In Public Citizen, the court defined a trade secret for Exemption 4 purposes as a "secret, commercially valuable plan, formula, process or device." Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1288. Clearly, a trade secret must be held in secrecy, i.e. kept from general knowledge. In his Appeal, however, Boyes contends that General Electric holds a patent for a device resembling the one described in the withheld documents. 4/ Boyes states that "the underlying patent contains a design for a ... superconducting generator ... which, based on what documents I have received and press releases I have read bears a very strong similarity to that of the funded prototype" in the withheld documents.

A patented device is not a secret, since any member of the public can obtain a copy of a patent, including technical details, from the Patent and Trademark Office. If, as Boyes claims, the withheld material is revealed in General Electric's patent documents, it cannot qualify for protection under the trade secret prong. We will therefore remand this matter to GFO for a determination on whether some or all of the material withheld under the trade secret prong qualifies for protection in light of the additional information submitted by Boyes. If any of the withheld material is contained in General Electric's patents, the material may not be deemed a trade secret and may not be withheld under the trade secret prong of Exemption 4.

Confidential Commercial and Financial Information

In addition to invoking the trade secret prong of Exemption 4, GFO also withheld some material under the confidential commercial and financial information prong. GFO states in the determination letter that the requested documents "contain protected commercial and financial information, including fringe benefit rates; indirect cost rates; labor, subcontract and material costs; proprietary technical information; and the bank account number used by the General Electric company for deposit of funds.... Information that could cause competitive harm, if released, includes data which reveal a company's labor costs ... and cost and equipment information.... The competitive harm rationale of the release of this type of data is directly applicable to the above-redacted data."

When an agency decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This requirement allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that disclosure of commercial or financial information is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291;

Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA"). In the present case, GFO's conclusory statements do not meet the requirements set forth above. In order to meet the requirements, GFO must provide an explanation of the reasoning underlying its conclusion that release of this information could reasonably be expected to cause General Electric substantial competitive harm.

CONCLUSION

We will remand this Appeal to GFO for a more thorough examination and justification of its withholdings under both prongs of Exemption 4. On remand, GFO must either release the information it has withheld or issue a new determination letter providing a detailed justification showing that it has applied the Exemption 4 analysis set forth above and the results of this analysis.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Thomas G. Boyes, Case No. TFA-0010, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Golden Field Office, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Dr. Friedwardt Winterberg
Date of Filing:	December 23, 2002
Case Number:	TFA-0011

On December 23, 2002, Dr. Friedwardt Winterberg ("Winterberg" or "Dr. Winterberg") filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 18, 2002, by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) in response to a request for documents that Winterberg submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ perform an additional search.

I. Background

Dr. Winterberg is a professor of physics at the University of Nevada in Reno, Nevada. According to Dr. Winterberg, he earned his Ph.D. in Germany in 1955, and later moved to the United States at the invitation of the United States government, where he pursued a career in academia. Letter from Winterberg to Director, OHA (December 23, 2002) (Appeal). He responded to a solicitation from the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) for pre-applications in the Office of Defense Programs' Stewardship Science Academic Alliances Program. NNSA evaluated each pre-application by determining its degree of responsiveness to the technical scope defined in the solicitation–this evaluation was not, however, a review of the merits of the application. Letter from Director, Office of Defense Science, NNSA to Winterberg (February 20, 2002). The Executive Committee responsible for the evaluation process considered Winterberg's pre-application and found that it did not fall within the technical scope of the solicitation. Consequently, the committee did not encourage Winterberg to submit a full application. The committee did, however, explain that its decision was not a determination on the merits of the final application and that Dr. Winterberg was free to submit a full application if he so desired. Id.

Winterberg then sent a FOIA request to DOE asking for " [a] copy of a report . . . made by a committee of three individuals from Livermore, Los Alamos, and Sandia. . . . I tried to get a copy of that report through Senator Ensign . . . so far without success." 1/ Letter from Winterberg to DOE/HQ (August 19, 2002) (Request). NNSA's Office of Defense Science searched unsuccessfully for responsive documents. Letter from DOE/HQ to Winterberg (November 18, 2002) (Determination). In his Appeal, Dr. Winterberg argued that it was possible that the committee members rejected his application because he was a German scientist who came to this country after World War II. Appeal at 2. According to Winterberg, in 1985, Elie Wiesel, then Chairman of the President's Commission on the Holocaust, made a public statement that it was immoral for the federal government to hire Nazi scientists. Exhibit 1 to Appeal. Therefore, Winterberg argues, because Wiesel made the statement while he was an official of the United States government, Wiesel's statement became a government policy binding on the DOE. Id. In his Appeal, Winterberg asks OHA to direct NNSA to release the report and names of the committee members to him so that he can determine if they acted on Wiesel's "order." 2/ Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

This office has analyzed the search conducted by NNSA, and we find that the search was adequate. We contacted DOE/HQ regarding the search, and they responded with an explanation, written by NNSA, of the pre-application process. Memorandum from Director, Office of Defense Science, NNSA, to DOE/HQ (September 18, 2002). The solicitation employed a two-part evaluation process for the selection of applications: (1) a pre-application evaluation stage and (2) a full application evaluation stage. During the pre-application evaluation stage, the Executive Committee did not complete reports on any evaluations. Instead, a copy of each pre-application was provided to a member of the committee. Each reviewer was tasked to review the technical scope of the pre-application and place it into one of three categories: "Yes"

1/ The Executive Committee was composed of employees of the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, the Los Alamos National Laboratory, and the Sandia National Laboratory.

2/ Winterberg did not request the names of each committee member in his FOIA request. We do not generally allow a requester to expand the scope of his or her request on appeal. See Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,196 (1997); National Security Archive, 24 DOE ¶ 80,162 (1995). Dr. Winterberg may, however, request the names through a new FOIA request.

(responsive to the technical scope), "No" (not responsive), or "Uncertain." The reviewers did not use a formal response document, but instead advised their laboratory representatives of their decisions by any method convenient to them at the time (e.g., telephone, face-to-face conversation). Electronic Mail Message from Dr. James Van Fleet, NNSA to Brenda Washington, DOE/HQ (January 28, 2003). The laboratory representatives then reported to NNSA by electronic mail or telephone conversation. NNSA did not monitor this phase, but only recorded the categorization of each application. Id. Based on the results of this preliminary review, each applicant was sent a letter discouraging or encouraging them to submit a full application. Despite the results of the review, however, no applicant was prevented from submitting a full application. Dr. Winterberg's pre-application received two Nos and one Uncertain, and NNSA sent him a letter of discouragement. The letter of discouragement did contain a statement that the decision at this stage related to the pre-application only, and did not guarantee acceptance or rejection of a final application. Letter from NNSA to Winterberg (February 20, 2002). The letter also advised the applicant how to submit a full application.

We find NNSA's argument (that the committee did not complete written evaluation reports at the pre-application stage) to be reasonable. As described above, the pre-application evaluation phase was intended to be a fast, preliminary review and screening of the pre-applications. It was designed to provide pre-applicants some idea of how their pre-application matched the defined technical scope of the project, and was not intended to be a detailed review of the entire application. Given the informal nature of the process, we find it reasonable that no documents were created. Thus, we find that NNSA has conducted an adequate search for responsive material. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Dr. Friedwardt Winterberg on December 23, 2002, OHA Case Number TFA-0011, is hereby denied.

District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Benjamin D. Grove

Case Number: TFA-0012

On December 24, 2002, Benjamin D. Grove (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on November 26, 2002, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Repository Development (ORD). In that determination, ORD responded to a Request for Information filed on October 30, 2002, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORD's determination withheld a responsive document requested by the Appellant. This Appeal, if granted, would require ORD to release additional information to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On October 30, 2002 the Appellant filed a request for information with ORD seeking a 112 page document entitled "Identification of Aircraft Hazards" (the Report). Determination Letter at 1. On November 26, 2002, ORD issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) withholding the Report in its entirety under FOIA Exemption 2. Determination Letter at 1. On December 24, 2002, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal in which he challenges ORD's withholding determination.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Applicability of Exemption 2

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

Only Exemption 2 is at issue in the present case. Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency."

5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that: (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

The Report is clearly predominantly internal in nature. The D.C. Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not] . . . set standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. United States Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam). The Report at issue here is an analysis of the potential hazards posed by aircraft to a proposed nuclear waste repository at DOE's Yucca Mountain Site. The Report itself states that its intended use "is to provide inputs for further screening and analysis of the identified aircraft hazards." Identification of Aircraft Hazards at 1. Thus the Report addresses safety hazards which might affect DOE siting decisions. At this stage, this is an internal matter.

The Report meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. The Appellant correctly notes that ORD has not cited a specific statute or regulation that would be circumvented if the Identification of Aircraft Hazards report were to be disclosed. Appeal at 1. However, it is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. Environmental Protection Agency, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general legal requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d at 530-31.

The Report is a preliminary roadmap for assessment of the potential threats posed by aircraft to a proposed high level nuclear waste facility. Disclosure of the report has the potential to educate terrorists (and other individuals or entities seeking to harm the national security) about the proposed repository's vulnerabilities. Therefore, releasing the report could allow terrorists to circumvent DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide a secure and safe repository for high level nuclear waste. Accordingly, we find that any information contained in the report that would educate individuals or other entities with interests adverse to the common defense and national security may be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

B. Duty to Segregate

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Accordingly, ORD should have also reviewed the withheld material under the standard set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). However, there is no indication in the record that ORD has done so. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to ORD. On remand, ORD must review the Identification of Aircraft Hazards report in order to determine whether any portions of it could be released without harming the interests protected by Exemption 2 (or any other applicable FOIA exemption). It must then issue a new determination letter describing this review and explaining its results.

C. Questions Directed to DOE

The Appeal contains ten questions which the Appellant would like the DOE to answer. This portion of the Appeal shall be denied. It is well settled that the FOIA does not require an agency to respond to questions posed as FOIA requests. See, e.g., Zemansky v. EPA, 767 F.2d 569, 574 (9th Cir. 1985); DiViaio v. Kelly, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978); Matthew Cherney, M.D., 27 DOE ¶ 80,239 (1999). Moreover, these ten questions were not part of the Appellant's request for information. It is well settled that an appellant may not use the appeal process to expand the scope of a FOIA request. F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1996); Energy Research Foundation, 22 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1992); Cox Newspapers, 22 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1992); Bernard Hanft, 21 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1991); John M. Seehaus, 21 DOE ¶ 80,135 (1991).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Benjamin D. Grove, Case No. TFA-0012, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Office of Repository Development to conduct a segregablity review in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Alliance for Nuclear Accountability

Case Number: TFA-0013

On December 30, 2002, the Government Accountability Project on behalf of the Alliance for Nuclear Accountability (Alliance) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on November 21, 2002, by the FOIA and Privacy Act Division (FOIA Division) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination concerned a request for information that Alliance submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, DOE would be ordered to release the information withheld and to search for additional responsive documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public, whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

Alliance filed a FOIA request seeking "all documents produced as part of the 'top-to-bottom assessment of the Environmental Management program' initiated by Secretary Spencer Abraham as detailed in a memorandum dated May 14, 2001." See Appeal Letter at 1. On April 30, 2002, the FOIA Division issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search for responsive documents in the files of the Office of Environmental Management (EM) and identified various responsive documents, which were provided in an enclosed listing to Alliance. The FOIA Division provided Alliance with these responsive documents in their entirety. In addition, in its April 30, 2002 determination, the FOIA Division stated that it had located eight additional responsive documents, but that these documents were being reviewed by DOE to determine their releasability. The FOIA Division further stated that it would provide a response to Alliance when this review was completed.

On November 21, 2002, the FOIA Division issued a second determination, which stated that it had completed a review of the eight additional responsive documents and determined that they contain information that is protected from disclosure under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. The FOIA Division provided these documents to Alliance with deletions. It stated that the withheld material is "pre-decisional" and "deliberative." See November 21, 2002 Determination Letter at 1.

On December 30, 2002, Alliance filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In its Appeal, Alliance challenges the FOIA Division's determination, and asserts that material was improperly withheld under Exemption 5 and that DOE failed to perform an adequate search. See Appeal Letter at 3-5. For these reasons, Alliance requests that OHA direct the FOIA Division to release the requested information.

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). In withholding portions of documents from Alliance, the FOIA Division relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)) (Mink). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

After reviewing the requested documents at issue, we have concluded that the determination made by the FOIA Division in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from Alliance consists of comments, recommendations and opinions prepared by DOE employees and intended only for internal DOE use. The information requested in this case properly falls within the definition of "intra-agency memoranda" in the FOIA.

In addition, the comments, recommendations and opinions contained in the documents are clearly predecisional and deliberative. They were created by a subordinate of the Assistant Secretary of Environmental Management for consideration and do not represent a final agency position. Accordingly, we hold that the comments, recommendations and opinions withheld from the memorandum meet all the requirements for withholding material under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege. */

Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the withheld material in the documents at issue, which consist solely of advisory opinions and recommendations provided to DOE in the consultative process. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987).

Adequacy of Search

When an agency conducts a search under the FOIA, it must undertake a search that is "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Weisberg v. United States Dep't of Justice, 705 F.2d 1344, 1351 (D.C. Circ. 1983). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler,

*/ Alliance also asserts that the FOIA Division failed to include an adequate Vaughn index in its Determination Letter. See Appeal at 2. A Vaughn index is recognized in the context of FOIA as an index identifying each responsive document, the exemption under which it is being withheld and an explanation why that exemption is applicable, or in the alternative a similar document describing each withholding. See Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820 (D.C. Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 977 (1974). On previous occasions, we have stated that, although such an index may be required when an agency is in litigation with a FOIA requester, this degree of specificity is not required at the administrative stages of a FOIA request. See, e.g., Missouri River Energy Services, 27 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1998). At the administrative levels, agency determinations to deny release of documents need only provide a general description of the withheld material and a statement of the reason for withholding each document. The FOIA Division's Determination Letter provides a general description for withholding portions of documents pursuant to Exemption 5. It permits the appellant to formulate the basis for its appeal, and permits the appellate authority to understand the FOIA Division's assertion of the exemption. Therefore, we reject Alliance's request for a complete Vaughn Index.

In the present case, Alliance asserts that "one document produced by DOE indicates that Idaho National Environmental and Engineering Laboratory (INEEL) staff contributed significantly to the Top-to-Bottom Review (TTBR) process, yet no additional documents were produced that pertain to the INEEL." Appeal at 5. Alliance further argues that "given the reference to INEEL in responsive documents, the fact that the INEEL is a major nuclear weapons and environment management site, and coupled with the fact the DOE also failed to produce any documents pertaining to the Paducah site - GAP and ANA assert that DOE has failed to perform an adequate search." Id. In response to Alliance's Appeal, we contacted the FOIA Division to determine the scope of the search. The FOIA Division referred us to an official in EM because EM conducted the initial search and is the office most likely to contain responsive material. See Record of Telephone Conversation Between Bill Levitan, EM and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (March 7, 2003). That official informed us that it conducted a search of EM's files and provided all the responsive documents that were located. EM informed us that the documents provided to Alliance were almost all briefing packages, including a briefing package produced by INEEL. It further asserts that INEEL staff were not part of the TTBR team, but mainly gave tours of the site. EM maintains that it located no additional responsive documents that pertain to INEEL. In addition, EM states that there were no documents located from Paducah because the TTBR team did not visit that site as part of their review.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that the FOIA Division and EM conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Alliance's request. Accordingly, Alliance's Appeal should be denied.

(1) The Appeal filed by Alliance for Nuclear Accountability, OHA Case No. TFA-0013, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Ms. Doris M. Harthun
Date of Filing:	January 7, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0015

On January 7, 2003, Doris M. Harthun (Harthun) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her in response to a request for documents concerning her husband, Earl W. Thurk, that Harthun submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on December 13, 2002, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland). This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search.

I. Background

Ms. Harthun requested information regarding the employment, medical and radiation exposure records for her deceased husband, Earl W. Thurk. In her request, Ms. Harthun indicated that her husband worked for E.I. duPont de Nemours Company in the 1940's. Richland conducted a search by name and Social Security number for responsive material, but was unable to locate any employment or medical records for Earl W. Thurk. As a result, Richland denied the request, and Ms. Harthun filed this Appeal.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted Richland to ascertain the scope of the search. When Richland received Ms. Harthun's request, it faxed the request, along with Mr. Thurk's death certificate, to the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation (HEHF), which maintains all occupational health records for the Hanford Site, including pre-employment physicals, exit exams, and first aid treatments. HEHF searched but found no responsive material. Richland informed Ms. Harthun that employment, medical and radiation exposure records of individuals whose employment terminated during the Hanford-DuPont contracting period (1943-1946) or who left Hanford and continued their employment with DuPont at the end of the contracting period were archived with DuPont and have subsequently been destroyed. See Determination Letter. Richland referred Ms. Harthun to the organization that maintains DuPont's historical records to obtain more detailed information. In addition, Richland indicated that it conducted a search of its own radiation exposure records by name and Social Security number, but located no responsive material. Based on the information above, we find that Richland has conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover any records relating to Earl W. Thurk. Accordingly, this Appeal should de denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Doris M. Harthun on January 7, 2003, OHA Case No. TFA-0015, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Citizen Action
Date of Filing:	January 15, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0016

On January 15, 2003, Citizen Action filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Albuquerque Operations Office (AO) on December 5, 2002. In that determination, AO denied a request for a waiver of fees in connection with a FOIA request filed by Citizen Action under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Instead, AO determined that Citizen Action qualified for a reduction in fees. In its Appeal, Citizen Action asks that we modify AO's determination and waive in full the fees associated with its request.

I. Background

In a submission dated August 29, 2002, Citizen Action filed a Request for Information under the Freedom of Information Act requesting from AO "documents with information regarding oxide nuclear reactor fuels shipped to Sandia National Laboratories." Letter from Carolyn Becknell, Freedom of Information Officer, AO, to Sue Dayton, Citizen Action (December 5, 2002) (Determination Letter) at 1. The organization believes that these documents would shed light on the nature of the known inventory of the Mixed Waste Landfill (MWL) located near Albuquerque, New Mexico, which was established in 1959 as a disposal area for radioactive and mixed wastes generated at research facilities of the DOE's Sandia National Laboratories. Letter from Sue Dayton, Citizen Action, to Steve Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (February 25, 2003).

In its FOIA Request, Citizen Action also requested a fee waiver for the costs associated with processing its FOIA Request. In its December 5, 2002 determination letter, AO did not grant a fee waiver, but rather determined that Citizen Action "qualifies for a reduction of fees." Determination Letter at 2.

In its Appeal, Citizen Action states, "Previous requests for fee waivers regarding numerous FOIA requests filed by Citizen Action in 2001 have been granted by DOE. This is the first time we have been denied a fee waiver." Appeal at 1. The appellant contends that the "determination of a discounted fee waiver is both capricious and arbitrary, and inconsistent with the law regarding DOE's definition for a fee waiver granted to a special interest organization." Id. at 2.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees for the processing of their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(I); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the Act provides:

> Documents shall be furnished without any charge or at a charge reduced below the fees established under clause (ii) if disclosure of the information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government and is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester.

5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii) (1988 ed.). The burden of satisfying this two prong test is on the requester. Larson v. Central Intelligence Agency, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (per curiam) (Larson). The DOE has implemented the statutory standard for fee waiver in its FOIA regulations.

> This fee waiver standard thus sets forth two basic requirements, both of which must be satisfied before fees will be waived or reduced. First, it must be established that disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the Government. Second, it must be established that disclosure of the information is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. When these requirements are satisfied, based upon information supplied by a requester or otherwise made known to the DOE, the waiver or reduction of a FOIA fee will be granted.

There is no dispute in the present case that the second requirement has been satisfied, i.e. that disclosure of the information requested would not be primarily in the commercial interest of Citizen Action. Regarding the first requirement, AO's determination letter states:

> Your organization has demonstrated and established a record of providing documents and information to the public, as well as being able to interpret and effectively convey same, concerning the department's stewardship and environmental compliance issues involving the Mixed Waste Landfill that SNL maintains. Therefore, I have determined that your organization qualifies for a reduction of fees.

Determination Letter at 2. Thus, there is no dispute that Citizen Action met the two requirements set forth above, and are thereby entitled to a "waiver or reduction of a FOIA fee . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8). The question before us is whether the circumstances of the present case warrant a full waiver or merely a reduction in fees. First, we note that there is nothing in AO's determination letter that explains why AO opted to reduce fees to Citizen Action rather than completely waive fees. We therefore contacted AO, which described the following factors it took into account in reaching its decision:

(1) the intent of Congress to recoup costs of processing FOIA requests;

(2) the total estimated cost of processing the request ($4,716.80);

(3) "the taxpayers have already substantially funded a review of this issue, by virtue of the DOE grant to this organization of $50,000 to review the waste issues at this same landfill;"

(4) "the DOE has previously provided substantial documentation to this organization free of charge;"

(5) "Citizen Action had not provided us with enough justification to show heightened public interest in the subject of the requested records. To give them the benefit of the doubt, however, we were aware of some media interest in the last year in the Mixed Waste Landfill, which we took into consideration as an indication of public interest in some aspects of this subject;"

(6) "We had no independent indication of public interest in this subject other than the limited press releases provided to the local newspaper. For example, our own Public Affairs Office as well as SNL Public Affairs had not received any telephone calls or other indications of interest from the public concerning this issue or as a result of the articles;"

(7) "Despite the fact that there is a great deal of material currently publicly available on this subject, no member of the public has ever gone to our Reading Room to request to see the substantial volume of publicly-available documents concerning the Mixed Waste Landfill;"

(8) "no additional FOIA requests have been received on the subject;"

(9) "the DOE has set up a public reading room with information concerning the landfill;"

(10) "Citizen Action had not provided enough justification to show that members of that organization had sufficient expertise in the subject matter to demonstrate that they could synthesize the data requested into something that an interested public would benefit from;"

(11) "Although we have provided free of charge a substantial number of documents to this group in the past concerning the Mixed Waste Landfill, nothing has actually > been actively presented to the public in the way of education on this subject. Citizen Action has only 'referred' to documents on their website, www.radfreenm.com, saying that whoever wants a copy of the document should go to the Reading Room."

Electronic mail from Terry Apodaca, AO, to Steve Goering, OHA (January 24, 2003); Electronic mail from Terry Apodaca, AO, to Steve Goering, OHA (January 16, 2003).

First, we reiterate that the DOE FOIA regulations set forth only two requirements that a requester must meet in order to qualify for a waiver or reduction of fees. The requester must establish that disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the Government, and that disclosure is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester.

With that in mind, we note that the first eight reasons cited by AO do not address either of the two relevant requirements, and therefore do not provide a legitimate basis for granting or denying any form of relief from fees.[1] The last three reasons (numbers 9 through 11) appear to address the likelihood that the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the Government, an issue that we address in more detail below.

Whether the Requested Information is Likely to Contribute Significantly to Public Understanding of the Operations or Activities of the Government

The regulations set forth the following four factors which must be considered by the agency in order to determine whether the first statutory fee waiver condition has been met, i.e., whether disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest[2] because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

[1] With reference to the first reason cited by AO, we agree that Congress generally intended for agencies to recoup the costs of processing FOIA requests. Nonetheless, Congress also expressly provided for the waiver or reduction of fees where the requester can meet the two requirements discussed above. Thus, citing Congress' intent merely begs the ultimate question, i.e., has the requester shown that it is entitled to an exception to the general requirement that requesters bear the costs associated with a request? Moreover, taking Congress' intent into account in no way helps us answer that question in a given case, since it provides no basis for distinguishing the merits of one fee waiver request from another.

[2] Several of the reasons cited by AO (specifically 5 through 8) refer to a lack of "public interest" in the subject matter of the request. However, this use of the term "public interest," i.e. a desire by the public to know more about a given subject, is not helpful in applying the different meaning of "public interest" in the DOE FOIA regulations, which ask whether release of the information would be "in the public interest," i.e. of benefit to the public. Compare Cambridge International Dictionary of English (Online Edition 2003) (definition of interest as "the feeling of having your attention held and your mind excited by something or of wanting to be involved with and to discover more about something") with Cambridge International Dictionary of English (Online Edition 2003) (definition of interest as "an advantage; something that will provide you with something or help you in some way"); see Freedom of Information Act Guide, http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/fees.htm#waiver (U.S. Department of Justice 2002) ("proper focus must be on the benefit to be derived by the public").

(A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government;"

(B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether the disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure; and

(D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities.

Factor A

Factor A asks us to determine whether the subject of the requested documents concerns the operations or activities of the government. A fee waiver is only appropriate where the subject matter of the requested documents specifically concerns identifiable "operations or activities of the government." See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-83 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994) (Local 36). In the present case, there appears to be no dispute that the subject of requested records, "oxide nuclear reactor fuels shipped to Sandia National Laboratories," a government-owned contractor-operated facility, concerns operations or activities of the government.

Factor B

The focus of this factor is on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997); Seehuus Associates, 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) (Seehuus). As we stated in Seehuus, "[i]f the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate." AO has informed us (as noted in the ninth of AO's reasons listed above) that "the DOE has set up a public reading room with information concerning the [mixed waste] landfill." However, AO does not indicate that documents responsive to the specific request in this case (i.e., those concerning shipment of oxide nuclear reactor fuels to SNL) have been placed in a DOE public reading room. We therefore find that Citizen Action's request satisfies Factor B.

Factor C

This test requires us to consider whether the requested documents would contribute to the understanding of the subject by the public. Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780. To satisfy this factor, the requester must have the ability and intention to disseminate this information to the public. Id.; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992).

In the present case, as set forth in the last two of AO's reasons listed above, AO appears to question both the ability and intention of Citizen Action to disseminate to the public the information it obtains. "Citizen Action had not provided enough justification to show that members of that organization had sufficient expertise in the subject matter to demonstrate that they could synthesize the data requested into something that an interested public would benefit from; . . ." Electronic mail from Terry Apodaca, AO, to Steve Goering, OHA (January 24, 2003). "Although we have provided free of charge a substantial number of documents to this group in the past concerning the Mixed Waste Landfill, nothing has actually been actively presented to the public in the way of education on this subject. Citizen Action has only 'referred' to documents on their website, www.radfreenm.com, saying that whoever wants a copy of the document should go to the Reading Room." Id.

Regarding whether members of Citizen Action has sufficient expertise to synthesize information it receives, the director of the organization states, "Citizen Action has worked hard to convey technical information to the public regarding documents obtained under the FOIA. Our members are respected members of the community and include physicians, university professors, attorneys, [Albuquerque Public School] teachers, health care workers, and many others who support our activities." Letter from Sue Dayton, Citizen Action, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 25, 2003) at 1. Citizen Action also submitted to our office several letters in support of its fee waiver request. One of them states,

> I am one of the Technical Advisors to Citizen Action. I review and synthesize the data Citizen Action obtains. I have a PhD in high energy theoretical physics from the University of Michigan and have worked on radioactive waste issues since 1974. I probably have more experience on these issues than almost anyone presently working at Sandia.

Letter from Marvin Resnikoff, Radioactive Waste Management Associates, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 24, 2003) at 1. Another letter notes, "Citizen Action has among its active members several MDs (including a radiologist) as well as a professor of nuclear and chemical engineering. It has also demonstrated a willingness to hire outside experts to analyze data when needed." Letter from Steve Pilon, MD, to Steven Goering, OHA (February 24, 2003). To the extent AO has argued that Citizen Action lacks ability or expertise in the relevant subject matter, we reject that contention. We find the information submitted by Citizen Action and on its behalf sufficient to demonstrate that the organization has the expertise required to synthesize the information it receives in response to its FOIA request.

As far as the organization's intention to disseminate information to the public, Citizen Action disputes AO's contention that the group has only 'referred' to documents on its website. It directs our attention to a page on the site entitled "Freedom of Information Act Documents." This page (http://www.radfreenm.org/pages/whatwhen.htm) does not merely refer to documents obtained from DOE, but marshals numerous quotations from those documents in support of its contention that there is a great deal of uncertainty regarding the inventory of the Mixed Waste Landfill. Certainly, Citizen Action does not have to demonstrate an ability or intention to disseminate raw documents in their entirety to the public in order to qualify for a fee waiver. Indeed, if the organization did only that, without distilling the information contained in the documents, we would question the group's ability to synthesize the information in a way that increases public understanding.

Moreover, in its submissions to our office, Citizen Action has demonstrated that it works to educate the public in many forums. According to its Director, the group's web site, which contains extensive information on the Mixed Waste Landfill, receives from 3,000 to 7,000 hits per month. Letter from Sue Dayton, Citizen Action, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 25, 2003) at 5. In addition, > [l]ocal groups that have contacted Citizen Action requesting a presentation on the Mixed Waste Landfill include: Albuquerque Humanist Society; Forest Guardians; Green Party of New Mexico; Albuquerque Chapter/Sierra Club; South Valley Coalition of Neighborhood Associations; Highland High School; South Valley Charter School; Robert F. Kennedy Charter School; Gray Panthers; Veterans for Peace; and others.

Id. at 6. The letters of support submitted on behalf of Citizen Action confirm the group's public education efforts. E.g., Letter from Arjun Makhijani, Ph.D., President, Institute for Energy and Environmental Research, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 21, 2003) at 1 ("Citizen Action has done an extraordinary job in bringing awareness to legacy waste issues such as the Mixed Waste Landfill"); Letter from Steve Pilon, MD, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 24, 2003) at 1 ("Citizen Action has held many well attended public meetings"); Letter from Professor H. Eric Nuttall, Ph.D., to Steve Goering, OHA ("Citizen Action has hosted a number of public meetings in conjunction with the state and disseminated information about this waste site to the citizens of New Mexico").

Also submitted by Citizen Action were copies of articles, from a number of local newspapers, either authored by the organization's leaders or in which one of them is quoted. Some of the articles submitted appear to be from smaller or alternative publications that may or may not reach a wide audience. But two of these newspapers, the Albuquerque Journal and Albuquerque Tribune, are the two newspapers with the largest circulation in the state of New Mexico. One demonstration of Citizen Action's ability to get its message in the major media comes in the form of an Albuquerque Journal editorial of December 29, 2002. This editorial argues in favor of granting Citizen Action a full fee waiver in the present case, and among other things states, "Whether you agree with Citizen Action or not - the Journal often has not - the group, which focuses on Sandia National Laboratories' Mixed Waste Landfill, makes a contribution to the public discourse." Free Information Should Be Cheaper, Albuquerque Journal, December 29, 2002, at B2.

Based on the above, we have no doubt that Citizen Action has the ability and intention to disseminate the information it obtains to the public, and therefore its request satisfies Factor C.

Factor D

In order to satisfy the requirements of Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 381 (1995)); see also Seehuus.

One of the letters in support of Citizen Action's appeal states, "The public's understanding would be significantly improved with the requested information. [Citizen Action] is trying to better determine what is in the Mixed Waste Landfill (MWL), so that they can make informed judgments and proffer informed opinions before State agencies regarding the management and decommissioning of the MWL." Letter from Marvin Resnikoff, Radioactive Waste Management Associates, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 24, 2003) at 1-2. We agree. Whatever may ultimately be found in the documents requested, the likely effect of the disclosure to Citizen Action would be to enhance public understanding by determining with greater certainty the inventory of the MWL. See Letter from Carleton S. White, Ph.D., to Steve Goering, OHA (undated) ("Knowing that the questioned values are NOT in the MWL will definitely increase public understanding and evaluation of the potential threat, in any, posed by the MWL."). We therefore find that Citizen Action's fee waiver request meets Factor D.

III. Conclusion

After considering the bases cited by AO for not granting Citizen Action a full fee waiver, we find that a number of them (the first eight listed above) do not provide a legitimate basis for granting or denying either a waiver or reduction in fees. Although the remaining three reasons consider the appropriate issues, we do not believe that an analysis of those issues supports only a fee reduction, particularly in light of the information submitted on appeal by Citizen Action and on its behalf. We therefore conclude that Citizen Action should be granted a full fee waiver in this case. This does not mean that fee reduction, rather than waiver, is never appropriate. For example, we have approved a 75 percent reduction in fees where the disclosure of information requested was in the commercial interest of the requester, but where such disclosure would "primarily benefit the general public." U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitter Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,622-23 (1994). However, this is not such a case.[3] Accordingly, we will grant the present appeal.

[3] AO states that "Department of Justice attorneys we dealt with in [a prior case] suggested we use this approach for cases where we could not make a clear determination and referred us to the court case of McClellan Ecological Seepage Situation v. Carlucci." Electronic mail from Terry Apodaca, AO, to Steve Goering, OHA (January 24, 2003). In that case, a federal appeals court approved a 25% reduction "on a record consisting of conclusory statements of public interest, . . . and circumstances suggesting at least a partial motive of obtaining information to advance private lawsuits." McClellan Ecological Seepage Situation v. Carlucci, 835 F.2d 1282, 1286 (9th Cir. 1987). This case is vastly different. We have much more than mere conclusory statements in

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Lola Jean Poulston-Walthall
Date of Filing:	February 25, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0017

On February 25, 2003, Lola Jean Poulston-Walthall (Walthall) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on February 3, 2003, by the Oak Ridge Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE/OR) in response to a request for documents that Walthall submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/OR perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On November 12, 2001, Walthall filed a FOIA request with DOE/OR for a copy of medical records, personnel security file, personnel records, OPM Background Investigation and radiation exposure records pertaining to her father, Estes Elmo Poulston, who died in 1968. See FOIA Request (November 21, 2001). According to Walthall, Mr. Poulston was employed at DOE/OR from 1944 to 1946 as an electrician. Letter from Walthall to Director, OHA (Appeal) (February 25, 2003). DOE/OR searched its files and located a copy of Mr. Poulston's employment card, which it sent to Walthall in a letter dated June 7, 2002. On February 3, 2003, DOE/OR informed Walthall that it could find no additional responsive information. As a result, Walthall filed this Appeal. In the Appeal, Walthall stated that during an accident that occurred while Mr. Poulston was employed at Oak Ridge, he and his co-workers had to wade into waist deep water, and shortly thereafter became ill. Appeal at 1. According to Walthall, her father spent several months in the hospital and never regained his health. Id. In her Appeal, Walthall asks OHA to direct DOE/OR to search again for additional information regarding her father.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

This office contacted DOE/OR for information regarding the search conducted in response to Walthall's request. DOE/OR informed us that the Oak Ridge facilities did not begin to retain and maintain dosimetry records (a measure of the amount of radiation absorbed by the body) and medical records on individuals until the early 1950's, well after Mr. Poulston had stopped working at Oak Ridge. Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 28, 2003). Nonetheless, using identifiers for Mr. Poulston, DOE/OR conducted a search of the Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU) Privacy Systems of Records DOE-71, DOE-72, and DOE-73 for recorded radiation accidents. 1/ DOE/OR also searched for any record of Mr. Poulston in the Radiation Registry or DTPA Registry. 2/ No responsive records were found in any of the systems of records. 3/ In addition, there were no medical records related to Mr. Poulston at any DOE/OR site. Electronic mail message from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 28, 2003).

1/ ORAU operated the Oak Ridge Institute for Nuclear Studies (ORINS) hospital for cancer treatment experiments on humans in the 1950's and possesses all medical and radiation exposure records relating to those patients. Electronic mail message from DOE/OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (March 31, 2003). ORAU is now called the Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Education, and holds the largest epidemiology records collections at the DOE for retrieving personnel, medical and radiation exposure data on current and former employees. Id.

2/ DTPA was a chelation agent used to medically treat radiation accident victims. Electronic mail message from DOE/OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 28, 2003).

3/ DOE/OR stated that if Walthall had provided information about the alleged accident in her original request, they could have expanded the search to include locations that could contain "general documents not retrievable by identifier but about the accident or similar accidents in the location [Poulston] worked in the timeframe [Poulston] worked . . . ." Electronic mail message from DOE/OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 28, 2003). We do not generally allow a requester to expand the scope of his or her request on appeal. See Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,196 (1997); National Security Archive, 24 DOE ¶ 80,162 (1995). Walthall may, however, file a new FOIA request for information about the alleged accident, and provide DOE/OR with any information she may have.

Based on our analysis of the search as explained above, we find that DOE/OR has conducted an adequate search for responsive material. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Lola Jean Poulston-Walthall on February 25, 2003, OHA Case Number TFA-0017, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	Gladys L. Swann
Date of Filing:	February 26, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0018

Gladys L. Swann (Swann) filed this Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (OR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination responded to a request for information Swann filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. §§ 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her Appeal, Swann challenges the adequacy of OR's search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Swann submitted a FOIA request to OR for the medical records, chest x-rays, radiation exposure records and personnel security file of her deceased father, John A. Rowe. Rowe formerly worked for International Nickel Company (INCO) at an Ohio site that is not under OR's jurisdiction. OR responded with a Determination Letter stating that it had conducted a search of its files and found only one record that is responsive to Swann's request. Swann appealed this determination.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires federal agencies to release material to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies must search their records for responsive documents. We have often stated that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where we believe the search conducted was inadequate. E.g., Ashok K. Kaushal, 27 DOE ¶ 80,189 (1999); Hobart T. Bolin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1998).

In a case involving the adequacy of the agency's search, "the issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we therefore examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In our review of Swann's Appeal, we contacted OR's FOIA Officer and reviewed the administrative record of Swann's request maintained by OR. The FOIA Officer provided the following description of the actions taken by OR in order to locate the information Swann requested:

> We conducted a search of the locations at Oak Ridge facilities and contractor sites where the records on INCO employees were likely to exist based on our experience in processing multiple requests for records on individuals who were employed at any Atomic Weapons Employer sites outside of Oak Ridge from the 1940's to the present. All Privacy Systems of Records were searched at the DOE Oak Ridge Records Holding Area, which contains records transferred from the Oak Ridge Associated Universities Centers for Epidemiology Research that were originally compiled for use in DOE-wide health studies on former workers and consist of records in the following systems: DOE Privacy Systems of Records DOE-5 personnel records of former contractor employees, DOE-33 Personnel Medical Records, DOE-35 Personnel Radiation Exposure Records, and DOE-43 Personnel Security Clearance Files. The Oak Ridge Office of Safeguards and Security was also searched for any personnel security file held separately in that office on Mr. Rowe.
> The only record we could locate on Mr. Rowe was a copy of his Personnel Security Clearance Assurance Index Card or "employment card" as we call it, since these cards list employment histories along with security clearance status information for the individual. Although we have these cards at Oak Ridge, we do not have additional personnel, medical or similar files on employees who did not work at facilities under Oak Ridge jurisdiction with the exception of copies of film badge reports for about 25 of the Atomic Weapons Employers that were generated by the New York Operations Office in the late 1940's through the mid 1950's and retained at Oak Ridge for a NIOSH health study. We conducted a search of those film badge files but did not find a file listing film badge readings on INCO employees. If such a file was in our possession, we would have done a page-by-page search for his name or other identifier and provided the relevant information if it existed.

March 20, 2003 E-mail from Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge Operations Office to Steven L. Fine, OHA Staff Attorney.

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the description of the search conducted by OR and the administrative record, it is clear that OR conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to find the information requested by Swann. Moreover, we have no reason to believe that a further search would locate responsive records. We will therefore deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Gladys L. Swann, Case No. TFA-0018, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Newhouse News Service

Date of Filing: March 7, 2003

On March 7, 2003, Newhouse News Service (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from two final determinations that the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on February 19, 2003, and March 2, 2003. In its determinations, BPA partially denied the Appellant's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the information it withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. BACKGROUND

In a letter dated January 2, 2003, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to BPA for documents including "copies of any BPA audits, internal or external, that examine energy trading practices, including the agency's use of options or other derivatives." Request Letter dated January 2, 2003, from Tom Detzel, The Oregonian, Newhouse News Service, to Joseph Bennett, Office of General Counsel, BPA (Request Letter). On February 19, 2003, BPA responded that it had identified as responsive to the Appellant's request two internal audit reports, two external consultant reports, and sections of recent annual reports. Determination Letter dated February 19, 2003, from Annie A. Eissler, Freedom of Information Officer, BPA, to Tom Detzel (February 19, 2003 Determination Letter). The February 19, 2003 Determination Letter released the relevant portions of the annual reports and stated that a review of the external reports was not completed. Id. The Determination Letter withheld the internal audit reports under the deliberative process privilege pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5). In the March 3, 2003 Determination Letter, BPA released redacted portions of the external reports and withheld portions under Exemption 5. March 3, 2002 [sic] Determination Letter from Annie Eissler to Tom Detzel (March 3, 2003 Determination Letter).

In its Appeal, the Appellant disputes the withholding of information under Exemption 5. First, the Appellant argues that the internal audit reports could not be predecisional because no final decision could be pending given the dates of these audits, 1998 and 2002. Appeal Letter dated February 28, 2003, from Tom Detzel to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In addition, the Appellant asserts that, even if the reports can be withheld under Exemption 5, the factual portions of the internal reports should have been segregated and released. Id. Further, the Appellant claims that the external consulting reports are factual in nature and should be released. Id.

II. ANALYSIS

Deliberative Process and Predecisional Documents

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

In addition, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

There are, however, exceptions to these general rules that factual information should be released. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications. Corp. v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

The Internal Reports

BPA has listed two documents–the internal reports--that it has withheld in their entirety because they contain information that is predecisional and part of the deliberative process. We have been provided with copies of these documents. We have reviewed these documents and believe that they were properly withheld under Exemption 5. They are almost entirely deliberative in nature. The factual information which is contained in these documents is so intertwined as to make segregation virtually impossible. Further, the factual information contained in these two documents was selected from a larger quantity of factual information so that the selection is part of the deliberative process. There reports were prepared by auditors who reviewed many facts but relied on only selected facts for their report. Also, in the two internal reports, there is only a limited amount of factual information because the authors of the reports assumed the recipient had a working knowledge of the programs audited. Further, release of the factual information would point to the policies that management was reviewing and would reveal the auditors' thought processes.

The External Reports

BPA further listed two documents where the deliberative portions were redacted and the factual information released to the Appellant. We have reviewed these two external reports as well and believe that the redaction was proper and all segregable factual information was released.

III. THE PUBLIC INTEREST

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. The Appellant argues that discretionary release would be in the public interest. Appeal Letter at 2. We disagree. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the comments and opinions contained in the reports, which consist solely of advisory opinions and recommendations provided to DOE in the consultative process. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987); Newhouse News Service, 28 DOE ¶ 80,241 (2002).

IV. CONCLUSION

The information that BPA withheld was properly found to be exempt under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege. Therefore, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Newhouse News Service on March 7, 2003, Case No. TFA-0019, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	KCBS-TV
Date of Filing:	March 14, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0021

On March 14, 2003, KCBS-TV (KCBS) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to them on February 13, 2003, by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) in response to a request for documents that KCBS submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On June 10, 2002, KCBS filed a FOIA request with DOE/HQ for a copy of all documents regarding missing, unaccounted for, and/or stolen radioactive material, special nuclear material, irradiated material and/or spent fuel. Letter from KCBS to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (March 26, 2003) (Appeal). KCBS requested a fee waiver because the material was not for commercial use, but rather for use in its mission of gathering and reporting the news. Id. DOE/HQ informed KCBS that it had forwarded its request to the Office of Security Affairs and that office had advised DOE/HQ that other DOE organizations were more reasonably expected to possess responsive material. Letter from DOE/HQ to KCBS-TV (February 13, 2003). DOE/HQ then re-assigned the request to those offices. Id. The Office of Health, Environment and Safety (DOE/EH) located responsive material, and sent that information to KCBS in its entirety and at no cost. Id. The National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) also searched its files, but found no responsive material. Id. In this Appeal, KCBS asks OHA to direct DOE/HQ to search again for additional information regarding missing radioactive material.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

This office first contacted KCBS to determine why they felt that the search conducted by NNSA was inadequate. KCBS admitted that they did not have any information indicating that other records existed. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Warren M. Gray, OHA, and Nicole Ullerich, KCBS (March 27, 2003). We then contacted DOE/HQ for information regarding the search conducted in response to KCBS' request. See Electronic Mail Message from Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA, to Joan Ogbazghi, DOE/HQ (May 30, 2003). DOE/HQ informed us that they had made inquiries to NNSA, DOE/EH, DOE's Oakland Operations Office (Oakland), DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office (DOE/AL) and the Office of Plutonium, Uranium and Special Materials Inventory (DOE/SO). Id.

DOE/HQ first assigned the request to DOE/SO. Electronic mail message from Joan Ogbazghi, DOE/HQ to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 16, 2003). DOE/SO asked that the requester provide a clear description of the subject matter of the request. Id. Upon receipt of an email from the requester, DOE/SO notified DOE/HQ that DOE/SO had no responsive records. Id. DOE/SO suggested that responsive material might be found at Stanford University, Los Alamos National Laboratory, NNSA, or DOE/EH. Id. NNSA conducted a search and on September 30, 2002, verified that no responsive records were located. Id. Oakland stated that, based on the description of the information sought, its office did not have any responsive documents and that there was no database of responsive material at Stanford or Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL). Id; Electronic mail message from Roseann Pelzner, Oakland to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (July 2, 2003). DOE/EH located responsive material and forwarded the documents to DOE/HQ on November 20, 2002. Electronic mail message from Joan Ogbazghi, DOE/HQ to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 16, 2003). DOE/HQ sent the responsive material to the requester. DOE/AL reported that there was no database of responsive material at Los Alamos, but mentioned that "Mr. Newton" at DOE/HQ may have some responsive records. Electronic mail message from Terry Apodaca, DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (July 2, 2003). John Newton of NNSA found no responsive records. Electronic mail message from Joan Ogbazghi, DOE/HQ, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 16, 2003).

Based on our analysis of the search as explained above, we find that DOE/HQ has conducted an adequate search for responsive material. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by KCBS-TV on March 14, 2003, OHA Case Number TFA-0021, is hereby denied.

Name of Petitioner:	Caroline C. Roberts
Date of Filing:	March 17, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0022

On March 17, 2003, Caroline C. Roberts (Roberts) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on February 24, 2003, by the Office of Inspector General (IG) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information she filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On January 8, 2003, Roberts wrote to the FOIA/Privacy Act Division at DOE headquarters and requested various documents including copies of IG documents related to Computer One, Inc., Caroline C. Roberts, or contracts numbered 60-8024, AB-2485, AB-2486, and BD-0962 from 1995 through 2002. The FOIA/Privacy Act Division forwarded the request to the IG. The IG conducted a search of its files and located 19 responsive documents. On February 5, 2003, the IG notified Roberts in a determination letter that it was releasing one document in its entirety and making partial disclosure of the other documents. Material in the partially disclosed documents was withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C). In this Appeal, Roberts challenges the IG's withholding of the partially disclosed documents and the determination that a public interest outweighs the privacy interests at issue. */

*/ In her Appeal, Roberts also contends that numerous documents requested in Paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 5 (continued...)

II. Analysis

A. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). We find that the withheld documents meet the threshold test of Exemption 6 as they are "similar files," the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, that is, as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996); F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The IG is a law enforcement body charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud or abuse in programs administered or financed by the DOE. See Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. App. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). As a result of its duties, we find that the IG compiles reports involving official misconduct for "law enforcement purposes" within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1995).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) of her request were not identified in DOE's determination Letter. The IG has informed us that the documents requested in Paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 5 of Roberts' request were not IG documents but rather documents possessed by Sandia National Laboratory (SNL). See Record of Telephone Conversation between Ruby Isla, Attorney, IG and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals (April 23, 2003). Those portions of Appellant's request were referred to SNL for response.

standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3 (Exemption 6); Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-663 (D.D.C. 1990) (Exemption 7(C)).

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, providing the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., David Ridenour, 27 DOE ¶ 80,143 (1998); Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Since, as discussed below, the responsive documents that were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7 (C) were also compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard will be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

1. Privacy Interest

In its determination, the IG stated that the partially withheld documents contain names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals involved in IG enforcement matters, which in this case include subjects, witnesses, sources of information, and other individuals. According to the IG, these individuals are "entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions." Determination Letter at 1.

Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. See Department of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 154, 176 (1991) ("[t]he invasion of privacy becomes significant when personal information is linked to particular interviewees"); Safecard Services, Inc., v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); Blumberg, Seng, Ikeda & Albers, 25 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,563 (1995); James Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991). Therefore, we find that the individuals whose identities are being withheld in this case have significant privacy interests in maintaining their confidentiality.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). It is well settled that disclosure of the identity of individuals who have provided information to government investigators is not "affected with the public interest." See, e.g., Safecard, 926 F.2d at 1205. In her Appeal, Roberts did not offer any explanation of why she believes release of the material would be in the public interest. In fact, she did not address this issue at all other than stating that the public interest determination made by the IG is "erroneous." Appeal at 1. Therefore, we find that there is no public interest in the disclosure of the documents at issue.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of law enforcement records could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); Safecard, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

We have concluded above that there is a cognizable privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that Roberts has not provided any information about the existence of a public interest in the disclosure of the withheld information. After a thorough examination, we found no public interest in the withheld material. In the absence of any public interest to weigh against the real and identifiable privacy interest, the privacy interest must prevail.

C. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). Our review of the documents found that the IG properly withheld portions of the documents at issue in this case.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Caroline C. Roberts on March 17, 2003, OHA Case No. TFA-0022, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Caroline C. Roberts
Date of Filing:	March 17, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0023

On March 17, 2003 the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received an Appeal that Caroline C. Roberts filed from a determination issued to her by the Office of Public Affairs at the Department of Energy's (DOE) Albuquerque Operations Office (hereinafter referred to as "Albuquerque"). Albuquerque issued its determination in response to a request for information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would result in the release of certain documents to Ms. Roberts.

I. Background

In her request, Ms. Roberts sought access to all documents relating to Computer One, Inc., to the requester herself, or to any one of five specified contracts. In its response to this request, Albuquerque stated that no responsive documents could be located in DOE files, but that many of the records requested "are in the possession and control of the Sandia Corporation, and are therefore not 'agency records' subject to the provisions of the FOIA." Determination Letter at 1. In its Appeal, Ms. Roberts contests Albuquerque's finding that the documents in question are not subject to the FOIA. Specifically, she contends that the documents "were in the possession of the Department of Energy and for that reason, they must be produced." Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally provides public access to federal agency records, except to the extent that such records, or portions of them, are protected from disclosure by one or more of the Act's exemptions. The appropriate test of whether a document is an agency record for purposes of the FOIA was set forth by the U.S. Supreme Court in Department of Justice vs. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (i) were created or obtained by an agency, and (ii) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch..., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f).

Under these criteria, the documents sought by Ms. Roberts clearly are not agency records. They are procurement and legal records maintained by Sandia Corporation (Sandia), and were generated by that company or its contractors. On a number of occasions, we have addressed the issue of whether Sandia is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA. We have consistently held that it is not. See, e.g., Helen Ruth Sutton-Pank, 25 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1996). Ms. Roberts has not convinced us that this holding is in error. Sandia is a privately owned and operated entity, and is not an "agency" for FOIA purposes.

Moreover, contrary to Ms. Roberts' assertion, we have been informed that the records in question are not now, and were not at the time of the request, in the possession of the DOE. See memorandum of April 15, 2003 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA staff attorney, and Carolyn Becknell, Albuquerque. Simply put, the record in this matter indicates that the requested documents were neither created nor obtained by a government agency, and therefore do not satisfy the first prong of the Tax Analysts test. Albuquerque correctly concluded that the documents are not agency records subject to the FOIA.

A finding that certain documents are not agency records, however, does not preclude the DOE from releasing them. "When a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor," unless those records are otherwise exempt from public disclosure. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). The contract between Sandia and the DOE describes as contractor-owned records

> (3) Records relating to any procurement action by the contractor, except for records that under 48 C.F.R. (DEAR) 970.5204-9 . . . are described as the property of the government; [*] and
> (4) Legal records, including legal opinions, litigation files, and documents covered by the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges . . . .

We conclude that under this agreement, Sandia's legal and procurement files are the property of Sandia, and are not subject to release under either the FOIA or the agency records regulation.

Ms. Roberts contends, however, that the agreement between the DOE and Sandia "cannot be used as a defense to the production of the documents simply because the agreement defines those records as belonging to Sandia." Appeal at 1. We believe that this argument reflects a misunderstanding of

[*] We have also examined 48 C.F.R. 970.5204-9, and we conclude that the documents requested by Ms. Roberts are not described as government property in that regulatory provision.

the effect of 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). Contrary to Ms. Roberts' argument, this regulatory provision expands the scope of documents that are subject to disclosure. Under the Tax Analysts test, "agency records" must (i) have been originated or obtained by an agency, and (ii) be under an agency's control at the time of the FOIA request. However, pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1), contractor records that do not meet these criteria are still subject to disclosure as long as the contract between the contractor and the DOE provides that the records are government property. We therefore reject Ms. Roberts' argument concerning Albuquerque's application of that regulation.

III. Conclusion

Albuquerque correctly determined that the documents at issue are not agency records, and are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA or under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). We will therefore deny Ms. Roberts' Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Caroline C. Roberts on March 17, 2003 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Government Accountability Project

Date of Filing: March 18, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0024

On March 18, 2003, the Government Accountability Project (GAP) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Richland Operations Office (DOE/RL). The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

GAP filed a request for information related to vapor exposures at the Hanford Site tank farms since 1992. Letter from DOE/RL to GAP (February 14, 2003) (Determination Letter). 1/ As part of that request, GAP asked for all employee medical records maintained by the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation (HEHF), dated from January 1992 to the present, related to vapor exposures. Id. DOE/RL located medical records for that time period, but withheld the documents in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 6, stating that "any nonexempt material contained in the medical records are so inextricably intertwined with the exempt material that disclosure of it would render the documents meaningless." 2/ Id. DOE/RL also determined that the public interest in the documents did not outweigh the privacy interest of the individuals whose records would be disclosed. Id. On March 18, 2003, GAP filed this Appeal, arguing that DOE/RL should have redacted any identifiable information. Letter from GAP to Director, OHA (March 18, 2003). GAP asks that OHA order DOE/RL to either release the withheld material or, in the alternative, (1) to explain in "reasonably specific detail" how release of the documents could violate a privacy interest if all identifying information is redacted; and (2) to explain why the responsive material is so inextricably intertwined with non-exempt material that it cannot be segregated. Id.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). We find that the withheld material passes the threshold test because it is contained in medical files. However, in order to determine whether disclosure of the material would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, we must balance the public interest in disclosure against any privacy interest. Citizens for Environmental Quality v. Department of Agriculture, 602 F. Supp. 534, 538 (D.D.C. 1984) (Citizens).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

DOE/RL determined that "[i]f the information . . . were released, it could lead to an invasion of privacy by subjecting the individuals to unwanted communications, or other substantial privacy invasions by interested parties." Determination at 1. DOE/RL further stated that "the public interest in the documents does not outweigh the individual's privacy interests." Id. DOE/RL made no attempt to redact any identifying information. Instead, it withheld the documents in their entirety, alleging that (1) the material, if released, could be linked to a particular individual; (2) the non-exempt material in the documents is inextricably intertwined with the exempt material; and (3) disclosure of the responsive material would have a negative impact on the operations of the government because of the large volume of potentially responsive material. Determination Letter; Electronic Mail Message from Dorothy Riehle, DOE/RL, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 1, 2003).

B. Privacy Interest

In order to establish the existence of an invasion of privacy caused by the disclosure of the withheld material, DOE/RL must demonstrate that the public could link the medical records requested to specific individuals. In order to support its arguments, DOE/RL alleges that "not many" employees have reported medical problems due to vapor exposures. Electronic Mail Message from Dorothy Riehle, DOE/RL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 22, 2003). This statement implies that because of the limited number of employees who have reported medical conditions resulting from vapor exposure, the general public can accurately associate the identity of an individual with a particular medical record.

We find that DOE/RL's argument falls short of the standard of proof needed to establish an invasion of privacy. "An increased likelihood of speculation as to the subject . . . is insufficient to invoke the exception. Only the likelihood of actual identification justifies withholding the requested documents under exemption 6." Citizens, 602 F. Supp. at 538 (citing Arieff v. Department of the Navy, 712, F.2d 1462, 1468 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Arieff)) (emphasis added). Accord Cruscino v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, 1995 WL 444406 (D.D.C.) (stating that the information requested must be identifiable to a specific individual); Janice Curry, 27 DOE ¶ 80,116 (1998) (stating that information that identifies a specific individual can be protected under Exemption 6). In Citizens, the agency withheld the medical records of one Forest Service employee who had been sprayed with herbicide, explaining that some residents of the surrounding small town "could logically deduce the individual's identity." Citizens, 602 F. Supp. at 539. However the Court rejected this argument, even though only one employee (out of a small workforce) had been tested. Id. at 536. The Court found that the responsive material was not exempt under Exemption 6 because the agency was unable to prove that the public could link the responsive material to a particular individual. Id. at 538. See also Arieff, 712 F.2d at 1468. DOE/RL has not demonstrated how, if it were to redact all identifying information, the public could match an employee to his or her medical record. As a result, we find that the release of the responsive material, with all identifying information removed, does not constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. 3/3/ We will not address the issue of the public interest in disclosure (the second and third steps of the three-step analysis) because we have determined that a significant privacy interest would not be invaded by the disclosure of the properly redacted responsive material (i.e., after removal of all identifying information).

C. Segregable Information

We have previously stated that "the fact that some material in a record meets the criteria for withholding . . . does not necessarily mean that the record may be withheld in its entirety." Mitchell G. Brodsk, 28 DOE ¶ 80,217 (2002). The FOIA also requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material). This office reviewed a sample of the responsive material, and we conclude that the records contain non-exempt information that can be segregated. We further find that this material is not so inextricably intertwined with the non-exempt material as to make a redacted document meaningless. Accordingly, we find that DOE/RL should release the segregable, non-exempt portions of the responsive material to GAP.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Government Accountability Project on March 18, 2003, OHA Case No. TFA-0024, is hereby granted as stated in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Richland Operations Office, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the guidance set forth above in the Decision and Order.

Date of Filing: March 18, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0025

On March 18, 2003, Judicial Watch, Inc. (the Appellant), filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Freedom of Information / Privacy Act Group (FOI / PA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on February 5, 2003. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, FOI / PA would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On August 1, 2000, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request for all documents that refer to

> Agreements(s), contracts(s), concession(s), compensation(s), loan(s), guarantee(s), assistance, cooperation, consideration, lease(s), transfer(s), sale(s), aid, support, inducement(s), influence, reward(s), stimulus(i), solicitation(s), benefit(s), gift(s), gratuity(ies), remuneration, and / or promise(s), made or entered into since September 11, 2001, with the governments of:

Egypt	Israel	Saudi Arabia	Jordan
Qatar	Bahrain	Yemen	Oman
Iran	Turkey	Lebanon	Libya
Sudan	Djibouti	Somalia	Ethiopia

> in exchange for support, cooperation and / or consideration for the "War on Terror," to include but not be limited to the liberation of Afghanistan and the hunt for Taliban and Al Qaeda, and / or the Bush administration's stated policy goal of the disarmament of Iraq in accordance with the United Nations resolutions.

Request Letter dated January 6, 2003, to Abel Lopez, FOIA / PA Division, DOE, from Christopher J. Farrell, Judicial Watch, Inc. On February 5, 2003, FOI / PA responded that the search of the files of the Office of Energy Assurance, the Office of Policy and International Affairs, and the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) yielded no responsive documents. Determination Letter dated February 5, 2003, from Abel Lopez, FOI / PA, DOE, to Christopher Farrell, Judicial Watch, Inc. A search of the files of the Office of the Secretary had not been completed at the time of the determination. Id.

On March 18, 2003, the Appellant appealed that determination to our Office. Appeal Letter dated March 17, 2003, from Christopher J. Farrell, Judicial Watch, Inc., to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In the Appeal, the Appellant argues that because DOE is at the center of national and international energy policies used by the federal government, it is likely that documents responsive to the request exist. Id. The Appellant cites an article in the New York Times which stated that "The United States, seeking to ensure Turkish military cooperation in any war against Iraq, is offering at least $4 billion to compensate Turkey for economic damage it might suffer as a result of playing an active role in an American-led coalition." Id. at 1-2.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

We have contacted FOI / PA and the respective offices searched in response to the Appellant's request to determine what type of search was conducted. Both the Office of Energy Assurance and NNSA indicated that they primarily performed a hand search of the files which would contain possibly responsive documents. Neither office was able to find anything responsive. The Office of Energy Assurance indicated that the files searched contained a small amount of documents, therefore, it would not be possible to overlook something responsive to the request. NNSA indicated that a majority of the files were searched by hand, but a computerized search of electronic mail message files was also conducted. No responsive documents were found by either office. Based on the search that the Office of Energy Assurance and NNSA performed, we are convinced that both these offices followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in its request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied in respect to these two offices.

The Office of Policy and International Affairs indicated "the subject matter and information requested does not have no [sic] Office of Policy and International Affairs (PI) involvement. A file search was not conducted due to no PI involvement or concern so, therefore, there are no files to be searched for the information requested." Electronic Mail Message dated April 23, 2003, from Edith Horne, Office of Policy and International Affairs, DOE, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE. Therefore, it is apparent the Office of Policy and International Affairs did not conduct a search. It is difficult for OHA to understand how this office could claim it has nothing responsive without conducting a search when the request asks for documents relating to contacts between the federal government and a number of other countries. It seems to us that the Office of Policy and International Affairs would have at least some peripheral involvement with countries listed in the request and, therefore, could have responsive documents. To make the statement that it has nothing responsive without actually checking its files or databases is insufficient to satisfy the FOIA in the absence of a more complete explanation. Therefore, the Appeal will be remanded to FOI/PA to direct the Office of Policy and International Affairs either to search its files for responsive documents or to provide a detailed explanation why the Office could not possibly have any responsive documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Judicial Watch, Inc., on March 18, 2003, Case No. TFA-0025, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Bryan Cave
Date of Filing:	March 18, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0026

On August 18, 2003, the law firm of Bryan Cave LLP (Bryan Cave), on behalf of itself and four of its clients, filed Appeals from a determination that the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to them. 1/ The determinations responded to essentially identical requests for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determinations, OIG released redacted versions of three documents to Bryan Cave and its clients. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the remainder of the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In its request, Bryan Cave wrote the Department of Energy and requested "a copy of the Inspector General report I02-IG001 dated September 13, 2002, regarding the Couriers." See Letter from Herbert Richardson, Principal Inspector General, to Daniel C. Schwartz, Bryan Cave LLP (February 12, 2003) (Determination Letter). In its Determination Letter, OIG identified four responsive documents relevant to Bryan Cave's request. One document (Document 3) was forwarded to the National Nuclear Security Agency (NNSA) in order that it issue a determination to Bryan Cave

1/ Because the FOIA requests and determinations were essentially the same for Bryan Cave, FOIA Request No. FY2002-00511, and its clients, Thomas Worthington, FOIA Request No. FY2003-00063, Steven Gray, FOIA Request No. FY2003-00062, Marvin Middlestat, FOIA Request No. FY2003-00048, and John Watts, FOIA Request No. FY2003-00003, we have consolidated the Appeals into one Appeal for consideration.

concerning that document. 2/ OIG released redacted versions of the other documents: A three-page September 13, 2002 Memorandum from Gregory H. Freidman, DOE Inspector General, to the Deputy Administrator for Defense Programs, NNSA (Document 1); a 20-page Special Inquiry Report, No. 102IG001 (Document 2); and a one page document entitled "List of Key Personnel" (Document 4). 3/ OIG withheld portions of Document 1 pursuant to Exemption 2 of the FOIA. Portions of Documents 2 and 4 were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 2, 6 and 7(C). Bryan Cave appeals the OIG's withholding of portions of Documents 1 and 2. 4/

Document 1 is a memorandum from the DOE Inspector General to the Deputy Administrator for Defense Programs, NNSA, transmitting OIG's Special Inquiry Report No. 102IG001 (Document 2). This three page memo generally describes Document 2. Document 2 is an OIG inquiry concerning certain alleged supervisory actions taken against DOE employees who raised issues and concerns regarding a DOE security function. All of the redacted information in Document 1 was withheld pursuant to Exemption 2, although the determination does not contain an explanation of how Exemption 2 applies to the withheld material.

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 670 F.2d 1051, 1074 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (en banc) (Crooker).

The issue before us regarding Document 1 is whether the "high two" exemption applies. We have been informed by OIG that Documents 1 and 2 were created for DOE internal use only. See Memorandum of Conversation between Jacqueline Becker, OIG, and Richard Cronin, OHA (March

4/ Bryan Cave does not seek to appeal the OIG determination regarding Document 4 nor does it seek the specific names of individuals listed in Documents 1 and 2.

17, 2003). Additionally, Document 1 references the fact that Document 2 was created so that NNSA officials could consider the need for administrative action concerning the incident described in Document 2. See Document 1 at 2. Consequently we find that the first prong of the Crooker test for "high two" protection has been met. With regard to the second prong, it appears the portion of information that specifically details potential issues raised by DOE employees concerning security functions is of a type that, if released, could materially assist an adversary who sought to obtain special nuclear materials. We find that release of this information would significantly risk circumvention of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq., which restricts the possession of special nuclear materials. A second category of information that was withheld consists mainly of general DOE job position titles, generic DOE security functions, and DOE organizations that are connected with certain DOE protective functions. It is unclear to us how release of this information would significantly risk circumvention of an agency regulation or statute. We will therefore remand this matter to OIG. On remand, OIG should issue another determination letter that (i) explains in more detail how release of the second category of information would significantly risk circumvention of an agency regulation or statute, (ii) withholds the information pursuant to another FOIA exemption, or (iii) releases the information.

B. Document 2

Document 2 is the OIG's Special Inquiry Report No. 102IG001. Portions of Document 2 were withheld pursuant to Exemptions, 2, 6 and 7(C).

With regard to the material in Document 2 that was withheld pursuant to Exemption 2, this material consists essentially of the same material that was withheld in Document 1. For the reasons stated above we find that some of the information, which describes the DOE employees' issues and concerns, was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 2. The remainder of the material withheld (almost identical to the second category of material described above) does not appear to be of a type that, if released, would significantly risk circumvention of an agency regulation or statute. On remand, OIG shall explain in more detail how release of the remaining information would significantly risk circumvention of an agency regulation or statute, withhold the information pursuant to another FOIA exemption, or release the information.

The remainder of the information, such as names of individuals, specific job titles and the DOE organizations where the employees were employed, was withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Department of the Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352, 380 n.19 (1976) (for Exemption 6 purposes threat to privacy must be real and not speculative); Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 2-3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990) .

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemption 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, provided the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). A document compiled for law enforcement purposes may be protected from disclosure if it satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard. Conversely, a document not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that release constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. 5/

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(C) is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See, e.g., Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 80 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (Rural Housing Alliance). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance, 498 F.2d at 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). We have consistently found that the OIG compiles information for law enforcement purposes within the meaning of Exemption 7. See Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997). The OIG informed us that it accumulated the information contained in Document 2 as part of an investigation as to whether potential criminal activity had occurred concerning an incident involving the supervision of a DOE national security function. Bryan Cave argues that Document 2 itself was not written until after the Department of Justice declined to conduct criminal proceedings. Thus, it maintains Document 2 could not have been created for law enforcement purposes. We must however reject Bryan Cave's argument. Assuming arguendo that the document was not created for law enforcement purposes it is clear from Document 1 that the information contained in Document 2 was compiled to determine if criminal violations had occurred. Consequently, the information meets the threshold law enforcement test for application of Exemption 7(C). See Document 1 at 1; Memorandum of telephone conversation between Jacqueline Becker, OIG, and Richard Cronin, OHA (April 7, 2003). See Abramson v. FBI, 456 U.S. 615, 631-32 (1982) ("[w]e hold that information initially contained in a record made for law enforcement purposes continues to meet the threshold requirement for Exemption 7 where that recorded information is reproduced or summarized in a new document for a non-law enforcement purpose.")

5/ Because we will analyze OIG's withholdings pursuant to Exemption 7(C), we need not consider Bryan Cave's specific Exemption 6 arguments.

Next we must determine if the release of the information withheld under Exemption 7(C) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. It is widely recognized that the mention of an individual's name in a law enforcement file will engender comment and speculation and carries a stigmatizing connotation. See, e.g., Fitzgibbon v. CIA, 911 F.2d 755, 767 (D.C. Cir. 1990). Thus, there is a very strong privacy interest with regard to the identity of individuals named in Document 2. This privacy interest must be balanced with the public interest in release of the information. Bryan Cave argues that Documents 1 and 2 are of great public interest given the subject matter concerning an important DOE security function. Further, Bryan Cave contends that release of the identifying information referenced in Documents 1 and 2 is vital to evaluate DOE's response to issues raised by its employees and to substantiate allegations of wrongdoing. Despite these arguments, we believe that there is only a limited public interest in releasing information concerning identities of the individuals concerned. See United States Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989) (public interest to be considered is that which "shed[s] light on an agency's performance of its statutory duty"). Given the strong privacy interest present here, balanced against a limited public interest, we find that release of almost all the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 7(C) would reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

While we find that the vast majority of information in Document 2 was properly withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C), some of the material can be segregated and released. The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). Several portions of material withheld from Document 2 pursuant to Exemptions 2, 6 and 7(C) contain segregable material. Specifically, on page 10, the second sentence of the first full paragraph should be released except for the portions of the sentence that identifies the identity of the author of certain written notes. The text block below this paragraph (a portion of the notes that were originally withheld in its entirety) should also be released except for the portions that identify specific names and the portion of the second sentence of the first paragraph of the text block that identifies specific potential issues that were raised by DOE employees. On page 12 of Document 2 the text of the two emails should be segregated and released except for the names of individuals. Footnote 5 should also be released except for the types of information described above. In addition, throughout the document, some of the withheld material consists of pronouns. These pronouns are located on pages 4, 5, 8-12, 14-16. These do not appear to be withholdable under Exceptions 2, 6 and 7(C). On remand OIG should release this segregable material or withhold it pursuant to another exemption.

Bryan Cave argues that, Exemption 7(C) notwithstanding, all material referring to its clients must be released. We believe that Bryan Cave is partially correct in that Exemption 7(C)'s focus is to protect third parties from an invasion of their privacy. There does not appear to be an invasion of privacy if the requester is provided the portion of an identified document that references the name of the requestor. Consequently, to the extent that any of the appellants' names (listed in footnote 1) are contained in Document 1 or 2, the name should be released but only to that particular requester. This may entail providing separate redacted versions of Documents 1 and 2 to each of the appellants.

Bryan Cave's other arguments concerning the inapplicability of Exemption 2, 6 and 7(C) are unavailing. With regard to the material withheld pursuant to Exemption 2, Bryan Cave argues that the material is not classified and alleges that it has already been made public. Neither allegation, if true, would be sufficient to defeat OIG's Exemption 2 claim for Documents 1 and 2. There is no requirement that information be classified for an agency to protect that information under Exemption 2. Further, Bryan Cave's generalized claim that the withheld information has been made "public" is insufficient to conclude that OIG has waived its privilege to assert Exemption 2. See Steinberg v. United States Department of Justice, 179 F.R.D. 357, 361 (D.D.C. 1998) (finding no waiver where requester did not produce evidence that specific withheld material is public, even though general subject matter appeared to be in public domain).

III. Conclusion

We find that OIG properly withheld a significant portion of the redacted information in Documents 1 and 2. However, we will remand this matter to OIG so that it can issue another determination or release the information described in the previous section above. Consequently, Bryan Cave's appeal should be granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Bryan Cave LLP on March 18, 2003, OHA Case No. TFA-0026, is hereby granted in part as set forth in paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of Energy for further action in accordance with the directions set forth in this Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Egan & Associates

Date of Filing: April 4, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0027

On April 4, 2003, Egan & Associates (Egan) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Acting Assistant General Counsel for General Law of the Department of Energy (DOE/GC) issued in response to a request for documents that Egan submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. DOE/GC issued the determination on March 5, 2003. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/GC release additional responsive information to Egan or provide a detailed explanation of its reasons for withholding such material.

I. Background

On August 6, 2002, Egan requested from DOE "copies of documents and videotape recordings in the possession of DOE pertaining to the United States Office of Government Ethics ('OGE') opinion letter dated July 31, 2002, addressed to DOE and the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission ('NRC') concerning the application of 18 U.S.C. 207 to personnel who have worked on the Yucca Mountain project." Appeal at 1. DOE/GC responded to Egan's request on March 5, 2003, stating that it had located 127 pages of material that was responsive to Egan's request. With its determination, DOE/GC released 36 of the 127 pages in their entirety to Egan (pages #1-36). However, the remaining 91 pages were withheld either in part (pages #37-118) or in their entirety (pages #119-127), pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. Letter from Susan F. Beard, Acting Assistant General Counsel for General Law, to Charles Fitzpatrick, Egan & Associates (March 5, 2002) ("Determination Letter").

Egan filed its appeal with the OHA on April 4, 2003. In the appeal, Egan states,

> I have no quarrel with DOE's withholding of a de minimus amount of information (including personal telephone numbers) from disclosure by DOE under Exemption 6 (5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6)). The basis upon which this appeal is brought is DOE's failure to follow its own regulations and the pertinent provisions of the [FOIA] by withholding from disclosure part or all of some 91 pages of the 127 pages of documents responsive to my FOIA request. The relief I seek is the requirement that DOE release in full the remaining 91 pages withheld in whole or in part by DOE, purportedly pursuant to Exemption 5 (5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. 1004.10(b)(5)).

Appeal at 1-2.[1]

First, we note that of the 91 pages from which information was withheld, 32 originated in either NRC (24 pages) or OGE (8 pages). With regard to the pages originating at other agencies, DOE/GC informed Egan that it could appeal the withholding from those pages to the respective agencies, and provided Egan with addresses and instructions for doing so. Thus, the present decision will address only the withholdings under FOIA Exemption 5 from the 58 pages (those considered "DOE records"[2]), found in 17 documents (numbered 16-25, 33, 34, 36, 38-41 in the documents index provided to the requester).

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). In addition, DOE regulations provide that the agency should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and if disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Accordingly, even if a document can properly be withheld under an exemption, we must also consider whether the public interest demands disclosure pursuant to DOE regulations.

A. Application of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 shields from mandatory disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). This Exemption is generally recognized as encompassing the attorney-client, attorney work product and governmental deliberative process privileges. See, e.g.,

[1] In its appeal, Egan also contends that DOE/GC did not comply with various requirements of the DOE FOIA regulations at 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(d), "Time for processing requests." Because DOE/GC has now issued its determination, we consider the issues raised by these arguments to be moot. We also note that the relief sought by Egan is not related to these issues, but rather to DOE/GC's withholding of information, which shall be the focus of this decision.

[2] See 10 C.F.R. 1004.4(f)(2) ("Requests for DOE records containing information received from another agency, or records prepared jointly by DOE and other agencies, will be treated as requests for DOE records . . ."). Though these documents are designated "DOE records" for purposes of this appeal, many of these records are documents that were received from either OGE or NRC and then edited (either electronically or by hand) by DOE officials.

Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In the present case, DOE/GC relied upon the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges of Exemption 5.

The deliberative process privilege permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

The attorney-client privilege exists to protect confidential communications between attorneys and their clients made for the purpose of securing or providing legal advice. Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (Mead); California Edison, 28 DOE ¶ 80,173 (2001) (California Edison). The privilege covers facts divulged by a client to his or her attorney, and also covers opinions that the attorney gives the client based upon those facts. Mead, 566 F.2d at 254 n.25. The privilege permits nondisclosure of an attorney's opinion or advice in order to protect the secrecy of the underlying facts. Id. at 254 n.28. Not all communications between an attorney and client are privileged, however. Clark v. American Commerce National Bank, 974 F.2d 127 (9th Cir. 1992). The privilege is limited to those disclosures necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 1577 (1976). The privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. California Edison, 28 DOE at 80,665. "Where the client is an organization, the privilege extends to those communications between attorneys and all agents or employees of the organization who are authorized to act or speak for the organization in relation to the subject matter of the communication." Mead, 566 F.2d at 253 n.24.

The Appellant raises objections to the application of each privilege. First,

> DOE's rationale for withholding documents for the purpose of 'shielding governmental deliberations' is arbitrary and capricious and unsubstantiated by the facts. The facts are that DOE solicited an ethics opinion from the Office of Government Ethics with respect to a particular set of circumstances. OGE is assigned the responsibility for just such assessments. DOE is not deciding, or "deliberating" the issue which it presented to OGE for its assessment. OGE is. Any DOE "deliberations" are irrelevant. DOE points out that a purpose of the deliberative process is to encourage open discussions on matters of policy "between subordinates and superiors." That rationale might apply to communications between subordinates and superiors within OGE (the agency doing the deliberating), but not > communications by DOE lobbying OGE for a favorable decision on the very issue presented to OGE by DOE.

Appeal at 3-4. We disagree. As DOE/GC stated in its determination letter, "'Pre-decisional' documents are not only those circulated within the agency, but can also be those from an agency lacking decisional authority which advises another agency possessing such authority." Determination Letter at 2. Renegotiation Bd. v. Grumman Aircraft Eng'g Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 188 ("By including inter-agency memoranda in Exemption 5, Congress plainly intended to permit one agency possessing decisional authority to obtain written recommendations and advice from a separate agency not possessing such decisional authority without requiring that the advice be any more disclosable than similar advice received from within the agency."). Egan further implies that advice and opinions expressed by one agency to another should be disclosed based upon what motive a requester may impute to such advice or opinions (e.g., "DOE lobbying OGE for a favorable decision"). Egan offers no legal basis for making determinations that the release of documents turn upon such a distinction, however.

With regard to the application of the attorney-client privilege, Egan argues,

> It is not all attorney communications which are privileged, but only those in which legal advice is rendered by an attorney or where confidential communications by a client to the attorney must be protected. Where, as here, differing federal agencies with different interests communicate with one another, and where one agency lobbies another to adopt a position favorable to its wishes, the rational for attorney-client privilege is hardly present despite the facade of having lawyers author the secreted communications. DOE was scarcely providing legal advice to OGE on a matter which DOE presented to OGE for consideration in OGE's sphere of responsibility.

Appeal at 4. Again, Egan proposes that a particular privilege, in this case as to communications between agency clients, such as DOE and NRC, and their attorneys, should not apply "where one agency lobbies another to adopt a position favorable to its wishes, . . ." Egan offers no support in the law for such a narrowing of the privilege, and we find none. Moreover, whether DOE was providing OGE with legal advice is beside the point. As clients, the DOE and NRC were clearly seeking legal advice regarding the application of government ethics laws. Thus, facts provided by these clients to their attorneys in order to obtain such advice are clearly protected by the attorney-client privilege.

As discussed in more detail below, we find that the specific documents at issue are protected by both the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges. As the court in Mead notes,

> With respect to documents containing legal opinions and advice, there is no doubt a great deal of overlap between the attorney-client privilege component of exemption five and its deliberative process privilege component. The distinction between the two is that the attorney-client privilege permits nondisclosure of an attorney's opinion > or advice in order to protect the secrecy of the underlying facts, while the deliberative process privilege directly protects advice and opinions and does not permit the nondisclosure of underlying facts unless they would indirectly reveal the advice, opinions, and evaluations circulated within the agency as part of its decision-making process.

1. Electronic Mail Messages

Of the 58 pages at issue here, 12 (pages # 37-48) are printouts of electronic mail, each of which was withheld in part from Egan. All of them concern drafts of the OGE opinion letter. These mail messages are clearly pre-decisional in that they predate the issuance of the OGE opinion on July 31, 2002. Each of the messages also reflects the give-and-take of the consultative process, in which opinions were expressed and issues raised regarding portions of the OGE opinion while it was being drafted. Thus, at least portions of these documents are protected by the deliberative process privilege. These messages also contain facts supplied by the client for the purpose of seeking legal advice, as well as opinions of attorneys that are reflective of those facts, and are therefore protected by the attorney-client privilege as well.

Nonetheless, we find that the following small amounts of segregable material in some of these pages, in addition to the portions of the documents already released, are not protected by either the deliberative process or attorney-client privilege, and should therefore be released to the requester.

page # 37 "We reviewed your suggested language."

page # 46 "and let me know what you think." (identical phrase already released on page # 47)

2. Draft Versions of the OGE Opinion Letter

Also withheld in part from the requester were five draft versions of the OGE opinion letter (documents numbered 33, 34, 36, 38, and 39 in the documents index provided to the requester). In the case of each document, the body of the draft letter was withheld. These drafts obviously contain specific opinions and issues raised by the author(s) of the drafts. Moreover, releasing various draft versions of this document, one that has been released in final form, would essentially provide a "roadmap" of the government's deliberative process. See Dudman Communications Corp. v. Department of the Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565, 1568 (D.C. Cir. 1987) ("Congress enacted Exemption 5 to protect the executive's deliberative processes -- not to protect specific materials."); National Wildlife Fed'n v. United States Forest Serv., 861 F.2d 1114, 1122 (9th Cir. 1988) ("To the extent that National Wildlife seeks through its FOIA request to uncover any discrepancies between the findings, projections, and recommendations between the draft Forest Plans and draft EISs prepared by lower-level Forest Service personnel and those actually adopted in the final Forest Plan and EIS published by the Forest Service, it is attempting to probe the editorial and policy judgment of the decisionmakers. Materials that allow the public to reconstruct the predecisional judgments of the administrator are no less inimical to exemption 5's goal of encouraging uninhibited decisionmaking than materials explicitly revealing his or her mental processes."); Horsehead Indus. v. EPA, No. 94-1299, slip op. at 19 (D.D.C. Oct. 1, 1996) ("Comparing the draft with the final version ultimately adopted by the agency would provide the requester with a picture window view into the agency's deliberations, the precise danger that Exemption 5 was crafted to avoid."). The withheld portions of these drafts are therefore protected by the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

3. Handwritten Notes by DOE Attorneys

DOE/GC withheld, in their entirety, 9 pages of handwritten notes by two DOE attorneys. We agree with DOE/GC that these notes contain privileged material. The notes are protected by the deliberative process privilege to the extent that they contain descriptions of conversations between personnel discussing the subject matter of the OGE draft opinion, prior to the issuance of OGE's opinion on July 31, 2002. The notes also contain facts supplied by clients and discussions of issues that reflect those facts, and therefore the notes are also protected by the attorney-client privilege.

However, upon review of the document, we find that the following small portions of segregable material within these documents are not protected by either the deliberative process or attorney-client privilege, and should therefore be released to the requester.

[3] This page also contains handwritten notations (the bottom 4-5 lines of handwritten text on the page) that are clearly personal in nature and in no way concern the OGE opinion letter. This portion of the page is therefore not responsive to the Appellant's request.

C. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see also Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). In the present case, of the 58 pages at issue, DOE/GC withheld only 9 pages in their entirety, and released segregable portions of the remaining documents. In addition, as discussed above, we find that a small amount of additional non-exempt material may be released. Beyond this, we find that any exempt material is so inextricably intertwined that disclosure of it would reveal "only essentially meaningless words and phrases," and therefore need not be released. Neufeld v. IRS, 646 F.2d 661, 663 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

D. Public Interest

DOE regulations direct the agency to release responsive, exempt material if the DOE determines such release to be in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In its appeal, Egan contends that > DOE recites this requirement in its initial determination letter and then wholly fails to adhere to it. DOE merely states that it balanced the public interest in disclosure against the adverse effect of disclosure and concluded that the public interest in disclosure did not outweigh the adverse impact of disclosure. The only further rationale provided (to wit, that public disclosure inhibits free and candid discussion) would apply to any and all federal agency deliberative documents, and would effectively eliminate the mandate to make available even exempt documents, when it is in the public interest to do so.

Appeal at 2-3. First, we note that 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1 does not create a presumption that information exempt under the FOIA should be released. Rather, the regulations direct release of otherwise exempt material only upon a determination that such a release would affirmatively be in the public interest. DOE/GC clearly did not find that discretionary release of additional material would be in the public interest. Determination Letter at 2-3. Egan attempts in its appeal to make a case for the public interest in such a discretionary release.

> Because the Yucca Mountain candidate repository would be a unique, first-of-its-kind dumping ground for the most dangerous high-level waste from over 100 nuclear plants throughout the United States, it is axiomatic that the public has an enormous interest in all significant decisions relating to that proposed dumping ground and its licensing. Where, as here, the documents (determined by DOE to be unworthy of public interest) focus on the issue of whether former federal employees who worked on that very project may be precluded from testifying at an NRC licensing hearing for interested stakeholders, the compelling need for discretionary disclosure under 10 C.F.R. 1004.1 is apparent. Where, as here, the anticipated applicant for a license to operate such a facility is in the position of lobbying the [OGE] (successfully) for a determination that precludes stakeholders from using former DOE employees as witnesses, the public interest in starkly evident. Such a determination silences the > voices of those most familiar with the project and the issues in the licensing proceeding - all federal employees whose efforts were paid for with tax dollars. For DOE under these circumstances to reject its mandate of discretionary disclosure in the public interest, is arbitrary and capricious and calculated to protect the agency from open disclosure of information which is true, but may be embarrassing to, or inconsistent with the position of, DOE.

Appeal at 3. We agree with Egan that there is a strong public interest in the siting of a national nuclear waste repository. We also agree that there is a public interest in the decision by OGE as set forth in its July 31, 2002 opinion letter. This should not be confused, however, with the public interest in the release of the exempt material in the present case. The stated basis for OGE's opinion is set forth in its July 31, 2002 letter, which has already been released. The question, therefore, is the extent to which the public interest would be served by disclosing the details of the deliberative process by which OGE's decision was reached.

In the very short term, making an agency's deliberative process completely transparent might indeed serve the public interest and be consistent with the philosophy underlying the FOIA statute. The impact on future deliberations would be severe, however. Even assuming, arguendo, that the information in question might be "true, but may be embarrassing to" DOE, does not tilt the balance of public interest in favor of disclosure. The frank and independent discussion that is vital both to governmental deliberations and to the attorney-client relationship depends upon the assurance that participants in the privileged communications need not censor themselves for fear that those communications be made public. This is clearly no less true (and perhaps more so) of communications containing the kind of unpleasant truths that attorneys need to hear from their clients and decision-makers need to hear from their subordinates. Not respecting these privileges would therefore run counter to the public interest, not only because of the direct damage done to the attorney-client relationship and the quality of governmental deliberations, but also because the chilling effect would in the long run make government decision-making less transparent.

III. Conclusion

We will remand this matter to DOE/GC for a new determination releasing additional non-exempt information to the requester, as set forth in detail above. In all other respects, we will deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Egan & Associates on April 4, 2003, OHA Case Number TFA-0027, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Acting Assistant General Counsel for General Law of the Department of Energy for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Wayne Knox

Date of Filing: April 22, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0028

On April 22, 2003, Wayne Knox appealed a determination issued by the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his appeal, Mr. Knox contends that SR had failed to conduct an adequate search for documents that were responsive to a FOIA request he had filed. For the reasons detailed below, we find that SR conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and will deny the appeal filed by Mr. Knox.

I. Background

Mr. Knox filed a request in which he sought a copy of all internal and external Westinghouse Savannah River Company/Bechtel Savannah River Incorporated documents concerning the final resolution of claims and disputes under Subcontract No. AB94198P with Advanced Systems Technology. He also sought information concerning the final resolution of claims and disputes of the Inspector General investigation of allegations he made relative to his work on the Ford Building Seepage Basin Retention Tank. See Determination Letter at 1. On March 16, 2003, SR issued a determination which stated that the SR site searched their files and found no documents responsive to the final resolution of claims and disputes under Subcontract No. AB94198P with the Advanced Systems Technology portion of Mr. Knox's request. SR further informed Mr. Knox that the Headquarters Office of Inspector General would respond directly to the portion of his request regarding the Inspector General investigation. Id. In his Appeal, Mr. Knox challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by SR.

II. Analysis

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. E.g. Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at SR to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed. Upon receiving Mr. Knox's Request for Information, SR contacted individuals in the Environmental Restoration Division as well as pertinent individuals at Westinghouse Savannah River Company. These individuals manually as well as electronically searched their files using key words, including computer files containing E-mail communications, letters and other documents. In addition, Mr. Knox provided SR with the names of individuals who may have responsive documents and SR contacted them as well. According to SR, these searches yielded no documents responsive to Mr. Knox's request. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Pauline Connor, SR and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (June 17, 2003); Record of Telephone Conversation between Adriane Smith, WSRC and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (July 10, 2003).

Given the facts presented to us, we are convinced that SR conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Knox's request. Accordingly, Mr. Knox's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Wayne Knox, OHA Case No. TFA-0028, on April 22, 2003, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Richard Fauvre

Date of Filing: May 29, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0031

On May 29, 2003, Richard Fauvre (the Appellant), filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on May 12, 2003. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Oak Ridge would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On April 2, 2003, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request for all documents on Rubie Gladys Steakley, his mother, who worked for Clinton Engineering at Oak Ridge during World War II. He provided her maiden name and Social Security Number to aid the search. On May 12, 2003, Oak Ridge responded that the search of the files of Oak Ridge and its contractor and facility site did not locate any records on Ms Steakley. Determination Letter dated May 12, 2003, from Amy Rothrock, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge, to Richard Fauvre. On May 29, 2003, the Appellant appealed that determination to our Office. Appeal Letter dated May 15, 2003, from Richard Fauvre, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In the Appeal, the Appellant argues that no effort was made to locate Ms Steakley's records. He alleged that Oak Ridge did not check the Federal Records Center in Atlanta, Georgia, or various other DOE records. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ashok K. Kaushal, 27 DOE ¶ 80,189 (1999); Hobart T. Bolin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1998).

We have contacted Oak Ridge in response to the Appellant's request to determine what type of search was conducted. All the systems of records referenced in the Appeal Letter were, in fact, searched and no responsive documents were discovered. The DOE vault, which contains classified records as well as historical records dating back to 1942 such as personnel or medical files, was searched also. No records from the time period that Ms Steakley would have worked at Oak Ridge have been sent to the Federal Records Repository in Atlanta because the records are still used on a daily basis for FOIA requests and other various studies.

Oak Ridge also conducted a computerized search at seven or eight locations using Ms Steakley's name or social security number. All the Oak Ridge plants and repositories were searched. Furthermore, Oak Ridge indicated that no medical records were maintained until 1950 unless the person was involved in an accident. Apparently, Ms Steakley was not. Oak Ridge also informed us that it often it does not have records of employees during World War II. Sometimes, but usually only if the person was an employee of the prime contractor, a five by seven index card containing personnel information can be located. No such card was located for Ms Steakley, who was not an employee of the prime contractor. Based on the search that Oak Ridge performed, we are convinced that it followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in his request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Richard Fauvre, on May 29, 2003, Case No. TFA-0031, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Friedwardt Winterberg
Date of Filing:	June 2, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0032

On June 2, 2003, Friedwardt Winterberg filed an Appeal from a determination the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) issued on May 8, 2003. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Dr. Winterberg is a professor of physics at the University of Nevada in Reno, Nevada. He responded to a solicitation from the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) for pre-applications in the Office of Defense Programs' Stewardship Science Academic Alliances Program. An NNSA Executive Committee evaluated each pre-application by seeking the opinion of one "reviewer" at each of three DOE laboratories, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL), Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL), and Sandia National Laboratories (SNL). The reviewers were asked to determine the degree of responsiveness of the pre-application to the technical scope defined in the solicitation–this evaluation was not, however, a review of the merits of the application. Dr. Friedwardt Winterberg, 28 DOE ¶ 80,267 at 80,852, Case No. TFA-0011, slip op. at 1 (2003). Based on the opinions of the reviewers, the Executive Committee found that Dr. Winterberg's pre-application did not fall within the technical scope of the solicitation. Consequently, the committee did not encourage Dr. Winterberg to submit a full application. The committee did, however, explain that its decision was not a determination on the merits of the final application and that Dr. Winterberg was free to submit a full application if he so desired. Id.

Dr. Winterberg filed two FOIA requests for information regarding NNSA's decision, the second of which is the subject of the present Appeal. In his first request, Dr. Winterberg asked for " [a] copy of a report . . . made by a committee of three individuals from Livermore, Los Alamos, and Sandia . . . . I tried to get a copy of that report through Senator Ensign . . . so far without success." Id., slip op. at 1-2 (quoting Letter from Winterberg to DOE/HQ (August 19, 2002)). NNSA's Office of Defense Science searched unsuccessfully for responsive documents. Id., slip op. at 2. The DOE issued a determination informing Dr. Winterberg of the results of NNSA's search, and on December 23, 2002, Dr. Winterberg filed an appeal of that determination with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In that Appeal, he argued that it was possible that NNSA rejected his application because he was a German scientist who came to this country after World War II. According to Dr. Winterberg, in 1985, Elie Wiesel, then Chairman of the President's Commission on the Holocaust, made a public statement that it was immoral for the federal government to hire Nazi scientists. Therefore, Dr. Winterberg argued, because Mr. Wiesel made the statement while he was an official of the United States government, his statement became a government policy binding on the DOE. Id. In his first Appeal, Dr. Winterberg asked OHA to direct NNSA to release the report and names of the committee members to him so that he can determine if they acted on Mr. Wiesel's "order." Id. (quoting Appeal at 2.)

In reviewing Dr. Winterberg's first Appeal, we contacted DOE/HQ regarding the search, and they responded with an explanation, written by NNSA, of the pre-application process. Memorandum from Director, Office of Defense Science, NNSA, to DOE/HQ (September 18, 2002). The solicitation employed a two-part evaluation process for the selection of applications: (1) a pre-application evaluation stage and (2) a full application evaluation stage. In considering pre-applications, the Executive Committee did not complete reports on any evaluations. Instead, a copy of each pre-application was provided to a representative at each respective laboratory. The lab representative then provided a copy of each pre-application to a reviewer, who was tasked to review the technical scope of the pre-application and place it into one of three categories: "Yes" (responsive to the technical scope), "No" (not responsive), or "Uncertain." The reviewers did not use a formal response document, but instead advised their laboratory representatives of their decisions by any method convenient to them at the time (e.g., telephone, face-to-face conversation). Electronic Mail Message from Dr. James Van Fleet, NNSA to Brenda Washington, DOE/HQ (January 28, 2003). The laboratory representatives then reported to NNSA by electronic mail or telephone conversation. NNSA did not monitor this phase, but only recorded the categorization of each application. Id. Based on the results of this preliminary review, each applicant was sent a letter discouraging or encouraging them to submit a full application. Despite the results of the review, however, no applicant was prevented from submitting a full application. Dr. Winterberg's pre-application received two Nos and one Uncertain, and NNSA sent him a letter of discouragement. The letter of discouragement did contain a statement that the decision at this stage related to the pre-application only, and did not guarantee acceptance or rejection of a final application. Letter from NNSA to Winterberg (February 20, 2002). The letter also advised the applicant how to submit a full application.

In our decision on Dr. Winterberg's first Appeal, we found NNSA's argument (that the committee did not complete written evaluation reports at the pre-application stage) to be reasonable. As described above, the pre-application evaluation phase was intended to be a fast, preliminary review and screening of the pre-applications. It was designed to provide pre-applicants some idea of how their pre-application matched the defined technical scope of the project, and was not intended to be a detailed review of the entire application. Given the informal nature of the process, we found it reasonable that no documents were created. Thus, our decision found that NNSA has conducted an adequate search for responsive material. We also noted in that decision that Dr. Winterberg had indicated in his Appeal that he wanted to know the names of the reviewers at the DOE labs who reviewed his pre-application, and stated that he could file a new FOIA request for those names.

On February 13, 2003, Dr. Winterberg filed a new FOIA request "to obtain the names of the three individuals . . . from [LLNL, LANL, and SNL] . . . who allegedly had downgraded my proposal." DOE/HQ responded to the request on May 8, 2003, informing Dr. Winterberg that the NNSA Office of Defense Programs had "completed its search for documents responsive to the request. The search did not locate any responsive documents." Letter from Abel Lopez, DOE/HQ, to F. Winterberg (May 8, 2003). The present Appeal considers the adequacy of this most recent search for documents.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, we contacted NNSA and found out the following regarding its search. After receiving Dr. Winterberg's most recent request, NNSA sent an electronic mail message to each of the laboratory representatives to whom it had provided pre-applications. This message stated, in pertinent part, > NNSA has received a Freedom of Information (FOIA) request from Dr. Friedwardt Winterberg, . . . The FOIA request seeks the names of the laboratory scientists who reviewed Dr. Winterberg's pre-application.

> . . . .
> Please search your records to determine whether you have any relevant document(s), including e-mail messages, which provide information from your laboratory reviewer's categorization of Dr. Winterberg's pre-application. We are only looking for documents that pertain to the labs review of Dr. Winterberg's > pre-application. Thus, please do not send us your records about reviews of other pre-applications.

The response to this message from each of the three laboratories reported that no documents were found. NNSA explained to us that two contacts at each of the three laboratories were responsible for distributing the pre-applications to reviewers at the lab. Many reviewers were used at each laboratory, but Dr. Winterberg's pre-application (as was the case with each of the other pre-applications) was seen by only one reviewer at each laboratory. The search for documents in the present case included each of the laboratory contacts. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Andrea Kasarsky and Sherri Bingert, NNSA, and Steven Goering, OHA (June 25, 2003). Subsequent to the filing of the present Appeal, we asked NNSA to confirm that the search also extended to the reviewer at each laboratory who reviewed Dr. Winterberg's proposal. NNSA did so, and reported back to us that only one of the laboratory contacts remembered the reviewer to whom he provided Dr. Winterberg's pre-application. That contact checked with the reviewer, who also did not locate any documents responsive to Dr. Winterberg's request. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Andrea Kasarsky and Sherri Bingert, NNSA, and Steven Goering, OHA (July 15, 2003).

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that NNSA performed a diligent search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Dr. Winterberg seeks. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Friedwardt Winterberg, Case Number TFA-0032, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Nancy Denlinger
Date of Filing:	June 10, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0033

On June 10, 2003, Nancy Denlinger filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on May 6, 2003, by the Department of Energy's Ohio Field Office (Ohio). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Ms. Denlinger submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Ms. Denlinger asks that Ohio conduct an additional search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

On April 14, 2003, Ms. Denlinger filed a request for information in which she sought the medical and radiation exposure records of her deceased father, John A. Schumacher. See May 6, 2003 Determination Letter at 1. On May 6, 2003, Ohio issued a determination which stated it conducted a thorough search for all records responsive to Ms. Denlinger's request and no responsive records were located. Id. In its determination, Ohio stated that records may be in possession of the numerous companies for which Mr. Schumacher worked as a subcontractor, as indicated by Ms. Denlinger in her request. On June 10, 2003, Ms. Denlinger filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Ms. Denlinger challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Ohio. See Appeal Letter. She asserts that Mr. Schumacher was "an employee of electrical contractors who did sub-contracting for the DOE at the Mound Plant in Miamisburg, Ohio in the late 60's or 70's." Id. Ms. Delinger further asserts that during this time Mr. Schumacher was tested for radiation exposure and was required to wear protective clothing at work. Id. She asks that the OHA direct Ohio to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Ohio to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Denlinger's request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Ms. Denlinger's request for information, Ohio contacted the contractor, CH2M Hill, at the Mound Site in Miamisburg, Ohio. The contractor searched its records by name and Social Security Number and found no documents responsive to Ms. Denlinger's request. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Marian Wilcox, Ohio Field Office and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (August 6, 2003). In addition, Ohio contacted officials in the Office of Occupational Radiation Exposure at the Mound site. Officials in that office searched their database by name and Social Security Number and located no responsive records. Id. Also at the Mound site, officials searched the Radiation Exposure Intervention Reporting System, which contains radiation exposure records for all DOE facilities, as well as other paper files by name and Social Security Number. Again, no records regarding Mr. Schumacher were found. Id. Given the facts presented to us, we find that Ohio conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Ms. Denlinger's request. The information Ms. Denlinger seeks may nevertheless be in the possession of Mr. Schumacher's employers, as Ohio has pointed out, and therefore beyond the reach of the FOIA. Therefore, we must deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Nancy Denlinger, OHA Case No. TFA-0033, on June 10, 2003, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	State of Nevada
Date of Filing:	June 27, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0035

On June 27, 2003, the State of Nevada (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on May 29, 2003, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Repository Development (ORD). In that determination, ORD responded to a Request for Information filed on April 28, 2003, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORD's determination withheld portions of a responsive document requested by the Appellant. This Appeal, if granted, would require ORD to release additional information to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On April 28, 2003, the Appellant filed a request for information with ORD seeking "all documents relevant to aircraft crash assessments, analyses, etc., which would impact the proposed Yucca Mountain repository." On May 29, 2003, ORD issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing three responsive documents in their entirety. Determination Letter at 1. The ORD also released portions of a fourth responsive document, a 101 page document entitled "Consequence Analysis of Aircraft Crash into Transportation Cask" (the Report). However, the ORD withheld 78 pages of the Report under FOIA Exemptions 2, 4 and 5. Determination Letter at 1-2. On June 27, 2003, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal, which challenges ORD's withholding determinations with regard to the Report. The Appeal challenges only those withholdings made under Exemption 2.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

A. Adequacy of Determination

Once the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

In the present case, neither the redacted version of the Report that was released to the Appellant nor the Determination Letter shows which particular information was withheld under each exemption. Accordingly, neither the Appellant nor this appeal authority can discern whether the exemptions used to withhold information were appropriately applied.

B. Exemption 2

The Appeal claims that ORD's withholdings under Exemption 2 were in error. In support of this assertion, the Appeal cites the text of Exemption 2, which exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). Specifically, the Appeal contends that the Report cannot be withheld under Exemption 2 because the Report has nothing to do with the agency's personnel policies and practices. Appeal at 2. However, the courts have broadly interpreted this exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this particular test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that: (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

The Report is clearly predominantly internal in nature. The D.C. Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not] . . . set standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. United States Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam). The Report at issue here is an analysis of the potential hazards posed by aircraft to casks designed to transport high level nuclear waste and does not set standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public .

The Report meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. Environmental Protection Agency, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general legal requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d at 530-31. The Report is an assessment of the potential threats posed by aircraft to a proposed high level nuclear waste facility. Disclosure of the report has the potential to educate terrorists (and other individuals or entities seeking to harm the national security) about vulnerabilities. Therefore, releasing the report could allow terrorists to circumvent DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide a secure and safe repository for high level nuclear waste. It is well settled that information that would disclose potential security vulnerabilities can be withheld under Exemption 2. See, e.g., Schwartz v. United States Department of Treasury, 131 F. Supp. 2d 142, 150 (D.D.C. 2000) (finding Secret Service protective measures protected under Exemption 2); Voinche v. Federal Bureau of Investigation, 940 F. Supp. 323, 329 (D.D.C. 1996) (withholding information relating to the security of the U.S. Supreme Court building and the security procedures for Supreme Court Justices under Exemption 2); Institute for Policy Studies v. Department of the Air Force, 676 F. Supp. 3, 5 (D.D.C. 1987) (withholding classification guide under Exemption 2). Accordingly, we find that any information contained in the report that would educate individuals or other entities with interests adverse to the common defense and national security may be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2. As stated above, however, we cannot determine whether ORD properly relied on Exemption 2 in withholding information in this instance without knowing specifically which information was actually withheld under this exemption.

III. CONCLUSION

We are therefore remanding this portion of the Appeal to ORD. On remand, ORD must issue a new determination letter specifically describing the types of information it is withholding under each claimed exemption and specifically indicating that information which is being withheld under each exemption.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of Nevada, Case No. TFA-0035, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Office of Repository Development for further clarification in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	William D. Hooker
Date of Filing:	July 10, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0036

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that William D. Hooker filed from a determination issued to him by the Savannah River Operations Office (Savannah River). In this determination, Savannah River responded to Mr. Hooker's request for information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public on request. This Appeal, if granted, would require Savannah River to conduct another search for responsive documents.

In his request, Mr. Hooker sought a copy of documents identifying the amount of Antimony, Antimony 125 and Antimony 145 released into any of 17 bodies of water during the period from January 1, 1992 through December 31, 1999. In its response, Savannah River informed Mr. Hooker that it was unable to locate any documents that are responsive to Mr. Hooker's request. In his Appeal, Mr. Hooker challenges the adequacy of the search that was performed.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted Savannah River and Westinghouse Savannah River Corporation (WSRC), the DOE's Management and Operations contractor for the Savannah River site. We were informed that Savannah River searched its records and located no information responsive to Mr. Hooker's request. It then referred the request to WSRC, whose search of all of its business units was similarly unproductive. See memoranda of telephone conversations between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Pauline Connor, Savannah River and Adrian Smith, WSRC, on July 15 and August 6, 2003, respectively. Based on the foregoing, we conclude that remanding this matter for an additional search would not produce any responsive documents, and that Savannah River's search was adequate. We will therefore deny his Appeal.

(1) The Appeal filed by William D. Hooker in Case No. TFA-0036 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates
Date of Filing:	July 25, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0037

On July 25, 2003, Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office (OR). In that determination, OR responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OR released portions of a responsive document. The Appeal claims that an additional portion of this document exists but was not located by OR. This Appeal, if granted, would require OR to locate and release that portion of the document to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On April 27, 2002, the Appellant filed a request for information with OR seeking a number of documents. On November 22, 2002, OR issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing a number of responsive documents to the Appellant and withholding one document, "the proposal submitted by UT-Battelle, LLC, . . . that resulted in UT-Battelle, LLC, receiving the contract for [managing and operating the Oak Ridge National Laboratory]" (the Proposal) in its entirety under FOIA Exemption 3. Determination Letter at 1. On December 17, 2002, the Appellant filed an appeal of that Determination challenging OR's withholding determination under Exemption 3. On February 13, 2003, we issued a decision and order granting the Appeal in part and remanding the matter to OR. Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case Number TFA-0008, 28,006 DOE ¶ 80,271 (February 13, 2003) (Burkhalter I). In Burkhalter I, we stated

> In its determination, OR relied upon the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 [the NDAA]. Public Law 104-201, Section 821. Section 821 prohibits the release of a proposal submitted in response to a competitive solicitation. Id. However, this requirement "does not apply to any proposal that is set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract entered into between the [DOE] and the contractor that submitted the proposal." 10 U.S.C.A. § 2305. The Appellant correctly notes that the Proposal was in fact incorporated by reference into the contract between DOE and UT-Battelle. Contract No. DE-AC05-00OR22725 at Section H-15, Page 11 of 27 and Section I-71, Page 91 of 236. Accordingly, we find that the Proposal is not exempted from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997.

Burkhalter I at 2 (emphasis supplied). Accordingly, we remanded the matter to OR with instructions to "promptly release the Proposal to the Appellant or to provide a thorough explanation of any other justification for withholding the Proposal (or portions thereof)." Id.

On July 3, 2003, OR issued a new determination letter (the July 3, 2003 Determination Letter). The July 3, 2003 Determination Letter stated:

> We have completed our review of the subject Award Proposal set forth or incorporated into the subject contract by reference. Enclosed in their entirety are copies of Volume II Technical and Business Management Proposal Part A - Technical Summary and Presentation Visuals and Part B - Past Performance, Resumes and Organization Chart.
> Volume I of the subject Award Proposal is enclosed with deletions of social security number[s] of individuals listed in Volume I, Section K- Representations, Certifications and Other Statements of Offeror in accordance with 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6).

July 3, 2003 Determination Letter at 1. The present Appeal was filed on July 25, 2003. The Appeal contends

> On or about July 5, 2003, we received, by letter dated July 3, 2003, what purports to be the Proposal. (A copy of the letter and "Proposal" is attached as Exhibit III). However, the "proposal" received is incomplete. Attached in a excerpt from the Final Report to the Office of Science, dated March 31, 2001, which indicates on page 46 that the proposal was a "five-volume proposal." (See attached Exhibit IV). We received only two (2) volumes of the proposal.

Appeal at 1. (Emphasis in the original).

II. ANALYSIS

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

OR indicates that only four volumes exist: Volume I, Volume IIA, Volume IIB and Volume III. July 31, 2003 Email from Amy Rothrock, OR FOIA Officer, to Steven Fine, OHA Staff Attorney. The Appellant cites a publication by an outside source, the Research Value Mapping Program (RVMP), in support of its contention that the Proposal consisted of five volumes. However, an assertion by an outside entity, such as the RVMP, does not establish that a particular document exists in the Government's files.

The July 3, 2003 Determination Letter only identifies three of the four responsive volumes, specifically Volumes I, IIA and IIB. The Determination Letter further indicates that OR released Volumes IIA and IIB in their entirety and a redacted version of Volume I. The only information that the Determination Letter indicates is being withheld is social security numbers which it redacted from Volume I under Exemption 6. The July 3, 2003 Determination Letter fails to identify Volume III as a responsive document, even though it was part of the Proposal which, in Burkhalter I, we ordered OR to either release or withhold under a different exemption. When we contacted OR about this discrepancy, OR indicated it had determined that part of the Proposal was not incorporated into the contract and could therefore still be withheld under Exemption 3. July 31, 2003 Email from Amy Rothrock, OR FOIA Officer, to Steven Fine, OHA Staff Attorney. In other words, OR continued to withhold a portion of the Proposal (Volume III) under Exemption 3, even though we had previously found (in Burkhalter I) that the entire Proposal could not be withheld under Exemption 3. If OR was convinced that our holding in Burkhalter I was too broad, it should have filed a Motion for Reconsideration with this office instead of effectively withholding Volume III by improperly failing to identify it as responsive.

Moreover, OR issued a Determination Letter which made no mention of the fact that it was continuing to withhold a portion of the Proposal under Exemption 3. OR attempts to justify this omission by contending (1) "the intent of the NDAA (b)(3) exemption was to reduce the agency burden of reviewing portions of entire proposals line by line if they were not incorporated by reference into the follow on contract," and (2) "because the proposal was subject to our earlier determination to withhold it in its entirety under (b)(3) NDAA, I did not think that the language for withholding of the remaining portions of the proposal (Volume III) under (b)(3) after completing this second review required repeating in the second determination letter." July 31, 2003 Email form Amy Rothrock, OR FOIA Officer, to Steven Fine, OHA Staff Attorney.

These contentions are without merit. It is well settled that if the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). These requirements allow both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's reviewing of that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992). While the NDAA prevents disclosure of information contained in certain bids submitted to the Government (unless that information is incorporated by reference in the contract), the NDAA does not relieve agencies from these statutory and regulatory obligations.

By failing to (1) fully comply with our holding in Burkhalter I and (2) provide any justification of its continued withholding of Volume III, OR has deprived the Appellant of an opportunity for meaningful review of OR's response to its FOIA request. Moreover, we are concerned that OR might be depriving the Appellant access to information granted to it by the FOIA. Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to OR. On remand, OR must promptly issue a new determination letter. The new determination letter must provide a meaningful description of the contents of Volume III and then must either release it to the Appellant or withhold it (or portions thereof) under an appropriately justified FOIA exemption.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0037, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Oak Ridge Operations Office for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Judicial Watch, Inc.

Date of Filing: September 24, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0039

On September 24, 2003, Judicial Watch, Inc. (the Appellant), filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Freedom of Information/Privacy Act Group (FOI/PA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on August 19, 2003. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, FOI/PA would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On August 1, 2000, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request for all documents that refer to

> Agreements(s), contracts(s), concession(s), compensation(s), loan(s), guarantee(s), assistance, cooperation, consideration, lease(s), transfer(s), sale(s), aid, support, inducement(s), influence, reward(s), stimulus(i), solicitation(s), benefit(s), gift(s), gratuity(ies), remuneration, and/or promise(s), made or entered into since September 11, 2001, with the governments of:

Egypt	Israel	Saudi Arabia	Jordan
Qatar	Bahrain	Yemen	Oman
Iran	Turkey	Lebanon	Libya
Sudan	Djibouti	Somalia	Ethiopia
UAE	Kuwait	Cyprus	North Korea
South Korea

> in exchange for support, cooperation and/or consideration for the "War on Terror," to include but not be limited to the liberation of Afghanistan and the hunt for Taliban and Al Qaeda, and/or the Bush administration's stated policy goal of the disarmament of Iraq in accordance with the United Nations resolutions.

Request Letter dated January 6, 2003, to Abel Lopez, FOIA/PA Division, DOE, from Christopher J. Farrell, Judicial Watch, Inc. On February 5, 2003, FOI/PA responded that the search of the files of the Office of Energy Assurance, the Office of Policy and International Affairs, and the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) yielded no responsive documents. Determination Letter dated February 5, 2003, from Abel Lopez, FOI/PA, DOE, to Christopher Farrell, Judicial Watch, Inc. A search of the files of the Office of the Secretary had not been completed at the time of the determination. Id. This Appeal concerns the determination made regarding the search of the Office of the Secretary's files. Determination Letter dated August 19, 2003, from Abel Lopez, FOI/PA, DOE, to Christopher Farrell, Judicial Watch, Inc.

On September 24, 2003, the Appellant appealed the August 19, 2003 determination to our Office. Appeal Letter dated September 16, 2003, from Christopher J. Farrell, Judicial Watch, Inc., to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In the Appeal, the Appellant argues that because DOE is at the center of national and international energy policies used by the federal government, it is likely that documents responsive to the request exist. Id. The Appellant cites an article in the New York Times which stated that "The United States, seeking to ensure Turkish military cooperation in any war against Iraq, is offering at least $4 billion to compensate Turkey for economic damage it might suffer as a result of playing an active role in an American-led coalition." Id. at 1-2.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

We have contacted FOI/PA and the Office of the Secretary to determine what type of search was conducted. The Office of the Executive Secretariat indicated that it completed a "string search" of all documents both to and from the Secretary, Deputy Secretary, and Under Secretary. Electronic Mail Message sent October 20, 2003, from Sheila Brooks, Office of the Secretary, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA. A string search is a computerized search using key words to conduct the search. The search utilized the names of the countries for which the Appellant was requesting information and also the types of documents the Appellant was seeking. Voice Mail Message from Sheila Brooks to Janet R. H. Fishman, October 21, 2003. Id. All documents both to and from the Office of the Secretary reside in the computerized database which was searched. The Office was unable to find anything responsive. Based on the search that the Office of the Secretary performed, we are convinced that this Office followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in its request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Judicial Watch, Inc., on September 24, 2003, Case No. TFA-0039, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Evelyn Self
Date of Filing:	September 29, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0040

On September 29, 2003, Evelyn Self filed an Appeal from a determination the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) issued on September 15, 2003. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

In a March 26, 2003 FOIA request, Ms. Self requested the following documents pertaining to a series of incidents concerning an employee of the DOE's Office of Security:

(1) All statements from any witnesses employed by the agency;

(2) All statements by any employee of a contractor;

(3) All written correspondence, such as memorandums or letters, and emails between any and all agency personnel concerning:

a. How the investigation would be conducted;

b. The status of the investigation;

c. The findings of the investigation;

d. Discussions of the merits of any findings; and

e. Discussions of what discipline, if any, should be imposed.

Appeal at 1.

On August 22, 2003, DOE/HQ issued a determination to Ms. Self, in which it released 26 documents responsive to her request. DOE/HQ withheld information from six of the documents, citing FOIA Exemption 6. In her appeal, Ms. Self states that she is > aware of email messages and other documents that are responsive but were not included in the initial FOIA response. I request the Department initiate a more thorough search for these responsive documents. Additionally, I believe that an excessive amount of information in the interview documents have been deleted and withheld under [FOIA Exemption 6]. I request another review of the withheld portions.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of Search for Responsive Documents

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

DOE's Office of Security (SO) provided us with the following information regarding its search:

> SO believed responsive documents were located with individuals involved with the incidents cited in the original FOIA request. . . . Each person reviewed their files and produced any and all documents responsive to the FOIA request, to include email messages. . . . Even after an additional review was completed by all parties . . . , our office sent out an additional request to the original responders to please check their files and emails for one last time, to ensure that no stone was left uncovered.

Electronic mail from Kelly Kabiri, SO, to Steven Goering, OHA (October 16, 2003). SO named six individuals within SO to whom its search was directed. The appellant has named fifteen additional individuals who she believes possess documents responsive to her request. Electronic mail from Evie Self to Steven Goering, OHA (October 30, 2003). We believe that a reasonable search should extend to at least some of these individuals, for example, those involved with the incidents cited in the original FOIA request, but to whom the initial search was not directed. We will therefore remand this matter to DOE/HQ for an additional search. We are providing, under separate cover, a copy of the electronic mail from the appellant in which she names these additional individuals. On remand, a further search for responsive documents should extend to the individuals named by the appellant, or an explanation should be provided as to why those individuals would not possess documents responsive to the request.[1]

B. Application of Exemption 6 to Information Withheld from the Requester

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Fin. Management Serv., 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1056 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in disclosure in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-70.

In its August 22 determination, DOE/HQ states,

> The names, home telephone numbers and other information of individuals in documents 1, 2, 8, 9, 11, and 13 who provided information as part of an inquiry of the Department have been deleted pursuant to Exemption 6. Release of the identity of these individuals could subject them to harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions. Moreover, release of the information would not reveal any aspect of the operations or activities of the Government.

Letter from Abel Lopez, DOE/HQ, to Requester (August 22, 2003).

We agree that the individuals whose identities were protected have a strong privacy interest in remaining anonymous. The inquiry in question was conducted in response to allegations that a DOE employee had made racially insensitive remarks in the workplace. Those providing information were co-workers of the accused employee; some were DOE employees, and others were employees of [1] We are aware that a number of these individuals are contractor employees who work at DOE/HQ. This, however, does not mean that these individuals would not have access to or be able to identify records to which the appellant is entitled under the FOIA and DOE regulations. If a new search identifies documents that are determined to be contractor records not available to the requester under the FOIA or DOE regulations, this determination should be explained to the requester. See Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136 (1989); Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169 (1980); Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e) (provision of the DOE FOIA regulations under which certain contractor records are made available to FOIA requesters).

DOE contractors. Given the sensitive nature of the investigation and the potential for harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, we find that significant privacy interests exists in the identities of those individuals. See Cappabianca v. Commissioner, United States Customs Service, 847 F. Supp. 1558, 1564 (M.D. Fla. 1994) (witnesses and co-workers have substantial privacy interest in the nondisclosure of their participation in an investigation for Exemption 6 purposes). Accordingly, we find that the individuals whose identities were withheld have a significant privacy interest in maintaining their confidentiality.[2]

Having found a significant privacy interest in the identities of these individuals, we must determine whether release of this information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. The information already released to the appellant clearly sheds light on the operation and activities of the Government in conducting an internal inquiry into alleged employee misconduct. By contrast, the names of the individuals who provided information in the inquiry and other information that could identify them reveals little if anything about the activities of the Government. Weighing the significant privacy interests at stake on one hand, and the slight public interest on the other, we conclude that Exemption 6 was properly applied to protect the identities of the persons who provided information in the inquiry.

However, based on our review of the specific information withheld in this case, it is not apparent that all of the information withheld from the requester would identify the employees in question, and the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

For example, it appears that all pronouns (e.g., "he" and "she"), possessive adjectives (e.g., "his" and "her"), and titles (e.g., "Mr." and "Ms.") used to refer to the individuals in question were redacted from the documents at issue. We have previously stated that a pronoun that grammatically takes the place of the name of a person, but that does not itself name the person, is not personal information even when the name itself may be withheld. Such words, in unusual and limited situations, might describe with a degree of certainty some individual (for example, if there was only one woman in an office). In those instances, we have found that pronouns may be withheld. Eugene Maples, 26 DOE ¶ 80,159 (1997). In the present case, however, it appears that these words were withheld categorically throughout documents 1, 2, and 13.

Redacted in a similarly categorical fashion were nearly all references to the respective employers of the individuals in question (e.g., whether the individual was employed by a DOE contractor or was "a DOE employee"). There may, in fact, be individual instances where such a description would identify a particular employee. However, these redactions do not seem to have been applied on a case-by-case basis.

[2] It should be noted that scope of a privacy interest under Exemption 6 will always be dependent on the context in which it has been asserted. Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, 97 F.3d 575, 581 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (Armstrong). For example, civilian federal employees normally have no expectation of privacy concerning their names, titles and similar information. See 5 C.F.R. § 293.311. However, the name of a federal employee involved in a workplace situation of a sensitive nature might be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. See Armstrong, 97 F.3d at 582 (dicta indicating that FBI might be entitled in certain factual contexts to use a categorical rule protecting the names of FBI agents pursuant to Exemption 6).

Also withheld were the dates of many events, for example, when particular interviews took place. Again, while there may be specific circumstances where such information would reveal the identity of an individual, we do not find a basis for withholding such information as a rule.

In addition, in a number of instances, conjunctions (such as "and") between personal identifiers were withheld (e.g., document 2, pages 9, 10, 11; document 13, pages 7, 11). Non-protected segregable words may be withheld when they are so inextricably intertwined with protected material that their release would reveal "only essentially meaningless words and phrases." Neufeld v. IRS, 646 F.2d 661, 663 (D.C. Cir. 1981). However, the release of conjunctions in this case would convey a particular meaning (e.g., whether a passage is referring to one or two individuals). We see no reason such informative words should be withheld.

We also find the following specific information withheld from the requester does not appear to identify particular individuals:

(3) Document 2, page 5, last four lines. It appears that the identity of the individual is revealed elsewhere in the same document.

(4) Document 2, page 8, lines 4 through 11. This portion of the document was redacted in its entirety, though it is not clear why segregable portions could not be released without compromising the identity of any individual.

(6) Document 2, page 10, first line. The third listed individual is identified elsewhere in the same document.

(8) Document 2, page 11, 15th (first person listed) and 22nd (second person listed) line. This individual is identified elsewhere in the same document.

(9) Document 2, page 14, fifth line from bottom. It is not clear how release of this line would compromise the identity of any individual.

(10) Document 2, page 14, last three lines, and page 15, first 11 lines. This portion of the document was redacted in its entirety, though it is not clear why segregable portions could not be released without compromising the identity of any individual. Moreover, it appears that the identity of the individual referred to in this passage is revealed elsewhere in the same document.

(11) Document 2, page 15, lines 12 and 14. This individual is identified elsewhere in the same document.

(12) Document 11, 11 lines at bottom of document. This portion of the document was redacted in its entirety, though it is not clear why segregable portions could not be released without compromising the identity of any individual.

(13) Document 13, page 3, line 17, fourth through sixth words. It is not clear how release of these words would compromise the identity of any individual.

(14) Document 13, page 6, first line of third paragraph. Revealing the number of interviews conducted would not compromise the identity of any individual.

(17) Document 13, page 15, line 9. This individual is identified elsewhere in the same document.

(18) Document 13, page 16, lines 1 (after first two words) and 2. It is not clear how release of these words would compromise the identity of any individual.

(19) Document 13, page 25, second bullet, lines 2, 3 and 4. It is not clear how release of these words would compromise the identity of any individual.

(20) Document 13, page 25, end of last line before "Summary of Allegations and Determination of Credibility." It is not clear how release of these words would compromise the identity of any individual.

(21) Document 13, page 26, lines 4 (last five words) and 5. It is not clear how release of these words would compromise the identity of any individual.

(22) Document 13, page 26, last four lines, and page 27, first two lines. This portion of the document was redacted in its entirety, though it is not clear why segregable portions could not be released without compromising the identity of any individual.

III. Conclusion

For the above stated reasons, we will remand this matter to DOE/HQ, which shall issue a new determination to the appellant either releasing the information described above, or explaining with greater specificity why it should remain withheld under FOIA Exemption 6 (or any other applicable FOIA exemption).[3] On remand, DOE/HQ shall also conduct a further search for documents responsive to the appellant's request, as described above. In all other respects, the appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Evelyn Self on September 29, 2003, OHA Case Number TFA-0040, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Jo Ann Estevez

Date of Filing: October 3, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0041

On October 3, 2003, Jo Ann Estevez (Estevez) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on September 12, 2003, by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) in response to a request for documents that Estevez submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On April 16, 2003, Estevez filed a FOIA request with DOE/HQ for information that pertains to air emissions records and cloud, soot and stack records from the Sylvania Nuclear Facility that was located at Cantiague Rock Road, Hicksville, New York, from 1952 to 1967. This site was also known as the Sylvania Electric Products Inc. Facility. See FOIA Request (November 21, 2001). DOE/HQ assigned the request to the Office of Environment, Safety and Health (EH) and also to the Office of Site Closure in the Office of Environmental Management (EM). Letter from DOE/HQ to Estevez (September 12, 2003) (Determination). On September 12, 2003, DOE/HQ informed Estevez that DOE/EM and DOE/EH were unable to locate any responsive information. Estevez then filed this Appeal. In the Appeal, Estevez challenged the adequacy of the searches and asks OHA to direct DOE/HQ to search again for additional information regarding the Sylvania Nuclear Facility.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85

(8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

DOE/HQ informed us that after assigning the request to EH, EH stated that it had no responsive material, and suggested that the program belonged to EM. Memorandum of Telephone Message from Carolyn Lawson, DOE/HQ (October 24, 2003). EM searched but found no responsive records regarding the Hicksville location. See Memorandum from Don Mackenzie, DOE Ohio Office, to J. Boone, EM (September 2, 2003). This office asked EM if any other DOE facility might have responsive records. Electronic Mail Message from Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA to Joni Boone, EM (November 3, 2003). EM's Office of Site Closure in Ohio stated that there was a very slight possibility that the Savannah River Office may have some responsive information because Sylvania Corning worked for Savannah River during the 1950s and 1960s. Electronic Mail Message from Don Mackenzie, DOE Ohio Office, to Joni Boone, EM (November 4, 2003). In addition, a contractor discovered three additional documents related to the Sylvania Corning facility in Hicksville, New York, that were not included in the "site specific file" for that facility that had been searched previously. Electronic Mail Message from Charles Young, ASE Inc., to Don Mackenzie, DOE/EM (October 30, 2003). The contractor also found a file with two documents relating to the Hicksville site in a collection of "working papers" from the 1960s and 1970s. Id. The contractor suggested that these additional documents "may be of particular significance to those who submitted previous requests for information pertaining to the Hicksville operation." Id. EM asked that we determine if any of the new documents were responsive to Estevez's request. We discussed the discovery with the requester, who determined that three documents would be responsive to her request, and we forwarded this information to EM. 1/ See Electronic Mail Message from Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA, to Joni Boone, EM (November 4, 2003).

Accordingly, this Appeal is granted in part and this matter is remanded to DOE/HQ to release any additional responsive material to Estevez or to issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of any information that it redacted from any responsive material it provides to the requester.

1/ Estevez concluded that the following documents were responsive to her request: (1) the AEC Annual Report for FY 1953; (2) Decontamination of SYLCOR 293 Area; and (3) May 2, 1973 AEC Letter re: Radiological Cleanup and Site Disposal Actions". Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA, and Estevez (November 4, 2003).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Jo Ann Estevez on October 3, 2003, OHA Case Number TFA-0041, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the FOIA/Privacy Act Group for processing in accordance with the guidance in the Decision above.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: William Hooker

Date of Filing: October 28, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0042

On October 28, 2003, William Hooker appealed a determination issued by the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his appeal, Mr. Hooker contends that SR had failed to conduct an adequate search for documents that were responsive to a FOIA request he had filed. For the reasons detailed below, we find that SR conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and will deny the appeal filed by Mr. Hooker.

I. Background

Mr. Hooker filed a request in which he sought a copy of the Certificate of Analysis performed by General Engineering Laboratories (GEL) for the Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) EPD-Building 773-58A in 1995. See Determination Letter at 1. In this request, Mr. Hooker stated that this work was done under Project Description Analytical Services for Environmental Characterization WSRC00193. He later requested copies of all Certificates of Analysis completed by GEL in 1995. Id. On October 10, 2003, SR issued a determination which stated that SR contacted WSRC which in turn contacted GEL to search its files. Id. WSRC found no responsive documents. In his Appeal, Mr. Hooker challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by SR. Id.

II. Analysis

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. See, e.g. Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at SR to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed. Upon receiving Mr. Hooker's Request for Information, SR contacted WSRC which then contacted GEL to conduct a search for responsive documents. As stated in SR's determination letter, GEL informed WSRC that it does not and is not required to maintain records longer than five years. It further stated that in 1995, lab results were received electronically and placed into the site database, GIMS. Copies of all data and any Certificates of Analysis were sent to a data handling subcontractor. Copies were not routinely sent to a central site repository. GEL also stated that the data handling subcontractor does not maintain records for longer than five years after downloading the information. Thus, they do not have any information from 1995. In addition, WSRC has informed us that the Appellant has not identified the specific projects which generated the Certificates of Analysis he is interested in obtaining. Without knowing this information, WSRC has stated that it would have to conduct a manual search of tens of thousands of pages of information, a task not required by FOIA. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Pauline Conner, SR and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (January 7, 2004); Record of Telephone Conversation between Adrian Smith, WSRC and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (January 13, 2004).

Given the facts presented to us, we are convinced that SR conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Hooker's request. Accordingly, Mr. Hooker's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by William Hooker, OH Case No. TFA-0042, on October 28, 2003, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Sajit Gandhi
Date of Filing:	October 24, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0043

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Sajit Gandhi from a determination made by the Director, Policy and Internal Controls Management, National Nuclear Security Administration (hereinafter referred to as "the Director"). This determination was issued in response to a request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Mr. Gandhi requests that we review the Director's determination that certain documents are exempt in their entirety from mandatory disclosure.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document that is exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

In his FOIA request, Mr. Gandhi sought access to documents relating to the Khmelnitsky 2 and Rovno 4 (K2R4) Nuclear Power Project of the Ukraine. In his determination, the Director identified seven documents as responsive to the request. Documents One and Two were provided to Mr. Gandhi and documents Three through Seven were withheld in their entirety under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5). Exemption 5 shields from mandatory disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The determination issued to Mr. Gandhi points out that Exemption 5 incorporates the deliberative process privilege, which protects from mandatory disclosure advice and opinions that are part of the process by which agency decisions are made. It adds that the withheld documents are draft documents, which by their nature are pre-decisional and deliberative and reflect only the tentative view of their authors, and not final agency policy on matters they discuss. In his Appeal, Mr. Gandhi requests that we review this determination.

II. Analysis

A. Applicability of Exemption 5

As indicated in the determination letter, Exemption 5 encompasses the governmental deliberative process privilege, as well as the attorney-client and attorney work-product privileges. See, e.g., Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The deliberative process privilege shields from mandatory disclosure documents that are "predecisional" and "deliberative," i.e., that were created during agency consideration of a proposed action and that were part of a decision making process. Darci L. Rock, 13 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1985); Texaco, Inc., 1 DOE ¶ 80,242 (1978). The privilege thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect purely factual material. There are, however, exceptions to this rule. The first exception is for factual material that was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual material that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. Department of Health and Human Services, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

In order to determine whether this Exemption was properly applied, we have reviewed the five withheld documents. We find that Documents Three and Five through Seven were properly withheld. They are clearly drafts, and consist primarily of opinions and recommendations concerning United States policy as it relates to the K2R4 Project and other Chernobyl-related issues. Although these documents do contain some factual material, it is inextricably intertwined with deliberative material, such that release of the factual material would compromise the deliberative process involved. However, Document Four consists primarily of factual material concerning the April 26, 1986 nuclear accident at the Chernobyl plant and its aftermath. It is not inextricably intertwined with exempt, deliberative material. However, based on the information before us, we are unable to determine whether the first exception applies, i.e., whether the factual material was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process.

We will therefore remand this matter to the Headquarters FOI and Privacy Acts Group for transmittal to the Director. On remand, the Director should review Document Four, determine whether release of the factual material in the document would reveal the deliberative process involved, and issue a new determination to Mr. Gandhi. If, after further review, the Director continues to believe that the document should be withheld in whole or in part, he should specify the deliberative process of which the document is a part and describe the manner in which release of any withheld information would compromise that process.

III. Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

We find that release of Documents Three, Five, Six and Seven would not be in the public interest. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the subject matter of the documents, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the withheld material is composed mainly of predecisional, non-factual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld material is far outweighed by the chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. Accordingly, we conclude that release of the withheld information would not be in the public interest.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Sajit Gandhi on October 24, 2003 is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE's FOI and Privacy Acts Group for transmittal to the Director, Policy and Internal Controls Management, National Nuclear Security Administration for further proceedings consistent with the guidelines set forth in this Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are located, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Heart of America Northwest

Date of Filing: October 24, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0044

On October 24, 2003, Heart of America Northwest (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on September 26, 2003, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Ohio Field Office (OFO). In that determination, OFO responded to a Request for Information filed on November 21, 2002, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OFO's determination released several responsive documents to the Appellant. However, OFO redacted information from these documents under FOIA Exemptions 2 and 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require OFO to release that information withheld under Exemption 2 to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On November 21, 2002, the Appellant filed a twelve-part request for information with OFO. FOIA Request No. OH 03-015 at 1. On November 26, 2003, OFO issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing a number of responsive documents to the Appellant. OFO withheld some information under FOIA Exemption 6 from several of these documents. The Appeal does not contest these withholdings under Exemption 6. OFO did, however, withhold a portion of one document, entitled "Battelle Columbus Laboratory (BCL) Remote-Handled Transuranic Waste Shipments to Hanford Site" under Exemption 2. Specifically, OFO withheld, under Exemption 2, that portion of the document (the "Routing Section") which describes the route to be used to transport nuclear materials from BCL to the DOE's Hanford Site. On October 24, 2003, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal which challenges OFO's withholding determinations under Exemption 2.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

Only Exemption 2 is at issue in the present case. Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that: (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

The Routing Section is clearly predominantly internal in nature. The D.C. Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not] . . . set standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. United States Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The Routing Section neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel.

The Routing Section meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. Environmental Protection Agency, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general legal requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d at 530-31.

Disclosure of the Routing Section risks allowing terrorists to circumvent DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe transportation for nuclear materials. Although it is obvious that the Appellant has no such intentions, if DOE were to release this document to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public that requested it. Accordingly, we find that the Routing Section can be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Heart of America Northwest, Case No. TFA-0044, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Ivan Rolig

Date of Filing: November 24, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0046

Ivan Rolig filed an Appeal from a determination that the Nevada Site Office of the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued on November 14, 2003. In that determination, the Nevada Site Office denied a request for information that the Appellant had submitted on October 27, 2003, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. That information was withheld after the Nevada Site Office determined that the document contained unclassified controlled nuclear information (UCNI). This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the information that the NNSA withheld from those documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On October 27, 2003, Mr. Rolig requested, among other documents, a copy of the Safety Analysis Report for the Device Assembly Facility at the Nevada Test Site, Las Vegas, Nevada, DAF SAR-001-193-5394C, dated March 1995. The Nevada Site Office, which had control over that document, responded to the request by withholding the entire 229-page document from Mr. Rolig. In his November 14, 2003 determination letter, the director of the Nevada Site Office's Office of Public Affairs stated that the document contained UCNI, the disclosure of which is restricted by the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq., and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3.

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the report described above. In his Appeal, Mr. Rolig contends that "[t]he report is an unclassified document and should be made available to [him] in the best interest of the public." He also states that the Atomic Energy Act itself provides for the release of information to "'insure the continued conduct of research and development and training . . . and to assist in the acquisition of an ever-expanding fund of theoretical and practical knowledge."

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 29 DOE ¶ 80,171 (2004); National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). Section 148 of the Atomic Energy Act directs the Department of Energy to issue regulations or orders to protect from unauthorized dissemination information that has been determined to contain UCNI. 42 U.S.C. § 2168(a). These regulations appear at 10 C.F.R. Part 1017.

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director reviewed the document that Mr. Rolig requested.

According to the Director, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, the requested document contains UCNI. The information that the DOE identified as UCNI concerns the security details, floor plans and design specifications of a building that is used in atomic energy defense programs. The DOE also determined, however, that the majority of the document's content is not UCNI. The Director has provided this Office with a copy of the document from which the UCNI has been deleted. Beside each deletion, "DOE (b)(3)" has been written in the margin of the document. The denying official for these withholdings is Marshall O. Combs, Director, Office of Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the DOE to continue withholding portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Director has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure.

Nevertheless, the Director has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

In view of the Director's findings, and at his suggestion, we have remanded this document to the Nevada Site Office for a new review, in which it must consider whether the FOIA dictates that other, previously withheld portions of the document should not be released to Mr. Rolig. After completing its review, the Nevada Site Office should either release the currently redacted version of the requested document or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from the document it provides to Mr. Rolig. Mr. Rolig will have the opportunity to appeal that determination, if he so desires. Accordingly, Mr. Rolig's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ivan Rolig on November 24, 2003, Case No. TFA-0046, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The Nevada Site Office of the National Nuclear Security Administration shall review the redacted version of the document entitled Safety Analysis Report for the Device Assembly Facility at the Nevada Test Site, Las Vegas, Nevada, DAF SAR-001-193-5394C, dated March 1995, bearing markings indicating where all Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information has been properly deleted. Upon completing its review, the Nevada Site Office shall either release that redacted version in its entirety or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from the copy it provides to Mr. Rolig.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Citadel Energy Products, LCC

Date of Filing: November 26, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0048

On November 26, 2003, Citadel Energy Products, LCC (CEP), filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Energy Information Administration (EIA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on October 24, 2003. In its determination, EIA denied CEP's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require EIA to release the information it withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that is required to be withheld or may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. BACKGROUND

In a letter dated August 27, 2003, CEP submitted a FOIA request to EIA for "(i) the actual sum total of working gas in each geographical region reported in Form 912s on a weekly basis and (ii) the actual sum total of working gas in each region reported in Form 191s on a monthly basis by those parties required by the EIA to submit Form 912s." Request Letter dated August 27, 2003, from Jeffrey W. Mayes, Attorney for CEP, to Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA / Privacy Act Office, DOE. No individual firm's data was sought. CEP sought aggregated data by regions, for the period from the time EIA began gathering the data until the present. If the information CEP requested was not available on any existing document, alternatively, CEP requested redacted copies of the Forms 191 and 912.

On October 24, 2003, EIA denied the request. EIA withheld the information, both aggregate data and individual form data, claiming it was exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4. EIA claimed that the information CEP was seeking is protected because it was "commercial or financial information obtained from a person [which is] privileged or confidential." In its Appeal, CEP disputes the withholding of information under Exemption 4. First, CEP asserts that EIA did not explain its withholding of the aggregated data. Appeal dated November 26, 2003, from Jeffrey W. Mayes, Attorney for CEP, to George B. Breznay, Director, OHA, at 8 (Appeal). Secondly, CEP argues that EIA failed to show that its ability to obtain the information in the future would be impaired. Id. at 6.

II. ANALYSIS

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is (1) "commercial" or "financial," (2) "obtained from a person," and (3) "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government under non-voluntary conditions is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (i) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information that is provided to an agency voluntarily is considered "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. Because the two forms involved here are mandatory filings under the Federal Energy Administration Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-275), we find that the withheld information was involuntarily submitted to EIA. BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 at 80,796 (1999); see William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999). Thus, as we have held previously, for this information to be properly withheld under Exemption 4, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement for Exemption 4 protection is that the withheld information must be "commercial or financial." Courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (citing Washington Post Co. v. HHS, 690 F.2d 252, 266 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Second, the information must be "obtained from a person." "Person" refers to a wide range of entities, including corporate entities. Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979).

Finally, to qualify for Exemption 4 protection under National Parks, information must also be "confidential." Withheld information is "confidential" if it meets the test set out in National Parks. In this case, the withheld information would be considered "confidential" if release would either (a) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters or (b) impair EIA's ability to obtain the necessary information in the future. Analyzing whether release would cause substantial competitive harm involves two elements: 1) whether the submitters face actual competition and 2) whether disclosure would likely cause substantial competitive injury. National Parks and Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 679 (1976) (National Parks II). Pertinent to this case, the determination to withhold information under Exemption 4 must adequately justify the withholding by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. R.E.V. Eng Services, Case No. VFA-0626, 28 DOE ¶ 80,131 (2000); Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 at 80,622 (1995); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,527 (1984).

In the present case, the Determination Letter provides only one statement implying that the aggregate data CEP requested are exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, because their release would negatively impact the quality of the data contained in EIA's Weekly Natural Gas Storage Report. We have previously found this type of conclusory explanation insufficient. Id. at 80,528. Arnold & Porter requires that an explanation be set forth showing how the exemption applied to the specific document. That explanation must show that serious thought was given to the reasons justifying the withholding of each document. Id. at 80,529. In addition, EIA neither affirmed or denied that a document existed containing the aggregate information CEP seeks. Further, it failed to specifically provide any explanation of how Exemption 4 applied to the aggregate information, if it exists. We will remand the matter to EIA for a description of the relevant document or documents and an explanation of how the exemption applies.

III. CONCLUSION

We are remanding the matter to EIA for identification of any document that contains the requested aggregate data, and for an adequate justification stating how Exemption 4 applies to any such documents. We have not made a determination on whether copies of the Forms 191 and 912 filed with EIA since it began gathering such forms can be withheld under Exemption 4. If a document containing the aggregate information exists, EIA should issue a new determination releasing the document or properly justifying withholding the requested information. If no such document exists, EIA should issue a determination stating that no document exists. CEP shall have 30 days from that date to appeal EIA's October 24, 2003 determination withholding the forms based on Exemption 4.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Citadel Energy Products, LCC, on November 26, 2003, Case No. TFA-0048, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Energy Information Administration of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	State of Nevada
Date of Filing:	December 9, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0050

On December 9, 2003, the State of Nevada (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on November 14, 2003, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Repository Development (ORD). In that determination, ORD responded to a Request for Information filed on August 14, 2003, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORD's determination released several responsive documents to the Appellant. However, ORD withheld eight documents under FOIA Exemption 5. This Appeal, if granted, would require ORD to release that information to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On August 14, 2003, the Appellant filed a request for information with ORD seeking a document entitled "Criticality Potential Curve Draft Report" (the Draft Report). In addition, the Request sought "all supporting documents, calculations, or analyses prepared in connection with this report." Determination Letter at 1. On October 6, 2003, ORD issued its initial response to the Request (the Response). Accompanying the Response was a copy of the Draft Report. The Response further explained that ORD had not completed its review of the supporting documents, calculations and analyses.

On November 14, 2003, ORD issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing five responsive documents to the Appellant. The Determination letter also withheld eight documents under FOIA Exemption 5's deliberative process privilege. On December 9, 2003, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal which challenges ORD's withholding determinations under Exemption 5.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 5 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). In order to qualify for withholding under Exemption 5, information must meet two conditions: it must be an inter-agency or intra-agency document, i.e., its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it. Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001).

A. Whether the Eight Documents Withheld by ORD are "Inter-agency or Intra-agency Memorandums"

The eight documents withheld by ORD were apparently prepared by outside consultants. Generally, documents received from outside the government are not inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums. In some circumstances, however, documents received from outside the agency are considered to be inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums. In Klamath, the Supreme Court noted that in some cases courts have found that communications between the government and outside consultants hired by them are, in effect, inter-agency or intra-agency documents and therefore protected by Exemption 5. Noting further that "in such cases, the records submitted by outside consultants played essentially the same part in an agency's process of deliberation as documents prepared by agency personnel might have done," the Court noted:

> [T]he fact about the consultant in the typical cases is that the consultant does not represent an interest of its own, or the interest of any other client, when it advises the agency that hires it. Its only obligations are to truth and its sense of what good judgment calls for, and in those respects the consultant functions just as an employee would be expected to do.

Id., at 1066-67. In contrast, the Court in Klamath found that communications between an agency and an outside entity that was not acting as an objective consultant are clearly not inter-agency or intra-agency documents. Id., at 1067-69. Turning to the present case, it is clear that the eight documents withheld by ORD are "inter-agency or intra-agency" communications pursuant to Exemption 5. The information conveyed in these cases is scientific and logistical in nature and clearly was not meant to represent the consultant's interest, but rather discusses the subject matter for which the DOE procured the consultant's services. Therefore, the eight documents withheld by ORD are inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums.

B. Whether the Eight Documents Withheld by ORD Can be Withheld Under the Deliberative Process Privilege

Even if the information that ORD withheld under Exemption 5 is part of the agency's inter-agency or intra-agency communications, it still cannot be properly withheld under Exemption 5 unless it falls within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it.

Among the privileges incorporated by the courts under Exemption 5 is the deliberative process privilege. It is this privilege upon which ORD bases its Exemption 5 claim in this case. The deliberative process privilege permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974) (Sears). It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). The privilege protects not only documents, but the integrity of the deliberative process itself. See, e.g., National Wildlife Federation v. United States Forest Service, 861 F.2d 114, 1119 (9th Cir. 1988); Schell v. HHS, 843 F.2d 933, 940 (6th Cir. 1988); Dudman Communications Corp. v. Department of the Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565, 1568 (D.C. Cir. 1987). In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional nature of a document is not altered by the fact that the agency made a subsequent final decision or even if no decision was made at all. See, e.g., Federal Open Market Committee v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340, 360 (1979); May v. Department of the Air Force, 777 F.2d 1012, 1014-15 (5th Cir. 1985); Cuccaro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F. 2d 355, 357 (3d Cir.1985). The Supreme Court stated in Sears,

> Our emphasis on the need to protect pre-decisional documents does not mean that the existence of the privilege turns on the ability of an agency to identify a specific decision in connection with which a memorandum is prepared. Agencies are, and properly should be, engaged in a continuing process of examining their policies; this process will generate memoranda containing recommendations which do not ripen into agency decisions; and the lower courts should be wary of interfering with this process.

Each of the documents withheld by ORD under the deliberative process privilege is both predecional and deliberative. Since the request sought "all supporting documents, calculations, or analyses prepared in connection with the [Draft Report]," by definition, all responsive documents are clearly predecisional and part of the deliberative process which led to the issuance of the Draft Report. Moreover, our review of the withheld documents confirms their deliberative and predecisional nature.

The first document is a one page printed copy of a memo dated March 29, 1998. The first sentence of this document states "Here is a draft of a presentation on . . . that I'd like to see added to the next meeting's agenda." Since it is a essentially a discussion of a draft document, it is clearly predecisional and deliberative in nature. The second document is an eight page printed copy of the draft Powerpoint presentation itself. For similar reasons, it too is clearly predecisional and deliberative.

The third document is a one page printed copy of another memo dated March 30, 1998. This document contains a theoretical discussion of engineering issues. It is also clearly predecisional and deliberative. The fourth document is a one page printed copy of a memo also dated March 30, 1998. This memo is a discussion of logistical issues concerning the above-mentioned presentation. It too, is clearly predecisional and deliberative. The fifth document is a one page printed copy of a memo dated March 9, 1998. It communicates the author's opinion of several options for analyzing a particular engineering issue. It is clearly predecisional and deliberative.

The sixth document is a one page printed copy of a memo dated March 9, 1998. This document articulates an engineer's opinion of potential results of a particular event. As an opinion speculating upon a hypothetical event, most of this document is clearly predecisional and deliberative. However, the second to last sentence of this email contains factual information. Such information cannot generally be withheld under the deliberative process privilege. See, e.g., Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 867. However, there are two circumstances under which the courts allow agencies to withhold factual material in an otherwise "deliberative" document. The first such circumstance occurs when the author of a document selects specific facts out of a larger set of facts and the selection of the facts is itself part of the deliberative process. See, e.g., Montrose Chemical Corp. v. Train, 491 F.2d 63, 71 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The second of these circumstances occurs when factual information is inextricably intertwined with deliberative information that its release would reveal the agency's deliberations. See, e.g., Wolfe v. Department of Health and Human Services, 839 F.2d 768, 774-77 (D.C. Cir. 1988). The release of this factual information would reveal both the substance of the agency's deliberations as well as the opinions of the document's author.

The seventh document is a one page table setting forth a series of estimates of the values of certain measurements in five hypothetical cases. It too, is clearly predecisional and deliberative. The eighth document is a one page memo dated February 26, 1998. This document expresses the opinion of the author concerning the process by which a specific engineering issue is to be analyzed. It is clearly predecisional and deliberative.

Several of the withheld documents contain names of individuals. The names of these individuals are factual in nature and therefore cannot properly be withheld under the deliberative process privilege. However, the identities of individuals can often be withheld under FOIA Exemption 6. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the present Appeal to the ORD. On remand, ORD shall either segregate and release the names of these individuals or issue a new determination letter withholding them under any other applicable exemptions to the FOIA.

Conclusion

Most of the information withheld by the ORD is predecisional and deliberative and was therefore properly withheld under Exemption 5. However, the information revealing the names of individuals is not predecisional or deliberative. Accordingly, we are remanding that portion to the ORD for further consideration.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Valiant Detective and Security Agency

Date of Filing: December 10, 2003

Case Number: TFA-0051

On December 10, 2003, Valiant Detective and Security Agency (Valiant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on November 7, 2003, by the National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination concerned a request for information that Valiant submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, NETL would be ordered to release the requested information or to issue a new determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

Valiant filed a FOIA request seeking contract information regarding K-Ray Security, Inc., Contract No. DE-AC2600NT40780. In its November 7, 2003 determination letter, NETL identified a number of documents responsive to Valiant's request. However, NETL withheld portions of this information pursuant to Exemptions 2 and 4 of the FOIA. See November 7, 2003 Determination Letter.

On December 10, 2003, Valiant filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In its Appeal, Valiant challenges NETL's withholding of information it believes is non-proprietary. Specifically, Valiant asserts that "once awarded, a contract file and all of its contents fall into the public domain." See Appeal Letter at 1. Valiant asks that the OHA direct NETL to release the withheld information.

II. Analysis

The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper, and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of the searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify any exemption under which information was withheld. Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,797 (1996). It is well established that a FOIA determination must contain a reasonably specific justification for withholding material that is responsive to a FOIA request. See Deborah L. Abrahamson, 23 DOE ¶ 80,147 (1993). A specific justification is necessary to permit the requesting party to prepare a reasoned appeal and to allow this Office to perform an effective review of the initial agency determination. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id. In addition, the FOIA requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material).

In the present case, NETL withheld responsive information under Exemptions 2 and 4 of the FOIA. In its determination letters, NETL provided Valiant with overly vague explanations regarding how Exemptions 2 and 4 apply to the responsive information. Instead of providing specific justification for applying Exemptions 2 and 4 to the material withheld in this case, NETL has merely restated the language of Exemptions 2 and 4, without adequately explaining the reasons why NETL concluded that the responsive information is exempt from disclosure under the provisions of the FOIA. We find these explanations to be insufficiently informative and short of what is legally required.

Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to NETL either to release to Valiant all of the information responsive to its request or to issue a new determination adequately supporting the withholdings of the information. If a new determination is issued, NETL should include, for each portion of withheld information, a statement of the reason for denial, a specific explanation of how any applicable exemption applies to the information withheld and a statement why discretionary release is not appropriate. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1). NETL should further review each document for the possible segregation and release of additional non-exempt material. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(3).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Valiant Detective and Security Agency, OHA Case No. TFA-0051, on December 10, 2003, is hereby granted in part as set forth below in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Energy Technology Laboratory of the Department of Energy, which shall either release the responsive information withheld in its November 7, 2003 determination or issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Jeanna L. Gann
Date of Filing:	December 29, 2003
Case Number:	TFA-0052

On December 29, 2003, Jeanna L. Gann filed an Appeal from a determination the DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office (DOE/OR) issued on November 24, 2003. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Ms. Gann requested from DOE/OR records pertaining to her deceased father, Herschel Leo Lovvorn, who worked for the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), a predecessor agency to the DOE, at Oak Ridge, Tennessee. In its response, DOE/OR informed Ms. Gann that "a search of [DOE/OR] was conducted. However, the only information that could be located is Mr. Lovvorn's employment card. A copy of this file is enclosed." Letter from Amy L. Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Jeanna L. Gann (November 24, 2003). In the present appeal, Ms. Gann challenges "the adequacy of the search for my father's employment records." Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Thus, upon receiving the present Appeal, we contacted DOE/OR to inquire as to the search it conducted in response to Ms. Gann's request. DOE/OR provided the following description of its search:

> For FOIA Request 02-082, Herschel L. Lovvorn, we sent a request for records to the East Tennessee Technology Park (formerly the Oak Ridge K-25 Plant), the Oak Ridge Y-12 Plant, the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, our DOE Office of Safeguards and Security and our Records Holding area where the archived records are kept. As a result of this search, an employment card was located, and some additional information was provided to us from our DOE Worker's Advocacy Office.
> For each office that we send a request to, we ask that they respond with a "no records" response if no information is found, which we keep as a record for our files. The searches are generally done on computer data bases and some manual searches are done as well. The information the requestor provides on the Freedom of Information Act request forms, the name, social security number, dates of employment, etc., is used to conduct the searches.

Electronic mail from Leah Ann Schmidlin, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (January 7, 2004).[*] DOE/OR has confirmed that those search procedures were followed in the present case. Electronic mail from Leah Ann Schmidlin, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (January 22, 2004).

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that DOE/OR performed a diligent search of locations under its jurisdiction where responsive documents were most likely to exist. Thus, we conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Ms. Moore sought.

However, in her appeal, Ms. Gann indicated that her father also worked for the AEC at Fernald (Ohio), Los Alamos (New Mexico), and Germantown (Maryland) during his tenure with the AEC. DOE/OR has therefore forwarded Ms. Gann's request to the DOE offices (Fernald, Albuquerque, and DOE Headquarters, respectively) that would have responsibility for any other records within the DOE complex that pertain to Mr. Lovvorn. Those offices will provide separate responses to Ms. Gann upon completion of their searches. Ms. Gann will have the opportunity to file an appeal to this office from each of those responses.

[*] The "additional information" from the worker advocacy office to which this email refers are claim records compiled for the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program. Electronic mail from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (December 31, 2003). These records were not provided to Ms. Gann in DOE/OR November 24, 2003 response, but have since been provided in a supplemental response from DOE/OR.

Accordingly, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Jeanna L. Gann, Case Number TFA-0052, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Beverly Ann Thacker

Date of Filing: February 12, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0053

On February 12, 2004, Beverly Ann Thacker (Thacker) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on February 3, 2004, by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a request for documents that Thacker submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Oak Ridge perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On January 8, 2004, Thacker made a FOIA request via telephone to Oak Ridge for a copy of the following records pertaining to her deceased father, Billy D. Jones: medical, personnel, radiation exposure, chest x-rays, industrial hygiene, and personnel security file. Telephone Request (January 7, 2004). Thacker requests verification of her father's records for use in the DOE Employee's Worker Compensation Program. According to Thacker, between April 1944 and October 1945, Mr. Jones was employed at the K-25 location of the Oak Ridge site by the following subcontractors: (1) Ford, Bacon & Davis; (2) J.A. Jones; and (3) L. K. Comstock Co. Inc. & Bryant Electric Co. Inc. On February 3, 2004, Oak Ridge sent Thacker a letter explaining that it had conducted a search but found no responsive material. Thacker appealed that determination on February 12, 2004, arguing that her father's military discharge papers indicated that he had worked at Oak Ridge prior to entering the Army Air Corps in October 1945. Letter from Thacker to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (February 12, 2004) (Appeal). This led Thacker to conclude that there should be records relating to her father's work at K-25 because everyone residing on or working on the Oak Ridge Reservation at that time required identification. Id. In the Appeal, Thacker challenged the adequacy of the search and asks OHA to direct Oak Ridge to search again for responsive material regarding her father's alleged employment at the Oak Ridge site.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted Oak Ridge regarding the search for responsive material. Oak Ridge informed us that they searched all sites and record repositories (DOE Records Holding Area, Oak Ridge Associated Universities, K-25, X-10 and Y-12) and all Privacy Systems of Records (DOE-5, DOE-33, DOE-35, DOE-43, DOE-71, DOE-72, DOE-73). The DOE Records Holding Area repository and the Oak Ridge Associated Universities Centers for Epidemiological Research have paper and electronic data search capabilities for employees of major and prime contractor companies from the 1940s. Both databases can be searched by name, Social Security number, and company name. Oak Ridge searched on those identifiers but found no record in those files of Mr. Jones or of any employees of the companies mentioned in Thacker's request. Electronic mail message from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge FOIA Officer, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 23, 2004). Oak Ridge also searched the personnel security clearance assurance index card files. These files did contain records on J. A. Jones employees from the 1940s, stating their clearance level and other information. Id. However, the files did not contain any information related to Mr. Jones. Id. Oak Ridge thus concluded that Thacker's father was not an employee of J. A. Jones, and that the other companies named in the request may have been subcontractors to J.A. Jones. Id.

Oak Ridge emphasized that they have conducted hundreds of FOIA requests for records of subcontractor employees in the last three years. Id. According to Oak Ridge, contractors did not retain records on subcontractor employees and the companies took their records with them at the end of the war. Oak Ridge stated that Thacker did not mention in her original request that her father entered the Army in 1945. Considering this new information, Oak Ridge suggests that Thacker submit a request to the Army FOIA office, since the Army may have had contracts with the subcontractors named in the request. Id. at 2.

Based on our analysis of the search as explained above, we find that Oak Ridge has conducted an adequate search for responsive material. Thacker indicated that her father worked for a subcontractor, and Oak Ridge has offered a credible explanation for the absence of subcontractor records in its files. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Beverly Ann Thacker on February 12, 2004, OHA Case Number TFA-0053, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates

Date of Filing: February 18, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0054

On February 18, 2004 , Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office (OR). In that determination, OR responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OR released portions of a responsive document, but continued to withhold other portions of that Document under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require OR to release those portions of the document to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On April 27, 2002, the Appellant filed a request for information with OR seeking a number of documents. On November 22, 2002, OR issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing a number of responsive documents to the Appellant and withholding one document, "the proposal submitted by UT-Battelle, LLC, . . . that resulted in UT-Battelle, LLC, receiving the contract for [managing and operating the Oak Ridge National Laboratory]" (the Proposal), in its entirety under FOIA Exemption 3. Determination Letter at 1. On December 17, 2002, the Appellant filed an appeal of that Determination challenging OR's withholding of the Proposal. On February 13, 2003, we issued a decision and order holding that OR had improperly withheld the Proposal under Exemption 3. Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0008, 28 DOE ¶ 80,271 (February 13, 2003) (Burkhalter I). Accordingly, we remanded the matter to OR with instructions to "promptly release the Proposal to the Appellant or to provide a thorough explanation of any other justification for withholding the Proposal (or portions thereof)." Id.

On July 3, 2003, OR issued a new determination letter (the July 3, 2003 Determination Letter). On July 25, 2003, the Appellant filed an appeal of the July 3, 2003 Determination Letter, contending that OR had failed to identify three responsive documents, Volumes III, IV and V of the Proposal. On September 12, 2003, we issued a decision and order granting the July 3, 2003 Appeal in part and remanding the matter to OR. Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0037, 28 DOE ¶ 80,302 (September 12, 2003) (Burkhalter II). In Burkhalter II, we found that OR had failed to fully comply with our order in Burkhalter I. Id. Specifically, we found that OR had effectively withheld Volume III of the Proposal by improperly failing to identify it as responsive. Id. Accordingly, we remanded the matter to OR instructing it to promptly issue a new determination letter which "must either release to the Appellant the contents of Volume III or provide a meaningful description of any portion of the contents of Volume III it determines to withhold under an appropriately justified FOIA exception." Id. (emphasis supplied). On January 21, 2004, OR issued a determination letter releasing a redacted copy of Volume III to the Appellant. However, OR deleted portions of this document under Exemptions 4 and 6. On February 18, 2004, the Appellant filed the present appeal. The Appellant contends that OR has improperly withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 6. Appeal at 1.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemptions 4 and 6 are at issue in the present case.

A. Exemption 4

In its January 21, 2004 Determination Letter, OR withholds portions of Volume III under Exemption 4. It indicates that the information it is withholding under Exemption 4 consists of "business-sensitive commercial information that is proprietary to [a DOE contractor and its business partners]." Determination Letter at 1. Specifically, OR claims

> Two withheld audit reports contained in Volume III, if released, would provide competitors with insight into the strengths and weaknesses of [a DOE Contractor] and its partners and reveal internal accounting practices that are proprietary to these entities. Providing a competitor with percentages, labor rates, overhead, fringe benefits, compensation data, transition cost calculation methods, and similar commercial and financial data contained throughout Volume III would cause substantial competitive harm to the competitive position of [a DOE Contractor] and its partners and reveal the strategies and methodologies employed by these entities in preparing the costing portions of proposals submitted for future government procurements.

Determination Letter at 2.

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and

"privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is"privileged or confidential." 1/

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

It is well settled that if the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976)(Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). These requirements allow both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's review of that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, as in the present case, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

The Determination Letter cites two grounds for concluding that release of two audit reports contained in Volume III would cause the submitters competitive harm. Specifically, the Determination Letter contends that release of the audit reports "would provide competitors with insight into the strengths and weaknesses of [the DOE Contractor] and its partners and reveal internal accounting practices that are proprietary to these entities." Determination Letter at 2. These descriptions of withheld information are vague and unenlightening. Moreover, the Determination Letter fails to explain how such insights could be obtained and how such insights could be expected to cause the DOE Contractor and its partners substantial competitive harm. The Determination Letter's description of the remaining information it has withheld under Exemption 4 is also unduly vague in some instances. For example, some of the withheld information is described merely as "percentages" or "similar commercial and financial data." Determination Letter at 2.

The Determination Letter also indicates that it is withholding some information because its release would cause substantial competitive harm to the DOE Contractor and its partners, supposedly because its release would "reveal the strategies and methodologies employed by those entities in preparing the costing portions of proposals submitted for future government procurements." Determination Letter at 2. However, OR neither specifically indicates the nature of the information it claims would reveal its bidding strategy nor explains how such information could assist competitors to predict future bidding strategy. It is well settled that the mere fact that the contents of a document might be useful to competitors in future bids does not, by itself, constitute sufficient grounds to withhold the document. Baker, Donelson, Bearman & Caldwell, 27 DOE ¶ 80,164 at 80,655(1998) (citing Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, 20 DOE ¶ 80,165 at 80,688 (1990)). "A competitive injury is too remote for purposes of Exemption 4 if it can occur only in the occasional renegotiation of long term contracts." Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. v. Department of Energy, 169 F.3d 16, 18 (D.C. Cir. 1999). Moreover, the courts clearly mandate that in order to receive protection under Exemption 4, the expected harm must be substantial in nature. See, e.g., National Parks and Conservation Association v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Accordingly, Courts have not upheld protection under Exemption 4's competitive harm prong when agencies have been unable to convincingly show that release of information would be of substantial assistance to competitors attempting to estimate and undercut the submitter's future bids. See, e.g., GC Micro Corp. v. Defense Logistics Agency, 33 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 1994); Acumenics Research and Technology v. United States Department of Justice, 843 F.2d 800, 807 (4th Cir. 1988). While the law does not require OR to engage in a highly sophisticated economic analysis of the possible harm to the submitters that might result from disclosure, see Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA , 704 F.2d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1983), in order to prevail, OR must meet its burden of showing substantial competitive harm to the bidders. OR has not met this burden.

Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the appeal to OR for further processing. On remand, OR should either release the information it is currently withholding under Exemption 4 or provide a more thorough explanation of its basis for withholding that information. A sufficiently thorough explanation would provide a clear and specific description of the information being withheld and a specific explanation of why the release of the withheld information could reasonably be expected to result in substantial competitive harm to the person from which it was obtained. 2/

2/ Before releasing any of the information it is withholding, OR must, of course, notify the submitter of that information and provide it with an opportunity to explain how release of that information could cause it substantial competitive harm. Exec. Order No. 12,600, § 1.

B. Exemption 6

OR withheld information it describes as "salaries and similar personal financial information of contractor employees" under Exemption 6. Determination Letter at 1. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

The only justification OR provided for these withholdings states:

> We find that the release of salaries and similar personal financial information of contractor employees contained in Volume III is a serious invasion of personal privacy of those individuals and is not in the public interest.

Determination Letter at 1. As an initial matter, we note that "similar personal financial information" is much too vague a description to allow for meaningful review. 3/ Also, the justification given is much too conclusory and vague to allow for meaningful review. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to OR for further processing. On remand, OR should either promptly release that information it is currently withholding under Exemption 6 or issue a new, more detailed and specific Determination Letter which fully describes the information it withholds, specifically identifies any privacy interests its release would violate and any public interests that might be served by its release, and specifically compares the importance of these interests to determine whether release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

3/ Moreover, OR must take care to ensure that the salary and financial information it is withholding under Exemption 6 can be attributed to particular individuals if released. If it cannot, it may not be withheld under Exemption 6.

III. CONCLUSION

Because OR has not met its burden of showing that it properly withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 6, we are remanding this matter to OR. On remand, OR must promptly issue a new determination letter. The new determination letter must either release to the Appellant the contents of Volume III it is currently withholding or provide a meaningful description of any portion of the contents of Volume III it determines to withhold under an appropriately justified FOIA exemption, in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

This is the third appeal which the Appellant has filed concerning the same FOIA request. In essence, the Appellant has had to file three appeals and has had to wait at least an additional 15 months for an appropriate resolution of its request. This result has been attributable to OR's inability or unwillingness to apply the established law. The Appellant's rights under the FOIA have been poorly served.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0054, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Oak Ridge Operations Office for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: B & F Repair & Maintenance Inc.

Date of Filing: April 14, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0056

On April 14, 2004 , B & F Repair & Maintenance Inc. (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a second and final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) Service Center (Service Center). In that determination, the Service Center responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Service Center released portions of a responsive document, but withheld other portions of that Document under FOIA Exemption 4. This Appeal, if granted, would require the Service Center to release the withheld portions of the document to the Appellant.

I. Background

On December 23, 2003, the Appellant filed a request for information with the Service Center seeking a number of documents. Request Letter dated December 23, 2003, from C. Brian Meadors, attorney for Appellant, to Terry Apodaca, DOE, NNSA.[1/] On January 21, 2004, the Service Center issued a determination letter in response to this request. Determination Letter dated January 21, 2004, from Carolyn A. Becknell, FOIA Officer, DOE, NNSA, to Brian Meadors.[2/] On March 19, 2004, the Service Center issued a second and final Determination Letter, releasing one of the requested documents with portions redacted. Determination Letter dated March 19, 2004, from Carolyn Becknell to Brian Meadors (March 19, 2004 Determination Letter). On April 14, 2004, an Appeal was filed responding to the Service Center's second and final determination. Appeal Letter dated April 8, 2004, from Brian Meadors to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals, DOE.

[1/] The Appellant originally filed its request letter on October 19, 2003, with the Small Business Program Manager. Request Letter dated October 19, 2003, from Brian Meadors to Greg Gonzales. On December 22, 2003, the Appellant requested the status of the FOIA request and was told that the request needed to be made directly to the FOIA office. Electronic Mail Message dated December 22, 2003, from Brian Meadors to Greg Gonzales.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 4 is at issue in the present case.

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential."

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In its March 19, 2004 Determination Letter, the Service Center withheld portions of the contract between the Service Center and Chugach McKinley, Inc. (Contractor), under Exemption 4, on the grounds that release of the withheld information would cause the submitter competitive harm. The Service Center withheld individual dollar amounts and General and Administrative (G&A) percentages for cost elements in the Contract and the names and titles of key personnel who are dedicated full-time to the Contract. March 19, 2004 Determination Letter at 2. The Service Center indicated that the information it withheld under Exemption 4 is held in the strictest confidence by the Contractor. Id. at 1. Specifically, the Service Center claims that the > disclosure of the deleted dollar amounts . . . would disclose the contractor's plan for remuneration of its employees, its methods of allocating costs, its indirect rate structures, its allocation of resources, both personnel and corporate, and insight into its approach to the work contracted for. Such information would provide competitors with a clear advantage in anticipating the contractor's responses in future competitions and would aid in attempting to hire away the contractor's employees.

March 19, 2004 Determination Letter at 3.

Further, in regard to the names and titles of key personnel, the Service Center claims that > the release of the identity of key Contract personnel would provide competitors with a significant opportunity to pirate away personnel who are vital to the firm's competitive position in the marketplace. Employee raiding would have the effect of depriving the company of the talent of key persons dedicated full-time to the Contract and providing a source of corporate intelligence about company plans, methods, structure, clients, and other proprietary information and disrupting performance of this and other business commitments. The information would also indicate method of allocation and commitment of its corporate personnel resources, and the company's technical approach to this and other competitions.

Id. The Service Center concludes that release of any of the withheld information would likely cause substantial competitive harm Id.

We will analyze this case under the National Parks test described above because the Contractor submitted the information in the proposals on a non-voluntary basis, as this information is required by the DOE's Acquisition Regulations. See 48 C.F.R. § 970.5204-22 (1992). For the information to be found to be "confidential," it must meet one of two tests: its release would either impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. Release of this information is not at all likely to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information of this type in the future because, as stated above, it is required to be submitted under the DOE Acquisition Regulations. Consequently, the sole test for establishing confidentiality of the submitted information in this case is whether its release will substantially harm the submitter's competitive position.

Using the "competitive harm" prong of the National Parks test, the Service Center withheld from the Appellant the dollar amounts, G&A percentages, and names and titles of key personnel. March 19, 2004 Determination Letter at 2. The Service Center alleges that release of the withheld information is likely to cause substantial competitive harm to the Contractor. Id. at 3. The Service Center goes on to state that a competitor with knowledge of the withheld information would have a clear advantage in anticipating the Contractor's responses in future competitions and would aid in hiring away the Contractor's employees. Id. We agree. Release of the information withheld by the Service Center would result in competitive harm to the Contractor from whom it was obtained. We have previously held that names of employees can be withheld, because release could allow competitors to offer employment to those personnel. Glen M. Jameson, 26 DOE ¶ 80,191 at 80,731 (1996). Likewise, we have held that release of similar financial information would cause competitive harm to a similarly situated Contractor. IBEW Local 125, Case No. TVA-0695, 28 DOE ¶ 80,197 (October 24, 2001).

B. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. However, in cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0710, 28 DOE ¶ 80,222 (May 2, 2002). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4.

III. Conclusion

Because the Service Center has met its burden of showing that it properly withheld the information under Exemption 4, we shall deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by B & F Repair & Maintenance Inc., Case No. TFA-0056, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Security Archive

Date of Filing: April 21, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0058

On April 21, 2004, National Security Archive appealed a determination issued by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its appeal, National Security Archive contends that NNSA had failed to conduct an adequate search for documents that were responsive to a FOIA request it had filed. For the reasons detailed below, we find that NNSA conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and will deny the appeal filed by National Security Archive.

I. Background

National Security Archive filed a request in which it sought any reports, transcripts, memoranda, or summaries relating in whole or in part to 1) the RAND Corporations's Nu-Opts (nuclear options) studies during the late 1960s and early 1970s and 2) a conference held at Los Alamos Laboratory in early September 1969 on tactical nuclear weapons, which included a presentation on the RAND Corporation Nu-Opts study. See Determination Letter at 1. On April 1, 2004, NNSA issued a determination which stated that the Los Alamos Site Office and the Los Alamos National Laboratory searched their files and found no documents responsive to National Security Archive's request. Id. In its Appeal, National Security Archive challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by NNSA.

II. Analysis

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. E.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted an official at NNSA to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed. Upon receiving National Security Archive's Request for Information, NNSA contacted the Los Alamos Site Office, specifically the Office of Business Administration, to conduct a search for responsive documents. We were informed that the Office of Business Administration conducted a search of the Central Files guide and could not locate any responsive records. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Carolyn A. Becknell, NNSA and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (May 18, 2004). In addition to this search, the Los Alamos Site Office asked the Los Alamos National Laboratory to search its files for responsive records. The Information Practices Office within the Los Alamos National Laboratory searched numerous databases (all of the databases available that could possibly possess responsive records) using the key words "RAND Corporation," "nuclear options," and "conference." No responsive records were located as a result of this search. Id. NNSA stated that National Security Archive did not provide any other information in its request that would have directed NNSA to search anywhere else for responsive records. In its Appeal, National Security Archive enclosed the first two pages of a speech given by an Air Force general at the conference referred to in its request. NNSA has suggested that the Appellant contact the Air Force for possible responsive records.

Given the facts presented to us, we are convinced that NNSA conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to National Security Archive's request. Accordingly, National Security Archive's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by National Security Archive, OHA Case No. TFA-0058, on April 21, 2004, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Security Archive

Date of Filing: May 6, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0060

The National Security Archive (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of the Air Force (the Air Force) issued on April 15, 2004. In that determination, the Air Force denied in part a request for information that the Appellant submitted on March 1, 2001, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. The Air Force released portions of the document the Appellant requested, but also withheld portions of the document. That information was withheld as the result of reviews of the documents by the Department of Energy (DOE)'s Office of Classification and Information Control and the Air Force's Headquarters Air Combat Command, after which they determined that the document contained classified information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the information that the DOE withheld from those documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On March 1, 2001, the Appellant requested a copy of the January-June 1964 Strategic Air Command History, Chapters I, II, III, IV and VII. The Air Force responded to the request by providing portions of that document to the Appellant. However, the Air Force withheld from release portions of the document pursuant to (1) the Air Force's determination that some of the withheld information was properly classified in accordance with Executive Order 12958 and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA and (2) the DOE's determination that some of the withheld information was classified in accordance with the Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2161-2166, and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3.

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld information described above. In its Appeal, the Appellant contends that "information on the aggregate nuclear yield of [Strategic Air Command] bombers and missiles during 1964 is already declassified and has been in the public domain since the 1970s." In addition, it contends that any information that has not already been declassified should now be released as well:

> There are no good public policy reasons why they must remain classified. The numbers have long been overtaken by events. . . . Releasing the numbers would disclose gross nuclear capabilities that are now decades old. The yield numbers have no relevance to the current situation and certainly will be of no use to terrorists or hostile states who wish to acquire nuclear weapons today. . . . Historians, social scientists, and the interested public, however, do need this information. By making such information available, the Energy Department will contribute to better understanding of the Cold War and the nuclear era.

Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director reviewed those portions of the requested documents for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

According to the Director, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the material the DOE withheld from the document may now be released. The information that the DOE continues to withhold concerns the military utilization of nuclear weapons including exact numbers of weapons and yields of weapons. This information is currently classified as Formerly Restricted Data (FRD) and is identified as "DOE (b)(3)" in the margin of a newly redacted version of five pages of the document, which will be provided to the Appellant under separate cover. FRD is a form of classified information the withholding of which is required under Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3. The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Marshall Combs, Director, Office of Security, Department of Energy.

The Air Force also reviewed the document, and determined that it will continue to withhold one item of information on the fifth page of the newly revised version concurrently with the DOE. That item is the first deletion on the page, and is marked in the margin as "D2NP." The Air Force is withholding that information pursuant to Exemption 1 of the FOIA. Exemption 1 provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are (A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." The Air Force identified the information described above as National Security Information properly classified in accordance with Executive Order 12958. The denying official for the Air Force's withholdings is Jeffrey M. Coleman, Colonel, USAF Chief, Nuclear Operations, C2 and Arms Control Division.

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires DOE to continue withholding portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Director has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Director has reduced the extent of the previously deleted portions to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations. Therefore, the DOE will release a newly redacted version of a portion of the document reviewed in this Appeal to the Appellant under separate cover. Accordingly, the Appellant's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the National Security Archive on May 6, 2004, Case No. TFA-0060, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A newly redacted version of a portion of the document in which additional information is released will be provided to the National Security Archive.

the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Mildred Clark
Date of Filing:	May 10, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0061

On May 10, 2004, Mildred Clark (Clark) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on April 6, 2004, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a request for documents that Clark submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On March 1, 2004, Clark made a FOIA request to Richland for a copy of the employment, medical, dosimetry and personnel security records pertaining to her deceased husband, Charlie Clark. FOIA Request Form 2004-0064 (March 1, 2004). According to Clark, between 1953 and 1963, her husband was employed as a construction worker at the Hanford site by the following contractors: Guy F. Atkinson & Jones, Blaw Know, and Morrison Knudson. Id. Clark also provided her husband's social security number and death certificate. Richland searched their database and found Mr. Clark's radiation exposure record and medical file. Richland informed Clark that the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation would forward her husband's medical records to her. However, Richland was unable to find any employment or security records related to Mr. Clark. Letter from Dorothy Riehle, Richland Operations Office, to Clark (April 6, 2004). Clark's attorney, Allen Counts, appealed that determination on May 10, 2004. Letter from Allen Counts, Esq. to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (May 10, 2004) (Appeal). In the Appeal, Clark challenges the adequacy of the search and asks OHA to direct Richland to search again for responsive material regarding her husband's employment at Hanford.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (Truitt). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted Richland regarding the search for responsive material. Richland informed us that they searched their database on last name, first name, and social security number and found medical and dosimetry records. Telephone conversation between Dorothy Riehle, Richland, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 8, 2004). The absence of employment records, however, was not uncommon according to Richland. Individuals who worked at the Hanford site but did not hold a security clearance would customarily have had medical and radiation records at the site, but no employment records. Mr. Clark was not a DOE employee, and his employer was not required to submit its records to the DOE. Most contractors, according to Richland, took their records with them at the conclusion of their work on the site. Richland also searched Mr. Clark's medical and dosimetry records to see if they contained any information that pointed to a certain employer, but found nothing. Richland thus concluded that Mr. Clark's employer had taken Mr. Clark's records with them when they left the site, if such records existed at all.

Based on our analysis of the search as explained above, we find that Richland has conducted an adequate search for responsive material. Clark indicated that her husband worked for a contractor, and Richland has offered a credible explanation for the absence of contractor records in its files. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Mildred Clark on May 10, 2004, OHA Case Number TFA-0061, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Alice McMillan
Date of Filing:	June 10, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0062

On June 10, 2004, Alice McMillan filed an Appeal from a determination the DOE's Richland Operations Office (Richland) issued on April 12, 2004. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

On March 26, 2004, Ms. McMillan wrote Richland requesting records pertaining to her deceased brother, Carl Lester Vaughn, who apparently worked at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation during World War II. On April 12, 2004, Richland issued a determination letter (the determination letter) in response to Ms. McMillan's request. The determination letter states that Richland had performed "a thorough search by name and Social Security number for employment records related to your brother and were unable to locate any." Determination Letter. In the present appeal, Ms. McMillan challenges the adequacy of Richland's search.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Thus, upon receiving the present Appeal, we contacted Richland to inquire as to the search it conducted in response to Ms. McMillan's request. Richland informed us that it had searched the DOE's database of individuals who had been employed at the Hanford Reservation using both her brother's name and his social security number. Richland also informed us that, based on its experiences, its records do not contain information regarding every person who worked at Hanford, particularly those employed there before the administration of Hanford passed into civilian hands. Records of individuals employed at Hanford when it was administered by the Manhattan Engineering District may be held by the Department of Defense or the actual employers of those workers or may simply no longer exist.

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that Richland performed a diligent search of locations under its jurisdiction where responsive documents were most likely to exist. Thus, we conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Ms. McMillan sought.

Accordingly, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Alice McMillan, Case Number TFA-0062, is hereby denied.

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	James F. Ray
Date of Filing:	June 9, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0063

On June 9, 2004, James F. Ray filed an Appeal from a determination the Office of Security of the Department of Energy (SO) issued on May 4, 2004. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

In a December 2, 2003 FOIA request, Mr. Ray sought from SO all documents related to the delegation of classification and declassification authority to a particular contractor employee who works in the DOE's Germantown, Maryland headquarters.

On May 4, 2004, SO issued a determination to Mr. Ray, in which it released 14 documents responsive to his request. SO withheld information from two of the documents, citing FOIA Exemption 6. Letter from Marshall O. Combs, Director, SO, to James F. Ray (May 4, 2004) (Determination Letter). In his appeal, Mr. Ray states that he is > aware of email messages and other documents that are responsive but were not included in the initial FOIA response. I request the Department initiate a more thorough search for these responsive documents. I also believe that Exemption 6 of the FOIA . . . was incorrectly applied to the deletion and withholding of information in the documentation received . . . .

Appeal at 1.[1]

[1]Mr. Ray also proposed "that all correspondence relating to the initial FOIA request should be included as responsive documentation to the FOIA." First, Mr. Ray may not expand the scope of his request on appeal to this office. Second, the FOIA requires agencies to provide responsive documents that existed at the time of the agency's receipt of the request. It does not require an agency to create documents, nor to provide to the requester whatever documents it does create in the process of responding to the request. Mr. Ray may file a new FOIA request for the documentation he

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of Search for Responsive Documents

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

SO provided us with the following information regarding its search. SO's point of contact forwarded Mr. Ray's request to ten individuals with whom documents responsive to the request might be found. Each was asked to provide responsive documents and was advised that "a negative reply is required" from individuals who did not locate responsive documents. All the recipients of the request either provided responsive documents to the point of contact or gave a negative reply. The point of contact also searched for responsive documents. Electronic Mail from Cecelia Rogers, SO, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 17, 2004).

In reviewing Mr. Ray's appeal, we asked him if he could provide more details regarding "email messages and other documents that are responsive but were not included in the initial FOIA response." Mr. Ray responded by referring to portions of the documents released to him, claiming that they refer to other documents that were not provided to him. In addition, he refers to representations made to him by certain people that certain documents exist. Finally, he refers to documents that should exist if "standard procedure" were followed, noting, "I am intimately familiar with the procedures that result in the granting of authorities. If they didn't follow these procedures they should explain why."[2] Electronic mail from James Ray to Steven Goering, OHA (July 7, 2004).

Mr. Ray helpfully names a number of specific individuals who would have created or received the documents that he believes should exist but were not provided to him. However, with only one exception, each individual identified by Mr. Ray was a recipient of his FOIA request, as forwarded by the SO point of contact. Each provided responsive documents to the point of contact, or indicated that no responsive documents were found. Regarding the one person mentioned by Mr. Ray, but who was not a recipient of the request, we asked if SO would be willing to forward the request to this person during the pendancy of this appeal. SO did so, and received a negative response. Electronic Mail from Cecelia Rogers, SO, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 17, 2004).

The appellant notes a number of reasons why additional responsive documents should exist. However, in cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684

[2] The FOIA does not require an agency to "explain" why it did or did not follow particular procedures related to the subject of a request.

F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original). We note that the SO point of contact directed Mr. Ray's request to each person who it was reasonably believed might have responsive documents (and, more recently, to an additional person named by Mr. Ray), and that the names of these individuals matched exactly those identified by Mr. Ray as those who would have created or received documents responsive to his request. Based on the above, we find that SO's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Mr. Ray requested.

B. Application of Exemption 6 to Information Withheld from the Requester

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Fin. Management Serv., 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1056 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in disclosure in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-70.

In its August 22 determination, DOE/HQ withheld information from two documents, which it described as > 'Person Detail' print-outs concerning [the contractor employee] from the Authorities and Training Tracking System (ATTS). The deleted information is test scores . . .

> . . . .
> We have determined that disclosure of the test scores for [the contractor employee] could subject him to unwanted communications or other personal intrusions. We have also determined that disclosure of the test scores will not reveal any aspect of the operations and activities of government.

Determination Letter at 1.

Mr. Ray takes issue with the finding of SO as to both the public interest and privacy concerns.

> I believe it is clearly in the public interest that anyone charged with protecting National Security Information verify their competency. . . , this is a question of National Security.
> These scores contain no personal information, in the generally accepted meaning of the term (i.e. there is no social security number, medical information, home address, race, religion, national origin, etc.). [The contractor employee] was granted full classification/declassification authority by the memo: J. Hawthorne to F. Willingham, dated September 29, 2003. The directions in the Request For Authority state that he must have demonstrated competence in the subject area(s), and have successfully completed a training program and passed an examination. The scores merely verify what the Agency and [the contractor employee] claim to be true, what is left to exempt?

First of all, we agree with SO that there are legitimate privacy concerns that would be raised by release of the test scores in question. Regardless of whether the individual's scores in this case were low or high, the release of such scores still touches upon a privacy interest of the individual--either based on embarassment or stigma resulting from the release, to the extent the scores are low, or because the scores "may well embarrass an individual or incite jealousy" among co-workers, to the extent the scores are high. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d at 3.

Regarding how release would further the public interest, Mr. Ray states that "it is clearly in the public interest that anyone charged with protecting National Security Information verify their competency." We generally agree with this point. However, in the present case, information already released to the requester does verify the qualifications of the contractor employee in question for the classification and declassification authorities granted to him. As Mr. Ray himself notes, the individual was granted classification and declassification authorities by a September 29, 2003 memo from the SO's Director of Information Classification and Control Policy Security, Security Policy Staff, which memo was among the documents released in their entirety to Mr. Ray. This memo clearly states that the individual in question "has satisfied the requirements of Department of Energy Manual 475.1-1A, 'Identifying Classified Information,' and is hereby granted the authorities specified in the attached descriptions."

Mr. Ray does not appear to be convinced by the statements in the memo, arguing that release of the individual's actual test scores would "merely verify what the Agency and [the contractor employee] claim to be true." However, Mr. Ray offers no reason why the plain text of the September 29 memo is not to be believed.[3] The information already available to Mr. Ray and the public is more than sufficient to verify that the individual passed the tests required to undertake the authorities granted to him.

[3]Moreover, SO has informed us that a passing score on the required tests in question was 80%. And without revealing the individual's actual test scores, we can confirm that the scores withheld from the requester do verify that the individual scored 80% or higher on each required test. One of the test scores withheld was, according to the document containing the scores, for a "[c]ourse taken for information only." Release of this score would not advance any public interest, since it would reveal nothing regarding whether the individual met the requirements for the authorities he was granted.

Weighing the privacy interests at stake on one hand, and the negligible public interest on the other, we conclude that Exemption 6 was properly applied in withholding test scores from the requester.

III. Conclusion

For the above stated reasons, we find that SO's search for documents in response to Mr. Ray's request was adequate for purposes of the FOIA, and that SO properly withheld information from the requester under FOIA Exemption 6. Thus, the present appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by James F. Ray on June 9, 2004, OHA Case Number TFA-0063, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Appellant: UT-Battelle, LLC

Date of Filing: July 7, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0064

On July 7, 2004, UT-Battelle, LLC filed a Motion for Reconsideration of a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) on February 13, 2003. In that determination, OHA granted an Appeal filed by Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates (Burkhalter) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Motion, if granted, would reverse OHA's February 13, 2003 determination.

I. BACKGROUND

On April 27, 2002, Burkhalter filed a request for information with DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office (OR) seeking a number of documents. On November 22, 2002, OR issued a determination letter (the November 22, 2002 Determination Letter) releasing a number of responsive documents to Burkhalter and withholding one document, "the proposal submitted by UT-Battelle, LLC, . . . that resulted in UT-Battelle, LLC, receiving the contract for [managing and operating the Oak Ridge National Laboratory]" (the Proposal), in its entirety under FOIA Exemption 3. Determination Letter at 1. On December 17, 2002, Burkhalter filed an appeal of that determination challenging OR's withholding of the Proposal. On February 13, 2003, we issued a Decision and Order holding that OR had improperly withheld the Proposal under Exemption 3. Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0008, 28 DOE ¶ 80,271 (February 13, 2003) (Burkhalter I). Accordingly, we remanded the matter to OR with instructions to "promptly release the Proposal to the Appellant or to provide a thorough explanation of any other justification for withholding the Proposal (or portions thereof)." Id. Our holding in Burkhalter I is the subject of the present motion.

On July 3, 2003, OR issued a new determination letter (the July 3, 2003 Determination Letter). On July 25, 2003, Burkhalter filed an appeal of the July 3, 2003 Determination Letter, contending that OR had failed to identify three volumes (Volumes III, IV and V) of the Proposal. On September 12, 2003, we issued a decision and order granting the July 3, 2003 Appeal in part and remanding the matter to OR. Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0037, 28 DOE ¶ 80,302 (September 12, 2003) (Burkhalter II). In Burkhalter II, we found that OR had failed to fully comply with our order in Burkhalter I. Id. Specifically, we found that OR had effectively withheld Volume III of the Proposal by improperly failing to identify it as responsive. Id. Accordingly, we remanded the matter to OR instructing it to promptly issue a new determination letter which "must either release to the Appellant the contents of Volume III or provide a meaningful description of any portion of the contents of Volume III it determines to withhold under an appropriately justified FOIA exception." Id. (emphasis supplied). On January 21, 2004, OR issued a determination letter (the January 21, 2004 Determination Letter) releasing a redacted copy of Volume III to Burkhalter. However, OR deleted portions of Volume III under Exemptions 4 and 6. On February 18, 2004, Burkhalter filed an appeal of OR's January 21, 2004 Determination, contending that OR improperly withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 6. On, March 17, 2004, we issued a Decision and Order granting the February 18, 2004 Appeal in part and remanding the matter to OR. Burkhalter, Rayson & Associates, Case No. TFA-0054, 28 DOE ¶ 80,332 (March 17, 2004) (Burkhalter III). In Burkhalter III, we found that OR's January 21, 2004 Determination had failed to provide sufficient justification for its withholdings under Exemptions 4 and 6. Accordingly, we remanded the appeal to OR for further processing instructing OR to "either release the information it is currently withholding under Exemption[s] 4 [and 6] or provide a more thorough explanation of its basis for withholding that information." Moreover, we cautioned OR that "[b]efore releasing any of the information it is withholding, OR must, of course, notify the submitter of that information and provide it with an opportunity to explain how release of that information could cause it substantial competitive harm. Exec. Order No. 12,600, § 1."

On July 8, 2004, UT-Battelle submitted the present motion for reconsideration. In this motion, UT-Battelle claims that OR failed to provide it with notice (as required by Executive Order 12,600 § 1) before releasing portions of the proposal in its July 3, 2003 and January 21, 2004 Determinations. UT-Battelle contends that had it been provided with the required notice of OR's plans to release portions of the Proposal submitted by UT-Battelle, it could have provided both OR and OHA with information and explanation that would have convinced OR and OHA that the entire Proposal is exempt from the FOIA's mandatory disclosure mandate under FOIA Exemption 3. UT-Battelle requests that we issue a new decision withholding those portions of the Proposal that have not already been released to Burkhalter and requiring the withholding of the Proposal in response to any future FOIA requests.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

Exemption 3 allows the withholding of information under other statutes, but only if they meet specific criteria. See, e.g., Essential Information, Inc. v. USIA, 134 F.3d 1165, 1168 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Specifically, Exemption 3 allows the withholding of information prohibited from disclosure by another statute only if the statute either "(A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). The D.C. Circuit has expressly held that "a statute that is claimed to qualify as an Exemption 3 withholding statute must, on its face, exempt matters from disclosure." Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 816 F.2d 730, 735 (D.C. Cir.), modified on other grounds, 831 F.2d 1124 (D.C. Cir. 1987), rev'd on other grounds, 489 U.S. 749 (1989). An agency must also establish that the records in question fall within the withholding provision of the non-disclosure statute. See A. Michael's Piano v. FTC, 18 F.3d 138, 143 (2d Cir. 1994); Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1284 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Fund for Constitutional Government v. National Archives & Records Service, 656 F.2d 856, 868 (D.C. Cir. 1981); Goland v. CIA, 607 F.2d 339, 350 (D.C. Cir. 1978).

UT-Battelle contends, as did OR's November 22, 2002 Determination, that Section 821 of the National Defense Authorization Act of 1997 (NDAA) exempts the Proposal from disclosure. It is well settled that the NDAA is a withholding statute within the meaning of Exemption 3. See, e.g., Kelly, Anderson & Associates, 28 DOE ¶ 80,137 (2001); Center for Public Integrity, 28 DOE ¶ 89,129 (2000); Chemical Weapons Working Group, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,170 (1997) (Chemical Weapons); Patricia McCracken, 26 DOE ¶ 80,227 (1997). Section 821(b)(1) of the NDAA, entitled "Prohibition On Release of Contractor Proposals, Civilian Agency Acquisitions," provides that "a proposal in the possession or control of an executive agency may not be made available to any person under [the FOIA]," unless such proposal is set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract entered into between the agency and the contractor that submitted the proposal. (Emphasis added). The plain language of Section 821(b)(1) allows no discretion in withholding contractor proposals that are not set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract. The section therefore satisfies Subpart A of Exemption 3. See Chemical Weapons, supra.

Moreover, there is no argument that the information at issue in the present case is anything but a "proposal" for purposes of Section 821(b)(1). Section 821(b)(3) of the NDAA defines "proposal" to mean "any proposal including a technical, management, or cost proposal, submitted by a contractor in response to the requirements of a solicitation for a competitive proposal."

However, Section 821(b)(1)'s requirement "does not apply to any proposal that is set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract entered into between the [DOE] and the contractor that submitted the proposal." 10 U.S.C.A. § 2305. In Burkhalter I, Burkhalter contended that the Proposal was in fact incorporated by reference. In support of this contention, Burkhalter cited language in the contract between UT-Battelle and OR (the Contract). Specifically, Burkhalter cited Section H-15, Page 11 of 27 of the Contract (entitled, "Representations, Certifications and Other Statements of the Offeror") which states, in pertinent part: "The Representations, Certifications and Other Statements of the Offeror, dated August 2, 1999, for this contract are hereby incorporated by reference, and made a part of this contract." December 6, 2002 Freedom of Information Act Appeal at 2 (emphasis supplied by Burkhalter). Burkhalter also cited Section I-71 of the Contract, which contains language indicating that the Proposal was submitted on August 2, 1999 and therefore was among the "representations and certifications and other statements" incorporated by reference by Section H-15. Reasoning that the Proposal fit within the plain language definition of "Other Statements of the Offeror dated August 2, 1999," we found this contention persuasive. To this end, Burkhalter I states:

> The Appellant correctly notes that the Proposal was in fact incorporated by reference into the contract between DOE and UT-Battelle. Contract No. DE-AC05-00OR22725 at Section H-15, Page 11 of 27 and Section I-71, Page 91 of 236. Accordingly, we find that the Proposal is not exempted from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997.

Burkhalter I, 28 DOE at 80,860. After Burkhalter I, OR has issued two additional determination letters concerning the Proposal, releasing some portions of the Proposal to Burkhalter and attempting to withhold portions of it under Exemptions 4 and 6.

On July 7, 2004, UT-Battelle filed the present Motion for Reconsideration. In its Motion, UT-Battelle asserts that OR did not solicit UT-Battelle's views concerning the appropriateness of releasing the Proposal until January 2004. Motion for Reconsideration at 2. UT-Battelle further contends that had it been given notice of OR's intentions to release portions of the Proposal prior to the July 3, 2003 Determination, it would have provided information that would have shown that the Proposal was not incorporated by reference in the Contract. UT-Battelle correctly notes that DOE's FOIA Regulations required that it be notified before any portion of the Proposal was released.

In reviewing UT-Battelle's Motion, additional information has come to light which has made us realize that our holding, in Burkhalter I, that the entire Proposal was incorporated by reference by Section H-15 of the Contract is not based upon an accurate reading of the Contract. Our holding in Burkhalter I was based upon our interpretation of the plain language meaning of the term "Representations, Certification and Other Statements of the Offeror."

It has come to our attention that the Proposal, like others made under the Federal Acquisition Regulations, consists of three volumes: one entitled Representations, Certifications and Other Statements of the Offeror, another entitled Technical Proposal and a third entitled Cost Proposal. With this information in mind, it is clear that the parties to the Contract intended to incorporate only the "Representations, Certifications and Other Statements of the Offeror" volume of the Proposal, rather than the entire Proposal, into the Contract.

III. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, we are reversing, in part, our holding in Burkhalter I. We now hold that only that portion of the Proposal entitled Representations, Certifications and Other Statements of the Offeror was incorporated by reference in the Contract. The rest of the Contract was not incorporated by reference. Section 821(b)(3) of the NDAA prohibits disclosure of those portions of the Proposal not incorporated by reference. Since, we have found that disclosure of those portions of the Proposal is prohibited, OR should cease its previously mandated consideration of the applicability of Exemptions 4 and 6 to those portions of the Proposal. OR should continue to withhold those portions of the Proposal under Exemption 3.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by UT-Battelle, LLC, Case No. TFA-0064, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Oak Ridge Operations Office for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Joseph M. Santos
Date of Filing:	July 9, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0065

On July 9, 2004, Joseph M. Santos filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determination, DOE released some responsive information to Santos. This Appeal, if granted, would require DOE to release the remainder of the responsive information.

I. Background

Mr. Santos filed a request in which he sought a copy of his Official Personnel File as well as copies of all e-mails, records and documents that pertain to him written between January 1, 1999, and the present, from DOE employees Stephen Durbin, Barbara Hall, Ray Madden, Al Knight, Dave Schoeberlein, Kyle McSlarrow, Guy Caruso, Howard Grenspecht and Mary Hutzler.

On June 30, 2004, DOE issued a determination letter regarding Mr. Santos' request. DOE's determination letter stated that Mr. Santos' request had been assigned to six offices at the DOE Headquarters to conduct a search of their files for responsive documents. Those offices were the offices to which the individuals Mr. Santos named in his request were assigned. They included the Office of Congressional, Public and Intergovernmental Affairs, the Office of the Deputy Secretary, the Energy Information Administration, the Office of Human Resources Management, the Office of Inspector General and the Office of Policy and International Affairs. See Determination Letter.

The Office of Human Resources Management completed its search for responsive documents and identified Mr. Santos' Official Personnel File, which the office provided to Mr. Santos in its entirety. With respect to the other portion of Mr. Santos' request, in its response the Office of Congressional, Public and Intergovernmental Affairs (CI) informed DOE that "any records in the possession of Mr. Al Knight [a CI employee] are not agency records" and further that "any records maintained by Mr. Knight that may be related to the subject of your request were generated or obtained in his capacity as an union official." CI concluded that the Al Knight records are not in the possession or control of the DOE and, therefore, are not agency records subject to the provisions of the FOIA. Id.

On July 9, 2004, Mr. Santos filed his Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In his Appeal, Mr. Santos challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by DOE. He alleges that his Official Personnel File did not include any SF-50 notices of personnel action or other related documents. In addition, Mr. Santos challenges DOE's determination that records maintained by Al Knight and other NTEU (union) officers are not agency records. See Appeal Letter. *

II. Analysis

A. Agency Records

Under the FOIA, an "agency record" is a document that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of a FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Clear indications that a document is an "agency record" are when a document of this type is part of an agency file, and when it was used for an agency purpose. Kissinger v. Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 157 (1980); Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc. v. Department of Justice 742 F.2d 1484, 1489-90 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (BNA); J. Eileen Price, 25 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1995) (Price). In making the "agency records" determination, we look at the totality of the circumstances surrounding the creation, maintenance and use of the documents in question. See BNA, 742 F.2d at 1492-93*; Price.*

With regard to the potentially responsive documents in possession of Al Knight and other NTEU officers, DOE has stated that any records maintained by Mr. Knight that may be related to the subject of Mr. Santos' request were generated or obtained in Mr. Knight's capacity as an union official and were not in the possession or control of DOE. DOE has further informed us that union officials segregate their records from official DOE business. Our understanding of the circumstances surrounding the records in Mr. Knight's possession responsive to Mr. Santos' request is that those records were created or obtained by DOE employees on DOE premises. However, those DOE employees were not acting in their capacities as DOE employees but rather as union officials, performing functions distinct from their DOE position descriptions and maintaining such records separately from any DOE records. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Abel Lopez, Director, DOE Headquarters FOI and Privacy Branch, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (September 2, 2004). Further, it is our understanding that the DOE has no power to create, alter, or destroy any records generated by the union officials.

* At the time of Mr. Santos' appeal, the Office of the Deputy Secretary, the Energy Information Administration, the Office of the Inspector General and the Office of Policy and International Affairs had not yet responded to his request for information. Mr. Santos' appeal is limited to the determinations of the two offices that did respond.

Applying the Tax Analysts standard described above to any relevant records generated in the course of union operations, those records were not "created or obtained" by the DOE, nor have they ever been under DOE control. Consequently, we find that any responsive documents in the possession of Al Knight and other union officials that were generated in their capacities as union officials and were used for exclusively union operations are not agency records and therefore are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA.

B. Adequacy of the Search

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, the FOIA requires agencies to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Alice McMillan, 28 DOE ¶ 80,118 (2004). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Consequently, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. NSA, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

We contacted the relevant DOE office to determine the extent of the search that had been conducted for responsive documents. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Adrienne Martin, DOE, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (July 7, 2004). DOE informed us that upon receipt of the request it contacted six offices at the DOE Headquarters to conduct a search of their files for responsive documents. The Office of Human Resources Management completed its search for responsive documents and located the Official Personnel File of Mr. Santos. DOE has informed us that the personnel documents referred to in Mr. Santos' appeal would be located in his Official Personnel File if they existed. According to DOE, this file was provided to Mr. Santos in its entirety. Given the facts presented to us, we believe that those DOE offices that have completed their searches have conducted adequate searches for documents responsive to Mr. Santos' request.

III. Conclusion

In sum, we find that, to date, DOE has conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Mr. Santos' FOIA appeal. Further, any responsive union documents used exclusively for union purposes are not agency records for the purposes of the FOIA. Thus, Mr. Santos' appeal will be denied.

It is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Joseph M. Santos on July 9, 2004, OHA Case No. TFA-0065, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Citadel Energy Products, LCC
Date of Filing:	July 9, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0066

On July 9, 2004, Citadel Energy Products, LCC (Citadel) filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Energy Information Administration (EIA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) on June 7, 2004. In its determination, EIA denied Citadel's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require EIA to release the information it withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that is required to be withheld or may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

In a letter dated August 27, 2003, Citadel submitted a FOIA request to EIA for "(i) the actual sum total of working gas in each geographical region reported in Form 912s on a weekly basis and (ii) the actual sum total of working gas in each region reported in Form 191s on a monthly basis by those parties required by the EIA to submit Form 912s." Request Letter dated August 27, 2003, from Jeffrey W. Mayes, Attorney for Citadel, to Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, DOE. Citadel sought aggregated data (the "aggregated data") by regions, for the period from the time EIA began gathering the data until the present and into the future. Data regarding individual firms were not sought; however, if the information Citadel requested was not available on any existing document, Citadel requested, in the alternative, redacted copies of the Forms 191 and 912. The information contained in these two forms is monthly and weekly natural gas inventories in underground storage facilities.

On October 24, 2003, EIA denied the request. EIA withheld the information, claiming it was exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4. EIA claimed that the information Citadel was seeking is protected because it was "commercial or financial information obtained from a person [which is] privileged or confidential." Citadel filed an Appeal, in which it disputed the withholding of information under Exemption 4. First, Citadel asserted that EIA did not explain its withholding of the aggregated data. Appeal dated November 26, 2003, at 8 from Jeffrey W. Mayes, Attorney for Citadel, to George B. Breznay, Director, OHA. Secondly, Citadel argued that EIA failed to show that its ability to obtain the information in the future would be impaired. Id. at 6. On January 12, 2004, this Office granted Citadel's Appeal and remanded the matter to EIA, stating that EIA had failed to indicate whether a document with the aggregated figures existed and, therefore, had inadequately justified its withholding of any such document. Citadel Energy Products, LCC, Case No. TFA-0048, 28 DOE ¶ 80,316 (2004).

Responding to the remand, in a June 7, 2004 determination, EIA indicated that it did have some of the requested aggregated information, but it withheld the information on the basis of Exemption 4. Citadel then filed this Appeal claiming that EIA failed to meet the applicable standard for withholding under Exemption 4.[*/]

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential."

[*/] In a letter dated November 5, 2004, EIA informed this Office and Citadel that EIA had conducted an additional review for the purpose of identifying documents responsive to Citadel's FOIA request. EIA found that, at the time of Citadel's FOIA request, EIA had the requested aggregated data from the weekly Form EIA-912 in the form of only two documents created for the weeks of August 8 and August 15, 2004. EIA also found that it did not have any documents containing the requested aggregated data from the monthly Form EIA-191. With that letter, EIA released to Citadel, and to OHA, redacted copies of those two documents. EIA withheld from those two documents, pursuant to Exemption 4, the aggregated data, the names of individual companies, and the individual company data, for the reasons explained in EIA's determinations dated October 24, 2003, and June 7, 2004. Letter dated November 5, 2004, at 1-3 from Kenneth A. Vagts, Director, Office of Oil and Gas, EIA to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, with a copy to Jeffrey W. Mayes, Attorney for Citadel. The release of the redacted documents does not affect our analysis in this Decision.

5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is (1) "commercial" or "financial," (2) "obtained from a person," and (3) "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government under non-voluntary conditions is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (I) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information that is provided to an agency voluntarily is considered "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. Because the two forms involved here are mandatory filings under the Federal Energy Administration Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-275), we find that the withheld information was involuntarily submitted to EIA. BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 at 80,796 (1999); see William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999). Thus, as we have held previously, for this information to be properly withheld under Exemption 4, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement for Exemption 4 protection is that the withheld information must be "commercial or financial." Courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (citing Washington Post Co. v. HHS, 690 F.2d 252, 266 (D.C. Cir. 1982)). Second, the information must be "obtained from a person." "Person" refers to a wide range of entities, including corporate entities. Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979).

Finally, to qualify for Exemption 4 protection under National Parks, information must also be "confidential." Withheld information is "confidential" if it meets the test set out in National Parks. In this case, the withheld information is considered "confidential" if release would either (a) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters or (b) impair EIA's ability to obtain the necessary information in the future. National Parks and Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 679 (1976) (National Parks II).

B. Application of Exemption 4 to the withheld information

1. "Commercial or Financial" information requirement

As stated earlier, the first requirement under the National Parks test is that the withheld information must be "commercial or financial." In Public Citizen, the court held that these terms should be given their ordinary meaning and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1290. We find, as shown in section 3, that the underlying information that would be revealed if the aggregated data were released is commercial information.

2. "Obtained from a person" requirement

The second requirement under National Parks is that the information must be "obtained from a person," with "person" referring to a wide range of entities, including corporate entities. Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979). EIA has convinced us, as demonstrated in next section, that even though the aggregated data are not directly "obtained from a person," the information that can be derived from those figures are equivalent in practical terms to the information obtained from the firms themselves. See, e.g., Gulf and Western Industries v. United States, 615 F. 2d 527, 529-30 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (Exemption 4 held to protect government report which contained information supplied by an outside party or from which information supplied by an outside party could be extrapolated). The reach of Exemption 4 is sufficiently broad to protect the commercial information of third parties, here, the reporting firms. See, e.g., Board of Trade v. Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n, 627 F.2d 392, 405 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Since release of the aggregated data would be tantamount to release of the underlying information, we believe that the information was effectively "obtained from a person," i.e., the reporting firms.

3. "Confidentiality"/"Competitive Harm" requirement

As described above, the withheld information may be considered "confidential" if release would either (a) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters or (b) impair EIA's ability to obtain the necessary information in the future. EIA has concluded that release of the withheld information would cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the firms whose natural gas holdings are included in the aggregated data contained in the withheld information.

Analyzing whether release would cause substantial competitive harm involves two elements: 1) whether the submitters face actual competition and 2) whether disclosure would likely cause substantial competitive injury. National Parks and Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 679 (1976) (National Parks II).

In the present case, it seems beyond dispute that the submitters face actual competition from other natural gas marketing firms. Consequently, the remaining element to be evaluated in the determination of substantial competitive harm is whether disclosure of the data would likely cause substantial competitive injury. National Parks and Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 679 (1976) (National Parks II).

In demonstrating the possible competitive injury that could result from release of the information, EIA indicated in its June 7, 2004 determination, as background, that the United States is divided into three reporting regions for the purposes of these forms. EIA does not require every firm in each region to report. Rather, the reporting requirement is periodically rotated among the firms, except for the largest of the firms which must always report. In each of these regions, there are a limited number of large firms that always report because of their size. EIA argues because there are only three reporting regions for Form 912 and only 119 total firms that can be selected for reporting, it would be easy to identify the value of the holdings of the largest firms. EIA gave an example from one of the reporting regions to support its contention. The example stated > EIA staff identified the report Natural Gas Week (NGW) [as a private publication] that publishes individual company-level underground gas storage information. EIA chose one NGW issue issued during the period covered by the FOIA request. That issue included company-level data reported by 13 companies that choose to participate in the NGW survey.

> Using the information from that issue of the NGW, EIA analyzed the EIA-912 survey responses consistent with the NGW report period. First EIA considered the NGW information as publicly known. Then EIA examined the individual EIA-912 survey data and removed those companies whose underground gas storage data were available from the NGW. The data for the remaining companies were then analyzed to determine if the release would result in providing information that could be used to develop reasonable estimates of what those companies reported to EIA.
> In the West Consuming Region, EIA identified the EIA-912 sample companies for which NGW did not publish information on working gas in underground storage. If EIA were to release the aggregated data requested under the FOIA, the public would be able to subtract the known NGW information from the aggregated data and calculate the total for the remaining companies that choose to keep their information confidential. Using the information for those companies, the total gas held in storage was 108 billion cubic feet (Bcf). The largest company was responsible for 84 Bcf (77.78%), the second largest for 10 Bcf (9.26%), and the remaining companies for 14 Bcf (12.96%). The two largest companies were responsible for more than 87% of the total for those companies. Releasing the unweighted aggregate total with one large company responsible for such a large percentage of the number and two companies responsible for more than 87% would violate EIA's standards for data protection and generally accepted statistical practices for protection of confidential information.

> To further explain the pq rule [a rule developed to determine whether a given value could reveal individual respondent information, and explained earlier in EIA's June 7, 2004 determination] with respect to the above illustration, we can assume that there is enough publicly available information about the industry available for a knowledgeable user to estimate the amounts held by one company to within plus or minus 50%.
> Assuming that the second largest company wants to estimate the working gas held in storage by the largest company, the second largest subtracts its reported value (10) from the total (108) for the companies. Conservatively assuming the second largest company can estimate the aggregate of the smaller companies within 50%, their aggregate would be in the range of 7 to 21 Bcf (14+/-7). Thus, the second largest company is able to estimate that the largest company's working gas in storage is between 91 (108-10-7) and 77 (108-10-21) Bcf. Given that the largest company's reported value is 84 Bcf, the range allows the second largest company to make a close approximation of the data for the largest company.

Determination Letter dated June 7, 2004, at 4-5, from Kenneth A. Vagts, Director, Office of Oil and Gas, EIA, to Jeffrey W. Mayes, Attorney for Citadel.

Citadel disagrees with EIA's contention. Citadel does not believe EIA's argument to be valid and attempts to use figures similar to EIA's example to reach a different conclusion. Citadel states

> An analysis of the application of the EIA's theory of disclosure to a scenario based on this information reveals that in fact disclosure of Aggregate Data would not allow the informed observer to estimate with reasonable accuracy the holdings of individual storage operators who had not already disclosed those holdings.
> In the West Consuming Region, the region with storage concentrated under the control of the fewest entities . . . [with] eight operators accounting for 95 percent of the total storage (similar to the proportion accounted for by the EIA's regional sample group). The largest three operators account for 32-, 21-, and 20-percent shares. Should Questar, the fourth largest operator, attempt to derive from the EIA's Aggregate Data the confidential amounts held by other respondents applying the EIA's method for deriving confidential information, it would not discover anything. Questar starts knowing its own total, 59 Bcf, and the regional total of 598 Bcf . . .. It could then closely estimate the holdings of the three larger storage operators for publicly available sources, even if it could not obtain the specific figure > reported on these entities' Form 191s. This leaves four smaller operators that have stored amounts of, respectively 28, 23, 19 and 8 Bcf, and an aggregate total of 78 Bcf. If Questar sought to determine the market positions of these entities, estimating, say Puget Sound within plus or minus 50 percent of its actual of 19 Bcf, a range of 10-29 Bcf, Questar would then know that the remaining non-disclosing storage operators held among them anywhere from 49-68 Bcf (78 - 29 = 49; 78 - 10 = 68). Because this spread must now be allocated among three remaining entities, two approximately the same size and one smaller, Questar would fail to disclose any company-specific confidential information. Any allocation would be wholly speculative, and Questar would not have exposed the market position of any one of them. Moreover, this spread is as great as 68 percent of the size of the largest holding–much larger than the plus-or-minus 50-percent spread in the Guidelines.

Appeal Letter dated July 9, 2004, at 9-10, from Jeffrey W. Mayes, Attorney for Citadel, to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals.

The FOIA puts the burden on EIA to support its withholding by showing that release of the aggregated information would cause competitive injury to the submitters of the underlying information. Citadel has attempted to show that EIA has not met its burden. We find EIA's argument to be more persuasive than Citadel's. As a basic point, we note that EIA's example is based upon the actual information that Citadel is requesting. In contrast, Citadel's example is based upon only publicly available information and different facts (four firms instead of three). In order to substantiate its claim of competitive harm, EIA does not need to show that all of the companies' gas holdings can be determined using the information at issue, merely that one company's gas holdings can be determined.

EIA has explained that the largest firms in each region hold such a proportionately large share of the market that one of those largest firms can extrapolate, by removing its own data from the currently protected aggregated figures, the size of one of the other largest firm's holdings to within a certain range. This range is sufficiently narrow to cause competitive harm to the largest firm if the aggregated information were released. At most, Citadel has only demonstrated that it is not possible to accurately calculate the gas holdings of every single firm in a particular region. This still does not refute EIA's contention that the gas holdings of larger firms could be deduced from the information.

EIA has also convinced us that release of an individual firm's gas holdings indirectly through release of the withheld aggregated information would result in competitive harm to the individual firm. In its October 24, 2003 determination, EIA outlined the competitive harm that would occur if the requested information were released.

> Because of other publicly available information about the storage industry, such as reports filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, State public utility commissions, EIA, and commercial databases and trade reports, there is general knowledge of the identity of operators and the location of underground natural gas storage fields for the three large storage regions. In some States, reporting firms that are both storage operators and regulated local distribution companies are required by the public utility commissions in the States in which they are located to provide a listing of their plans to meet obligations to supply working gas annually (and seasonally in some cases) and the amounts of gas in storage they have to meet those obligations. Were the names and amounts of gas to be publicly known, these companies' ability to meet those obligations would be revealed. A firm with small amounts of storage gas relative to its obligations would be negatively impacted in a current competitive sense because it would be at the mercy of those who would sell it gas to meet those obligations. Similarly, those in a flush position would be hard pressed to obtain the prices they were seeking were buyers to know that they had large quantities to sell.

Determination Letter dated October 24, 2003, at 2, from Kenneth Vagts to Jeffrey Mayes. We agree with EIA's assessment of the harm that could befall the submitters if the information were released.

III. Conclusion

We find that EIA correctly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld material. We concur with EIA's determination that release of the requested information would put submitters at a substantial competitive disadvantage. We also find EIA had met its burden of showing that release of the requested aggregated information would effectively be a release of the underlying information for individual firms, within a predicted range. Lastly, we also find that release of the requested information would cause submitters competitive harm were the information to be released. In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See e.g., Vladeck, Waldmas, Elias & Engelhard, P.C., 27 DOE ¶ 80,230 at 80,835 (1999). Therefore, we uphold the EIA June 7 determination and decline to order that the information be released.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Citadel Energy Products, LCC, on July 9, 2004, Case No. TFA-0066, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Brian Charles
Date of Filing:	August 11, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0068

On August 11, 2004, Brian Charles (Charles) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on July 8, 2004, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a request for documents that Charles submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On June 10, 2004, Charles filed a FOIA request with the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL) for the names and addresses of any officials at PNNL "whose job it is to remediate radioactive nuclear waste by applying any technology to lower or eliminate radioactivity." Letter from Richland to Charles (July 8, 2004) (Determination Letter). PNNL forwarded the request to Richland for a response. In the Determination Letter, Richland stated that it "conducted a thorough search and no documents were located." Id. However, in order to assist Charles with his research, Richland suggested that he visit the following website: www.pnl.gov/main/sectors/nuclear.html. In the Appeal, Charles challenged the adequacy of the search and asks OHA to direct Richland to search again for responsive information.

II. Analysis

evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

Richland informed us that PNNL had searched its Human Resources Department, including job descriptions, but found no list of names that would be responsive to Charles' request. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dorothy Riehle, Richland, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (September 8, 2004); Electronic Mail Message from Dorothy Riehle, Richland to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (September 21, 2004). In fact, none of the descriptions stated that any employees are assigned to do remediation. */ Richland did not, and the FOIA does not require it to, create a record to comply with Charles' request. Determination Letter. However, the PNNL website explains how PNNL performs the remediation of nuclear waste. Richland suggested that the requester contact PNNL directly via mail, or send an email to the webmaster of the site. We reviewed the PNNL website and found a web page entitled "Effectively Processing Radioactive Wastes." The page is located at www.pnl.gov/etd/solutions/radwaste.htm and it contains the name, telephone number, fax number, and email address of a PNNL contact for further information. We will provide this information to the requester in the event that he does not have ready access to the Internet. After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Richland conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Brian Charles on August 11, 2004, OHA Case Number TFA-0068, is hereby denied.

That is not true – Richland's unsuccessful search merely reflects the absence of an existing list of PNNL employees who are assigned to remediate nuclear waste.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Richard Hammond

Date of Filing: August 30, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0069

On August 30, 2004, Richard Hammond (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Western Area Power Administration (WAPA). In that determination, WAPA responded to a Request for Information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. WAPA released portions of several responsive documents, but continued to withhold other portions of those documents under FOIA Exemption 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require WAPA to release those portions of the documents to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On April 15, 2004, the Appellant filed a request for information with WAPA seeking: "All EEO settlement agreements between complainants and the Western Area Power Administration . . . made between January 1999 and March 2004." Determination Letter at 1. On July 15, 2004, WAPA issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing a number of responsive documents to the Appellant. However, WAPA withheld portions of these documents under FOIA Exemption 6. On August 30, 2004 the Appellant submitted the present Appeal.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 6 is at issue in the present case.

Turning to the present case, WAPA, invoking FOIA Exemption 6, redacted information from the copies of the settlement agreements it released to the Appellant claiming that release of the redacted information constitutes a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. The Determination Letter does not provide a description of the information withheld by WAPA, however. Instead, WAPA states:

> Information pertaining to the specific group of individuals who have filed employment related complaints involves a great amount of their privacy interest. The association of a person's name, working location, and other personal data intensifies the individual's right to privacy. Additionally, other information associated with the employment background of an individual, by its release or other use, would certainly result in embarrassment to the individual.

Determination Letter at 1. This description of the withheld information is too vague and conclusory to allow for a meaningful analysis of WAPA's withholding. After conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, the agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The agency must also provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption(s) under which information was withheld. Research Information Services, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80, 139 (1996); Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,767 (1996). Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

In the present case, we have addressed this issue by obtaining un-redacted copies of the settlement agreements. As a result of our in camera review of these documents, we have found that the withheld information can be adequately described as falling into five categories. We will discuss each catagory of information withheld by WAPA below.

Before analyzing WAPA's withholdings of the five categories of information, it is necessary to set forth the test which must be used to determine whether information must be withheld under Exemption 6. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3. We will apply these principles to each category of documents below.

A. Category 1: Information that, if released, would reveal the identities of persons who had filed EEO complaints.

The first category consists of that information that, if released, would reveal the identities of persons who had filed EEO complaints. This category includes the names of the complainants, their job descriptions, pronouns revealing the gender of the complainants, and information indicating the office or duty station at which the complainant was employed. It is clear that releasing information showing that an Individual has filed an EEO Complaint and linking a particular complainant's identity to the information contained in the settlement agreements would constitute a serious intrusion into the complainant's personal privacy. On the other hand, it is clear that release of the individual's identities would reveal very little, if anything about the operations or activities of the Government. Accordingly, we find that release of information revealing the identities of those individual who had settled their EEO complaints would not further the public interest. Weighing the substantial intrusions into personal privacy that would result from its release against the minimal public interest in its disclosure, we find that release of information revealing these individuals' identities would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Accordingly, WAPA was correct to withhold Category 1 information under Exemption 6.

B. Category 2: Information that, if released, would reveal the identities of DOE management team members.

The second category consists of information that, if released, would reveal the identities of DOE management team members. This category includes the names of DOE management team members as well as their job title. Specifically, WAPA often, but not always, withheld the names and titles of the DOE officials who signed the settlement agreements. Civilian employees of the Federal Government have no expectation of privacy in matters pertaining to their official duties, unless the release of this information could reasonably be expected to raise security or safety concerns. The redacted information in this category simply identifies those public officials who signed these settlement agreements on behalf of the government. These public employees have no personal privacy interests in their titles or in actions taken in their official capacities. Since we find that there are not any privacy interests in the redacted information falling into Category 2, we need not proceed further in our analysis. Category 2 information may not be withheld under Exemption 6. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to WAPA. On remand, WAPA must either release the Category 2 information or issue a new determination letter justifying its withholding under another FOIA exemption.

C. Category 3: Information setting forth the terms of the settlement agreements.

The third category consists of information setting forth the terms and substance of the settlement agreements. This category includes information indicating new terms or conditions of employment agreed to by the complainant and DOE offices, and the amount of money received by the complainants in settlement of their complaints. WAPA withheld a considerable amount of information in this category.

Since all the information allowing a third party to ascertain the identity of the individual who filed a particular EEO action is being withheld, the information in this category cannot be attributed to a particular person. Because this information cannot be attributed to particular individuals, its release would not cause any intrusion into personal privacy interests. Accordingly, we need not proceed further in our analysis. Category 3 information may not be withheld under Exemption 6. On remand, WAPA must either release the Category 3 information or issue a new determination letter justifying its withholding under another FOIA exemption.

The fourth category consists of various dates that were redacted from the settlement agreements. These dates include the effective dates of retirements agreed to by several complainants, the dates that parties to the document signed the document, the dates that retirement annuity benefits would become available to complainants, and the effective dates of settlement agreements.

The dates themselves are not the type of sensitive information that Exemption 6 is intended to protect. However, in some cases, release of the dates might allow third parties to ascertain the identity of the complainants that are the subject of the Settlement Agreements. In such cases, the dates may be withheld under Exemption 6 for the same reasons we set forth in our discussion of that information contained in Category 1. Protection under Exemption 6 is not available, however, for those dates which, if released, could not reasonably be expected to reveal the identities of the complainants. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to WAPA. On remand, WAPA must review all Category 4 information to determine whether its release could reasonably be expected to reveal the identity of complainants. If WAPA determines that any Category 4 information could reasonably be expected to reveal the identity of a complainant, it should issue a new determination letter withholding that information and explaining why it concluded that its release could reasonably be expected to reveal the identity of complainants. Any information in Category 4 that WAPA determines could not reasonably be expected to reveal the identity of a complainant upon release must either be released or become the subject of a new determination letter withholding it under a FOIA exemption other than Exemption 6.

E. Category 5: Information revealing the identity of third parties.

The fifth category consists of information that, if released, would identify individuals whose names are mentioned in the settlement agreements, but who are not parties or signatories of the agreement. Such information needs to be considered on a case by case basis. Accordingly, we are remanding this part of the Appeal to WAPA for further consideration. On remand, WAPA must analyze each third-party identity it has protected under Exemption 6 under the standards set forth above. It then must either release the Category 5 information or issue a new determination letter clearly identifying the information it is continuing to withhold and providing a detailed justification for its continued withholding under Exemption 6 or any other FOIA Exemption.

III. CONCLUSION

Because WAPA has not met its burden of showing that it properly withheld information under Exemption 6, we are remanding this matter to WAPA. On remand, WAPA must promptly release the information described in Categories Two through Five or issue a new determination letter, in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Richard Hammond, Case No. TFA-0069, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Western Area Power Administration for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Stephen A. Vaughn
Date of Filing:	September 16, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0070

On September 16, 2004, Stephen A. Vaughn filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Director of the Department of Energy's (DOE) FOIA/Privacy Act Group (hereinafter referred to as "the Director") in response to a request for documents that Mr. Vaughn submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the Director perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Mr. Vaughn sought access to any documents concerning the employment of his father, James Vaughn, with the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) or any AEC contractor between 1944 and 1964, including any documents generated pursuant to investigations pertaining to his security clearance. In his response, the Director informed Mr. Vaughn that his request had been referred to the DOE's Office of Security, Office of Personnel Security, and that a search of that Office had failed to locate any responsive documents. In his Appeal, Mr. Vaughn challenges the adequacy of the search that was conducted.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

In order to determine whether the search was adequate, we contacted the Director's Office and the Office of Personnel Security. We were informed that the Office of Personnel Security maintained records on microfiche of former holders of DOE clearances and those of predecessor agencies such as the AEC. These records were searched and no responsive information was found. We were further informed that according to DOE record retention procedures, records in James Vaughn's Personnel Security File would have been destroyed after 10 years. [1] Since James Vaughn's clearance was most likely terminated in 1964 along with his employment with the AEC or an AEC contractor, it is therefore very likely that any records pertaining to that clearance have been destroyed. [2]

However, during our consultations with the two Offices, it became evident that documents concerning the senior Vaughn's employment might be located in two additional places. As a result, the Director's Office requested that the DOE's Office of Personnel and Office of Worker Transition and Safety search for responsive documents. The Office of Personnel reported that no responsive documents could be found. [3] The Office of Worker Transition and Safety replied that it could not reasonably conduct a search based on the limited information provided by Stephen Vaughn. Specifically, that Office stated that some information regarding his father's place of employment or the identity of his employer was needed. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA require that requests must be "for reasonably described records," and must provide information that "enable[s] DOE personnel to locate them with a reasonable amount of effort." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(b). We believe that the Office of Worker Transition and Safety acted within its discretion in refusing to conduct a search based upon the incomplete information provided by Stephen Vaughn. [4] We also

1/ See memorandum of October 14, 2004 telephone conversation between Robert B. Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Audrey Dixon, Office of Personnel Security.

2/ In his Appeal, Mr. Vaughn requested that he be informed of the existence of any documents pertaining to the destruction of his father's records. We were informed by Ms. Dixon that records of documents destroyed under the DOE's record retention policies are maintained, but that such records only pertain to documents destroyed after 1988.

3/ The Office of Personnel informed the Director's Office that one year after an employee has left federal service, his personnel file is transferred to the Federal Records Center in St. Louis, Missouri, a facility of the National Archives and Records Administration, an independent federal agency. Therefore, if James Vaughn was a federal employee, there is a possibility that records of his employment would be located there. The Center is located at 111 Winnebago Street, St. Louis, MO 63118. They may be contacted by telephone at (314) 801-9257 or by e-mail (cpr.center@nara.gov).

4/ Sheila Dillard of that Office has informed us, however, that she would be happy to arrange for a search for the requested documents if provided with any available additional information about the location of James Vaughn's work site or the identity of his employer(s). Ms. Dillard may be reached at telephone number (202) 586-1311.

conclude that the search performed in response to Mr. Vaughn's request, augmented as described herein, was adequate, and that his Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Stephen A. Vaughn on September 16, 2004, OHA Case Number TFA-0070, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Michael J. Barber

Date of Filing: September 22, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0071

On September 22, 2004, Michael J. Barber (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Freedom of Information/Privacy Act Group (FOI/PA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 27, 2004. That determination concerned a request for information the Appellant submitted pursuant to the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. If the present Appeal were granted, FOI/PA would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On March 8, 2004, the Appellant submitted a Privacy Act request for "copies of any and all documentation, records, or information related to [the Appellant] in any manner which is [sic] maintained by the U.S. Department of Energy or the former Atomic Energy Commission in the Washington, D.C. Offices or its related Offices and National Laboratories elsewhere." Request Letter dated March 3, 2004, from Michael J. Barber to U.S. Department of Energy Freedom of Information Office. On July 27, 2004, FOI/PA responded that searches of the systems of records of the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho), the Richland Operations Office (Richland), the Chicago Operations Office (Chicago), and the Coordination and Information Center (CIC) under the jurisdiction of the National Nuclear Security Adminstration (NNSA) yielded no responsive documents. Determination Letter dated July 27, 2004, from Abel Lopez, Director, FOI/PA, DOE, to Michael J. Barber. FOI/PA indicated that Idaho and Richland searched Systems of Records DOE-5 "Personnel Records of Former Contractor Employees," DOE-33 "Personnel Medical Records," DOE-35 "Personnel Radiation Exposure Records," and DOE-43 "Personnel Security Clearance Files." Id. Chicago conducted searches of DOE-33, DOE-35, and DOE-43. CIC conducted a search of DOE-35 and DOE-86 "Human Radiation Experiments (HREX) Information Management System." Id. No records were found that were responsive to the Appellant's request. FOI/PA added that HREX contains historical documents from the Department of Defense, Department of Health and Human Services, Department of Veterans Affairs, Central Intelligence Agency and the DOE. Id. The Appellant appealed, claiming that the July 27, 2004 Determination was not responsive to his request because it informed him that he did not have a U.S. Government personnel file. Appeal Letter dated September 10, 2004, from Michael J. Barber, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

Analysis

The Privacy Act requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). DOE regulations define a system of records as "a group of any records under DOE control from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particulars assigned to the individual." 10 C.F.R. § 1008.2(m).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted Idaho, Richland, Chicago, and CIC to determine what type of search was conducted by each of these offices. All of the offices indicated that they conducted database searches of the systems of records indicated in the determination letter. The searches were conducted by using the Appellant's name and social security number. Richland indicated that it also conducted a search of the system of records by the Appellant's date of birth and conducted a hand search of the old archived files. Electronic Mail Message dated September 22, 2004, from Richland to OHA. Chicago also searched its old files archived on such media as cards and microfiche. Electronic Mail Message dated September 23, 2004, from Chicago to OHA. Idaho searched its databases by name and Social Security Number only, as they cannot be searched by birth date. Electronic Mail Message dated September 24, 2004, from Idaho to OHA. In addition to the databases, CIC searched records that are accessible through the Human Radiation Experiments (HREX) Information Management System. Electronic Mail Message from Nevada to FOIA/PA dated March 12, 2004.

No information responsive to the Appellant's request was found. In the Appeal, the Appellant claims that the determination is bizarre in that it informs him that he does not have a government personnel file, something he already knew. However, the systems of records pertaining to government employees were searched to guarantee the most complete search possible. Moreover, the Appellant has not provided any information indicating additional places to search for the requested information. Based on the searches performed by the various offices, we are convinced that these offices followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in his request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Michael J. Barber, on September 22, 2004, Case No. TFA-0071, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Cynthia A. Frey
Dates of Filing:	September 29, 2004 September 30, 2004
Case Numbers:	TFA-0072 TFA-0073

On September 29, 2004, Cynthia A. Frey filed an Appeal (Case No. TFA-0072) from determinations that two offices of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to her. The determinations responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In each office's determination, DOE released responsive information to Ms. Frey. This Appeal, if granted, would require the offices to perform new searches for additional responsive information. On September 30, 2004, Ms. Frey filed a Request for Reconsideration (Case No. TFA-0073) of a Decision and Order that the DOE's Office of Hearings and Appeals issued to her on December 19, 2002. In that Decision and Order, the DOE withheld from disclosure any statements that former Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) Deputy Assistant General Counsel Maynard Ugol might have made to the Office of the Inspector General in the course of a particular investigation. This Request for Reconsideration, if granted, would require the DOE to release those statements to Ms. Frey.

I. Background

On February 15, 2002, Ms. Frey filed a request for information, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, for a copy of the records related to an investigation the DOE's Office of the Inspector General (OIG) conducted into alleged drug use and leave abuse at FERC's Office of Pipeline Certificates. OIG responded to that request, and Ms. Frey appealed that response to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). After due consideration, OHA issued a final Decision and Order (Case No. VFA-0754) in which, inter alia, it upheld OIG's determination to withhold any statements that Mr. Ugol might have made in the course of that investigation, holding that Exemptions 6 and 7(C) of the FOIA protected the identities of those interviewed. Cynthia Frey Nordstrom, 28 DOE ¶ 80,258 (2002). In her Request for Reconsideration, Ms. Frey contends, and has produced evidence, that Mr. Ugol has died. She argues that the privacy interests in Mr. Ugol's participation in the investigation, which formed the foundation for withholding information pertaining to him under Exemption 7(C), have expired, and that information should now be released to her under the FOIA.

On June 30, 2004, Ms. Frey, through her counsel, sent a letter to OHA, requesting copies of all DOE records "submitted to, used by, or issued by the Agency in reaching its Decision and Order [in Case No. VFA-0754]." To ensure a complete response, this request was forwarded to the Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Group, which assigned search responsibilities to three offices, OIG, OHA and Executive Secretariat, with instructions that each office should respond directly to the requester.

OHA responded to Ms. Frey's request on July 15, 2004, providing copies of the documents contained in the case file that corresponds to Case No. VFA-0754. In her Appeal, Ms. Frey contends that OHA's response is incomplete, because it "did not include any of the OIG's investigative records . . . despite the fact that OHA obtained and reviewed 'unredacted copies' of such materials before issuing its [decision in Case No. VFA-0754]." Appeal at 5.

The Office of the Executive Secretariat responded to Ms. Frey's request on August 4, 2004. In her Appeal, Ms. Frey contends that this response is also incomplete, because it likewise did not include any of OIG's investigative records. Appeal at 6. Ms. Frey does not provide any factual basis for this portion of her Appeal. In fact, the Office of the Executive Secretariat's response is not mentioned again throughout the entirety of her 15-page Appeal. In the absence of any explanation of why this Office's response is incomplete, for example, why it should have any of OIG's investigative records, we conclude that the Office of the Executive Secretariat's search for documents responsive to Ms. Frey's request was adequate.

OIG responded to Ms. Frey's request on August 30, 2004. In its response, OIG stated that it had no responsive documents other than those that it had already provided to Ms. Frey in May 2002, and therefore would not be providing any documents. Ms. Frey appeals OIG's refusal to produce documents responsive to her request. Appeal at 6-7.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, the FOIA requires agencies to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Alice McMillan, 28 DOE ¶ 80,118 (2004). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Consequently, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. NSA, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

1. Office of Hearings and Appeals

We reviewed the procedure this Office followed in producing its response to Ms. Frey's June 30, 2004 request for documents. According to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, the attorney who prepared that response, she retrieved the case file in Case No. VFA-0754 and photocopied each document in that file. The case file is the only logical place in the office where any documents related to that case would be located. Ms. Adeyeye then prepared the cover letter and enclosed with it all the photocopies she had made. No copies of the OIG records that Ms. Frey now seeks were enclosed, because there were none in the case file. Ms. Adeyeye, who was the staff attorney assigned to Case No. VFA-0754, explained that, in the course of processing that appeal, she compared the unredacted and redacted versions of the records contained in OIG's investigative file by reviewing them in a conference room within the offices of OIG. Memorandum to File in Case No. TFA-0072 (October 14, 2004). Ruby Len of OIG recalled that Ms. Adeyeye reviewed the OIG file at OIG, and stated that OIG's policy is to permit OHA to review files on the premises but not to make copies of them. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Ruby Len, OIG, and William Schwartz, OHA (October 6, 2004). In light of those circumstances, the fact that OHA's search for documents did not yield unredacted material from the OIG investigative file does not establish that the search was inadequate. To the contrary, I conclude that OHA's search for responsive documents was adequate.

2. Office of Inspector General

The OIG responded to Ms. Frey's June 30, 2004 request for documents by stating that it was providing no documents to her because it had no responsive documents to give her other than those it provided to her in May 2002. In her Appeal, Ms. Frey contends that she suffered from a medical condition that "prevented her from properly maintaining and/or retaining the previously released documents." Appeal at 9. After discussing this Appeal with a representative of OHA, Ms. Len explained that OIG normally, and certainly in this case, will produce a second set of documents for a requester upon request. Ms. Len indicated that she will provide Ms. Frey with a second set of documents upon receipt of this Decision and Order. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Ruby Len, OIG, and William Schwartz, OHA (October 6, 2004). In these circumstances, such action is appropriate.

B. Request for Reconsideration

In her Request for Reconsideration (Case No. TFA-0073), Ms. Frey asks that OHA reconsider its determination, in Case No. TFA-0754, to withhold from disclosure any records pertaining to Mr. Ugol. In that case, OHA agreed with OIG's determination to withhold the names and identities of all individuals who were interviewed in connection with the OIG investigation described above, under two exemptions of the FOIA, one that protects information the release of which "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" (Exemption 6) and another that protects information compiled for law enforcement purposes, the release of which "could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" (Exemption 7(C)). Ms. Frey contends that any information regarding Mr. Ugol may now be disclosed in light of his death, which she contends extinguishes any personal privacy interests Mr. Ugol may have held while he was alive.

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider requests or motions for reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Dallas D. Register, 28 DOE ¶ 80,218 (2002). In reviewing such requests for reconsideration, we may look to Subpart E of 10 C.F.R. Part 1003, OHA's general administrative rules regarding modification or rescission of its orders. See, e.g., Ron Vader, 23 DOE ¶ 80,183 (1994). Those regulations provide that an application for modification or rescission of an order shall be processed only when the application demonstrates that it is based on significantly changed circumstances, defined in pertinent part as "a substantial change in the facts or circumstances upon which an outstanding . . . order of the OHA affecting the applicant was issued, which change has occurred during the interval between issuance of such order and the date of the application and was caused by forces or circumstances beyond the control of the applicant." 10 C.F.R. § 1003.55(b)(1).

In the present case, Mr. Ugol's death appears to meet the definition of significantly changed circumstances. His death may affect the current appropriateness of the determination in Case No. VFA-0754 to withhold documents pertaining to Mr. Ugol on the basis of his personal privacy interests. Consequently, this matter should be reconsidered. We have determined that the proper approach to this reconsideration is to remand the matter to OIG. OIG should review the material that Ms. Frey has submitted in support of these changed circumstances and determine whether it adequately establishes the death of an interviewee who participated in the investigation at issue and, if so, whether the death mandates the release of information heretofore withheld from Ms. Frey.

III. Conclusion

We find that the Office of Hearings and Appeals conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Ms. Frey's June 30, 2004 request for documents. We have ascertained that the Office of the Inspector General will provide Ms. Frey with a second set of the documents it provided to her in May 2002. Finally, we are remanding to OIG the matter of whether any documents pertaining to Mr. Ugol created or obtained in the course of the OIG investigation described above may now be released to Ms. Frey, in light of the evidence she has submitted regarding his death. Accordingly, Ms. Frey's Appeal will be denied in part and granted in part.

It is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed by Cynthia A. Frey on September 29 and 30, 2004, OHA Case Nos. TFA-0072 and -0073, respectively, are hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraphs (2) and (3) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) The Office of the Inspector General will promptly produce and deliver to Ms. Frey copies of all documents in its possession that are responsive to her June 30, 2004 Freedom of Information Act request.

(3) The Office of the Inspector General will promptly reconsider its determination to withhold any records concerning an investigation into drug use and leave abuse at the Office of Pipeline Certificates of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, but only regarding any documents it may have withheld pertaining to Maynard Ugol, in light of the evidence of his death as provided by Ms. Frey in this proceeding. Following such reconsideration, the Office of the Inspector General will promptly issue a new determination either releasing such documents or justifying the withholding of any portion or portions of those documents.

(4) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Natural Resources Defense Council

Date of Filing: October 4, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0074

On October 4, 2004, Meyer & Glitzenstein filed an Appeal from a determination issued to their client Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) on September 14, 2004, by the Albuquerque National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) Service Center of the Department of Energy (DOE/AL) in response to a request for documents that NRDC submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/AL perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On July 24, 2004, NRDC filed a FOIA request with DOE's NNSA Service Center in Oakland for various records concerning DOE clean-up activities at the Energy Technology Engineering Center (ETEC) portion of the Santa Susana Field Laboratory (SSFL) in Simi Valley, California. Letter from NRDC to FOIA Officer, Oakland NNSA Service Center (July 24, 2004) (Request). On August 6, 2004, DOE/AL transferred the request to the DOE/HQ FOIA Office for additional processing by the DOE/HQ Office of Environmental Management, which agreed to respond to one item of the request. Request at 2. According to DOE/AL, the FOIA officer then contacted the Program Manager for ETEC at the former Oakland Operations Office, now a part of DOE/AL. The Program Manager located some responsive records and then forwarded those records to the requester. Letter from DOE/AL to NRDC (September 14, 2004) (Determination Letter). NRDC contends that DOE has failed to identify any internal records concerning whether the cleanup complies with government regulations, whether an environmental impact statement is required, or how DOE would address comments on the draft environmental assessment. Letter from NRDC to Director, OHA (October 4, 2004) (Appeal) at 1. According to NRDC, "since the agency simply must have generated such records, DOE's search thus far is patently deficient." Id. In the Appeal, NRDC challenged the adequacy of the search and asks OHA to direct DOE/AL to search again for responsive information.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v.

Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

DOE/AL informed us that upon receipt of the request, they contacted the Program Manager (PM) for the ETEC program at the old Oakland Operations Office. Electronic Mail Message from Carolyn Becknell, DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (October 28, 2004). The PM, who has been with this project for over 10 years, stated that he is the holder of all material related to the environmental assessment (EA). Because the EA was conducted in the field and he was the EA document manager at the end of the process, the PM considered his files to be "the most complete." Id. In addition to reviewing his own files, the PM also reviewed the files of two individuals who were directly involved with this project. The PM reviewed all emails for responsiveness. Id. He even reviewed email messages of personnel who no longer work in the field, since he was copied on many emails due to his position on the project. The PM found some responsive material, which DOE/AL sent to the requester with the Determination Letter.

DOE/AL also informed us that during the reorganization of NNSA, personnel from the former Oakland Operations and Nevada Operations Offices became part of the new NNSA Service Center in Albuquerque. During this reorganization, a large group of archived emails were lost, but have been located since DOE/AL issued the Determination Letter. The PM is reviewing these files and has agreed to forward any and all responsive material directly to the requester. Electronic mail message from Caroline Becknell, DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (October 19, 2004).

NRDC has not presented any evidence that the internal memoranda it discusses in its Appeal exist. It is possible that the responsive material that NRDC contends "simply must have been generated" does not exist, or may be located in the newly recovered archived emails. As stated above, DOE/AL is currently reviewing those files and will send any responsive material to NRDC. After reviewing the record of this case, we find that DOE/AL conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Natural Resources Defense Council on October 4, 2004, OHA Case Number TFA-0074, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Federation of American Scientists

Date of Filing: October 6, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0075

The Federation of American Scientists (Federation) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Intelligence of the Department of Energy issued on September 29, 2004. In that determination, the Office of Intelligence denied in part a request for a copy of the fiscal year 2005 budget request for that office, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Upon receiving the Federation's request, the Office of Intelligence requested that the Office of Classification and Information Control (OCIC) of the DOE's Office of Security review the requested document. OCIC determined that portions of the requested document contain information properly classified as National Security Information and must therefore be withheld under Exemption 1 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1). This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the requested document in its entirety.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On February 4, 2004, the Federation requested a copy of the fiscal year 2005 budget request for the DOE's Office of Intelligence. The Office of Intelligence requested that the OCIC perform a classification review of the requested document. The OCIC completed its review, delivering a redacted version of the document to the Office of Intelligence, from which portions of the document had been excised. Those portions contained material the OCIC determined was classified information. The OCIC also recommended that the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) review this document; the CIA determined in its review that CIA information contained in the document could be released in its entirety. The Office of Intelligence then issued a determination letter to the Federation, together with redacted version of the requested document. In its determination letter, the Office of Intelligence explained that the portions of the document being withheld from public release contained information properly classified as National Security Information pursuant to sections 1.5(a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) of Executive Order 12958 and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA.[*]

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld information described above. In its Appeal, the Federation presents two arguments in favor of releasing the budget request in its entirety: (1) The DOE has the discretion to release the entire 2005 budget request under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1, in the public interest, as it has in previous years, and (2) to the extent that the requested document contains prior-year information that has been released, the DOE has waived its ability to withhold this same information now.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director reviewed the requested document for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

According to the Director, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, the material the DOE withheld from the document must continue to be withheld, because it constitutes classified information that is intelligence-related. The information that the DOE continues to withhold concerns military plans, weapons systems, or operations; foreign government information; intelligence activities, intelligence sources or methods, or cryptology; foreign relations or foreign activities of the United States, including confidential sources; and scientific, technological, or economic matters relating to the national security. This information is currently classified as National Security Information (NSI) under sections 1.4(a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) of Executive Order 12958, and is identified as "DOE b(1)" in the margin of a redacted version of this document, which will be provided to the Federation under separate cover. Because NSI is defined as classified information in Executive Order 12958, it is exempt from mandatory disclosure under [*] Section 1.5, Classification Categories, was renumbered as Section 1.4 in a March 23, 2003 amendment to Executive Order 12958. See Executive Order 13292, 68 Fed. Reg. 15315 (March 28, 2003).

Exemption 1 of the FOIA. The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Marshall Combs, Director, Office of Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that Executive Order 12958 requires that the DOE continue withholding portions of the requested document under consideration in this Appeal. Although we agree with the appellant that a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 1, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Director has determined to be properly classified must continue to be withheld from disclosure. Accordingly, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Federation of American Scientists on October 6, 2004, Case No. TFA-0075, is hereby denied.

(2) A redacted version of the fiscal year 2005 budget request for the Department of Energy's Office of Intelligence will be provided to the Federation of American Scientists.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Kenneth M. Reim

Date of Filing: November 2, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0076

On November 2, 2004, Kenneth M. Reim (the Appellant), filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on September 22, 2004.[1/] That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, OIG would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On April 18, 2003, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request for the "status of follow up action on Audit Report 0589 by DOE/IG, DOE or other federal agencies [and] [c]orrespondence related to the ongoing IG Audit, and responses of the agency(s) being audited." Request letter dated April 18, 2003, from Kenneth M. Reim to Abel Lopez, Director, Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Group (FOIA/PA), DOE. On May 9, 2003, FOIA/PA assigned the request to OIG to conduct a search of its files for responsive documents. Letter dated May 9, 2003, from Abel Lopez to the Appellant. On September 22, 2004, OIG responded that it had nothing responsive to the first part of the Appellant's request, that is, the status of follow up action on Audit Report 0589. It released 10 documents to the Appellant that were responsive to the second part of his request; however, it redacted some information pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA.[2/] Determination Letter dated September 22, 2004, from William S. Maharay, Deputy IG for Audit Services, IG, to the Appellant.

[1/] Although the Appeal was received by this office on October 26, 2004, it did not include a copy of the determination letter, which is required by the FOIA regulations. This office received a copy of the September 22, 2004 Determination Letter on November 2, 2004.

[2/] The Appellant is not appealing anything relating to the second part of his request.

On November 2, 2004, the Appellant appealed the September 22, 2004 determination to our Office. Appeal Letter dated October 19, 2004, from Kenneth M. Reim to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In the Appeal, the Appellant claims that he is appealing what he sees as a non-responsive answer to the first part of his request regarding the status of follow up action on Audit Report 0589. He continues that if no follow up was completed, he wants to know why. Id. at 2-3.

Analysis

As an initial matter, with regard to the Appellant's question as to why there was no follow up on the Audit Report, we note that the FOIA is not a mechanism for answering questions. Under the FOIA, agencies are required only to release non-exempt, responsive documents; they are not required to answer questions about an agency's operations. DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978). Nevertheless, we did investigate the extent of the search conducted for documents relating to the status of follow up activities related to the Audit Report.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

We have contacted OIG to determine what type of search was conducted. OIG informed us that because this part of the request was so narrow, it was common knowledge that no separate piece of paper existed that was responsive. Anything possibly responsive to this part of the Appellant's request would be contained in the Department Audit Resolution Tracking System (DARTS), which is maintained by the Office of the Chief Financial Officer (CFO). CFO then determined that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) might have information responsive to that part of the request.[3/] NNSA, as the concerned program office in the case of Audit Report 0589, is responsible for entering the information arising from the OIG Audit into the DARTS and updating it on a quarterly basis. After the information is entered into DARTS, OIG reviews the updates from the program office and inputs any OIG comments into DARTS. OIG advises us that it knew that it did not have anything responsive to the Appellant's request because it does not maintain any information after the Audit is completed. That information is placed into DARTS. Given the facts presented to us, we are convinced that OIG followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in his request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Kenneth M. Reim, on November 2, 2004, Case No. TFA-0076, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Chang-Su Lim
Date of Filing:	March 15, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0077

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Chang-Su Lim in response to a determination issued to him by the Manager of the Chicago Operations Office (hereinafter referred to as "the Manager"). In that determination, the Manager replied to a request that Dr. Lim submitted for access to a specified document under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Manager released the document to Dr. Lim with certain portions withheld. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the Manager release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R.§ 1004.10(b).

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Dr. Lim sought access to a copy of a Field Work Proposal entitled "Cellular and Molecular Studies of Radio-Adaptive Responses," which was submitted to the DOE for agency funding. In response to this request, the Manager released the Proposal to Dr. Lim, but withheld portions of that document pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 5 of the FOIA. In his Appeal, Dr. Lim contests the Manager's application of Exemptions 4 and 5.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criteria. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997), aff'd in part, rev'd in part & remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir. 1999). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Applying these criteria to the present case, it is clear that the withheld information is "commercial." Although it is scientific in nature, it was submitted to the DOE for the purpose of securing government funding for research on the subject matter of the proposal. It is also clear that the submitter, Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory (LBNL), an organization operated by the University of California at Berkeley, is a "person" for Exemption 4 purposes. Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.3d 93, 95 (2nd Cir. 1996). There is no claim of privilege with regard to the withheld information. We must therefore determine whether the information is "confidential." Because LBNL was required to provide the information to obtain the funding, it was submitted on an "involuntary" basis, and the National Parks test applies.

In his determination, the Manager concluded that release of the withheld information would put LBNL at a competitive disadvantage by "revealing the state of the art and direction of research that" LBNL is pursuing. "Such disclosures could well encourage others to pursue research in these areas and to assist others in competing against" LBNL for future research funding. Determination Letter at 2.

We have been informed by the Manager that the withheld material describes a novel procedure that has not previously been published, and includes detailed research methodologies. Id. Furthermore, we have examined the material, and we can find no reason to disagree with the Manager's conclusion. We find there to be a substantial likelihood that release of this information would suggest new avenues of inquiry into the subject of the proposal, or would otherwise aid LBNL's competitors in formulating proposals for future research grants. We therefore reject Dr. Lim's contention that the Manager improperly applied Exemption 4 in withholding the information in question. [*]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Chang-Su Lim, OHA Case Number TFA-0077, is hereby denied.

*/ The Manager also found that disclosure of the theories and ideas for scientific research described in the withheld material would compromise certain rights that the submitter might have to exploit the commercial value of any inventions that arise from work done under the research grant, and that this would result in a competitive disadvantage. However, because we have found that the Manager has already adequately justified withholding the material in question for the reason discussed above, we need not address this additional justification. For a similar reason, we also do not need to address the Manager's finding that release of the withheld information would compromise the government's ability to exploit the commercial value of any inventions that arise from work done under the research grant, and that the information may therefore be withheld under Exemption 5.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Capitol District Information
Date of Filing:	November 29, 2004
Case Number:	TFA-0078

On November 29, 2004, Capitol District Information (CDI) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy FOIA/Privacy Act Group (DOE/HQ) and the Office of Policy and International Affairs (DOE/OP) on November 9, 2004, in response to a request for documents that CDI submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/OP perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On September 14, 2004, CDI filed a FOIA request with DOE/HQ for various records concerning:

> All documents that are or reflect reports of sales of natural gas to or purchases of natural gas by Pacific Gas and Electric (PG&E) submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of the Secretary of Energy's January 19, 2001 Temporary Emergency Natural Gas Purchase and Sale Order (attached hereto as Exhibit A) or any extension of that order. Documents responsive to this request may be in the possession of [certain] employees of DOE.

Letter from CDI to DOE/HQ (September 14, 2004) (Request). On October 18, 2004, DOE/HQ informed CDI that the request was assigned to DOE/OP to conduct a search of its files for responsive documents. Letter from DOE/HQ to CDI (October 14, 2004). DOE/HQ also informed CDI that it would be categorized as a "commercial use" requester and would be assessed fees for the search, and for the review and duplication of any responsive documents. On November 9, 2004, DOE/HQ informed CDI that DOE/OP had completed its search but was unable to locate any responsive documents. CDI was charged for 90 minutes of search time. CDI then filed an appeal. Letter from CDI to OHA (November 29, 2004). Id. In the Appeal, CDI challenged the adequacy of the search and asks OHA to direct DOE/OP to search again for responsive information. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

The Temporary Order authorized PG&E to make emergency purchases of natural gas from certain suppliers in order to assure the continued availability of natural gas to high–priority uses in central and northern California. See Temporary Emergency Natural Gas Purchase and Sale Order (January 19, 2001). Paragraph 5 of the order directed PG&E and the suppliers to report weekly to the Secretary of Energy the prices and volumes of natural gas delivered, transported, or contracted for under the Order during the previous week. The order was issued on January 19, 2001, and was extended on January 23, 2001 to February 7, 2001. See Further Temporary Emergency Natural Gas Purchase and Sale Order (January 23, 2001).

In its request, CDI stated that two DOE employees, Margo Anderson and Mike Skinker, may have responsive records in their possession.* We contacted Skinker for information about the search. Skinker stated that he worked on a project related to the Order, and had responded to the original request after consulting with Anderson. See Memorandum of Telephone Message from Mike Skinker, OGC (December 22, 2004). Skinker thought that responsive material might be located in DOE/OP, but Anderson searched and found no responsive records in her files. See Electronic Mail Message from Al Cobb, DOE/OP to Melodie Washington, DOE/OP (January 4, 2005). She referred Skinker to Paul Carrier, another DOE/OP employee. A DOE/OP employee then searched Carrier's files and Anderson's files, and found no responsive material. Electronic Mail Message from Al Cobb, DOE/OP, to Melodie Washington, DOE/OP (January 4, 2005). After two searches, DOE/OP finally concluded on November 3, 2004, that it did not have any responsive material, and notified DOE/HQ. Electronic Mail Message from Edith Horne, DOE/OP to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 21, 2005).

After DOE/OP described its search, this office contacted CDI for the names of any other DOE employees that may have responsive records in their possession, or for any evidence that responsive material exists. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Ron Barrett, CDI, and

* Anderson no longer works for DOE/OP, but we contacted her replacement, Al Cobb, for information about the search.

Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 24, 2005). The requester had no additional names and has not presented any evidence that responsive material exists. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Ron Barrett, CDI, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 25, 2005). After reviewing the record of this case, we find that DOE/OP conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Capitol District Information on November 29, 2004, OHA Case Number TFA-0078, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Richard Hammond

Date of Filing: December 6, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0079

On December 6, 2004, Richard Hammond (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Western Area Power Administration (WAPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on November 1, 2004. In its determination, WAPA partially denied the Appellant's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require WAPA to release the information it withheld and to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. BACKGROUND

In a letter dated April 15, 2004, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to WAPA for documents including copies of all Equal Employment Opportunity-related (EEO) settlement agreements between complainants and WAPA made between January 1999 and March 2004. Determination Letter dated July 15, 2004, from Liova D. Juarez, General Counsel, FOIA, WAPA, and Privacy Act Officer, to Richard Hammond. On July 15, 2004, WAPA responded that it had identified a number of documents as responsive to the Appellant's request. Id. at 1. In that Determination, WAPA indicated that it was releasing them to the Appellant after withholding portions of the documents in accordance with Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Id. The Appellant filed an Appeal with this office that was denied in part, granted in part, and remanded to WAPA with instructions to either release some of the information or issue a new determination justifying its withholding. Richard Hammond, Case No. TFA-0069, 29 DOE ¶ 80,152 (2004).

In its second Determination Letter, issued on November 1, 2004, WAPA released some additional information, but withheld information setting forth the terms and substance of the settlement agreements as exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5. WAPA claimed that the information contained material that was prepared in anticipation of pending litigation. Determination Letter dated November 1, 2004, from Liova D. Juarez to Richard Hammond (November 1, 2004 Determination Letter). The Appellant filed this Appeal, claiming first, that the search was inadequate, and second, that the information WAPA withheld should not be considered to have been prepared in anticipation of litigation. Appeal Letter dated November 30, 2004, from Richard Hammond, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

We contacted WAPA to determine what type of search was conducted. WAPA informed us that it searched its computer system using keywords. In addition, WAPA conducted a hand search of documents, including those that were waiting to be archived or were already archived. WAPA only searched for EEO settlement agreements, as requested by the Appellant. The Appellant argues that WAPA provided only 15 settlement agreements, far below what he believes an office with 11 employees should have handled. In addition, he stated that no settlement agreements were provided where the complainant was represented by a specific law firm in Lakewood, Colorado. WAPA responded that its EEO office works on many types of cases, not just EEO-related settlement agreements, including Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) and Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA) cases. Further, although the law firm does represent individuals before WAPA, it is possible that the individuals represented by this firm did not reach settlements with WAPA, that the firm did not represent anyone during the time period for which the Appellant is requesting the information, or that the firm represented an individual or individuals in areas other than EEO, such as MSPB or FLRA claims.

WAPA's search did not locate any settlement agreements involving the specific firm, and the Appellant has not produced convincing evidence that additional responsive documents exist. Given the facts as they were presented to us, we are convinced that WAPA followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in his request.

None of the Appellant's arguments convinces us otherwise. The Appellant's allegation regarding the particular number of employees working in the EEO office does not provide any new information that would direct WAPA to a new place to search or convince us that additional relevant documents exist. Further, the information that a specific law firm represents individuals before WAPA does not provide information sufficient to suggest that additional settlement agreements exist. As stated above, we believe that WAPA's search was reasonably calculated to discover responsive documents. Accordingly, this part of the Appeal should be denied.

B. Exemption 5-Deliberative Process and Predecisional Documents

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). Exemption 5 incorporates every civil discovery privilege which the government enjoys under statutory and case law. United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 7799 (1983); FTC v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 16, 19-27 (1983); Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft & Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 164, 184 (1975). Therefore, any communication that is privileged in civil discovery is also shielded from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 5. Id. Accordingly, if the requested documents fall within a civil discovery privilege, they may be withheld under Exemption 5.

In its second determination, WAPA withheld the terms and conditions of the majority of the settlement agreements. The terms and agreements are the substance of the agreement between the parties. We believe that these portions of the settlement agreements may be withheld under the privilege for settlement negotiation papers incorporated within Exemption 5. Federal courts ruling squarely on the issue have held that such documents are privileged from discovery. The federal courts have held that information prepared by attorneys "in contemplation of litigation,"Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 864 (D.C. Cir. 1980), includes documents relating to possible settlements of litigation. See, e.g., United States v. Metropolitan St. Louis Sewer District, 952 F.2d 1040, 1045 (8th Cir. 1992). Specifically, the courts have also recognized a separate civil discovery privilege for information relating to settlement negotiations. See, e.g., Olin Corp. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 603 F. Supp. 445, 449 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). In light of the case law, OHA has determined that settlement documents are privileged and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure. Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE¶ 80,192 (1997) (IFOE); Peter T. Torell, 15 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1987) (Torell). In reaching these determinations, we have concluded that the privilege exists, in large part, to encourage full disclosure between the parties involved in order to promote settlements rather than continued litigation. Torell at 80,576.[*/] Promotion of this important objective would be harmed if these documents were released. We therefore conclude that WAPA properly withheld information relating to the settlement agreements.

III. THE PUBLIC INTEREST

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. The Appellant argues that release would be in the public interest. Appeal Letter at 2. We disagree. The release of individual settlement agreements would result in foreseeable harm to the interests that are protected by the settlement negotiation privilege. IFOE at 80,794. An opposing party could gain substantial benefit (and cause corresponding detriment to an agency) if the party could obtain work product generated by an agency in connection with earlier settlements. The party could unfairly gain insight into the agency's strategic and tactical approach to deciding what terms may be offered and accepted by the agency. The release of these agreements could compromise the DOE's efforts at negotiating future settlements in similar cases.

IV. CONCLUSION

WAPA properly withheld portions of the documents under the Exemption 5. Further, we believe the search that was conducted was adequate. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Richard Hammond on December 6, 2004, Case No. TFA-0079, is hereby denied.

[*/] In an alternative analysis discussed in Las Vegas Review-Journal, Case No. TFA-0007, 28 DOE ¶ 80,273 (2003), OHA held that settlement agreements and information reflecting the settlement amount or other terms of the agreement are attorney work product, and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure. Id. at 4.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Paul E. Guy, Jr.

Date of Filing: December 8, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0080

This Decision concerns an Appeal filed by Paul E. Guy, Jr. from a determination issued to him by the Chief Counsel of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Savannah River Operations Office. That determination was issued in response to a request for documents that Mr. Guy submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, and the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(a), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. In that determination, the Chief Counsel withheld portions of certain documents from Mr. Guy. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the Chief Counsel release most of the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release.

The PA requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. A PA request requires only that an agency search systems of records, while the FOIA generally requires a broader search. The DOE regulations define a system of records as being "a group of any records under DOE control from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particulars assigned to the individual." 10 C.F.R. § 1008.2(m).

I. Background

In his FOIA/PA request, Mr. Guy sought access to all documents generated by a named contractor employee during his investigation of Mr. Guy's complaints against a named employee of the DOE's Office of Safeguards and Security, and all documents relating to the cost of this investigation. In her response, the Chief Counsel informed Mr. Guy that a search of all systems of records pursuant to the PA had failed to identify any responsive documents. However, she also stated that a search of other records pursuant to the FOIA had resulted in the location of a number of responsive documents. These documents were released to Mr. Guy in their entireties, with the exception of Documents 2, 3.1 and 5, which were released with portions withheld pursuant to Exemptions 3, 5 and 6 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)3, (b)5 and (b)6. In his Appeal, Mr. Guy challenges the Chief Counsel's application of Exemptions 5 and 6. *

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

In this case, the Chief Counsel relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5. This privilege permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be an inter- or intra-agency memorandum that is both pre-decisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

The Chief Counsel withheld portions of Document 3.1 under Exemption 5. Document 3.1 is the report generated by the contractor employee who investigated Mr. Guy's complaints. The withheld portions of this Document consist of the sections entitled "Observations/Findings," "Conclusions," and "Recommendations." In his Appeal, Mr. Guy contends that this document is not "pre-decisional" because the final decision regarding his complaints has already been issued.

This argument is not well taken. The term "pre-decisional" refers to the point in a particular decision-making process at which the document in question was generated, and the federal courts have consistently held that a document does not lose its pre-decisional character after deliberations have ended and a final decision has been issued. See, e.g., Federal Open Market Committee of the Federal Reserve System v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340, 360 (1979); May v. Department of the Air Force, */ He does not challenge the withholding of portions of Document 5 pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA.

777 F.2d 1012, 1014-15 (5th Cir. 1985); Cuccaro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 357 (3rd Cir. 1985).

Furthermore, we have examined Document 3.1 and have concluded that the Chief Counsel properly applied Exemption 5 in withholding the sections set forth above. As an initial matter, the document qualifies as an "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandum" despite the fact that it was prepared by a contractor employee. See Hertzberg v. Veneman, 273 F. Supp. 2d 67, 76 n.2 (D.D.C. 2003). In addition, the withheld material reflects the give-and-take of the deliberative process in that it reflects the opinions of the contractor employee as to the allegations made by Mr. Guy, rather than the final agency position on these matters. Accordingly, we conclude that the Chief Counsel properly applied Exemption 5 in withholding the material in question.

A finding that information can be withheld under Exemption 5 does not end our inquiry. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, although Mr. Guy's interest in gaining access to this information may be substantial, the public interest in the release of the withheld material is negligible. The opinions, preliminary findings and suggestions set forth therein would provide little insight into the workings of the DOE. However, the release of this deliberative material could discourage employees from making honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987). We will therefore not release the portions of Document 3.1 that were withheld under Exemption 5.

The Chief Counsel also cited Exemption 6 in withholding portions of Documents 2 and 3.1. Exemption 6 permits the government to withhold all information about individuals in "personnel and medical files and similar files" when the disclosure of such information "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). In order to determine whether information may be withheld under this Exemption, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of such information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991). In determining whether release of the document would further the public interest, the Supreme Court has held that the personal interest of the requester is irrelevant. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 772-773. Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee; see also Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999).

The information that was redacted from Documents 2 and 3.1 pursuant to Exemption 6 consists of the names and other identifying information of the employees who were interviewed by the contractor employee during his investigation of Mr. Guy's allegations. In his Appeal, Mr. Guy contends that these employees have no privacy interests in maintaining their anonymity because their names are not the type of personal information that Exemption 6 was meant to protect. Furthermore, Mr. Guy argues that the "Privacy Act Notice" that each interviewee signed, and that together comprise Document 2, serves as a waiver of any privacy interest. That Notice provides, in pertinent part, that

> The information you supply will be used by Management to determine if a breach of the Department of Energy, Savannah River Operations Office Policies has occurred. This information may be furnished to designated officers and employees of the agency and/or departments of the Federal Government in order to resolve the complaint. The information may also be disclosed to any agency of the Federal Government having oversight or review authority with regard to the Equal Employment Opportunity Office activities or to others having reasons published in the Federal Register.

Mr. Guy's contention that the identities of federal employees are generally not the type of personal information that Exemption 6 was designed to protect is correct in the sense that their names, job titles and salaries are matters of public record. However, we have repeatedly found that, while a person has no privacy interest in his or her status as a federal employee, that same person may have a significant interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their participation in an investigation, particularly where, as here, that investigation involves a co-worker. See, e.g., Technology & Management Services, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,232 (1999); Burlin McKinney, 26 DOE ¶ 80,172 (1997). This is because a person who is revealed as having participated in an investigation may be subject to coercion, harassment or intimidation based on the mere fact of their participation, or on the content of their statements to investigators. For this reason, we conclude that the witnesses specifically named or identified in Documents 2 and 3.1 maintain a substantial privacy interest in the continued confidentiality of the withheld material.

We further conclude that the witnesses did not waive their privacy interests with respect to release of their identities to Mr. Guy or to the public at large by signing the Privacy Act Notices. As set forth above, those notices specifically describe the people and entities to whom the witnesses' statements may be revealed, and Mr. Guy has not demonstrated that those descriptions apply to him.

Next, we must determine whether there is a public interest in release of the witnesses' identities, and, if so, whether that interest outweighs the witnesses' privacy interests. Simply put, Mr. Guy has not suggested any public interest in disclosure, and we are unable to identify any such interest. He does argue that, without access to this information, he will be unable to effectively respond to the information developed during the investigation. However, as previously stated, the interests of the requester are irrelevant in determining whether the release of material withheld under Exemption 6 would further the public interest. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 772-773. In fact, we conclude that the public is better served by maintaining the witnesses' confidentiality. Participants in future investigations might be less than totally open and candid in their statements to investigators if they believed those statements would be publically disclosed, thereby adversely effecting the quality of the information provided. Because the witnesses maintain a substantial privacy interest in the withholding of their identities and there is no ascertainable public interest in disclosure, the Chief Counsel correctly determined that the witnesses' identities should not be released. We will therefore deny Mr. Guy's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Paul E. Guy, Jr., OHA Case Number TFA-0080, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Gideon Group, Inc.

Date of Filing: December 13, 2004

Case Number: TFA-0081

On December 13, 2004, Gideon Group, Inc. (Gideon) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL). In that determination, NETL released some documents with redactions. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require NETL to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. ¶ 1004. [1]

I. Background

On October 19, 2004, Gideon submitted a FOIA request to DOE for copies of proposals submitted by two companies (TIAX and ECR) in response to DOE Solicitation Number DE-PS36-03GO93014. Letter from Gideon to DOE (October 19, 2004). The DOE solicitation sought applications for research and development projects "that will advance the integration of energy-efficient technologies in residential Micro-Cooling, Heating and Power (CHP) applications." Letter from NETL to OHA (February 11, 2005) (NETL Comments). NETL forwarded copies of each company's application to its respective submitter for comments. The submitters reviewed their applications and identified all information that they considered exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4. [1] NETL reviewers concurred with the redactions made by TIAX and ECR personnel. On November 22, 2004, NETL sent the redacted applications to Gideon, describing in general terms the information that was withheld under Exemption 4. Letter from NETL to Gideon (November 22, 2004) (Determination Letter). On December 14, 2004, Gideon filed this Appeal. Letter from Gideon to Director, OHA

1 Gideon requested "proposals" submitted by TIAX and ECR. However, because the solicitation was conducted under DOE's financial assistance regulations, the word "applications" is more accurate. Letter from NETL to OHA (February 11, 2005) footnote 1.

(December 14, 2004) (Appeal). In the Appeal, Gideon requested that OHA direct NETL to release any responsive material in its possession that was not marked confidential in accordance with the instructions in the solicitation. Id.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Thus, in order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (1) trade secrets or (2) information that is "commercial or financial, obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Association v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. Information a submitter provides to an agency voluntarily is "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass).

Information submitted in a procurement process is considered submitted involuntarily, and thus the National Parks test applies in this case. Glen M. Jameson, 26 DOE ¶ 80,236 (1997). In response to this Appeal, NETL provided us with unredacted and redacted copies of the responsive material, along with detailed comments explaining their withholding. See NETL Comments. We have reviewed the material withheld under this exemption and find that the deleted information was properly withheld under the National Parks test. First, the information withheld was clearly commercial information. The withheld material referred to new products that had been designed for commercial application, along with marketing and personnel information. Second, the information was obtained from TIAX and ECR, both corporations. We have previously found that corporations are deemed "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4. See Myers Bigel Sibley & Sajovec, 27 DOE ¶ 80,225 (1999). Finally, we find that the information was properly considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial harm to the competitive positions of TIAX or ECR if released. For instance, the type of information withheld (e.g., commercialization strategy, labor hour estimates, specific results of market research), if released, would provide competitors of the two companies with information that could be used to gain unfair advantage against the companies in future procurements.

However, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm to a person, it must state the reason for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Southern California Edison, 28 DOE ¶ 80,177 (2001).

In its determination, NETL stated:

> The following information has been deleted from the documents and withheld from release pursuant to 5 USC § 552(b)(4) of the Act which protects "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person which is privileged or confidential," the disclosure of which would be likely to cause substantial competitive harm to the companies involved. A discretionary release of this type of information cannot be made.

Determination Letter at 1. NETL then listed a description of each type of information (e.g. description of commercialization strategy; labor hour estimates; specific results of market research; proprietary product performance information) and instructions on how to appeal the determination. Determination Letter at 2. In this case, NETL's conclusory Exemption 4 determination does not meet the requirements set forth above. [2] Accordingly, we shall remand this portion of the Appeal to NETL for a more thorough justification of its withholdings. On remand, NETL must either release the information it withheld or issue a new determination letter providing a detailed justification for withholding in accordance with the instructions set forth above. [3]

B. Submitter's Failure to Designate Restricted Information

Gideon has also asked us to decide whether DOE's redactions were proper, given that TIAX and ECR did not mark all proprietary information upon first submission to NETL as clearly instructed in the solicitation. See Xerxe Group Inc.v. United States, 278 F.3d 1357 (Fed. Cir. 2002) (Xerxe) (holding that failure to properly label proprietary information in an unsolicited proposal denied the submitter protection against disclosure). The DOE solicitation directed applicants to place a certain paragraph on the cover page of the application to identify all pages containing proprietary information. The solicitation also directed the applicants to place a legend on each page that contained proprietary information. TIAX and ECR put the legends on their cover sheets and listed those pages with proprietary information. TIAX also marked the specific pages as proprietary, but ECR made no further designations.

We agree with NETL that Xerxe is not a FOIA case and thus is not relevant to the issue presented. See NETL Comments at 2-3. Further, DOE FOIA regulations and an executive order permit the agency to consider the submitter's views at any time in the FOIA process. The DOE regulation states:

2 Gideon noted that some of the information withheld from the TIAX response had been released to the public in a TIAX press release. NETL agrees that information should not be withheld. NETL Comments at 4.

3 The NETL Comments provide an acceptable level of detail on this issue. We also note that NETL has properly released reasonably segregable portions of the documents to Gideon, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

> Whenever a document submitted to the DOE contains information which may be exempt from public disclosure, it will be handled in accordance with the procedures in this section. While the DOE is responsible for making the final determination with regard to the disclosure or nondisclosure of information contained in requested documents, the DOE will consider the submitter's views (as that term is defined in this section) in making its own determination. Nothing in this section will preclude the submission of a submitter's views at the time of the submission of the document to which the views relate, or at any other time.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.11 (a) (emphasis added). The executive order formally established a procedural structure for notifying those who submit business information to the government when that information becomes the subject of a FOIA request. Exec. Order No. 12,600, 52 Fed. Reg. 23781 (1987). The order was designed to give business submitters notification and an opportunity to object to disclosure before an agency makes a determination on withholding proprietary information. The Order provides the submitter an opportunity to designate confidential information even if the submitter did not do so at the time of submission, as long as "the agency has substantial reason to believe that disclosure of the information would result in competitive harm . . . ." Exec. Order No. 12,600, Section 8(e) (1987).

In view of the competitive environment in which TIAX and ECR operate, we agree with NETL's argument that public release of any proprietary information could cause substantial harm to their competitive position. See NETL Comments at 4-5. Some information within the applications has great commercial value to the companies. Therefore, we conclude that NETL properly provided TIAX and ECR a second chance to designate proprietary information in their applications prior to making a determination on withholding proprietary information under Exemption 4 of the FOIA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Gideon Group, Inc. on December 14, 2004, OHA Case No. TFA-0081, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Energy Technology Laboratory which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Michael J. Ravnitzky

Date of Filing: January 6, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0082

Michael J. Ravnitzky filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Classification and Information Control (OCIC) of the Department of Energy's Office of Security issued on December 10, 2004. In that determination, OCIC denied in part a request for information that the Appellant submitted on September 18, 2003, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. OCIC located three documents that were responsive to Mr. Ravnitzky's request, released one in its entirety, and withheld the other two in their entireties. OCIC determined that the withheld documents contained classified information and that removal of the classified information from those documents would result in the release of no meaningful information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release those documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On September 18, 2003, Mr. Ravnitzky requested records at the Department of Energy (DOE) headquarters concerning Charles "Chuck" Hansen, primarily any government investigations into Mr. Hansen's activities or assessments of his work. The DOE Headquarters FOIA and Privacy Group responded to the request by requiring five offices to conduct searches for documents responsive to Mr. Ravnitzky's request. Only one office, OCIC, identified any responsive documents. OCIC informed Mr. Ravnitzky that it had located three potentially responsive documents and provided him with one of them in full. However, OCIC also withheld from release the other two responsive documents it had located. In its determination letter, OCIC explained that one withheld document contained information properly classified as National Security Information pursuant to Executive Order 12958 and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA. It also stated that the other withheld document contained information properly classified as Restricted Data pursuant to the Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2161-2166, and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3. Finally, the determination letter stated that there were small amounts of unclassified material in each document, but it declined to release that material because it was "so inextricably intertwined with the classified material that removal of the classified information would result in the release of no meaningful information."

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld information described above. In his Appeal, Mr. Ravnitzky acknowledged that each of the withheld documents may contain classified information, but he contended that the unclassified portions, small though they may be, might in fact provide him with some meaningful information, and requested that those portions be released to him. In addition, he requested that the DOE reconsider its determination to withhold the title page of each of the withheld documents as classified information.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1).

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director reviewed the two documents for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

According to the Director, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the material the DOE withheld from each of the documents may now be released. With respect to one of the documents, a one-page memorandum from the Acting Chief Weapons Program Branch, Office of Classification, to the Deputy Director, Office of Classification, dated September 13, 1982, the information that the DOE continues to withhold concerns military plans, weapons systems, or operations; foreign government information; intelligence activities, intelligence sources or methods, or cryptology; foreign relations or foreign activities of the United States, including confidential sources; scientific, technological, or economic matters relating to the national security; and United States Government programs for safeguarding nuclear material or facilities. This information is currently classified as National Security Information (NSI) under sections 1.5(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f) of Executive Order 12958, and is identified as "DOE b(1)" in the margin of a redacted version of this document, which will be provided to Mr. Ravnitzky under separate cover. Because NSI is defined as classified information in Executive Order 12958, it is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA.

With respect to the other document, a 16-page letter from Jack W. Rosengren to Robert T. Duff, dated August 27, 1982, the information that the DOE continues to withhold concerns nuclear weapons design that is currently classified as Restricted Data (RD) and is identified as "DOE b(3)" in the margin of a redacted version of this document, which will also be provided to Mr. Ravnitzky under separate cover. RD is a form of classified information the withholding of which is required under Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3. Attached to the letter is a one-page routing slip from which a portion of the information has been withheld from disclosure under Exemption 1. The rationale for withholding the Exemption 1 information, and the method of identifying it, is set forth in the preceding paragraph.

The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Marshall Combs, Director, Office of Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that Executive Order 12958 and the Atomic Energy Act require DOE to continue withholding portions of the two documents under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemptions 1 and 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the documents that the Director has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Accordingly, the Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Michael J. Ravnitzky on January 6, 2005, Case No. TFA-0082, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) Newly redacted versions of the following two documents will be provided to Mr. Ravnitzky: a 16-page letter from Jack W. Rosengren to Robert T. Duff, dated August 27, 1982, with attached one-page routing slip, and a one-page memorandum from the Acting Chief Weapons Program Branch, Office of Classification, to the Deputy Director, Office of Classification, dated September 13, 1982.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: State of Nevada

Date of Filing: January 5, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0083

On January 5, 2005, the State of Nevada (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management (OCRWM) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on November 24, 2004. In its determination, OCRWM partially denied the Appellant's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OCRWM to release the information it withheld and to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. BACKGROUND

DOE is required to apply to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for a license to construct the Yucca Mountain Project ("YMP"). In its May 27, 2004 FOIA request, Appellant requested documents regarding DOE's Licensing Support Network ("LSN") database for the YMP. On November 24, 2004, OCRWM issued a Determination Letter stating that it had identified a number of documents as being responsive to the Appellant's FOIA request. Determination Letter dated November 24, 2004, from Kenneth W. Powers, OCRWM, to Charles J. Fitzpatrick. In the Determination Letter, OCRWM stated that it was releasing some of the documents to the Appellant in full and it was withholding the remaining documents in their entirety. Id. OCRWM asserted that the withheld documents were prepared by or for an attorney and are thus privileged and exempt from release pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Id. The Appellant subsequently filed this Appeal.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Adequacy of the search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988). The Appellant makes a number of arguments that OCRWM did not provide all documents responsive to its FOIA request.

The Appellant essentially argues that OCRWM did not conduct an adequate search for responsive documents because OCRWM failed to locate a number of specific documents that the Appellant had identified from other documents in its possession. In general, OCRWM has informed us that it had, in fact, located the documents the Appellant specifically identified but did not address most of them in its determination because it found that they were not responsive to the request. We discuss these documents below. [1/]

One document that the Appellant identified but which OCRWM did not provide is entitled a "Requirements Traceability Matrix." OCRWM has informed us that the Requirements Traceability Matrix is not a responsive document as it does not deal with "standards or criteria," which was an element of the request. February 9, 2005 Memorandum at 2 ("Memorandum"), from Diane Quenell, FOIA Officer, Office of Repository Development, OCRWM, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA. OCRWM's explanation lacks sufficient detail to permit us to determine whether this document is in fact responsive to the Appellant's FOIA request. Because we are remanding a significant portion of this matter back to OCRWM, we will require OCRWM on remand to issue another determination concerning whether this document is responsive.[2/]

[1/] OCRWM asserts that several of the documents identified by the Appellant were responsive but were properly withheld under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. We will address OCRWM's Exemption 5 claims in Section B below.

[2/] Even if this document is not responsive to the Appellant's recent FOIA Request, it is obvious that the Appellant desires it and could easily make another FOIA request for it. OCRWM may wish to consider whether it would not be more administratively efficient either to release this document to the Appellant or issue a determination letter explaining why this document must be withheld from release under the FOIA.

The Appellant next claims that "information letters sent to responsible managers" which the Appellant and OCRWM identified as having been dated March 22, 2004, were not included with OCRWM's determination. Appeal letter at 4. The Appellant is correct. However, OCRWM has stated to us that these letters contain no information regarding the LSN database, but merely transmit that information. Memorandum at 2. Consequently, the letters are not responsive to the Appellant's FOIA request and OCRWM was not required to release them to the Appellant. [3/]

The Appellant also contends that a document referencing training procedures that were "conducted covering the identification and submission to [CACI, Inc.] of potentially relevant documents" exists but was not provided by OCRWM. Appeal letter at 5. OCRWM has informed us that the document the Appellant identified above was in fact released to the Appellant. In its Determination Letter, OCRWM identified it as a Memorandum from Ms Otis and Dr. Chu. Memorandum at 2.

The Appellant also claims that a document attached to an electronic mail message, which stated it included information on the status of the LSN resizing efforts, must exist yet was not released. Appeal letter at 5. OCRWM states it will provide a copy of this document directly to the Appellant. Memorandum at 4.

The Appellant has also identified other documents as not having been released, and OCRWM has confirmed the existence of these documents in the Memorandum. However, in the Memorandum, OCRWM has determined those documents were not responsive to the Appellant's request but did not provide any justification for this determination. We will remand this matter back to OCRWM to make a formal determination regarding whether the remaining identified documents are responsive to the Appellant's FOIA Request. [4/]

In sum, OCRWM's search was reasonably calculated to discover responsive documents. It did, in fact, uncover the documents that the Appellant believed it had overlooked. For the reasons stated above, we believe that this part of the Appeal should be granted with respect to the electronic mail

[3/] Again, it is apparent that the Appellant is interested in these documents. OCRWM may wish to consider whether it would not be more administratively efficient either to release these documents to the Appellant or to issue a determination letter explaining why these documents must be withheld from release under the FOIA.

[4/] See n.3 supra.

message mentioned above, denied with respect to the information letters and the memorandum from Ms Otis and Dr. Chu, and otherwise remanded to OCRWM for further processing.

B. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). Exemption 5 incorporates every civil discovery privilege which the government enjoys under statutory and case law. United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 7799 (1983); FTC v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 16, 19-27 (1983); Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft & Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 164, 184 (1975). Therefore, any communication that is privileged in civil discovery is also shielded from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 5. Id. Accordingly, if the requested documents fall within a civil discovery privilege, they may be withheld under Exemption 5.

1. Adequacy of Justification

In its determination, OCRWM withheld over 600 pages of documents claiming that the documents were exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. OCRWM did not, however, identify individual documents, describe their contents, or clarify how the Exemption applies in each instance it was invoked in support of withholding information. Instead, OCRWM's Determination Letter provides only a general statement that there are documents consisting of a specific number of pages that are attorney work-product or were prepared by an attorney and are confidential communications. This justification for invoking Exemption 5 is the type of conclusory explanation that we have previously found to be invalid. Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,528 (1984). It lacks sufficient specificity to permit the requester and the appellate authority to understand the rationale for the various withholdings.

At the administrative level, such as the present review, determinations under the FOIA must include a general description of the denied material, a statement of the reason for the denial, and and an explanation of how the specific exemption applies to the withheld information. Natural Resources Defense Council, 20 DOE ¶ 80,145 at 80,627 (1990); William R. Bowling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 at 80,596-97 (1990). We will remand the matter to OCRWM in order that it set forth a description of the documents and, for each document or portion of document withheld, identify the privilege claimed under Exemption 5 and provide an explanation of how that privilege applies. On remand, OCRWM may group documents of similar type into categories, but must specifically identify each document in a category and ensure that the explanation of the withholding applies to each document in the category.

2. Segregability

The Appellant argued that OCRWM failed to segregate factual portions of the withheld documents. The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such records after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester. The attorney work-product privilege, however, affords sweeping protection to factual materials. United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792 (1984); FTC v. Grolier, Inc., 462 U.S. 19 (1983). Nevertheless, OCRWM bears the burden of showing that the privilege applies to all the information it withholds under that privilege. On remand, OCRWM must consider whether any of the information it intends to withhold under Exemption 5 through claim of privilege can be segregated and released. [5/]

3. The Public Interest

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. Since we are remanding the matter to OCRWM, we need not weigh the public interest in release of the information. This is a matter for OCRWM to consider on remand, and it will be subject to review in the event of a future appeal.

III. CONCLUSION

OCRWM conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the information sought by the Appellant. However, we are remanding the matter to OCRWM concerning a number of matters. OCRWM should make a further determination concerning whether the specific documents described in Section A of this decision are responsive to the Appellant's request. Further, we are remanding the matter to OCRWM so that it may provide an adequate justification of how Exemption 5 applies to the documents or portions of documents it has withheld, including identifying the documents and determining whether any factual information can be reasonably segregated or should be released in the public interest. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied in part, granted in part, and remanded to OCRWM for a new determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of Nevada on January 5, 2005, Case No. TFA-0083, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

[5/] It is possible that release of a memorandum dated May 5, 2003--from Lee Liberman Otis, DOE General Counsel, to a large internal distribution list--constitutes waiver of the attorney work-product privilege with respect to certain documents. On remand, OCRWM should consider whether this release has waived the privilege and, consequently, protection under Exemption 5.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management of the Department of Energy which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Public Utility District #1
Dates of Filing:	January 18, 2005 February 23, 2005
Case Numbers:	TFA-0084 TFA-0089

This Decision concerns two Appeals that were filed by the Public Utility District No. 1 of Snohomish City, Washington (hereinafter referred to as "the District"). The first Appeal (TFA-0084) was filed in response to a determination issued to the District by the Special Assistant General Counsel, Bonneville Power Administration (hereinafter referred to as "BPA"). In that determination, BPA replied to three requests for documents that the District submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. BPA released certain documents in their entirety to the District, and withheld other material pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require that BPA release the withheld information. In the second Appeal (TFA-0089), the District contests BPA's assessment of fees for processing its requests in Case No. TFA-0084, and five other requests.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. The FOIA also provides for the assessment of fees for the processing of requests for documents. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the DOE will grant a full or partial waiver of applicable fees if disclosure of the information sought in a FOIA request (i) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the activities of the government, and (ii) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

I. Background

In its FOIA requests, the District sought access to "all written and electronic documents, including communications between BPA, members of Congress (or their staffs) and the [DOE] or any other federal power marketing agencies concerning P.L. 106-377, Title III, § 311 (Energy and Water Appropriations Act of 2001) before and after passage." See November 16, 2004 letters from Michael Goldfarb, Counsel for the District, to Annie Eissler, FOIA Officer, BPA. In its response, BPA identified a number of e-mails and documents as responsive to the District's request. Portions of some of the e-mails were redacted from the material provided to the District because they consist of information that is not responsive to the request. In addition, five e-mails were withheld in their entirety under Exemption 5. * Those e-mails, all sent on June 22, 2000, were from

1. Randy Roach, General Counsel, to Jeffrey Stier, Vice-President, National Relations, providing legal advice on proposed legislative language;

2. Roach to Stier, with attachment of alternative proposals for legislative language;

3. Stier to Roach, requesting that Roach draft legislative language along the lines cited in the communication;

4. Stier to Roach requesting legal review of suggested change in legislative language; and

5. Stephen Wright, Senior Vice-President, Corporate, to Roach and Stier providing Wright's views and suggestions on various alternatives for legislative language.

In its Appeal of BPA's FOIA determination (Case No. TFA-0084), the District challenges the adequacy of BPA's search for responsive documents and the adequacy of the agency's justification for withholding e-mails one through four. The District also contests BPA's decision to withhold portions of certain communications because they were found to be unresponsive to the District's requests. The District asks that it be provided with any responsive documents that are not properly subject to withholding under Exemption 5 and with an adequate justification for any withheld material.

In its submission in Case No. TFA-0089, the District contends that the BPA incorrectly classified it as a "commercial use" requester, and contests what it claims is BPA's rejection of its request for a fee waiver.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg

---

*/ In its Determination Letter, BPA identified six e-mails as being withheld in full under Exemption 5. However, BPA has informed us that the e-mails identified as (b) and (e) are identical, and that, therefore, only five e-mails were withheld. BPA Response at 4.

v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In support of its claim that BPA's search was inadequate, the District points out that it did not receive copies of any communications between BPA and Congress or the DOE concerning the legislation in question. Because "[i]t is unlikely that BPA did not communicate with any members of Congress or with the [DOE] in formulating its plan to get [the] legislation passed,"Appeal at 1, the District concludes that BPA's search was deficient. Moreover, the District points out that it did not receive copies of two responsive communications that were referred to in material that the District did receive.

In its February 25, 2005 Response to the District's Appeal (Response), BPA described the search that was performed. Because the subject of the District's requests involved the national legislative process, BPA stated, the number of BPA employees who "may have been involved is quite limited. These were the Administrator and Deputy Administrator; the staff of our Washington, D.C. Office in the Forrestal Building; the BPA General Counsel; [the author of the Response] (as the attorney working on RTO matters); and the two leaders of BPA's RTO project at that time. Personal files of these officials and employees, both electronic and hard copy, were reviewed as were official files." Response at 1-2.

BPA further responds that, contrary to the District's assertion, BPA provided copies of two communications with or from the DOE concerning the legislation in question. Those communications are (1) a July 14, 2000 memorandum about the legislation from Roger Seifert in BPA's Washington, D.C. office to various DOE officials, and (2) a May 16, 2000 memorandum from T.J. Glauthier, DOE Deputy Secretary. The absence of other such communications between BPA and Congress or between BPA and other parts of the DOE is not unusual, BPA states, because matters involving national legislation are handled through the Washington Office, and the practice of that Office is to avoid maintaining copies of informal written communications with congressional offices or DOE staff. BPA e-mails that are deleted from a user's computer are erased from the system after 90 days. Response at 2.

With regard to the District's contention that BPA's search was inadequate because two communications that were referenced in material provided to the District were not located, BPA replied that it conducted another search for these two communications, without success. Id. With regard to the second referenced communication, which was between Mark Maher of BPA and certain public utilities, BPA opined that what "likely happened was that Mr. Maher distributed, in person at a regular filing utility meeting, copies of the proposed legislative language (which is cited verbatim in the e-mail chain provided to [the District]) to the filing utility representatives without an accompanying memorandum or description." Response at 3.

After careful consideration of the Appeal and BPA's Response, we conclude that BPA's search was adequate. BPA's description of the scope of the search convinces us that it was reasonably calculated to locate the requested documents. Furthermore, the District's arguments do not lead us to believe that a further search would be likely to result in the identification of additional responsive materials. We therefore reject the District's challenge to the adequacy of BPA's search.

B. BPA's Withholding of Non-Responsive Material

Next, the District contends that BPA lacked the authority to withhold portions of the e-mails provided to the District because they consisted of information that is not responsive to the FOIA requests. However, in Northwest Technical Resources, Inc., 28 DOE ¶ 80,119 (2000), we upheld the withholding of non-responsive information from documents provided to a FOIA requester. The District has not convinced us that our holding in that case is incorrect. E-mail chains, such as those in question here, routinely contain information on a wide variety of subjects. We conclude that BPA properly redacted non-responsive information from the documents provided to the District.

C. BPA's Application of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The District does not challenge BPA's withholding of e-mail five under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. Moreover, BPA has now abandoned any reliance on the attorney work product privilege as a ground for withholding e-mails one through four. Response at 4. Therefore, only BPA's application of the attorney-client privilege is at issue here.

The attorney-client privilege protects from mandatory disclosure "confidential communications between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc. v. United States Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Although it fundamentally applies to facts divulged by a client to his attorney, the privilege also encompasses any opinions given by an attorney to his client based upon, and thus reflecting, those facts, see, e.g., Jernigan v. Department of the Air Force, No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998), as well as communications between attorneys that reflect client-supplied information. See, e.g., Green v. IRS, 556 F. Supp. 79, 85 (N.D. Ind. 1982), aff'd, 734 F.2d 18 (7th Cir. 1984) (unpublished table decision). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. Clarke v. American Commerce National Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992). The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 403-04 (1976). In other words, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. Government Accountability Project, 24 DOE ¶ 80,129 at 80,570 (1994).

Applying these criteria to e-mails 1-4, it is apparent that they consist almost entirely of communications between an attorney (General Counsel Randy Roach) and his client (BPA) in which BPA asks for, and receives legal advice about a legal matter (i.e., proposed legislative language). It is this type of communication that the privilege was designed to protect. However, our review of the e-mails reveals that there are portions that are social, informational or procedural in nature. These portions are not exempt from mandatory disclosure under the attorney-client privilege and must therefore be provided to the District. They are (i) the last two sentences of the 6:17 a.m. e-mail from Jeffrey Stier to Randy Roach (e-mail number three); (ii) the 3:21 p.m. e-mail from Roach to Stier (without the attachment containing the four legislative alternatives authored by Roach) (e-mail number two), and (iii) the first and last sentences of the 2:24 p.m. e-mail from Roach to Stier (e-mail number one).

In its Appeal, the District correctly points out that the privilege applies only to confidential communications, and that BPA's determination did not indicate whether these e-mails were in fact confidential. However, based on representations made to this Office by BPA, we conclude that these e-mails have been treated as confidential by BPA. See memorandum of March 18, 2005 telephone conversation between Steven Larson, BPA and Robert Palmer of this Office. With the exceptions noted above, we conclude that BPA properly applied the attorney-client privilege in withholding the e-mails in question.

D. The Assessment of Fees for Processing the District's FOIA Request

In its Appeal in Case No. TFA-0089, the District contests what it claims is BPA's January 26, 2005 denial of its request for a fee waiver. In the alternative, the District contends that BPA improperly classified it as a "commercial use" requester for purposes of calculating fees.

Contrary to the District's claim, our review of BPA's January 26 letter convinces us that it was not a final determination of the District's eligibility for a partial or full fee waiver, but was instead a request for more information. The letter states, in pertinent part that upon > review of your FOIA requests, it does not appear that you have met the burden of establishing that you qualify for a reduction or waiver of fees for the requested information. At this time, we are offering you the opportunity to provide additional information to demonstrate that you qualify for a reduction or waiver of fees. The FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees, but only if a requester shows that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest, because it is likely to contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

> In order to satisfy the public interest, a requester must show each of the following:

> (A) The subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;
> (B) Disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;
> (C) Disclosure of the requested records would contribute to an understanding of the subject by the general public; and
> (D) Disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activiities.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i). If a requester satisfies the four factors of the public interest, he must then satisfy the commercial interest factor by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his commercial interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii). Factors to be considered in applying these criteria include but are not limited to:

> (A) The existence and magnitude of a commercial interest: Whether the requester has a commercial interest that would be furthered by the requested disclosure; and, if so
> (B) The primary interest in disclosure: Whether the magnitude of the identified commercial interest of the requester is sufficiently large, in comparison with the public interest in disclosure, that disclosure is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester.

We will not proceed further on your FOIA requests until (1) you provide additional information so that we may evaluate your request for a waiver or reduction of fees, and if denied then (2) your willingness to pay estimated processing fees, or (3) narrow the scope of your FOIA requests.

January 26, 2005 letter from Annie Eissler, BPA Freedom of Information Officer, to Michael Goldfarb, Counsel for the District (italics added).

Under section 1004.8(a) of the DOE's FOIA regulations, a requester may file an Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals "when the Authorizing Official has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request consistent with Section 1004.4(d), or when the Freedom of Information Officer has denied a request for waiver of fees . . . ." Because BPA's FOI Officer has not denied the District's request for a fee waiver, the circumstances necessary for an Appeal do not yet exist in Case No. TFA-0089. We will therefore dismiss this Appeal without prejudice to refiling should BPA deny the District's request.

Accordingly, the District should attempt to demonstrate to BPA that its request satisfies each of the criteria that are set forth in its January 26 letter and reproduced above.

Because the issue of whether BPA properly categorized the District as a "commercial use" requester is likely to arise again in the event that BPA denies the District's fee waiver request, we will address that issue here. The FOIA delineates three types of costs--"search costs," "duplication costs," and "review costs"--and places requesters into one of three categories that determine which of these costs a given requester must pay. If a requester wants the information for a "commercial use," it must pay for all three types of costs incurred. In contrast, educational institutions and the news media are required to pay only duplication costs, and all other requesters are required to pay search and duplication costs but not review costs. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b).

The District argues that because it is a non-profit, publically owned utility, its requests are "not for a use or purpose that furthers a commercial, trade, or profit interest." Appeal in Case No. TFA-0089 at 2. Accordingly, the District contends that it falls under the "all other requesters" category. However, the District's status as a non-profit is not dispositive of this issue. Many non-profits engage in trade or commerce, and BPA could have properly concluded that the information requested would be put to a use that would further a commercial or trade interest. As a public utility, the District is engaged in the business of selling electricity and water to its customers. Depending on the manner in which the District intends to use the material that it requested, BPA could have properly concluded that the FOIA requests were made in furtherance of the District's commercial interests.

However, it is not clear that BPA considered the manner in which the District would use the requested information in concluding that the District is a commercial use requester. BPA has informed us that it reached this conclusion because "we know our customers." See memorandum of March 3, 2005 telephone conversation between Joseph Bennett, BPA and Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney. It therefore appears that BPA may have based this decision solely on its knowledge of the District's business activities without considering the manner in which the District intended to use the material requested. Section 1004.2(c) of the DOE's FOIA regulations provides, however, that "in determining whether a requester properly belongs in [the commercial use] category, agencies must determine how the requester will use the documents requested." Therefore, if BPA denies the District's request for a fee waiver, it should also consider the use to which the District will put the information obtained in making its determination as to the proper fee category for the District's request.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Public Utility District #1, OHA Case Number TFA-0084, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) BPA shall promptly release the following to the District: (i) the last two sentences of the 6:17 a.m. e-mail from Jeffrey Stier to Randy Roach; (ii) the 3:21 p.m. e-mail from Roach to Stier (without the attachment containing the four legislative alternatives authored by Roach), and (iii) the first and last sentences of the 2:24 p.m. e-mail from Roach to Stier.

(3) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Public Utility District #1, OHA Case Number TFA-0089, is hereby dismissed without prejudice to refiling upon the issuance of a final fee waiver determination by BPA.

(4) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Keith B. Baranski

Date of Filing: January 24, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0086

On January 24, 2005, Keith B. Baranski filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on September 8, 2004, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) FOIA/Privacy Act Group. That determination concerned a request for information that Mr. Baranski submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, DOE would be ordered to release the requested information or to issue a new determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On April 12, 2004, Mr. Baranski filed a FOIA request seeking a list of all firearms and destructive devices possessed by or in the control of the DOE. Specifically, Mr. Baranski requested that the list include the manufacturer, model number, type and caliber. In its September 8, 2004 determination letter, the FOIA/Privacy Act Group identified a document responsive to Mr. Baranski's request. However, the FOIA/Privacy Act Group withheld portions of this document pursuant to Exemptions 2 and 3 of the FOIA. See September 8, 2004 Determination Letter.

On January 24, 2005, Mr. Baranski filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Baranski challenges DOE's withholding of information under Exemptions 2 and 3 of the FOIA. He also asserts that the public interest would be served by the release of the withheld information. See Appeal Letter at 2. Mr. Baranski asks that the OHA direct the FOIA/Privacy Act Group to release the withheld information.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 2

The courts have interpreted Exemption 2 to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-prong test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

We have reviewed the responsive document and find that information deleted from the document relates to the physical security, including the total staffing of security personnel, of sites throughout DOE. This information is predominantly internal in nature because it is not intended for dissemination outside the DOE and does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public. In addition, disclosure of this information would reveal agency determinations about physical security measures taken to protect the safety of DOE personnel and property. The FOIA/Privacy Act Group has stated that "this information could be used by terrorists in planning or executing an attack on DOE personnel and facilities by allowing them to determine the number of and types of weapons used by personnel to protect individuals and the specific site." See Determination Letter at 2. Thus, the letter goes on, disclosure of this information significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes. We agree. DOE has a legislated duty to protect its sites and its workers. Accordingly, we find that this information in the responsive document can be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

DOE regulations, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1, provide that "the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under [a FOIA exemption] whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." Therefore, although we have determined that the deleted information is protected under Exemption 2, we must address whether disclosure of this information is in the public interest. We find that it is not.

As discussed above, the information deleted from the responsive document relates to the physical security of sites throughout the DOE. We agree with the FOIA/Privacy Group that disclosure of this information would reveal agency determinations about physical security measures taken to protect the safety of DOE personnel and property. Clearly, disclosing such information is not in the public interest as this information could render DOE personnel and facilities vulnerable to attack.

B. Exemption 3

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). Among the types of information of which dissemination is prohibited under the Atomic Energy Act is Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information (UCNI). 42 U.S.C. §2168.

The Director of the Office of Security has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.1 (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of the Office of Security reviewed those portions of the document for which the FOIA/Privacy Act Group had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA. This review identified those portions as UCNI that must remain protected. The Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information being withheld from the document concerns the details of weaponry used by security forces at departmental sites involved in atomic energy defense programs.

Based on the review performed by the Director of the Office of Security, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the continued withholding of the information withheld as UCNI in the initial determination. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, nevertheless such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the document at issue that have been determined to be UCNI must continue to be withheld from disclosure. Accordingly, Mr. Baranski's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mr. Keith B. Baranski, OHA Case No. TFA-0086, on January 24, 2005, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Gwyn Thorpe

Date of Filing: January 27, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0087

On January 27, 2005, Gwyn Thorpe filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on December 20, 2004 by the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Ms. Thorpe submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Ms. Thorpe asks that Oak Ridge conduct an additional search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Ms. Thorpe filed a request for information in which she sought the medical, personnel, industrial hygiene, radiation exposure, payroll and disability records on Thomas Lee Gaus, her deceased father. See December 20, 2004 Determination Letter at 1. On December 20, 2004, Oak Ridge issued a determination which stated it conducted a thorough search for all records responsive to Ms. Thorpe's request and located no responsive records. Id. On January 27, 2005, Ms. Thorpe filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Ms. Thorpe challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge. See Appeal Letter. She asserts that DOE has been provided with specific details of the employment of Mr. Gaus and " has a duty under FOIA to use reasonable efforts to locate these records." Id. She asks that the OHA direct Oak Ridge to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Oak Ridge to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Thorpe's request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Ms. Thorpe's request for information, Oak Ridge conducted a search for records in the Mallinckrodt facility files (the facility where Mr. Gaus worked) of the Records Holding Area (RHA) at the Oak Ridge Office. Records in the RHA are retrievable by identifier. Oak Ridge searched using the identifiers provided by the requester for Mr. Gaus, i.e., social security number, name, etc. Oak Ridge stated that it could not locate any responsive documents. Oak Ridge has further indicated that the RHA is the only repository in Oak Ridge which contains any existing personnel, medical or similar records on individuals who worked at Mallinckrodt facilities.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that Oak Ridge conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Ms. Thorpe's request. Accordingly, we will deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Gwyn Thorpe, OHA Case No. TFA-0087, on January 27, 2005, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	Federation of American Scientists
Date of Filing:	February 7, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0088

On February 7, 2005, Federation of American Scientists (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on January 24, 2005 by the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance (SSPA), within the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Security (OOS). In that determination, SSPA responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. SSPA's determination identified one document as responsive to this request and withheld it in its entirety under Exemptions 2 and 5of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require SSPA to release that information withheld under Exemptions 2 and 5 to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant filed a Request for Information with SSPA seeking a copy of a report entitled "Highly Enriched Uranium: Striking a Balance" (The Report). The Report is a draft report that describes the history of the highly enriched uranium inventory in the United States from 1945 to 1996.[1] On January 24, 2005, SSPA issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) withholding the Report in its entirety under FOIA Exemptions 2 and 5. Specifically, SSPA contends that the Report > reflects the tentative views of the author(s) and reflects draft sections and chapters for consideration by agency officials. The [Report] does not represent a final agency position on the matter discussed in the [R]eport. It was subject to further review by DOE officials. Thus the preliminary opinions reflected in the [Report] are by their very nature pre-decisional.

Determination Letter at 2. The Determination Letter further states:

> The [Report] was reviewed to determine if any portion could be provided after redaction of any exempt material. Any parts that might be considered for [release > following] redaction, however, are 'high 2' information. Its disclosure could reveal possible locations and quantities of fissile material that could be targeted for destruction by terrorists and others who wish to harm us.

[1] The Report has never been issued to the public. Each page of the Report is marked "Official Use Only-Draft."

Id. On February 7, 2005, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal which challenges SSPA's withholding determinations under Exemptions 2 and 5.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemptions 2 and 5 are at issue in the present case.

A. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." United States Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Association, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath) (emphasis supplied). "The first condition of Exemption 5 is no less important than the second; the communication must be 'interagency or intra-agency.' 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)." Klamath, 121 S. Ct. at 1066.

For information obtained from Government sources, the Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975); see also United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799-800, 104 S. Ct. 1488 (1984) (Weber Aircraft); NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). It is well settled that the deliberative process privilege is among the privileges that fall under Exemption 5. Klamath, 121 S. Ct. at 1065.

The deliberative process covers "documents reflecting advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations comprising part of a process by which governmental decisions and policies are formulated." Sears, 421 U.S. at 150, 95 S. Ct. 1504 (internal quotation marks omitted). The deliberative process privilege rests on the obvious realization that officials will not communicate candidly among themselves if each remark is a potential item of discovery and front page news, and its object is to enhance "the quality of agency decisions," id. at 151, 95 S. Ct. 1504, by protecting open and frank discussion among those who make them within the Government. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 86-87, 93 S. Ct. 827 (1972) (Mink); see also Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. at 802, 104 S. Ct. 1488.

In order for the deliberative process to shield a document, it must be both pre-decisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

Turning to the document at issue in the present case, we note that much of the Report is clearly deliberative and pre-decisional. The Report itself is a draft document which never evolved into a final, finished form. While the Report was originally intended to be released to the public, the document was never completed and was never released to the public and thus reflects only the tentative, preliminary opinions of its authors rather than the policies or findings of the DOE.

While the document itself is clearly pre-decisional and deliberative in nature, it contains a great deal of purely factual information, such as facts, figures, photographs and historical narrative. As discussed above, factual information is generally not considered to be pre-decisional and deliberative in nature. This fact was implicitly recognized in the Determination Letter, which contends that "Any parts [of the Report] that might be considered for [release following] redaction, however, are 'high 2' information." Determination Letter at 2. Accordingly, we now turn to SSPA's withholding under Exemption 2.[2]

B. Exemption 2

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir.

[2] Our discussions with SSPA officials indicate that a small portion of the data contained in the Report was preliminary in nature. Preliminary or tentative data is considered pre-decisional and deliberative in nature and can therefore be properly withheld under Exemption 5.

1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

SSPA's Determination Letter indicates that it withheld those portions of the Report that were factual in nature because its release could reveal the locations and quantities of fissile material, which could be used by terrorists or other enemies to harm national security interests.

SSPA may continue to withhold that information in the Report which would reveal the location or quantity of fissile material under Exemption 2. That information is clearly predominantly internal in nature. The D.C. Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. United States Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information contained in the Report that would reveal the location or quantity of fissile material if released neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. Accordingly, it is clearly predominantly internal.

The information contained in the Report that would reveal the location or quantity of fissile material if released meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. Environmental Protection Agency, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general legal requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d at 530-31.

Disclosure of information revealing the location and quantity of fissile material risks allowing terrorists to circumvent DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of fissile materials. Although it is obvious that the Appellant has no such intentions, if DOE were to release this document to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public that requested it. Accordingly, we find that the information revealing the location and quantity of fissile material can be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

We contacted SSPA officials as part of our review of its withholdings of information under Exemption 2. Our discussion with those officials revealed that a significant amount of the withheld factual information contained in the Report could be released without revealing the location or quantities of fissile materials. Since such information could be released without risking the harm cited in the Determination Letter, SSPA cannot continue to withhold this information under the cited reasoning. Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to SSPA. On remand, SSPA must promptly conduct a new review of the Report and issue a new determination letter in which it either segregates and releases all factual information contained in the Report that does not reveal the location or quantity of fissile material or explains why it is continuing to withhold such information under different reasoning.

III. CONCLUSION

Because some information contained in the Report cannot continue to be withheld under the justification provided in the Determination Letter, we are remanding this matter to SSPA. Those portions of the Report which are not factual in nature or which involve preliminary or tentative data are properly withheld under Exemption 5. Those portions of the Report which would reveal the locations or quantities of fissile material are properly withheld under Exemption 2. Factual information contained in the Report that is neither preliminary or tentative in nature nor would reveal the location or quantity of fissile material cannot continue to be withheld under the justification provided in the Determination Letter. On remand, SSPA must either release this information, or withhold it under a different justification. If SSPA withholds this information under different reasoning, the new reasoning must be fully explained in a new Determination Letter.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Federation of American Scientists, Case No. TFA-0088, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Cornell Pieper
Date of Filing:	March 1, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0090

On March 1, 2005, Cornell H. Pieper (Pieper) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on January 20, 2005, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) in response to a request for documents that Pieper submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On December 9, 2004, Pieper filed a FOIA request with DOE/HQ for any information that would confirm the employment of his father, Hilary G. Pieper, at the Hanford Site in 1944. Electronic mail message from Dorothy Riehle, Richland to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (March 30, 2005). Richland stated that it conducted a thorough search of its archived records database but was unable to locate any employment records for Pieper's father. Electronic mail message from Richland to OHA (March 24, 2005). In the Appeal, Pieper challenged the adequacy of the search and asks OHA to direct Richland to search again for responsive information. Letter from Pieper to Director, OHA (March 1, 2005) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

Pieper wanted information that would confirm his father's employment at the Hanford Site in 1944. Pieper contacted the Social Security Administration and established that his father had worked for DuPont in 1944 and 1945. See Itemized Statement of Earnings. The statement did not, however, contain the exact location of the elder Pieper's employment, and his son contacted DuPont for employment information relating to his father. DuPont sent Pieper a letter stating that it had no employment records on his father. Letter from E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Company, Inc. to Pieper (February 7, 2005). Pieper then filed this Appeal, arguing that records must exist in Richland. See Appeal; Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA and Pieper (March 30, 2005).

We contacted Richland for information regarding its search for responsive information. Richland searched its archived records database using the elder Pieper's name and social security number, but was unable to find any employment records relating to the father. Electronic mail message from Dorothy Riehle, Richland, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (March 24, 2005). According to Richland, DuPont took all of its records when it left the Hanford Site, including employment records. Id. If the responsive information is in the possession of a private entity, it is beyond the reach of the FOIA. See Nancy Denlinger, 28 DOE ¶ 80,300 (2003) at 80,921.*

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Richland conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Cornell Pieper on March 1, 2005, OHA Case Number TFA-0090, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

* It is possible that no DuPont records exist. See Carole L. Norris, 28 DOE ¶ 80,290 (2003) fn.3 (stating that Richland discovered that DuPont had removed DuPont personnel records from the Hanford Site and that these records were subsequently destroyed).

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Minneapolis Star Tribune

Date of Filing: March 8, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0091

On March 8, 2005, the Minneapolis Star Tribune (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on January 14, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL). In that determination, NETL responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NETL's determination identified and released one document as responsive to this request. However, NETL withheld portions of this document under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 5. This Appeal, if granted, would require NETL to release that information withheld under Exemption 5 to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant filed a Request for Information with NETL seeking information concerning the DOE's award of financial assistance to the Mesaba Energy Project (the MEP). On January 14, 2005, NETL issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) identifying one responsive document: The Report of the Merit Review Committee for the Clean Coal Initiative, Round 2 (the Report). NETL released the Report to the Appellant. However, NETL withheld portions of the Report under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 5. On March 8, 2005, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal which challenges NETL's withholding determinations under Exemption 5. [1]

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy,

[1] The Appellant does not challenge NETL's withholdings under Exemption 4.

617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 5 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." United States Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Association, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath) (emphasis supplied). "The first condition of Exemption 5 is no less important than the second; the communication must be 'interagency or intra-agency.' 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)." Klamath, 121 S. Ct. at 1066.

For information obtained from Government sources, the Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975); see also United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799-800, 104 S.Ct. 1488 (1984) (Weber Aircraft); NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). It is well settled that the deliberative process privilege is among the privileges that fall under Exemption 5. Klamath, 121 S. Ct. at 1065.

The deliberative process covers "documents reflecting advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations comprising part of a process by which governmental decisions and policies are formulated." Sears, 421 U.S. at 150, 95 S. Ct. 1504 (internal quotation marks omitted). The deliberative process privilege rests on the obvious realization that officials will not communicate candidly among themselves if each remark is a potential item of discovery and front page news, and its object is to enhance "the quality of agency decisions," id. at 151, 95 S. Ct. 1504, by protecting open and frank discussion among those who make them within the Government. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 86-87, 93 S. Ct. 827 (1972) (Mink); see also Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. at 802, 104 S. Ct. 1488.

In order for the deliberative process to shield a document, it must be both pre-decisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

Turning to the document at issue in the present case, we find that the portions of the Report withheld by NETL under Exemption 5 are clearly deliberative and pre-decisional. The information withheld by NETL under Exemption 5 consists of the names of evaluation committee members, consultants and other participants in the decision making process, the conclusions and recommendations of the evaluation panel members, the Technical Ranking Sheets, the Repayment, Finance and Budget Ranking Sheet, the Summary Ranking Sheet, Actual Scores, and Description of Strengths and Weaknesses.

The names of evaluation committee members, consultants and other participants in the decision making process are properly withheld under Exemption 5's deliberative process privilege. The privilege exists to protect the integrity of the deliberative process. Releasing the names of individuals who participate in the deliberative process might discourage them from fully and frankly communicating their opinions and recommendations, exactly the result that the privilege's authors sought to prevent. For this reason, the courts have routinely held that withholding the names of individuals participating in the deliberative process is entirely appropriate under Exemption 5's deliberative process privilege. Brinton v. Department of State, 636 F.2d 600, 604 (D.C. Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 905 (1981); City of West Chicago v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 547 F. Supp. 740, 750 (N.D. Ill. 1982). Accordingly, the names of evaluation committee members, consultants and other participants in the decision making process were properly withheld.

The conclusions and recommendations of the evaluation panel members, the Technical Ranking Sheets, the Repayment, Finance and Budget Ranking Sheet, the Summary Ranking Sheet, Actual Scores, and Description of Strengths and Weaknesses are also properly withheld under Exemption 5's deliberative process privilege. This information consists of the non-binding opinions and recommendations of advisors and consultants to the official who ultimately decided to grant financial assistance to the MEP. This information is therefore both pre-decisional and deliberative in nature. For these reasons, we have concluded that they were properly withheld under Exemption 5.

The Appellant contends that release of the withheld information would be in the public interest. We disagree. The chilling of the deliberative process that would result from release of the withheld information, as we have discussed above, would not further the public interest. Nor would release of mere opinions or recommendations, as opposed to information reflecting actual governmental decisions and reasoning, shed any useful light on the operations and activities of the Government.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we have found that all the information withheld under Exemption 5 by the National Energy Technology Laboratory was exempt from disclosure under that Exemption. Accordingly, we have concluded that the present appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Minneapolis Star Tribune, Case No. TFA-0091, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Scott A. Hodes

Date of Filing: March 29, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0096

On March 29, 2005 , Scott A. Hodes (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a second and final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information Act/Privacy Act Group (FOI/PA). In that determination, the FOI/PA responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOI/PA released portions of responsive documents, but withheld other portions of the documents under FOIA Exemption 4. This Appeal, if granted, would require the FOI/PA to release those portions of the documents to the Appellant.

I. Background

On August 11, 2004, the Appellant filed a request for information with the FOI/PA seeking "all studies maintained by your agency concerning the use of Gulf Stream Currents for Ocean Wave Energy applications." Request Letter dated August 11, 2004, from Scott A. Hodes to FOIA Officer, DOE. On March 16, 2005, the FOI/PA responded to the request with a final determination. Determination Letter dated March 16, 2005, from Abel Lopez, Director, FOI/PA, to Appellant. In its March 16, 2005 Determination Letter, the FOI/PA withheld portions of documents concerning two grants, awarded under the Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) grant program, under Exemption 4, concluding that release of the withheld information would cause the submitter competitive harm. The FOI/PA withheld the information because it was submitted to the DOE with the understanding that it would remain confidential for four years after acceptance of all items to be delivered under the grant. The government agreed to use the data only for its own purposes. The government had further agreed, in accordance with the U.S. Small Business Administration's SBIR Program Policy Directive of 2002, that the information would not be disclosed outside of the government. March 16, 2005 Determination Letter at 2. The FOI/PA indicated that the information it withheld under Exemption 4 would disclose the submitter's organizational structure and its approach to analyzing and responding to various requirements under the grant, including mechanical, electronic, personnel and documentary requirements. Id. FOI/PA further stated that such information would give competitors a clear competitive advantage in future competitions, and release of the information would cause substantial competitive harm to the submitters. Id. On March 29, 2005, Mr. Hodes filed an Appeal responding to the FOI/PA's determination. Appeal Letter dated March 22, 2005, from Scott A. Hodes to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 4 is at issue in the present case.

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must engage in a more complex analysis, as set forth in National Parks.

Under National Parks, the first requirement for Exemption 4 protection is that the withheld information must be "commercial or financial." Courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (citing Washington Post Co. v. HHS, 690 F.2d 252, 266 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Second, the information must be "obtained from a person." "Person" refers to a wide range of entities, including corporate entities. Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979).

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. For this information to be found to be "confidential," it must meet one of two tests: its release would either impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, the submitters presented the requested information to the DOE on an involuntary basis, because it was required by the grant program. Release of this information is not likely to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information of this type in the future because, as stated above, it is required to be submitted under the grant program. Consequently, the sole test for establishing confidentiality of the submitted information in this case is whether its release will substantially harm the submitter's competitive position.

Using the "competitive harm" prong of the National Parks test, the FOI/PA withheld the redacted information. March 16, 2005 Determination Letter at 2. The FOI/PA alleges that release of the withheld information is likely to cause substantial competitive harm to the submitter. Id. at 3. The FOI/PA goes on to state that if the information were released, a competitor would have a clear advantage in future competitions and the method used to respond to solicitations. Id. We agree. We have reviewed the information which was redacted. The information concerns two grants, awarded under the SBIR grant program. The information is of a technical nature that appears to be unique to the submitter in the way it was collected and presented in its proposal. Release of the information withheld by the FOI/PA would result in competitive harm to the submitter.

B. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. However, in cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0710, 28 DOE ¶ 80,222 (2002). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4.

C. Other Matters Raised on Appeal

Finally, we note that the Appellant requested information about the Coriolis program and stated in his Appeal that no mention was made of this portion of his request in the March 16, 2005 Determination Letter. On May 18, 2005, FOI/PA transferred this portion of his request to the Golden Field Office to determine if any documents responsive to his request exist there. Letter dated May 18, 2005, from Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/Privacy Act Group, DOE, to Appellant. The Golden Field Office will respond to the Appellant directly. Secondly, in the Appeal, the Appellant requests copies of the statements and justifications offered by the grant recipients. This constitutes a new request in that the information now sought lies beyond the scope of the Appellant's original request. The Appellant must file a new request for this information. Consequently, we will not consider this aspect of the Appeal.

III. Conclusion

Because the FOI/PA has met its burden of showing that it properly withheld the information under Exemption 4, we are denying the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Scott A. Hodes, Case No. TFA-0096, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Charles J. Fitzpatrick

Date of Filing: April 4, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0097

On April 4, 2005, Charles J. Fitzpatrick (Fitzpatrick) filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on March 3, 2005 by the Office of Repository Development (ORD) of the Department of Energy's Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management (OCRWM), in response to a request for documents that Fitzpatrick submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would require ORD to release additional responsive information to Fitzpatrick or provide a detailed explanation of its reasons for withholding such material.

I. Background

On January 26, 2005, Fitzpatrick requested six documents from ORD:

1. Continued Storage Analysis Report (scenarios 1 and 2) – November 4 [,1998]
2. Reference Cost Report for Continued Storage (scenarios 1 and 2) – November 12 [,1998]
3. Comparison Sheet (scenarios 1 and 2) – November 12 [,1998]
4. Continued Storage Analysis Report (scenario 1 only) – November 12 [,1998]
5. Reference Cost Report for Continued Storage (scenario 1 only) – November 12 [,1998]
6. Comparison Sheet (scenario 1 only) – November 12 [,1998]

On March 3, 2005, ORD issued a determination in response to Fitzpatrick's request. Letter from ORD to Fitzpatrick (March 3, 2005) (Determination Letter). ORD stated that document (2) was publicly available and a copy had been included in documents previously provided to Fitzpatrick. Determination Letter at 1. ORD withheld the remaining five documents in their entirety, citing Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Id. ORD justified withholding the documents by explaining that "these documents were determined to involve communications that are pre-decisional and are part of a deliberative process in that they involve recommendations and opinions resulting from a review of Yucca Mountain site activities." Id.

Fitzpatrick filed the present appeal on April 4, 2005. Letter from Fitzpatrick to OHA (April 1, 2005) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency" memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated, under the deliberative process privilege. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

Predecisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final agency action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). The deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In its determination letter, ORD withheld the requested documents (1), (3), (4), (5), and (6) under Exemption 5. In the processing of this appeal, we have learned that documents (1), (3), and (6) were not in existence at the time of the initial request. Electronic mail message from Diane Quenell, ORD, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 21, 2005). According to ORD, > [D]ocuments 1, 3, and 6 were never made part of the Final EIS Record or put in the Records Information System (RIS), therefore, a copy of these documents cannot be located. These documents were prepared at Lake Barrett's direction (at one time he was OCRWM's Acting Director, among other positions). He retired several years ago and we cannot determine what happened to all his documents, especially draft documents. At the time we responded to this request, [ORD] was not aware that we could not locate the documents, only that they were drafts and never finalized.

Id. Consequently, ORD is unable to produce documents which no longer exist.

The remaining documents to be considered here are documents (4) and (5). ORD must give further consideration to those documents. The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, material need not be segregated and released when the exempt and nonexempt material are so "inextricably intertwined" that release of the nonexempt material would compromise the exempt material, or where nonexempt material is so small and interspersed with exempt material that it would pose "an inordinate burden" to segregate it. Lead Industries Assoc. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2nd Cir. 1979). Since the ORD determination letter did not identify segregable, nonexempt factual material in documents (4) and (5), we find ORD's determination to be insufficient in this regard. Our review finds that these documents contain factual information that appears to us to be reasonably segregable from the exempt portions of the documents. Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to ORD. On remand, ORD must review documents (4) and (5) and segregate and release all purely factual portions, or issue a new determination that justifies withholding the factual portions of those documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on April 4, 2005 by Charles J. Fitzpatrick, OHA Case No. TFA-0097, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management, Office of Repository Development for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY
OFFICE OF HEARINGS AND APPEALS

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	State of Nevada
Date of Filing:	April 6, 2005
Case No.:	TFA-0098

On April 6, 2005, the State of Nevada (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from determinations that the Acting Assistant General Counsel for General Law of the Department of Energy (DOE/GC) and the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management (OCRWM) issued in response to a request for documents that the Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. DOE/GC issued its determination on February 24, 2005, and OCRWM issued its determination on March 23, 2005. This appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/GC and OCRWM release additional responsive information to the Appellant or provide a detailed explanation of their reasons for withholding such material.

I. Background

On January 8, 2005, the Appellant requested "detailed information with respect to the factors and criteria considered by the DOE in analyzing the five potential [transportation routes, or] corridors, as well as any documents disclosing the reasons for the selection of the Caliente corridor or the rejection of the other four, or the ranking in preference of the five."[1] On February 24, 2005, DOE/GC issued a determination letter stating that it located 23 documents that were responsive to the Appellant's request. DOE/GC provided six documents in their entirety and ten documents with deletions and withheld seven records in their entirety pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5.[2] Two documents were withheld on the basis of the attorney-client privilege and the remaining 15 documents were withheld on the basis of the deliberative process privilege. In addition, a portion of one of the documents provided with deletions was withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemption 6. On March 23, 2005, OCRWM issued its determination letter stating that it had located 84 responsive records.[3] OCRWM provided five documents in their entirety and withheld 79 documents in their entirety pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5.[4] OCRWM withheld one document on the basis of the attorney-client privilege and the remaining 78 on the basis of the deliberative process privilege.

[1] Appellant's Appeal Letter (dated April 6) at 2.
[2] Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/Privacy Group (Feb. 24, 2005) [hereinafter "DOE/GC Determination Letter"].

The Appellant filed its appeal with OHA on April 6, 2005, asserting three grounds of appeal. In the appeal, the Appellant alleges:

1. Incomplete Documents Produced: Even as to the documents which DOE asserted "are provided to you in their entirety," less than the entire document was delivered in some instances.

2. Unsubstantiated Assertion of the Deliberative-Process Exemption: DOE provides only boilerplate, conclusory reasons for delivering documents in redacted form due to alleged deliberative process privilege. DOE provides no description of the contents of any of those individual documents, nor does it specify what information in them is entitled to protection under the privilege asserted.

3. Failure to Segregate: DOE failed to explain its withholding of a very substantial amount of non-exempt factual information contained in the documents which have been delivered in extremely redacted form or which have been withheld in their entirety. [5]

We note that the Appellant does not appeal the information withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5 under the attorney-client privilege or FOIA Exemption 6. Therefore, we will confine our analysis to documents which were withheld in part or in their entirety pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5 under the deliberative-process privilege. In addition, we will examine two documents which the Appellant contends were produced in part, although the determination letter stated that they were provided in their entirety.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request.[6] Nine exemptions set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold.[7] Federal courts have determined that these nine exemptions must be narrowly construed.[8] In addition, DOE regulations provide that the agency should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and if disclosure is in the public interest. [9] Accordingly, even if a document can properly be withheld under an exemption, we must also consider whether the public interest demands disclosure pursuant to DOE regulations.

A. Incomplete Documents

As an initial matter, we note that we contacted DOE/GC regarding the two incomplete documents received by the Appellant. DOE/GC stated that one of the documents, entitled "Spent Nuclear Fuel Transportation," is publicly available. Although the cover of this document states that it is available at the DOE or Yucca Mountain Project websites, we searched the sites and were unable to locate this document. DOE/GC should provide the Appellant with information about how to access this document. With respect to the second document, entitled "Transportation-related Decisions" and dated July 18, 2002, DOE/GC stated that the record produced was the title page of a larger document. The DOE should produce the document, or issue a new determination letter explaining reasons for withholding any portions of it.

B. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 shields from mandatory disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with an agency."[10] In order to qualify for withholding under Exemption 5, information must meet two conditions: it must be an inter-agency or intra-agency document, i.e., its source and its recipient must each be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under the judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it.[11] In the present case, DOE/GC and OCRWM each relied upon the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges of Exemption 5. However, since the Appellant only appeals the determination concerning those documents withheld under the deliberative process privilege, we will confine our analysis solely to those materials.

The deliberative process privilege permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated.[12] It is intended to protect frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions.[13] In order to be shielded by Exemption 5 under this privilege, a record must be predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process.[14] This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy.[15] Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters. The determination must also adequately justify withholding of a document by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document.[16]

As a preliminary matter, we note that DOE/GC withheld documents in connection with its exchanges with the DOE Office of the Secretary, the DOE Office of the Executive Secretariat, and OCRWM. OCRWM withheld documents conveying its communications with the Office of National Transportation. Therefore, these documents clearly qualify as either intra-agency or inter-agency communications.

1. Documents Withheld by DOE/GC

With respect to the documents redacted in part or withheld in their entirety by DOE/GC, the Appellant asserts that

> DOE's explanation and justification for the deletions [in the records] are vague and general and lack any specificity and any "nexus" to the specific information redacted from any particular document. It is impossible to tell, from the DOE's explanation, what portions of what documents were withheld for what reason.[17]

We find that the determination letter clearly indicates the nature of the privilege claimed—the deliberative process privilege. The letter also states that the documents are pre-decisional because "they were prepared prior to the undertaking of any action by the agency," and are deliberative "because they are part of the deliberative process by which agency action was considered and taken."[18] It further explains that the "information deleted reflects advisory opinions from subordinates that are part of the process by which government decisions and policies were considered."[19] Under the circumstances of this case, we find these statements specific enough. We have examined all the materials withheld by DOE/GC and agree that portions of each document are pre-decisional and deliberative. Therefore, we find that the documents qualify for withholding under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

2. Documents Withheld by OCRWM

The Appellant asserts that OCRWM did not adequately justify the documents withheld under the deliberative process privilege.

> Nowhere in its correspondence does DOE-OCRWM ever attempt to discuss or explain individual documents, but simply limits its conclusory remarks to the group of 79 cumulatively. [20]

We find that the determination letter issued by OCRWM adequately describes the basis for withholding the information under Exemption 5. The letter states that the withheld documents were drafts and, therefore, "by their very nature, are pre-decisional" and "part of the deliberative process by which […] agency action was considered and taken."[21] OCRWM need not provide an individualized basis for each of the documents withheld where the same justification applies to each invocation of Exemption 5 in all 79 documents.

Nevertheless, non-deliberative portions of DOE/GC and OCRWM documents must be segregated and released to the Appellant as explained in Section D below.

C. Description of Withheld Material

A document must be described with enough specificity to allow the requester to: (1) ascertain whether the claimed exemptions reasonably apply to the documents and (2) formulate a meaningful appeal.[22] Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. [23]

1. Documents Withheld by DOE/GC

The following four descriptions are representative of the descriptions of the other 17 documents withheld by DOE/GC[24]:

1) Document #5 (Withheld in Entirety): Document entitled "Nevada Rail Project, Caliente Overview, dated November 26, 2003." Presented to Robert Card, Presented by: Nevada Transportation Project Team, TBD, Las Vegas, Nevada. U.S. Department of Energy, Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management. 19 pages.

2) Document #4 (Withheld in Entirety): Document entitled "Activities That Could be Accomplished If No Mode/Corridor Decision Made Until 1/05" 1 page.

3) Document #11 (Withheld in Part): Undated Memorandum for The Secretary, Through Robert G. Card, Under Secretary, From Margaret Chu, Director, Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management and Beverly Cook, Assistant Secretary for Environment, Safety and Health. Subject: Selection of a preferred rail corridor to Yucca Mountain. 1 page.

After reviewing all the descriptions in the list, we find that DOE/GC adequately identified the subject matter and, where available, the date, author and recipient of the documents.

2. Documents Withheld by OCRWM

The following documents demonstrate the level of description provided for the vast majority of the 79 withheld documents[25]:

1) Document #9: Undated document entitled "Memorandum for the Secretary," from Margaret Chu and Beverly Cook through Robert G. Card, Subject: ACTION: Approve Mostly Rail as Mode of Transportation and Caliente as Corridor Preference for Transportation of Spent Nuclear Fuel and High-level Radioactive Waste to Yucca Mountain, and Publish these decisions in the Federal Register. 4 pages.

2) Document #44: Draft letter regarding issuance of the ROD and NOI dated April 1, 2004. 2 pages.

This level of description is adequate. We, however, identify two documents that are not adequately described:

1) Document #14: Undated note. 1 page.

2) Document #17: Email from Gary Lanthrum to Jay Jones, Nancy Slater Thompson, Robin L. Sweeney, Tom Cotton, and Ted Garrish, dated December 10, 2003. 2 pages.

With respect to these two documents, we shall remand this matter to OCRWM to provide an adequate description of the material withheld. We note that, on the whole, OCRWM provided sufficient descriptions for most of the withheld documents. The remaining 77 withheld documents were sufficiently identified to allow the requester to ascertain the matters withheld and to formulate an appeal. Moreover, the Appellant did in fact raise cogent arguments regarding those 77 documents.

D. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material of DOE and OCRWM Documents

The FOIA requires that "any reasonable segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt."[26]

[25] OCRWM List, Documents Withheld in their Entirety.
[26] 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), see also Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995).

In cases where the exempt material is so inextricably intertwined that disclosure of it would reveal "only essentially meaningless words and phrases," it need not be released.[27]

In the instant case, DOE/GC withheld seven documents in their entirety and substantial portions of ten other documents, and OCRWM withheld 79 documents in their entirety. On inspection of these documents from each of these offices, we find that there are portions of factual material which could be segregated from the exempt portions of several of these documents. For example, we identify the following DOE/GC documents which appear to contain nonexempt factual information:

1) Document #3(A) (Withheld in Entirety): Document entitled "Opening Statement," March 21, 2001. 7 pages.

2) Document #2(A) (Withheld in Part): Undated draft document entitled "Department of Energy Record of Decision on Mode of Transportation and Nevada Rail Corridor for the Disposal of Spent Nuclear Fuel and High-Level Radioactive Waste at Yucca Mountain, Nye County, Nevada, with handwritten notations." 31 pages.

OCRWM also withheld documents containing segregable factual information:

1) Document #26 (Withheld in Entirety): "Department of Energy Notice of Preferred Rail Corridor," dated December 2, 2003. 8 pages.

2) Document #19 (Withheld in Entirety): Undated draft letters (6) from Margaret Chu to Governor Kenny Guinn. 1 page each.

The DOE/GC determination letter does not discuss segregability. The OCRWM determination letter states that it applied the "reasonable segregation" standards to the documents, but it determined that "nonexempt factual material is so interspersed with exempt material that segregation would only leave meaningless words and phrases."[28] However, based on our review, sections of DOE/GC and OCRWM documents contain purely factual information that is clearly separate from recommendations, advice, opinions and other information protected by the deliberative process privilege. On remand, DOE/GC and OCRWM should review all the documents which were withheld in part or in their entirety, and either segregate and release all factual information or issue a new determination that justifies any withholding.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED THAT:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the State of Nevada on April 6, 2005, OHA Case No. TFA-0098, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Acting Assistant General Counsel for General Law of the Department of Energy and the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management for the issuance of new determinations in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy form which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Softsmiths, Inc.

Date of Filing: May 11, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0101

On May 11, 2005, Softsmiths, Inc. (Softsmiths) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on April 4, 2005, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of the Inspector General (OIG). In that determination, OIG responded to a request for documents that Softsmiths submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OIG's determination identified and released nine documents as responsive to Softsmiths' request. However, OIG withheld portions of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. This appeal, if granted, would require OIG to release the withheld information to Softsmiths.

I. Background

Softsmiths requested several categories of documents from OIG regarding an OIG report entitled "IG-0637 Electricity Transmission Scheduling at the Bonneville Power Administration":

1. List of all documentation collected and reviewed including: document name, author, date and version number, and source providing the document.

2. List of all individuals interviewed (internally-BPAT and externally).

3. Minutes of meetings held.

4. Criteria set used by audit staff to formulate project assessments and conclusions as to capabilities and viability.

5. Systems tests (functional and performance) performed by the audit team.

6. Comparative analysis of other similar systems performed to arrive at report conclusions.

Letter from OIG to Softsmiths (April 4, 2005) (Determination Letter). On April 4, 2005, the OIG issued a determination in response to Softsmiths' request. Determination Letter. OIG identified nine responsive documents, which it provided to Softsmiths.[*] Determination Letter at 1. However, OIG withheld certain portions of the nine documents, citing Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA. Id. OIG stated that "[d]ocuments 3, 7, [and] 8 are released with material withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Documents 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, and 9 are released with material withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 and Exemption 6." Id. OIG justified the withholdings by stating that "[t]he material that is withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 contains predecisional deliberative data that was subject to further review and possible change." Id. at 2. OIG also stated that "[n]ames and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals have been withheld pursuant to Exemption 6…[t]he public interest in the identity of individuals whose names appear in these files does not outweigh these individuals' privacy interests." Id.

Softsmiths filed the present appeal on May 11, 2005. Letter from Softsmiths to OHA (May 4, 2005) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency" memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated, under the deliberative process privilege. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

Predecisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final agency action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). The deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion [*] OIG identified 23 documents responsive to Softsmiths' request. However, 14 of the documents were generated by Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) and, therefore, OIG forwarded those documents to BPA for a determination concerning their release. See Determination Letter at 1. According to OIG, BPA was to respond directly to Softsmiths concerning release of those documents. At the time of the filing of this appeal, Softsmiths had not received a response from BPA regarding the 14 documents and, therefore, those documents are beyond the scope of this appeal. However, we contacted BPA to determine the status of Softsmiths' request regarding the 14 BPA documents. According to BPA, a determination on the request should be issued to Softsmiths "within the next couple of weeks." Electronic Mail Message from Annie Eissler, BPA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (May, 19, 2005). In its Determination Letter OIG determined that certain information contained in the BPA documents should be withheld pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6. Softsmiths may appeal BPA's determination concerning its 14 documents, including any withholding of information it claims at the direction of OIG.

among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

The documents in question are summaries of meetings held between OIG auditors and Softsmiths' personnel. They contain, inter alia, opinions and concerns raised by various parties in the meetings, discussions of decision-making procedures, and recommendations. After reviewing the documents, we find that they contain material that reflects OIG's deliberative process and are, therefore, exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

Exemption 6 of the FOIA protects from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a document may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the document may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Third, the agency must balance the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the document would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

In this case, OIG found that release of the withheld information would result in the invasion of personal privacy interests in that the release of the information would disclose the identity of certain individuals. Releasing the names of the individuals, subordinates who were sharing their opinions or concerns with or making recommendations to their superiors, could allow a third party to connect the individual with a particular opinion or action raised or undertaken in conjunction with their work. This could, in turn, lead to those individuals being intimidated, harassed, or otherwise unable to perform their duties.

Having identified a privacy interest in the withheld information, it is necessary to determine whether there is a public interest in the disclosure of the information. Information falls within the public interest if it contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the government. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 775. Therefore, unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also National Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990).

Upon reviewing the documents in question, we find that there is little, if anything, the public would learn about the workings of the government from the release of the withheld names and identifying information. Consequently, the public interest in such information is minimal at best. Therefore, after weighing the identified privacy interests present in this case against a minimal or even non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing the identities of federal employees could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). We find that OIG complied with the FOIA by releasing to Softsmiths all factual, non-deliberative portions of the documents.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, we have determined that OIG properly withheld portions of responsive documents pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA. Therefore, Softsmiths' appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May, 11, 2005 by Softsmiths, Inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0101, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Moran

Date of Filing: May 17, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0102

On May 17, 2005, Barbara Moran filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on April 26, 2005, by the Director of the Headquarters Freedom of Information Act/Privacy Act Group (FOIA/PA) of the Department of Energy's Office of the Executive Secretariat. This determination responded to a request for documents that Ms. Moran submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

Ms. Moran inquired with various offices of the Navy about documents concerning a 1966 aircraft salvage operation that the United States Navy conducted in the Mediterranean Sea. Ultimately, she was advised to request the documents from the DOE: "[Personnel at the Navy] said that because the operation involved a nuclear weapon, the documents fall under the jurisdiction of the DOE." Appeal at 1. Ms. Moran then filed a FOIA request with FOIA/PA for three documents, identified by title, description and date, that the Navy's Office of Naval Operations had published in 1967. FOIA/PA determined that the History Division in the Office of the Executive Secretariat was the only reasonable location that might possess the requested documents, and referred the request to that office. The History Division performed a search for the documents and determined that it did not possess them. In her Appeal, Ms. Moran challenges the adequacy of the search, on the grounds that the Navy has stated that the documents do exist.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Jo Ann Estevez, 28 DOE ¶ 80,309 (2003).

FOIA/PA informed me that the DOE repository for documents dating from the 1960s is the History Division. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sheila Jeter, FOIA/PA, and William Schwartz, Office of Hearings and Appeals (May 19, 2005). Ms. Jeter knew of no other logical location to search for documents from that era. Id. The History Division also informed me that it was in all likelihood the only office in the DOE that might have the requested documents. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Terrence Fehner, History Division, and William Schwartz, OHA (May 19, 2005). Mr. Fehner explained to me that the search he conducted in response to this request consisted of looking in the History Division's subject files that bore headings related to the facts surrounding the salvage operation. He was not surprised that his search was unsuccessful because the History Division generally does not maintain copies of published materials, and rarely maintains copies of materials published outside of the DOE or its predecessors. Id. After reviewing the record in this case, we find that FOIA/PA conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. [*] Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Barbara Moran on May 17, 2005, OHA Case Number TFA-0102, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

[*] In a telephone conversation with this Office, Ms. Moran asked whether the documents she seeks might be maintained at the DOE's Los Alamos or Sandia facilities, because, she stated, those facilities were involved with the salvage operation. We have spoken with the Alternative FOIA Officer responsible for FOIA requests at those locations. She informed us that neither location has copies of any of the three documents Ms. Moran seeks. DECISION AND ORDER

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Jeffrey T. Richelson

Date of Filing: June 15, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0105

Jeffrey T. Richelson filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Emergency Response of the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued on May 19, 2005. In that determination, the NNSA denied a request for information that the Appellant had submitted on July 22, 2002, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. The information sought was withheld after the NNSA determined that the document contained unclassified controlled nuclear information (UCNI) and other information the disclosure of which would result in circumvention of agency rules. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the information that the NNSA withheld from those documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On July 22, 2002, Mr. Richelson requested, among other documents, a copy of the October 1993 "NEST [Nuclear Emergency Search Team] Energy Senior Official's Reference Manual." The Office of Emergency Response, which had control over that document, responded to the request by withholding virtually all of the manual from Mr. Richelson. In his May 19, 2005 determination letter, the program manager of the Office of Emergency Response stated that portions of the manual contained UCNI, the disclosure of which is prohibited by the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq., and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. In addition, he stated that other portions of the manual contained information about the categorization of information into various levels of classification, and warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 2 of the FOIA, because their disclosure was "likely to result in circumvention of a legal requirement."

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the manual described above. In his Appeal, Mr. Richelson contends that a significant amount of the information in the manual has been released to the public since its publication. He also challenges the appropriateness of the determination that the contents of the manual are UCNI.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 29 DOE ¶ 80,171 (2004). Section 148 of the Atomic Energy Act directs the Department of Energy to issue regulations or orders to protect from unauthorized dissemination information that has been determined to contain UCNI. 42 U.S.C. § 2168(a). These regulations appear at 10 C.F.R. Part 1017.

The Director of the Office of Security has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). This authority has now been delegated to the Deputy Director of Operations of the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance. Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Director reviewed the manual that Mr. Richelson requested.

According to the Deputy Director, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, the requested document contains UCNI. The information that the DOE identified as UCNI concerns the operational details of the NEST. The DOE also determined, however, that the majority of the document's content is not UCNI. The Deputy Director has provided this Office with a copy of the document from which the UCNI has been deleted. Beside each deletion, "DOE (b)(3)" has been written in the margin of the document. The denying official for these withholdings is Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Director of Operations, Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Director's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the DOE to continue withholding portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Deputy Director has now determined to be properly identified as UCNI must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Deputy Director has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

In view of the Deputy Director's findings, and at his suggestion, we remanded this manual to the NNSA's Office of Emergency Response for a new review, to consider whether the FOIA dictates that other, previously withheld portions of the document, including those previously withheld under Exemption 2, should not be released to Mr. Richelson. After completing its review, the Office of Emergency Response informed this Office that no portions of the manual were withholdable other than those identified as UCNI by the Deputy Director. Accordingly, Mr. Richelson's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Jeffrey T. Richelson on June 15, 2005, Case No. TFA-0105, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A newly redacted version of the October 1993 "NEST [Nuclear Emergency Search Team] Energy Senior Official's Reference Manual" will be provided to Mr. Richelson under separate cover.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	Tri-Valley CAREs
Date of Filing:	June 22, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0106

On June 22, 2005, Tri-Valley CAREs (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on May 23, 2005 by the National Nuclear Security Administration's Albuquerque Service Center (NNSA). In that determination, NNSA responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA's determination identified and released several documents as responsive to this request. However, NNSA withheld portions of three documents under FOIA Exemption 2. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release that information to the Appellant, to conduct a new search for responsive documents, and to issue a new determination letter.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant filed a Request for Information with NNSA seeking information concerning a contract to construct a "Biosafety Level III Laboratory" at NNSA's Lawrence-Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL). On December 9, 2003, NNSA issued a partial response to the Appellant releasing one responsive document from which it had redacted information under Exemption 2. On May 23, 2005, NNSA issued a final determination letter (the Determination Letter) identifying and releasing a number of additional responsive documents and withholding portions of two documents under Exemption 2. On June 22, 2005, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal, which challenges its withholding determinations under Exemption 2, the adequacy of NNSA's search for responsive documents, and the adequacy of its determination.

II. ANALYSIS

Withholdings Under Exemption 2

NNSA withheld portions of three documents under FOIA Exemption 2: a slide presentation entitled Highlights of Modular Construction Practices and Benefits of Modular Design; a letter dated October 28, 2003, from John Fuelling to Mike Atkinson; and a letter dated October 30, 2003, from Atkinson to Fuelling.

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 2 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

NNSA's Determination Letter indicates that it withheld portions of the letters and the slide show because their release could reveal information which could be used by terrorists or other enemies to harm national security interests. Specifically, the information withheld by NNSA under Exemption 2 consists of equipment diagrams, specifications diagrams, and floor plan designs of the Biosafety Level III Laboratory at the NNSA's Lawrence-Livermore National Laboratory.

That information is clearly predominantly internal in nature. The D.C. Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. United States Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information in this case neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. Accordingly, it is predominantly internal.

The information meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. Environmental Protection Agency, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general legal requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d at 530-31.

Release of the information at issue in the present case could allow espionage agents, terrorists or other malefactors to identify potential security vulnerabilities or assist such enemies' strategic planning. Accordingly, disclosure of the information at issue risks allowing espionage agents, terrorists, or any other potential malefactors to circumvent DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. Although it is obvious that the Appellant has no such intentions, if DOE were to release this document to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public who requested it. Accordingly, we find that the information can be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

The Appellant also contends that release of the withheld information would be in the public interest. Specifically, the Appellant contends that the release of the withheld information would "inform surrounding communities about the proposed advanced biological warfare agent research at LLNL," provide the public with the ability to evaluate the fairness of the bidding process, and provide the public with an opportunity to discover governmental waste. We disagree. Even if the Appellant's contentions were accurate, when balanced against the potential harms discussed above, the potential for this information's misuse is too great for us to conclude that its release would further the public interest. Accordingly, NNSA may continue to withhold that information under Exemption 2.

Adequacy of Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

The Appellant contends that NNSA's search for responsive documents was inadequate. Accordingly, we contacted NNSA in order to review the search it conducted for documents that were responsive to the Appellant's request for information. NNSA informed us that the search was conducted by the DOE's Oakland Operations Office (OOO). The OOO was shut down and its FOIA files were transferred to the NNSA. Moreover, some of the individuals who apparently conducted the search for OOO have since left the DOE or LLNL. As a result, we were unable to obtain sufficient information about this search to conduct a meaningful review. Accordingly, at the NNSA's suggestion, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to NNSA in order to allow it an opportunity to provide a more detailed description of its search or conduct a new search for documents that are responsive to the Appellant's request.

Adequacy of Determination

After conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, the agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The agency must also provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (1) adequately describe the results of searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption(s) under which information was withheld. Research Information Services, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,139 (1996); Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,767 (1996). Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

The Appellant contends that NNSA's determination is inadequate. First, the Appellant contends that the determination is inadequate because it does not explain why more responsive documents were not found. This contention is without merit. Neither the FOIA statute nor any relevant case law requires an agency to explain why responsive documents were not found. Therefore, NNSA was not under any obligation to do so.

Second, the Appellant contends that the determination is inadequate because it does not state whether requested documents ever existed or whether they were disposed of. Citing DOE FOIA Regulation 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d)(3), which states, in pertinent part, "[i[f a requested record is known to have been destroyed or otherwise disposed of, or if no such record is known to exist, the requester is so notified" (emphasis supplied), the Appellant contends that the NNSA was obligated to state whether requested documents were disposed of and whether they ever existed. This contention is based upon an erroneous interpretation of § 1004.4(d)(3). The regulation does not require NNSA to affirmatively state whether a requested document ever existed or was disposed of, unless, it had knowledge that a requested document never existed or was destroyed. In this case, NNSA does not have that knowledge.

Thirdly, the Appellant contends that the determination was inadequate because it did not state whether there had been previous contracts between DOE and Britz-Heidbrink and had not disclosed which permits were sought and obtained or were rejected for the performance of the contract. NNSA is not required to answer these questions, since it is well settled that the FOIA does not require agencies to answer questions posed as FOIA requests. See, e.g., Zemansky v. EPA, 767 F.2d 569, 574 (9th Cir. 1985); DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978).

Finally, the Appellant correctly noted that NNSA's determination did not indicate that it was withholding the contract price of the contract between LLNL and Britz-Heidbrink. Nor did it indicate under which FOIA exemption the contract price was being withheld. Therefore, the determination was inadequate in this respect. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to the NNSA. On remand, NNSA should either release the contract price to the Appellant, or issue a new determination letter indicating which exemption(s) it is claiming along with a thorough explanation of why it finds the claimed exemption(s) applicable to the withheld information.

For the reasons stated above, we have concluded that the present appeal should be granted in part and denied in all other aspects.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CAREs, TFA-0106, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration's Albuquerque Service Center for further processing, in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Samuel D. Johnson

Date of Filing: June 24, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0107

On June 24, 2005, Samuel D. Johnson filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on April 21, 2005, by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Johnson submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Johnson asks that DOE/HQ conduct an additional search for documents responsive to his request and release information that was withheld.

I. Background

On September 24, 2002, Mr. Johnson filed a request for information in which he sought a copy of his personnel security file and all other information pertaining to him that the DOE maintains. See April 21, 2005 Determination Letter at 1. In a letter dated November 28, 2003, Mr. Johnson was provided a partial response that included 57 documents that were generated from his personnel security file. At that time, Mr. Johnson was told that two other documents from the Office of Counterintelligence were located in the file but had to be reviewed to determine their releasability. On April 21, 2005, DOE/HQ issued a final determination in which it stated that it was releasing one of the documents in its entirety. The determination further stated that the second document was being released with certain deletions pursuant to Exemption 7(E) of the FOIA. The document is a memorandum to Joseph S. Mahaley from Michael J. Waguespack, Office of Counterintelligence, dated October 16, 2001, and discusses a summary of polygraph-derived information.

On June 24, 2005, Mr. Johnson filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Johnson in general challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by DOE/HQ. */ See Johnson Appeal. He asks that the OHA direct DOE/HQ to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

*/ Mr. Johnson submitted a voluminous Appeal addressing various arguments, many of which we are unable to respond to in the context of this FOIA determination. Among his many arguments, Mr. Johnson states that DOE/HQ took excessive time to respond to his FOIA request. See Johnson Appeal.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 11384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at DOE/HQ to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed by the Office of Counterintelligence and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Johnson's request might reasonably be located. DOE/HQ has informed us that since it issued its April 21, 2005 determination to Mr. Johnson, Mr. Johnson has filed several additional requests for information. DOE/HQ has provided additional documents related to Mr. Johnson's original request. DOE/HQ has also informed us that more responsive material may be forthcoming. In light of this information, this Appeal is therefore granted in part and this matter is remanded to the Office of Counterintelligence. This will allow the requester to obtain additional information bearing upon his original request and to reconsider or reformulate his argument on adequacy of search. It should also reduce delays and inefficiencies associated with piecemeal appeals. The Office of Counterintelligence will thereby also have an opportunity to reconsider its deletions from the second document in light of arguments made by the requester on appeal. On remand, the Office of Counterintelligence shall release any additional responsive material to Mr. Johnson. To the extent release is denied, the Office of Counterintelligence shall issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of any information that it redacts from any responsive material it provides to the requester.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Samuel D. Johnson on June 24, 2005, OHA Case No. TFA-0107, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Office of Counterintelligence for processing in accordance with the guidance in the Decision above.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	James Salsman
Date of Filing:	June 29, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0108

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by James Salsman in response to an interim determination issued to him by the Director of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information/Privacy Acts Group (hereinafter referred to as "the Director"). In that determination, the Director denied Mr. Salsman's request for expedited processing of a request for information that he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Mr. Salsman's FOIA request be processed on an expedited basis.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to FOIA requests within twenty working days of its receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

In his FOIA request, Mr. Salsman sought access to copies of all DOE records pertaining to funds appropriated, budgeted or spent for the purposes of determining the full toxicological profile of uranium and uranium-related substances from 1995 to the present. He further requested that his submission be processed in an expedited manner. In his determination, the Director found that Mr. Salsman's request did not meet the criteria for expedited processing. Mr. Salsman then filed the Appeal at issue here.

II. Analysis

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up the line" and delaying the processing of other, earlier, requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be provided only when the requester demonstrates "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the Federal Government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v).

Mr. Salsman has not attempted to show that he is primarily engaged in disseminating information and has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the Federal Government. Therefore, in order to prevail he must show that failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. Mr. Salsman attempts to make this showing by arguing that the toxicological profile of uranium is incomplete (i.e., it lacks information concerning the long-term reproductive and developmental effects of uranium exposure on humans), that this lack of information means that an undetermined number of people are exposed to uranium that is released into the environment by government and industry who would not be exposed if uranium's full toxicological profile was known, that these people's lives or physical safety are at risk, and that release of the requested information will "very likely" result in the swift completion of the toxicological profile. Appeal at 4. In support of his position, Mr. Salsman cites a number of studies and scientific publications about the negative effects of uranium on human health.

We do not find Mr. Salsman's arguments to be convincing. As an initial matter, he assumes that a completed toxicological profile will show that some people are being put at risk by current levels of uranium exposure, and that this exposure will cease shortly after release of the profile. While each of these statements may be true, their validity is by no means assured, and we are not convinced by his claims. More importantly, Mr. Salsman has not explained how release of information about the funding for determining the full toxicological profile will result in the swift completion of that profile. If people are being put at imminent risk because of their exposure to uranium and uranium-related products, it is those substances themselves that are causing the risks, and not any inability to obtain government funding information on an expedited basis.

We are firmly committed to providing expedited processing of FOIA requests where there is a reasonable expectation that failure to do so would jeopardize the life or physical safety of an individual. Edward A. Slavin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,279 (2000). No such expectation has been shown to exist in this case. We conclude that the Director correctly denied Mr. Salsman's request for expedited processing of his FOIA request.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by James Salsman in Case No. TFA-0108 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Missouri Coalition for the Environment Foundation
Date of Filing:	August 1, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0111

On August 1, 2005, Missouri Coalition for the Environment Foundation (MCEF) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 28, 2005, by the Oak Ridge Office of the Department of Energy (OR) in response to a request for documents that MCEF submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/OR perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

During February 2005, the Advisory Board on Radiation and Worker Health (ABRWH) held a meeting in St. Louis, Missouri. [1] At that meeting, officials from Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU) and National Institute for Occupational Science and Health (NIOSH) discussed the contents of six boxes. These boxes contained material related to the pending Special Exposure Cohort (SEC) petition for the Mallinckrodt Chemical Works (MCW) site that was in operation in Missouri from 1942 to 1957. Letter from MCEF to OHA (August 1, 2005) (Appeal) at 1. According to MCEF, during the meeting the officials described the contents of the six boxes as declassified Mallinckrodt records from the Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Health (ORISE) vaults that were transferred to the OR vaults, records which "might materially affect the deliberations" of ABRWH on the MCW petition. Id.

[1] The ABRWH is sponsored by the National Institute for Occupational Science and Health (NIOSH), part of the Centers for Disease Control (CDC). NIOSH is responsible for conducting research and making recommendations for the prevention of work-related illnesses and injuries. ABRWH is chartered to advise the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services about guidelines for implementing the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program (EEOICPA). See Meeting Minutes, Savannah River Site Health Effects Subcommittee Meeting, CDC (March 13, 2003).

On March 10, 2005, MCEF filed a FOIA request with OR for various records regarding MCW. Letter from MCEF to OR (March 10, 2005) (Request). [2] There were three parts to the request. First, MCEF asked DOE for an index of the complete contents of the six boxes (Request 1). The second request was for an index of documents in the ORISE vaults pertaining to MCW operations that were or will be declassified before being placed in the six boxes mentioned in Request 1. The third request was for an index of any and all MCW classified documents that currently reside in ORISE or OR vaults.

OR conducted a search and found documents responsive to Request 1, but found no material that was responsive to the other two requests. Letter from OR to MCEE (June 28, 2005) (Determination Letter). MCEF contends that the search conducted by DOE was inadequate and untimely, that the portion of the determination addressing the responsive material ignored the key element of Request 1, and that the response to the second and third requests was "equally brief, vague and uninformative." Appeal at 2. MCEF stated that it expected "specific statutory exemptions to be cited as to why the requested indexes to MCW related documents and about classified and declassified records were not provided in a more timely manner." Appeal at 2. In the Appeal, MCEF challenged the adequacy of the search and asks OHA to direct OR to search again for responsive information.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

The OR FOIA Officer informed us that upon receipt of the request, she contacted DOE records managers, contractor records custodians, ORISE contractor personnel and DOE/OR classification personnel to identify any responsive material. Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock, OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 22, 2005). She is familiar with NIOSH review activities at OR over the last ten years, and prior to completing the OR determination letter, discussed the complexity of the search and her knowledge of the documents in the Mallinckrodt boxes with the requester. Id. According to the FOIA Officer, DOE was unable to identify the six boxes that MCEF wanted to locate and concluded that a NIOSH representative would have more information. Id. She then provided the requester with all indices and all search terms aids available for all Mallinckrodt documents held at OR. Id. NIOSH, on the other hand, also received the request but was able to accurately identify the responsive six boxes. In response to the request, the CDC FOIA Officer sent MCEF a summary of the types of information in each box and a list of the contents of each folder in those boxes entitled "List of Documents Found in the Mallinckrodt Boxes." See Letter from CDC to MCEW (April 25, 2005). Despite this information, MCEF stated that CDC/NIOSH had provided only "one version" of an index to the records, and it wanted a DOE index to confirm the accuracy of the CDC/NIOSH index. Appeal at 1.

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that OR conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. OR searched all records in DOE's possession but found none that were responsive.[3] Nonetheless, in response to Request 1, OR provided the requester with additional information that it believed MCEF could use in conjunction with the NIOSH index. Electronic mail message from Amy Rothrock, OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 22, 2005). The FOIA does not require OR to create a DOE version of the NIOSH index for the convenience of the requester. As for the remaining requests, OR searched but did not find the other indices that MCEF requested. Further, MCEF has not provided any evidence that these documents exist, and the FOIA does not require OR to generate new documents in response to a request. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Missouri Coalition of Environment Foundation on August 1, 2005, OHA Case Number TFA-0111, is hereby denied.

[3] The FOIA Officer explained that the final response was delayed as a result of coordinating the search across four separate offices and repositories and for clarification of the scope of the search. Electronic mail message from Amy Rothrock, OR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 22, 2005). OR also has a backlog of 460 FOIA requests and processes the backlog on a "first in, first out" basis. Id.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Dorothy Pritchett

Date of Filing: August 2, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0112

This decision concerns an Appeal that Dorothy Pritchett (Appellant) filed on August 2, 2005. The Appellant submitted a request for information to the Department of Energy's (DOE) FOIA and Privacy Act Group (FPAG) seeking copies of all information pertaining to her in the files of 16 present or former DOE employees.[1] The FPAG referred a small portion of the Appellant's request, concerning one of these 16 employees, to the Office of Inspector General (IG). On July 16, 2005, the IG issued a Determination Letter in response to that portion of request. The IG's determination identified 72 documents that were responsive to this portion of the Appellant's request. The IG released most of these documents to the Appellant.[2] However, the IG withheld significant portions of this information under FOIA Exemptions 6, 7(A), 7(C) and 7(D). On August 2, 2005, the Appellant filed the present Appeal, contending that the IG's withholding of the information was improper.[3]

While the FOIA generally requires that information held by government agencies be released to the public upon request, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA, which set forth the

[2] Apparently, the IG's Determination Letter pertained to 40 of these documents. The Determination Letter indicated that the other 32 responsive documents had been previously supplied to the Appellant.

[3] The Appeal also requests in her Appeal, copies of "all emails and documents in the actual or constructive possession of Inspector General Gregory Friedman, Stephan Durbin and/or Barbara Hall."' Appeal at 1. The Appellant's request is untimely, and cannot be made on appeal, since she did not request this information in her original request. We do not permit FOIA appellants to broaden their requests for information in their appeals. Alan J. White, 17 DOE & 80,117, 80,539 (1988); see also Arthur Scanla, 13 DOE & 80,133 at 80,622 n.2 (1986). Since the Appellant now wishes to obtain information of a broader nature than that which she sought initially, her broadened request constitutes a new request for information. She must therefore file a new request for information with the FPAG in order to obtain the information she is seeking. The Appellant also requests an opportunity for oral argument and an evidentiary hearing. These requests are denied. The DOE FOIA Regulations contain no provision for hearings during the adjudication of an administrative appeal.

types of information agencies are not required to release. Exemptions 6, 7(A), 7(C) and 7(D) are at issue in the present case.

Exemption 7(A)

The Determination Letter withheld the entire case file of a pending IG investigation under Exemption 7(A). The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, i.e., as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982); Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Williams v. IRS, 479 F.2d 317, 318 (3d Cir. 1973), cert. denied sub nom. Donolon v. IRS, 414 U.S. 1024 (1973). In order to withhold information under Exemption 7, an organization must have statutory authority to enforce a violation of a law or regulation within its authority. Church of Scientology v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 748 (9th Cir. 1979) (remanding to Naval Investigative Service to show that investigation involved enforcement of statute or regulation within its authority). By law, the IG is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. The IG is, therefore, a classic example of an organization with a law enforcement mandate. In the present case the IG's investigatory actions were clearly within this statutory mandate.

Determining the applicability of Exemption 7(A) in particular requires a two-step analysis focusing on (1) whether a law enforcement proceeding is pending and (2) whether release of information about it could reasonably be expected to cause some foreseeable harm to the pending enforcement proceeding. See Miller v. USDA, 13 F.3d 260, 263 (8th Cir. 1993) (agency must make a specific showing of why disclosure of documents could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings); Crooker v. ATF, 789 F.2d 64, 65-67 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (agency had failed to demonstrate that disclosure would interfere with enforcement proceedings); Grasso v. IRS, 785 F.2d 70, 77 (3d Cir. 1986) ("government must show, by more than conclusory statement, how the particular kinds of investigatory records requested would interfere with a pending enforcement proceeding").

In applying these standards in the past, the courts have found that agencies are not required to make a particularized, case-by-case showing of interference with their investigations. Rather, a generic determination of likely interference is sufficient. See Murray, Jacobs & Abel, 25 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1995) (Murray); NRLB v. Robbins Tire and Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 224 (1978); Crancer v. Department of Justice, 999 F.2d 1302, 1306 (8th Cir. 1993). It is important to note that even though an agency "need not justify its withholding on a document-by-document basis in court, [it] must itself review each document to determine the category in which it properly belongs." Bevis v. Department of State, 801 F.2d 1386, 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Bevis). Thus, when an agency elects to use the "generic" approach, it "has a three-fold task. First, it must define its categories functionally. Second, it must conduct a document-by-document review in order to assign the documents to the proper category. Finally, it must explain how the release of each category would interfere with enforcement proceedings." Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389-90; Murray, 25 DOE at 80,576.

Both the statute and the DOE's FOIA regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for any withholdings. 5 U.S.C. ' 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE & 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE & 80,118 (1979). A reasonably specific justification of a withholding allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE & 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE & 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Turning to the present appeal, we find that the IG has provided a sufficient description of the withheld records. The determination letter indicates that the information withheld under Exemption 7(A) is the case file for a currently pending IG investigation. Determination Letter at 1. The IG states, "The material that is withheld under Exemption 7(A) includes documents pertaining to an ongoing investigation and includes case processing forms, memorandum of interviews and investigative activity." Determination Letter at 1.

The determination letter also provides a sufficient articulation of the harm that could reasonably be expected to occur if the withheld information was released. Specifically the determination letter notes that:

> Release of the withheld material at this time could prematurely reveal evidence and interfere with the ongoing enforcement proceeding. . . . [R]elease could tend to prematurely disclose enforcement efforts, or provide individuals involved in the investigation an opportunity to fabricate defenses, destroy evidence, intimidate actual or potential witnesses, or otherwise impede an appropriate resolution of the investigation.

Determination Letter at 2. Since we agree with the reasoning set forth by the IG in its determination letter, we find that the IG has properly withheld the information under Exemption 7(A).

Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

The IG has found a privacy interest in the identities of the individuals whose names have been withheld. The Determination letter states in pertinent part:

> Names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals have been withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Individuals involved in the OIG enforcement matter, which in this case includes witnesses, sources of information, and other individuals, are entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions.

Determination Letter at 2. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals whose names are contained in investigative files. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (finding that withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985). Accordingly, we have followed the courts' lead. James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1990). Therefore, we find that release of the individuals' identities would result in significant invasions of privacy.

In Reporters Committee, the Supreme Court narrowed the scope of the public interest in the context of the FOIA. The Court found that only information which contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the Government is within "the ambit of the public interest which the FOIA was enacted to serve." Id. The Court therefore found that unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also National Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990). We fail to see how release of the identities of individuals in the present case would inform the public about the operations and activities of Government. Accordingly, we find that there is little or no public interest in disclosure of the individuals' identities.

After weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against an insubstantial or non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing an individual's identity would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Accordingly, we find that the identities of the individuals were properly withheld under Exemptions 6 and 7(C). See, e.g., Tod Rockefeller, 26 DOE ¶ 80,238 (1997).

Exemption 7(D)

Finally, the IG has withheld information under Exemption 7(D), claiming that (1) release of this information would reveal confidential sources, or (2) the information was supplied by confidential sources. Determination Letter at 2. Exemption 7(D) allows for the withholding of "Records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes [which] could reasonably be expected to disclose the identity of a confidential source . . . [or] information furnished by a confidential source." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(D) (1994). "Exemption 7(D) is meant to (1) protect confidential sources from retaliation that may result from the disclosure of their participation in law enforcement activities, s*ee Brant Construction v. United States EPA*, 778 F.2d 1258, 1262 (7th Cir. 1985), and (2) "encourage cooperation with law enforcement agencies by enabling the agencies to keep their informants' identities confidential." United Technologies Corp. v. NLRB, 777 F.2d 90, 94 (2d Cir. 1985)." Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732 (2d Cir. 1995) (Ortiz). As the court stated in Ortiz: "[A] source is confidential within the meaning of Exemption 7(D) if the source "provided information under an express assurance of confidentiality or in circumstances from which such an assurance could be reasonably inferred." Id., citing United States v. Landano, 508 U.S. 165; 113 S. Ct. 2014, 2019 (1993).

After conducting an in-person review of the information that the IG withheld under exemption 7(D), we are assured that the information was supplied by confidential sources and that its release would identify those confidential sources. Accordingly, we find that the information withheld by the IG under this exemption was properly withheld.

For the reasons set forth above, we have found that the Office of Inspector General's withholdings under Exemptions 6, 7(A), 7(C) and 7(D) were appropriate.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Dorothy Pritchett on August 2, 2005, Case Number TFA-0112, is hereby denied.

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Joseph M. Santos

Date of Filing: August 5, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0113

This decision concerns an Appeal that Joseph M. Santos (Appellant) filed on August 5, 2005. The Appellant submitted a request for information to the Department of Energy's (DOE) FOIA and Privacy Act Group (FPAG) seeking copies of all e-mails, records, and other documents in the possession of Ray Madden.[1] The FPAG referred Appellant's request to the Office of Inspector General (IG). On July 26, 2005, the IG issued a Determination Letter in response to Appellant's request. The IG's determination identified four case files as being responsive to the Appellant's request. With respect to three of the case files, the IG withheld significant portions of this information under FOIA Exemptions 5, 6, and 7(C). The IG stated that the other case file remained open at the time, and therefore the documents were being withheld in their entirety pursuant to FOIA Exemption 7(A). On August 5, 2005, the Appellant filed the present Appeal, contending that the IG's withholding of the information was improper.

While the FOIA generally requires that information held by government agencies be released to the public upon request, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA, which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Exemptions 5, 6, 7(A), and 7(C) and are at issue in the present case.

Exemption 7(A)

The Determination Letter withheld the entire case file of a pending IG investigation under Exemption 7(A). The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, i.e., as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982); Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Williams v. IRS, 479 F.2d 317, 318 (3d Cir. 1973), cert. denied sub nom. Donolon v. IRS, 414 U.S. 1024 (1973). In order to withhold information under Exemption 7, an organization must have statutory authority to enforce a violation of a law or regulation within its authority. Church of Scientology v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 748 (9th Cir. 1979) (remanding to Naval Investigative Service to show that investigation involved enforcement of statute or regulation within its authority). By law, the IG is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. The IG is, therefore, a classic example of an organization with a law enforcement mandate. See Dorothy Pritchett, 20 DOE ¶ 80,224 (2005). In the present case the IG's investigatory actions were clearly within this statutory mandate.

Determining the applicability of Exemption 7(A) in particular requires a two-step analysis focusing on (1) whether a law enforcement proceeding is pending and (2) whether release of information about it could reasonably be expected to cause some foreseeable harm to the pending enforcement proceeding. See Miller v. USDA, 13 F.3d 260, 263 (8th Cir. 1993) (agency must make a specific showing of why disclosure of documents could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings); Crooker v. ATF, 789 F.2d 64, 65-67 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (agency had failed to demonstrate that disclosure would interfere with enforcement proceedings); Grasso v. IRS, 785 F.2d 70, 77 (3d Cir. 1986) ("government must show, by more than conclusory statement, how the particular kinds of investigatory records requested would interfere with a pending enforcement proceeding").

In applying these standards in the past, the courts have found that agencies are not required to make a particularized, case-by-case showing of interference with their investigations. Rather, a generic determination of likely interference is sufficient. See Murray, Jacobs & Abel, 25 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1995) (Murray); NRLB v. Robbins Tire and Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 224 (1978); Crancer v. Department of Justice, 999 F.2d 1302, 1306 (8th Cir. 1993). It is important to note that even though an agency "need not justify its withholding on a document-by-document basis in court, [it] must itself review each document to determine the category in which it properly belongs." Bevis v. Department of State, 801 F.2d 1386, 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Bevis). Thus, when an agency elects to use the "generic" approach, it "has a three-fold task. First, it must define its categories functionally. Second, it must conduct a document-by-document review in order to assign the documents to the proper category. Finally, it must explain how the release of each category would interfere with enforcement proceedings." Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389-90; Murray, 25 DOE at 80,576.

Both the statute and the DOE's FOIA regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for any withholdings. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). A reasonably specific justification of a withholding allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Turning to the present appeal, we find that the IG has provided a sufficient description of the withheld records. The determination letter indicates that the information withheld under Exemption 7(A) is the case file for a currently pending IG investigation. Determination Letter at 1. The IG states, "The material that is withheld under Exemption 7(A) includes documents pertaining to an ongoing investigation and includes case processing forms, memorandum of interviews and investigative activity." Determination Letter at 1.

The determination letter also provides a sufficient articulation of the harm that could reasonably be expected to occur if the withheld information was released. Specifically the determination letter notes that:

> Release of the withheld material at this time could prematurely reveal evidence and interfere with the ongoing enforcement proceeding. . . .

Determination Letter at 2. Since we agree with the reasoning set forth by the IG in its determination letter, we find that the IG has properly withheld the information under Exemption 7(A). We turn next to the information withheld from the other three case files.

Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

The IG has found a privacy interest in the identities of the individuals whose names have been withheld. The Determination letter states in pertinent part:

> Names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals have been withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Individuals involved in the OIG enforcement matter, which in this case includes witnesses, sources of information, and other individuals, are entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions.

Determination Letter at 2. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals whose names are contained in investigative files. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (finding that withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985). Accordingly, we have followed the courts' lead. James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1990). Therefore, we find that release of the individuals' identities would result in significant invasions of privacy.

In Reporters Committee, the Supreme Court narrowed the scope of the public interest in the context of the FOIA. The Court found that only information which contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the Government is within "the ambit of the public interest which the FOIA was enacted to serve." Id. The Court therefore found that unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also National Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990). We fail to see how release of the identities of individuals in the present case would inform the public about the operations and activities of Government. Accordingly, we find that there is little or no public interest in disclosure of the individuals' identities.

After weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against an insubstantial or non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing an individual's identity would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Accordingly, we find that the identities of individuals were properly withheld under Exemptions 6 and 7(C). See, e.g., Tod Rockefeller, 26 DOE ¶ 80,238 (1997).

Finally, the IG has withheld information under Exemption 5. Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (*Sea*rs). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). In withholding portions of document from the Appellant, the IG relied upon both the "deliberative process" privilege and the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150.

It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. V. United States, 157 F.Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)) (Mink). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

The attorney-client privilege exists to protect confidential communications between attorneys and their clients made for the purpose of security or providing legal advice. Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (Mead); California Edison, 28 DOE ¶ 80,173 (2001) (California Edison). The privilege covers facts divulged by a client to his or her attorney, and also covers opinions that the attorney gives the client based upon those facts. Mead, 566 F.2d at 254n.25. The privilege permits nondisclosure of an attorney's opinion or advice in order to protect the secrecy of the underlying facts. Id. at 254 n.28. Not all communications between an attorney and client are privileged, however. Clark v. American Commerce National Bank, 974 F.2d 127 (9th Cir. 1992). The privilege is limited to those disclosures necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 96 S. Ct. 1569, 1577 (1976). The privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. California Edison, 28 DOE at 80,665. "Where the client is an organization, the privilege extends to those communications between attorneys and all agents or employees of the organization who are authorized to act or speak for the organization in relation to the subject matter of the communication." Mead, 566 F.2d at 253 n. 24.

After reviewing the requested documents at issue, we have concluded that the determination made by the IG in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from the Appellant is contained in hotline complaint forms and memorandum of records which were prepared by DOE employees and intended only for internal DOE use. This information properly falls within the definition of "intra-agency memoranda" in the FOIA. In addition, the information withheld under Exemption 5 is clearly predecisional and deliberative. The information reflects the advisory opinions by subordinates in the IG and does not represent final agency positions. Accordingly, we find that these advisory opinions contained in the documents at issue meet all the requirements for withholding material under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege. Likewise, the information was also properly withheld under the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5. The document at issue contains legal opinions and advice sought by IG Hotline employees from IG's Counsel. [2] For the reasons set forth above, we have found that the Office of Inspector General's withholdings under Exemptions 5, 6, 7(A) and 7(C) were appropriate.

[2] The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t[o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the withheld material in the documents at issue, which consist solely of advisory opinions and recommendations provided to DOE in the consultative process. The release of both the deliberative material and the

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: James Salsman

Date of Filing: August 17, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0114

On August 17, 2005, James Salsman (Salsman) filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on August 5, 2005, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Chicago Operations Office (CO). In that determination, CO denied a request for a waiver of fees in connection with a request Salsman submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would overturn CO's determination and waive in full the fees associated with his request.

I. Background

Salsman filed a request under the FOIA for "all records of funds appropriated, budgeted, allocated, committed, programmed, expended, encumbered, utilized, or spent for the purposes of determining the full toxicological profile of uranium, uranium compounds, or uranium combustion products." Letter from Linda M. Rohde, Freedom of Information Officer, to James Salsman (July 7, 2005). Salsman planned to include this information in a Petition for Rulemaking he submitted to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC).

In his FOIA request, Salsman also requested a fee waiver for the costs associated with processing the request. In its August 5, 2005 determination letter, CO denied a fee waiver. Letter from Linda M. Rohde, Freedom of Information Officer, CO, to James Salsman (August 5, 2005) (Determination Letter). CO denied the request for a waiver because Salsman did not "demonstrate how [he] will disseminate the information to the general public." Id.

Salsman filed the present appeal on August 17, 2005. Letter from James Salsman to OHA (August 8, 2005) (Appeal Letter). In his appeal, Salsman states the requested information will be disseminated to the public because it is the practice of the NRC to publish all comments it receives on its website.[1] Therefore, he says, "publication will occur." Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and, (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8).

In analyzing the public-interest prong of the two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

Factor A

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-1483 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994). In the present case, there appears to be no dispute that the requested information – records of funds appropriated, budgeted, allocated, committed, programmed, expended, encumbered, utilized, or spent for the purposes of determining the full toxicological profile of uranium, uranium compounds, or uranium combustion products – concerns activities or operations of the government. Therefore, we find that Salsman's request satisfies Factor A.

[1] The website referred to in the Appeal Letter is ruleforum.llnl.gov. It is a webpage on the NRC's website that allows users to submit comments electronically, rather than by regular mail.

Factor B

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). This factor focuses on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997); Seehuus Associates, 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) ("If the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate.").

In the present case, it is unclear whether the requested information is already publicly available. However, given the nature of the information requested – records regarding funds allocated for determining the toxicological profile of uranium and other uranium products – and because we have no evidence that the information is already publicly available, we will assume that the information is not already in the public domain. Therefore, we find that Salsman has satisfied Factor B.

Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding individually of the requester or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. Department of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992). In the present case, it is not disputed that Salsman intends to disseminate the requested information to the public. However, CO determined that Salsman did not establish his ability to disseminate the information.

We find that Salsman has not provided adequate evidence of his ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Salsman contends that publication of the requested information will occur because he plans to include the requested information in a comment he will submit to the NRC and it is the practice of the NRC to place all comments it receives on its website. This falls short of the proof required to establish a requester's ability to disseminate responsive information to the public. We have previously held that a plan to place information on the internet is a passive method of placing the information in the public domain, compared to, for example, including the information in a newsletter or in printed articles and, therefore, falls short of the showing necessary to satisfy Factor C. See Donald R. Patterson, 28 DOE ¶ 80,107 (2000); see also STAND, 27 DOE ¶ 80,250 (1999). In this case, Salsman's plan is an even more passive method of disseminating the requested information to the public because he is relying on a third-party, the NRC, to post the information on its website. Salsman has no control over whether the information actually gets posted and, therefore, disseminated to the public. In fact, under the federal Administrative Procedure Act, the NRC is not obligated to publish every comment it receives; rather it is required only to address every issue raised by those comments. See 5 U.S.C. §553(c). Consequently, we find that Salsman has not satisfied Factor C.

Factor D

Under Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 381 (1995)).

In the present case, it remains unclear to what extent the public's understanding is likely to be enhanced by the disclosure of the information. However, we need not reach the issue because the inability to disseminate the information to the public is, in itself, a sufficient basis for denying a fee waiver request. See Donald R. Patterson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,267 at 80,927 (2000) (citing Larson v. CIA, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988)).

III. Conclusion

As the foregoing indicates, Salsman has failed to adequately demonstrate his ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Therefore, we find that Salsman has not shown that disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. Because Salsman has not satisfied the public-interest prong of the test set forth in the FOIA and in the DOE regulations concerning fee waivers, we need not address the commercial-interest prong of that test. Accordingly, the appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on August 17, 2005 by James Salsman, OHA Case No. TFA-0114, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Security Archive

Date of Filing: August 16, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0115

The National Security Archive filed an Appeal from a determination that the Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Group (FOIA/PA) of the Department of Energy issued on August 2, 2005. In that determination, FOIA/PA denied a request for information that the Appellant submitted to the DOE pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. FOIA/PA located one document that was responsive to the National Security Archive's request, which it withheld in its entirety. FOIA/PA determined that the withheld document contained classified information and that removal of the classified information from those documents would result in the release of no meaningful information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release that document.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On August 7, 1996, the National Security Archive requested intelligence reports produced by the Atomic Energy Commission about a possible Chinese nuclear weapons test from 1964. After considerable involvement of the History and Archives Group of the Office of the Executive Secretariat and the Office of Classified and Controlled Information Review, FOIA/PA responded to the request by informing the National Security Archive that it had located one responsive document, a memorandum to Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Glenn T. Seaborg, dated November 19, 1964, concerning the Chinese nuclear weapons test in October 1964. In its determination letter, FOIA/PA explained that the responsive document contained information properly classified as National Security Information pursuant to Executive Order 12958 and information properly classified as Restricted Data pursuant to the Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2161-2166, therefore warranting protection from disclosure under Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA. Finally, the determination letter stated that there was unclassified material in the document that was inextricably intertwined with the classified information. It further stated that "[t]he release of the information remaining after removal of the classified information, therefore, would not provide any meaningful information."

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the responsive document. In its Appeal, the National Security Archive sought further review of the document to determine "whether some information may be released without violating statutory requirements or harming national security," particularly in light of previously declassified information regarding this same test.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12958 is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification, declassification and safeguarding of national security information. When properly classified under this Executive Order, national security information is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1.

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., Michael J. Ravnitzky, 29 DOE ¶ 80,208 (2005).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). As the result of reorganization within the Department, this function is now the responsibility of the Deputy Director of the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance (Deputy Director). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Director reviewed the document the DOE had withheld in its entirety.

According to the Deputy Director, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the material the DOE withheld from the document may now be released. The information that the DOE continues to withhold falls into two categories. Some of it concerns intelligence sources or methods, which is currently classified as National Security Information (NSI) under section 1.4(c) of Executive Order 12958, as amended by Executive Order 13292, and is identified as "DOE b(1)" in the margin of a redacted version of this document, which will be provided to the Appellant under separate cover. Because NSI is defined as classified information in Executive Order 12958, it is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA. Other information in this document that the DOE continues to withhold concerns nuclear weapons design that is currently classified as Restricted Data (RD) and is identified as "DOE b(3)" in the margin of the document. RD is a form of classified information the withholding of which is required under Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3.

The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Director, Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Director's review, we have determined that Executive Order 12958 and the Atomic Energy Act require DOE to continue withholding portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemptions 1 and 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Deputy Director has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Accordingly, the Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the National Security Archive on August 16, 2005, Case No. TFA-0115, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A newly redacted version of the memorandum to Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Glenn T. Seaborg, dated November 19, 1964, concerning the Chinese nuclear test in October 1964, will be provided to the National Security Archive.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Joseph T. Maddox
Date of Filing:	August 19, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0116

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Joseph T. Maddox in response to a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge). In that determination, Oak Ridge replied to a request for documents that Mr. Maddox submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Oak Ridge stated that no documents responsive to Mr. Maddox's request could be located. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Oak Ridge conduct another search.

In his FOIA request, Mr. Maddox sought access to medical, payroll, personnel, radiation exposure and industrial hygiene records pertaining to the employment of his father, Jesse H. Maddox, as a sheet metal worker at the Portsmouth, Ohio Gaseous Diffusion Plant. [*] As previously indicated, Oak Ridge replied that a search of its facilities failed to produce any responsive documents. In his Appeal, Mr. Maddox challenges the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

*/ In his request, Mr. Maddox did not identify his father's employer or provide dates of employment. However, in a September 9, 2005 telephone conversation with Robert Palmer of this Office, he said that he believed that his father worked at the Portsmouth plant from the early 1950s to the mid-1960s or early 1970s. See memorandum of September 9, 2005 telephone conversation between Mr. Maddox and Mr. Palmer.

In order to ascertain the scope of the search that was performed, we contacted Oak Ridge, which is the DOE Office that oversees the Portsmouth facility. We were informed that a computerized search of databases maintained by Oak Ridge and by the East Tennessee Technology Park (which is comprised of the former K-25 plant and other facilities involved in nuclear weapons production) utilizing the elder Maddox's name and social security number was performed for each category of records requested. Mr. Maddox's request was also referred to United States Enrichment Corporation, the Management and Operations contractor at the Portsmouth Gaseous Diffusion Plant, and Bechtel Jacobs Company, another Portsmouth contractor, for searches of their records. No responsive documents were identified in any of these searches. See memorandum of September 14, 2005 telephone conversation between Leah Ann Schmidlin, Oak Ridge and Mr. Palmer. Based on the information provided to us, we conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to produce the requested documents, and was therefore adequate. We will therefore deny Mr. Maddox's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Joseph T. Maddox, Case Number TFA-0116, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Holmes & Narver, Inc.

Date of Filing: August 25, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0117

On August 25, 2005, Holmes & Narver, Inc. (Holmes) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on July 28, 2005, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque (NNSA). In that determination, NNSA responded to a request for a document that Holmes submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA released the document but withheld most of the information contained therein pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release the withheld information to Holmes.

I. Background

On July 27, 2005, Holmes requested from NNSA one document entitled "SURF Lessons Learned Documentation." On July 28, 2005, NNSA released the "publicly available" version of the document to Holmes. Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, NNSA, to Robyn L. Miller, Holmes (July 28, 2005) (Determination Letter). However, most of the information in the document was withheld. The original Determination Letter did not contain a justification for withholding the information in the document. In a subsequent determination letter, NNSA justified most of the withholdings under FOIA Exemption 5, by stating:

> The withheld information contains the opinions and recommendations of reviewers as to why this project was cancelled. Their opinions and recommendations were provided for the purpose of determining how processes for future projects of this kind might be improved. Their opinions and recommendations are the analyses of the reviewers and release of their candid appraisals would have a chilling effect on such evaluations in the future.

Letter from Tracy L. Loughead, NNSA, to Robyn Miller, Holmes (August 30, 2005) (Supplemental Determination Letter). NNSA further stated that, pursuant to FOIA Exemption 6, the names of employees were withheld because, "[a]s the release of contractor employees…would not reveal anything of significance to the public and might cause inevitable harassment, the interest in protecting against the invasion of the individual's privacy far outweighs the public interest in such disclosure." Supplemental Determination Letter.

Holmes filed the present appeal on August 25, 2005 and supplemented its appeal on September 12, 2005. Letter from Robyn L. Miller, Holmes, to Samuel W. Bodman, Secretary of Energy (August 18, 2005); Letter from Robyn L. Miller, Holmes, to OHA (September 12, 2005).

II. Analysis

Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency" memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated, under the deliberative process privilege. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

After reviewing the document at issue, we have concluded that the determination made by NNSA in applying Exemption 5 was correct. The withheld information consists of comments, recommendations and opinions prepared by DOE employees and intended only for internal DOE use; therefore, the requested document falls within the definition of "intra-agency memoranda" in the FOIA. In addition, the comments, recommendations, and opinions withheld are clearly predecisional and deliberative. They were generated following the cancellation of a particular program in order to develop improved processes for implementing similar projects in the future. Accordingly, we hold that the comments, recommendations, and opinions withheld from the requested document meet the requirements for withholding material under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. [1]

Segregability of Non-Exempt Information

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, material need not be segregated and released when the exempt and nonexempt material are so "inextricably intertwined" that release of the nonexempt material would compromise the exempt material, or where nonexempt material is so small and interspersed with exempt material that it would pose "an inordinate burden" to segregate it. Lead Industries Assoc. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2nd Cir. 1979).

[1] Names were withheld from the document under Exemption 6. However, Holmes is not challenging that withholding and, therefore, we need not reach the issue of whether Exemption 6 was properly applied to the names.

In this case, the document consists almost entirely of exempt comments, opinions, and recommendations. NNSA released the title page, the table of contents, and the first paragraph of page one of the document. However, our review of this document finds that it contains some factual information that appears to be reasonably segregable from the exempt portions of the document. For example, sentence one of paragraph two on page one and sentence one of paragraph three on page two appear to be factual statements. Also, NNSA redacted the section headings despite the fact that the table of contents, with those same section headings, was not withheld. Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to NNSA. On remand, NNSA must review the document and segregate and release all purely factual portions, or issue a new determination that justifies withholding the factual portions of the document.

This Decision and Order has been reviewed by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), which has determined that, in the absence of an appeal or upon conclusion of an unsuccessful appeal, the Decision and Order shall be implemented by each affected NNSA element, official, or employee, and by each affected contractor.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on August 25, 2005 by Holmes & Narver, Inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0117, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:

Date of Filing: August 29, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0118

On August 29, 2005, XXXXX filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on July 21, 2005, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (OR) in response to a request for documents that XXXXX submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland release any responsive material to XXXXX.

I. Background

In a FOIA request, XXXXX sought "all notes, papers, records of phone calls, interview records, e-mails, investigative reports and/or complaints pertaining to the late April or early May complaints filed by Dr. Thomas Fogwell" against XXXXX with the Richland Employee Concerns Program. Letter from Richland to XXXXX (July 21, 2005) (Determination Letter). Richland responded that it could neither confirm nor deny the existence of records responsive to the request. An agency's statement in response to a FOIA request that it can neither confirm nor deny the existence of records is commonly called a "Glomar" response, referring to the first instance in which a federal court upheld the adequacy of such a response. Phillippi v. CIA, 546 F.2d 1009 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (agency responded to a request for documents pertaining to a ship named the "Hughes Glomar Explorer" by neither confirming nor denying the existence of any such documents). Richland went on to state that without the consent of Dr. Fogwell, "even to acknowledge the existence of records would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA." Id. XXXXX then appealed the determination. If this Appeal were granted, Richland would be required to release the requested information, if it exists.

II. Analysis

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Further, the term "similar files" has been interpreted broadly by the Supreme Court to include all information that "applies to a particular individual." Washington Post, 456 U.S. at 602. Accordingly, Richland neither confirmed nor denied the existence of any records responsive to XXXXX's request because without the consent of Dr. Fogwell, "even to acknowledge the existence of records would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA." Determination at 1.

A Glomar response is justified when the confirmation of the existence of certain records would itself reveal exempt information. William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,161 (1997) (quoting Antonelli v. F.B.I., 721 F.2d 615 (7th Cir. 1983)). If the responsive material existed, it would fall within the purview of the types of files exempt from disclosure under Exemption 6. However, if Richland withholds these records, it would be an acknowledgment that the material exists. Thus, Richland properly applied the Glomar response. The danger of disclosing such information is accurately described in Payne:

> "Lacking evidence of an individual's consent, an official acknowledgment of an investigation by the agency, or an overriding public interest in the information, even to acknowledge the existence of such records pertaining to any named individual could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Richland stated that in invoking Exemption 6, it considered: 1) whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by disclosure of information, 2) whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations or activities of the government, and 3) whether in balancing the private interest against the public interest, disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy. Electronic mail message from Dorothy Riehle, Richland, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (September 21, 2005). According to Richland, the release of such information, if it exists, would not contribute significantly to the public's understanding of Richland's operations and does not outweigh Dr. Fogwell's privacy interests.

XXXXX argues that releasing the information is in the public interest because it would allow him to effectively conduct contractor oversight and determine whether the contractor serves the best interest of the taxpayer. We disagree and find that release of this information, if it exists, is of minimal public interest and is clearly outweighed by the privacy interest of Dr. Fogwell.

In conclusion, we find that Richland was justified in providing a Glomar response to the FOIA request because the confirmation of the existence of such records would itself reveal exempt information. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Kevin XXXXX on August 29, 2005, OHA Case Number TFA-0118, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Public Utility District No. 1

Date of Filing: September 13, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0119

On September 13, 2005, Public Utility District No. 1 of Snohomish County, Washington (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on August 9, 2005. In the determination, BPA partially denied the Appellant's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the information it withheld and grant a fee waiver to the Appellant.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. BACKGROUND

In a letter dated November 16, 2004, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to BPA for documents including "[a]ll comments received by BPA relating to the 2004 Transmission – Policy Level Environmental Impact Statement (EIS); and . . . [a]ll internal communications, whether written or electronic, relating to BPA's decision to suspend work on the 2004 Transmission – Policy Level EIS." Request Letter dated November 16, 2004, from Michael A. Goldfarb, Attorney for Appellant, to Ms Annie Eissler, BPA. On June 1, 2005, BPA responded, stating that it was enclosing all documents in their entirety responsive to the request. Determination Letter dated June 1, 2005, from Annie Eissler to Michael A. Goldfarb.

On July 6, 2005, the Appellant filed an Appeal of the June 1, 2005 Determination with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the DOE. Shortly thereafter on August 9, 2005, BPA withdrew its June 1, 2005 Determination and issued a new determination. Determination Letter dated August 9, 2005, from Annie Eissler to Michael A. Goldfarb. In that Determination, BPA enclosed all documents that it had identified as responsive to the first part of the Appellant's request. It also released all documents responsive to the second part of the Appellant's request, but these documents were heavily redacted. BPA relied on Exemption 5 of the FOIA to make these redactions. August 9, 2005 Determination Letter at 1.

In its Appeal, the Appellant disputes the withholding of information under Exemption 5. First, the Appellant argues that because BPA disclosed some of its internal communications relating to its decision to terminate the EIS, it has waived the privilege as to any additional similar communications. Appeal Letter dated September 12, 2005, from Michael Goldfarb to Director, OHA, at 2. Second, the Appellant argues that both it and the public have a right to any information pertaining to BPA's decision not to perform an environmental assessment. Id. at 2. The Appellant then goes on to argue that it wishes to challenge BPA's fee estimate as excessive. Further, because it is a municipal corporation, it claims the fees should be reduced. Id. at 3.

II. ANALYSIS

Deliberative Process and Predecisional Documents

Exemption 5 of the FOIA protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). Included within the scope of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

In addition, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

There are, however, exceptions to these general rules that factual information should be released. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications. Corp. v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

BPA has provided to the OHA copies of the documents that it released to the Appellant in redacted form. We have reviewed these documents and believe that they were properly redacted under Exemption 5. We have determined that BPA released the factual portions of these documents to the Appellant. The Appellant's first argument is that because BPA released a portion of its internal communications, all similar communications should be released. This argument does not apply to the facts in this case. In Smith v. Alyeska Pipeline Serv., 538 F. Supp. 977 (D.C. Del. 1982), the court stated that "if a client chooses to disclose some privileged communications between the attorney and himself, then he waives the remainder of the communications which related to the same subject matter." Id. at 979 (emphasis added). We have reviewed the information that BPA redacted and it does not relate to the same subject matter as the information that BPA released in its discretion; that is, it does not discuss BPA's decision to suspend work on the 2004 Transmission Policy EIS.

The Appellant's second argument is that it and its customers have a right to any information pertaining to BPA's decision not to perform an environmental assessment. Essentially, the Appellant is arguing that discretionary release would be in the public interest. Appeal Letter at 2. We disagree. The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the comments and opinions contained in the documents, which contain deliberative material. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Public Utility District No. 1, 28 DOE ¶ 80,241 (2002); Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987).

Fees

In its Appeal, the Appellant challenges BPA's fee estimate as excessive. In addition, the Appellant claims that because it is a municipal corporation and is a not-for-profit, publicly owned utility, its request is not for a use or purpose that furthers a commercial, trade, or profit interest. Therefore, it argues that its request is not for commercial use and BPA's fees must be limited to "reasonable standard charges for document search and duplication" but not for document review. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(4)(A)(ii)(III); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b)(4). We contacted BPA to determine whether the Appellant had raised this issue before it. We were informed that it had not. Therefore, we will remand this part of the Appeal to BPA, so BPA can consider the Appellant's request.

III. CONCLUSION

BPA properly withheld the redacted material under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege. Therefore, this part of the Appeal will be denied. We will remand the matter to BPA so that it can consider the Appellant's claim that its request is not for commercial use, and therefore, fees must be limited to standard charges for document search and duplication.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Public Utility District No. 1 on September 13, 2005, Case No. TFA-0119, is hereby denied in part and granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Joseph K. Huffman

Date of Filing: September 15, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0120

On September 15, 2005, Joseph K. Huffman filed an Appeal, through his attorney, from a determination issued to him on August 16, 2005, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Pacific Northwest Site Office (PNSO). That determination concerned a request for information that Mr. Huffman submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, PNSO would be ordered to release the requested information.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On July 21, 2005, Mr. Huffman filed a FOIA request seeking the following information pertaining to him:

> 1) complete personnel file including all performance reviews and goals and awards;
> 2) complete DOE personnel security file;
> 3) complete records of the investigation which led to my termination. Including, but not limited to, emails, memos, and meeting notes between investigators, human resources, supervisors, and co-workers;
> 4) copies of all printouts from your web site present at any meetings regarding the investigation(s) and termination of my employment;
> 5) details of why the investigation was started; and > 6) complete copy of Pacific Northwest National Laboratory's (PNNL) policies and procedures.

See August 16, 2005 Determination Letter.

In its August 16, 2005 determination letter, PNSO responded to his information request. PNSO stated that Mr. Huffman's DOE personnel security file is maintained by DOE's Chicago Office, Safeguards and Security Services. It stated his request was forwarded to that office to complete a search for that information. Regarding his personnel file, PNSO informed Mr. Huffman that he was already provided with a copy of his official personnel file on June 21, 2005, and therefore a second copy was not provided. With respect to PNNL Policies and Procedures, PNSO withheld these documents pursuant to Exemptions 2 and 4 of the FOIA. Id. Finally, regarding the balance of the request, PNSO stated that no responsive documents existed in that the requested records are non-agency (contractor-owned) records. PNSO further stated that according to DOE's contract with Battelle, most employment-related records are considered contractor-owned records, and therefore are not subject to the FOIA or Privacy Act.

On September 15, 2005, Mr. Huffman filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Huffman challenges PNSO's withholding of PNNL Policies and Procedures under Exemptions 2 and 4 of the FOIA . He asserts that even if some of this information "can arguably be owned by Battelle (the contractor that operates PNNL) not all of it would cause harm to the contractor by its release." See Appeal Letter at 2. He further asserts that the "low two" exemption of the FOIA is not applicable to the request and that "it is inconceivable that the release of all of PNNL Policies and Procedures would cause this harm [harm to agency operations]" pursuant to the "high two" exemption of the FOIA. Id. Lastly, Mr. Huffman challenges PNSO's assertion that the remaining portions of the request (numbers 3, 4, and 5 stated above) are not agency records. Id. Mr. Huffman asks that OHA direct PNSO to release the withheld information.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 2

The courts have interpreted Exemption 2 to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). Some of the information whose withholding is at issue in the present case involves both "low two" and "high two" information. The first category, "low two" information, includes information relating to internal matters of an agency in which the public could not reasonably be expected to have an interest, e.g., information concerning lunch hours or parking regulations. Department of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352 (1976). With respect to the "high two" category, the courts have fashioned a two-prong test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

As an initial matter, it is important to note that the PNNL Policies and Procedures at issue are agency records. Although they affect PNNL operations, they are agency records for purposes of the FOIA because the records were "obtained" by the DOE and were under DOE's control at the time of Mr. Huffman's request.

We have contacted PNSO in order to obtain a fuller explanation of how it believes the "low two" and "high two" exemptions of the FOIA apply to the PNNL Policies and Procedures. With respect to the "low two" exemption, PNSO has indicated that PNNL Policies and Procedures consist of records that describe internal PNNL practices and are drafted to assist employees in carrying out their duties in a safe, secure and compliant manner. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Steve Cooke, Assistant General Counsel, PNNL Legal Department, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (March 13, 2006). PNSO has indicated that the policies and procedures in its web-based Standards Based Management System (SBMS) contain approximately 190 subject areas, with over 2000 web pages and include such "low two" matters as conference room scheduling, letterhead logos, arranging foreign travel and use of security badges. Id. We agree that this information consists of internal matters that are relatively trivial in nature, and therefore find that PNSO properly applied the "low two" exemption to this information. 1/

With respect to its application of the "high two" exemption to the information in question, PNSO has indicated that the non-public policies and procedures in this category are covered by this exemption because they include "a wide range of substantive safeguards and security practices, unclassified computer security, export control, and chemical, biological and criticality safety. These procedures cover much of the Laboratory's critical infrastructure, and making them public increases the risk of harm to system, facility and asset vulnerabilities." Id. We agree that this information is predominantly internal in nature because it is not intended for dissemination outside PNNL and does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public. In addition, disclosure of this information significantly risks circumvention of statutes and agency regulations created to secure the DOE's assets. Accordingly, we find that this information can be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

DOE regulations at 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1 provide that "the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under [a FOIA exemption] whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." Therefore, although we have determined that the deleted information is protected under Exemption 2, we must address whether disclosure of this information is in the public interest. We find that it is not.

As discussed above, the information covered by this category from the PNNL Policies and Procedures relates to safeguards and security practices as well as access control procedures that are password protected and accessible only to staff. The disclosure of this information would reveal agency determinations on safeguards and security practices taken to protect the safety of DOE and contractor personnel and property. Clearly, disclosing such information is not in the public interest as this information could render DOE personnel and facilities vulnerable.

1/ In its determination letter, PNSO stated that a wide range of non-sensitive PNNL Policies and Procedures are publicly accessible on the internet.

B. Exemption 4

PNSO also withheld the non-public portions of the PNNL Policies and Procedures under Exemption 4. Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material requested is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Administration, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criterion. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997), aff'd in part, rev'd in part and remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir. 1999). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(4). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntary or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Using the "competitive harm" prong of the National Parks test, PNSO withheld the non-public PNNL Policies and Procedures. Determination Letter at 2. In its Determination Letter, PNSO indicated that "other competitors could gain insight into Battelle's business practices, which are unique to them and have been developed as part of Battelle's unique approach to managing national laboratories." Id. It further argues that "the result of such a release would place them [Battelle] at a competitive disadvantage by giving their competitors insight into how they do business." Mr. Huffman asserts, inter alia, that not all of the information would cause harm to the contractor by its release. We have contacted PNSO for a fuller explanation of its application of Exemption 4 to the PNNL Policies and Procedures and to further review the comments submitted by the contractor. In the course of these discussions, PNSO reiterated that while PNNL is a federal entity, the manner, methods and approaches that Battelle uses to manage this Laboratory for DOE are matters of a competitive nature. According to the PNNL Legal Department, "Battelle's approach to managing national laboratories is a 'brand' comprised of certain methods, policies, tools and management systems." See Record of Telephone Conversation between Steve Cooke, Assistant General Counsel, PNNL Legal Department and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (March 13, 2006). We agree. The release of the PNNL Policies and Procedures would clearly result in competitive harm to Battelle. Accordingly, we find that PNSO properly applied Exemption 4 to the non-public PNNL Policies and Procedures.

C. Agency Records

Under the FOIA, an "agency record" is a document that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of a FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Clear indications that a document is an "agency record" are when a document of this type is part of an agency file, and when it was used for an agency purpose. Kissinger v. Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 157 (1980); Bureau of National Affairs, Inc. v. Department of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1489-90 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (BNA); J. Eileen Price, 25 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1995) (Price). In making the "agency records" determination, we look at the totality of the circumstances surrounding the creation, maintenance and use of the documents in question. See BNA, 742 F.2d at 1492-93; *Pric*e.

In his Appeal, Mr. Huffman challenges PNSO's claim that the material sought in portions of his request (numbers 3, 4 and 5) are not agency records. He further argues that these records are agency records under the Privacy Act. 2/ We find his arguments to be incorrect and misplaced. In its Determination Letter, PNSO stated that it had no responsive documents with respect to numbers 3, 4, and 5 of Mr. Huffman's request because those documents are not in PNSO's possession. Thus, the documents Mr. Huffman seeks are not in DOE's possession, and therefore are not agency records.

A finding that the items at issue are not agency records, however, does not preclude the DOE from releasing them. "When a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor," unless those records are otherwise exempt from public disclosure. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). PNSO maintains that to the extent the documents exist elsewhere than in DOE's possession, the requested records are non-agency (contractor-owned) records. PNSO notes that "according to DOE's contract with Battelle, most employment-related records are considered contractor-owned records, and therefore, not subject to the FOIA or Privacy Act." Determination Letter at 2. We contacted PNSO and the PNNL Legal Department for further elaboration on their argument. To support its claim that the documents in this category are non-agency records, PNSO directed us to Contract Clause I-81. The pertinent portions as summarized by PNNL are the following:

2/ The definition of agency records is the same under both the FOIA and the Privacy Act.

> Paragraph (a) states that all records acquired or generated by Battelle in the performance of the Contract are government-owned records, except those identified in paragraph (b).
> Paragraph (b), titled Contractor-owned records, states that the following records are considered the property of the Contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a).
> Subsection (b) (1) is titled Employment-related records, and includes workers' compensation files, employee relations records, salary and benefits, drug testing, labor negotiations, ethics, employee concerns, and other employee related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality, EAP records, personnel and medical/health records and similar files (except those in a Privacy Act system of records).
> Subsection (b) (4) includes legal records, litigation files, and attorney-client/attorney work product privileged material. In addition, clause H-32(b) reinforces that Contractor-owned legal records require special handling to preserve privileges and may only be inspected or audited by DOE counsel.

See Record of Telephone Conversation between Steve Cooke, Assistant General Counsel, PNNL Legal Department, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (March 13, 2006). We have independently reviewed the terms of the contract and reach the conclusion that the documents Mr. Huffman seeks are not the property of DOE according to the terms of the DOE-Battelle contract.

Finally, PNNL further stated that in regard to Privacy Act systems of records excepted in paragraph (b)(1), Battelle has identified six in prime contract clause H-15 (five are security related and one concerns personnel radiation exposure). According to PNNL, none apply to Mr. Huffman's request. In regard to records generated during Battelle's investigation of the matters that led to Mr. Huffman's termination (requests numbered 3, 4 and 5), PNNL states that these records are within the scope of Contractor-owned records identified in Contract Clause I-81(b). PNNL further explains that "the investigation was conducted by Battelle's human resources staff, assisted by security staff and line management, and with direction and advice of Battelle legal counsel. The Battelle PARC (Personnel Action Review Committee) decision, and related records, to terminate Mr. Huffman is also covered by I-81(b), as well as potential claims of attorney-client privilege. Moreover, we have been informed that "all of the staff at PNNL are employees of Battelle, and fundamental employment/employee relations decisions are those of the company, not any federal agency." Record of Telephone Conversation between Steve Cooke, Assistant General Counsel, PNNL Legal Department and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (March 13, 2006). Consequently, items 3, 4 and 5 of Mr. Huffman's request do not fall within the Privacy Act systems of records the contents of which are property of the DOE under the terms of the contract.

Accordingly, we have examined the relevant portions of the contract between Battelle and the DOE, and we conclude that documents responsive to items 3, 4 and 5 of Mr. Huffman's request are not agency records and not the property of DOE according to the terms of the DOE-Battelle contract. Therefore, these records are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA, under the Privacy Act, or under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Joseph K. Huffman, OHA Case No. TFA-0120, on September 15, 2005, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Allan C. Harris

Date of Filing: September 23, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0121

On September 23, 2005, Allan C. Harris (Harris) filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on August 22, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (CBC). In that determination, CBC denied a request for a waiver of fees in connection with a request that Harris submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would overturn CBC's determination and waive in full the fees associated with his request.

I. Background

Harris filed a request under the FOIA for "electronic records, with supporting descriptive documents and etc., of all at- and below-grade soil data and all remotely sensed (aerial and/or satellite) data from the U.S. Department of Energy Miamisburg Closure Project and the U.S. Department of Energy Fernald Closure Project." Electronic Mail Message from Harris to Claudia S. Gleicher, CBC (July 12, 2005). According to Harris, he planned to use this information in preparing an unsolicited proposal to the DOE. Id.

In his FOIA request, Harris also requested a fee waiver for the costs associated with processing the request. In its August 22, 2005 determination letter, CBC denied a fee waiver. Letter from Marian Wilcox, Freedom of Information Officer, CBC, to Harris (August 22, 2005) (Determination Letter). CBC determined that "the primary purpose for [Harris'] FOIA request is commercial." Id.

Harris filed the present appeal on September 23, 2005. Letter from Harris to OHA (September 22, 2005) (Appeal Letter). In his appeal, Harris states that the requested information will not be used for commercial activity. Rather, he states, the information will be used "to implement a Stakeholder Environmental Management System (SEMS)" and to develop educational research courses. Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations of the government; and, (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8).

A. Whether Requested Information Is In the Public Interest

In analyzing the public-interest prong of the two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

1. Factor A

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-1483 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994). In the present case, there appears to be no dispute that the requested information – electronic records, with supporting descriptive documents, etc., of all at- and below-grade soil data and all remotely sensed (aerial and/or satellite) data from the U.S. Department of Energy Miamisburg Closure Project and the U.S. Department of Energy Fernald Closure Project – concerns activities or operations of the government. Therefore, we find that Harris' request satisfies Factor A.

2. Factor B

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). This factor focuses on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997); Seehuus Associates, 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) ("If the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate.").

In the present case, CBC has been informed us that the requested information is not already publicly available. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Marian Wilcox, CBC FOIA/PA Officer, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 3, 2005). Therefore, we find that Harris has satisfied Factor B.

3. Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding individually of the requester or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. Department of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992). In the present case, Harris states that, in addition to aiding in his preparation for an unsolicited proposal to DOE, the requested information will be used to create educational courses and will assist the DOE in various ways. CBC determined that Harris' primary intention in making the request was not directed at contributing to the general public's understanding of government operations, but rather was to assist him in preparing an unsolicited proposal to the DOE. See Appeal Letter. Furthermore, CBC determined that, even if the request were directed at contributing to the public's understanding of government operations, Harris did not adequately demonstrate an ability to disseminate the information. Id.

We agree with CBC that Harris has not provided adequate evidence of his ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Any public benefit derived from Harris' unsolicited proposal is contingent on the DOE accepting and then publishing that proposal or on Harris' publishing the information himself. We have no evidence before us to indicate that such publication will occur. Furthermore, Harris has not demonstrated that the general public will benefit from his development of educational courses. Consequently, we find that Harris has not satisfied Factor C.

Under Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act, 381 (1995)).

In the present case, it remains unclear to what extent the public's understanding is likely to be enhanced by the disclosure of the information. However, we need not reach the issue because the inability to disseminate the information to the public is, in itself, a sufficient basis for denying a fee waiver request. See Donald R. Patterson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,267 at 80,927 (2000) (citing Larson v. CIA, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988)).

B. Whether Requested Information is Primarily in Requester's Commercial Interest

As stated above, we have determined that Harris has not demonstrated that his request is "in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations of the government." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8). However, assuming arguendo that Harris' request did satisfy the public-interest prong of the test, we find that the request is primarily in Harris' commercial interest and, therefore, does not satisfy the commercial-interest prong of the test.

A "commercial interest" has been defined as "one that furthers a commercial, trade or profit interest as those terms are commonly understood." See Department of Justice Freedom of Information Act Guide, 133 (2004). In the present case, CBC determined that the primary purpose of Harris' request – to use the information in developing an unsolicited proposal to the DOE – was commercial. Appeal Letter. Harris contends that the requested information will be used to develop educational research classes and therefore "will not be commercialized." Id.

We agree with CBC that the request is primarily in Harris' commercial interest. While it is true that a proposal, if accepted, could potentially provide some benefit to an agency or the general public, submitting an unsolicited proposal to an agency is an inherently commercial activity. A submitter's desired result is for the agency to accept the proposal and compensate the submitter in some manner.

III. Conclusion

As the foregoing indicates, Harris has failed to adequately demonstrate his intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Therefore, we find that Harris has not shown that disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute to public understanding of government operations or activities. We further find that even if Harris had demonstrated that the disclosure of the requested information would be in the public interest, the requested information is primarily in Harris' commercial interest. Accordingly, the appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 23, 2005 by Allan C. Harris, OHA Case No. TFA-0121, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Cliff Jenkins

Date of Filing: October 12, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0122

On October 12, 2005, Cliff Jenkins (Jenkins) filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on August 22, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (LM). In that determination, LM responded to a request for documents that Jenkins submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LM determined that it did not have any documents responsive to Jenkins' request. This appeal, if granted, would require LM to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Jenkins filed a request under the FOIA for "copies of any documentation, contracts, notes on verbal agreements, or Memorandums of Understanding for Union Carbide, U.S. Vanadium, Vanadium Corporation of America or the town of Uravan, CO." Letter from Michael Owens, LM, to Cliff Jenkins (September 1, 2005) (Determination Letter). LM determined that the requested documents did not exist. LM stated, "According to our information the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) never owned or managed the property. They only contracted for the purchase of material." Determination Letter. As a result, LM denied the request and Jenkins filed the present appeal.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials."

Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

As an initial matter, we note that in his appeal, Jenkins requested documents which he did not include in his initial request to LM. Specifically, Jenkins stated,

> In addition to the contract sited [sic] above, I am requesting any indemnification agreements that may exist, or may have existed between Union Carbide, U.S. Vanadium Corp. or the Vanadium Corporation of America and the Department of Energy either negotiated directly with Union Carbide or inherited by DOE and negotiated by outside agencies.

Letter from Cliff Jenkins to OHA (September 15, 2005) (Appeal Letter). We do not permit requesters to expand the scope of their request on appeal. F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,132 at 80,578 (1996); Alan J. White, 17 DOE ¶ 80,117, 80,539 (1988); see also Arthur Scanla, 13 DOE ¶ 80,133 at 80,622 n.2 (1986). If Jenkins wishes to request this additional information, he must file a new FOIA request seeking those documents.

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted LM to discuss the initial search. LM informed this office that the search involved "electronic and paper finding aids for both the LM active and inactive record holdings in the custody of the LM Grand Junction Office and the Federal Records Centers. This process included key word searches ... review of paper indexes, and contact with a retired AEC subcontractor who was directly responsible for the AEC uranium mining and milling program." Electronic Mail Message from Sheila Dillard, LM, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 26, 2005). Based on this information, we find that LM conducted a search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Jenkins' initial request and, therefore, was adequate. However, based on new information Jenkins provided in his appeal, LM has informed us that it has located additional records which may be responsive to Jenkins' request. Electronic Mail Message from Sheila Dillard, LM, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 19, 2005).

Accordingly, this appeal is granted in part and this matter is remanded to LM to complete a new search using the additional information provided in the appeal. After completing its search, LM is to provide Jenkins with any responsive documents or to issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any responsive information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 12, 2005 by Cliff Jenkins, OHA Case No. TFA-0122, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Legacy Management for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Northeast Ohio American Friends Service Committee
Date of Filing:	October 12, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0123

On October 12, 2005, the Northeast Ohio American Friends Service Committee (NOAFSC) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of Energy (OIG) on September 8, 2005, in response to a request for documents that NOAFSC submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that OIG perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On January 12, 2005, NOAFSC submitted a FOIA request for documents maintained by OIG that relate to radiation and the Industrial Excess Landfill and /or the Kittinger Landfill in Uniontown, Ohio. NOAFSC also asked for "documents concerning a meeting with Jessie Robison, Margaret Lapham, and Mr. Walter during the summer of 2004." Letter from NOAFSC to DOE/HQ (January 12, 2005) (Request). NOAFSC added that it did not want to receive any documents that DOE had either received from or sent to the Concerned Citizens of Lake Township (CCLT). Id. OIG searched its files and found 46 responsive documents. OIG released seven documents with material withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(c). Thirty-eight responsive documents related to CCLT, and those documents were withheld pursuant to NOAFSC's request. OIG also had one responsive document in its possession that originated at the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), and OIG forwarded the document to the EPA for a determination concerning its release. See Determination Letter at 1. The determination letter explained that one document was created at the EPA and that the EPA "will respond directly to [AFSC] regarding the releasability of the document." Determination Letter at 2.

NOAFSC raised two issues in its appeal. First, NOAFSC contends that DOE did not respond to its original request because no documents were released concerning the summer 2004 meeting. Second, NOAFSC contends that DOE's search was inadequate because no other DOE divisions had replied to NOAFSC concerning its request. In the Appeal, NOAFSC asks OHA to direct OIG to search again for responsive information. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted OIG for information about the search. OIG responded to both of NOAFSC's arguments on appeal. First, OIG stated that there was no documentation of the summer 2004 meeting mentioned in the original request. OIG verified the absence of documentation with DOE employees who had attended the meeting. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Ruby Len, OIG, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (December 14, 2005). As for the second argument, OIG informed us that the original request was also referred to the Office of Environmental Management (EM), and that EM had indeed responded that the facility involved was not under EM's control. Id. EM referred the request to the EPA. Id. OIG sent us a copy of an electronic mail message from EM-1 dated April 23, 2004 stating that the facility in the request was not included in EM's program function. OIG released a copy of this email to NOAFSC as Document 4.

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that OIG conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Further, the requester did receive notification from another DOE division (EM) that the landfills in question were not within its jurisdiction. Based on the information in the record and our communications with OIG, we are convinced that no offices other than OIG and EM are likely to have documents responsive to this request. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Northeast Ohio American Friends Service Committee on October 12, 2005, OHA Case Number TFA-0123, is hereby denied.

which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Catherine Rose

Date of Filing: October 12, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0124

On October 12, 2005, Catherine Rose filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on September 8, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Savannah River Operations Office (SR). In that determination, SR responded to a request for documents that Ms. Rose submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. SR determined that it did not have any documents responsive to Ms. Rose's request. This appeal, if granted, would require SR to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On January 13, 2005, Ms. Rose filed a request under the FOIA for "incident documents for 200-F and 200-H during the time period from 1950-1954." Letter from Lucy M. Knowles, SR, to Rose (September 8, 2005) (Determination Letter). In response to that request, SR informed Ms. Rose that it was unable to locate any responsive documents. Upon receiving the determination, Ms. Rose filed a subsequent request asking SR to perform an additional search and SR did so. After completing the second search, SR stated, "[t]he Savannah River Site (SRS) performed an additional search using the search terms 'INCIDENT' and '200' of both the UNCLASSIFIED and CLASSIFIED databases. SRS found no additional documents responsive to your request." Determination Letter. As a result, SR denied the request and Ms. Rose filed the present appeal.

In her appeal, Ms. Rose disputes SR's statement in the Determination Letter that operations began in the 200-F and 200-H areas of the SR complex in November 1954 and July 1955, respectively. Letter from Ms. Rose to OHA (October 3, 2005). Ms. Rose included in her appeal information which she believed established that operations began in those areas prior to 1954 and 1955.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted SR to ascertain the scope of the search. SR informed us that in performing the additional search that Ms. Rose requested, it was unable to locate any documents responsive to Ms. Rose's request. According to SR, "[w]e searched for documents in both the classified and unclassified databases, using the search terms 'incident' and '200' for the years 1950 to 1954. The use of these two search terms would have located responsive documents for any incident of any type in either 200-F or 200-H Areas for those years. We were unable to locate additional responsive documents." Electronic Mail Message from Pauline Conner, SR, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 27, 2005). SR also explained, citing to a book outlining the history of the SR complex, that although other areas within the complex began operations prior to 1954 and 1955, the 200-F and 200-H areas did not commence operations until November 1954 and July 1955, respectively. Id.

SR performed a search for documents, using appropriate search terms, regarding the facilities Ms. Rose requested within the time frame she provided. Based on this information, we find that SR conducted a search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Rose's initial request and, therefore, was adequate. Accordingly, Ms. Rose's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 12, 2005 by Catherine Rose, OHA Case No. TFA-0124, is hereby denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Natural Resources Defense Council
Date of Filing:	October 17, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0127

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by the Natural Resources Defense Council (hereinafter referred to as "NRDC") in response to a Determination issued to it by the Director of the Department of Energy's FOIA/Privacy Act Group (hereinafter referred to as "the Director"). In that determination, the Director replied to a request for documents that NRDC submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the DOE conduct another search for responsive documents.

In its FOIA request, NRDC sought access to all documents regarding (i) the toxicity of perchlorate, (ii) the health or environmental effects of perchlorate, (iii) the detection of perchlorate in groundwater, soil or surface water at any DOE or contractor facilities, (iv) risk assessments for perchlorate, (v) potential drinking water or cleanup standards for perchlorate, (vi) cost estimates for any perchlorate remediation or cleanup, (vii) the National Academy of Sciences study of perchlorate, or (viii) any legislation regarding perchlorate. NRDC later limited its request to documents created during and after 1998. See September 16, 2005 Determination Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/Privacy Act Group to Aaron Colangelo, NRDC.

In this Determination, the Director stated that NRDC's request was referred to the Headquarters Office of Environmental Management (EM) for a search of its files. Determination at 1. This search produced 28 documents that are responsive to NRDC's request. These documents were provided to NRDC in their entirety.

In its Appeal, NRDC contests the adequacy of the search that was performed. NRDC points out that one of the 28 documents released states that "[f]ive [DOE] sites have suspected or confirmed perchlorate contamination: the Los Alamos and Sandia National Laboratories in New Mexico; the Pantex Plant in Texas; and the Energy Technology Engineering Center and Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory Site 300 in California." NRDC Appeal, Attachment C. However, no sampling data from those sites was included in the material released to NRDC. Moreover, that same document states that "[a]t Livermore, an interim Record of Decision to clean up perchlorate contamination is in place and cleanup is ongoing." No Record of Decision was provided to the requester. NRDC therefore argues that the search conducted was inadequate, and requests that another search be performed.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985) (Miller); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to obtain further information concerning the scope of the search that was performed, we contacted the Director's Office and EM. We were informed that the initial search that resulted in the location of the 28 documents that were released to NRDC encompassed only EM's headquarters offices. See memorandum of November 4, 2005 telephone conversation between Verlette Moore, FOIA/Privacy Act Group, and Robert Palmer of this Office. Given the information submitted by NRDC, we conclude that "a search that is reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials," Miller, must in this case include DOE and contractor facilities located at the Los Alamos and Sandia National Laboratories in New Mexico, the Pantex Plant in Texas, and the Energy Technology Learning Center and the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory Site 300 in California. In fact, we have been informed by EM that a search of these facilities is currently being conducted. See memorandum of November 4, 2005 telephone conversation between Joni Boone, EM, and Mr. Palmer.

We will therefore remand this matter to EM. On remand, EM should continue to search at the facilities named above for responsive documents. In addition, if there are any other locations in which such documents are likely to be located, those locations should be searched as well. Upon completion of this search, a new determination letter should be issued to NRDC in as expeditious a manner as is possible.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Natural Resources Defense Council, OHA Case Number TFA-0127, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Environmental Management for additional proceedings consistent with the directions set forth in this Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Environmental Defense Institute

Date of Filing: October 24, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0128

On October 24, 2005, Environmental Defense Institute (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on September 14, 2005. In the determination, Idaho released numerous documents to the Appellant responsive to the Appellant's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Idaho did withhold portions of one document under Exemption 2 of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to release the information it withheld from that document.

I. BACKGROUND

In a letter dated July 7, 2005, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to Idaho for documents relating to the Advanced Test Reactor (ATR) and other facilities at the Reactor Technologies Complex (RTC). Request Letter dated July 7, 2005, from Chuck Broscious, Executive Director, Appellant, to FOIA Office, Idaho. Because the initial request was so broad, the Appellant was invited to narrow its request, which it did on July 28, 2005. On September 14, 2005, Idaho issued a determination on the matter. Idaho released all but two documents in full. Of the remaining two documents, one was withheld in its entirety. The second was redacted under Exemption 2 of the FOIA. This second document is at issue in this Appeal.[1/]

On October 14, 2005, the Appellant filed an Appeal of the September 14, 2005 Determination with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the DOE. In its Appeal, the Appellant questions the correctness of the Idaho exemption determination regarding the second document, entitled ATR Safety Analysis Report (SAR). The Appellant argues that Idaho has failed to reasonably segregate the information in the ATR SAR. Appeal Letter dated October 14, 2005, from Chuck Broscious to Director, OHA, at 2.

[1/] After this Appeal was filed, the first document was released to the Appellant.

II. ANALYSIS

Idaho withheld portions of the ATR SAR under FOIA Exemption 2. The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only the application of Exemption 2 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

Idaho's Determination Letter indicates that it withheld portions of the ATR SAR because the information is "integral to describing potential vulnerabilities of the reactor and related systems, and the methods and measures taken to prevent or mitigate those potential problems." September 14, 2005 Determination Letter. Therefore, the release of this information could be used to identify those potential vulnerabilities and to understand how to thwart the protective and mitigative measures currently in place. Specifically, the information withheld by Idaho under Exemption 2 consists of maps, diagrams, and safety reports regarding the Advanced Test Reactor.

The information withheld is clearly predominantly internal in nature. The D.C. Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information in this case neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. Accordingly, it is predominantly internal.

The information meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. EPA, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d 530-31.

Release of the information at issue in the present case could allow malefactors to identify vulnerabilities of the ATR and to understand how to thwart the protective measures currently in place. Accordingly, disclosure of the information at issue risks allowing malefactors to circumvent DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. Although it is obvious that this Appellant has no such intentions, if DOE were to release this document to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public who requested it. Therefore, because of the hazards involved in public release, we find that the information was properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

The Appellant also contends that the FOIA mandates that any reasonably segregable portion of a record must be disclosed to a requestor after the redaction of the parts which are exempt. October 14, 2005 Appeal Letter at 2. We agree. We have reviewed the ATR SAR which Idaho released to the Appellant with redactions. We believe that chapter 3/4, pages 0-1 and 0-2 of the ATR SAR could be reasonably segregated and released to the Appellant. We will remand the matter to Idaho for review of those pages and issuance of a new determination either releasing the information or justifying its withholding.

III. CONCLUSION

Idaho properly withheld the redacted material, except as outlined above, under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2. Therefore, this part of the Appeal will be denied. We will remand the matter to Idaho so that it can review two pages of the withheld document and issue a new determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Environmental Defense Institute on October 24, 2005, Case No. TFA-0128, is hereby denied, except insofar as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Eric T. Kirk

Date of Filing: October 31, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0129

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Eric T. Kirk in response to a determination that was issued to him by the Director of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (hereinafter referred to as "the Director"). In that determination, the Director replied to a request for documents that Mr. Kirk submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Director released certain documents to Mr. Kirk, but withheld portions of those documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require that we remand this matter to the Director for another search and for the release of the withheld material.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. ' 552(b)(1) - (9); see also 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.10(b)(1) - (9).

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Mr. Kirk sought access to the following documents concerning "Mound Plant retiree medical benefits:"

> 1. The request from DOE to BWX Technologies (BWXT) requesting an evaluation of retiree medical benefits and any means to reduce the costs or like actions;
> 2. The acknowledgment from BWXT to DOE for the activity in 1 above including any proposed cost to conduct the evaluation;
> 3. The proposal(s) for any actions that could be taken from BWXT to DOE after an extensive quantity of research and evaluation was performed both by BWXT and legal firms employed by BWXT;

4. The acknowledgment by DOE of the information in 3 above and any direction on the decision made by the DOE.

In his response, the Director identified four documents as being responsive to Mr. Kirk's request. Document 1, a November 13, 2000 letter from Roland Reed of BWXT to "D. Franklin" of the DOE was provided to Mr. Kirk in its entirety. Documents 2 and 3, which are letters from "W.M. Farrell" of BWXT to Derrick J.C. Franklin of the DOE dated September 26, 2001 and March 29, 2002 respectively, were released to Mr. Kirk with portions withheld under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). Document 4, a memorandum dated March 28, 2002 and authored by the law firm of Vorys, Sater, Seymour and Pease, was also provided to Mr. Kirk in redacted form, with portions withheld under Exemption 5. In his Appeal, Mr. Kirk challenges the adequacy of the search that the Director performed and his application of Exemption 5.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

In support of his claim that the Director's search was inadequate, Mr. Kirk states that "at no time has [the Director's office] or any other DOE office provided the requested information . . . with regard to revision of EG&G retiree medical benefits . . . , although this was requested as a part of my FOIA request." Appeal at 1. However, the fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. The courts have stated that in cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted the Director's Office. We were informed that the request was referred to the Manager of the Ohio Field Office in Miamisburg, Ohio, and that the following Miamisburg locations were searched: (i) the Manager's Office, (ii) the Contract and Procurement Office, (iii) the Office of Chief Counsel, and (iv), the offices of the DOE Miamisburg Records contact person and Industrial Relations Specialist. The request was also referred to BWXT, which conducted a search of its records, and to BWXT's law firm. See memorandum of December 8, 2005 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Marian Wilcox, DOE Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center. Mr. Kirk has not suggested, and we have been unable to discover, any other location in which responsive documents could reasonably be expected to be located. Based on the information before us, we conclude that the search for responsive documents was adequate.

B. The Director's Application of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The deliberative process privilege is the only privilege at issue here.

The deliberative process privilege permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 150 (1975); Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862 . The purpose of the deliberative process privilege is to promote high-quality agency decisions by fostering frank and independent discussion among individuals involved in the decision-making process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

Information within the purview of the deliberative process privilege must be both predecisional and deliberative. Information is predecisional if it is prepared or gathered in order to assist an agency decisionmaker in arriving at a decision. Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Eng. Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Predecisional information is also deliberative if it reflects the give-and-take of the consultative process, Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866, so that disclosure would reveal the mental processes of the decision-maker, National Wildlife Federation v. United States Forest Service, 861 F.2d 1114, 1119 (9th Cir. 1988).

Mr. Kirk contends that the withheld portions contain factual material that cannot properly be withheld under Exemption 5. In general, Exemption 5 may not be used to withhold purely factual material. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 867. However, the courts have recognized two exceptions to this general rule. Factual material may be withheld under Exemption 5 if it is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative matter that disclosure of the factual material would expose or cause harm to the agency's deliberations, Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971), or if the author has selected specific facts out of a larger group of facts, and this very act is deliberative in nature. Montrose Chemical Corporation v. Train, 491 F.2d 63, 66 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

We have carefully examined the withheld portions of the responsive documents. They consist largely of the opinions and recommendations of the authors of those documents, and factual material relied upon by the authors in reaching their conclusions. The material is clearly predecisional, and deliberative in that it reflects the "give and take" of the decision-making process. With one exception, the factual matter withheld is either so inextricably connected to the deliberative material that it is, itself, deliberative in nature, or was selected from a larger group of facts in an act that constituted an exercise of judgement by the authors. In either instance, revealing the factual material would in effect reveal the deliberative process, and very possibly compromise the quality of agency decision making.

The one exception is located on page three of Document 4, in the first sentence under the heading "II. FACTS." This sentence describes the amount of material examined by the author in writing the memorandum, and the sources of that material. The facts in this sentence are not inextricably intertwined with deliberative material, nor are they a distillation of facts from a larger group of facts. Release of this sentence in its entirety would not expose the deliberative process of which this memorandum is a part, and it therefore cannot be withheld under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

C. The Public Interest

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, the public interest in release of the withheld material is attenuated by the fact that it consists largely of preliminary opinions and recommendations that may or may not be adopted by the agency. On the other hand, the release of predecisional, deliberative material concerning the very emotional subject of possible changes to retiree medical benefits could be misleading in that it could suggest that the DOE has reached a final decision on this issue, and it could also adversely effect the agency's ability to obtain straightforward and frank recommendations and opinions in the future. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987). We do not believe that discretionary release of the withheld material would be in the public interest.

*/ We have been informed that no decision has been made regarding any possible changes in retiree benefits. See memorandum of December 8, 2005 telephone conversation between Mr. Palmer and Ms. Wilcox.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Eric T. Kirk, OHA Case Number TFA-0129, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Director of the DOE's Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center. Upon remand, the Director shall either release the first sentence under the heading "II. FACTS" on page three of Document 4 to Mr. Kirk in its entirety, or withhold that information under a different exemption.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Mack Davis
Date of Filing:	October 31, 2005
Case Number:	TFA-0130

On October 31, 2005, Mack Davis (Davis) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Oak Ridge Office of the Department of Energy (Oak Ridge) on October 18, 2005, in response to a request for documents that Davis submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Oak Ridge perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On July 26, 2005, Davis submitted a FOIA request for medical records, radiation exposure records and industrial hygiene records concerning his deceased father, Steve Edward Davis. According to Davis, his father worked at the University of Tennessee (UT) Comparative Animal Research Laboratory (CARL) from 1950 to 1975. Davis contends that his father was exposed to cobalt 60 during an industrial accident at CARL. Oak Ridge searched its records and found an employment card and a security clearance card for Steve Davis. Oak Ridge sent the documents to Davis on October 15, 2005. See Determination Letter at 1.

Davis contends that the search was inadequate. He argues that because his father had an annual medical checkup at Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL), his father's medical records and dosimeter records should be on file at ORNL. Letter from Davis to Director, OHA (October 31, 2005) (Appeal). In the Appeal, Davis asks OHA to direct Oak Ridge to search again for responsive information. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

Mr. Davis informed us that his father had been employed by UT and that UT provided Mr. Davis with his father's personnel records. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Davis and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 3, 2006). However, UT did not have any medical records. Id. According to Davis, in his search for the medical records, Davis was told that they had been sent to Oak Ridge Institute for Science Education (ORISE). Id. We contacted Oak Ridge for information about the search. Oak Ridge sent us copies of correspondence and search results from ORNL, ORISE, ORAU, the DOE Records Holding Area for Archived Records, and the Department of Labor (results of their search for records in response to Davis' Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program Act (EEOICPA) claim). CARL and ORISE submitted an Employment Verification Sheet acknowledging that they searched the available records and were unable to verify the accuracy of the claimed period of employment, but had located a security clearance document from 1950. See Employment Verification Sheet (August 3, 2005). ORNL found no record that Davis' father had been monitored there for radiation exposure. See Letter from W. Gorman, ORNL, to Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge (August 22, 2005). DOE Records Holding/Archived Records located a Personnel Clearance Master Card from 1950 and a personnel card. See Request Certification and Recommendation (August 23, 2005). ORNL searched but found no medical or industrial hygiene records. See Electronic mail message from T. Powers, ORNL, to Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge (August 25, 2005); Electronic mail message from L. Greeley, ORNL, to Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge (September 1, 2005). On October 31, 2005, Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU) responded that they had no record of the father's employment.

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Oak Ridge conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. This search included the locations that Davis identified (ORNL and ORISE), but recovered no further responsive material. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Mack Davis on October 31, 2005, OHA Case Number TFA-0130, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Henrietta Brater

Date of Filing: November 2, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0131

On November 2, 2005, Henrietta Brater filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on October 6, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (CBC). In that determination, CBC responded to a request for documents that Ms. Brater submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. CBC determined that it had previously provided Ms. Brater with all documents in its possession responsive to Ms. Brater's request. This appeal, if granted, would require CBC to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Ms. Brater filed a request with CBC for medical, personnel, radiation exposure, and occupational and industrial records pertaining to her late husband. Letter from Ms. Brater to OHA (October 17, 2005) (Appeal Letter). CBC located 390 pages of documents responsive to Ms. Brater's request and provided her with copies of those documents. Letter from Marian Wilcox, CBC, to Ms. Brater (October 6, 2005) (Determination Letter). Ms. Brater believed CBC did not provide her with all responsive documents available and filed the present appeal. In her appeal, Ms. Brater challenges the adequacy of the search performed by CBC. Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted CBC to ascertain the scope of the search. CBC informed us that, in responding to Ms. Brater's request, it performed a very thorough search for documents pertaining to Ms. Brater's late husband, who worked at the Fernald site from the mid-1950s to the mid-1960s. Specifically, CBC stated,

> A search was performed of the Fernald Active Records and Historical Records (ARIS and HRID) Database for personnel, medical, respirator file, accident/injury and any other available information. The Dosimetry department prepared a report including exposure files, urinanalysis [sic], etc. A search was also performed of the eDesk files for historical information (this is scanned copies of the older documents). The Subcontractor Database was also searched just to make sure that nothing would be missed. Also, as Ms. Brater requested, all documentation that has been provided to the Department of Labor and NIOSH has also been provided to Ms. Brater. This included raw data. Every location that could be reasonably expected to contain responsive records was searched and the best available copies (of the older documents) were provided in responsive [sic] to the request.

Electronic Mail Message from Marian Wilcox, CBC, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (November 23, 2005). Based on this information, we find that CBC performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Brater's request and, therefore, the search was adequate. Furthermore, in her appeal, Ms. Brater does not provide any support for her assertion that additional responsive documents were available but not provided to her. Accordingly, Ms. Brater's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on November 2, 2005 by Henrietta Brater, OHA Case No. TFA-0131, is hereby denied.

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Marilyn R. Sutton

Date of Filing: November 9, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0132

On November 9, 2005, Marilyn R. Sutton filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on October 6, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (LM). In that determination, LM responded to a request for documents that Ms. Sutton submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LM determined that all documents possibly responsive to the request were contained in an electronic database. LM did not provide Ms. Sutton with the documents, but provided Ms. Sutton with instructions for accessing and searching the database. This appeal, if granted, would require LM to perform an additional search and either release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I.Background

On August 12, 2005, Ms. Sutton filed a request for the enclosures contained in a letter from Mr. James J. Fiore, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Energy, to Mr. William R. Augustine, Deputy Chief Programs Management Division, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, dated October 19, 1999. Ms. Sutton included a copy of this letter in her request. The letter did not identify the titles of the enclosures. Letter from Marilyn R. Sutton to James J. Fiore, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Energy (August 12, 2005). Ms. Sutton's request was forwarded to LM for processing. Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE FOIA/Privacy Act Group, to Marilyn R. Sutton (September 15, 2005). LM determined that any documents responsive to Ms. Sutton's request would be located in the "Considered Sites Database," an electronic database maintained by LM. Letter from Tony R. Carter, LM, to Marilyn R. Sutton (October 6, 2005) (Determination Letter). LM did not provide Ms. Sutton with any records; rather, LM provided Ms. Sutton with instructions for accessing and searching the specified database. Id.

In her appeal, Ms. Sutton questions whether LM performed a search for the requested documents prior to referring her to the database. Letter from Marilyn R. Sutton to OHA (November 3, 2005).

II.Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted LM to ascertain the scope of the search. LM informed us that it searched its electronic databases and determined that documents responsive to Ms. Sutton's request would be located in the "Considered Sites Database." LM did not conduct a search of its hardcopy, paper files. Electronic Mail Message from Sheila Dillard, LM, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, November 17, 2005. A search of this database yielded the letter mentioned by Ms. Sutton. However, since the letter did not specify the titles of the enclosures, it was impossible for Ms. Sutton to determine which, if any, of the other documents in the database were the documents she sought. After discussing this result with LM, we learned that a search of LM's hardcopy files would be necessary in order to determine which documents were the enclosures to the identified letter and whether LM had those documents. Id.

Accordingly, we will remand this matter to LM to perform an additional search of its paper files for the requested documents. After completing its search, LM is to provide Ms. Sutton with any responsive documents or to issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any responsive information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on November 9, 2005 by Marilyn R. Sutton, OHA Case No. TFA-0132, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Legacy Management for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Citizen Action New Mexico

Date of Filing: November 22, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0134

Citizen Action New Mexico (Citizen Action) filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration's Albuquerque Service Center (Service Center) issued on October 20, 2005. In that determination, the Service Center denied in part a request for information that Citizen Action had submitted on July 9, 2004, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. The Service Center withheld information that was responsive to Citizen Action's request after it determined that two responsive documents contained unclassified controlled nuclear information (UCNI). This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release those documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On July 9, 2004, Citizen Action requested the "most current and complete" inventories of hazardous waste constituents, irradiated reactor fuels, and reactor-irradiated nuclear materials which may be stored at various locations at Sandia Laboratories, Albuquerque, New Mexico. Among the documents the Service Center identified as responsive to Citizen Action's request were two documents, Dense Pack Storage Holes Status Book and Monorail Storage Inventory Log, both dated October 14, 2004. In her October 20, 2005 determination letter, the Service Center's Freedom of Information Act Officer stated that the documents contained UCNI, the disclosure of which is restricted by the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq., and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3 in their entirety.

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the two documents described above. In its Appeal, Citizen Action contends that the Service Center "has provided no explanation whatsoever for its determination" that the documents must be withheld from disclosure. Citizen Action also points out that the FOIA process "requires agencies to review and release all 'reasonably segregable' non-exempt information from agency records" and requests appropriately redacted versions of the documents that the Service Center withheld in their entirety.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 29 DOE ¶ 80,171 (2004) (and cases cited therein). Section 148 of the Atomic Energy Act directs the Department of Energy to issue regulations or orders to protect from unauthorized dissemination information that has been determined to contain UCNI. 42 U.S.C. § 2168(a). These regulations appear at 10 C.F.R. Part 1017.

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). This authority has now been delegated to the Deputy Director of the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance (SSPA). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the SSPA reviewed the documents that Citizen Action requested.

According to the Deputy Director, the SSPA determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, the requested documents contain UCNI. The information that the SSPA identified as UCNI could reasonably be expected to have a significant adverse effect on the health and safety of the public or the common defense and security by significantly increasing the likelihood of theft, diversion, or sabotage of nuclear materials, equipment, or facilities. The SSPA also determined, however, that the majority of the documents' content is not UCNI. The Deputy Director has provided this Office with copies of the documents from which the UCNI has been deleted. Beside each deletion, "DOE (b)(3)" has been written in the margin of the document. The denying official for these withholdings is Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Director, Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Director's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the DOE to continue withholding portions of the documents under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the documents that the Deputy Director has now determined to be properly identified as UCNI must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Deputy Director has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

In view of the Deputy Director's findings, and at his suggestion, we have remanded these two documents to the Service Center for a new review, in which it must consider whether any portions of the documents that were previously identified as UCNI should now be released to Citizen Action. After completing its review, the Service Center should either release the currently redacted versions of the requested documents or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from the documents it provides to Citizen Action. Citizen Action will have the opportunity to appeal that determination, if it so desires. Accordingly, Citizen Action's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Citizen Action New Mexico on November 22, 2005, Case No. TFA-0134, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The National Nuclear Security Administration's Albuquerque Service Center shall review the redacted versions of the documents entitled Dense Pack Storage Holes Status Book, dated October 14, 2004, and Monorail Storage Inventory Log, dated October 14, 2004, bearing markings indicating where all Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information has been properly deleted. Upon completing its review, the National Nuclear Security Administration's Albuquerque Service Center shall either release those redacted versions in their entirety or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from the copies it provides to Citizen Action New Mexico.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Arlie Bryan Siebert

Date of Filing: December 20, 2005
January 9, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0137
TFA-0142

This Decision concerns two Appeals filed by Arlie Bryan Siebert from determinations issued to him by the Department of Energy's National Nuclear Safety Administration (NNSA) (TFA-0137; TFA-0142) and the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance (Security) (TFA-0142). These determinations were issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Siebert submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require that the documents that NNSA withheld in whole or in part be released to Mr. Siebert and that Security perform a new search for responsive documents.

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Mr. Siebert requested information concerning "the name, rank, job description, promotions, promoters, punishment, level of security clearance, and retention or termination of security clearance" of DOE employees who received bogus academic degrees. Letter from Abel Lopez, DOE FOIA and Privacy Act Group, to Mr. Siebert (November 21, 2005).

In its determination, NNSA stated that it identified three NNSA employees "as receiving degrees of interest relevant to [Mr. Siebert's] inquiry," i.e., degrees from unaccredited institutions, but that it was withholding the information under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Letter from NNSA to Mr. Siebert (November 15, 2005) (NNSA Determination Letter). NNSA stated that the relevant files were personnel files in which the individuals had a reasonable expectation of privacy. NNSA further stated that even with personal identifiers such as names, addresses and phone numbers deleted from the files, sufficient information remained so that the identities of the individuals was ascertainable. Id. NNSA maintained that the public interest in disclosure did not outweigh the privacy interests of the individuals. Id.

The other DOE office, Security, stated that it performed a search of its files and did not locate any responsive documents. Security stated that it did not maintain records of the identities of DOE employees who may have received bogus academic degrees. Memorandum from Stephanie Grimes, Security, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (February 2, 2005).

In his Appeals, Mr. Siebert made several arguments contesting the withholding of the identities of DOE employees who received bogus academic degrees. Mr. Siebert's primary argument, made in both appeals, is that the public has an interest in knowing the identities of the employees with bogus degrees. Mr. Siebert contends that the public's interest in disclosure outweighs "the privacy of those who lied about their academic credentials and who are in sensitive positions involving national security." Letter from Mr. Siebert to OHA (December 1, 2005) (First Appeal Letter). Regarding Security's determination, Mr. Siebert contends that Security could obtain from another DOE office a list of the individuals with bogus degrees and could then search its records for responsive documents. Letter from Mr. Siebert to OHA (December 20, 2005) (Second Appeal Letter).[1]

II. Analysis

A. The NNSA Determination

Exemption 6 of the FOIA protects from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a document may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the document may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989). Third, the agency must balance the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the document would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

[1] In his second appeal letter, Mr. Siebert also disputed his categorization as an "other" requester for the purpose of assessing fees for the processing of his FOIA request and requested a fee waiver. However, we have learned that Mr. Siebert had not yet been assessed any fees in connection with this request at the time of the filing of this appeal. See Electronic Mail Message from Joan Ogbazghi, FOIA and Privacy Act Group, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (January 13, 2006). Accordingly, this argument is not ripe for our review.

In this case, NNSA determined that release of the withheld information would result in the invasion of personal privacy interests in that the release of the information would disclose personal information of certain individuals and potentially lead to those individuals being embarrassed, harassed, or otherwise unable to perform their duties.

Having identified a privacy interest in the withheld information, it is necessary to determine whether there is a public interest in the disclosure of the information. Information falls within the public interest if it contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the government. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 775. Therefore, unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also National Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990).

In the present case, we agree that there may be a public interest in knowing whether a DOE employee has a bogus academic degree in a case where having a degree from an accredited institution was a specific condition of employment. For example, the public may have an interest in knowing whether an employee lied about an academic degree in order to secure a position with DOE or whether public funds were used to pay for that individual's education. However, we find that there is no such public interest in this case. NNSA stated that the three individuals who had degrees from unaccredited institutions did not have to meet an educational requirement as a condition of employment; each employee was hired based on their past work experience. NNSA Determination Letter. Accordingly, the release of the personnel information in question would reveal little, if anything, to the public about the workings of the government and could subject the individuals to considerable embarrassment or harassment. Therefore, after weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against a minimal or even non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing the identities and other personal information of the federal employees relevant to Mr. Siebert's request could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, material need not be segregated and released when the exempt and nonexempt material are so "inextricably intertwined" that release of the nonexempt material would compromise the exempt material, or where nonexempt material is so small and interspersed with exempt material that it would pose "an inordinate burden" to segregate it. Lead Industries Assoc. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2nd Cir. 1979).

In this case, the documents in question, standard personnel forms, consist mainly of exempt individual-specific information. However, in discussing this appeal with NNSA, we learned that the documents also contain some information that could be released without compromising the privacy interests identified above. Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to NNSA. On remand, NNSA must review the document and segregate and release any non-exempt information, or issue a new determination that justifies withholding the factual portions of the document.

B. The Security Determination

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003). However, the FOIA does not require an agency to create new documents in response to an FOIA request, but merely requires the agency provide documents already in its possession. See, e.g., Quanterra Environmental Services, 25 DOE ¶ 80,138 (1995).

In reviewing this case, we contacted Security to discuss the initial search. Security informed us that it undertook a search of its records but that "there were no indices available to determine identities of DOE employees who may have received bogus academic degrees." Memorandum from Stephanie Grimes, Security, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (February 2, 2006). Security did not, nor does the FOIA require it to, obtain information from another DOE office in order to create a new record which would be responsive to Mr. Siebert's request. Accordingly, we find that Security performed a search that was reasonably calculated to reveal responsive records and was, therefore, adequate.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, we have determined that NNSA properly applied Exemption 6 of the FOIA in withholding information from Mr. Siebert. However, the withheld documents may contain some factual information which is reasonably segregable from the exempt portions of the documents. We have also determined that Security conducted an adequate search for responsive records. Therefore, Mr. Siebert's appeals should be granted in part and denied in part.

This Decision and Order has been reviewed by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), which has determined that, in the absence of an appeal or upon conclusion of an unsuccessful appeal, the Decision and Order shall be implemented by each affected NNSA element, official, or employee, and by each affected contractor.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed on December 20, 2005 (TFA-0137) and January 9, 2006 (TFA-0142), by Arlie Bryan Siebert, are hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and are in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Glen Bowers

Date of Filing: December 13, 2005

Case Number: TFA-0138

On December 13, 2005, Glen Bowers completed the filing an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 16, 2005, by the Manager of the Department of Energy's Rocky Flats Project Office. This determination responded to a request for documents that Mr. Bowers submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

Mr. Bowers filed a request by electronic mail under the FOIA for a copy of "The Dow Corral Sub Title: The Rocky Flats Plant Crossroads: The Paper September 12, 1959." He explained in his request that the edition he sought contained a photograph and text about his father, John Bowers. By letter dated August 9, 2005, the director of the DOE's Headquarters FOIA Office informed Mr. Bowers that his request was being forwarded to the Rocky Flats Project Office, because any document responsive to his request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office. Rocky Flats searched for a copy of that edition of the Dow Corral but was unable to locate the requested document. In a November 16, 2005 determination letter sent to Mr. Bowers, the Manager of Rocky Flats informed Mr. Bowers that the only September 1959 editions of the Dow Corral that Rocky Flats located in its microfilm records were those dated September 4 and September 18. The Manager further stated that neither of those editions contained any mention of Mr. Bowers's father. In his Appeal, Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of the search, primarily on the grounds that Rocky Flats did not search for or review paper copies of the Dow Corral.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted Rocky Flats to ascertain the adequacy of the search. A search of the historical records of the Rocky Flats facility yielded the following information concerning the Dow Corral. The Dow Corral was an employee newsletter that appears to have been published on a biweekly basis. Microfilm records included editions published on September 4, 1959, and September 18, 1959. No records were found of any other editions of the Dow Corral published in September 1959. Furthermore, microfilm is the only medium on which Rocky Flats has any records of the Dow Corral. Paper copies of the Dow Corral were maintained at some point in the past, but were long ago donated to the Rocky Flats Cold War Museum, an entity completely independent of the DOE and its contractors at Rocky Flats. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Andrea Wilson, Kaiser-Hill Records Division, and William Schwartz, Office of Hearings and Appeals (December 8, 2005). After reviewing the record in this case, we find that Rocky Flats conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. [*] Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Glen Bowers on December 13, 2005, OHA Case Number TFA-0138, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

[*] In his Appeal, Mr. Bowers raises a number of questions that fall outside the scope of this decision. We will address two of them, however. Mr. Bowers asks whether Dow Chemical, a former contractor at Rocky Flats, might have copies of the Dow Corral. We do not know whether Dow Chemical has such records, but suggest that Mr. Bowers raise that question directly with Dow Chemical. Mr. Bowers also asks how he might obtain copies of the September 4, 1959 and September 18, 1959 editions of the Dow Corral. Although the proper method for requesting this information would entail submitting a new FOIA request, we have spoken to the Rocky Flats office about this new request, and they have informed us that they will, upon receipt of this Decision and Order, mail copies of those two editions to Mr. Bowers.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Nancy Mae Gminski

Date of Filing: January 3, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0139

On January 3, 2006, Nancy Mae Gminski (the Appellant), filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on December 1, 2005. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Oak Ridge would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On July 10, 2004, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request. On August 8, 2005, the initial request was narrowed to all "records on [the Appellant's] father, Arthur Gminski, from 1940 to 1970 and his association with human radiation experiments, the nuclear airplane, Pratt and Whitney, H.E. Dickerman, Chapman Valve, the Atomic Energy Commission, any list of medals on which his name appears, and documents of a scientific and technical nature, including but not limited to any blueprints or drawings bearing his name or the company H.E. Dickerman." Determination Letter dated December 1, 2005, from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, DOE, to the Appellant. On December 1, 2005, Oak Ridge responded that the search of the files and facilities of Oak Ridge yielded no records relating to Mr. Gminski. Id.

On January 3, 2006, the Appellant appealed that determination to our Office. Appeal Letter received January 3, 2006 from Nancy Mae Gminski to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In the Appeal, the Appellant argues that the search was conducted using an incorrect spelling of Mr. Gminski's name. Further, the Appellant asks why the request took one year to be referred to Oak Ridge. Moreover, she states that she specifically asked not to be referred to the National Archives because she had already contacted it regarding different information. Finally, the Appellant claims that Department of Defense records must be searched. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v.

Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, 29 DOE ¶ _____ (Case No. TFA-0138) (January 9, 2006); Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

We contacted Oak Ridge to determine what type of search was conducted. Oak Ridge indicated that the search was conducted using the correct spelling of Mr. Gminski's name[1] and/or his social security number. The Appellant provided a copy of Mr. Gminski's death certificate, which was then provided to the records custodians to perform the search. The searches were conducted both by hand and electronically in the DOE Archives where some personnel security clearance assurance index cards and film badge readings on former workers of some atomic weapons employers are stored. Oak Ridge indicated that it does not have any records on Chapman Valve employees. Oak Ridge also searched the Oak Ridge Associated Universities file for records on radiation accidents or incidents Mr. Gminski might have been involved in during his employment. No records were located.

Oak Ridge conducted a further search of the DOE Archives legacy files where some Chapman Valve historical declassified documents are stored. All five site offices associated with Oak Ridge were searched based on the information the Appellant provided. The site offices looked for lists of Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) employees, and for anything about medals, H.E. Dickerman, blueprints or other documents with the name Gminski. The site offices were provided copies of the Appellant's original request, with the name correctly spelled. Some sites were searched electronically and some by hand. No records were located.

As stated above, the Appellant had asked not to be referred to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) because she had already contacted it regarding selective service deferment ledgers for Mr. Gminski. Oak Ridge did, however, refer the Appellant to NARA not so the deferment ledgers could be searched, but because the Appellant indicated that Mr. Gminski might have been an AEC employee. The records of former federal AEC employees are stored at NARA in St. Louis. The Appellant also requested that Department of Defense records be searched. Oak Ridge did provide contact information for the DOD, so that the Appellant could make a similar request at [1] Oak Ridge indicated that in an email sent to the Appellant, Mr. Gminski's name was misspelled, leading to the Appellant's concern. The people performing the searches used the original FOIA request to conduct the search. Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock to Janet R.H. Fishman, OHA, DOE, January 19, 2006.

DOD. The FOIA only requires DOE to search its own files, not files of other agencies. The Appellant must file a separate request with DOD for information regarding Mr. Gminski. Finally, the Appellant asked why it took one year for her request to be referred to Oak Ridge. Under the FOIA, agencies are required only to release non-exempt, responsive documents; they are not required to answer questions about an agency's operations. DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978). In this instance, the DOE has no documents that contain information responsive to that question.

Based on the search that the Oak Ridge performed, we are convinced that it followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in her request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Nancy Mae Gminski, on January 3, 2006, Case No. TFA-0139, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Nick Piepmeier

Date of Filing: January 3, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0140

On January 3, 2006, Nick Piepmeier filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on November 30, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (GO). In that determination, GO responded to a request for documents that Mr. Piepmeier submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. GO identified several documents responsive to Mr. Piepmeier's request. Some of those documents were released in their entirety, others were released with some deletions, and others were withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA. This appeal, if granted, would require GO to release the withheld information to Mr. Piepmeier.

I. Background

Mr. Piepmeier requested several records regarding his deceased father, a former DOE employee. Specifically, Mr. Piepmeier requested "documents relating to James M. Piepmeier's work, time logs, and medical/mental conditions during his posting to Baghdad January-February 2004 and subsequent return home," See Fax Submission from Mr. Piepmeier to Anna Martinez-Barnish, GO (August 7, 2005). On November 30, 2005, GO issued a determination in response to Mr. Piepmeier's request. See Letter from GO to Mr. Piepmeier (November 30, 2005) (Determination Letter). GO identified several documents responsive to Mr. Piepmeier's request. Of those responsive documents, 14 pages were released in their entirety, 60 pages were partially withheld pursuant to Exemption 6, and 112 pages were withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 5. Determination Letter at 2. GO stated that the information withheld under Exemption 6 consisted of "individual names listed in the documents who are not key personnel." Determination Letter at 1. GO added that the documents withheld under Exemption 5 were "documents containing legal advice and decision-making regarding Mr. [James] Piepmeier's Federal employment." Id. at 2.

Mr. Piepmeier filed the present appeal on January 3, 2006. Letter from Mr. Piepmeier to OHA (December 28, 2005) (Appeal). In his appeal, Mr. Piepmeier argues that he is entitled to all records pertaining to his father.[1]

II. Analysis

Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated under the deliberative process privilege. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

Predecisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final agency action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). The deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

The documents in question are various emails and correspondence among Human Resources personnel, supervisors, and legal counsel regarding the decision whether to terminate an employee. They contain, inter alia, opinions and concerns raised by various parties in meetings, discussions of decision-making procedures, and recommendations. After reviewing the

[1] The appeal contains two additional arguments. First, Mr. Piepmeier argues that there was a delay in GO's processing of his initial FOIA request. He appears to make this argument to mitigate the fact that his appeal was filed with OHA after the statutory deadline for filing lapsed. However, since OHA considers this appeal timely filed, we need not address the timeliness of GO's response. Second, Mr. Piepmeier argued that he did not understand why any part of his request was denied since he had been told that he was entitled under the Privacy Act to all records involving his deceased father. This assertion is incorrect. Privacy Act rights are personal to the individual who is the subject of the records and cannot be asserted derivatively by others. See Shulman v. Sec'y of HHS, No. 94 Civ. 5506, 1997 WL 68554, at 1, 3 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 19, 1997) (Plaintiff had no standing to assert any right that might have belonged to former spouse), aff'd, No. 96-6140 (2d Cir. Sept. 3, 1997); Sirmans v. Caldera, 27 F. Supp. 2d 248, 250 (D.D.C. 1998) (plaintiffs may not object to Army's failure to correct records of other officers). Neither deceased individuals nor their executors or next-of-kin enjoy any rights under the Privacy Act. Crumpton v. U.S., 843 F. Supp. 751, 756 (D.D.C. 1994) (Widow of deceased Army officer had no rights under Privacy Act because officer was dead and records were contained within systems of records retrievable by name of deceased officer or by some identifying number, symbol or other data assigned to the officer alone); Monk v. Teeter, 1992 WL 1681, at *2 (9th Cir. Jan. 8, 1992) ("The right to privacy does not survive one's death.").

documents, we find that they are predecisional and contain material that reflects DOE's deliberative process and are, therefore, exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

The fact that requested information falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "to the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, we do not believe the release of the predecisional information, consisting primarily of opinions and recommendations regarding the employment status of one individual, would be in the public interest. Furthermore, release of such information could have a chilling effect on the agency's ability to obtain straightforward opinions and recommendations in the future.

Exemption 6 of the FOIA protects from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a document may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the document may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989). Third, the agency must balance the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the document would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

In this case, GO found that release of the withheld information would result in the invasion of personal privacy interests in that the release of the information would disclose the identity of certain individuals. Releasing the names of the individuals, subordinates who were sharing their opinions or concerns with or making recommendations to their superiors, could allow a third party to connect the individual with a particular opinion or action raised or undertaken in conjunction with their work. This could, in turn, lead to those individuals being intimidated, harassed, or otherwise unable to perform their duties.

Having identified a privacy interest in the withheld information, it is necessary to determine whether there is a public interest in the disclosure of the information. Information falls within the public interest if it contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the government. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 775. Therefore, unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also National Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990).

Upon reviewing the documents in question, we find that there is little, if anything, the public would learn about the workings of the government from the release of the withheld names and identifying information. Consequently, the public interest in such information is minimal at best. Therefore, after weighing the identified privacy interests present in this case against a minimal or even non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing the identities of federal employees could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). We find that GO complied with the FOIA by releasing to Mr. Piepmeier all factual, non-deliberative portions of the documents.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, we have determined that GO properly applied Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA in releasing information to Mr. Piepmeier. Therefore, Mr. Piepmeier's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 3, 2006, by Nick Piepmeier, OHA Case No. TFA-0140, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Washington Electric Cooperative/Downs Rachlin Martin PLLC
Date of Filing:	January 5, 2006
Case Number:	TFA-0141

On January 5, 2006, Downs Rachlin Martin PLLC (Downs) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL). In that determination, NETL released some documents in response to a request for information that Downs filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require NETL to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

Washington Electric Cooperative (WEC) is a consumer-owned, not for profit utility in Vermont. WEC received a grant from DOE to assess the general feasibility of developing a utility scale wind generation project in Vermont ("the UPC project").[1] On July 25, 2005, Downs, a Vermont law firm, submitted a FOIA request to DOE for copies of "any and all documents in DOE's possession related to the NEPA analysis, use of funds by Washington Electric Cooperative (WEC) for the UPC (wind management) project and any correspondence between DOE and WEC and/or UPC regarding site clearing and construction at the Sheffield site prior to a final NEPA decision . . . ." Letter from NETL to Downs, November 15, 2005 (Determination Letter). NETL searched and found several responsive documents. Some documents were returned to the submitter of the information for its review and opinion concerning releasability under FOIA. NETL released two documents, the cooperative agreement and Modification 1, in their entirety. NETL also released copies of all documents in its possession with regard to the NEPA determination. However, some of the NEPA documents were redacted pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5, which protects the decision-making processes of government agencies and attorney work product. NETL also redacted some documents under Exemption 4, which protects trade secrets and commercial or financial information. NETL stated that it would charge Downs $200 for fees for the search and duplication of responsive documents in the determination.

In the Appeal, Downs argues that the material withheld under Exemption 4 seems to be standard expense reports that could shed light on the project, not privileged commercial information. Downs further contends that the material withheld under Exemption 5 seems to be routine correspondence that specifically describes how the project is to proceed and the justification for a no-cost time extension. Downs also requested a waiver of charges because only 70 pages were provided, "far below the 100 pages usually offered to a requestor for free." Downs finally argues that the responsive material will enable Downs to improve the public understanding of the DOE's grant-making activities and thus is in the public interest and will not be used for commercial purposes.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Thus, in order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (1) trade secrets or (2) information that is "commercial or financial, obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Association v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. Information a submitter provides to an agency voluntarily is "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass).

1. Confidential Material

Information submitted in a procurement process is considered submitted involuntarily, and thus the National Parks test applies in this case. Glen M. Jameson, 26 DOE ¶ 80,236 (1997). In response to this Appeal, NETL provided us with unredacted and redacted copies of the responsive material, along with detailed comments explaining their withholding. See NETL Comments (March 17, 2006). We have reviewed the material withheld under this exemption and find that the deleted information was properly withheld under the National Parks test. First, the information withheld was clearly commercial information. The withheld material referred to costs and plans for the UPC project, along with marketing strategies and personnel information. Second, the information was obtained from WEC, a corporation. We have previously found that corporations are deemed "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4. See Myers Bigel Sibley & Sajovec, 27 DOE ¶ 80,225 (1999). Third, the exempt material is confidential. After reviewing the unredacted documents, we find that the six documents were properly considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 because their disclosure is likely to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of two corporations, WEC and UPC, if released. For instance, the type of information withheld (e.g., project cost and expenses, business strategy, discussions with potential teaming partners), if released, would provide competitors of WEC and UPC with information that could be used to gain unfair advantage against the two firms in future procurements.

If an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm to a person, it must state the reason for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Southern California Edison, 28 DOE ¶ 80,177 (2001). In its determination, NETL described the six documents redacted under Exemption 4 and then stated:

> These documents contain information concerning business investments: total and itemized investments in planning, regulatory review and studies; vendors used to perform work; information about negotiations and business strategy; and strategic business planning and regulatory analysis.

Determination Letter at 2. NETL then listed a description of each type of information withheld (e.g. description of commercialization strategy, labor hour estimates, specific results of market research, proprietary product performance information) and instructions on how to appeal the determination. Id.

After examining unredacted copies of the six documents that were withheld under Exemption 4 as confidential, we find that NETL properly withheld the redacted information in the material released to Downs. [2] As stated above, project expenses and information concerning the submitter's business strategy were properly withheld under Exemption 4. NETL has adequately justified its reason for the withholdings and meets the requirements set forth above in Larson. Accordingly, we shall deny this portion of the Appeal.

2. Privileged Material

In its determination, NETL also added that Item 3, one of the six documents mentioned above, "contains information concerning WEC's legal counsel's work product and attorney-client communications which would also be protected by Exemption 5's attorney work product and attorney-client privileges." Determination Letter at 2. Item 3 is a fax cover sheet and portion of a memo from UPC's attorney to UPC. The express language of Exemption 4 and the legislative history of the FOIA provide that information submitted to the government that would normally be privileged can be withheld under Exemption 4. See Sharyland Supply Corp. v. Block, 755 F.2d 397, 399-400 (5th Cir. 1985); Washington Post Co. v. Department of Health and Human Services, 795 F.2d 205 (D.C. Cir. 1986); Indian Law Resource Center v. Department of the Interior, 477 F. Supp. 144 (D.D.C. 1979) (withholding attorney-client privileged information under Exemption 4). The attorney-client privilege exists to protect confidential communications between attorneys and their clients made for the purpose of securing or providing legal advice. Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977); California Edison, 28 DOE ¶ 80,173 (2001). See also Charles Varnadore, 24 DOE ¶ 80,123 (1994). The privilege covers facts divulged by a client to his or her attorney, and also covers opinions that the attorney gives the client based upon those facts. Mead, 566 F.2d at 254 n.25. The privilege permits nondisclosure of an attorney's opinion or advice in order to protect the secrecy of the underlying facts. Id. at 254 n.28. Not all communications between an attorney and client are privileged, however. Clark v. American Commerce National Bank, 974 F.2d 127 (9th Cir. 1992). The privilege is limited to those disclosures necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 1577 (1976). The privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. California Edison, 28 DOE at 80,665.

2 We also note that NETL has properly released reasonably segregable portions of the documents to Downs pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

We examined Item 3, a fax cover sheet with an excerpt from a memo prepared by UPC's attorney. Item 3 specifically addresses a question for which UPC has requested a written legal opinion. This document reflects the transmission of legal advice from attorney to client. See Miller, Anderson, Nash, Yerke & Wiener v. United States Department of Energy, 499 F. Supp. 767, 771 (D. Or. 1980) (upholding attorney-client privilege of legal memorandum prepared for a utility company by its attorney). It is not a social, informational or procedural communication between the attorney and his client. Thus, we find that Item 3 is protected by the attorney-client privilege, and was properly withheld under Exemption 4. [3]

B. The Deliberative Process Privilege of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). This deliberative process privilege is often invoked under Exemption 5, and is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856

3 We disagree with NETL's conclusion that Item 3 is also protected by the attorney work product privilege. This privilege does not extend to every written document generated by an attorney--it is limited to documents that reveal "the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3); see also Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511 (1947). There is no evidence in the record that this document was prepared for trial or in anticipation of litigation. See Charles Varnadore, 24 DOE ¶ 80,123 at 80,556 (1994).

(D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters. Downs has appealed NETL's use of the deliberative process privilege on the argument that the withheld materials appear to be "rather routine correspondences that specifically describe how the project is to proceed and the justification for a no-cost time extension." Appeal at 1. This office has conducted a de novo review of the documents at issue, and we conclude that the records contain material that is clearly pre-decisional and deliberative. The withheld documents set forth the opinions of employees who appear to be team members on the UPC project. The messages contain communications regarding strategy and problem solving on the project. [4]

C. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see also Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, if factual material is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its release would reveal the agency's deliberative process, that material can be withheld. Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE ¶ 80,152 (2001). NETL withheld six documents (five electronic mail messages and one memorandum) under Exemption 5 in their entirety but did not address the issue of segregability in the determination. This office reviewed a sample of the material that was withheld in its entirety, and based on our review, we find that NETL should reconsider the issue of segregability as regards several of the electronic mail messages withheld under Exemption 5. For example, our review of the six documents found that the electronic mail message dated January 20, 2005 between NETL and EE contains no segregable material. However, our review concluded that the remaining documents contain one or two sentences per message that could be released to the requester without revealing the deliberative process surrounding the UPC Project. See Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE at 80,620. Mead states that non-exempt material that is "distributed in logically related groupings" and that would not result in a "meaningless set of words and phrases" may be subject to disclosure. Mead, 566 F.2d at 261. Thus, even though there is a minimal amount of non-exempt material, only five documents are involved and segregation of that material should not pose an undue burden for NETL. Accordingly, this portion of the Appeal is remanded to NETL.

D. Fee Waiver Request

DOE charged Downs $200 for the 70 pages of responsive material it sent to Downs. In the Appeal, Downs requested that DOE waive the $200 charged for search and duplication of the material because, according to Downs, "the number of copies provided (70) is substantially under the number usually provided without charge (100) and . . . the information is in the public interest . . . ." Appeal

4 We note that NETL has provided an adequate description of the withheld documents. Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The NETL determination letter contained a description of the document, date, author and recipient. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. R.E.V. Engineering, 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 at 80,543 (2000).

at 1. Downs went on to say that the responsive material will contribute significantly to the public understanding of DOE's "grant-making activities" and will not be used commercially. Id. at 2. NETL responded that this request should be denied because Downs has not supplied information to substantiate its waiver request.

DOE regulations state that OHA may rule on a fee waiver only after the FOIA officer has denied the requester such a waiver. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8 (a). NETL has not denied Downs' request for a fee waiver because NETL never received such a request. Therefore, we have no jurisdiction over this portion of the Appeal. [5]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Downs Rachlin on January 5, 2006, OHA Case No. TFA-0141, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Energy Technology Laboratory which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: State of Nevada

Date of Filing: January 26, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0144

On January 26, 2006, the State of Nevada (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on December 28, 2005 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Repository Development (ORD). In that determination, ORD responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORD's determination identified two documents as responsive to this request. ORD withheld both documents under FOIA Exemption 5. This Appeal, if granted, would require ORD to release both documents to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On November 28, 2005, the Appellant filed a Request for Information with ORD seeking two documents: "the draft License Application submitted to DOE by its contractor, Bechtel-SAIC Company, LLC, on July 26, 2004," and "the September 2004 iteration of the draft License Application." Appeal at 2. On December 28, 2005, ORD issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) withholding both documents, in their entirety, under FOIA Exemption 5's deliberative process, attorney work product, and attorney-client privileges.[1] The ORD also asserted a fourth privilege which it has identified as "the litigation work product privilege."[2]

[1] The Determination Letter provides no justification for ORD's withholding of information under the attorney-client privilege. However, since the Appeal does not address ORD's withholdings under the attorney-client privilege, we need not address this issue.

[2] While ORD asserts that the litigation work product privilege and the attorney work product privilege constitute separate and distinct privileges, we find no support for this contention in the case law or statutes. While the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's regulations provide for a litigation work product privilege, that privilege is unavailable under the FOIA. The Supreme Court has held repeatedly that Exemption 5 exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (emphasis supplied); see FTC v. Grolier Inc. 462 U.S. 19, 26 (1983).

On January 27, 2006, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal challenging ORD's withholding determinations under Exemption 5. Specifically, the Appellant contends that:

1. information contained in the withheld documents cannot be withheld under the litigation work product exemption,
2. the description of the withheld documents contained in the Determination Letter is inadequate,
3. ORD failed to segregate information properly withheld under the deliberative process privilege from factual information which cannot be withheld under the deliberative process privilege, and
4. ORD failed to weigh the public interest in disclosure against the harm that may result from disclosure.

Appeal at 3-4.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only the application of Exemption 5 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath) (emphasis supplied). "The first condition of Exemption 5 is no less important than the second; the communication must be 'interagency or intra-agency.' 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)." Klamath, 121 S. Ct. at 1066.

For information obtained from Government sources, the Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975); see also United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799-800, 104 S.Ct. 1488 (1984) (Weber Aircraft); NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

The Deliberative Process Privilege

It is well settled that the deliberative process privilege is among the privileges that fall under Exemption 5. Klamath, 121 S. Ct. at 1065. The deliberative process covers "documents reflecting advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations comprising part of a process by which governmental decisions and policies are formulated." Sears, 421 U.S. at 150, 95 S. Ct. 1504 (internal quotation marks omitted). The deliberative process privilege rests on the obvious realization that officials will not communicate candidly among themselves if each remark is a potential item of discovery and front page news, and its object is to enhance "the quality of agency decisions," id. at 151, 95 S. Ct. 1504, by protecting open and frank discussion among those who make them within the Government. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 86-87, 93 S. Ct. 827 (1972) (Mink); see also Weber Aircraft, 465 U.S. at 802.

In order for the deliberative process to shield a document, it must be both pre-decisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. The documents in question, being drafts, are generally pre-decisional and deliberative in nature and the Appeal does not contest this point. However, as the Appellant correctly contends, the deliberative process privilege only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

Turning to the documents at issue in the present case, we find that the very nature of the draft license applications withheld by ORD under Exemption 5 suggests that significant portions of these documents are clearly factual. In most cases, we would remand this matter to ORD for a segregation analysis. However, in the present case we have found, as the ensuing section will elaborate, that both drafts may be withheld in their entirety under the attorney work product privilege. Therefore, requiring ORD to conduct a segregation analysis would result in a waste of administrative resources on a matter mooted by our holdings on the attorney work product privilege.

The Attorney Work-Product Privilege

The attorney work product privilege is among those privileges incorporated by the courts under Exemption 5. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862.

The attorney work product privilege protects from disclosure documents which reveal “the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3); see also

Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511 (1947). The work product privilege, which is codified at Fed.R. Civ.P. 26(b)(3), is intended to preserve a zone of privacy in which a lawyer or other representative of a party can prepare and develop legal theories and strategy "with an eye toward litigation," free from unnecessary intrusion by their adversaries. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 510-11 (1947). "At its core, the work product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case." United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975).

This privilege does not extend to every written document generated by an attorney or representative of a party. In order to be afforded protection under the attorney work product privilege, a document must have been prepared either for trial or in anticipation of litigation. See, e.g., Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 865. A document is considered to be prepared in anticipation of litigation, if, "in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation." Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller, and Richard L. Marcus, 8 Federal Practice and Procedure § 2024 (1994) (emphasis added) as cited in United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, 1202 (2nd Cir. 1998). The privilege is not limited to civil proceedings, but rather extends to administrative proceedings. See e.g., Martin v. Office of Special Counsel, 819 F.2d 1181, 1187 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Exxon Corp. v. Department of Energy, 585 F. Supp. 690, 700 (D.D.C. 1983).

Turning to the present Appeal, it is clear that the Draft License Applications are protected by the attorney work product privilege. The Draft License Applications are preliminary drafts of a document which, once officially issued in final form, begins an adversarial and mandatory administrative litigation proceeding.

Under the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1992 § 114(b), DOE is required to apply to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) for a license to construct and operate the Yucca Mountain Geological Waste Repository. 42 U.S.C. § 10101. Under the NRC's regulations, DOE's application for this license commences a mandatory and adversarial administrative litigation proceeding. 10 C.F.R. §§ 2.101(f), 2.104(a). Since the License Application is the operative document that triggers this administrative litigation, it is analogous to the complaint in a civil proceeding.

Accordingly, it is clear that the License Application is being prepared in anticipation of this litigation proceeding. The ORD is obviously in the process of preparing a License Application because of its desire to commence the NRC's administrative litigation process.

Release of the Draft License Applications would result in the exact type of harm that the attorney work product privilege is intended to prevent. If draft pleadings were released, opposing parties would be provided with the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, legal strategies or legal theories being considered by DOE for use in the upcoming administrative litigation proceedings before the NRC.

Accordingly, we find that ORD properly withheld the Draft License Applications under Exemption 5's attorney work product privilege.

Adequacy of the Determination

A written determination letter informs the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

The Appeal contends that the withheld documents were inadequately described. We have consistently held that determination letters must (1) adequately describe the results of searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption(s) under which information was withheld. Research Information Services, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,139 (1996); Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,767 (1996). In the present case, the descriptions of the documents provided in the Determination Letter clearly meet each of these three requirements and therefore provide an adequate description of the withheld documents.

Public Interest in Disclosure

10 C.F.R., § 1004.1 mandates that "the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." The Appellant contends that release of the withheld information would be in the public interest. We disagree. The chilling of the deliberative process and the compromise of the DOE's ability to defend the public's interests in the administrative litigation proceedings before the NRC that would result from release of the withheld information, as we have discussed above, would not further the public interest. Nor would release of mere drafts, as opposed to information reflecting actual governmental decisions and reasoning, shed any useful light on the operations and activities of the Government.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we have found that the information withheld under Exemption 5 by the Office of Repository Development was exempt from disclosure under that Exemption. Accordingly, we have concluded that the present appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of Nevada, Case No. TFA-0144, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Arlie B. Siebert

Date of Filing: January 27, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0146

Arlie B. Siebert filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Intelligence of the Department of Energy issued on December 14, 2005. In that determination, the Office of Intelligence responded to a request for information that Mr. Siebert submitted to the DOE pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, by neither confirming nor denying the existence of the records Mr. Siebert sought. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to identify any document responsive to Mr. Siebert's request and release all non-exempt information to him.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The appropriateness of the type of response that the Office of Intelligence provided to Mr. Siebert has been addressed by the Federal courts. In this Decision we review the nature of the response and reach a determination that the response was proper.

I. Background

In his request dated April 27, 2004, Mr. Siebert asked the DOE for "all documents of any kind relating to the Israeli Nuclear Weapons Program." The request was forwarded to the Office of Intelligence for action. In its December 14, 2005 response, the Office of Intelligence stated that "the Department can neither confirm nor deny the existence of information on the requested subject. Such confirmation or denial of records at issue would pose a threat to national security . . . [and] could cause diplomatic tension between Israel and the United States." It stated that its response was based on Exemption 1 of the FOIA.[*] The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of responsive information. Mr. Siebert points out in his Appeal that if responsive documents contain classified information that may properly be withheld under an exemption of the FOIA, that information should be redacted from the documents and the remainder provided to him.

[*] The response also referred to Exemption 3 of the FOIA. We do not address Exemption 3 in this determination, because we have determined that the appropriate response regarding all information Mr. Siebert seeks in his request is to neither confirm nor deny its existence under Exemption 1.

II. Analysis

Although the Department rarely responds to requests for information in this manner, the Office of Intelligence's statement that it will neither confirm nor deny the existence of records responsive to Mr. Siebert's request is not without precedent. See, e.g., A. Victorian, 25 DOE ¶ 80,188 (1996). This type of response is commonly called a Glomar response, which refers to the first instance in which the adequacy of such a response was upheld by a Federal Court. In Phillippi v. CIA, the agency responded to a request for documents pertaining to a submarine-retrieval ship named the Hughes Glomar Explorer by neither confirming nor denying the existence of any such documents. Phillippi v. CIA, 546 F.2d 1009 (D.C. Cir. 1976). Agencies have typically used this response where the existence or non-existence of requested documents is itself a classified fact exempt from disclosure under Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA, see, e.g., id. at 1012, or where admission that documents exist would indicate that the agency was involved in a certain issue, Gardels v. CIA, 689 F.2d 1100 (D.C. Cir. 1982), or that an individual is the target of investigation or surveillance, Marrera v. Department of Justice, 622 F. Supp. 51 (D.D.C. 1985).

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12958, as amended by Executive Order 13292, is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification, declassification and safeguarding of national security information. When properly classified under this Executive Order, national security information is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1.

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). As the result of reorganization within the Department, this function is now the responsibility of the Deputy Director of the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance (Deputy Director). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Director reviewed the Office of Intelligence's response to Mr. Siebert's request for information. Based on the Deputy Director's review, we have determined that Executive Order 12958 requires the DOE to continue to neither confirm nor deny the existence of information responsive to Mr. Siebert's request. The denying official for the DOE's response on appeal is Mr. Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Director, Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance, Department of Energy.

Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 1, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order. Mr. Siebert has raised additional arguments in his Appeal in support of the search for and release of responsive documents that he maintains must exist. By affirming the Office of Intelligence's Glomar response, we need not address these arguments, because we are not acknowledging the existence of any such documents. Accordingly, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Arlie B. Siebert on January 27, 2006, Case No. TFA-0146, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Marilyn R. Sutton

Date of Filing: January 30, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0147

On January 30, 2006, Marilyn R. Sutton filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on January 5, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (LM). In that determination, LM responded to a request for documents that Ms. Sutton submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LM stated that, since it had no way of identifying the requested documents, it was unable to locate the documents and provide Ms. Sutton with the requested information. This appeal, if granted, would require LM to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On August 12, 2005, Ms. Sutton filed a request for eleven enclosures contained in a letter from Mr. James J. Fiore, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Energy, to Mr. William R. Augustine, Deputy Chief Programs Management Division, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, dated October 19, 1999. The letter did not identify the enclosures by name. Letter from Marilyn R. Sutton to James J. Fiore, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Energy (August 12, 2005). LM issued a determination which directed Ms. Sutton to the "Considered Sites Database," an electronic database maintained by LM. Letter from Tony R. Carter, LM, to Marilyn R. Sutton (October 6, 2005) (First Determination Letter). LM determined that any information relevant to Ms. Sutton's request was contained in the database. LM did not provide Ms. Sutton with any documents; rather, the determination included instructions for accessing and searching the database. Id. Ms. Sutton appealed that determination stating that, although the letter she referenced in her request was available in the database, the documents she requested were not available. In processing that appeal, we learned that since the letter did not identify the titles of the requested enclosures, a search of LM's paper files was necessary to attempt to identify and locate the documents.

Accordingly, we remanded the matter to LM and directed that LM perform a search of its paper files. See Marilyn R. Sutton, Case No. TFA-0132 (December 9, 2005).

On January 5, 2006, LM issued a determination stating that a search of its paper files yielded no new information. Consequently, LM was again unable to identify the requested documents. LM restated that any information possibly relevant to Ms. Sutton's request was contained in the "Considered Sites Database." Letter from Tony R. Carter, LM, to Marilyn R. Sutton (January 5, 2006) (Second Determination Letter).

In the instant appeal, Ms. Sutton challenges LM's second determination letter. Ms. Sutton maintains that it is LM's responsibility to identify and provide her with the responsive records. Letter from Marilyn R. Sutton to OHA (January 21, 2006).

II. Analysis

It is well established that, in responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted LM to discuss the search for the requested records. LM informed us that it conducted a search of its paper files but was unable to locate the requested records. LM informed us that, because the letter referenced in Ms. Sutton's initial request did not identify the enclosures by name, it was impossible to identify those documents. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sheila Dillard, LM, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (February 6, 2006). According to LM,

> [The] search consisted of a manual review of record indexes and electronic queries of metadata in the [LM] records management system. The search consisted of all active and inactive record holdings on site and in the custody of LM in Federal Records Centers. Records personnel also queried the DOE Office of Environmental Management FUSRAP Considered Sites Database. The subject letter was found in the FUSRAP collection, but the attached list of enclosures was not present. Each document in the site collection, which is approximately [one] cubic foot in volume, was also thoroughly reviewed.

See Electronic Mail Message from Sheila Dillard to Diane DeMoura (February 27, 2006). Additionally, LM located and contacted Mr. Fiore, the original author of the letter, but his staff was also unsuccessful in locating the requested enclosures. See Electronic Mail Message from Sheila Dillard to Diane DeMoura (February 6, 2006).

Based on this information, we find that, despite being unsuccessful in identifying the requested documents, LM's search was extensive and reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Sutton's request and was, therefore, adequate. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 29 DOE ¶ 80,105 (2004). Accordingly, this appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 30, 2006 by Marilyn R. Sutton, OHA Case No. TFA-0147, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Ed Aguilar
Date of Filing:	February 10, 2006
Case Number:	TFA-0148

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by the Mr. Ed Aguilar from a determination issued to him by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Richland denied a request for a document that Mr. Aguilar submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, and the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. In his Appeal, he seeks the release of the requested document.

In his FOIA/PA request, Mr. Aguilar sought access to "the complete CH2M Hill Hanford Group (CHG) sexual harassment report done by investigator Ms. Rebecca Dean." Appeal at 1. In its determination, Richland stated that under CHG's contract with the DOE, all employment-related records, including those of employee-related investigations, are the property of CHG and are therefore not subject to the FOIA or the PA. Richland therefore denied the request. In his Appeal, Mr. Aguilar contests this determination.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. The Act does not, however, specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record that is subject to FOIA requirements. This issue was addressed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Department of Justice vs. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. See also William H. Payne, 27 DOE ¶ 80,125 (1998). Under the FOIA, "agency" means any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . ., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f).

The PA generally requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The Act defines a "system of records" as "a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5). The PA adopts the FOIA definition of "agency" set forth in the preceding paragraph. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(1).

During the course of our consideration of this Appeal, we contacted Richland for further information. We were informed that no document such as that requested by Mr. Aguilar was created by the DOE or has been in the possession or control of the DOE. Moreover, Mr. Aguilar does not contend, nor do we find, that CHG, a privately-owned and operated DOE contractor, is an "agency." Consequently, the document requested by Mr. Aguilar would not be an agency record for purposes of the FOIA or part of an agency system of records for purposes of the PA.

A finding that certain documents are not agency records, however, does not preclude the DOE from releasing them. "When a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor," unless those records are otherwise exempt from public disclosure. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). We have examined the CHG contract. Under section I.109 of that agreement, employment-related records, such as "workers' compensation files, employee relations records, records on salary and employee benefits, drug testing records, labor negotiation records, records on ethics, employee concerns, and other employee-related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality" are the property of the contractor. Therefore, records of investigations such as that requested by Mr. Aguilar are the property of CHG, and are not subject to release under the PA, the FOIA, or the DOE's records regulation. We will therefore deny Mr. Aguilar's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mr. Ed Aguilar, OHA Case Number TFA-0148, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B) (FOIA) and 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1) (PA). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	State of Nevada
Date of Filing:	February 14, 2006
Case Number:	TFA-0149

On February 14, 2006, the State of Nevada (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on January 30, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Repository Development (ORD). In that determination, ORD released material and withheld 13 documents under Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Exemption 5. This Appeal, if granted, would require ORD to release these documents to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On May 27, 2004, the Appellant filed a request for information under the FOIA with ORD. That request sought information concerning the License Support Network database being created by the DOE in connection with its application for a license to construct the Yucca Mountain Project (YMP). On November 24, 2004, ORD issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing numerous responsive documents to the Appellant and withholding numerous responsive documents in their entirety. On January 5, 2005, the Appellant filed an appeal of that determination with this office. We issued a Decision and Order on May 24, 2005 granting the Appellant's January 5, 2005 Appeal in part. On December 5, 2005, ORD issued a new determination letter as required by our May 24, 2005 Decision and Order. The December 5, 2005 determination letter released additional documents to the Appellant, but continued to withhold documents. The Appellant and ORD entered into apparently unsuccessful negotiations concerning these remaining documents. On January 30, 2006, ORD issued a supplemental determination letter clarifying its December 5, 2005 determination letter.

On February 5, 2006, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal challenging ORD's withholding determinations concerning 13 specific documents under Exemption 5. Appeal at 11-12. Specifically, the Appellant contends that:

1. information contained in the withheld documents cannot be withheld under the litigation work product exemption,
2. the description of the withheld documents contained in the Determination Letter is inadequate, and
3. ORD failed to weigh the public interest in disclosure against the harm that may result from disclosure.

Appeal at 2-3.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only the application of Exemption 5 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath) (emphasis supplied). "The first condition of Exemption 5 is no less important than the second; the communication must be 'interagency or intra-agency.' 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)." Klamath, 121 S. Ct. at 1066.

For information obtained from Government sources, the Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975); see also United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799-800, 104 S.Ct. 1488 (1984) (Weber Aircraft); NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). In the present case, only the attorney work product privilege is at issue. The attorney work product privilege is among those privileges incorporated by the courts in litigation under Exemption 5. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862.

The attorney work product privilege protects from disclosure documents which reveal "the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3); see also Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511 (1947). The work product privilege, which is codified at Fed.R. Civ.P. 26(b)(3), is intended to preserve a zone of privacy in which a lawyer or other representative of a party can prepare and develop legal theories and strategy "with an eye toward litigation," free from unnecessary intrusion by their adversaries. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 510-11 (1947). "At its core, the work product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case." United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975).

This privilege does not extend to every written document generated by an attorney or representative of a party. In order to be afforded protection under the attorney work product privilege, a document must have been prepared either for trial or in anticipation of litigation. See, e.g., Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 865. A document is considered to be prepared in anticipation of litigation if, "in light of the nature of the document and the factual situation in the particular case, the document can fairly be said to have been prepared or obtained because of the prospect of litigation." Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller, and Richard L. Marcus, 8 Federal Practice and Procedure § 2024 (1994) (emphasis added) as cited in United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194, 1202 (2nd Cir. 1998). The privilege is not limited to civil proceedings, but extends to administrative proceedings as well. See e.g., Martin v. Office of Special Counsel, 819 F.2d 1181, 1187 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Exxon Corp. v. Department of Energy, 585 F. Supp. 690, 700 (D.D.C. 1983).

Turning to the present Appeal, it is clear that the 13 withheld documents are protected by the attorney work product privilege. Under the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1992 § 114(b), DOE is required to apply to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) for a license to construct and operate the Yucca Mountain Geological Waste Repository. 42 U.S.C. § 10101. Under the NRC's regulations, DOE's application for this license commences a mandatory and adversarial administrative litigation proceeding. 10 C.F.R. §§ 2.101(f), 2.104(a). In order to facilitate the efficient and fair administration of this litigation, the NRC required ORD to create a database of information relevant to this proceeding, to be known as the Licensing Support Network (LSN). Each of the 13 withheld documents concerns ORD's attempts to comply with the NRC's mandate to create the LSN and the ORD's attempts to decide which information is to be included in the LSN. Accordingly, it is clear that each of the 13 withheld documents was prepared in anticipation of this litigation proceeding. From their context, it is evident that ORD produced these documents in anticipation of and because of the NRC's administrative litigation process.

Moreover, the documents contain sensitive, confidential information. Release of the 13 withheld documents would result in the exact type of harm that the attorney work product privilege is intended to prevent. If this information were to be released, opposing parties would be provided with the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, legal strategies or legal theories being considered by DOE for use in the upcoming administrative litigation proceedings before the NRC.

Accordingly, we find that ORD properly withheld each of the 13 withheld documents under Exemption 5's attorney work product privilege.

Adequacy of the Determination

A written determination letter informs the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

The Appeal contends that the 13 withheld documents were inadequately described. We do not agree. We have consistently held that determination letters must (1) adequately describe the results of searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption(s) under which information was withheld. Research Information Services, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,139 (1996); Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,767 (1996). In the present case, the descriptions of the documents provided in the Determination Letters clearly meet each of these three requirements and therefore provide an adequate description of the 13 withheld documents.

Public Interest in Disclosure

10 C.F.R. § 1004.1 mandates that "the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." The Appellant contends that release of the withheld information would be in the public interest. We disagree. The compromise of the DOE's ability to defend the public's interest in the administrative litigation proceedings before the NRC that would result from release of the withheld information, as we have discussed above, would not further the public interest.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we have found that the information withheld under Exemption 5 by the Office of Repository Development was exempt from disclosure under that Exemption. Accordingly, we have concluded that the present appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of Nevada, Case No. TFA-0149, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeals

Name of Petitioner: L. Daniel Glass

Date of Filing: February 27, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0150

On February 27, 2006, L. Daniel Glass (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on January 30, 2006. BPA's determination responded to a request for a specific document that Appellant submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, BPA released the document with portions redacted. In his Appeal, the Appellant challenges BPA's redaction of the requested document. If granted, this Appeal would require BPA to produce the subject document in its entirety.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On January 3, 2006, the Appellant filed a FOIA request for a "copy of Dean Landers report." Request Letter dated January 3, 2006, from Appellant to Vickie Van Zandt, BPA. Mr. Landers, a BPA employee, had prepared a report of workplace controversies at BPA brought forward by concerned employees. Determination Letter dated January 30, 2006, from Christina J. Brannon, FOIA Officer, BPA, to Appellant. In the Determination Letter, BPA withheld portions of the report under Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA. In his Appeal, the Appellant claims that the material sent to him does not answer his questions and is not in the "spirit of the [FOIA] as it applies to [him]." Appeal Letter dated February 23, 2006, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958)).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In addition to providing categories of records exempt from mandatory disclosure, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

BPA has withheld portions of the requested document from the Appellant, claiming that those portions contain information that is predecisional and part of the deliberative process. We have reviewed the document and believe that the portions BPA withheld were properly withheld under Exemption 5. There is factual information in the document, but it is so intertwined as to make segregation virtually impossible. Further, the factual information in question was selected from a larger quantity of factual information such that the selection would reveal the deliberative process. The report was prepared by Mr. Landers who interviewed many individuals but only provided selected information in his report. Release of the factual information in the document would reveal Mr. Landers' thought processes.

The fact that material falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the subject matter of the document, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the withheld material is composed mainly of predecisional, non-factual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld material is far outweighed by the chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. Accordingly, we conclude that release of the withheld information would not be in the public interest.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See also Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999); Sowell, Todd, Lafitte and Watson LLC, 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (1999) (Sowell).

BPA applied Exemption 6 to the report to withhold the identities of individuals (1) who were interviewed by Mr. Landers, (2) who brought their concerns forward to management, (3) against whom allegations were made, and (4) who gave or received monetary awards. In addition, BPA withheld Mr. Landers' personal telephone number and electronic mail address. Applying these standards to the facts of this case, we believe that the individuals whom Mr. Landers interviewed and who brought their concerns to management have a significant interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their opinions and comments. It is our belief the individuals would expect such opinions to be kept confidential within the confines of the DOE and its contractors. Dissemination of their names would lead to less candor in any similar investigation in the future. Cappabianca v. Commissioner, United States Customs Service, 847 F. Supp. 1558, 1564 (M.D. Fla. 1994) (witnesses and co-workers have substantial privacy interest in the nondisclosure of their participation in an investigation for Exemption 6 purposes). Therefore, we find that there is a significant privacy interest in the identities of both those individuals interviewed by Mr. Landers and those who brought their concerns to management. Similarly, the individuals against whom allegations were made and who received awards maintain a privacy interest in having their identities remain confidential. Even though these individuals were not guaranteed confidentiality, they would not want the allegations made against them or the awards they received disseminated to the general public. It is our belief that they would expect such information to be kept confidential within the confines of the DOE and its contractors. Finally, Mr. Landers has a significant expectation of privacy regarding his personal telephone number and e-mail address.

Moreover, release of this information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations of the federal government. Although the information might provide insight into the opinions of the Appellant's previous co-workers, the identities of those individuals who were interviewed would not further the public interest as their names would not shed light on the operations of the federal government. Also, releasing Mr. Landers' telephone number and e-mail address would not illuminate the workings of the federal government.

We find that release of the information withheld by BPA pursuant to Exemption 6 would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. There is a significant privacy interest in maintaining the confidentially of the withheld information. Further release of this information would not shed light on the operations of government. Thus, BPA correctly applied Exemption 6 in withholding this document.

III. Conclusion

BPA properly withheld the information contained in the Landers report under Exemption 5. In addition, BPA properly invoked Exemption 6 to withhold names and other personnel identifiers in the document. Based on the reasons stated above, we will denied the Appeal.[*/]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

[*/] In his Appeal, the Appellant states that the document, which BPA released, does not answer his questions. We note that the FOIA is not a mechanism for answering questions. Under the FOIA, agencies are required only to release non-exempt, responsive documents; they are not required to answer questions about an agency's operations. DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978).

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Fulbright & Jaworski

Date of Filing: March 2, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0151

On March 2, 2006, Fulbright & Jaworski, L.L.P. (Fulbright) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on February 3, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA). In that determination, NNSA responded to a request for documents Fulbright submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA determined that it could locate no documents responsive to Fulbright's request. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to perform an additional search and either release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On January 10, 2006, NNSA received Fulbright's request for "documents constituting, relating or referring to the 'review' or 'peer review' conducted in or around late 2004 by the Department of Defense (DOD), in which [NNSA] participated, involving the proposed or intended use of the Mark III [Free-Electron Laser (FEL)] (located at Duke University) by the Department of the Army and/or the University of Hawaii." Letter from Richard M. Speidel, NNSA, to Fulbright (February 3, 2006) (Determination Letter). In its determination letter, NNSA informed Fulbright that a search for information relevant to its request yielded no responsive documents. Id.

In its appeal, Fulbright challenges the adequacy of NNSA's search for responsive documents. In support of its argument, Fulbright maintains that NNSA "confirmed to numerous people that it participated in a 'peer review' of the University of Hawaii's proposed research with the Mark III FEL." Letter from Fulbright to OHA (March 2, 2006) (Appeal Letter). Fulbright cites several letters in which NNSA personnel inform the recipient that it "recently participated" in a review conducted by the DOD or that it "intend[ed] to conduct a peer review." Id. Fulbright also argues that, because the determination letter did not contain a description of the search for records, it is unable to determine whether NNSA's search was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to its request. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted NNSA to ascertain the scope of the search. NNSA informed us that it forwarded the request to the appropriate program office, Defense Programs, and learned that no documents responsive to Fulbright's request existed. According to NNSA, although it had intended to conduct a peer review focusing on the Mark III FEL, ultimately, no such review was conducted. See Electronic Mail Message from Richard M. Speidel, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (March 30, 2006). Consequently, because NNSA did not perform a peer review, it generated no documents pertaining to such a review. NNSA also stated that it believed the Department of the Army was going to conduct a peer review. NNSA stated, however, that the review "turned out to be a program review that did not focus on the Mark III" but where the Mark III FEL may have been discussed. Id. NNSA informed us that, although a representative of NNSA was present at the review as an observer, NNSA did not formally participate in the Army's review. Id. NNSA added that it did not generate any documents pertaining to the Army's review. Id.

Based on the foregoing information, we find that NNSA's search was calculated to uncover documents responsive to Fulbright's request and, therefore, adequate. NNSA forwarded the request to the appropriate office for a search. Personnel in that office had definitive knowledge that NNSA neither conducted a review nor formally participated in the Army's review and, therefore, generated no documents relating to those reviews. Consequently, no further search was undertaken since documents were known not to exist. Had NNSA conducted a review or formally participated in another agency's review, then one might expect that NNSA would have generated documents regarding those reviews. In such a case, a more exhaustive search would be required. In this case, however, NNSA was not required to undertake a search for documents it knew with a certainty did not exist. Accordingly, NNSA's search was adequate and, therefore, Fulbright's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on March 2, 2006 by Fulbright & Jaworski, L.L.P., OHA Case No. TFA-0151, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Samuel D. Johnson
Date of Filing:	March 7, 2006 April 12, 2006
Case Number:	TFA-0152 TFA-0160

On March 7, 2006, Samuel D. Johnson (Johnson) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group (HQ) of the Department of Energy (DOE) on February 3, 2006, in response to a request for documents that Johnson submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Johnson also filed an Appeal on April 12, 2006, that was combined with the previous appeal for administrative efficiency. These Appeals, if granted, would require that HQ perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

Johnson made two FOIA requests to DOE/HQ, one in 2002 and one in 2005. On September 24, 2002, Johnson requested a copy of all items in his DOE personnel file. Letter from Johnson to Abel Lopez, HQ (September 24, 2002). HQ assigned the request number F2002-00490 and forwarded the request to the Office of Counterintelligence (CN) and the Office of Personnel Security (HS). HQ sent Johnson a partial response on November 28, 2003 that contained 57 documents from his file and on April 21, 2005, DOE sent Johnson a final determination letter. Along with the letter, HQ released two documents from CN, one unredacted document and one redacted document. The redacted document, a memorandum discussing a summary of information derived from a polygraph Johnson took in 2001, contained deletions pursuant to Exemption 7 of the FOIA. On June 24, 2005, Johnson appealed the April 2005 determination. OHA contacted HQ to determine if any other responsive documents could be located. HS located additional responsive material and sent that information to Johnson on August 24, 2005. HQ responded that they had provided additional documents related to Johnson's original request and that additional information could be forthcoming. In November 2005, OHA directed CN to release any additional responsive material to Johnson or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any responsive material. See Samuel D. Johnson, 29 DOE ¶ 80,231 (2005) (OHA Case No. TFA-0107).

A. TFA-0152

Johnson made an additional request to HQ in May 17, 2005 for ten items and HQ forwarded that request, assigned number F2005-00275, to CN and HS. On February 3, 2006, HQ sent Johnson a determination letter. Letter from DOE to Johnson (February 3, 2006) (Determination). Of the ten items, HQ stated that six do not exist. As regards the other four items, Item 1 (a copy of a letter postponing an administrative review hearing) had been released previously to Johnson, and Item 2 (correspondence regarding an alleged interview held on January 17, 2003) was released in its entirety in the determination. HQ also stated that the two remaining items responsive to the initial request had been sent to CN and, in addition, if any further responsive material was found in the files of HS, it would be reviewed and released if not exempt. Letter from Abel Lopez, HQ to Johnson (February 3, 2006). Johnson found the response to be unacceptable and filed this Appeal on March 7, 2006. OHA assigned case number TFA-0152 to the Appeal.

A. TFA-0160

In response to F2002-00490 and F2005-00275, CN released several items to Johnson in 2006. On March 2, 2006, CN sent Johnson a letter regarding his first appeal, OHA Case No. TFA-0107. In that letter, CN released a document entitled "Summary of Polygraph Derived Information" to Johnson in its entirety. CN had previously withheld one portion of the document under FOIA Exemption 7(E), but then reconsidered the deletion and decided to release the document in its entirety. On March 14, 2006, CN sent Johnson a letter regarding polygraph material he had requested.[1] First, CN decided to withhold the video and audio tape record of the polygraph examination under FOIA Exemptions 7(A) and 7(E).[2] "[Exemption] 7(E) permits the withholding of records of information compiled for law enforcement purposes, the production of which would disclose investigative techniques and procedures for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions would disclose guidelines for law enforcement prosecution if such disclosure could reasonably be expected to risk circumvention of the law." Letter from CN to Johnson (March 14, 2006). CN stated that the Department of Defense Polygraph Institute, which oversees federal polygraphs, has ruled that any existing audio or videotapes of polygraph examinations constitute law enforcement records and qualify for exemptions 7(A) and 7(E). Id. Second, CN informed Johnson that there is no transcript of the statement made by the Polygraph Examiner. The video and audio tape record of the polygraph has never been transcribed and the FOIA does not compel an agency to create a record in order to satisfy a FOIA request. Third, the Polygraph Program, CN and DOE do not prepare independent determinations that assess the integrity and honesty of any polygraph examinee. Finally,

[1] Johnson had requested: (1) a copy of the video or audio recording or a transcript of the discussion between Johnson and the polygraph examiner in September 2001; and (2) a written statement from the examiner about his impressions and evaluations of Johnson's integrity and truthfulness.

[2] Exemption 7(A) applies to a pending law enforcement proceeding. Since we have no evidence that there is an ongoing investigation, we will not address Exemption 7(A).

CN stated that it does not maintain any related documents regarding Johnson's case that have been changed since his original request for information in September 24, 2002. On March 28, 2006,

Johnson sent CN a letter asking them to reconsider their findings. CN forwarded that letter to OHA, which accepted the letter as a FOIA appeal on April 12, 2006, and assigned it OHA Case No. TFA-0160.

Johnson submitted substantial information with each of his letters, and maintained that the appeals should be consolidated since he has made only one true request, that of September 24, 2002. However, due to the large volume of material that he submitted, it was not clear what material Johnson requested. In his letters, Johnson asked for a variety of information, much of it redundant. We will examine both appeals together in the interest of administrative efficiency and to minimize confusion regarding this case. After extensive review of the many letters and documents that he submitted, we asked Johnson to clarify the relief that he seeks on Appeal. In response, Johnson stated that he sought the following items: (1) an excerpt from the actual polygraph report regarding Johnson's veracity that Johnson alleges should be on file in CN's Record System; (2) a report provided to SO-2 (now HS) reporting the results of an interview with Brigadier General Haeckel in January 2002; (3) documentation of the approval of the OHA Director to extend the hearing date for his personnel security review beyond the 90 day regulatory limit; (4) documentation disclosing the name of the individual who authorized sending a copy of some contents of his file to OPM between October 2001 and January 2002; and (5) a statement that CN has improperly delayed the processing of his appeals. Electronic mail message from Johnson toValerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 7, 2006).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

A. Polygraph Report

Johnson was the subject of a polygraph examination in September 2001. According to Johnson, the polygraph examiner called Johnson "the most honest person" that the examiner had ever examined and "he also volunteered the statement that it is virtually impossible for [Johnson] to lie." Electronic mail message from Johnson to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 7, 2006). Johnson also alleges that the polygraph examiner stated that he was going to make an entry in the official report about the polygraph. Johnson insists that this statement exists in DOE Record System 15. He requests a copy of the portion of the actual polygraph record that contains these statements or, in the alternative, a brief statement from the polygraph examiner that he did in fact say those things.

CN responded to Johnson that polygraph reports are exempt under FOIA Exemptions 7(A) and (E) as law enforcement records. We agree with CN that the video of the examination was properly withheld under Exemption 7(E). Courts have endorsed withholding polygraph examinations on the basis that disclosure of their details could reduce or nullify their effectiveness. See Hale v. Department of Justice, 973 F.2d 894, 902-03 (10th Cir. 1992) (concluding that disclosure of "polygraph matters" could lessen effectiveness); Piper v. Department of Justice, 294 F. Supp. 2d 16, 30 (D.D.C. 2003) (declaring that polygraph materials were properly withheld); Shores v. FBI, 185 F. Supp. 2d 77, 84 (D.D.C. 2002); Coleman v. FBI, 13 F. Supp. 2d 75, 83 (D.D.C. 1998) (holding that disclosure of details of polygraph examination would frustrate enforcement of law).[3] As regards a statement by the examiner, no such document exists in DOE's records, and the FOIA does not require an agency to create a document that does not exist.

B. Alleged Interview

Johnson also requested the record of an alleged interview conducted with Brigadier General Ronald Haeckel on or about January 2002. According to Johnson, two employees of HS interviewed Brigadier General Haeckel regarding Johnson in January 2002. Johnson contends that a report should have been created by the interviewers, and he requests a copy of the alleged report. In the alternative, if there is no report, he wants a statement from the interviewers that they did not make one, and what they would have put in a report, if they had made one. Electronic mail message from Johnson to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 8, 2006). He argues that there must be a report of that interview because DOE regulations require that interviewers submit a report summarizing the interview and that the report be placed in the individual's personnel file in DOE Record System 43.

We contacted Dave McVicker, one of the individuals alleged to have interviewed Brigadier General Haeckel. McVicker stated that there was no formal interview; rather, he had a ten minute "off the record" discussion with Haeckel in January 2002 during a routine background investigation.[4] Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dave McVicker and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, [3] Nonetheless, at our request CN agreed to review the polygraph video for the information that Johnson described. The manager of the Polygraph Center performed the review and located the only remarks that could be construed as responsive. She concluded that the statements made by the polygraph examiner were actually an interrogation technique used to keep an individual talking while the individual discloses relevant data to the examiner. Electronic Mail Message from CN to Valerie Vance Adeyeye (August 2, 2006). As stated above, Exemption 7(E) protects this type of technique from disclosure to the public under the FOIA. See Hale, 973 F.2d at 902-903.

[4] The interview was conducted "off the record" at Haeckel's request. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dave McVicker and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (December 21, 2006).

OHA (December 21, 2006). According to McVicker, there was no formal interview and therefore no report. Further, the FOIA does not require an agency to create a new document in response to a FOIA request. Regardless of Johnson's interpretation of the regulation that a responsive document was or should have been created in this situation, no such document exists.

C. Extension of Hearing Date

Johnson also requests a copy of documentation of the approval of the Director of OHA to extend the date of an administrative hearing under 10 C.F.R. Part 710.[5] In the alternative, Johnson requests a statement from the Director of OHA that he approved the extension. At our request, the Hearing Officer provided a copy of his electronic mail notification to the Director requesting an extension of the date for that hearing. We asked him to search for any record of the Director's response to this request. The Hearing Officer searched and found no such document. Electronic Mail Message from Fred Brown, OHA, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 12, 2006). Thus, even though the Hearing Officer requested an extension from the Director, as the regulations require, there is no record that the Director either approved or disapproved the request. As stated previously, the FOIA does not require the agency to create a new document in response to Johnson's request for a statement from the OHA Director.

D. Transmittal to OPM

Johnson also requested a copy of the documentation that authorized the alleged transmittal of some of the contents of his personnel file to OPM. According to Johnson, he has "a letter from OPM informing [him] that this was done, so it is undeniable that it happened. This OPM letter also strongly implies that doing so was a violation of the FOI/PA . . . ." Electronic mail message from Johnson to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 8, 2006).

We examined the documentation surrounding this issue and conclude that Johnson has misinterpreted what occurred. DOE forwarded Johnson's FOIA request to OPM on January 14, 2003, advising OPM that DOE had located two OPM investigations relating to Johnson in DOE files. Letter from Office of Security, DOE to OPM (January 14, 2003). As is standard procedure in response to a FOIA request, the originating agency must review the documents and determine if the responsive material can be released. As regards the investigations, OPM was the originating agency. DOE did not send those documents to OPM, but rather gave OPM the investigation case numbers so that OPM could easily locate and review the files. Since no material was transmitted to OPM, there is no material responsive to the request for documentation of a transmittal.

E. CN Statement

On March 2, 2006, CN responded to Johnson regarding his appeal of OHA Case No. TFA-0107 and sent him some responsive material. On March 14, 2006, CN sent Johnson a final response. CN directed Johnson to challenge a denial by writing directly to OHA, but Johnson instead replied to CN on March 28, 2006. On April 6, 2006, CN forwarded Johnson's response to OHA for review, stating that Johnson's letter "appears to be an appeal." Letter from CN to Director, OHA (April 6, 2006). Johnson requests a statement from OHA that CN's statement was improper and delays HQ's effort to comply with Johnson's request. Electronic mail message from Johnson to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 8, 2006).

[5] 10 C.F.R § 710.25 (g) requires the approval of the OHA Director for an extension of a hearing date.

As stated previously, the purpose of the FOIA is to provide the public with access to existing documents, not to create new documents at the request of the public. Thus, we have no obligation to create the statement that Johnson requests. Further, we conclude that CN did not cause a delay in DOE's effort to comply with Johnson's request. Johnson contacted CN on March 28, and CN forwarded his letter to OHA approximately one week later. There was nothing about CN's actions that appeared improper or untimely.

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that CN, OHA and HS conducted searches that were reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Johnson has not provided any evidence that the items he requested exist. He has requested that DOE create new documents, a request that is outside the scope of the FOIA. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeals filed by Samuel D. Johnson on March 7, 2006 and April 12, 2006, OHA Case Numbers TFA-0152 and TFA-0160, are hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Joseph K. Huffman

Date of Filing: March 15, 2006

Case Numbers: TFA-0153

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Joseph K. Huffman filed from a determination that was issued to him by the Manager of the Pacific Northwest Site Office (PNSO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information that Mr. Huffman filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In that determination, PNSO denied Mr. Huffman's request. In his Appeal, Mr. Huffman seeks the release of the withheld information, or, in the alternative, that we remand this matter to PNSO for the issuance of another determination letter.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1) - (9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1) - (9).

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Mr. Huffman sought access to "all data, code, and non-restricted documentation in machine readable format from the computer mouse biometric project known as 'Rainer.'" Determination Letter at 1. In its determination letter, PNSO stated that the "Federal agency sponsoring the project [the work product of which] you requested" considers that work product to be "Official Use Only," and that it is therefore subject to withholding under FOIA Exemption 2 (5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2)). The letter goes on to state that the "project involves sensitive critical infrastructure information regarding systems and assets vital to the United States, and that public release of this information would have a debilitating impact on security, national economic security, and public safety." Id.

In his Appeal, Mr. Huffman contends that PNSO did not follow the proper procedure in processing his request. Specifically, he contends that if the requested information belongs entirely to another agency, PNSO should have referred his request to that agency for direct response to the requester, "rather than assert that agency's denial decision." Appeal at 2. Mr. Huffman therefore requests that we remand this matter to PNSO for referral to the unnamed federal agency and a direct response to him. In the alternative, Mr. Huffman challenges the agency's withholding of the requested material under Exemption 2.

II. Analysis

When the DOE receives a FOIA request for information in its possession that is the property of another federal agency, the applicable regulations require that the request be referred to that agency. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(f)(1). That other agency should then process the request and respond directly to the requester. See Rzeslawski v. United States Department of Justice, No. 97-1156, slip op. at 6 (D.D.C. July 23, 1998); Stone v. Defense Investigative Service, No. 91-2013, 1992 WL 52560, at *1 (D.D.C. Feb. 24, 1992). See also Research Information Services, Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (November 27, 1997). Although it is evident that PNSO did consult with the unnamed agency, we agree with Mr. Huffman that the correct procedure in this case would have been for PNSO to formally refer this mater to the agency for direct response to the requester. We will therefore remand this matter to PNSO for referral to the unnamed agency, and for a direct response to Mr. Huffman by that agency.

Although we are remanding this matter for referral to another agency, we believe it appropriate to discuss the adequacy of PNSO's determination letter, as this is an issue that is likely to recur in future Appeals. Once the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992). Thus, an agency withholding material under Exemption 2 must explain how that exemption was applied.

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency. 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R.§ 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, high two information. An agency seeking to withhold information under high two must be able to show that (1) the requested information is predominantly internal, and (2) its disclosure significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes. Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir.1978) (en banc).

The justification for withholding the requested information under Exemption 2 provided to PNSO by the unnamed agency does not adequately address either of these requirements. When used by the DOE, the term "Official Use Only" reflects an agency determination that the information in question is protected from mandatory FOIA disclosure under one or more of eight of the exemptions set forth at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). * See DOE Order 471.3, Identifying and Protecting Official Use Only Information. However, this designation by itself is insufficient as a justification for withholding information under the FOIA because it does not explain how the exemption in question was applied, thereby making it impossible for the requester to formulate a meaningful appeal, and for this Office to evaluate that appeal. In this case, the justification provided by the unnamed agency does not indicate whether the requested material is "predominantly internal," i.e., whether or not it purports to regulate activities among members of the public or sets standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public. Cox v. United States Department of Justice, 576 F.2d 1302 (8th Cir. 1978). Furthermore, although the DOE has very important statutory and regulatory obligations to protect the national security and ensure public safety, the justification does not indicate how release of the requested information would circumvent those obligations. We are therefore left to speculate as to the manner in which the unnamed agency applied Exemption 2 in withholding the requested information.

For the reasons set forth above, we will remand this matter to PNSO. On remand, PNSO should refer Mr. Huffman's request to the unnamed agency for direct response to the requester.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Joseph K. Huffman, Case Number TFA-0153, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Pacific Northwest Site Office, which shall refer Mr. Huffman's request to the agency that owns the requested information for direct response to Mr. Huffman.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Ronnie J. Simon

Date of Filing: March 17, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0154

On March 17, 2006, Ronnie J. Simon (Simon) filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on February 10, 2006, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (GO). In that determination, GO responded to a request for documents that Simon submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. GO identified several documents responsive to Simon's request. Some of those documents were released in their entirety and, pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA, others were released with some deletions or withheld in their entirety. Simon challenged the withholding of information and the amount of the fees he was charged in connection with the processing of his FOIA request. This appeal, if granted, would require GO to release the withheld information to Simon and reconsider the fees charged.

I. Background

Simon requested copies of all Cooperative Agreements awarded in connection with the DOE's "Controlled Hydrogen Fleet and Infrastructure Demonstration and Validation Project." See Letter from GO to Simon (February 10, 2006) (Determination Letter). According to GO, the DOE awarded a Cooperative Agreement to each of the following applicants: Chevron Texaco Technology Ventures, L.L.C.; General Motors Corporation; Ford Motor Company; and Daimler-Chrysler Corporation (hereinafter "the four award recipients"). Id. GO identified several documents responsive to Simon's request and requested comments from the four award recipients regarding whether the information should be released. The four award recipients requested that certain information not be released to the public because disclosure of the information could result in substantial harm to the competitive positions of the companies. On February 10, 2006, GO issued a determination in response to Simon's request. Of the responsive documents GO identified, 401 pages were released in their entirety, 91 pages were partially withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6, and 950 pages were withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6. Determination Letter at 3. GO stated that the information withheld under Exemption 6 consisted of "individual names listed in the documents who are not key personnel." Determination Letter at 2. GO added that the documents withheld under Exemption 4 contained "information considered to be commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." Id. According to GO,

> The information includes data which reveals a company's labor costs, company assets, liabilities and net worth; a company's actual costs; break-even calculations; profits and profit rates; workforce data which reveals labor costs; fringe benefits; direct and indirect costs; profit margins; competitive vulnerability; selling prices; purchase activity; freight charges; purchase records; prices paid for advertising; names of consultants and subcontractors; routing systems; cost of raw materials; and pricing strategy.

Id. GO reasoned that the information was properly withheld because release of the information could result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information. Id.

Simon filed the present appeal on March 17, 2006. Letter from Simon to OHA (March 5, 2006) (Appeal Letter).[1] In his appeal, Simon argues that GO's withholding of information pursuant to Exemption 4 was inappropriate because the withheld information was contained in cooperative agreements awarded rather than technical and business applications. Simon further argues that "if DOE and other agencies can claim that non-classified [c]ooperative [a]greements (and all other contracts with private companies), contain confidential information, then the public has no ability to know how public funds are being spent." Appeal Letter. Finally, Simon appeals the amount of fees charged for processing his request.[2]

Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

[1] Simon's initial submission of his appeal was deficient under DOE's FOIA regulations in that it did not contain a copy of the Determination Letter. See 10 C.F.R. 1004.8(b). On March 27, 2006, Simon completed the filing of the appeal by submitting a copy of the Determination Letter.

[2] Because Simon did not challenge the GO's withholding of information under Exemption 6, we will not address that matter in this decision and order.

In this case, the four recipients of the Cooperative Agreements were required to submit the documents in question as part of the agency's solicitation process. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[3] The information submitted by the four recipients of the cooperative agreements, i.e. labor costs, profit margins, company assets and liabilities, pricing strategies, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information.

The second requirement under the National Parks test is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., 28 DOE ¶ 80,105 (2000). Each of the four recipients in this case satisfies that definition.

Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "confidential." Withheld information is confidential if its release would either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, because the solicitation process for the project required that the information be submitted, it is unlikely that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future.[4] The question, then, turns to whether release of the information could result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information. According to GO,

> Because the intent of the program is to validate hydrogen technologies that will lead to commercially marketable hydrogen fuel cell vehicles (and their related infrastructure), there is intense confidentiality associated with actual product development data, budgets, and costs. The automotive companies and their infrastructure demonstration partners have invested literally millions of dollars of their own funds into the development of hydrogen fuel cell vehicles and infrastructure, and are competing directly with each other to produce a commercially marketable product that will ultimately be available to the public.

[3] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

[4] GO, however, argues that the recipients are "currently focused on the demonstration of 'Generation 1' hydrogen fuel cell vehicles. Their anticipated 'Generation 2' vehicles, also to be demonstrated under this award, will be even more technically advanced and commercially sensitive. If DOE divulges confidential business and financial information under FOIA with respect to the Generation 1 demonstration vehicles, there can be no doubt it will impair the agency's ability to obtain such information in the future – under this or future awards." Letter from Kimberly Graber, GO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 28, 2006).

Letter from Kimberly Graber, GO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 28, 2006). Given the competitive aspect of the project and the very specific nature of the commercial and financial information contained in the Cooperative Agreements, we agree with GO's assessment that the release of the information could result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information.

We have also considered Simon's arguments on appeal and find them to be unpersuasive. First, Simon's attempt to draw a distinction between commercial and financial information in "technical and business applications" and the information in the Cooperative Agreements is without merit. Neither the FOIA nor the relevant case law looks to the type of document in which information is contained in determining the applicability of Exemption 4. The issue here is whether the information itself satisfies the requirements set forth in National Parks, not the nature of the document in which the information is presented.

Second, we find no merit in Simon's assertion that withholding commercial and financial information in non-classified documents impairs the public's ability to know how public funds are being spent. The intent of Exemption 4 is to facilitate the government's ability to obtain commercial and financial information it requires in meeting its objectives. Releasing confidential commercial and financial data could lessen any incentive for companies to continue to provide such information in the future. Furthermore, after reviewing a sample of the documents in question, we note that information in the awards of the Cooperative Agreements relating to the amount of money expended by DOE on the project was not withheld. Consequently, we fail to see how releasing the commercial and financial data of the recipients would shed any additional light on how public funds were spent.

Fees Incurred

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). The FOIA delineates three types of costs – "search costs," "duplication costs," and "review costs" – and outlines three categories of requesters, specifying the costs each category of requesters must pay. If a requester wants the information for a "commercial use," it must pay for all three types of costs incurred. In contrast, educational institutions and the news media are required to pay only duplication costs, and all other requesters are required to pay search and duplication costs, but not review costs. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b).

Simon did not specify the grounds on which he challenged the fees he was charged in connection with the processing of his FOIA request. GO has informed us that Simon was categorized as a "commercial use" requester because GO was aware that Simon was the president of a company who unsuccessfully sought to have his company involved in the solicitation process for the awarding of the Cooperative Agreements and "he has long made known his desire to have small businesses more actively engaged in DOE's efforts to demonstrate hydrogen fuel cell vehicles." Letter from Kimberly Graber to Diane DeMoura. The DOE regulations state that a "'[c]ommercial use' request refers to a request from . . . one who seeks information for a use or purpose that furthers the commercial, trade, or profit interests of the requester." 10 C.F.R.

§ 1004.2(c). The regulations also state that "when the DOE receives a request for documents which appears to be for commercial use, charges will be assessed to recover the full direct costs of searching for, reviewing for release, and duplicating the records sought." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b)(1). We see no error in GO's categorization of Simon as a commercial use requester. Furthermore, having been informed by GO of the method of calculation and the actual amount of fees to be charged, "Simon agreed to the charges and submitted payment without challenging his requester status, categories of charges, or the calculation of fees." We see no reason to find that the amount of fees GO charged Simon was incorrect.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The appeal filed by Ronnie J. Simon on March 17, 2006, Case No. TFA-0154, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: James H. Campbell

Date of Filing: March 20, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0155

On March 20, 2006, James H. Campbell filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on February 22, 2006, by the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Campbell submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Campbell asks that Oak Ridge conduct an additional search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Mr. Campbell requested information regarding the industrial hygiene, medical, personnel and radiation exposure records for his deceased father, Everette Campbell. In his request, Mr. Campbell indicated that his father worked for Union Carbide Corporation and Martin Marietta Energy Systems, two former contractors at the BWXT Y-12 Plant, in the 1940s. Oak Ridge conducted a search by name and Social Security number for responsive material, but was only able to locate Mr. Everette Campbell's personnel security clearance card. On March 20, 2006, Mr. Campbell filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Campbell challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge and asserts that there should be additional records related to his father in the possession of DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted Oak Ridge to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Campbell's request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Mr. Campbell's request for information, Oak Ridge contacted the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, the BWXT Y-12 Plant and the K-25 Plant. Each plant searched its records by name and Social Security Number and found no records responsive to Mr. Campbell's request. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Leah Ann Schmidlin, Oak Ridge Operations Office, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (June 8, 2006). In addition, Oak Ridge searched the DOE Records Holding Area for Archived Records where it had previously located the personnel security card of Mr. Everette Campbell. The DOE Records Holding Area for Archived Records contains archived records of individuals employed in the 1940s and earlier. Id. Oak Ridge informed our office that on many occasions contractors have taken their employee records with them when leaving a site. Id. For that reason, records of former Oak Ridge workers are far from complete. Based on the information above, we find that Oak Ridge has conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover any records relating to Mr. Everette Campbell. Accordingly, we must deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by James H. Campbell on March 20, 2006, OHA Case No. TFA-0155, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Keep Yellowstone Nuclear Free
Date of Filing:	March 21, 2006
Case Numbers:	TFA-0156

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Keep Yellowstone Nuclear Free (KYNF) filed from a determination that was issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Idaho Operations Office (IOO). That determination responded to a request for information that KYNF filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In that determination, IOO withheld certain documents in part or in whole. KYNF's Appeal, if granted, would require the release of the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1) - (9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1) - (9).

I. Background

In its FOIA request, KYNF sought access to copies of documents related to the Draft Environmental Impact Statement for the Proposed Consolidation of Nuclear Operations Related to the Production of Radioisotopes Power Systems (Consolidation EIS) and the Final Programmatic Environmental Impact Statement for Accomplishing Expanded Civilian Nuclear Energy Research and Development Isotope Production Missions in the United States, Including the Role of the Fast Flux Test Facility (NI PEIS). This material pertains to the characteristics and operation of the Advanced Test Reactor (ATR), a nuclear reactor located within the boundaries of the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory.

In its response, IOO identified 98 documents as being responsive to KYNF's request. [1] Of those 98 documents, one was completely withheld, one was determined to have been previously requested under the FOIA by KYNF's Executive Director [2], seven were released in part, and the remaining 89 were released in full. IOO determined that the withheld material was shielded from mandatory disclosure under FOIA Exemptions 2 and 5. In its Appeal, KYNF challenges IOO's application of these Exemptions.

II. Analysis

IOO withheld Document 1 and portions of Documents 3, 5, 8, 9, 65 and 66 under Exemption 2. That Exemption allows agencies to withhold records that are related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the Exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (Schiller). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information.

An agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is predominantly internal, and (2) its disclosure significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes. Crooker v. ATF, 670 F.2d 1051 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (en banc) (Crooker). Information is considered to be "predominantly internal" if it "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not] . . . set standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (Cox).

In its determination, IOO described the material withheld under Exemption 2 as "security sensitive information," and said that the "redactions were made on the basis that the information is integral to describing potential vulnerabilities of the reactor and related systems, and the methods and measures taken to prevent or mitigate those potential problems." IOO went on to state that release of the information "could enable malefactors to identify potential vulnerabilities and understand how to thwart the protective and mitigative measures in place." January 31, 2006 Determination Letter at 3.

1/ An unspecified number of additional documents were located at the DOE Headquarters Office of Nuclear Energy, Science and Technology and at the DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office. Portions of KYNF's request were referred to those Offices for direct response to the requester. This Appeals concerns only the 98 documents identified as responsive by IOO.

2/ In response to this previous request, IOO determined that the document in question was generated by another DOE Office. IOO referred the request to that Office for direct response to KYNF.

In its Appeal, KYNF argues that IOO's application of Exemption 2 is not supported by the language of the Exemption or by judicial precedent. Specifically, the requester contends that the withheld material does not pertain to internal personnel rules and practices of the DOE, and that the courts have held this to be a threshold requirement for withholding information under Exemption 2. Audubon Society v. United States Forest Service, 104 F.3d 1201 (10th Cir. 1997); Living Rivers v. United States Bureau of Reclamation, 272 F. Supp. 2d 1313 (D. Utah 2003). Moreover, KYNF contends that the withheld material consists of engineering and safety information, and that because safety is a public concern, the material should not be considered "predominantly internal." Finally, KYNF contests IOO's finding that release of the information would aid malefactors in identifying the reactor's vulnerabilities.

KYNF correctly points out that some federal courts have adopted a narrow construction of this Exemption. However, the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals, our judicial overseer, has construed Exemption 2 more broadly, stating that the scope of the Exemption is not restricted "to minor employment matters." Crooker, 670 F.2d at 1069. In that case, the Court upheld the withholding of a sensitive law enforcement training manual. In Schiller, the D.C. Circuit Court determined that litigation strategy pertaining to the Equal Access to Justice Act was properly withheld, stating that disclosure would render the information "operationally useless." Schiller, 964 F. 2d. at 1208. This Court has also upheld the withholding under Exemption 2 of FBI symbol numbers that were used to identify confidential informants in Lesar v. Department of Justice, 636 F.2d 472 (D.C. Cir. 1980), even though the information was apparently unrelated to internal personnel rules and practices. Indeed, in Schwaner v. Department of the Air Force, 898 F.2d 793 (D.C. Cir. 1990), the Court acknowledged that judicial "willingness to sanction a weak relation to 'rules and practices' may be greatest when the asserted government interest is relatively weighty." Id. at 796. See also Dirksen v. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, 803 F.2d 1456 (9th Cir. 1986) (withholding of claims processing guidelines under Exemption 2 upheld); Institute for Policy Studies v. Department of the Air Force, 676 F. Supp. 3 (D.D.C. 1987) (Security Classification Guide withheld because disclosure could reveal vulnerabilities of emergency government communications network).

It is difficult to imagine a weightier government interest than that asserted by IOO in this case. In its determination, IOO states that the information requested, which includes descriptions of the operations and vulnerabilities of the reactor and its containment facility, could be used by terrorists and other potential malefactors to aid in the planning and execution of attacks. Specifically, IOO argues that release of the information would assist terrorists in identifying vulnerabilities and devising ways of overcoming "the protective and mitigative measures in place." Determination Letter at 3. We have examined the withheld material, which consists primarily of regulation - mandated safety analyses and hazards assessments, and we conclude that they are sufficiently related to "internal personnel rules and practices" to fall within the ambit of Exemption 2. This information is used by DOE personnel in performing their mandated duties to insure the continued safe operation of the ATR. It is predominantly internal in that it does not purport to regulate activities of the public, nor does it set standards to be followed by DOE personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action directly affecting members of the public. In short, "the unreleased information is not 'secret law,' the primary target of [the FOIA's] disclosure provisions." Cox, 601 F.2d at 5.

Moreover, contrary to KYNF's contention, we find that release of the requested material would risk circumvention of laws or regulations. KYNF claims that because the material does not pertain to "the physical security of the ATR and the protections in place to prevent a terrorist attack," Appeal at 5, there is no risk of circumvention . This argument incorrectly presumes that this would be the only information that would be useful to a potential terrorist. Penetrating the physical security surrounding the ATR and overcoming any security countermeasures would likely only be the initial steps in a terrorist attack. A terrorist would then, in all probability, attempt to damage the reactor and its containment facility to cause a release of radioactive material, and to disable any safety systems that would prevent such a release. The withheld information, which sets forth the operational characteristics of the reactor and its containment facility and their potential vulnerabilities, could prove to be very useful to a potential malefactor in achieving these goals. We therefore conclude that release of this information would significantly risk circumvention of the DOE's statutory and regulatory duties to operate the ATR in a safe and secure manner.

In Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0128 (March 16, 2006), we determined that much of the material involved here was properly withheld under Exemption 2. KYNF has not convinced us that our holding in that case was in error. Therefore, for the reasons set forth above, we find that IOO properly applied Exemption 2 in withholding the information in question.

B. Exemption 5

IOO withheld pages 8 through 18 of document 93 under Exemption 5. This Exemption shields from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The deliberative process privilege is the only privilege at issue here.

The deliberative process privilege permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 150 (1975); Coastal States. The purpose of the deliberative process privilege is to promote high-quality agency decisions by fostering frank and independent discussion among individuals involved in the decision-making process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

Information within the purview of the deliberative process privilege must be both predecisional and deliberative. Information is predecisional if it is prepared or gathered in order to assist an agency decisionmaker in arriving at a decision. Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Eng. Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Predecisional information is also deliberative if it reflects the give-and-take of the consultative process, Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866, so that disclosure would reveal the mental processes of the decision-maker. National Wildlife Federation v. United States Forest Service, 861 F.2d 1114, 1119 (9th Cir. 1988).

In general, Exemption 5 may not be used to withhold purely factual material. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 867. However, the courts have recognized two exceptions to this general rule. Factual material may be withheld under Exemption 5 if it is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative matter that disclosure of the factual material would expose or cause harm to the agency's deliberations, Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (Soucie), or if the author has selected specific facts out of a larger group of facts, and this very act is deliberative in nature. Montrose Chemical Corp. v. Train, 491 F.2d 63, 66 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

In its Appeal, KYNF argues that the withheld portions of document 93 are neither predecisional nor deliberative. Instead, the requester contends, document 93 is a final report that is not part of a deliberative process, and therefore cannot be withheld under Exemption 5.

This document, entitled "Causal Analysis Report Essential System Functionality," is the final report of a team from the DOE's Office of Independent Oversight and Performance Assurance (OA), which was assigned the duty of evaluating the functionality of the ATR's safety systems. The purpose of the evaluation was to ensure the continued safe operation of the reactor. To that end, the report included recommendations as to how some of the weaknesses identified during the evaluation could be ameliorated. Consequently, although the document is the final report of the OA team, it is still part of the larger deliberative process concerning the steps that the team believed should be taken to make the ATR safer. The document is predecisional, in that it predated any decision concerning the adoption of the OA team's suggestions, and deliberative, in that it made these recommendations and provided the team's reasons for the recommendations. We therefore conclude that portions of pages 8 through 18 of document 93 were properly withheld under Exemption 5.

However, our review of the withheld material leads us to believe that most of it is purely factual in nature, and is not "inextricably intertwined" with exempt material. See Soucie. Moreover, it does not appear that release of this material would compromise the deliberative process of which this document is a part. Consequently, pages 8 through 18 are not exempt from mandatory disclosure under the deliberative process privilege, with the exception of the following, which were properly withheld.

1. On page 11, the last sentence of section B;
2. On page 12, the next-to-last sentence of the second paragraph;
3. On page 13, the last two sentences of section C and the entire last paragraph;
4. All of page 14 except the first, third, fourth, fifth and sixth sentences of section E;

5. On page 15, the fourth through the seventh sentences in the first paragraph, the last sentence of the second paragraph and the second sentence of the final paragraph;

6. On page 16, the third and fourth sentences of the first paragraph, the third and fourth sentences of the second paragraph, the third and fourth sentences of the third paragraph and the last sentence of the fourth paragraph; and

7. All of page 17 except the heading and first sentence of the second paragraph.

We will therefore remand this matter to IOO. On remand, IOO should release pages 8 through 18, with the exceptions set forth above, unless it determines that this material should be withheld under a different FOIA Exemption.

Our finding that portions of this document are exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 5 does not necessarily preclude release of the material to KYNF. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, the public interest in release of the material withheld from document 93 is attenuated by the fact that it consists largely of opinions and recommendations that may or may not be adopted by the agency. Furthermore, the release of this predecisional, deliberative material could adversely affect the agency's ability to obtain straightforward and frank recommendations and opinions in the future. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987). We do not believe that discretionary release of the withheld material would be in the public interest.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Keep Yellowstone Nuclear Free, Case Number TFA-0156, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office. On remand, that Office should release the portions of document 93 described in this Decision unless it determines that the material should be withheld under a different FOIA Exemption .

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Arlie Bryan Siebert

Date of Filing: March 22, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0157

On March 22, 2006, Arlie Bryan Siebert filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on November 21, 2005, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Group (FOI). In the appeal, Mr. Siebert challenged the disposition of his request for a waiver of fees incurred, the failure to provide him with an itemized accounting of fees, and the timeliness of the DOE's response in connection with a request he submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would overturn FOI's determination and waive in full the fees associated with Mr. Siebert's request and require that FOI provide him with an itemized accounting of fees incurred in connection with the processing of his FOIA request.

I. Background

Mr. Siebert filed a request for information regarding DOE employees who attained undergraduate and graduate degrees from unaccredited institutions. Letter from Abel Lopez, FOI, to Mr. Siebert (November 21, 2005) (Determination Letter). Mr. Siebert also requested a waiver of the fees associated with processing the request but stated that, in the alternative, he would be willing to pay up to one hundred dollars in fees. Letter from Mr. Siebert to Abel Lopez (May 7, 2004).

FOI informed Mr. Siebert that it required additional information to consider his request for a fee waiver. Letter from Abel Lopez to Mr. Siebert (July 16, 2004). FOI also stated that if it did not receive the additional information by a specified date, it would consider the request for a fee waiver withdrawn and would process the request in accordance with Mr. Siebert's agreement to pay up to one hundred dollars. Id. Mr. Siebert did not respond to FOI's request by the specified date. Consequently, FOI considered the request for a fee waiver withdrawn and processed the request accordingly. Determination Letter. FOI informed Mr. Siebert that, while the fees incurred in processing the request exceeded the one hundred dollars Mr. Siebert agreed to pay, it inadvertently processed the request without asking Mr. Siebert to pay the additional amount and, therefore, would only bill him the agreed upon one hundred dollars. Id.

In his appeal, Mr. Siebert challenges FOI's disposition of his fee waiver request. Letter from Mr. Siebert to OHA (March 12, 2006) (Appeal Letter). He also maintains that he is entitled to an itemized accounting of the fees incurred in processing his FOIA request. Id. Finally, he maintains that the DOE has not responded to his FOIA request in a timely fashion. Id.

II. Analysis

Fee Waiver

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and, (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8) (emphasis added).

In this case, FOI requested additional information from Mr. Siebert in order to determine whether he satisfied his burden under the FOIA. FOI informed Mr. Siebert that a failure to provide the requested additional information would be considered a withdrawal of the fee waiver request. According to FOI, it informed Mr. Siebert of this requirement via certified mail and received a signed return receipt for the letter. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Diane DeMoura, OHA, and Joan Ogbazghi, FOI (March 29, 2006); see also Copy of Return Receipt (July 21, 2004). Mr. Siebert himself does not argue that he did not receive the letter; rather, he concedes that, although he did not remember the letter, he "likely did receive it." Appeal Letter. Absent a showing by Mr. Siebert that he did not have notice of the requirement that he submit additional information by a specified date, we see no reason to find that FOI erred in considering Mr. Siebert's request for a fee waiver withdrawn. Given the withdrawal of the request, FOI did not make a determination on Mr. Siebert's fee waiver request. Consequently, the issue of Mr. Siebert's eligibility for a fee waiver is not ripe for our review.

Bill for Fees Incurred

Mr. Siebert also contends that he is entitled to an itemized statement of the fees associated with the processing of his FOIA request. Mr. Siebert was provided with a bill stating only that he owed "[one hundred dollars] for search time associated with processing [his] FOIA request." See Billing Request signed by Joan Ogbazghi (February 16, 2006).

We agree with Mr. Siebert that he is entitled to an itemized bill explaining the fees incurred in processing his FOIA request and the portion of those fees for which he was actually billed. Accordingly, we will remand this portion of Mr. Siebert's appeal to FOI with instructions that FOI provide Mr. Siebert with an itemized accounting of the fees incurred in his case.

Timeliness

Mr. Siebert also challenges the timeliness of DOE's response to his FOIA request. However, this office does not have jurisdiction to consider appeals concerning the timeliness of the agency's response to FOIA requests. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8; see also R.E.V. Engineering Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,136 (2001). Accordingly, we will dismiss the portion of Mr. Siebert's appeal concerning the timeliness of DOE's response. Under the FOIA, Mr. Siebert may seek the

(2) The portion of the appeal concerning the bill for fees incurred in processing Mr. Siebert's FOIA request is hereby remanded for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) The portion of the appeal concerning the timeliness of DOE's response to Mr. Siebert's FOIA request is hereby dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Bobbie J. Evans
Date of Filing:	April 6, 2006
Case Number:	TFA-0158

On April 6, 2006, Bobbie J. Evans (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued by DOE's Freedom of Information Act/Privacy Group (FOIA/PA) on March 6, 2006. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant wrote DOE requesting records pertaining to "surgical implanting of Global Positioning System or other devices" in him or other individuals. Determination Letter at 1. On March 6, 2006, FOIA/PA issued a determination letter (the determination letter) in response to this request. The determination letter states that FOIA/PA forwarded the Appellant's request to the DOE's Offices of Science and Environmental Safety and Health for a search of their respective records, which included a search of a DOE database entitled DOE-88- Epidemiologic and Other Health Studies, Surveys and Surveillances. These searches did not locate any documents responsive to the Appellant's request. On March 6, 2006, FOIA/PA informed the Appellant of its failure to identify any responsive documents. On April 6, 2006, the present Appeal was filed challenging the adequacy of DOE's search. [1]

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d

[1] The Appeal contends that "Based on proof of facts that I am under electronic surveillance under the Patriot Act, I believe that your agency do [sic] have records pertaining to me." Appeal at 1. However, the Appellant has not provided any evidence that the DOE has been, or is presently, conducting electronic surveillance of him or any other individuals.

1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

DOE clearly performed a diligent search for responsive documents. The search was directed at those locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. Thus, we conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by the Appellant.

Since the DOE conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Bobbie J. Evans, Case Number TFA-0158, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Steven A. Ludsin

Date of Filing: April 11, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0159

On April 11, 2006, Steven A. Ludsin (Ludsin) filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on March 27, 2006, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Group (FOI). In that determination, FOI denied a request for a waiver of fees in connection with a request Ludsin submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would overturn FOI's determination and waive in full the fees associated with his request.

I. Background

Ludsin filed a request under the FOIA for "copies of real estate appraisals of DOE properties or properties under the Department's jurisdiction." Letter from Abel Lopez, FOI, to Steven Ludsin (March 27, 2006) (Determination Letter). Ludsin planned to place the requested information on a website. Id.

In his FOIA request, Ludsin also requested a fee waiver for the costs associated with processing the request. In its March 27, 2006 determination letter, FOI denied the request for a waiver on the grounds that Ludsin's request "did not adequately address the criteria that is considered in a fee waiver determination." Id. Specifically, FOI found that Ludsin did not adequately demonstrate how he will disseminate the information to the general public. Id.

Ludsin filed the present appeal on April 11, 2006. Letter from Ludsin to OHA (April 2, 2006) (Appeal Letter). In his appeal, Ludsin contends that "requiring the requester to establish that the information has actually been conveyed and not merely that there has been a passive dissemination of data is a difficult threshold." Id. He adds, "the proof would be available after the data is disseminated on a search engine and then the data can be analyzed to measure the number of clicks connected to the data provided. In other words, establishing that the information has actually been conveyed can only happen after the data dissemination." Id. Ludsin submitted additional information in support of his request for a fee waiver. See Electronic Mail Message from Ludsin to Diane DeMoura, OHA (May 7, 2006).

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and, (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8).

In analyzing the public-interest prong of the two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

Factor A

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-1483 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994). In the present case, it is undisputed that the requested information – copies of real estate appraisals of DOE properties or other properties under the agency's jurisdiction – concerns activities or operations of the government. Therefore, we find that Ludsin's request satisfies Factor A.

Factor B

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). This factor focuses on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997); Seehuus Associates, 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) ("If the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate.").

In the present case, it is unclear whether the requested information is already publicly available. However, given the nature of the information requested – information relating to the agency's real estate interests – and because we have no evidence that the information is already publicly available, we will assume that the information is not already in the public domain. Therefore, we find that Ludsin has satisfied Factor B.

Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding individually of the requester or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. Department of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992). In the present case, it is not disputed that Ludsin intends to disseminate the requested information to the public. However, FOI determined that Ludsin did not establish his ability to disseminate the information.

We find that Ludsin has not provided adequate evidence of his ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Ludsin contends that dissemination of the requested information will occur because he plans to place the information on a website, allowing the general public to access the information using an internet search engine. This falls short of the proof required to establish a requester's ability to disseminate responsive information to the public. We have previously held that a plan to make information available on the internet does not ensure that the information will reach the public, compared to, for example, including the information in a newsletter or in printed articles and, therefore, falls short of the showing necessary to satisfy Factor C. See Donald R. Patterson, 28 DOE ¶ 80,107 (2000); see also STAND, 27 DOE ¶ 80,250 (1999). In this case, Ludsin's argument – that a requester cannot demonstrate that the information will be disseminated to the public until after dissemination has already occurred – is not persuasive. The admittedly high burden is on the requester to demonstrate that the information will be conveyed to the public. Ludsin has failed to make the necessary showing because simply placing the information on a website is a passive method of dissemination and does not ensure that the information will, in fact, reach the general public. Consequently, we find that Ludsin has not satisfied Factor C.

Factor D

Under Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 381 (1995)).

In the present case, it remains unclear to what extent the public's understanding is likely to be enhanced by the disclosure of the information. However, we need not reach the issue because the inability to disseminate the information to the public is, in itself, a sufficient basis for denying a fee waiver request. See Donald R. Patterson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,267 at 80,927 (2000) (citing Larson v. CIA, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988)).

III. Conclusion

As the foregoing indicates, Ludsin has failed to adequately demonstrate his ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Therefore, we find that Ludsin has not shown that disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. Because Ludsin has not satisfied the public-interest prong of the test set forth in the FOIA and in the DOE regulations concerning fee waivers, we need not address the commercial-interest prong of that test. Accordingly, the appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on April 11, 2006 by Steven Ludsin, OHA Case No. TFA-0159, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Judicial Watch, Inc.

Date of Filing: May 25, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0162

On May 25, 2006, Judicial Watch, Inc. (Judicial Watch) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on February 3, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Group (FOI). In that determination, FOI responded to a request for documents Judicial Watch submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. FOI determined that it could locate no documents responsive to Judicial Watch's request. This appeal, if granted, would require FOI to perform an additional search and either release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In a letter dated March 9, 2006, Judicial Watch requested documents related to the following:

(1) The decision to conduct a 30-day investigation and/or review of the acquisition of London-based Doncasters Group, Ltd., by Dubai International Capital (DIC) of Dubai, United Arab Emirates ("UAE");

(2) The decision to conduct a 45-day investigation and/or review of the acquisition of London-based Doncasters Group, Ltd., by DIC of Dubai, UAE as required or allowed by statute;

(3) Contracts obtained by DIC through its acquisition of Doncasters Group, Ltd., to manage and/or control and/or operate plants in Georgia and/or Massachusetts and/or Connecticut that make precision components used in engines for military aircraft and tanks.

Letter from Judicial Watch to Abel Lopez, Director, DOE FOIA/PA Division (FOI) (March 9, 2006). FOI forwarded the request to two offices it believed may have responsive documents, the Office of General Counsel (GC) and the Office of Policy and International Affairs (PIA). In its determination letter, FOI determined it did not locate any records responsive to Judicial Watch's request. Letter from Abel Lopez to Judicial Watch (April 18, 2006) (Determination Letter).

In its appeal, Judicial Watch challenges the adequacy of the searches performed by GC and PIA for responsive documents. In support of its argument, Judicial Watch states that DOE participated in the review process for a prior acquisition involving similar companies and that "it is highly likely that the DOE was consulted again on a similar matter which impact [sic] national security, in the case of the DIC acquisition of Doncasters." Letter from Judicial Watch to OHA (May 24, 2006) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted both GC and PIA to ascertain the scope of the searches for responsive documents. GC informed us that it did not provide any legal support to any DOE element regarding the matter at issue and, consequently, generated no documents pertaining to this case. See Electronic Mail Message from Samuel Bradley, GC, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (June 2, 2006). PIA informed us that DOE did not participate in any review involving DIC's acquisition of Doncasters Group, Ltd. Consequently, it generated no documents regarding that case. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Edward Rossi, PIA, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (June 21, 2006).

Based on the foregoing information, we find that searches by GC and PIA were calculated to uncover documents responsive to Judicial Watch's request and were therefore adequate. GC knew that it did not provide legal support to any DOE element in this case and, therefore, generated no documents. PIA had definitive knowledge that DOE neither was asked to participate, nor did participate, in the review process for the acquisition of Doncasters Group Ltd. by DIC. As a result, PIA generated no documents relating to any such review. Consequently, no further search was undertaken since documents were known not to exist. Had DOE participated in the review process, then one might expect that PIA or GC would have generated documents regarding that review. In such a case, a more exhaustive search would be required. In this case, however, PIA and GC were not required to undertake a search for documents they knew with a certainty did not exist. We are not persuaded by Judicial Watch's argument that DOE likely participated in the review process because it had previously participated in a similar review. The fact that DOE may have participated in the review process in a prior acquisition involving two similar companies does not, by definition, mean that DOE participated in the review process of the acquisition at issue in this case. Accordingly, the search was adequate and, therefore, Judicial Watch's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 25, 2006 by Judicial Watch, Inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0162, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Wayne Brunsilius

Date of Filing: September 22, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0163

This Decision concerns an Appeal Wayne Brunsilius filed in response to a determination issued to him by the Rocky Flats Project Office (hereinafter referred to as "RFPO") of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, RFPO denied a request for the waiver of fees associated with its processing of Mr. Brunsilius' request for information that he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This information concerned the alleged exposure of Mr. Brunsilius and other employees to radioactive and other hazardous materials during his employment at the Rocky Flats site. Because Mr. Brunsilius did not indicate that he would be willing or able to pay the fees, RFPO suspended the processing of his request. This Appeal, if granted, would require RFPO to process Mr. Brunsilius' request and waive all applicable fees.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. The FOIA also provides for the assessment of fees for the processing of requests for documents. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the DOE will grant a full or partial waiver of applicable fees if a requester can demonstrate that disclosure of the information sought in a FOIA request (i) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the activities of the government, and (ii) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); 10C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8). Both of these criteria must be satisfied before a fee waiver is granted. Id.

The DOE regulations set forth specific guidelines that are to be used in determining whether these criteria have been met. In determining whether disclosure of the information sought is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the activities of the government, we are required to consider (i) the subject of the request: whether the requested records concern the operations or activities of the government; (ii) the informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of governmental activities; (iii) the contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure, and (iv) the significance of the contribution to public understanding: whether disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

In determining whether disclosure of the information is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester we must consider whether the requester has a commercial interest that would be furthered by the requested disclosure, and, if so, whether the magnitude of the identified commercial interest of the requester is sufficiently large, in comparison with the public interest in disclosure, that disclosure is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii).

Our consideration of these factors leads us to conclude that RFPO correctly determined that Mr. Brunsilius should not be granted a fee waiver. Specifically, we do not believe that disclosure of the requested records would contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. This is primarily because Mr. Brunsilius has failed to demonstrate that he will be able to disseminate any information that is released to a significant portion of the general public. He is currently an inmate at a state correctional facility in Sterling, Colorado, and has indicated that he intends to disseminate the information in an unspecified manner through unnamed "experts" who have been retained by Mr. Brunsilius' counsel. Appeal at 2. In Tod N. Rockefeller, Case No. VFA-0447 (October 28, 1998), we found the requester's statement that he "seeks to share [the] information about . . . his case with the public" to be insufficient to demonstrate a willingness and ability to disseminate the requested information. Mr. Brunsilius' statements in this regard are equally conclusory and generalized, and fall far short of adequately demonstrating an ability to communicate the information to a sufficiently broad audience. See, e.g., STAND, Inc., Case No. VFA-0539 (December 23, 1999) (dissemination through newsletter with circulation of 2,000, through requester's own library and through news conferences and press releases held sufficient to warrant fee waiver). The inability to disseminate information, by itself, is a sufficient basis for denying a fee waiver request. Donald R. Patterson, Case No. VFA-0589 (August 3, 2000) (citing Larson v. CIA, 843 F.2d 1481 (D.C. Cir. 1988)). We therefore need not consider the issue of whether disclosure would primarily be in the commercial interest of the requester. RFPO properly denied Mr. Brunsilius' request for a fee waiver.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Wayne Brunsilius, OHA Case Number TFA-0163, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Thomas J. Beauford

Date of Filing: May 30, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0164

On May 30, 2006, Thomas J. Beauford filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on May 4, 2006, in which Oak Ridge stated that it did not have a copy of the audiogram that Mr. Beauford was requesting pursuant to the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. ' 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Office does not believe that Oak Ridge has a copy of the audiogram.

I. Background

On February 14, 2006, Mr. Beauford requested, under the Privacy Act, a copy of his medical records. On April 21, 2006, Oak Ridge sent Mr. Beauford a letter indicating that it did not have a copy of his medical records and he should request those records from his employer, British Nuclear Fuels Limited (BNFL). Determination Letter dated April 21, 2006, from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge to Mr. Beauford. On April 29, 2006, Mr. Beauford requested, also under the Privacy Act, a copy of his audiogram. On May 4, 2006, Oak Ridge responded that it had no medical records for Mr. Beauford, and therefore, no audiogram. In this Appeal filed on May 30, 2006, Mr. Beauford states that he did have an audiogram taken. Appeal letter dated May 15, 2006, from Mr. Beauford to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. If granted, the Appeal would require Oak Ridge to produce a copy of the audiogram.

II. Analysis

We will examine whether Oak Ridge should have possession of Mr. Beauford=s audiogram. The Privacy Act permits individuals to gain access to records or to information pertaining to them that is contained in systems of records maintained by federal agencies. 5 U.S.C. ' 552a(d)(1). DOE regulations define a system of records as Aa group of any records under DOE control from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particulars assigned to the individual.@ 10 C.F.R. ' 1008.2(m). Under the Privacy Act, an agency that issues a determination to a requester must ensure that it has searched for records that are retrieved by name or other personal identifier of the requester in every relevant system of records under its control. Diane C. Larson, 27 DOE & 80,110 (1998).

Oak Ridge has informed us that the information Mr. Beauford is requesting is of a type held by his employer, BNFL. Thus, the initial inquiry in this case is whether BNFL, who possibly possesses the records in question, is an Aagency@ as defined in the Privacy Act. The Privacy Act adopts the definition of Aagency@ as used in the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). 5 U.S.C. ' 552a(1). The FOIA defines the term Aagency@ to include any Aexecutive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . or any independent regulatory agency.@ 5 U.S.C. ' 552(f). The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to Aextensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision.@ Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 & n. 11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, although BNFL is a DOE contractor, the DOE did not conduct extensive, detailed, and day-to-day supervision of its operations. BNFL provides a service on a fixed-price basis. Electronic Mail Message dated June 15, 2006, from Linda Chapman, Oak Ridge, to Janet Fishman, OHA, DOE (June 15, 2006 Electronic Mail Message). We therefore conclude that BNFL is not an Aagency@ within the meaning of the FOIA.

However, the Privacy Act provides a specific exception for government contractors. AWhen an agency provides by a contract for the operation by or on behalf of the agency of a system of records to accomplish an agency function, the agency shall, consistent with its authority, cause the requirements of this section to be applied to such system.@ 5 U.S.C. ' 552a(m)(1). Moreover, the DOE Privacy Act regulations apply to DOE contractors and their employees to the extent required by 5 U.S.C. ' 552a(m). 10 C.F.R. ' 1008.1(c). The DOE contract with BNFL does not provide for the maintenance of a system of records by BNFL to accomplish an agency function. June 15, 2006 Electronic Mail Message. Based on the foregoing, we conclude that the records sought by Mr. Beauford in his request are not contained in a system of records maintained by or for Oak Ridge. Mr. Beauford needs to request such records from BNFL, if it maintains such records.

III. Conclusion

Oak Ridge cannot produce Mr. Beauford=s audiogram because it does not have it or his other medical records. These records are not Aagency records@ nor are they in a DOE system of records that would make them subject to the Privacy Act. The Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 30, 2006, by Thomas J. Beauford, Case No. TFA-0164, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Heart of America Northwest

Date of Filing: June 12, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0165

On June 12, 2006, Heart of America Northwest (HANW) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on June 6, 2006, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of River Protection (ORP). In that determination, ORP responded to a request for documents that HANW submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORP identified several documents responsive to HANW's request. Some of those documents were released in their entirety and, pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 5 of the FOIA, others were released with some deletions or withheld in their entirety. HANW challenged the withholding of information under Exemptions 4 and 5. This appeal, if granted, would require ORP to release the withheld information to HANW.

I. Background

HANW requested documents pertaining to the Waste Treatment and Immobilization Plant (WTP) at the DOE's Hanford Site in Richland, Washington. See Letter from Erik Olds, ORP, to Hyun Lee, HANW (May 9, 2006) (Determination Letter). ORP identified several documents responsive to HANW's request. Of those documents, several were released in their entirety, including correspondence between the DOE amd DOE contractor Bechtel National, Inc. (BNI). The documents released with deletions include the Army Corps of Engineers "Independent Review of WTP Estimate at Completion (EAC) 2005" (ORP report), the Project Estimate at Completion April 2005 prepared by BNI, and other correspondence.

ORP stated that the information withheld under Exemption 4 was provided by BNI and related to "financial strategies which [BNI] was required to submit to DOE." Determination Letter. ORP stated that release of the information was "a source of corporate intelligence about BNI and its plans, capabilities, and commitments for the future. This information could be used by competitors to the disadvantage of BNI and result in impairing the government['s] ability to obtain this and other necessary information in the future[.]" Id. ORP stated that the information withheld under Exemption 5 consisted of advice, recommendations, and other information it believed should remain internal to the DOE as the agency "determines the appropriate contract strategies going forward." Id. ORP added that the information did not reflect a final agency position, but rather was "subject to review and action by DOE officials." Id.

HANW challenged ORP's withholding of information under Exemptions 4 and 5 on various grounds. Letter from Gerald Pollet, HANW, to OHA (June 9, 2006) (Appeal). HANW's arguments are discussed below.

II. Analysis

As an initial matter, HANW argues that ORP did not identify which FOIA exemption it was applying to each specific deletion. Under the FOIA, if a request for a record is denied, the denial must include "a statement of the reason for the denial, containing a reference to the specific exemption under the [FOIA] authorizing the withholding of the record and a brief explanation explaining how the exemption applies to the record withheld…" 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1). Our review of the documents provided to HANW shows that in several of the documents ORP failed to specify which exemption it claimed for each deletion. Rather, ORP claimed both Exemptions 4 and 5 at the bottom of each page, applying both exemptions to all of the deletions on the page. This does not satisfy the requirements of the FOIA. It is our understanding, however, that ORP recently corrected this problem by providing HANW with a new set of the redacted documents in which, on pages where multiple exemptions were claimed, a FOIA exemption was claimed for each specific deletion. See Electronic Mail Message from Dorothy Riehle, ORP, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (September 9, 2006). Accordingly, we find that this matter has been resolved.

Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In this case, the information withheld under Exemption 4 appears in the ORP report and the EAC. BNI was required to submit the information in question as part of a contract it held with

DOE. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[1] The information submitted by BNI, i.e. labor costs and other expenses, procurement information and strategies, estimates, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information.

The second requirement under the National Parks test is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., 28 DOE ¶ 80,105 (2000). BNI satisfies that definition.

Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "privileged" or "confidential." This case concerns "confidential" information. Withheld information is confidential if its release would either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, because the contract for the project required that the information be submitted, it is unlikely that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future. The question, then, turns to whether release of the information could result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information.

According to ORP, the information "could be used by competitors to the disadvantage of BNI." Determination Letter. BNI stated that the release of the withheld information could both compromise the procurement process for subcontractors and could be used unfairly by competitors. See [BNI's] Response to FOIA Request Related to April 2005 WTP Estimate at Completion (June 20, 2006). After reviewing the information in question, we conclude that the information is confidential because release of the information could substantially harm BNI's competitive position. Disclosure of the information could give competitors insight into BNI's estimating processes, rate development methods, labor pricing, and subcontractor procurement processes. This information could be used by competitors to undercut BNI's position on any future contract bids and also to impede BNI's ability to obtain reasonable subcontractor bids.

Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated under the deliberative process privilege. NLRB v. Sears,

[1] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

Predecisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final agency action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). The deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

The information withheld under Exemption 5 is contained in both the ORP report and in various items of correspondence from ORP to BNI. It consists primarily of comments, recommendations and opinions prepared by DOE, BNI and Army Corps of Engineers employees regarding the WTP facility. Therefore, the requested information falls within the definition of "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda" in the FOIA.[2] In addition, the comments, recommendations, and opinions withheld are clearly predecisional and deliberative. They were generated pursuant to the DOE's review of BNI's submittal of the EAC. The withheld information does not represent a final DOE position, but rather consists of communications among DOE, BNI and the Army Corps of Engineers and recommendations regarding BNI's EAC. Accordingly, we hold that the comments, recommendations, and opinions withheld from the requested documents meet the requirements for withholding material under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

Discretionary Public Interest Disclosures

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. HANW maintains that disclosure of the withheld information would be in the public interest.

In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Chicago Power Group, 23 DOE ¶ 80,125 at 80,560 (1993). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4. William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999).

[2] Although BNI is not a DOE entity or a federal agency, courts have found that many communications between an agency and a non-governmental entity may be considered to be "intra- or inter-agency" documents and may be withheld under Exemption 5 . See, e.g. Dep't of Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1 (2001); see also Vladeck, Waldman, Elias & Engelhard, P.C., 27 DOE ¶ 80,230 (1999).

Regarding the information withheld under Exemption 5, the withheld information consists primarily of advisory opinions and recommendations provided to or generated by DOE in the consultative process. We find that the release of this would have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. See Nevada Nuclear Waste Task Force, Inc., 28 DOE ¶ 80,160 (2001). Accordingly, we find that release of the information withheld under Exemption 5 would not be in the public interest.

Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). We find that ORP complied with the FOIA by releasing to HANW all factual, non-deliberative portions of the documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on June 12, 2006, by Heart of America Northwest, OHA Case No. TFA-0165, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Robert D. Reilly

Date of Filing: June 14, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0166

On July 14, 2006, Robert D. Reilly (Reilly) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Golden Field Office (Golden) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him. The determination responded to a request for information Reilly filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the responsive information it withheld from Reilly.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On April 26, 2006, Reilly filed a FOIA request with Golden seeking (1) the composition, as of January 6, 2006, of the Merit Review Committee (MRC) of the DOE Golden Field Office; (2) a specific web site listing the names of such persons on the MRC or a copy of a document which contains the names; and (3) the positions and company affiliations of the persons on the MRC who are non-federal reviewers and the credentials qualifying them to be reviewers. See Determination Letter at 1. In a determination letter, Golden stated that is was unable to provide Reilly with information responsive to his FOIA request. It further stated that "agency records regarding the composition of the Merit Review Committee (MRC) of the U.S. Department of Energy's Golden Field Office . . . are exempt from disclosure" under Exemption 6. [1] In his Appeal, Reilly challenges the application of Exemption 6 to the withheld information.

1/ Also, in its Determination Letter, Golden stated that no "specific website" exists which lists the names of MRC members. Determination Letter at 2.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

Golden determined that there was a privacy interest in the identities of the MRC members, as well as their positions, company affiliations, and qualifying credentials. According to Golden, "the need to keep the [requested information] private outweighs the small public interest (if any) gained from release of such information." Determination Letter at 2. Golden further stated that "this information is of a personal nature, disclosure of which could cause the individuals in this case to be harrassed and/or result in an unwarranted invasion of their privacy. Id.

We have consistently determined "that there is a real and substantial threat to employees' privacy if personal identifying information . . . were released." Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 15 DOE ¶ 80,115 at 80,537 (1987). See also Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 16 DOE ¶ 80,102 at 80,504 (1987); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80,120 at 80,569 (1985); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,519 (1985). The same type of privacy interest is involved in this case. In fact, because the members of the MRC whose names are sought are non-federal members and private citizens, there is a significant privacy interest in maintaining their confidentiality. If this information were disclosed to the requester, the disclosure "would undoubtedly result in disappointed financial assistance applicants seeking similar information in order to impose uninvited and unwanted contacts on MRC members outside the selection process, seeking explanations and/or challenging the evaluations of those merit reviewers." See Golden's Response at 4. Such harassment would "adversely impact deliberations and decision-making within DOE's financial assistance award process." Id. We have previously found the potential for harassment of individuals to be sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 6. See, e.g., William Hyde, 18 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988). These considerations govern our determination. We therefore find a real and substantial privacy interest in the identities of the MRC members.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on the operations and activities of the government." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)).

We find that there is a minimal public interest in the release of the withheld information. Reilly has not demonstrated what public interest would be served by releasing the identifying information of the MRC . Rather, he asserts that "the composition of a committee which reviews certain public activities clearly does not fall within the ambit or scope of personnel and medical and similar files as are kept for government employees." Appeal at 1. Reilly further asserts that "the composition of federal boards and commissions and the like are usually not only disclosed, but published. Such disclosure is necessary to hold the federal government accountable to the citizens of this democratic country." Id. Simply alleging that similar information is usually disclosed to the public is not sufficient.

3. Balancing the Interests

As stated earlier, there is a significant privacy interest in this information. In determining whether the disclosure of the identifying information could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989). We agree with Golden and find that the minimal public interest here is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the MRC members.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Robert D. Reilly on June 14, 2006, OHA Case No. TFA-0166, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Beveridge & Diamond, P.C.

Date of Filing: June 22, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0167

Beveridge & Diamond, P.C. filed an Appeal from a determination that the Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Group (FOIA/PA) of the Department of Energy issued on May 22, 2006. In that determination, FOIA/PA denied in part a request for information that the Appellant submitted to the DOE pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. FOIA/PA identified and released five documents that were responsive to the Appellant's request, two in their entirety and three with portions withheld. FOIA/PA determined that the withheld portions contained classified information that should be protected from disclosure under the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld portions of the documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On September 3, 2004, the Appellant requested seven documents: Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) 384/23 through AEC 384/27 and AEC 384/29, regarding the Uranium 233 Program, and AEC 384/28, regarding production reactors and operation of production reactors for non-weapons purposes. The History and Archives Group of the Office of the Executive Secretariat conducted a review and located six of the seven requested documents.[1] On May 22, 2006, FOIA/PA responded to the request by providing the Appellant with copies of AEC 384/26 and AEC 384/28 in their entirety, and copies of AEC 384/24, AEC

[1] AEC 384/23 had been transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). On October 6, 2004, FOIA/PA advised the Appellant to request that document directly from NARA.

384/25 and AEC 384/27 from which portions had been redacted.[2] In its determination letter, FOIA/PA explained that the withheld portions of AEC 384/24, AEC 384/25 and AEC 384/27 contained information properly classified as Restricted Data pursuant to the Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2161-2166, therefore warranting protection from disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA.

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld portions of the documents entitled AEC 384/24, AEC 384/25 and AEC 384/27. In its Appeal, the Appellant contends that the information it seeks is "approximately 50 years old and related to a defunct program. In all likelihood, the information is long outdated and is of more historical than scientific significance." The Appellant also contends that much of this information is likely already in the public domain and therefore its disclosure is unlikely to jeopardize the common defense and security of the nation.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 29 DOE ¶ 80,267 (2006).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). As the result of reorganization within the Department, this function is now the responsibility of the Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed the responsive documents from which the DOE had withheld information.

According to the Deputy Chief, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the material the DOE withheld from the documents may now be released. The information that the DOE continues to withhold concerns total inventories of special nuclear material, which is currently classified as Restricted Data (RD) and is identified as "DOE b(3)" in the margin of the documents. RD is a form of classified information the withholding of which is required under Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3.

[2] FOIA/PA notified the Appellant that AEC 384/29 fell under the jurisdiction of the Office of Naval Reactors within the DOE's National Nuclear Security Administration, and that that office would be responding directly to the Appellant concerning that document.

The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Chief's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires DOE to continue withholding portions of the documents under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the documents that the Deputy Chief has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Deputy Chief has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations. Accordingly, the Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Beveridge & Diamond, P.C., on June 22, 2006, Case No. TFA-0167, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) Newly redacted versions of Atomic Energy Commission documents AEC 384/24, AEC 384/25 and AEC 384/27, regarding the Uranium 233 Program, will be provided to Beveridge & Diamond, P.C.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee

Date of Filing: July 5, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0168

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee (ADC) in response to a determination that was issued to it by the Director of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Policy and Internal Controls Management Office (hereinafter referred to as "the Director"). In that determination, the Director replied to a request for documents that ADC submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Director informed ADC that the DOE's search had failed to identify any documents that were responsive to ADC's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require that we remand this matter to the Director for another search.

I. Background

In a FOIA request to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), the Department of Justice (DOJ) and the DOE, ADC asked that these agencies release > information relating to the FBI and [DOE's] Nuclear Emergency Support Team (NEST) nuclear surveillance program. Specifically, ADC requests that it be provided with the addresses of the mosques, homes, businesses, and warehouses, and all other facilities, in the greater Washington, DC area where the nuclear surveillance program has been conducted [since] September 11, 2001 . . . .

ADC FOIA request at 1.

In his determination letter, the Director characterized ADC's request as being "for a copy of the addresses of mosques, homes, businesses, warehouses and other facilities in the greater Washington, DC area where the nuclear surveillance program" has been conducted since September 11, 2001. Determination letter at 1. The Director said that no responsive documents could be located.

In its Appeal, ADC contends that the Director improperly narrowed the scope of the search for responsive documents. The requester states that it sought access to all information about the nuclear surveillance program, and not just the names and addresses of the locations at which surveillance took place. Furthermore, ADC argues that the DOE's active involvement in the program makes it highly unlikely that an adequate search would produce no responsive documents.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Information Focus On Energy, Case No. VFA-0353, 26 DOE ¶ 80,240 (1997).

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted the Director's Office. We were informed that the request was referred to the Office of Emergency Response. We contacted the FOIA Officer in that Office who co-ordinated the search, and were told that, despite the wording of the Director's determination letter, the search conducted was for any information concerning the surveillance program, that all nine offices of the Office of Emergency Response were searched, and that although DOE personnel did take part in the surveillance, the operations were conducted under the auspices of the FBI, and any responsive documents were likely to be located in the facilities of that agency. See memorandum of October 3, 2006 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals, and Walter Chrobak, Office of Emergency Response. Based on the information before us, we conclude that the search for responsive documents was adequate.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, OHA Case Number TFA-0168, is hereby denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Security Archive

Date of Filing: July 12, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0169

On July 12, 2006, National Security Archive (NS) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on June 13, 2006, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Group (FOI). In that determination, FOI responded to a request for documents that NS submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. FOI forwarded the request to the DOE's Office of Policy and International Affairs (PIA) for a search for responsive documents. PIA located a document responsive to the request and released the document with some deletions. This appeal, if granted, would require FOI to release the withheld portion of the document.

I. Background

NS filed a request under the FOIA for "the October 2002 publication of the Department that pertains to oil market contingency planning that was referenced by the Energy Information Administration." Letter from Abel Lopez, FOI, to Thomas Blanton, NS (June 13, 2006) (Determination Letter). FOI forwarded the request to PIA for a search. PIA located a 166-page document responsive to the request titled "October 2002, Oil Market Contingency Planning." PIA released the document but withheld under Exemption 2 of the FOIA information contained in three tabs – Tabs C, D, and P – totaling 19 pages in length.

In its Appeal, NS argues that > Revealing the Department's planned response to an oil shortage resulting from U.S. military action overseas…would in no way undermine the Department's efforts, as the United States has already been experiencing an oil shortage and rising oil prices due to military action in the Persian Gulf…All contingency plans > that might have been placed at risk by the release of these excised portions have already been implemented or rejected.

Letter from Thomas S. Blanton, NS, to OHA (July 11, 2006) (Appeal). NS also maintains that the document is based entirely on public data and, therefore, "its release would provide no new information to those who might attempt to violate the law and avoid detection." Id. Finally, NS argues that withholding of the document under Exemption 2 is inappropriate because

> All military action is carried out on behalf of the people of the United States, and, therefore, it is in the public's interest to be fully informed of the consequences…if United States involvement in the Persian Gulf causes a large enough oil shortage as to require a large-scale response by the Department of Energy, such information is by no means limited in scope to internal rules and practices, but is directly relevant to the daily lives of the American public.

Id. Therefore, NS argues, the information is not the type of "internal personnel rules and practices" to which Exemption 2 applies. Id.

II. Analysis

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information) and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves the second category, high two information. An agency seeking to withhold information under high two must be able to show that (1) the requested information is predominantly internal and (2) its disclosure significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes. Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

In withholding the information in Tabs C, D, and P, PIA described the withheld information as follows:

> The information deleted includes the [DOE]'s role in energy market events in the Middle East in case of oil supply disruptions. Although the information contained in Tabs C and D [is] based on case scenarios, disclosure would reveal the [DOE]'s vulnerability assessments related to response policy, possible courses of action, and pros and cons related to market reaction induced by rising oil prices. It could also lead to speculation about economic damage and its impact on the country's economy

> Tab P contains information on the Office of Public Affairs Communication Plan of the [DOE]. Release of this information would reveal the [DOE]'s strategy to conduct and implement our communication plan of oil supply disruptions.

Determination Letter.

After reviewing the withheld documents, we disagree with PIA's application of Exemption 2. PIA's principal rationale for withholding the information under Exemption 2 is that if potential terrorists or other malefactors obtained that information, they could use it to gain insight into the government's response process, identify possible targets or vulnerabilities, or develop methods to circumvent or impede the government's response to an oil supply disruption. PIA maintains that release of the information would risk circumvention of the DOE's statutory and regulatory duties to protect information that could facilitate terrorist activity against the nation's resources.

NS's argument that the document was compiled entirely of public data and that its release "would provide no new information to those who might attempt to violate the law and avoid detection" is without merit. Although some statistics and figures used in the document were derived from public data, the various strategies, estimates, and policy recommendations contained in the withheld portions of the document are not public information and, therefore, its release could provide new information to those attempting to target the nation's resources. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Jim Hart, PIA, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (July 19, 2006).

NS's final argument – that any United States military involvement in the Persian Gulf which causes an oil shortage large enough to require a large-scale response by the DOE is not limited in scope to internal rules and practices, but rather is directly relevant to the daily lives of the American public – impliedly asserts that the application of the high two exemption to the withheld information fails the first prong of the Crooker test – that the information be predominantly internal. We agree with that argument.

Information is "predominantly internal" if it "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public…[and] does [not]…set standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or take action affecting the members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979). In this case, the withheld information appears to include specific strategies and estimates the DOE would employ in responding to severe oil disruptions in overseas oil supplies, examples of possible domestic oil disruptions and response strategies, and a detailed public affairs communications strategy for disseminating crucial information to the public in the face of oil supply disruptions. It is unclear whether this information is merely the internal personnel rules and practices of the DOE. The withheld information appears to contain specific recommended steps for agency personnel for responding to an oil supply disruption, a situation which would clearly affect members of the public. Accordingly, we believe the application of Exemption 2 does not satisfy the requirements set forth by the court in Crooker.

However, our review of the withheld documents indicates that another exemption may be proper in this case. Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated under the deliberative process privilege. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

Predecisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final agency action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). The deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In this case, PIA informed us that the withheld documents contain recommendations that have not been adopted and were not finalized. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Jim Hart, PIA, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (July 19, 2006). PIA's position, therefore, is that the documents do not represent a final agency action, policy, or interpretation. Id. Furthermore, PIA informed us that the estimates, strategies and recommendations are the product of subordinates engaging in discussions about possible case scenarios and responses in order to be able to make informed recommendations to higher-level supervisors should the need arise. Id. Accordingly, it appears to us that they may be both pre-decisional and deliberative.

As stated above, we do not believe that PIA's application of Exemption 2 was proper. However, we believe that the documents may be properly withheld under Exemption 5. Accordingly, we will remand this matter to PIA in order that it may reexamine the documents, make a determination as to whether Exemption 5 (or another exemption) applies, and either release the documents to NS or issue a new determination justifying any withholdings it makes under a different exemption of the FOIA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 12, 2006, by National Security Archive, OHA Case No. TFA-0169, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Policy and International Affairs for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Shearman & Sterling, L.L.P.

Date of Filing: July 14, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0170

On July 14, 2006, Shearman & Sterling, L.L.P. (Shearman) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on June 6, 2006, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Group (FOI). In that determination, FOI responded to a request for documents that Shearman submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. FOI determined that it did not have any documents responsive to Shearman's request. This appeal, if granted, would require FOI to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Shearman filed a request under the FOIA for "all records…relating to the origin, negotiations, and signing of the Energy Charter Treaty (ECT), including but not limited to the development of the U.S. position." Letter from John E. Thompson, Shearman, to DOE (April 7, 2006). FOI forwarded the request to the DOE's Office of Policy and International Affairs (PIA) for a search. According to FOI, the search did not produce any responsive documents. Letter from Abel Lopez, FOI, to John E. Thompson (June 6, 2006) (Determination Letter). As a result, FOI denied the request and Shearman filed the present appeal.

In its appeal, Shearman challenges the adequacy of PIA's search, arguing that "[b]ecause the Department of Energy participated in interagency discussions and discussions with the private sector regarding the [ECT] within the 1990 – 1995 period, it should possess documents regarding the ECT." Letter from John E. Thompson to OHA (July 7, 2006) (Appeal Letter). Shearman also states that documents it received from the Department of Commerce name a Mr. Hank Santiago as the individual who represented the DOE in the discussions pertaining to the ECT. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted PIA to discuss the initial search. George Kerestes of PIA informed us that Shearman's original request did not name a particular individual involved in the ECT discussions. Mr. Kerestes stated that the person involved with the ECT was an individual who had since retired, Mr. George Zigler. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between George Kerestes, PIA, and Diane DeMoura, OHA, July 17, 2006. Mr. Kerestes stated that PIA thoroughly searched Mr. Zigler's office and files, including paper files, and no documents relating to the ECT were located. Mr. Kerestes noted that in the early 1990s, electronic storage of documents was not as common as it is today and that it is possible that any paper documents that may have existed were not retained. Mr. Kerestes added that he was not aware of any involvement by Hank Santiago, also now retired, in the ECT and, therefore, Mr. Santiago's files and office were not searched.

Based on this information, we find that PIA conducted a search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Shearman's initial request and the search, therefore, was adequate. However, based on new information Shearman provided in its appeal – the name of another individual possibly involved in the ECT discussions on behalf of the DOE – PIA has informed us that it is possible that responsive documents may exist. See Memorandum of Phone Conversation between George Kerestes and Diane DeMoura, July 17, 2006.

Accordingly, this appeal is granted and this matter is remanded to PIA to complete a new search using the additional information provided in the appeal. After completing its search, PIA is to provide Shearman with any responsive documents or to issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any responsive information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 14, 2006, by Shearman & Sterling, L.L.P., OHA Case No. TFA-0170, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Policy and International Affairs for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: City of Alexandria

Date of Filing: July 25, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0171

On July 25, 2006, Schnader Harrison Segal & Lewis LLP (Schnader) filed an Appeal on behalf of its client the City of Alexandria (Alexandria) from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's FOIA/Privacy Act Group (DOE/HQ). In that determination, DOE/HQ released some documents in response to a request for information that Schnader filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

In August 2005, the Mirant Corporation conducted tests of the emissions of the Potomac River Generating Station (PRGS) in Alexandria, Virginia and found that the plant emissions exceeded the National Ambient Air Quality Standards of the Clean Air Act. The plant's owners ceased operations. The District of Columbia Public Service Commission then filed a petition for an emergency order asserting that the plant closure reduced the reliability of the electricity supply to the metropolitan Washington, D.C. area. In December 2005, the Secretary of Energy issued an emergency order directing that plant operations resume on a restricted basis.

On March 2, 2006, Schnader sent a FOIA request to the Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ) for copies of documents in the possession of the CEQ relating to the DOE proceeding that ordered PRGS to resume operations. See Letter from Schnader to CEQ (March 2, 2006) (Request). Schnader also requested documents relating to CEQ consultations with other government agencies, documents pertaining to all instances between 2003 and 2006 that CEQ has invoked the provision for alternative arrangements because of a declared emergency, documents relating to guidelines for implementation of alternative arrangements, and documents relating to guidelines for determining and evaluating emergency situations.[1] Request at 1-2. On April 4, 2006, the CEQ sent an initial response consisting of 33 documents released in their entirety and 10 released with redactions. Of the 10 redacted documents, five had originated in or were of special interest to DOE. CEQ sent those five documents, along with 14 additional responsive documents, to DOE for a final determination. DOE/HQ forwarded the request to the Office of Environment, Safety and Health (DOE/EH).[2] After consulting with the Office of the General Counsel, DOE/EH returned the responsive material to DOE/HQ for release to Schnader. On June 21, 2006, DOE/HQ sent its final response to Schnader. Letter from DOE/HQ to Schnader (June 21, 2006) (Determination). Eight of the documents were redacted and 12 were withheld in their entirety under the executive or deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. [3]

On July 25, 2006, Schnader filed this Appeal. As an initial matter, Schnader contends that DOE applied Exemption 5 to the documents in error. Schnader argues that because all of the redacted documents (and possibly all of the withheld documents) were dated after December 20, 2005, they are "post-decisional" and Exemption 5 does not apply.[4] However if, in the alternative, Exemption 5 does apply, Schnader submits that DOE has not provided a sufficient description of the responsive material to allow Schnader to determine why the items were withheld, thus violating the requirements of Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820 (1973) (stating that an agency must identify the withheld documents with enough detail to justify its determination to withhold). Schnader also contends that there is a public interest in the material that justifies its release to the public. The public, Schnader insists, has a vital interest in knowing the basis for the Emergency Order and in understanding the reasons for the measures taken to implement the Order. Finally, Schnader alleges that DOE did not adequately determine the segregability of factual and deliberative portions of the redacted and withheld documents. Schnader asserts that a segregability analysis of the 12 documents that were withheld in their entirety would not constitute an "inordinate burden" for the agency. Lead Industries Ass'n v. Occup. S. and H. Admin, 610 F.2d 70, 86 (2d Cir. 1979) (stating that an agency may only withhold an entire document when the non-exempt information "is so interspersed with exempt material that separation by the agency, and policing of this by the courts, would impose an inordinate burden"). In summary, Schnader contends that if Exemption 5 applies, DOE has failed to (1) adequately describe the redactions and the withheld documents, (2) make the requisite showing as to why there are no segregable portions of the material, and (3) consider the public interest in the documents. Schnader therefore asks OHA to order the release of the withheld information.

[1] "When emergency circumstances make it necessary to take an action with significant environmental impact without observing the provisions of these regulations, the Federal agency taking the action should consult with [CEQ] about alternative arrangements." 40 C.F.R. §1506.11 (emphasis added).
[2] The offices that were previously a part of DOE/EH are now contained in the Office of Health, Safety, and Security (DOE/HSS), which was officially established on August 30, 2006.
[3] Even though CEQ stated that it sent 19 documents to DOE for review, DOE made reference to 20 responsive documents in its determination letter.
[4] The Emergency Order was issued on December 20, 2005.

II. Analysis

A. The Deliberative Process Privilege of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). This deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

(1) Applicability of Exemption 5

Schnader argues that because some of the documents were created after December 20, 2005, when the Executive Order was issued, those documents are "post-decisional" and Exemption 5 does not apply. Appeal at 1-2. Schnader states that communications made after the decision and designed to explain it are not privileged. "The exemption is to be applied as narrowly as consistent with efficient government operation." Id. at 2.

We must look to the purpose of Exemption 5 for a response to Schnader's argument. Exemption 5 protects documents that would reveal the decision-making process that results in a final agency decision. Thus, we focus our analysis on the effect that release of the responsive material would have on the process of arriving at an agency final decision. Schell v. HHS, 843 F.2d 933, 940 (6th Cir. 1988) (stating that in an Exemption 5 case, courts now focus less on the material sought and more on the effect of the release of the material). The ultimate issue in evaluating any deliberative process privilege claim is "whether the materials bear on the formulation or exercise of agency policy-oriented judgment." City of Virginia Beach, Va. v. Department of Commerce, 995 F.2d 1247,1254 (4th Cir. 1993).

This office has conducted a de novo review of the documents at issue, and we conclude that the records contain material that is clearly pre-decisional and deliberative. The responsive material contains copies of electronic mail messages between agency employees working to craft a document intended for publication in the Federal Register, drafts of the Federal Register notice that documented DOE's response to the emergency, and drafts of letters that document meetings between DOE and CEQ about the DOE response to the emergency. Release would clearly reveal the thought process that the DOE employees used to arrive at the order and the Federal Register Notice. The employees are using the emergency order as a guide or reference to arrive at a new policy document. Our review of the material shows that a member of the public who reads these documents in chronological order could easily ascertain how DOE employees arrived at the emergency order and the final notice in the Federal Register.[5] Thus, release of this information could have a chilling effect on employees who are tasked to create a response to an environmental emergency in the future. Even though the emergency order is a final agency decision and many of the documents in question were created after it was issued on December 20, 2005, the documents are deliberative in content and subject to the protection of Exemption 5 because they were used in the preparation of the Federal Register Notice, which was not published until January 2006.

In summary, we find that DOE properly applied the protection of Exemption 5 to the responsive material. The documents in question are communications between employees who contributed to the agency response to the emergency situation at PRGS. The material is not intended to explain the order, but instead documents the discussions and analysis that transpired during the creation of the policy. Therefore, based on the content of the documents, we find that the material is deliberative and exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5.

(2) Description of Withheld Material

Schnader contends that DOE did not adequately describe the material that was withheld from release. In the Determination, 12 documents were withheld in their entirety and 10 were listed in an attachment, all described in a similar fashion:

9. CEQ 3 – Information withheld in its entirety under Exemption 5. 4 pages. (F2006-00189).

Determination at 3. [6]

We agree with Schnader that this is an insufficient description. There is no way that either the requester or the appellate authority can derive from this index a clear explanation of why each document was withheld. We have found in the past that in general a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available , the date on which the document was produced, its authors and recipients. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. R.E.V. Engineering, 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 at 80,543 (2000). See also Dorsett v. Department of the Treasury, 307 F. Supp. 2d 28, 34 (D.D.C. 2004) (describing adequate Vaughn index).

B. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see also Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, if factual material is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its release would reveal the agency's deliberative process, that material can be withheld. Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE ¶ 80,152 (2001). DOE/HQ withheld 12 documents in their entirety but did not address the issue of segregability in the determination. This office reviewed all of the material that was withheld

[5] The Notice of Emergency Action was published in the Federal Register on January 20, 2006. See 71 FR 3279 (2006).
[6] Documents CEQ6 and CEQ19 were not on the list and no explanation was given for their omission.

in its entirety, and based on our review, we find that DOE/HSS should reconsider the issue of segregability in several of the documents withheld under Exemption 5. Our review concluded that the documents contain some factual, segregable material that could be released to the requester without revealing the deliberative process. See Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE at 80,620. For example, CEQ 3 contains some factual and segregable information in the "Summary" and the "Procedural Background," CEQ 18 has some material that appears to be factual, and CEQ 37 may contain some factual information in the "Summary" and "Supplemental Information" sections. Our review found other documents that appear to contain non-exempt material. Non-exempt material that is "distributed in logically related groupings" and that would not result in a "meaningless set of words and phrases" may be subject to disclosure. Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 261 (D.C. Cir. 1977). We agree with Schnader that "a segregability analysis of 12 documents does not constitute an inordinate burden to the agency." Appeal at 3. Thus, even though there is a minimal amount of non-exempt material, only 12 documents are involved and segregation of that material should not pose an undue burden for DOE/HSS. Accordingly, this portion of the Appeal is remanded to DOE/HSS.

C. Public Interest

The fact that the material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

We find that release of the withheld material would not be in the public interest. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the manner in which the government operates, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the withheld information is composed mainly of predecisional, non-factual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld material is outweighed by the chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. See L. Daniel Glass, 29 DOE ¶ 80,271 (2006).

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Tom Purcell

Date of Filing: August 2, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0172

On August 2, 2006, Tom Purcell appealed a determination issued by the Office of Human Capital Management (OHCM) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his appeal, Mr. Purcell contends that OHCM failed to conduct an adequate search for documents that were responsive to a FOIA request he filed. For the reasons detailed below, we find that OHCM conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and will deny the appeal filed by Mr. Purcell.

I. Background

Mr. Purcell filed a request in which he sought the following: (1) employment roster(s) (or similar documents) containing the name of any and all DOE employees, DOE contractor employees and/or subcontractor employees stationed at Amchitka, Island, AK, at any point prior to 1974; (2) employee roster(s) (or similar documents) containing the name of any and all atomic weapons employees (DOE, DOE Contractor, and/or subcontractor employees) working within the Linde Ceramics Plant, Tonawanda, NY, at any point from 1942-1947 and (3) employment roster(s) (or similar documents) containing the name of any and all atomic weapons employees (DOE, DOE Contractor, and/or subcontractor employees) who worked within the Uranium Division of the Mallinckrodt Chemical Works Destrehan Street Facility (St. Louis, MO) at any point from 1942-1957. See Determination Letter at 1. OHCM issued a determination which stated that "the Department of Energy was established in October 1977, therefore this office has no records pertaining to employees (contractor or federal) prior to 1977." Id. at 1. In his Appeal, Mr. Purcell challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by OHCM.

II. Analysis

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in OHCM to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed. The OHCM officials informed us that the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) existed before the establishment of the Department of Energy in 1977. However, OHCM has no method of tracking employees (contractor or federal) from the AEC unless the requester has a specific name of an employee. If a specific name is provided, records may then be searched at the National Personnel Records Center located in St. Louis, Missouri. See Record of Telephone Conversations between Theresa Heinicke, OHCM, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (December 21, 2006 and February 22, 2007). Given the facts presented to us, we are convinced that OHCM conducted an adequate search that was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Purcell's request. Accordingly, Mr. Purcell's Appeal should be denied.

DOE Headquarters' FOIA office has informed us that when it forwarded Mr. Purcell's request to OHCM, it also forwarded his request to other DOE offices, including the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center in Nevada and the Oak Ridge Operations Office, to search for documents responsive to his request. Those offices were asked to respond directly to Mr. Purcell. It is possible that those offices may provide Mr. Purcell with the documents he seeks. If, however, Mr. Purcell is unsatisfied with the responses he receives from the other offices asked to perform searches, he may appeal those determinations to our office.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tom Purcell, OHA Case No. TFA-0172, on August 2, 2006, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: State of Nevada

Date of Filing: August 22, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0173

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by the State of Nevada in response to a determination that was issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management (OCRWM). In that determination, OCRWM replied to a request for documents that Nevada submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OCRWM released certain documents to Nevada, but withheld others either in whole or in part. This Appeal, if granted, would require that we remand this matter to OCRWM for another search and for the release of the withheld material.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

I. Background

In its original FOIA request, Nevada sought access to all Employee Concerns Program (ECP) documents concerning the Yucca Mountain Project (YMP), including, but not limited to,

1. Reports or complaints made by employees pursuant to the ECP of either DOE or its contractors and subcontractors at YMP;

2. All correspondence among or between DOE and any contractor or subcontractor or employee of any of them, regarding any ECP complaint or report;

3. All reports of, transcripts of, or summaries of any witness interview created in connection with any report or complaint made pursuant to the ECP of DOE or a contractor or subcontractor of DOE;

4. All investigation reports prepared by DOE or its contractors or subcontractors reporting or containing the results and/or findings and/or recommendations with respect to any ECP report or complaint made at YMP; and

5. All documents recording corrective actions taken by DOE or its contractors or subcontractors to minimize, correct, or prevent the recurrence of any situation which precipitated a valid concern.

At the request of OCRWM, Nevada later narrowed the scope of its request. Specifically, Nevada agreed to seek only documents generated during the period from January 1, 1995 to May 6, 2005 concerning "everything material to DOE's site characterization of the Yucca Mountain site, its scientific analysis of the viability of that site and the waste container, its calculations, modeling, and preparation of documentary materials, such as AMRs, Technical Basis Reports, and KTI analyses and responses, and the License Application and all its component parts and supporting materials and any safety concerns." OCRWM's July 19, 2006 Determination Letter, citing Nevada's June 10, 2005 letter to OCRWM.

In response to this revised request, OCRWM searched its ECP files and identified 1,662 pages of responsive documents. Of this material, OCRWM released 297 pages in their entirety and 158 pages with exempt material withheld. In its Determination Letter, OCRWM divided the responsive documents into two categories: documents created or collected by the DOE as part of its ECP that are received and maintained as confidential and identify a "protected person" (i.e., a person reporting a concern or allegation, a person interviewed during the course of investigating a concern or allegation, or a person against whom a concern or allegation is made); and documents that do not identify protected persons.

OCRWM withheld all of the documents in the first category in their entirety under FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6 (5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) and (b)(6)), taking the position that segregation and release of any non-exempt material was not required under the relevant case law. Determination Letter at 2-3. In the alternative, OCRWM argued that any non-exempt material in these documents is "inextricably intertwined" with exempt material and would consist only of meaningless words and phrases, and therefore need not be released. Determination Letter at 3-4. This category includes 1,207 of the 1,662 pages of responsive documents. Id. at 4.

The balance of the responsive material consists generally of documents that do not identify protected persons. Id. Of these documents, OCRWM determined that four "Safety Conscious Work Environment Surveys" were exempt from mandatory disclosure in their entirety under Exemptions 4 and 5. Specifically, OCRWM concluded that the survey questions were "of a business proprietary nature," and therefore exempt pursuant to Exemption 4. They claimed that the responses to the questions "are meaningless, numerical data" that are useless without knowing the questions, and that the analysis of the answers is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 5. These four documents were therefore withheld in their entirety. Finally, OCRWM stated that another document, while apparently found in the ECP files, was in fact the property of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC), and that Nevada should request that document from the NRC.

In its Appeal, Nevada contests the adequacy of the search that was performed and OCRWM's application of Exemptions 4, 5 and 6. In addition, Nevada argues that OCRWM's identification of the NRC document is so vague as to be useless in requesting the document from the NRC.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (December 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

In its Appeal, Nevada claims that there are a large number of agency documents that OCRWM has failed to locate or identify as responsive. In support of this contention, Nevada points out that in OCRWM's "Concerns Program Guide," staff Concerns Analysts are instructed to create a chronological log for each concern received "in which all events and communications pertinent to the concern are recorded with the date of the occurrence and the author of the information." Appeal at 4 (quoting the Concerns Program Guide). In addition, the Guide describes specific documents that are anticipated to be created during the process of handling an employee concern, including a "concern statement," created at the time of receipt of the concern, a "concern investigation plan," documentation of each interview conducted during the investigation, an investigation report, and a "concern response letter" for transmittal to the concerned individual. Consequently, Nevada contends that each of these documents should exist for every employee concern received. Nevada further contends that "in a PowerPoint presentation given by OCRWM Concerns Program Manager Nancy Voltura on July 31, 2002, she reported that the Concerns Program received 263 concerns during 2001" and 47 more during the first half of 2002. Appeal at 6. Based on these figures, Nevada estimates that the number of concerns that should have been received during the ten year period covered by its revised FOIA request "is well in excess of" one thousand. Id. Given the number of documents for each concern that are described in the Guide, Nevada suggests that a much greater volume than the 1,662 pages of documents identified as responsive in OCRWM's Determination Letter should have been located.

On November 15, 2006, OCRWM filed its response to Nevada's Appeal. In this Response, OCRWM proposes to provide Nevada with a copy of a log listing all of the concerns covered by Nevada's FOIA request. From this log, Nevada would then select specific files for production by OCRWM, subject to any applicable FOIA exemptions. OCRWM Response at 1. OCRWM has provided us with several pages of the listing of concerns that it proposes to provide to Nevada. Based on the submissions of OCRWM and Nevada, we believe that there is a substantial likelihood that the procedure suggested by OCRWM will result in the identification of additional responsive documents. We will therefore remand this matter to OCRWM for implementation of the procedure described above.

B. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In its Determination Letter, OCRWM found that the questions set forth in the four Safety Conscious Work Environment Surveys that were identified as responsive "are protected by copyright held by International Survey Research LLC," and the answers to those questions, without the questions themselves, would be nothing but "meaningless numerical data." Determination Letter at 5. OCRWM therefore withheld all of this material under Exemption 4. However, in its Response, OCRWM states that upon further review, it "discovered that [the surveys] were marked as copyrighted, but because they were prepared for the government's use they should not have been marked as such." OCRWM therefore proposes that it release these documents to Nevada after the redaction of any material that is subject to any other FOIA exemption. We agree. Therefore, on remand OCRWM will review the four surveys and the answers to those surveys and release them to Nevada unless it determines that the material is subject to some other FOIA exemption.

C. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). However, it is clear that these are not the only privileges recognized under Exemption 5. The U.S. Supreme Court has concluded that the coverage of this Exemption is quite broad, encompassing both statutory privileges and those commonly recognized by case law. United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 800 (1984). Accordingly, the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals, our judicial overseer, has stated that the statutory language "unequivocally" incorporates "all civil discovery rules into" Exemption 5. Martin v. Office of Special Counsel, Merit Systems Protection Board, 819 F.2d 1181, 1184 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (Martin).

In its Determination Letter, OCRWM concluded that the ECP documents that identify protected persons are exempt from mandatory disclosure in their entirety pursuant to the discovery privilege recognized by the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals in Machin v. Zukert, 316 F.2d 336 (1963) (hereinafter referred to as "the Machin privilege"). In that case, the court found that confidential statements made to personnel investigating the crash of a United States Air Force plane were not subject to discovery in a lawsuit filed against the manufacturer of the aircraft. In addition, OCRWM cites the language of Exemption 5 and states that the documents that identify protected persons are documents that Nevada "could not discover in litigation with the" DOE, and therefore may be withheld in their entirety under that Exemption.

The "litigation" referred to by OCRWM is an administrative proceeding before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) concerning the DOE's efforts to establish a nuclear waste repository at Yucca Mountain in Nevada. In order to decide questions arising during the period of time prior to the DOE's filing of a license application with the NRC, including the dissemination of relevant documents to the prospective parties and other interested persons, the NRC formed a Pre-License Application Presiding Officer (PAPO) Board. The PAPO Board determined that information identifying protected persons could be withheld by the DOE during the current stage of the proceeding. OCRWM contends that, under the PAPO Board's determination, ECP documents from which identifying information is redacted are also not available, except "upon a special showing of need and subject to the terms of a protective order." Determination Letter at 3. [1] OCRWM then cites Martin for the proposition that documents subject to such a qualified privilege are fully exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

In its Appeal, Nevada claims that Exemption 5 is completely inapplicable to the ECP documents in question because they are not subject to any cognizable discovery privilege. Specifically, the state contends that Machin is inapplicable because the information in that case is different from that contained in the ECP documents. Moreover, Nevada argues that the PAPO Board decision cannot be used as a basis for invoking Exemption 5 because the Board did not find any type of privilege to be applicable to the ECP documents.

At the outset, it is clear that the documents in question meet the "inter-agency or intra-agency" threshold of the exemption. Some of these documents are communications between DOE employees relating to employee concerns, and are therefore plainly intra-agency memorandums or letters. Others include employee concerns and witness statements from contractor employees. However, the federal courts have held that some documents generated outside of an agency but created through agency initiative may be considered "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters" for purposes of Exemption 5. In Ryan v. Department of Justice, 617 F.2d 781 (D.C. Cir. 1980), the Court said that "Congress apparently did not intend 'inter agency or intra-agency' to be rigidly exclusive terms, but rather to include [nearly any record] that is part of the deliberative process." Id. at 790. This can include witness statements from contractor employees. See Hertzberg v. Veneman, 273 F. Supp. 2d 67, 76 n.2 (D.D.C. 2003). The ECP documents that originated outside of the DOE were created in response to the DOE's initiative that contractor employees should feel free to raise safety and employment-related concerns without fear of retaliation. The ECP documents are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters" within the meaning of Exemption 5.

Next, we must determine whether the documents are of a type that is "normally privileged in the civil discovery context," Sears, 421 U.S. at 149. For the reasons that follow, we conclude that the documents are subject to the Machin privilege, but that the PAPO Board proceeding did not create a civil discovery privilege that is cognizable for Exemption 5 purposes.

In Machin, a party involved in civil litigation against a third party attempted to obtain from the U.S. Air Force a report concerning the crash of an Air Force plane. This Aircraft Accident Investigative Report set forth the results of the Air Force's investigation of the crash, including witness statements and mechanics' reports. The purpose of the Report was to determine the likely cause of the crash, with the ultimate goal of improving the safety of Air Force operations. Witnesses were interviewed with promises that their statements would remain confidential. Machin, 316 F.2d at 339. In United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792 (1984) (Weber), the Supreme Court held that documents subject to the Machin privilege are shielded from mandatory release pursuant to Exemption 5. That case also involved efforts to obtain, this time through the FOIA, a report of a safety investigation following an airplane crash. As in Machin, witnesses were assured of confidentiality.

The ECP documents are sufficiently similar to those at issue in these two cases to warrant protection under the Machin privilege. The Employee Concerns personnel conduct investigations into allegations, like the investigations in Machin and Weber, for the "purpose of taking corrective action in the interest of accident prevention." Weber, 465 U.S. at 795. Moreover, like the investigative programs in Weber and Machin, the promises of confidentiality given to complainants and witnesses are critical to the effectiveness of the investigations. As the Court stated in Machin, "We agree . . . that when disclosure of investigative reports obtained in large part through promises of confidentiality would hamper the efficient operation of an important Government program . . ., the reports should be considered privileged." The Court then went on to narrow the scope of the privilege, stating that it applied to the "testimony of private parties who participated in the investigation," and "any conclusions that might be based in any fashion on such privileged information." 316 F.2d at 339. The ECP witness interviews and the Concerns themselves are the functional equivalent of the "testimony of private parties who participated in the investigation" mentioned in Machin. Accordingly, OCRWM correctly withheld these documents in their entirety under Exemption 5, along with any conclusions based on that material.

We reach a different conclusion, however, regarding OCRWM's contention that the PAPO Board's treatment of these ECP documents creates a recognizable discovery privilege for purposes of Exemption 5.

In support of its position, OCRWM argues that in Weber, Martin and other cases, the federal courts have repeatedly stated that the FOIA should not be construed as allowing a requester to use the Act as a supplement to civil discovery. See, e.g., Weber, 465 U.S. at 804; Martin, 819 F.2d at 1186. However, these cases have uniformly referred to discovery privileges created by, or recognized in, duly-constituted courts of law. None of them speaks authoritatively to the issue of whether the order of an administrative body, like the PAPO Board, restricting the dissemination of documents can form an appropriate basis for withholding those documents under Exemption 5.

The federal courts have held, however, that a protective order issued by an administrative law judge in a federal agency's administrative proceedings does not prohibit the agency from disclosing records under the FOIA. See, e.g., General Electric Company v. NRC, 750 F.2d 1394, 1396, 1400 (7th Cir. 1984). Moreover, it must be noted that federal courts do not uniformly recognize even other judicial entities' privileges in the context of FOIA. For example, privileges extended by a state court do not necessarily fall within the purview of Exemption 5. See Sneirson v. Chemical Bank, 108 F.R.D. 159, 162 (D. Del. 1985) (The mere fact that a particular privilege has been recognized by state law will not necessarily mean that it will be recognized by a federal court). Finally, Exemption 5, like all FOIA exemptions, is to be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir. 1970)). See also State of Nevada, 29 DOE ¶ 80,216 (Case No. TFA-0098) (May 23, 2005). Given these considerations, we do not believe that the PAPO Board's order forms a sufficient basis for withholding documents under Exemption 5. Therefore, on remand OCRWM will review the ECP documents for releasability in light of our determinations regarding the Machin privilege and the PAPO Board's order.

D. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 of the FOIA protects from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982) (Washington Post).

In order to determine whether a document may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the document may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Third, the agency must balance the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the document would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

In its Appeal, Nevada claims that the ECP documents are not part of "personnel and medical files and similar files," and are therefore not protected from mandatory disclosure by Exemption 6. In the alternative, Nevada claims that the disclosure of the fact that someone filed a concern would not constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of that person's privacy.

The Supreme Court addressed the scope of this Exemption in Washington Post. The Court stated that the protection of an individual's privacy "surely was not intended to turn upon the label of the file which contains the damaging information." 456 U.S. at 601. Rather, the Court made clear that all information that "applies to a particular individual" meets the threshold requirement for Exemption 6 protection. Id. at 602. See also Mary Fields Jarvis, 26 DOE ¶ 80,190 (May 29, 1997) (Case No. VFA-0292).

Much of the information in the ECP documents applies to "particular individual[s]." It includes descriptions of various conditions relating to their employment and the very fact of their participation in the Employee Concerns Program. Nevada correctly points out that the disclosure of the fact that someone filed a concern may not, in and of itself, constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of that person's privacy. However, when that disclosure could lead to harassment, embarrassment, intimidation or retaliation against an ECP participant, the information may be withheld under Exemption 6 unless release would further the public interest in learning about the operations of the government, and this interest outweighs the privacy interest involved. See, e.g., Kevin D. Leary, 29 DOE ¶ 80,235 (November 18, 2005) (Case No. TFA-0118); William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,161 (February 20, 1997) (Case No. VFA-0262).

We have examined a sampling of the withheld material, and we find that significant privacy interests would be compromised by releasing information identifying protected persons. Some of these concerns allege inappropriate or unsafe behavior by individuals or organizations. Releasing the identities of the people who filed these concerns could subject them to harassment, retaliation or intimidation. Witnesses interviewed during the investigation of these concerns could face similar adverse consequences. Finally, identification of the subjects of these allegations could lead to undue embarrassment and unjustified damage to their personal and professional reputations.

In contrast to the substantial privacy interests involved, we find the public interest in release of material identifying protected persons to be negligible. This is because release of this information would shed little or no light on the operations of government, especially in light of the voluminous amount of information that DOE is to make available about the YMP through the NRC's Licensing Support Network. In short, Nevada has not suggested, nor can we discern, any useful purpose that would be served by disclosure of material identifying protected persons.

It is therefore clear that the public interest in disclosure is outweighed by the privacy interests of the sources and subjects of these Concerns, and the witnesses interviewed during the ensuing investigations. In fact, we conclude that the public is best served by maintaining the confidentiality of these individuals. Future employees might be reluctant to raise safety or efficiency-related concerns if they knew that their identities would be subject to routine disclosure. Moreover, investigations of these concerns would be hampered if witnesses could not be assured of confidentiality. Release of information identifying protected persons would therefore result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy within the meaning of Exemption 6.

E. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material

As we have previously stated, the Employee Concerns and the witness interviews are subject to the Machin privilege and shielded from mandatory disclosure in their entirety under Exemption 5. However, the withheld material includes other documents that contain exempt and non-exempt material. The mere fact that documents contain material that is exempt from mandatory release under the FOIA does not necessarily mean that those documents can be withheld in their entirety. The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); See also Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (August 15, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0060). OCRWM contends that under Machin, the ECP documents that identify protected persons are exempt from mandatory disclosure in their entirety, and may therefore be completely withheld. [2]

We do not believe that Machin supports such a result. In its opinion, the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals said that "the parties . . . have treated the investigative report as a unit that should either be entirely disclosed or entirely suppressed . . . however, it appears to us that certain portions of the report could be revealed without in any way jeopardizing the future success of Air Force accident investigations." The Court was specifically referring to the factual findings of Air Force mechanics. 316 F.2d at 339-40. This conclusion is consistent with our holdings in previous cases that factual material is generally not exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 5 and must be released unless it is "inextricably intertwined" with exempt material such that release of the factual material would expose or cause harm to the agency's deliberations. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971). The fact that information in the ECP documents that identify protected persons is subject to the Machin privilege does not relieve OCRWM of its obligation to segregate and release any non-exempt material from those documents.

In the alternative, OCRWM contends that any non-exempt material is, in fact, inextricably intertwined with exempt material. From the sampling of withheld material that we have examined,

2/ OCRWM also cites the PAPO Board's document access order as support for this position. However, as previously stated, we do not believe that this order adequately justifies the withholding of documents under FOIA.

however, it appears that certain factual material could be released without causing harm to the interests that are protected by Exemptions 5 and 6. For example, in "Investigation Report No. 04-024," the following material could be released without revealing the identities of, or personal information about, protected persons: (i) the first two sentences of the first full paragraph on page three; and (ii) the first and third sentences of the second paragraph on page 4, including the "bullets" with the sub-headings "1.1" and "1.2." From Appendix 3 with the heading "Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management Non-Investigative Resolution Form," OCP Number 04-072, the eighth and ninth sentences of the shaded section with the heading "Method of resolving the CI's Issue" could also be released, as could an article authored by John H. Sass of the U.S. Geological Survey entitled "Thermal Tracking of Water Flow Under Yucca Mountain," an attached map paginated as "OECP46-12," and attached charts paginated as "OECP46-13" and "OECP46-14."

F. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we will remand this matter to OCRWM. On remand, OCRWM should implement the procedure described in section II.A of this decision to identify additional responsive documents, release the four surveys that it withheld under Exemption 4 unless it determines that they should be withheld in whole or in part under another Exemption, and conduct a new review of the withheld material for any non-exempt material that can be released to Nevada.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the State of Nevada, OHA Case Number TFA-0173, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management for further action consistent with this Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Gloria C. Jacobs

Date of Filing: September 15, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0174

On September 15, 2006, Gloria C. Jacobs filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on August 18, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO). In that determination, ORO responded to a request for documents that Ms. Jacobs submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORO determined that it could not locate any records responsive to Ms. Jacobs' request. This appeal, if granted, would require ORO to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Ms. Jacobs filed a request with ORO for personnel security records pertaining to her late husband. Letter from Ms. Jacobs to ORO (undated). Specifically, Ms. Jacobs requested records regarding a security clearance obtained by her late husband in 1956-1957 to work for a contractor to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) during the Manhattan Project. Id. In its determination letter, ORO stated that "a search was conducted of the files of the Oak Ridge facilities and its contractor repositories for the requested records. However, no records could be located." Letter from Amy L. Rothrock, ORO, to Ms. Jacobs (August 18, 2006) (Determination Letter). Ms. Jacobs filed the present appeal challenging the adequacy of the search performed by ORO. Letter from Gloria C. Jacobs to OHA (August 25, 2006) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials."

Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted ORO to ascertain the scope of the search. ORO informed us that, in responding to Ms. Jacobs' request, it performed a very thorough search for documents pertaining to Ms. Jacobs' late husband. Specifically, Amy Rothrock of ORO stated,

> We conducted a search of the files of the DOE Records Holding Area (RHA) in Oak Ridge based on our corporate knowledge and experience with requests for personnel security and similar information generated by former Manhattan Project and Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) atomic weapons employers from the 1940's through the mid 1950's. The search was conducted both electronically and by hand search of paper file folders and finding aids at the DOE RHA. We used [Ms. Jacobs' late husband's] identifiers to search for any records regarding him. However, no records, including but not limited to personnel security clearance records, could be located regarding [Ms. Jacobs' late husband].
> There were also some historical AEC film badge records collected… for [National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH)] epidemiology studies and sent to the DOE RHA. These records were also searched electronically by me using copies of CD-ROMS furnished to me by NIOSH. Only one of the files on the CD-ROM pertained to MIT. I checked each page in that MIT file and could not locate [Ms. Jacob's late husband's] name or identifiers in the file.

Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock, ORO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (September 20, 2006). Based on this information, we find that ORO performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Jacobs' request and, therefore, the search was adequate. Accordingly, Ms. Jacobs' appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 15, 2006 by Gloria C. Jacobs, OHA Case No. TFA-0174, is hereby denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Jeremy Bigwood

Date of Filing: September 20, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0175

On September 20, 2006, Jeremy Bigwood filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 24, 2006, by the Office of Policy and International Affairs (OPIA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). */ That determination concerned a request for information that Mr. Bigwood submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, DOE would be ordered to release the information withheld and to search for additional responsive documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public, whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

Mr. Bigwood filed a FOIA request seeking documents that pertain to Hugo Chavez, President of Venezuela, and documents pertaining to Venezuela as a petroleum supplying country and OPEC member. See Appeal Letter at 1. On August 24, 2006, OPIA issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search of its files for responsive documents. According to OPIA, that search located 66 responsive documents. Thirty-five of those documents were provided to Mr. Bigwood in their entirety and 31 were provided with deletions pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. The Determination Letter stated that the withheld material is "pre-decisional" and "deliberative." See Determination Letter (August 24, 2006) at 1.

* The FOIA and Privacy Act Group of the DOE served the administrative function of providing Mr. Bigwood a response that identified OPIA as the office that conducted a search for responsive documents.

On September 20, 2006, Mr. Bigwood filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Bigwood challenges OPIA's determination, asserts that material was improperly withheld under Exemption 5 and asserts that DOE failed to perform an adequate search. See Appeal Letter at 3-5. For these reasons, Mr. Bigwood requests that OHA direct OPIA to release the requested information.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In withholding portions of documents from Mr. Bigwood, OPIA relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

After reviewing the requested documents at issue, we have concluded that the determination made by OPIA in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from Mr. Bigwood consists of comments, recommendations and opinions prepared by DOE employees and intended only for internal DOE use. The information requested in this case properly falls within the definition of "intra-agency memoranda" in the FOIA. The comments, recommendations and opinions contained in the material are clearly predecisional and deliberative. They discuss proposed actions in hypothetical scenarios about oil production and contain recommendations for items to discuss at meetings related to Venezuela. In addition, the comments and recommendations reflect draft opinions on issues related to action by Venezuela. These comments and recommendations were subject to further agency review and do not represent final agency position. Accordingly, we hold that the comments, recommendations and opinions withheld from the responsive material were properly withheld under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege.

Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the withheld material in the documents at issue, which consist solely of advisory opinions and recommendations provided to DOE in the consultative process. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987).

Adequacy of Search

When an agency conducts a search under the FOIA, it must undertake a search that is "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 705 F.2d 1344, 1351 (D.C. Circ. 1983). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003); David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999).

In the present case, Mr. Bigwood asserts that the search was inadequate and that there are several documents missing from the material. He further asserts that "there are no documents concerning the April 2002 coup against President Chavez, which DOE surely noticed even though it took place over a weekend." Appeal Letter at 1. He requests that DOE "search through your archives again paying special attention to any DOE documents or any other media produced during April 2002, which I believe you must have." Id. In response to Mr. Bigwood's Appeal, we contacted the FOIA and Privacy Group of DOE (FOIA Group) to determine the scope of the search. The FOIA Group referred us to the OPIA because that office conducted the search and it is the office most likely to contain responsive material. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Abel Lopez, FOIA Group, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (December 21, 2006). The OPIA informed us that it conducted a very long, extensive search of all of the files related to Mr. Bigwood's request. It stated that it located information Mr. Bigwood sought in his request, but that information was among the material identified in the Determination Letter as exempt under Exemption 5. In addition, the OPIA stated that no other relevant responsive material exists that was not addressed in its Determination Letter. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Andrea Lockwood, OPIA, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (January18, 2007).

Given the facts presented to us, we find that the OPIA conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Bigwood's request. Accordingly, Mr. Bigwood's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Jeremy Bigwood, OHA Case No. TFA-0175, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Environmental Defense Institute

Date of Filing: September 18, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0177

On September 18, 2006, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) agreed to consider as an appeal, and to process as an appeal, an unsigned electronic mail message attachment submitted by the Environmental Defense Institute (the Appellant). The Appellant also attached to that electronic mail message a copy of a determination that DOE's Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) issued on December 5, 2005. In the Determination Letter, Idaho released to the Appellant several documents in full that were responsive to its request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Idaho also redacted portions of two other documents, pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to release the information it withheld from those documents and to release additional documents that the Appellant claims that Idaho has not released in response to the Appellant's FOIA requests dated July 7, 2005, and September 21, 2005.

I. BACKGROUND

In letters dated July 7, 2005, and September 21, 2005, the Appellant submitted FOIA requests to Idaho for documents relating to the Advanced Test Reactor (ATR) and other facilities at the Reactor Technologies Complex (RTC). Request Letters dated July 7, 2005, and September 21, 2005, from Chuck Broscious, Executive Director, Appellant, to FOIA Office, Idaho. In response to the Appellant's July 7, 2005 request, Idaho issued determinations on August 26, 2005, and September 14, 2005, in which it released numerous documents in full to the Appellant. In its September 14, 2005 Determination, it also stated that it was withholding portions of one document under Exemption 2 of the FOIA. On October 24, 2005, the Appellant filed with OHA an Appeal from Idaho's September 14, 2005 Determination. In a Decision and Order dated March 16, 2006, OHA concluded that Idaho had properly withheld the redacted material and denied the appeal with the exception of two pages. OHA remanded to Idaho for issuance of a new determination either releasing the information or justifying its withholding. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0128, (March 16, 2006).

After the Appellant filed its Appeal on October 24, 2005, Idaho responded to the Appellant's September 21, 2005 request by releasing additional documents in full to the Appellant, and releasing portions of other documents. In one of its responses, on December 5, 2005, Idaho released several documents to the Appellant. Two of those documents were released after redacting portions pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

On December 17, 2005, the Appellant sent an electronic mail message to Janet R. H. Fishman, Staff Attorney, OHA, titled "FOIA Case TFA-0128". Electronic Mail Message dated December 17, 2005, from Chuck Broscious to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA. The December 17, 2005 electronic mail message had two attachments. One was a copy of Idaho's December 5, 2005 determination. The second attachment was an unsigned letter dated December 16, 2005, and addressed to Mrs. Fishman. The heading on the first page of the letter stated "Sent via U.S. Certified Mail and email." OHA has no record of ever having received the letter by U.S. mail. DOE's FOIA regulations require that a FOIA appeal to OHA must be addressed to the Director of OHA and that the envelope and letter must be clearly marked "Freedom of Information Appeal." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(b). This electronic mail message failed to comply with those requirements. First, it was not addressed to the OHA Director. Secondly, it was not clearly marked as a FOIA Appeal. In a court pleading filed on August 8, 2006, the Appellant characterized that unsigned electronic mail message attachment as a supplement to its Appeal. In view of the Appellant's characterization of its unsigned electronic mail message attachment as a supplement to its Appeal, OHA, in a spirit of cooperation, agreed on September 18, 2006, to consider the attachment as a FOIA Appeal and to process it despite its failure to conform to the requirements of DOE's FOIA regulations. Herein we will denote that letter as the Appeal Letter from Chuck Broscious to Janet R. H. Fishman.

In that Appeal, the Appellant states that the > issue of DOE / ID redaction of requested FOIA documents now includes (due to additional document releases) . . . the following reports:

> 1. Upgraded Final Safety Analysis Report for the Advanced Test Reactor (SAR-153)
>   a. Chapter 1 (one page redacted)
>   b. Chapter 2 (two pages redacted)
>   c. Chapter 3 (25 pages redacted)
>   d. Chapter 3 Appendix A (all pages have portions redacted)
>   e. Chapter 4 (16 pages redacted)
>   f. Chapter 15 (completely redacted)
>   g. Chapter 16 (completely redacted)

2. Engineering Design File EDF-5622 (Interim Seismic Probabilistic Risk Assessment for the Advance Test Reactor[)] has 9 pages redacted.

3. Interoffice Memorandum, FOIA Item #49 Appendix A, has 9 pages redacted.

4. On December 14, 2005, we received from DOE/ID, additional documents responsive to our requests. However, several more documents had been substantially redacted, and we therefore hereby appeal to your office and ask that the redacted documents, identified herein, also be released in full.

5. U.S. Government Memorandum, Idaho Operations Office, March 19, 2004, Advanced Test Reactor Continued [O]perations Planning Assessment Report (TPO-TRA-04-026) FOIA Item No. 41, has every page partially redacted and Office of Independent Oversight and Performance Assurance report is missing.

6. ATR Planning Assessment Team Report 2/13/04, FOIA Item Number 43, has portions or total pages redacted.

7. There remain about nine documents that are either being "processed" by DOE/ID and/or are being "transferred [to] HQ for response directly to requestor" (see list below). The final release disposition of these documents must be finalized in a timely [manner].

a. Item #37: OA-2003-ESH-6
b. Item #38: OA-2003-ESH-7
c. Item #39: OA-2003-ESH-8
d. Item #40: OA-2003-ESH-9
e. Item 43; Rice Report
f. Item # 58; Survey Seismic Evaluation of the Emergency Surveys for Nuclear Safety Culture classes at TRA (TRC) and associated final reports.
g. Item #59; 1993 (or later) Seismic Probabilistic Risk Assessment for EBR-II Reactor Building (767) at MFC formerly ANL-W.
h. Item #60; 1993 (or later) Seismic Probabilistic Risk Assessment for Fuel Manufacturing Facility Building 704 at MFC formally ANL-W.

i. Item #44; All Un-reviewed Safety Question (USQ) ATR, RTC and MFC reports for 2004 and 2005 not listed in "DOE Summary Report Lists sent August 25, 2005."

Appeal Letter dated December 16, 2005, from Chuck Broscious to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA. We will deal with each item separately.

II. ANALYSIS

Item 1–Upgraded Final Safety Analysis Report for the ATR

This document was dealt with in our decision dated March 16, 2006, where we upheld the redactions made by Idaho with one exception and returned the matter to Idaho for a determination on that matter. We ordered Idaho to review chapter 3/4, pages 0-1 and 0-2 of the ATR SAR to determine if any of the information could be reasonably segregated and released to the Appellant. Idaho released these pages without deletions to the Appellant by letter dated November 20, 2006, in order to be certain that the Appellant received them. Determination Letter dated November 20, 2006, from Nicole Brooks, Idaho, to Appellant.

Item 2–Engineering Design File EDF-5622

The Appellant claims that this document was released with nine pages redacted. The determination letter dated December 5, 2005, indicates that the document was released in full to the Appellant. We contacted Idaho to confirm that the document was released in full. Idaho confirmed that it re-released the document in its entirety to the Appellant on September 7, 2006. Electronic Mail Message dated November 2, 2006, from Nicole Brooks, Idaho, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. We have been provided with a copy of the letter releasing the document to the Appellant. Attachment to electronic Mail Message dated November 2, 2006, from Nicole Brooks, Idaho, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA.

Item 3–Interoffice Memorandum

The Appellant claims that this document was also released with nine pages redacted. As was done with Item 2, Idaho has re-released the document to the Appellant in full. Idaho confirmed that it re-released the document to the Appellant on November 14, 2006. Letter dated November 14, 2006, from Nicole Brooks to Appellant.

Item 4–Additional documents

December 14, 2005, was the date on which the Appellant received Idaho's December 5, 2005 determination. The Appellant asks that the documents it received on that date be released in full. However, all the documents that were not released in full by Idaho are specifically addressed in the Appeal Letter. Therefore, Item 4 appears to be an introduction to Items which follow in the Appellant's letter. We have addressed two of the documents listed as Items 2 and 3. We will address the remainder of the Items below.

Item 5–Memorandum
Item 6–ATR Planning Assessment Team Report
Item 7f–Survey Seismic Evaluation of the Emergency Surveys for Nuclear Safety Culture classes at TRA (TRC)and any associated final reports

Idaho withheld portions of these three documents under FOIA Exemption 5. The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency has a substantial burden to justify the withholding. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862. The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958)).

The deliberative process privilege also permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The purpose of the privilege is to protect the quality of agency decisions by promoting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87 (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946 (Ct. Cl. 1958)).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In addition to providing categories of records exempt from mandatory disclosure, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional material and factual material that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual material must be segregated and released to the requester.

In its determination letter dated December 5, 2005, Idaho withheld portions of the documents in Items 5 and 6 from the Appellant, claiming that those portions contain information that is predecisional and part of the deliberative process. We have reviewed these documents and believe that the portions Idaho withheld were properly withheld under Exemption 5. The purpose of the Report (Item 6) is stated to "[p]rovide the Team conclusions and recommendations resulting from the February 2-13, 2004, independent assessment of the Advanced Test Reactor." Report dated February 13, 2004, from ATR Planning Assessment Team to Elizabeth D. Sellers, Manager, Idaho. The Memorandum, Item 5 in the Appeal Letter, communicates the core observations of the Report. Memorandum dated March 19, 2004, from Elizabeth D. Sellers to William D. Magwood, IV, Director, Office of Nuclear Energy, Science and Technology. Both documents contain recommendations and opinions relating to the ATR continued operations. The Report contains specific recommendations and opinions regarding the future operation of the ATR and how management and oversight of the ATR should be structured. The Report provides DOE's Idaho Operations Manager with an independent assessment of the ATR at her request; the results of the assessment reflect the opinions, recommendations, and findings of the Planning Assessment Team, and do not reflect final agency decisions. The Memorandum summarizes recommendations and opinions contained in the Report. Both opinion and facts were withheld from the documents by Idaho. The factual information in question was selected from a larger quantity of factual information in a manner such that release of the selection would tend to reveal the deliberative process of the manager and the Team in formulating their respective documents. This factual information meets the standard for non-disclosure set forth in Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

In a determination letter dated January 23, 2006, Idaho withheld portions of Item 7f from the Appellant, stating that those portions contain information that reflects the opinions and recommendations obtained from employees. Furthermore, the survey results and raw data were obtained from employees under a promise of confidentiality. These results are used to make recommendations to management on how to fashion policies. We have reviewed these documents and believe that the portions Idaho withheld were properly withheld under Exemption 5. Release of this information would inhibit Idaho's ability to obtain candidly expressed opinions in the future. Additionally, because these opinions and recommendations were made at an early stage of the process by Idaho employees, not by decision makers themselves, they may not accurately reflect Idaho's opinions or current practices.

The fact that material falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the subject matter of Items 5, 6, and 7f, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the withheld material is composed mainly of predecisional, non-factual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld material is far outweighed by the chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. Accordingly, we conclude that release of the withheld information would not be in the public interest.

Item 7–Nine documents being processed as of December 16, 2005

As of December 16, 2005, the Appellant identified nine documents that had been identified as responsive to its request that were still being processed or had been transferred to DOE headquarters for a response. First, regarding Items 7a-d, Idaho explained in a determination letter dated October 27, 2005, that those items were generated at DOE Headquarters in Washington, DC, and had therefore been forwarded for processing to Mr. Abel Lopez, who is Director of FOIA / Privacy Act Group in Washington, DC. Determination Letter dated October 27, 2005, from Nicole Brooks, Idaho, to Appellant. Mr. Lopez released documents responsive to those items on November 21, 2006. Determination Letter dated November 21, 2006, from Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA / Privacy Act Group, DOE Headquarters, to Appellant. As explained in that letter, it was determined that those four items do not reflect four separate reports or documents, but rather reflect four separate findings of a DOE inspection. Those findings were part of a document that had already been provided to the Appellant by Idaho in its determination letter dated August 26, 2005, and that had been listed as item 16 on the index of that determination letter. In addition, DOE's search in Washington, DC, identified three other documents responsive to those four items. Those responsive documents were released in their entirety with the determination letter dated November 21, 2006.

Second, Item 7e, which is the same as Item 6, was released to the Appellant with redactions by letter dated December 5, 2005, and is addressed previously in this Decision. Third, Item 7f was released to the Appellant with redactions by letter dated January 23, 2006, and is also addressed in this Decision above. Fourth, Items 7g and 7h were released to the Appellant in full on January 23, 2006. Determination Letter dated January 23, 2006 from Nicole Brooks, Idaho, to Appellant.

Finally, Idaho explained in its determination letter dated January 23, 2006, that it had conducted a thorough search of its files for information in response to Item 7i, which the Appellant had clarified to be "All Un-reviewed Safety Questions (USQ) reports for 2004 related to Pu^{238}", but that no such reports exist. Determination Letter dated January 23, 2006, from Nicole Brooks, Idaho, to Appellant. In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, January 9, 2006 (Case No. TFA-0138); Doris M. Harthun, April 8, 2003, (Case No. TFA-0015).

Idaho's original search was based on a computer query of all Unreviewed Safety Question (USQ) ATR, RTC, and Material and Fuels Complex Summary Reports for the year 2000 to present, as originally requested by the Appellant. If an issue is raised and given a USQ tracking number, a USQ screen is completed. If the determination is positive, then a USQ determination is completed and added to the USQ summary report. The USQ summary report does not include all USQ screens because a negative screen is not a safety issue and no further action is necessary. In this situation, a report would not be created because it would be deemed unnecessary and that USQ screen would not be included on the USQ Summary Report list. For this reason, there are gaps in the ascension numbers on the Summary Report Lists which were noted by EDI in its September 21, 2005 request. We have confirmed with Idaho that the USQ Summary Report lists that were sent to the Appellant in response to their FOIA requests are comprehensive and complete compilations of all USQ reports. Therefore, there are no additional USQ reports that were "not listed in DOE Summary Report lists sent August 25, 2005" as requested in Item 7i of this Appeal.

III. CONCLUSION

A number of the items in the Appellant's Appeal have been dealt with previously. Item 1 was addressed by our decision of March 16, 2006. Items 2, 3, 7a-d, 7g and 7h have been released to the Appellant in full. Item 4 does not refer to a specific document, but appears to be an introduction to subsequent Items in the Appeal. Idaho properly withheld the redacted material from Items 5, 6 (which is identical to Item 7e), and 7f under Exemption 5. Idaho could not find any documents responsive to Item 7i. For the reasons set forth above, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Environmental Defense Institute on September 18, 2006, Case No. TFA-0177, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Diane C. Larson

Date of Filing: October 18, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0178

On October 18, 2006, Diane C. Larson filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on September 15, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) FOIA/Privacy Act Group (FOIA/PA). In that determination, FOIA/PA responded to a request for documents that Ms. Larson submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would require FOIA/PA to perform an additional search and either release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On May 2, 2006, Ms. Larson filed a request with FOIA/PA for the following documents:

(1) Classified documents provided to the defendant that were not provided to her or her attorney during her litigation.

(2) All documents DOE provided to the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). In this item of her request, Ms. Larson specifically refers to an October 6, 2003 letter from FOIA/PA stating that "the CIA identified a responsive document that originated at the DOE Headquarters." Ms. Larson then states, "Please provide me a copy of that responsive document . . . ."

(3) All information and reports from 1992 to date that implied criminal activity generated by the DOE Headquarters or the DOE Richland Operations Office, which may include Ed Curran, John Wagoner, James Dover, Len Marzetti, Lyle Gilk, Dennis Sieraki, James Spracklen, Bob Roselli, Notra Trulock, Ray Semko, or DOE contractors Westinghouse (Ron Rush, Jim Stowe, Mike Duncan, David Palmer, Craig Walton), Boeing, Lockheed Martin, Babcock & Wilcox, and Battelle. Also in this item of her request, Ms. Larson requested "information in my FOIA request 10/13/2000 not previously provided to me that can now be declassified."

(4) Information that James Spracklen, DOE Richland Operations Office, provided to Clark Trapp and Phil Gasiewicz, U.S. Investigations, in 1989 and 1999 regarding Ms. Larson's finances.

(5) All information provded by DOE Headquaters and the Richland Operations Office (Mary Jack, Robert Hubbard, Dennis Sieraki) to Dr. Montgomery regarding Ms. Larson's mental health and the reason that she was sent for an evaluation.

(6) Global Technologies employment records regarding Ms. Larson (1999-2000) that were acquired by DOE.

(7) Police or Hanford Patrol reports filed on Ms. Larson from false information "being provided to/by Global or anyone else."

(8) A copy of Ms. Larson's security clearance information as it appears "on the DOE database file" and "a copy of my SCI file."

Letter from Diane Larson to FOIA/PA (April 21, 2006).

FOIA/PA determined that any documents responsive to Ms. Larson's request would be located at either the DOE's Richland Operations Office (DOE/RL) or the Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance at DOE Headquarters (DOE/SA), and therefore referred the request to these two offices.

DOE/RL conducted a search of its Office of Chief Counsel, Safeguards and Security Office, and the offices of the DOE contractor Fluor Hanford, Inc., which has oversight of the Hanford Patrol. DOE/RL also searched a database that lists archived employment records for any records regarding Ms. Larson's employment with Global Technologies. DOE/RL described the aforementioned locations as those "that would most likely have responsive records." DOE/RL searched these locations using Ms. Larson's name and Social Security Number, and found no documents responsive to her request. Electronic mail from Dorothy Riehle, DOE/RL, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (November 2, 2006).

DOE/SA conducted a search of > Ms. Larson's Personnel Security File (PSF) and the Central Personnel Clearance Index (CPCI), both of which are part of the DOE-43 "Personnel Security Files", our system of record. Ms. Larson's PSF and CPCI were examined as the information she requested would have been contained in those locations if it existed.

Memorandum from Stephanie Grimes, Director, Office of Personnel Security, to Steven Goering, OHA (October 31, 2006). DOE/SA located documents responsive to items 2, 5, and 8 of Ms. Larson's request.

In its determination letter, FOIA/PA informed Ms. Larson of the results of DOE/SA's search, released the responsive documents to Ms. Larson in their entirety, and explained that she had the right to appeal the adequacy of the search to the Office of Hearings and Appeals. Letter from Abel Lopez, FOIA/PA, to Ms. Larson (September 15, 2006) (Determination Letter).

Ms. Larson then filed the present appeal, in which she states, "Please review information and records to provide me ALL the information and answer the questions for the 11 items that I requested . . . . I challenge the adequacy of this search for responsive documents . . . . Information has been withheld." Appeal at 1.[1] More specifically, Ms. Larson contends that the DOE should now release information that was withheld from her by the DOE's Office of Inspector General (DOE/IG) in 2003 in response to a previous FOIA request she filed. She also notes that one of the documents released to her, a letter, refers to attachments, but that FOIA/PA did not release to her any attachments. Finally, she states that FOIA/PA should search other DOE locations for responsive documents.

The issue before us is whether, in light of FOIA/PA's search for responsive documents as described above, the search was adequate under the requirements of the FOIA.[2] In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

II. Analysis

In the present case, we find that FOIA/PA's search was adequate under the requirements of the FOIA. First, based upon the request received, FOIA/PA made a reasonable determination that documents responsive to Ms. Larson's request would most likely be located at DOE/RL or DOE/SA at DOE Headquarters, because her request references DOE/RL, DOE Headquarters, and, more specifically, security clearance information. Similarly, DOE/RL and DOE/SA searched those locations within its purview where documents were most likely to be found.

[1] Three of the 11 items in Ms. Larson's request were questions (e.g., "Why was I put on an indices list and tracked as a non-US citizen?"), rather than requests for documents. However, the FOIA is not a mechanism for answering questions. Under the FOIA, agencies are required only to release non-exempt, responsive documents; they are not required to answer questions about an agency's operations. DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978).

[2] Because the only responsive documents ultimately located by FOIA/PA were contained in a Privacy Act system of records (DOE-43, "Personnel Security Files"), FOIA/PA proceeded to process Ms. Larson's request under the Privacy Act. This treatment of the request minimized the possibility that any information would need to be withheld from the requester, and all of the responsive documents located were released in their entirety. However, Ms. Larson stated in her request that she was filing the request under the FOIA, and FOIA/PA's search, as described above, was not limited to a particular Privacy Act system of records. We therefore will analyze the adequacy of the FOIA/PA's search under the requirements of the FOIA. See Diane C. Larson, 27 DOE ¶`80,110 (1998) (analysis of the adequacy of a Privacy Act search "using principles that we have developed under the FOIA").

Nonetheless, Ms. Larson has identified documents that were not identified or released to her by FOIA/PA in its September 15, 2006 determination. First, Ms. Larson correctly notes that attachments to one of the documents released in FOIA/PA's determination, a letter from Robert Hubbard to Frederick Montgomery, were not provided with the September 15 determination. Second, her request specifically identifies documents from which information was previously withheld as classified in response to a request she submitted in 2000. Third, in her appeal, Ms. Larson identifies two documents from which information was withheld by DOE/IG in October 2003 in response to an earlier request she filed. All of these documents appear to be within the scope of Ms. Larson's May 2, 2006 request.

Regarding the attachments referenced in one of the documents provided to Ms. Larson, we have been informed that the attachments, and in fact the letter itself, have already been released to Ms. Larson in a November 8, 2000 response to a request she previously filed. Electronic mail from Audrey Dixon, Office of Personnel Security, to Steven Goering, OHA (November 14, 2008). The DOE is not required to release to a FOIA requester the same documents previously released to that requester under the FOIA.

However, Ms. Larson is entitled to request again information that previously has been withheld from her, specifically any classified information not released in response to her October 2000 request, and the information withheld by DOE/IG in its October 2003 determination. We will therefore remand this matter to FOIA/PA so that Ms. Larson's request can be referred to the appropriate offices within DOE for a new determination regarding the previously withheld information.

Finally, though we conclude that FOIA/PA's search for documents responsive to Ms. Larson's request was adequate given the information available at the time, FOIA/PA should consider on remand whether there are additional locations where responsive documents may be located. For example, Ms. Larson requested "a copy of my SCI file." DOE/SA has informed us that the "SCI" is an abbreviation of "Sensitive Compartmented Information," and that such information is maintained by a DOE Headquarters element other than DOE/SA. We also suggest that FOIA/PA consider asking Ms. Larson for information in support of her contention that responsive documents may be located at other DOE locations. In all other respects, we will deny the present appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 18, 2006 by Diane C. Larson, OHA Case No. TFA-0178, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Ed Donegan

Date of Filing: October 12, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0179

On October 12, 2006, Ed Donegan filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on September 28, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) FOIA/Privacy Group (FOIA/PA). In that determination, FOIA/PA responded to a request for documents that Mr. Donegan submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. FOIA/PA determined that it could not locate any records responsive to Mr. Donegan's request. This appeal, if granted, would require FOIA/PA to perform an additional search and either release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Mr. Donegan filed a request with FOIA/PA for documents regarding the Human Genome Project (HGP), a 13-year effort coordinated by the DOE and the National Institutes of Health (NIH). Specifically, Mr. Donegan sought documents related to (1) why the Human Genome Project (HGP) has "stonewalled" him on "requests for direction and assistance in writing grant requests"; (2) changes made to HGP documentation as a result of contacts from Mr. Donegan. Electronic mail from Ed Donegan to FOIA/PA (July 25, 2006).

FOIA/PA referred Mr. Donegan's request to the DOE's Office of Science. The Office of Science consulted Daniel Drell, Ph.D., a Program Manager in the Life and Medical Sciences Division of the Office of Science. According to Dr. Drell, while he may have previously been copied on an email Mr. Donegan sent to the NIH, he did not retain any such email, and is aware of no documents in the possession of the DOE that would be responsive to Mr. Donegan's request. In its determination letter, FOIA/PA informed Mr. Donegan that its search did not locate any documents responsive to his request and that he had the right to appeal the adequacy of the search to the Office of Hearings and Appeals. Letter from Abel Lopez, FOIA/PA, to Mr. Donegan (September 28, 2006) (Determination Letter).

Mr. Donegan then filed the present appeal, in which he states, "According to the typical empty letter I got in response to [my request], you never even bothered looking at NIH for any documents, and you never made any effort to even look at my request about what to look for." The issue before us is whether, in light of FOIA/PA's search for responsive documents as described above, the search was adequate under the requirements of the FOIA.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

II. Analysis

As an initial matter, it is clear from Mr. Donegan's appeal that the documents he is seeking may be in the possession of the NIH. However, the appellant is incorrect in implying that the FOIA requires the DOE to search for documents in another federal agency. If Mr. Donegan wishes to obtain documents from the NIH, he will need to file a FOIA request with the NIH directly. Information on filing such a request can be found at http://www.nih.gov/icd/od/foia/.

Regarding any documents responsive to Mr. Donegan's request that may be in the possession of the DOE, we note that the appellant identifies no specific contacts that he made with the DOE. Nevertheless, the Office of Science has informed us that, if Mr. Donegan had contacted the DOE regarding the HGP, the person he most likely would have contacted would have been Dr. Drell, the DOE official to whom Office of Science referred Mr. Donegan's request. Electronic mail from Daniel Drell, Ph.D., Program Manager, Life and Medical Sciences Division, Office of Science, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (October 25, 2006).

By referring Mr. Donegan's request to the DOE's Office of Science, which consulted Dr. Drell as to his knowledge of any documents responsive to Mr. Donegan's request, FOIA/PA has performed a search of the location where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Mr. Donegan sought. Accordingly, the present appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 12, 2006 by Ed Donegan, OHA Case No. TFA-0179, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Betty N. Stair

Date of Filing: November 22, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0180

On November 22, 2006, Betty N. Stair filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on October 23, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque (NNSA). In that determination, NNSA responded to a request for documents Ms. Stair submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA determined that it could locate no documents responsive to Ms. Stair's request. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to perform an additional search and either release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On August 11, 2006, Ms. Stair filed a FOIA request for records pertaining to her husband, Mr. Edward Stair. Specifically, Ms. Stair requested a copy of his personnel record from the Y-12 plant and any radiation exposure records pertaining to Mr. Stair. Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Betty N. Stair (October 23, 2006) (Determination Letter). In its determination letter, NNSA determined that it did not locate any records responsive to Ms. Stair's request. Id.

Ms. Stair appealed the NNSA determination to the DOE's Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her appeal, she challenges the adequacy of the search performed by NNSA for responsive documents. Letter from Ms. Stair to OHA (November 22, 2006) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials."

Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted NNSA to ascertain the scope of the search for responsive documents. NNSA informed us that when it received Ms. Stair's request it determined that any responsive records would be located at the Y-12 plant. NNSA forwarded Ms. Stair's request to the Y-12 plant for a search for records. See Electronic Mail Message from Terry Martin Apodaca, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (December 5, 2006). The Y-12 plant informed NNSA that it did not locate any responsive records. As a result, NNSA issued a determination letter to Ms. Stair informing her that no responsive records were located. Id. In response to this appeal, NNSA contacted Y-12 to discuss the original search for responsive documents. NNSA now believes that the initial search was inadequate. See Electronic Mail Message from Terry Martin Apodaca to Diane DeMoura (January 16, 2007). Based on the foregoing information, NNSA has requested that we remand this appeal so that it may conduct an additional search for documents responsive to Ms. Stair's request. Id.

Accordingly, this appeal should be granted and the matter remanded to NNSA for an additional search. After completing its search, NNSA is to provide Ms. Stair with any responsive documents or to issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any responsive information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on November 22, 2006 by Betty N. Stair, OHA Case No. TFA-0180, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque, for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: William J. Lueckel, Jr.

Date of Filing: December 7, 2006

Case Number: TFA-0182

On December 7, 2006, William J. Lueckel, Jr., filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on November 2, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (Golden). In that determination, Golden responded to a request for documents that Dr. Lueckel submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would require Golden to release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On October 26, 2006, Dr. Lueckel filed a request with Golden for "a copy of the non-proprietary Summary/Abstract of each of the proposals submitted to DOE in response to topics 2, 3, and 4" of a Financial Assistance Funding Opportunity Announcement (FOA) issued on January 24, 2006. Electronic Mail from Dr. Lueckel to Golden (October 26, 2006). On November 2, 2006, Golden responded to Dr. Lueckel's request, stating in pertinent part,

> We are unable to provide you with the information responsive to your FOIA request . . . . Please be advised that under the FOIA, DOE only releases information related to applications that receive an award. DOE's protection of FOA proposals is justified under FOIA Exemption 5, which covers documents that contain pre-decisional information regarding the deliberative processes of the government, and FOIA Exemption 4, which protects "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person [that is] privileged or confidential."

Letter from Golden to Dr. Lueckel (November 2, 2006).

Dr. Lueckel then filed the present appeal. In the appeal, addressing Golden's stated rationale for the application of Exemption 4, he notes that the FOA in question states with regard to summary/abstracts, "This document must not include any proprietary or sensitive business information as the Department may make it available to the public." Appeal at 1-2; Financial Assistance Funding Opportunity Announcement, Research and Development of Fuel Cell Technology for the Hydrogen Economy, Funding Opportunity Number: DE-PS36-06GO96017 (January 24, 2006) [hereinafter January 24 FOA].

On January 10, 2007, Golden submitted a response to Dr. Lueckel's appeal. In its response, Golden states, "Because the summary/abstracts are not supposed to contain confidential commercial or financial information, DOE is at this time withdrawing its reliance on Exemption 4 as a basis for withholding the summary/abstracts." Letter from Kimberly J. Graber, Legal Counsel, Golden, to Steven J. Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (January 9, 2007) [hereinafter Golden Response].[1] The issue before us, then, is whether the summary/abstracts submitted in response to the FOA may be withheld under either FOIA Exemption 5.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001). "[T]he first condition of Exemption 5 is no less important than the second; the communication must be 'inter-agency or intra-agency.' 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)." Klamath, 532 U.S at 9.

Because we find, as explained below, that the summary/abstracts are not inter-agency or intra-agency communications, they may not be withheld under FOIA Exemption 5. Golden cites a previous decision of our office in which we stated that "'[w]hen documents have been created outside of an agency but pursuant to agency initiative, courts have held that such documents are intra-agency documents' for purposes of FOIA Exemption 5." Golden Response at 5 (quoting William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,161 (1997) (citing Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1078 n.44 (D.C. Cir. 1971))). However, subsequent to our 1997 decision in Payne, in 2001 the Supreme Court issued its decision in Klamath, cited above, and the holding of the Court in that case does not support Golden's withholding of the documents at issue.

In Klamath, the Court considered the application of Exemption 5 to communications between the Bureau of Indian Affairs and certain Indian tribes. Klamath, 532 U.S. at 6. The Court noted that some lower courts had "held that the exemption extends to communications between Government agencies and outside consultants hired by them." Id. at 10. Assuming, without deciding, that such communications qualify as intra-agency under Exemption 5, the Court found that the "intra-agency condition . . . rules out application of Exemption 5 to tribal communications on analogy to consultants' reports." Id. at 12. The Court reasoned

[1] Golden also states in its response that it believes the documents may be withheld under FOIA Exemption 3, though it did not cite this exemption in its original determination in response to Dr. Lueckel's request. Golden Response at 3-4. Because, as explained below, we are remanding this case to Golden for a new determination, Golden will have an opportunity to set forth in that determination its basis for any withholding under FOIA Exemption 3.

> [C]onsultants whose communications have typically been held exempt have not been communicating with the Government in their own interest or on behalf of any person or group whose interests might be affected by the Government action addressed by the consultant. In that regard, consultants may be enough like the agency's own personnel to justify calling their communications "intra-agency." The Tribes, on the contrary, necessarily communicate with the Bureau with their own, albeit entirely legitimate, interests in mind. While this fact alone distinguishes tribal communications from the consultants' examples recognized by several Courts of Appeals, the distinction is even sharper, in that the Tribes are self-advocates at the expense of others seeking benefits inadequate to satisfy everyone.

Id. Thus, "the intra-agency condition excludes, at the least, communications to or from an interested party seeking a Government benefit at the expense of other applicants." Id. at 12 n.4.

The distinction drawn by the Court in Klamath could hardly be more applicable here. The documents at issue in this case were not submitted by consultants that "had not been communicating with the Government in their own interest or on behalf of any person or group whose interests might be affected by the Government action addressed by the consultant." Id. at 12. Instead, the summary/abstracts provided in response to the FOA were submitted by "interested part[ies] seeking a Government benefit at the expense of other applicants." Id. Applying the holding of the Court in Klamath to the present case, the summary/abstracts may not be withheld under Exemption 5.

III. Conclusion

Because we disagree with Golden as to the application of FOIA Exemption 5 to the documents requested by Dr. Lueckel, we will remand this matter to Golden for the issuance of a new determination either releasing those documents or providing a justification for their withholding that is consistent with the analysis set forth above.[2]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on December 7, 2007 by William J. Lueckel, Jr., OHA Case No. TFA-0182, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Golden Field Office for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

[2] Golden notes in its response, and we agree, that the DOE FOIA regulations require Golden to "consider the submitter's views . . . in making its determination." Golden Response at 1; 10 C.F.R. § 1004.11.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: William K. Lane

Date of Filing: January 10, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0183

On January 10, 2007, William K. Lane (the Appellant), filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on December 18, 2006. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Oak Ridge would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On June 14, 2006, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request for all documents on George Alexander Lane, his father, who worked for E. I. duPont De Nemours at Oak Ridge during World War II. He provided his father's approximate year of birth and the year of his death to aid the search. On December 18, 2006, Oak Ridge responded that the search of the files of Oak Ridge and its contractor and facility site located only George Alexander Lane's personnel clearance data card. Determination Letter dated December 18, 2006, from Amy Rothrock, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge, to William K. Lane. On January 10, 2007, the Appellant appealed that determination to our Office. Appeal Letter dated December 30, 2006, from William K. Lane, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In the Appeal, the Appellant asks that more information be located. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, 29 DOE ¶ 80,240, Case No. TFA-0138 (January 9, 2006); Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282, Case No. TFA-0015 (April 8, 2003).

We have contacted Oak Ridge in response to the Appellant's request to determine what type of search was conducted. Unfortunately, the Appellant does not know his father's social security number, an important tool for searching through personnel records at Oak Ridge. The DOE Records Holding Area, which stores Oak Ridge's archived records, performed a computer database search and a manual search for records about the Appellant's father. For former employees who worked for contractors and subcontractors in the 1940's during the Manhattan Project, it is not unusual to find only a copy of the person's personnel clearance data card. Electronic Mail Message sent January 11, 2007, from Leah Ann Schmidlin, Oak Ridge, to Janet Fishman, OHA. This was found and provided to the Appellant. For the most part, contractors at Oak Ridge in the 1940s retained all personnel information other than the personnel clearance data card. Electronic Mail Message sent January 22, 2007 from Leah Ann Schmidlin, Oak Ridge, to Janet Fishman, OHA. Therefore, it is possible that information may be in the possession of E. I. duPont De Nemours, the Appellant's father's employer. Oak Ridge also stated that it is very difficult to locate any documentation about an individual without that person's social security number.[*/] Id.

Based on the search that Oak Ridge performed, we are convinced that it followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in his request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by William K. Lane, on January 10, 2007, Case No. TFA-0183, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

[*/] Oak Ridge indicated to us that it attempted to find a social security number for the Appellant's father. It searched a database that could possibly have contained social security numbers of people who had died. Oak Ridge was unsuccessful in finding the number. DECISION AND ORDER

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Raymond W. Stephens

Date of Filing: January 18, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0185

On January 18, 2007, Raymond W. Stephens filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on December 18, 2006 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (CBC). In that determination, CBC responded to a request for documents that Mr. Stephens submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. CBC provided Mr. Stephens with some documents responsive to his request, but determined that it could not locate the remaining requested records. This appeal, if granted, would require CBC to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Mr. Stephens filed a request with CBC for several documents regarding a former DOE sub-contractor and its operations concerning a particular piece of equipment. See Letter from Jack R. Craig, CBC, to Raymond W. Stephens (December 18, 2006) (Determination Letter). In its determination letter, CBC located and provided in their entirety two of the requested documents. CBC added that a thorough search for the remaining documents was conducted, but no documents were located. Id. CBC outlined its search for responsive records as follows:

1. Two boxes of hard copy correspondence were recalled from the Federal Records Center and searched for specific correspondence numbers relating to the subject matter.

2. Hummingbird database was searched for any subject-related information.

3. Environmental Records Database (ERD) was searched for subject-related information.

4. Records Management Database (RMDB) was searched for subject-related information.

5. Procurement personnel were contacted. Any records that may have been responsive to this request have been destroyed in accordance with DOE Administrative Records Schedule 3: Procurement, Supply, and Grant Records. Subcontract records are retained for 6 ¼ years after subcontract is complete. No records exist based on the dates of the documents requested.

Id. Mr. Stephens filed the present appeal challenging the adequacy of the search performed by CBC. Letter from Raymond W. Stephens to OHA (January 18, 2007) (Appeal Letter). In his appeal letter, Mr. Stephens maintains that he "find[s] it very hard to believe" that CBC has "exhausted every avenue" in conducting its search. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Ms. Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted CBC to discuss the search. CBC informed us that, in responding to Mr. Stephens' request, it performed a thorough search for documents utilizing all appropriate search terms and methods, as outlined in the determination letter. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Simon Lipstein, CBC, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (January 30, 2007). CBC stated that it has a specific procedure for searching for records responsive to FOIA requests and that procedure was followed in processing Mr. Stephens' request. Id. Contrary to Mr. Stephens' argument, the agency is not required to exhaust every avenue, but rather must undertake a search reasonably calculated to uncover records responsive to his request. In this case, CBC searched paper records and three electronic databases. It also contacted appropriate personnel to obtain relevant information. Moreover, Mr. Stephens has not produced any evidence that the documents he seeks currently exist at CBC. Based on this information, we find that CBC performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Mr. Stephens' request. The search was, therefore, adequate. Accordingly, Mr. Stephens' appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 18, 2007, by Raymond W. Stephens, OHA Case No. TFA-0185, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Fred R. McCarroll

Date of Filing: January 18, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0186

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Fred R. McCarroll filed in response to a determination that was issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office (hereinafter referred to as "Oak Ridge"). In that determination, Oak Ridge replied to a request for documents that Mr. McCarroll submitted under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. Oak Ridge informed Mr. McCarroll that its search had failed to identify any documents that were responsive to his request. This Appeal, if granted, would require that we remand this matter to Oak Ridge for another search.

The PA generally requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The Act defines a "system of records" as "a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5).

Mr. McCarroll is an employee of BWXT Y-12, which operates the DOE's Y-12 plant in Oak Ridge, Tennessee. In his request, Mr. McCarroll sought copies of records of any psychological evaluations that he has undergone during his tenure at the Y-12 plant. In its determination letter, Oak Ridge informed Mr. McCarroll that it had been unable to locate any such records at any of its facilities. However, Oak Ridge stated that it had forwarded his request to the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) in Albuquerque, which has jurisdiction over the Y-12 plant. Oak Ridge further stated that the NNSA would respond directly to Mr. McCarroll with the results of its search. Determination Letter at 1.

In his Appeal, Mr. McCarroll cites a letter from two psychologists as evidence that the requested records do exist. However, the letter indicates that the records are in the possession of the NNSA. It states, in pertinent part, that "we have recently processed the records request for psychological records which you made on behalf of Mr. Fred R. McCarroll. These records will be sent shortly through the NNSA Albuquerque Service Center to you." November 28, 2006 letter from Drs. Linda Shissler and Russ Reynolds to William Allen, Counsel for Mr. McCarroll (italics added).

We have often reviewed the adequacy of a search conducted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. A PA request requires only a search of systems of records, rather than a search of all agency records, as is required under the FOIA. Nevertheless, the standard of sufficiency that we demand of a PA search is no less rigorous than that of a FOIA search. Therefore, we will analyze the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge in the case at hand using principles that we have developed under the FOIA. See, e.g., Stephen A. Jarvis, 28 DOE ¶ 80,246 (2002).

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Information Focus On Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,240 (1997).

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted Oak Ridge. We were informed that the request was referred to the local personnel security office, which informed the Oak Ridge analyst assigned to the request that Mr. McCarroll's personnel security file had been transferred to NNSA in Albuquerque and that no psychological records could be found at the local office. Oak Ridge further informed us that Mr. McCarroll's personnel security file, which is currently in the possession of NNSA, is the only place where the requested records are likely to be found. See memorandum of January 19, 2007 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge. Based on the information before us, we conclude that Oak Ridge's search for responsive documents was adequate, and that Mr. McCarroll's Appeal should therefore be denied. Of course, Mr. McCarroll remains free to appeal NNSA's determination once he receives it, if he does not receive the documents that he seeks.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Privacy Act Appeal filed by Fred R. McCarroll, OHA Case Number TFA-0186, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Eugenie Reich
Date of Filing:	January 22, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0187

On January 22, 2007, Eugenie S. Reich (Reich) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) on December 18, 2006, in response to a request for documents that Reich submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE expedite the processing of Reich's FOIA request.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On December 11, 2006, Reich filed a request for "any record that shows the names of the panel members who formed part of the external investigation panel convened by Jim Roberto of ORNL to investigate fraud and research misconduct allegations made through the journal Nature against researchers in the group of Dr. Steve Pennycook (Pennycook) of ORNL during the summer or 2006." Electronic mail message from Reich to DOE/HQ (December 11, 2006). Reich described herself as a journalist and requested a fee waiver. She also requested expedited processing "because of a compelling need for this record, so as to assist with informing the public concerning federal activity in the form of alleged wrong-doing committed by Pennycook and other ORNL researchers using DOE funding." Id. Reich stated that the Boston Globe, Knoxville Sentinel and Nature Magazine published articles in December 2006 that revealed the alleged misrepresentation of data by Pennycook and others who worked with him. She voiced suspicion about the panel that investigated Pennycook because the panel members have not been identified, and argued that they may have conflicts of interest. According to Reich, there is the possibility of significant harm to the public interest through the expenditure of tax dollars on fraudulent research. Id. at 2. Further, there is a danger that other researchers are relying on Pennycook's allegedly fraudulent data.

On December 18, 2006, the Director of DOE/HQ denied Reich's requests, stating that she had not submitted enough information to support her request for a fee waiver. Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DO/HQ, to Reich (December 18, 2006). The office asked her to submit additional information by January 8, 2007. DOE/HQ also denied her request for expedited processing because the Director found that she did not adequately address the requirements for expedited processing. He found that Reich did not establish any threat to the life or safety of an individual that would justify expeditious processing. Further, he concluded that she did not identify any particular urgency that requires the provision of the requested information in an expedited manner.

Reich submitted the requested information and DOE/HQ then granted her request for a fee waiver. On January 22, 2007, Reich submitted this appeal of HQ's denial of expedited processing. Reich asks that OHA order DOE/HQ to expedite the processing of her FOIA request.

II. Analysis

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up the line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(6)(E)(v).

Courts have found sufficient exigency to grant expedited processing in situations of an "ongoing public controversy associated with a specific time frame." Long v. Department of Homeland Security, 436 F. Supp. 2d 38 (D.D.C. 2006). Requesters have demonstrated urgency in several ways. See e.g., Washington Post v. Department of Homeland Security, 459 F. Supp. 2d 61 (D.D.C. 2006) (granting expedited processing based on public need for requested material to inform voters prior to upcoming election); Gerstein v. CIA, No. C-06-4643, 2006 WL 3462658 (N.D. Cal. November 29, 2006) (granting expedited processing because of significant interest in quickly disseminating news regarding a subject currently under debate by Congress). See also Edward A. Slavin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,279 n.2 (2000) (discussing request to expedite documents for upcoming administrative hearing). Courts have denied requests for expedited processing if the requester fails to demonstrate urgency. See, e.g., Long, 436 F. Supp. 2d at 43-44 (denying request due to generalized need for information and requester's failure to identify an imminent action); Electronic Privacy Info. Ctr. v. Department of Justice, 322 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2003) (concluding that plaintiff failed to demonstrate urgency because its proffer of 31 newspaper articles concerning the general subject of FOIA request did not make a story a matter of "current exigency").

We contacted Reich to secure additional information regarding her request for expedited processing. She contends that her initial request explained that the research costs to the taxpayer are ongoing, and total approximately $100,000 per month. Electronic mail message from Reich to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 15, 2007). In addition, Reich argues that United States scientists are relying on fraudulent research. Id. She informed this office that she needs the information in order to prepare an article for publication prior to a March 6, 2007 meeting of the American Physical Society (APS). Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Reich and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 15, 2007). At that meeting, Dr. Pennycook will be presenting information to a group of scientists, and according to Reich she has an urgent need to disseminate the information regarding the investigation to the general public prior to the meeting.

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Reich has not established a compelling need for expedited processing of her request. Reich has not made clear that the requested information, if it exists, will not be useful to her if processed within the timeframe of a normal FOIA request. Neither the recent newspaper articles nor the upcoming public address at the APS meeting demonstrate the requisite urgency to endow this request for information with a compelling need for expedited processing. The scientists whom Reich suggests will be the victims of Dr. Pennycook's allegedly fraudulent research are also the citizens most likely to be already familiar with the controversy surrounding his work. Thus we find that Reich has not established any urgency for the release of the material she requested. Accordingly, her Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Eugenie S. Reich on January 22, 2007, OHA Case Number TFA-0187, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Kathleen J. Long

Date of Filing: January 29, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0188

On January 29, 2007, Kathleen J. Long filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on January 16, 2007 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque (NNSA). In that determination, NNSA responded to a request for documents that Ms. Long submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA determined that it could not locate records responsive to Ms. Long's request. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to perform an additional search and release any responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Ms. Long initially filed a request with the DOE's Oak Ridge Office (ORO) for records pertaining to her late father, a former K-25 employee. See Letter from NNSA to Kathleen J. Long (January 16, 2007) (Determination Letter). Specifically, Ms. Long requested her father's medical records, personnel records, radiation exposure and industrial hygiene records, and personnel security file. Id. After issuing a response to Ms. Long's request, ORO forwarded the request to NNSA for a search. According to ORO, it "send[s] requests for records on former K-25 employees to NNSA to also conduct a search at Y-12 because most official files on former K-25 employees were transferred to Y-12 in 1998 for management and storage." See Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock, ORO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (February 1, 2007). In its determination letter, NNSA stated that it contacted the Y-12 Site Office to request a search for records. See Determination Letter. According to NNSA, the search yielded no documents responsive to Ms. Long's request. Id.

Ms. Long filed the present appeal challenging the adequacy of the search performed by NNSA. Letter from Kathleen J. Long to OHA (January 20, 2007) (Appeal Letter). In her appeal, Ms. Long states that she "find[s] it hard to believe that these records, which would be vital to maintaining accurate data from any government organization, would somehow just be missing." Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted NNSA to discuss the search. NNSA informed us that, in responding to Ms. Long's request, it forwarded the request for records to the Y-12 site and "all organizations searched current and archived records for [records pertaining to Ms. Long's late father] and no records were located. His employment history shows that he never worked at the Y-12 site. Even if [his] records were transferred from K-25 to Y-12, they would have been located by these organizations." Electronic Mail Message from Terry Apodaca, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (February 15, 2007).

According to a representative from the Y-12 site, Y-12 searched for records "in the medical, personnel, [industrial hygiene], RadCon, and Plant Records organizations." Electronic Mail Message from Janet Wood, Y-12, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (February 27, 2007). Regarding the requested medical records, Y-12 searched medical databases and "the actual filed records" and no records were found. Id.

> Since [Ms. Long's late father was] a former [K-25] employee, the active medical records were checked to verify if [Y-12's medical office] still had the record or if it had been send to Plant Records…Since Plant Records responded that they did not have the record, Medical further investigated by checking a spreadsheet listing medical records that have been transferred to [Oak Ridge National Laboratory], K-25, or Wackenhut. An old Access database that lists medical records sent to the vault was also checked and no records were located.

Id. Y-12 searched "actual filed [personnel] records" but did not locate any records responsive to Ms. Long's request. Id. Y-12 searched for industrial hygiene records in "the Comprehensive Tracking System and [by searching] several manual lists of non-digitized records for evidence of personal monitoring records" but did not locate any responsive documents. Id. Finally, Y-12 searched several radiation exposure records—monitoring data from years prior to 1992, external monitoring data prior to 1997, extremity monitoring data prior to 1997, and complete incident reports including radiological workplace restrictions—but did not locate any documents responsive to Ms. Long's request. Id.

Based on this information, we find that NNSA performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Long's request. The search was, therefore, adequate. Accordingly, Ms. Long's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 29, 2007, by Kathleen J. Long, OHA Case No. TFA-0188, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Security Archive

Date of Filing: March 1, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0190

On March 1, 2007, the National Security Archive (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a February 13, 2007 final determination issued pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). In that Determination, the Office of Policy and International Affairs (Denying Office) of the Department of Energy (DOE) partially denied the Appellant's request for information submitted under the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the Denying Office to release the information it withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In a letter dated June 7, 2004, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to the Denying Office for "[a]ll documents referencing Iraq written, signed, or received, in whole or in part, by James E. Hart, senior oil market advisor within the U.S. Department of Energy Office of Policy and International Affairs, dated from February to April, 2003." Request Letter dated June 7, 2004, from Barbara Elias, FOI Coordinator, Appellant, to Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA / PA Division, DOE (Request Letter). On February 13, 2007, the Denying Office responded that it had identified 16 documents as responsive to the Appellant's request. Determination Letter dated February 13, 2007, from Abel Lopez, to Barbara Elias. (Determination Letter). It released three documents in full and withheld the other 13 in their entirety. Id. The Denying Office withheld the 13 documents under the deliberative process privilege pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5).

In its Appeal, the Appellant disputes the withholding of information under Exemption 5. First, the Appellant argues Exemption 5 was applied too broadly to these documents.

Appeal Letter dated March 1, 2007, from Roger Strother, Appellant, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals. In addition, the Appellant asserts that, even if the reports can be withheld under Exemption 5, the factual portions of the documents should have been segregated and released. Id.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).[*/]

[*/]The Appellant argues that DOE must be able to identify a specific agency decision, and the role those documents played in the agency's arrival at that final decision, in order to withhold a document under the deliberative process privilege and under Exemption 5. Appeal Letter. The Appellant relies on Paisley v. CIA, 712 F.2d 686 (D.C. Cir. 1983), vacated in part, 724 F.2d 201 (D.C. Cir. 1984), which actually advises that "[t]o ascertain whether the documents at issue are pre-decisional, the court must first be able to pinpoint an agency decision or policy to which these documents contributed." Paisley, 712 F.2d at 698 (emphasis added). Initially, we note that the requested documents may point to a policy that DOE has concerning the subject matter of the documents. Despite the Appellant's argument to the contrary, Paisley does not require that a specific agency decision be identified. We believe that Sears, which does not require a specific agency decision to be identified, still controls in matters relating to Exemption 5. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151 n.18.

> Our emphasis on the need to protect pre-decisional documents does not mean that the existence of the privilege turns on the ability to identify a specific decision in connection with which a memorandum is prepared. Agencies are, and properly should be, engaged in a continuing process of examining their policies; this process will generate memoranda containing recommendations which do not ripen into agency decisions; and the lower courts should be wary of interfering with this process.

Id; see also Schell v. HHS, 843 F.2d 933, 941 (6th Cir. 1988); Hamilton Sec. Group, Inc., v. HUD, 106 F. Supp. 2d 23, 30 (D.D.C. 2000), aff'd, 2001 WL 238162 (D.C. Cir. Feb 23, 2001); Greenberg v. Dep't of Treasury, 10 F. Supp. 2d 3 (D.D.C. 1998); Hunt v. United States Marine Corps, 935 F. Supp. 46, 51 (D.D.C. 1996) .

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

In addition, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

There are, however, exceptions to these general rules that factual information should be released. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Dudman Communications. Corp. v. Dep't of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

The Denying Office has listed 13 documents that it withheld in their entirety because they contain information that is predecisional and part of the deliberative process. We have been provided with copies of these documents. We have reviewed these documents and believe that documents 6, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, and 15 were properly withheld under Exemption 5. The factual information contained in these documents is so intertwined as to make segregation virtually impossible. Further, the factual information contained in these documents was selected from a larger quantity of factual information so that the selection is part of the deliberative process. These documents were prepared by an advisor who reviewed many facts but relied on only selected facts for these documents.

However, in regard to documents 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, and 16, we believe that there is factual information contained therein that could be segregated and released. As an example, the first sentence of document 4 states, "[t]he strike in Venezuela began on December 2, with Venezuelan oil production having ground nearly to a halt over the following two weeks." This information is available on the Internet through a simple search. Venezuela Strike Worsens Oil Situation, www.usatoday.com / news / world / 2002-12-17-venezuela-strike-oil_x. htm, accessed March 14, 2007. Furthermore, some of the information contained in this document and documents 7 and 8 looks strikingly similar to information found in documents 1 and 3, which were released to the Appellant.

Document 5 contains copies of two news articles published by Reuters. Through another simple Internet search, both of these articles are also available to the public. Furthermore, these articles are not part of the predecisional deliberative process. The authors are not DOE employees, but rather members of the news media. The fact that they were included in a paper prepared for someone else within the DOE does not exempt them from disclosure under Exemption 5. In addition to the news articles, there appears to be other releasable, factual information, such as the title of the document and the first two paragraphs. The information contained therein is public and available to people outside of the DOE, such as those who participated in the summit referred to in the document.

Finally, we believe that documents 12 and 16 also contain facts that could be segregated and released to the Appellant.

III. The Public Interest

The fact that the requested material falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the comments and opinions contained in the documents withheld in their entirety, which consist solely of advisory opinions and recommendations. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were reluctant to provide information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions, which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987); Newhouse News Service, 28 DOE ¶ 80,241 (September 4, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0758).

IV. Conclusion

The Denying Office properly withheld documents 6, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, and 15 under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege. We believe that portions of documents 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, and 16 contain factual information that could be segregated and released to the Appellant. We will remand the matter to the Denying Office for a further consideration of those documents listed above to determine what information can be segregated and released. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied in part and granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by National Security Archive on March 7, 2003, Case No. TFA-0190, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Policy and International Affairs of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Dynamac Corporation
Date of Filing:	March 2, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0191

On March 2, 2007, Dynamac Corporation (Dynamac) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on January 29, 2007, by the Department of Energy=s Office of Legacy Management. That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Dynamac submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. ' 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Dynamac asks that the DOE conduct an additional search for documents responsive to its request.

I. Background

On December 13, 2006, Dynamac filed a request in which it sought documents related to the former Harshaw Chemical Site located in Cleveland, Ohio. On January 29, 2007, the Office of Legacy Management issued a determination letter in which it stated that it conducted a search of its records but was unable to locate any responsive documents. On March 2, 2007, Dynamac filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In its Appeal, Dynamac challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by the Office of Legacy Management and asserts that there should be records related to the Harshaw Chemical Site.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must Aconduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents.@ Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). AThe standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials.@ Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE & 80,282 (April 8, 2003) (Case No. TFA-0015).*

We contacted the Office of Legacy Management to ascertain the extent of the search that was performed and to determine whether any documents responsive to Dynamac=s request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Dynamac=s request for information, the Office of Legacy Management conducted a search in its Hummingbird database, which includes the CERCLA Environmental Database, using the keywords AHarshaw Chemical Site@ and AHarshaw.@ This database is a central electronic database that would be the most likely location of responsive information if any existed. Paper documents are no longer kept. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Sheila Dillard, Office of Legacy Management, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (April 24, 2007). This search did not locate any responsive documents. Based on the information above, we find that the Office of Legacy Management has conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover any records relating to the former Harshaw Chemical Site. Accordingly, we must deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Dynamac Corporation on March 2, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0191, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. ' 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Marty D. Davidson
Date of Filing:	March 6, 2007 April 23, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0192 TFA-0201

This Decision concerns two Appeals filed by Marty D. Davidson from determinations issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) (Case No. TFA-0192) and the DOE's National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque (NNSA) (Case No. TFA-0201). In those determinations, ORO and NNSA responded to a request for documents that Mr. Davidson submitted under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. Both ORO and NNSA located some documents responsive to Mr. Davidson's request; however, neither ORO nor NNSA located all of the requested records. This appeal, if granted, would require ORO and NNSA to perform additional searches and release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

Mr. Davidson filed a request under the Privacy Act with ORO for records pertaining to his employment at DOE's Oak Ridge Site. See Letter from ORO to Marty D. Davidson (January 29, 2007). Specifically, Mr. Davidson requested copies of his "medical records, personnel records, radiation exposure records, chest x-rays, training records, industrial hygiene records, personnel security file, and OPM background investigation." Id. In its final response, ORO provided Mr. Davidson with some records but informed him that "no medical records, personnel records, chest x-rays, training records or industrial hygiene records were found." Id. ORO also stated that no personnel security file or OPM background investigation records were located because they were destroyed pursuant to the timelines in the National Archives and Records Administration General Records Schedules. Id. Finally, ORO stated that it forwarded Mr. Davidson's Privacy Act request to NNSA because NNSA now has jurisdiction over records located at one of the DOE's facilities at Oak Ridge, the Y-12 site. Id; see also Letter from ORO to Marty D. Davidson

(March 24, 2006). In its response, NNSA stated that it contacted the Y-12 Site Office to request a search for records. See Letter from NNSA to Marty Davidson (May 31, 2006). NNSA stated that, although it located some responsive records and provided copies of those records to Mr. Davidson, it could not locate all of the requested records. Id.

Mr. Davidson filed the present appeals challenging the adequacy of the searches performed by ORO and NNSA. Letters from Marty D. Davidson to OHA (March 6, 2007 and April 23, 2007) (Appeal Letters). In his appeals, Mr. Davidson contends that his records must exist because he had various exposures to radiation and underwent several medical procedures that he knows were documented. Id.

II. Analysis

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act requires only that the agency search systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, 28 DOE ¶ 80,251 (2002). Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the searches conducted by ORO and NNSA in this case, we are guided by the principles we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted both ORO and NNSA to discuss the searches conducted in response to Mr. Davidson's requests.

ORO informed us that it "conducted a search of the K25 site, Oak Ridge Associated Universities, the DOE Records Holding Area (legacy records), the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, and the DOE Personnel Security Clearance Division." E-mail from Amy Rothrock, ORO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 24, 2007). ORO stated that it searched those sites for "medical records, personnel records, radiation exposure records, chest x-rays, training records and industrial hygiene records" using Mr. Davidson's "social security number, name, date of birth and badge number." E-mail from Leah Ann Schmidlin, ORO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (May 10, 2007). ORO stated that the only records it was able to locate were "18 pages of radiation exposure records found at the K25 site in a shared database containing radiation exposure records of employees from several sites, not just K25." Id. ORO added that Mr. Davidson "was a RUST Engineering employee which indicated that Y-12 would have the majority of his records, if not all, based on our past experience in locating RUST employee records at Y-12." Id.

NNSA informed us that, in responding to Mr. Davidson's request, it searched for records in several databases using Mr. Davidson's name, social security number, date of birth, and badge number. E-mail from Terry Apodaca, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 30, 2007). According to NNSA, the databases include "Plant Records, Personnel, Medical, Industrial Hygiene and Radcon (radiation contamination)" and contain all references to any paper copies of records that the site has. E-mail from Terry Apodaca, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 25, 2007). According to NNSA, it located, and provided to Mr. Davidson, all records it located including 20 pages of Personnel records, 22 pages of Medical records, and 12 pages of Radcon records. Id. NNSA noted that since Mr. Davidson was a RUST Engineering employee, and not employed by Y-12, "the balance of his records would be at the company that he was employed." Id. NNSA added that it has had "several subcontractors that have worked at [Y-12] during the years, but those companies maintain [their] own records." Id. NNSA stated that it provided all the records it could find and that Mr. Davidson should contact RUST Engineering to request additional records. Id.

Based on this information, we find that ORO and NNSA performed extensive searches reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Mr. Davidson's request. The searches were, therefore, adequate. Accordingly, Mr. Davidson's appeals should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed on March 6, 2007 and April 23, 2007, by Marty D. Davidson, OHA Case Nos. TFA-0192 and TFA-0201, are hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Columbia Research Corporation
Date of Filing:	March 20, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0193

On March 20, 2007, Columbia Research Corporation (CRC) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). In that determination, BPA released some documents and withheld some information in response to a request for information that CRC filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On January 30, 2007, CRC sent a FOIA request to BPA for documents relating to contracts between BPA and Washington2 Advocates since January 1, 2005.[1] BPA conducted a search and found 157 pages of responsive material. On February 23, 2007, BPA released some information to CRC along with a determination letter. Letter from BPA to CRC, February 23, 2007 (Determination Letter). BPA withheld some information under Exemption 6 and also withheld two items in their entirety under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5, but did not give any further information about the withheld items.[2] BPA released 9 pages in their entirety. On March 20, 2007, CRC filed this appeal of BPA's decision to withhold information under Exemption 5.

We asked BPA for comments on CRC's appeal. In response, BPA acknowledged an error in the initial processing of the request and released 96 additional pages in their entirety to CRC. Letter from BPA to CRC (April 23, 2007). However, on April 27, 2007, CRC notified OHA that BPA

[1] Washington2 Advocates is a consultant that provides strategic counsel (including advice, opinions and written reports) to BPA on national and Northwestern energy issues.
[2] The information withheld under Exemption 6 is not the subject of this appeal.

continued to withhold non-exempt material, specifically (1) redacted emails, (2) attachments to emails, and (3) redacted statements of work describing the activities that the consultant performed in prior months. CRC asked OHA to determine whether BPA properly withheld these documents under Exemption 5. CRC argues that some of the material withheld under Exemption 5 is factual and non-deliberative and therefore not exempt from release under the FOIA. CRC also argues that there is a significant public interest in releasing the unredacted statements of work because of the amount of the monthly payments that BPA makes to the consultant for interacting with Congress on matters of public importance.

II. Analysis

A. The Deliberative Process Privilege of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). This deliberative process privilege is often invoked under Exemption 5, and is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

CRC argued in its Appeal that the documents are not exempt from protection because many were not created by the agency. However, federal courts have held that some documents generated outside of an agency but created through agency initiative may be considered "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda" or letters for Exemption 5 purposes. Ryan v. Dep't of Justice, 617 F.2d 781, 790 (D.C. Cir. 1980). See also State of Nevada, 29 DOE ¶ 80,292 (2007). The agency can apply Exemption 5 to a document that is generated as part of the continuing process of agency decision-making. "Congress apparently did not intend 'inter-agency or intra-agency' to be rigidly exclusive terms but rather to include [nearly any record] that is part of the deliberative process." Ryan, 617 F.2d at 790. Thus we conclude that the material falls under the purview of Exemption 5.

This office has conducted a de novo review of the documents including those pages that CRC mentioned specifically in its appeal. Our review found that the following documents contained deliberative material. First, pages 6, 7, 10, and 16 of the statements of work contain information about projects, advice and recommendations that appear to be part of the agency deliberative process. The documents include recommendations to the agency about how possible court rulings or legislation could affect agency policies. There is a similar basis for withholding on pages 24, 103-113, 125 and 156. The document on page 111 sets forth advice and opinions from the consultant to BPA about an issue of importance to BPA. Pages 115 to 122 contain draft documents. The email on page 142 concerns a proposed meeting to be conducted during a meal. The contents of that document contain some material that could be considered part of the deliberative process. The emails on pages 145 and 146 offer advice and opinions about items under consideration by the Congress that are of interest to BPA. Finally, page 157 contains a discussion of the contents of a draft document. We find that this material was exempt from disclosure.[3]

Nonetheless, it is not clear why BPA withheld other portions of the responsive material. See, e.g., pages 12, 13 and 15 of the statements of work. This material does not appear deliberative. The Determination Letter does not contain an adequate description of the exempt material that could assist CRC and this office in understanding why certain items on those pages were withheld.[4] In addition, no descriptions were provided for documents that were withheld in their entirety. On remand, such descriptions must be provided.

Finally, BPA did not release any information contained in the attachments to the emails. The attachments are also considered documents, and any non-exempt material in these attachments should be released to the requester immediately.

B. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see also Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, if factual material is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its release would reveal the agency's deliberative process, that material can be withheld. Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE ¶ 80,152 (2001). Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Dep't of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (C.A.D.C. 1977) states that non-exempt material that is "distributed in logically related groupings" and that would not result in a "meaningless set of words and phrases" may be subject to disclosure. Mead, 566 F.2d at 261.

BPA did not address the issue of segregability in the determination. This office reviewed a sample of the material that was withheld in its entirety, and based on our review, we find that there is some non-exempt, factual material in the responsive documents; namely the information in pages 6, 7, 11, 14, and 15 (bullet 3). Bullet 3 of Page 11 contains some material that may be factual or non-deliberative. Bullet 1 of Page 14 also contains material that may be factual. Our review also found some factual material on pages 111-113 and page 144. Thus, there is a minimal amount of non-exempt material involved and segregation of that material should not pose an undue burden for BPA.

[3] CRC also asked OHA to identify the specific action or policy that BPA was contemplating for which it sought the consultant's advice. Letter from CRC to OHA (April 25, 2007) at 3. Again turning to the federal courts for guidance, we find that the agency is not required to identify a specific decision. Coastal States, 617 F. 2d at 868. Rather, the agency must establish what deliberative process is involved and the role played by the responsive material in the course of that process.

[4] Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. R.E.V. Engineering, 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 at 80,543 (2000).

This material can be released to the requester without revealing the deliberative process surrounding the work of the consultant. See Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE at ¶ 80,620.

C. Public Interest

The fact that the material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

We find that release of the properly withheld material would not be in the public interest. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the manner in which the government operates, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the properly withheld information is composed mainly of predecisional, non-factual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld material is outweighed by the possible chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. See L. Daniel Glass, 29 DOE ¶ 80,271 (2006).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Columbia Research Corporation on March 20, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0193, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Business Week Magazine

Date of Filing: March 21, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0197

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Business Week Magazine (Business Week) filed in response to a determination that was issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Western Area Power Administration (Western). In that determination, Western replied to a request for documents that Business Week submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Western released certain documents to Business Week in their entirety, but withheld a portion of one document. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Western release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

In its FOIA request, Business Week sought access to all contracts for Renewable Energy Certificates (RECs) procured by Western on behalf of government agencies on or after January 1, 2002. [1] In its response, Western provided copies of all of these contracts in their entirety except one, from which pricing information was deleted. Western cited FOIA Exemption 4 as its justification for withholding the pricing information. Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4).

1/ RECs are commodities that represent the environmental attributes of the power produced by renewable energy sources such as solar, geothermal or wind power. These Certificates can be used by certain energy purchasers to satisfy legislative or regulatory requirements that a percentage of their energy purchases come from suppliers of renewable energy.

Western's determination letter did not, however, adequately explain the manner in which it applied this Exemption.[2] In order to obtain this explanation, we contacted Western. We were informed that Western withheld the pricing information at the request of another federal entity on the ground that revealing the price at which that entity was purchasing RECs could put it at a disadvantage in future negotiations. See Memorandum of April 20, 2007 telephone conversation between Penny Casey, Western, and Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney. In its Appeal, Business Week contests Western's application of this Exemption.

As previously stated, Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure information that is "obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). The federal courts have held that the term "person" includes a wide range of entities, including corporations, banks, state governments, agencies of foreign governments, and Native American tribes or nations. See, e.g., Stone v. Export-Import Bank, 552 F.2d 132, 137 (5th Cir. 1977); Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.2d 93, 95 (2nd Cir. 1996) (Nadler). See also Myers, Bigel, Sibley & Sajovec, 27 DOE ¶ 80,225 (August 31, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0517). This Exemption serves to protect submitters of commercial or financial information to the federal government from the adverse effects of unwarranted public disclosure of that information, and it correspondingly provides the federal government with an assurance that such information will be reliable. However, federal entities themselves are not "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4, and any commercial information of the federal government is not shielded from mandatory disclosure by this Exemption. See, e.g., Board of Trade v. Commodity Futures Trading Commission, 627 F.2d 392, 404; Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.3d 93, 95 (2d. Cir. 1996) (term "person" includes "an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or public or private organization other than an agency" (quoting definition found in Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551(2) (2000)) (italics added)).

We therefore conclude that Western incorrectly applied Exemption 4 in withholding the pricing information. Consequently, we will remand this matter to Western. On remand, Western should issue a new determination letter either releasing the information to Business Week or providing a new justification for withholding it. Any such justification must include a complete explanation of how the FOIA Exemption cited was applied by Western.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Business Week Magazine, OHA Case Number TFA-0197, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

2/ Within the context of this case, an adequate explanation would have included the identity of the party whose interests Western was seeking to protect, and whether the information withheld was "privileged" or "confidential." See, e.g., BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,197 (April 8, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0482). All OHA FOIA decisions may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Western Area Power Administration. On remand, Western shall issue a new determination letter either releasing the withheld information or providing a new and adequate explanation for withholding it.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

On March 23, 2007, William H. Payne (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSASC) in Albuquerque, New Mexico. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.
