the following information regarding the evaluation of the Pantex plant(1) for long term storage of plutonium metals and oxides presently at the Department of Energy's Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site (RFETS). This evaluation was reported in the February 29, 1998 Kaiser Hill Corporation letter: "Acceleration Strategy for Integrated Nuclear Material Disposition." For all items the documents requested are for the period February 1, 1997 to June 22, 1998.

1. A copy of all documents evaluating the storage of plutonium metals and oxides at the Pantex Plant.
2. A copy of the project proposal or equivalent document for evaluating storing of plutonium metals and oxides at the Pantex Plant.
3. A copy of all correspondence--email, letters, memorandums--regarding the storage of plutonium metals and oxides at the Pantex Plant and/or the relocation of the Plutonium Stabilization and Packaging System; between DOE's Rocky Flats Field Office and/or its contractors and the DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office, Amarillo Area Office and/or its contractors.

Letter from Don Moniak, STAND, to Freedom of Information Officer, DOE/RF (June 22, 1998).

On April 20, 1999, DOE/RF sent a response to STAND stating that it located one document responsive to STAND's request, entitled "Should Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site Pursue Accelerated Shipments of Non-Pit Plutonium Metal to Pantex." Letter from Jessie M. Roberson, DOE/RF, to Don Moniak, STAND (April 20, 1999). However, it withheld this document in its entirety from STAND, citing FOIA Exemption 5. Id. On June 3, 1999, STAND filed the present appeal, contesting both the withholding of this document and the adequacy of DOE/RF's search for responsive documents. Appeal at 1-2.

II. Analysis

A. Withholding of Document Under FOIA Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The three principal privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion are the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product privilege, and the "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). In the present case, DOE/RF relied upon the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

The deliberative process privilege shields from public disclosure records reflecting the predecisional, consultative process of an agency. Benedetto Enterprises, Inc., 19 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1989); Darci L. Rock, 13 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1985). Predecisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). This privilege was developed primarily to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making government decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 151 (1975).

In order for Exemption 5 to shield a document, the document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077-78 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

In the present case, DOE/RF cited Exemption 5 in withholding the one responsive document it had located, a draft report entitled "Should Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site Pursue Accelerated Shipments of Non-Pit Plutonium Metal to Pantex." In its letter to STAND, DOE/RF stated that "the disclosure of deliberative data would inhibit frank and open discussion of the matter, would hinder the Government's ability to reach sound and well reasoned resolutions, and is likely to result in public confusion about the rationale(s) for Departmental actions."

STAND argues in its Appeal that (1) the draft report "is neither a memo or a letter;" (2) the draft report cannot be predecisional and deliberative as it is dated after DOE had reached a decision on where to ship non-pit plutonium; (3) under the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), any proposal to send non-pit plutonium to Pantex would have required a change to a public Record of Decision; and (4) there is a strong public interest in the DOE's decisions as to where to ship plutonium. Appeal at 1-2; Memorandum from Don Moniak, STAND, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 21, 1999). After reviewing a copy of the report in question, we reach the following conclusions regarding the Appellant's arguments.

First, we disagree with the appellant that the draft report is not a memorandum, as it clearly is a written communication intended to convey ideas between RFETS personnel. Moreover, while the text of Exemption 5 refers to "memoranda or letters," the courts have extended the exemption to all "documents . . . normally privileged in the civil discovery context," Sears, 421 U.S. at 149 (emphasis added). Analysis in the courts focuses on the nature of the content of a document rather than whether the document is accurately characterized as a memorandum or letter.

Second, that the report in question may have been drafted after the agency announced a decision on where to ship RFETS's non-pit plutonium does not preclude the application of Exemption 5. As the Supreme Court has stated,

Our emphasis on the need to protect pre-decisional documents does not mean that the existence of the privilege turns on the ability of an agency to identify a specific decision in connection with which a memorandum is prepared. Agencies are, and properly should be, engaged in a continuing process of examining their policies; this process will generate memoranda containing recommendations which do not ripen into agency decisions; and the lower courts should be wary of interfering with this process.

Sears, 421 U.S. at 151 n.18. In the present case, the document in question clearly reflects the deliberations of RFETS on an alternative for storage of non-pit plutonium, and those deliberations should be shielded by Exemption 5 whether they preceded a particular pronouncement of agency policy, or whether they postdated that pronouncement and merely reflected RFETS's "continuing process of examining their policies." Similarly, whether those deliberations were conducted in compliance with NEPA does not alter their status as deliberation, and thus does not enter into our determination as to the applicability of FOIA Exemption 5.

Finally, under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1, material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA may be released if disclosure is determined to be in the public interest. Regarding information withheld under the deliberative process privilege, we find that the public interest is served by the frank and open expression of views by agency employees. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon this expression. The ability and willingness of personnel to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If personnel were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987). Consequently, we conclude that release of the withheld material protected under Exemption 5 would result in foreseeable harm to the interests that are protected by the deliberative process privilege. FAS Engineering, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,126 at 80,562 (1998); see Memorandum from Janet Reno, Attorney General, to Heads of Departments and Agencies (October 4, 1993) (stating that the Department of Justice will defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption).

We agree with STAND that there is a high public interest in DOE's decision as to where plutonium from RFETS should be shipped. We also note the Appellant's concern that the DOE's deliberations "failed to involved known stakeholders." Memorandum from Don Moniak, STAND, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 21, 1999). But we must distinguish these interests from the public's interest in ideas and opinions an agency may bandy about in its internal deliberations, but which the agency has never incorporated into its policy.

The public is only marginally concerned with reasons supporting a policy which an agency has rejected, or with reasons which might have supplied, but did not supply, the basis for a policy which was actually adopted on a different ground. In contrast, the public is vitally concerned with the reasons which did supply the basis for an agency policy actually adopted.

Sears, 421 U.S. at 152.

In sum, after reviewing the document in question, we find that it contains material that reflects RFETS's deliberative process and is therefore exempt from disclosure under the FOIA. However, this does not justify withholding the document in its entirety. Exemption 5 covers only the subjective, deliberative portion of a document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077-78 (D.C. Cir. 1971). We therefore must remand this matter to DOE/RF, and order it to issue a new determination to the appellant releasing the factual, non-deliberative portions of this document.

B. Adequacy of DOE/RF's Search for Responsive Documents

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

The DOE/RF FOIA Officer informed us that it identified two locations where documents responsive to STAND's request might be located: in the offices of Kaiser-Hill Company, the DOE prime contractor responsible for managing RFETS, and in the office of DOE/RF's Assistant Manager for Material Stabilization & Disposition. The FOIA Officer therefore forwarded the request to both offices. Personnel in the latter office responded that it had located no documents responsive to the request.(2) Kaiser-Hill responded that it had located one document, the draft report discussed above. To obtain more detail on the search conducted at Kaiser-Hill, we contacted the individual at the company responsible for searching for responsive documents. She explained that she identified one department within Kaiser-Hill (Nuclear Operations) and separate operations managed by three Kaiser-Hill subcontractors as possible locations of responsive documents. Each of the three subcontractors responded that it did not locate responsive documents, and the document ultimately located by Kaiser-Hill was found within the Nuclear Operations department of the company.

We find that the search for responsive documents coordinated by the DOE/RF FOIA Officer extended to the offices within DOE/RF and RFETS where it is reasonable to believe those documents would be located. We therefore conclude that DOE/RF’s search was reasonably calculated to uncover the documents sought by the Appellant.

C. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, we are remanding this matter to DOE/RF for the limited purpose of issuing a new determination to the appellant either releasing the factual, non-deliberative portions of the document it withheld, or explaining why that information may be withheld pursuant to another FOIA Exemption. With respect to any other issues the Appellant has raised, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by STAND of Amarillo, Inc., Case No. VFA-0500, is granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Rocky Flats Field Office for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(1)The Pantex Plant, located near Amarillo, Texas, is a DOE facility that assembles and disassembles nuclear weapons.

(2)In the course of evaluating STAND's Appeal, we requested that the Appellant provide copies of two letters from Kaiser-Hill that it had cited in its Appeal. Each of these letters is on Kaiser-Hill letterhead and is addressed to the former Deputy Manager of DOE/RF, and each references earlier letters from the Deputy Manager regarding storage and shipment of plutonium and DOE/RF's plutonium stabilization and packaging system. We contacted DOE/RF to check whether either of the letters from the Deputy Manager might be responsive to STAND's request. DOE/RF confirmed that neither letter mentions the Pantex Plant, and therefore would not be responsive to the Appellant's FOIA request.

July 1, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:American Friends Service Committee

Date of Filing:June 4, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0501

On June 4, 1999, American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it in response to a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Assistant Inspector General for Inspections of the Office of Inspector General (AIG) issued that determination on May 3, 1999. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the DOE conduct a further search for responsive documents and release information withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6), (7)(C).

The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that the DOE shall nonetheless release to the public a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On June 13, 1997 and March 3, 1998, the AFSC filed requests with the DOE for all documentation from 1969 to the present concerning the deposit, presence and/or impact of radioactive materials at the Industrial Excess Landfill site in Uniontown, Ohio. The AIG released two documents in their entirety, but withheld information in 13 documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5, 6 or 7(C). 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

II. Analysis

In its Appeal, AFSC states that the DOE should conduct a further search for responsive information since several DOE offices have yet to respond to the FOIA request. In addition, AFSC contends that the DOE applied Exemptions 6 and 7(C) in an overly broad manner. Specifically, AFSC states that the AIG should not have redacted information from the titles of three documents and other information, such as the name of a government agency and a discussion topic, that do not relate to personal privacy interests.

A. Adequacy of the Search

We have confirmed, as AFSC states in its appeal, that various DOE offices have not yet completed determinations concerning the releasability of responsive information. See Record of June 23, 1999

Telephone Conversation between Joan Ogbazghi, FOIA and Privacy Act Division, and Leonard M. Tao, OHA Staff Attorney. Since final determinations have not been made on a portion of the AFSC request, the adequacy of the search portion of this appeal is not ripe for our review. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Accordingly, we must dismiss that portion of this appeal as not yet ripe for adjudication.

B. Exemption 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990) .

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemption 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, provided the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Since, as discussed below, all of the documents involved here were compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard may be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(c) is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). By law, the Office of Inspector General (OIG) is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. OIG is therefore a classic example of an organization with a clear law enforcement mandate. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732-33 (2d Cir. 1995) (Ortiz) and cases cited therein. In the present case, the OIG Documents were created pursuant to an investigation of alleged misconduct concerning the Industrial Excess Landfill site in Uniontown, Ohio. Consequently, the OIG documents at issue were created for a law enforcement purpose.

By and large, the redactions that were made were proper. AIG redacted from the titles of three documents the names of individuals who were contacted in the OIG's investigation (redactions the AFSC incorrectly assumed contained releasable factual information). Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (KTVY- TV) (finding that withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985) (Cucarro); James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,109 (1990). The AIG states that the individuals named in the responsive documents have a privacy interest in remaining "free from intrusions into their professional and private lives." We agree that there is a privacy interest for these individuals providing information to government investigators.

However, in our review, we have discovered a repeated deletion that is questionable. There are several instances, such as in Document 15, where the AIG redacted the name of a government agency. It is not clear what connection the name of the government agency has to the privacy interest of any of the named individuals. Accordingly, we must remand this matter to the AIG for a new determination to either release the name of the government agency or provide an adequate justification for its withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal the American Friends Service Committee filed on June 4, 1999 (Case Number VFA-0501) is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Assistant Inspector General for Inspections of the Office of Inspector General of the Department of Energy for further action in accordance with the directions set forth in this Decision.

August 12, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Charles E. Washington

Case Number: VFA-0502

On July 1, 1999, Charles E. Washington (the Appellant) completed the filing of an Appeal regarding four determinations that various offices of the Department of Energy's headquarters location issued to him.(1) In those determinations, documents were released to the Appellant as a result of his four requests for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Some of these documents were released in whole, and some were redacted under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. In his Appeal, the Appellant asserts that DOE's searches for records were inadequate and that its deletions were incorrect.(2) If granted, this Appeal would require the DOE to conduct further searches and/or release the withheld information.

The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

Background

Four information requests are involved in this Appeal. In a July 17, 1998 request for information, the Appellant sought personnel information regarding three named DOE employees. In an August 5, 1998 request for information, the Appellant sought personnel information regarding three DOE offices, the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security, the Office of Energy Intelligence and the Office of Counterintelligence. In an August 31, 1998 request for information, he sought information on civil rights practices and trends in these three DOE offices. In an October 29, 1998 request for information, he sought information on the ombudsman for DOE's Office of Economic Impact and Diversity. He was issued determinations for each of these requests on November 9, 1998, March 31, 1999, May 27, 1999, and March 24, 1999, respectively.(3)

In his Appeal, the Appellant complains about the length of time the DOE offices took to issue their determinations. We note that the remedy for this delay was the Appellant's right to sue in federal court; under law, 20 days after DOE received each FOIA request and the Appellant failed to receive a determination, he could have deemed his administrative remedies exhausted and utilized his right to a review in a district court of the United States. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B), (6)(A)(i), (C)(i); cf. Pollack v. Department of Justice, 49 F.3d 115, 118-19 (4th Cir. 1995) cert. denied, 516 U.S. 843 (1995) (decided under prior 10-day deadline). However, on receiving each determination as described earlier, he was required to exhaust his administrative remedies by filing an appeal with this Office.(4)

I. July 17, 1998 request

In his July 17, 1998 request for information, the Appellant sought personnel information held by DOE regarding three employees, Notra Trulock, John Bloodsworth, and Edward Curran. For the two latter employees, DOE possessed little such information because these employees were detailed from other agencies.(5) Regarding Notra Trulock, the Appellant received several documents in their entirety, but other documents regarding Mr. Trulock were redacted in part under FOIA Exemption 6. The following information was redacted: social security number, date of birth, birthplace, home address, home telephone number, private sector earnings, private sector supervisors' names and phone numbers, references, and information regarding any prior employment problems, arrests or convictions, relatives employed in the federal government and federal debt. In addition, the DOE withheld the name of one of Mr. Trulock's federal supervisors and the name of the Federal Bureau of Investigation supervisor of Mr. Curran who signed the Interagency Personnel Agreement detailing Mr. Curran to DOE.

The Appellant challenged the adequacy of the search by asserting that the search should have uncovered an "original version of Mr. Bloodsworth's detail paperwork, not the one that was subsequently changed to make him Deputy Director of Counterintelligence." See Letter from Appellant to Dawn L. Goldstein (June 24, 1999).

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. E.g., Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

We found out from the person responsible for this determination that there was only one detail agreement for Mr. Bloodsworth in the personnel files. Any draft agreements are typically destroyed once a final one was signed. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Marilyn Greene, HEPS, and Dawn L. Goldstein (July 8, 1999). However, Ms. Greene also believed that it was possible that the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security may have some responsive documents on file. See Email from Marilyn Greene to Dawn L. Goldstein (July 12, 1999). In addition, Ms. Greene believed that the persons responsible for hiring Mr. Curran and Mr. Bloodsworth may have a copy of a resume or similar responsive document utilized in the hiring process. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Dawn L. Goldstein and Marilyn Greene (July 9, 1999). Ms. Greene also informed us that she does not believe that Mr. Curran's and Mr. Bloodsworth's Standard Form 52s (which she stated the DOE possesses) were released, even though these items would be responsive. Finally, HR did not release Mr. Bloodsworth's Interagency Personnel Agreement which it possesses. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Marilyn Greene and Dawn L. Goldstein; Email from Marilyn Greene to Dawn L. Goldstein (July 21, 1999). For these reasons, we are remanding this search to the DOE FOI and Privacy Acts Division so that it may coordinate a further search for relevant materials with the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security or any other offices that may hold responsive documents, such as the Executive Secretariat. All material relevant to the Appellant's request must be identified.

In addition to the Appellant's contention regarding the adequacy of the search for this request, the Appellant also appealed the withholding of various data from Mr. Trulock's SF-171 that were redacted under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982) (Washington Post). All withheld information was located in the employee's personnel file.

In order to determine whether an agency may withhold a record under Exemption 6, it must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a substantial privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If the agency identifies no privacy interest or a de minimis privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 772-73 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

In applying the balancing portion of the Exemption 6 test, we must examine the types of information redacted, identify any privacy interest involved, and weigh that against any public interest in the material as defined by the Supreme Court. According to the Determination Letter, disclosure of the withheld information, which included his social security number, home address, home telephone number, private sector earnings, private sector supervisors' names and phone numbers, references, and information regarding any prior employment problems, arrest or convictions, relatives employed in the federal government or federal debt, would result in a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy of Mr. Trulock within the meaning of Exemption 6. The DOE withheld identifying information from the personnel records because of a concern that its release might allow someone to access Mr. Trulock's financial and credit information, and subject him to unsolicited communications, embarrassment and other personal intrusions. In such circumstances, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests. We find that Mr. Trulock has a privacy interest in the above-listed information. See Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Auth., 510 U.S. 487, 497-501 (1994) (home addresses); Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. 747, 767 (1989) (criminal history); Barvick v. Cisneros, 941 F. Supp. 1015 (D. Kan. 1996) (home addresses and telephone numbers, dates of birth, maiden names, life insurance and annuity information); Oliva v. HUD, 756 F. Supp. 105 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) (social security numbers); Douglas L. Miller, 13 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,575 (1985) (reasons for leaving prior employment, criminal history) .

As noted above, once we identify a privacy interest, we must then determine whether there is a FOIA-defined public interest in release of the withheld material. In Reporters Committee, the Supreme Court greatly narrowed the scope of the public interest in the context of the FOIA. Justice Stevens, writing for the Court, distinguished between the general benefits to the public that may result from the release of information, and those benefits that Congress sought to provide the public when it enacted the FOIA. He found that in the FOIA context, the public interest in disclosure must be measured in terms of its relation to the FOIA's core purpose. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. The Court identified the core purpose of the FOIA as "public understanding of the operations or activities of the Government." Id. at 775. Consequently, the Court held, only information that contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the Government is within "the ambit of the public interest which the FOIA was enacted to serve." Id. The Court therefore found that unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also National Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990).

The only public interest that the Appellant has suggested in the withheld information is that it may shed some light on whether Mr. Trulock is properly qualified for his current position and whether he was chosen fairly for his current position. The high-level position which he occupies is Director of the DOE Office of Intelligence. Although there is some level of public interest in the hiring process for this position, little of the withheld information would shed any light on this process. The employee's social security number, date of birth, birthplace, home address, home telephone number, private sector earnings, private sector supervisors' names and phone numbers, and amount of federal debt do not provide any information that may be used to determine the propriety of his hiring. However, we find that there is some small amount of public interest, due to the high-level nature of the position, in the employee's references and information regarding any prior employment problems, arrests or convictions and relatives employed in the federal government.

The Exemption 6 balancing test presupposes that there is some public interest to balance. Thus, where there is no public interest to balance, as with the majority of information here, the privacy interest in non-disclosure, however small, must prevail. Maynard v. Central Intelligence Agency, 986 F.2d 547, 566 n.21 (1st Cir. 1993); Federal Labor Relations Auth. v. Department of Defense, 984 F.2d 370, 374 (10th Cir. 1993). Accordingly, we find that the DOE employee's privacy interest in his social security number, date of birth, birthplace, home address, home telephone number, private sector earnings, private sector supervisors' names and phone numbers, and amount of federal debt outweighs the lack of a FOIA-defined public interest, and that this information was properly withheld from disclosure. With regard to the remainder of the information, including his references, any prior employment problems, arrests or convictions and relatives employed in the federal government, we have examined this withheld information and found the privacy interest in this information to heavily outweigh the public interest in its release. Accordingly, we uphold all of HR's withholdings, with the exception of two.

HEPS redacted Mr. Curran's Federal Bureau of Investigation supervisor's name from the Interagency Personnel Agreement detailing Mr. Curran to DOE. In addition, HEPS redacted the identity of Mr. Trulock's supervisor at his federal position between 1995 and 1998 from a page of his SF-171. Ms. Greene was unable to tell us who had made these two deletions or why they had been made. A determination must adequately justify the withholding of a document by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 (1995).(6) Since this has not been done, and we are unable to infer the basis for the decision, we must remand this portion of the determination to HEPS to either release the withheld information or provide an adequate reason why the information is exempt from release.

II. August 5, 1998 request

In this request, the Appellant seeks various information about the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security, the Office of Energy Intelligence and the Office of Counterintelligence. On March 31, 1999, he received a response for ten out of the eleven items of his request. As stated above, a response to the eleventh item will be issued soon. Regarding the first ten, the Appellant argues that HEPS' choice to provide statistical extracts to respond to his requests rather than releasing original documents was a violation of the FOIA.

We spoke to HEPS and found out that it chose to release information to the Appellant in the form of computer printouts and statistical extracts, rather than the underlying personnel documentation, because it would have redacted much of that documentation in order to withhold information exempt under Exemption 6. It also believed that it would be more straightforward to simply provide answers to the Appellant rather than all of the underlying data. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Marilyn Greene, HEPS, and Dawn L. Goldstein (July 1, 1999). We find that it was logical, reasonable and customer-friendly for HEPS to take this position. However, the Appellant now makes clear that he does wish to see all responsive documents, and under the FOIA, he is entitled to receive a copy of all responsive, non-exempt documents. Therefore, we will remand this portion of the case for a further determination. HEPS should either promptly release all additional, responsive information or explain the reason for the withholding of any such information.(7)

III. August 31, 1998 request

In this request, the Appellant requested information regarding DOE records about civil rights practices and trends since 1992 in the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security (NN), its predecessor organization, and subordinate organizations. In a May 27, 1999 response, he received nine documents in their entirety. Since the Appellant is generally appealing the adequacy of the searches that were done for the four requests, we contacted Tyrone Levi of the DOE's Office of Economic Impact and Diversity (ED), who was responsible for coordinating the response to this request, to determine how the search was conducted.

Tyrone Levi informed us that all information of the type sought is kept within the Office of Civil Rights and a list of this information is kept in computer systems. The computer records showed that ED possessed nine responsive documents and all of these documents were then released to the Appellant. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Tyrone Levi, ED, and Dawn L. Goldstein (August 4, 1999). It appears that this search was forwarded to the appropriate office in possession of responsive documents. We therefore find that ED conducted an adequate search of records in its possession.

IV. October 29, 1998 request

In this request, the Appellant requested various items of information about the Ombudsman for ED, such as the position description, travel budget and number of cases handled. In the March 24, 1999 response, he received six documents with redactions. Some of the information requested by the Appellant was not found in ED's search. The Appellant is appealing both the redactions and the adequacy of the search.

Regarding the redactions, for the same reasons discussed in the analysis of the July 17, 1999 request, we find that the redactions made from the current Ombudsman's SF-171 form were correct. Regarding the adequacy of the search, the appellant has argued that DOE should possess three of the requested items.(8) First, no travel budget for the Ombudsman was discovered. Gloria Smith, who conducted ED's search, informed us that the Ombudsman had no separate travel budget of her own, because her travel funds were part of ED's general travel funds. This is a reasonable explanation for ED's not possessing a travel budget for the Ombudsman. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Gloria Smith, ED, and Dawn L. Goldstein (July 7, 1999). Second, ED did not provide any records regarding the number of cases handled by the Ombudsman. Ms. Smith explained to us that the Ombudsman uses an informal, confidential process, and for this reason, no records regarding the number of cases handled are kept. Id. This also appears to be a reasonable explanation for the lack of records regarding this request. Third, ED did not provide information about other funding used by the Ombudsman. Ms. Smith explained that any other funding was not broken out in any records specifically for the Ombudsman and therefore this information could not be located. Id. This too appears to be a reasonable explanation for the lack of records on this issue. We therefore find ED's search to have been adequate.

In conclusion, we are remanding this matter for new searches for responsive material by the FOI and Privacy Acts Division Office and HEPS in the limited respects noted above. In addition, HEPS must release some of the redacted information or provide a justification for its withholding. HEPS must also release additional non-exempt information responsive to the August 5, 1998 request. We have however upheld the adequacy of the searches by ED. Therefore, we will partially grant the Appeal.(9)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Charles E. Washington on June 24, 1999, Case No. VFA-0502, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Department of Energy's Office of FOI and Privacy Act Division and to the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services for further consideration in accordance with the instructions contained in the foregoing decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: August 12, 1999

(1)1/ We note that due to the number of issues involved and the difficulty we encountered in obtaining required information, we requested a 15-work-day extension of time from Mr. Washington to issue our Decision and Order, which he granted. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Dawn L. Goldstein, Office of Hearings and Appeals, and Appellant (July 19, 1999).

(2)2/ In his Appeal, the Appellant also requested the names and titles of all employees providing or withholding data. In the four determination letters, the Appellant received the names and titles of the Authorizing or Denying Officials responsible for the determination.

(3)3/ The March 31, 1999 response to his August 5, 1998 request was a partial response, which made a determination regarding ten of the eleven items of his request. A final determination with regard to the eleventh document should be forthcoming. See Email from Marilyn Greene, Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services (HEPS), to Dawn L. Goldstein (July 12, 1999). However, the March 31, 1999 determination is reviewable at this time with respect to the ten items for which the DOE issued a final determination.

(4)4/ The Appellant delayed in filing his appeal with respect to three of the DOE determinations beyond the thirty-day deadline specified in our regulations. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). We note with regard to the November 9, 1998 determination, he was informed that he should send his appeal to the Office of Hearings and Appeals. Instead, he sent it to the office that issued the determination, the Office of Human Resources Management (HR). Although HR should have forwarded the appeal immediately to this Office, it failed to do so, creating a significant delay. The Appellant was again informed of the requirements to appeal a FOIA determination in the March 24, 1999 determination, yet he did not attempt to appeal the three determinations he had received by contacting this Office until June 9, 1999, when this Office received his appeal letter. (We note that the March 31, 1999 FOIA determination from HEPS failed to inform the Appellant of his appeal rights. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(4).) Even then, the Appellant failed to comply with the requirement to include the determination letters with his appeal until June 24, 1999, when the Office received copies of three of the four determinations from him. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(b). (We received the fourth determination from the issuing office on July 1, 1999.) We have spoken with each of the three offices issuing determinations and none has suggested that its response to his appeal would be any different, if his appeal had been timely. Given the foregoing circumstances, we have chosen in our discretion to accept the appeal of these three determinations.

(5)5/ The Appellant contends in his Appeal that he was denied these two employees' employment information and salaries because of Exemption 6. However, as explained, the DOE has not taken this exemption with regard to this information; instead it stated that it does not possess such information. The Appellant may be able to obtain these employees' employment information and salaries by filing FOIA requests at their employing agencies.

(6)6/ In fact, the redaction of the name of Mr. Trulock's federal supervisor may even have been an accident on HR's part, since the November 9, 1998 determination letter only refers to the deletions of the names of private sector supervisors.

(7)7/ In addition, we inquired, regarding item number three of this request, as to why DOE released salary amounts for some detailees and not others. In addition, one of the answers to this item appears to be incorrect, because it listed a GS-15 employee having a salary of $53,276. The lowest GS-15 salary is well above that amount. Ms. Greene agreed to look into this matter, correct any errors and either release any additional responsive information DOE possesses or justify its withholding. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Marilyn Greene and Dawn L. Goldstein (July 23, 1999).

(8)8/ The Appellant also asserted in a June 21, 1999 letter to the Office of Hearings and Appeals that the name of the Ombudsman was withheld. That name, Shirley Thomas, in fact was provided to the Appellant in the determination of this request.

(9)9/ In addition, we note that the Appellant complained that the DOE offices responsible for the determinations failed to segregate non-exempt information. We do not find that to be the case. All the redactions made were to specific blocks of information within personnel records and therefore all non-exempt information appears to have been properly segregated.

July 8, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:B.P. Exploration, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0503

On June 9, 1999, B.P. Exploration, Inc. (BP), filed an Appeal from a determination the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office (SPR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on May 13, 1999. In that determination, SPR denied a request for information that BP filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

In a January 14, 1999 request for information, BP sought a copy of a lease agreement between the SPR and Exxon Pipeline Company (Exxon) for certain specified DOE pipelines. In its February 8, 1999 determination, SPR released a redacted copy of the lease agreement in which the various rental fees Exxon would pay DOE for use of the pipelines were withheld. SPR withheld the fees pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. BP subsequently appealed SPR's February 8 determination to this Office. In an April 3, 1999 Decision, we found that the SPR's February 8 determination letter did not adequately justify SPR's withholding of the fee information by specifically explaining how Exemption 4 applied to the withheld information. See B.P. Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,197 at 80,746 (1999). Consequently, we remanded the case to SPR so that it could either issue another determination adequately explaining why the information was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 or release the withheld information. Id.

SPR issued another determination on May 13, 1999. In this determination SPR again withheld the rental fee information. SPR asserted that the confidential fee information had been obtained from Exxon and this information was confidential. SPR stated that Exxon had informed it that it would suffer commercial harm from the release of the fee information. Specifically, the determination letter stated that release of the fee information would compromise Exxon's negotiating position with potential pipeline shippers and that competitors would be able to determine how Exxon establishes its tariff rates to charge other firms. SPR noted that release of the withheld fee information would damage DOE's own commercial interests since it shares from the revenue from the leased pipelines. SPR also asserted in its May 13 determination letter that release of the withheld information would impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future. BP subsequently filed the appeal before us now.

In its submission, BP challenges the application of Exemption 4 to the fee information. Specifically, BP asserts that the fee information in the lease agreement was created by the federal government. Thus, such information is not "obtained from a person" as required by Exemption 4. BP also challenges the fee information's characterization as "confidential" information. BP asserts that the competitive harm rationale explained in the determination letter does not support a finding that release of the information would cause Exxon competitive harm. BP also argues that commercial harm to the government itself would not be sufficient justification to invoke Exemption 4 to the withheld fee information. Lastly, BP argues that release of the fee information would further the goal of the FOIA to promote open government and would shed light on the public's evaluation of an agency's performance in the area of government contracting.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (1) trade secrets or (2) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n. v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government involuntarily is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (1) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (2) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the government obtained the information. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information a submitter provides to an agency voluntarily is "confidential" if it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public. Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. Because Exxon was required to submit a proposed rental fee in negotiating the lease agreement with SPR, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily" submitted to SPR. William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999). Thus, for the information to be withheld under Exemption 4, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement for Exemption 4 protection is that the withheld rental fee information contained in the pipeline leases must be "commercial" information. Second, the information must be "obtained from a person." We find that the withheld rental rates are "commercial" information. With regard to whether the information was "obtained from a person," SPR's May 13 determination asserts that the fee information was so obtained because corporate entities such as Exxon are considered to be "persons" for Exemption 4 purposes and because in negotiating the lease agreement Exxon was required to submit to SPR a proposed rental amount for the use of the pipeline. BP challenges SPR's assertion that the withheld fee information was "provided" by Exxon. BP believes that the fees incorporated into the lease agreement were probably not the fees proposed by Exxon in its initial offer but fees derived as a result of negotiation between Exxon and SPR. Consequently, the fees in the lease agreement were not in fact obtained from Exxon.

BP directs our attention to Comstock International (U.S.A.) v. Export-Import Bank of the United States, 464 F. Supp. 804 (D.D.C. 1979) (Eximbank) as support for this argument. In Eximbank, the requester sought a copy of a loan agreement entered into between Eximbank, a federal agency, and a private firm. The Court noted in its decision that the information contained in the loan agreement "is not submitted to the government but rather generated by it through Eximbank's participation in the negotiation process." 464 F. Supp. at 807-08. Thus, BP asserts that Eximbank holds that information resulting from negotiations between a private firm and the federal government can not be considered as having been "obtained" from the non-governmental party.

We believe that BP has misconstrued the Court's holding in Eximbank. The portion of the decision quoted by BP was in reference to the Court's discussion of whether information in a certain document was "confidential," specifically, whether disclosure of the loan agreement would threaten the government's ability to obtain similar information in the future. Id. That discussion does not affect the Court's explicit holding that the loan agreement had been obtained from a person. Id. at 806. Because the withheld rental fee information was a result of a negotiation between Exxon and SPR, we find that the withheld fee information was "obtained from a person" for Exemption 4 purposes. See William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999).

To qualify for Exemption 4 protection under National Parks, information must also be "confidential." The withheld information is "confidential" if it meets the test set out in National Parks. In this case, the withheld rental fee information would be considered "confidential" if release would impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of Exxon. In its May 13 determination letter, SPR noted that Exxon had stated that it would suffer competitive harm since the amount that Exxon pays DOE for the lease is part of the overall expense to Exxon for that pipeline. Release of the fee information, it is claimed, would compromise Exxon's negotiating position with potential pipeline shippers. Exxon also claims that it would suffer harm in that release of the fee information would show competitors how Exxon establishes its tariff rates for transporting oil through the pipeline. SPR also noted in its May 13 determination that because DOE shares in the revenue generated by the pipeline, DOE financial interests would also be undermined by release of the rental fee information. SPR also found that release of the rental fees would impair its ability to obtain necessary information in the future.

BP asserts that release of the withheld information would cause no competitive harm. First, BP points out that Exxon does not compete with pipeline shippers; indeed, such firms are in reality Exxon's customers. BP points out that any competitive harm in Exxon's negotiating position with pipeline shippers resulting from release of the information is essentially nullified by the regulatory environment in which oil pipeline carriers operate. Specifically, BP notes that Exxon, by regulation, is required to set its pipeline tariff rates to its customers based upon its costs, including pipeline leasing costs. Further, BP asserts that, since Exxon must justify its tariff rates to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission based upon its cost of service, there is little likelihood that Exxon could be placed at a commercial disadvantage if the rental fees contained in the lease agreement are disclosed to its customers. BP also asserts that the withheld information would be made available in connection with a protest filed against Exxon tariff rates. Additionally, BP argues that in the absence of a reasonable expectation of confidentiality on the part of a submitter of information, Exemption 4 does not apply. In the present case, Exxon could not have had a reasonable expectation that the rental rates would be treated as confidential since there was no confidentiality provision in the lease itself. BP also argues that SPR has not demonstrated that release of the withheld information would impair its ability to obtain similar information especially in light of the fact that the withheld information resulted from a negotiation between Exxon and SPR and was not submitted or obtained from Exxon. BP also asserts that overall price and unit terms in government contracts are routinely disclosed to the public and cites numerous cases to that effect.

SPR's explanation concerning potential competitive harm is insufficient for us to make an affirmative finding on this issue. While SPR alleges that release of the rental fees would enable Exxon's potential customers to negotiate lower rates, it fails to specifically explain how potential customers could use this information to negotiate lower rates or how these lower rates (and presumably lower profit margins) would significantly reduce its competitive position. Further, Exxon does not give a sufficiently detailed explanation of how competitor oil transportation firms could use the rental rates to determine Exxon strategy in setting tariffs for its pipeline operations and why this would adversely effect Exxon's competitive position. (1) Further, economic harm to the DOE's financial interest would not satisfy the National Parks "competitive harm" test. The harm referred to in National Parks is the harm to the person from whom the government obtained the information. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. Thus, in the present case, the only competitive harm which is relevant is that potentially occurring to Exxon.

Similarly, we do not have enough information to conclude from the information contained in the May 13 Determination Letter that the withheld information is confidential by virtue of the fact that release would impair the government's ability to collect similar information in the future. SPR did not specifically identify any reasons why the release of the rental fees would inhibit its ability to collect similar information in the future. While SPR did state that its financial interest would be harmed if Exxon's negotiating position with potential customers were impaired, this consideration does not address the National Parks "impairment" prong for determining confidentiality for Exemption 4 purposes.

With regard to the present case, we have already remanded this case once to SPR for a more detailed justification of how Exemption 4 applies to the withheld rental rates. Our normal practice would be for us to make our own analysis of possible economic harm based upon the information available and decide on the applicability of Exemption 4. However, any analysis of potential economic harm is complicated by the fact that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission regulates the rates and practices of oil pipeline companies engaged in interstate transportation. See 18 C.F.R. §§ 340-348. In light of the unique environment in which pipeline companies operate, the complexity of the issues, and the fact that SPR and Exxon are the best sources of information on this issue, we will give SPR one more opportunity to specifically detail what competitive harm Exxon would suffer from release of the rental rates. Consequently, on remand SPR shall issue another determination letter either releasing the rental fee rates or fully providing a detailed description of how Exemption 4 applies to the withheld material. If SPR again withholds the information, BP may then appeal to this Office and we will issue a final determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by B.P. Exploration, Inc. on June 9, 1999, Case No. VFA-0503, is granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office for further consideration in accordance with the instructions contained in the foregoing decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Office of Hearings and Appeals

(1)We note however, that we are also not convinced by BP's arguments regarding the lack of potential economic harm to Exxon. In the event that Exxon's pipeline rates were protested to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission or required to be provided to FERC to justify its proposed tariff rates, it is not certain that commercial information such as Exxon's lease rate for the pipeline would be made available to the public. FERC could subject the lease rates or other commercial information to an order which would protect them from disclosure or other non-litigation use by the protestor. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Dave Ulevich, Regulatory Gas Utility Specialist, FERC, and Richard Cronin, OHA Staff Attorney (June 29, 1999). Thus, we do not find in any event the withheld rental fees would become common knowledge to Exxon's competitors. While BP is correct that the lease itself does not have a confidentiality provision, SPR has submitted a letter dated on the same day the lease agreement was signed. In this letter, Exxon states that it considers portions of the lease, including the rental fee information, to be commercial information that is privileged and confidential. See January 13, 1999 letter from George G. Persyn, Project Manager, Hoover Offshore Pipeline System, Exxon, to Patricia C. Sigur, Realty Officer, SPR. We believe that this letter provides sufficient evidence that Exxon had an expectation of confidentiality regarding the rental fees.

The "unit price" cases cited by BP are not determinative regarding the lack of competitive harm. In many of these cases courts have held that the release of "unit prices" would not provide information that would competitively harm the submitter of the information because the unit prices are themselves composed of many components which would still remain hidden or are highly variable. See, e.g., Pacific Architects & Engineers v. Department of State, 906 F. 2d 1345 (9th Cir. 1990); Acumenics Research & Tech., Inc. v. Department of Justice, 843 F. 2d 800 (4th Cir. 1988). Unlike those cases, the rental fees in this case would constitute a single price element of Exxon's cost in operating its pipeline.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: David A. Lappa

Case Number: VFA-0504

On June 16, 1999, David A. Lappa (Appellant) filed an Appeal from final determinations issued to him on April 14, 1999, May 18, 1999, and May 19, 1999, by the Department of Energy's Oakland Operations Office (Oakland). This Appeal, if granted, would require Oakland to release the withheld information and to grant the Appellant a fee waiver.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant submitted a FOIA request, which included a request for a fee waiver, to Oakland on December 17, 1998. On April 14, 1999, Oakland issued a determination letter denying the Appellant's request for a fee wavier. On May 18, 1999 and May 19, 1999, Oakland issued two determination letters releasing a number of responsive documents to the Appellant. However, Oakland withheld some information responsive to the Appellant's request under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. On June 16, 1999, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal, challenging Oakland's application of Exemption 5 to the withheld information, and denial of the fee waiver request.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, the FOIA requires agencies to search their records for responsive documents. Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter- agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975); see also NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

Oakland has withheld information under the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges. The Appellant challenges these withholdings, claiming that the withheld documents cannot be withheld under Exemption 5 because (1) they would normally be disclosed in litigation, (2) they are factual in nature, and (3) their authors eventually concurred with a final decision.

The Appellant's contentions are based upon inaccurate interpretations of the case law and overly broad and unsupported assumptions. Accordingly, we find that they are without merit. However, our review of Oakland's determination reveals that it is inadequate in several aspects.

Following an appropriate request, the FOIA requires agencies to search their records for responsive documents. After conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, the statute requires that the agency provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper. It also provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters adequately describe the results of searches, clearly indicate which information was withheld, and specify the exemption(s) or privileges under which information was withheld. Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,767 (1996). Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

While the determination letters issued to the Appellant clearly indicate that responsive documents were withheld under Exemption 5's deliberative process and attorney-client privileges, they did not sufficiently identify the documents they withheld. Nor did the determination letters indicate which of the two claimed privileges was applied to a particular document. Moreover, while the determination letters briefly explained why Oakland applied the deliberative process privilege, they did not explain why Oakland applied the attorney-client privilege. As a result, we are left without information that we need in order to determine whether Oakland's application of Exemption 5 was adequate.

Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to Oakland with instructions to issue a new determination letter. The new determination letter must specifically identify all information that Oakland withheld under Exemption 5 and must clarify which information is being withheld under each claimed privilege. Moreover, the new determination letter must provide a sufficient explanation of its application of the attorney-client privilege.

The FOIA provides that fees be assessed in response to FOIA requests. 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(4). However, the FOIA also mandates that fees be waived or reduced "if disclosure of the information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the Government and is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester." 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(4)(A)(3).

On April 14, 1999, Oakland issued a determination letter denying the Appellant's request for a fee waiver. Oakland's determination letter merely stated that the Appellant "did not meet the standard for a waiver of fees." The determination letter did not explain why Oakland had concluded that the appellant had not met the standard. Accordingly, we find that this determination was also inadequate. Therefore, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal as well. On remand, Oakland must either grant the Appellant's request for a fee waiver or explain why the Appellant does not meet the standard for a fee waiver.

III. Conclusion

Because we found Oakland's determinations were inadequate, we are remanding this matter to that office for further processing in accordance with the guidance and instructions set forth above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by David A. Lappa on June 16, 1999, Case No. VFA-0504, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Oakland Operations Office for further processing in accordance with the guidance and instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Edwin P. Harrison

Case Number: VFA-0505

Edwin P. Harrison files this Appeal under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Harrison appeals from a determination letter issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Savannah River Operations Office (SROO). As explained below, we will grant the appeal and remand Harrison's request to SROO for a further search for responsive materials.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that all federal agency records be made available to the public, subject to certain specified exemptions. On June 2, 1999, Harrison submitted a request to the DOE under the FOIA. Harrison requested "the name and dollar amount of all subcontracts awarded by Westinghouse Savannah River Company [WSRC] ... from 1989 to the present." He added that he "would also like the dollar amounts and approval dates for any extensions or change orders" on the subcontracts, and explained that he was "primarily interested in knowing the awarded dollar amount and ultimate (final) cost of all awarded subcontracts."

The DOE's Savannah River Office responded with a determination letter dated June 17, 1999. The determination letter stated:

The documents responsive to your request are neither owned nor possessed by [the DOE]. Specifically, DOE's contract with [Westinghouse Savannah River], DE-AC09-96SR18500, Clause H-27, provides:

The following records are considered the property of the contractor and are not Government documents: non-accounting records relating to any procurement action by the Contractor.

The records you have requested are procurement-related records of WSRC. Therefore, they are not Government records and not covered under the FOIA. Further, DOE performed a search, and we have no documents responsive to your request.

II. Analysis

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the records that Harrison requested can be considered

"agency records," and thus subject to the FOIA. The language of the FOIA does not define what constitutes an "agency record." However, courts have established that a record is an agency record for purposes of the FOIA if it meets a two-part test: it must be (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Tax Analysts).

A. WSRC is not an agency within the terms of the FOIA.

In general, entities are not considered government agencies for FOIA purposes, if they "are neither chartered by the federal government nor controlled by it." H.R. Rep. No. 93-1380, at 14 (1974)); Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 179-80 (1980) (a privately controlled organization, though financed entirely by grants from a federal agency, is not subject to the FOIA). An entity is not considered to be controlled by the federal government if it is not subject to day-to-day supervision by federal government and its employees or management are not considered government employees. Gilmore v. Department of Energy, 4 F. Supp. 2d 912, 919-20 (N.D. Cal. 1998).

Under its contractual relationship with DOE, WSRC is the contractor responsible for maintaining and operating the Savannah River site. While DOE exercises general control over contractual work, it does not supervise the day-to-day operations of WSRC. We have therefore found that WSRC is not an agency subject to the FOIA. Louthian & Louthian, 27 DOE ¶ 80,190 (1999).

B. WSRC's records were not in DOE's possession at the time of Harrison's request.

Although WSRC is not an agency for purposes of the FOIA, its records responsive to Harrison's request could be deemed agency records if DOE obtained them and they were under DOE's control at the time of the request. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 144-46; Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. However, SROO stated in its determination letter that it had performed a search and found no responsive records. In addition, we contacted Thomas Reynolds, Deputy Director of the Contracts Management Division at SROO. He confirmed that the records sought by Harrison are not maintained in the possession or control of the DOE.

Based on our finding that WSRC is not an agency for purposes of the FOIA, and on statements by personnel at SROO that no responsive records were located, we conclude that the requested records do not qualify as agency records under the Tax Analysts test.

C. The contract provides that certain records are DOE property.

DOE regulations state that "when a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). Thus, even if records are not agency records, they still may be subject to release under this regulation if the contract between DOE and the contractor provides that they are the property of DOE.

We examined the contract between DOE and WSRC to determine the status of the requested records. As stated in the determination letter, the contract provides that all records generated by WSRC in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the DOE, except for certain specified excluded items. Among the excluded items are "non-accounting records relating to any procurement action" by WSRC. Contract DE-AC09-96SR18500 (October 1, 1996), Section H.27, Paragraphs (a) and (b)(3). Thus, the contract implies that accounting records relating to procurement actions by WSRC are the property of DOE.

We believe it possible that the information sought by Harrison - name and dollar amounts of subcontracts, subcontract extensions, and subcontract change orders - could be wholly or partially contained in accounting records relating to procurement by WSRC. We asked SROO about the accounting records, and received the response that "the accounting records may be difficult to understand if the records show company names and contract numbers in one file and contract numbers with payment amounts in another file. We will not know what is available until a search is performed."

III. Conclusion

Notwithstanding difficulties in understanding the records, since WSRC accounting records are apparently the property of the DOE, and possibly contain material responsive to Harrison's request, they must be searched. We will therefore remand this matter to SROO to issue a new determination. That determination shall either release the material responsive to the request, or provide a justification for withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Edwin P. Harrison, Case Number VFA-0505, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Savannah River Operations Office to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:The National Security Archive

Case Number: VFA-0506

The National Security Archive (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) issued to it on May 7, 1999. In that determination, NARA denied in part a request for information that the Appellant filed on November 29, 1993, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. The information deleted from the documents that NARA released to the Appellant in that determination was withheld after reviews of the documents had been performed by the Office of Declassification (now the Office of Nuclear and National Security Information (ONNSI)) of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Security Affairs, as well as by the Department of State and the Office of the Secretary of Defense. This Appeal, if granted, would require DOE to release the information that it instructed NARA to withhold in its May 7, 1999 determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On November 29, 1993, the Appellant submitted a request under the FOIA to NARA for a group of documents including a report by Carl Kaysen on “Strategic Air Planning and Berlin,” which was attached to a memorandum from General Maxwell Taylor to General Lyman Lemnitzer, dated September 6, 1961. The Appellant has restricted the scope of its Appeal to the material withheld from this one document and its attachments (annexes). ONNSI reviewed this document along with other documents responsive to the request, determined that it contained information properly classified, and returned it to NARA, identifying the Departments of State and Defense as other agencies that should review the document prior to public release. On May 7, 1999, after all three agencies had completed their reviews, NARA released to the Appellant a copy of the document and its annexes, from which it withheld information it claimed to be exempt from release under the FOIA as classified information. The material that NARA withheld at the direction of DOE was information that DOE identified as Formerly Restricted Data pursuant to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA.(1)

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the portions of the documents that DOE withheld. Specifically, the National Security Archive contends that additional portions of annexes A and B to the report, initially withheld by DOE, may be released without jeopardizing the national security.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., Barton J. Bernstein, 26 DOE ¶ 80,203 (1997); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). According to ONNSI, the portions that the DOE deleted from the requested document under Exemption 3 were withheld on the grounds that they contained information about nuclear weapons yields, numbers and locations that had been classified as Formerly Restricted Data under the Atomic Energy Act and were therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure.

The Director of Security Affairs (SA) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of SA reviewed those portions of the memorandum and its annexes for which the DOE had claimed an exemption from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

In performing his review the Director of SA considered the concerns the Appellant specifically raised in his appeal, and performed as well a general review of the material under the current joint DOE/Department of Defense (DOD) classification guidance. In his re-evaluation of the report, the Director of SA determined that only the information withheld concerning the yields of specific nuclear weapons remains protected by DOE and will continue to be withheld as Formerly Restricted Data. DOE will not, however, continue to withhold the remaining information that DOE initially withheld from the Appellant. Although DOE no longer withholds this information, the Director of SA notes it may nevertheless continue to be classified as Formerly Restricted Data by the DOD based on agreements with other nations. DOE has no access to these agreements and therefore cannot determine the sensitivity of this information. Accordingly, the report and its annexes have been returned to NARA, and NARA should coordinate further review by the Departments of State and Defense, so that DOD may consider whether the remaining information that DOE initially withheld continues to be properly classified as DOD Formerly Restricted Data, and so that both Departments may review this information to consider any other bases for withholding it. After those reviews have been completed, NARA will inform the National Security Archive of its determination concerning the release of the information the DOE initially withheld from the annexes.

Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information nevertheless, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the annexes that the Director of SA has determined to be properly classified must continue to be withheld from disclosure. Accordingly, the National Security Archive's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the National Security Archive on July 25, 1999, Case No. VFA-0506, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The Department of Energy’s (DOE) Office of Security Affairs withholds from disclosure only the yields of specified weapons from Annexes A and B to a report by Carl Kaysen on “Strategic Air Planning and Berlin," which was attached to a memorandum from General Maxwell Taylor to General Lyman Lemnitzer, dated September 6, 1961.

(1)In its determination letter, NARA stated that all the deleted material had been identified as National Security Information by DOE, the Department of State, or the Department of Defense (DOD), and exempt from mandatory disclosure pursuant to Exemption 1 of the FOIA. In fact, however, DOE had informed NARA that it had identified the material it was withholding as information classified as Formerly Restricted Data, a different category of classified information. Accordingly, we will analyze the DOE withholdings as having been taken to protect Formerly Restricted Data.

August 13, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: ABC News

Date of Filing: July 14, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0507

On July 14, 1999, ABC News (hereinafter referred to as "ABC") filed an Appeal from a partial determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Inspector General (OIG). The OIG issued this determination in response to a request for information that ABC submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require the OIG to release certain information that it withheld under the FOIA.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document that is exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In its FOIA request, ABC sought access to documents relating to an OIG audit report regarding a grant to a university research foundation by the Oak Ridge Operations Office. In its determination, the OIG identified 38 documents as being responsive to ABC's request. Of these documents, 22 originated with the Oak Ridge Office, and that portion of ABC's request was referred to Oak Ridge for processing. Nine documents were released in their entirety, and seven were released with material withheld under Exemptions 5 or 6 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) or (b)(6).

In its Appeal, ABC does not contest the OIG's application of Exemption 6. Instead, it requests that we review the OIG's decision to withhold portions of Documents 16, 17, 19, 21 and 28 under Exemption 5. Specifically, ABC contends that this exemption "applies primarily to attorney-client matters," and that since the withheld material does not fall under that category, it should be released. Appeal at 1. (1)

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 shields from mandatory disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5

U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). As such, the U.S. Supreme Court has construed it to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, that are normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). Therefore, although this Exemption does encompass the attorney work-product and attorney-client privileges, it is well- settled that the Exemption also includes the deliberative process privilege. See, e.g., Sears; Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). This privilege shields from mandatory disclosure communications that are “predecisional,” i.e., that were created during agency consideration of a proposed action, and "deliberative," in that they "make recommendations or expresses opinions on legal or policy matters." Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1143-44 (D.C. Cir. 1975). See also Darci L. Rock, 13 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1985); Texaco, Inc., 1 DOE ¶ 80,242 (1978). The privilege serves to insure open, uninhibited and robust debate of various options by eliminating the fear of disclosure of preliminary viewpoints. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. Thus, by shielding predecisional deliberations from public scrutiny, the quality of final governmental decisions is enhanced. Sears, 421 U.S. 132, 149-51. Purely factual material, however, is generally not considered to be deliberative in nature, and must therefore be released unless it is inextricably intertwined with exempt material, or unless the selection of factual material for inclusion in the document reveals the agency's deliberative process. See, e.g., U.S. Solar Roof, 25 DOE ¶ 80,112 (1995).

In order to properly evaluate the OIG's application of Exemption 5, we conducted a de novo review of the withheld material. Document 16, entitled "Summary of Grants Closed in our Sample," is an OIG auditor's worksheet which summarizes the preliminary results of the audit team's review of certain "closed" grants. This document consists of spreadsheets detailing the planned and actual completion dates and other pertinent information for a number of grants administered by the Oak Ridge Office, and the auditor's notes concerning these grants. These notes include information concerning the status of funds and reporting, performance period dates, and the auditor's observations concerning each grant. The spreadsheets were provided to ABC without deletion. However, that portion of document 16 which comprises the auditor's notes was withheld in its entirety.

Our review of these notes leads us to conclude that portions of them are clearly predecisional and deliberative, and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure. These notes were generated during an OIG review of the performance of the Oak Ridge Office concerning a number of grants, and include the preliminary impressions and opinions of the auditors about the grants. These opinions do not represent a final agency position concerning the performance of the Oak Ridge Office, but instead are a part of the process by which the auditors examined and evaluated various aspects of these grants. We therefore conclude that portions of these notes were properly withheld under Exemption 5. However, the notes also contain purely factual material, including the dates between which the grants "ran," the dates on which the final grant amounts were "drawn down," and whether or not final reports had been waived. This material is not inextricably intertwined with exempt material, and does not appear to reflect a deliberative process to the extent that release of this information would compromise that process. We find that this information is subject to the FOIA's mandatory disclosure provisions.

Document 17, entitled "Open Questions Resulting from grant files reviewed at the Oak Ridge Operations Office," consists of questions posed by the OIG auditors to Oak Ridge concerning various grants. These questions arose during the auditors' review of the grants, and concern actions taken by Oak Ridge during its administration of the grants. The redacted document released to ABC consists of the cover page and the various headings on subsequent pages. Since these questions are a part of the process by which the auditors collected information about how the grants were administered, they are predecisional and deliberative. Although this document does contain some factual material about the grants, that material was provided by the auditors as a basis for the questions that they posed. We therefore find that release of these facts would reveal the deliberative process of which these questions are a part. The OIG properly applied Exemption 5 in withholding portions of Document 17.

Document 19 consists of audit worksheets concerning grants that had been inactive for more than nine months. The auditors' opinions as to why these grants were still open and what needed to be done to close them were not released to ABC. The OIG properly withheld this predecisional and deliberative information under Exemption 5.

Document 21 consists of spreadsheets concerning these inactive grants. One of the 11 columns of information set forth in these spreadsheets was withheld from ABC. This column, entitled "Reasons for Inactivity," sets forth the auditors' preliminary opinions as to why the individual grants have been inactive. This information is predecisional and deliberative in that it sets forth the auditors' views as to why the grants had not been closed out and does not represent an agency finding on this issue. The OIG did not err in redacting this material from the copy of Document 21 provided to ABC. However, the final four pages of this document comprise the auditors' notes concerning the grants. These notes, like those in document 16, contain factual information concerning the amount of money expended pursuant to the grants. We do not find this factual information to be deliberative in nature, and we conclude that it should be released to ABC.

Document 28 is entitled "Individual Meetings with Grants Administration Officials (Contract Specialists) at the Oak Ridge Operations Office." This document is a memorialization of notes taken by the auditors during interviews with the individual Grants Administration Officials at Oak Ridge. The portion of this document that the OIG withheld under Exemption 5 is a paragraph at the bottom of page one and the top of page two entitled "Conclusion." This paragraph sets forth the auditors' opinion, based on the interviews, as to why the inactive grants had not been closed out, and their reaction to some of the statements made by the interviewees. The OIG properly withheld this predecisional and deliberative information under Exemption 5.

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that “[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest.” 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

We find that release of the properly withheld material would not be in the public interest. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the manner in which its government operates, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the properly withheld portions of the documents are composed mainly of predecisional, nonfactual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the properly withheld material is substantially outweighed by the chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. Accordingly, we conclude that release of this information would result in foreseeable harm to the interests that are protected by the deliberative process privilege. See FOIA Update, U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Information and Privacy (Spring 1994); Memorandum from Janet Reno, Attorney General, to Heads of Departments and Agencies (October 4, 1993) (in order to withhold material, agency must first determine that release would foreseeably harm basic institutional interests that underlie the deliberative process privilege).

III. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we find that the OIG properly withheld portions of Documents 16, 17, 19, 21 and 28. However, because Documents 16 and 21 contain factual information that should have been provided to ABC, we will remand this matter to the OIG. On remand, the OIG should review these two documents in accordance with the guidelines set forth above, and issue a new determination to ABC.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by ABC News on July 14, 1999 is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Inspector General for further proceedings consistent with the guidelines set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final Decision and Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are located, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)ABC also requests further information concerning the OIG's response as to Documents 32 and 35. The requester points out that in the determination letter, Document 32 is listed both as being released in its entirety and as being released with material withheld under Exemption 6. In addition, ABC states that Document 35 consists only of the cover page and preface of a report, and asks if the entire report will be released.

In a telephone conversation with Robert Palmer of this Office on August 5, 1999, Ruby Isla of the OIG said that document 32 was erroneously listed in the determination letter as being released in its entirety, and that the investigator who obtained document 35 for the OIG only requested the title page and the preface. These pages therefore constitute a complete release of all of the report that is in the OIG's possession.

August 27, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Coalition for Fair Contracting, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0509

On July 22, 1999, the Coalition for Fair Contracting, Inc. (Coalition) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 7, 1999, by the Nevada Operations Office (NV) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination concerned a request for information that the Coalition submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require NV to release the requested information.

I. Background

On April 27, 1999, the Coalition filed a FOIA request with NV, seeking documentation pertaining to Solicitation WAMO-BN-97, Aerial Measurement Operations at Andrews Air Force Base, Maryland. Specifically, the Coalition sought: (1) a list of all the subcontractors and independent contractors to include, if available, company addresses and the general type of work to be performed on this project, (2) the "number" of labor standard interviews conducted on this project by anyone to date, (3) copies of the certified payroll records conducted on this project by anyone to date, and (4) the dollar amount of the total project. See April 27, 1999 Request. In a determination letter, NV responded that DOE did not possess or own the requested documents. See NV Determination Letter at 1. Rather, the records requested related to a procurement action by Bechtel Nevada (BN), the management and operating (M&O) contractor for NV. Id. According to NV, pursuant to the M&O contract with the DOE, all records related to any procurement action by BN are considered the property of BN. Id. The Coalition appealed this determination, asserting that the requested records should be considered agency records. Id.

II. Analysis

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the material requested can be considered "agency records" and thus subject to the FOIA, under the criteria set out by the federal courts. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (f) (describing the scope of the term "agency" under the FOIA). Records that do not meet these criteria can nonetheless be subject to release under the DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R.

§ 1004.3(e); see 59 Fed. Reg. 63,884 (December 12, 1994). For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that the records in question are not "agency records" and that they are also not subject to release under the DOE regulations.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as BN, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80, 152 (1998); BMF Enterprises, 21 DOE ¶ 80, 127 (1991); William Albert Hewgley, 19 DOE ¶ 80, 120 (1989); Judith M. Gibbs, 16 DOE ¶ 80, 133 (1987) (Gibbs). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Gibbs, 16 DOE at 80,595.

A. BN Is Not An Agency Under the FOIA

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (f). The courts have identified certain factors to consider in determining whether we should regard an entity as an agency for purposes of federal law. In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the . . . agency receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the federal government." Id. at 815. In other words, an organization will be considered a federal agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F.Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham). See also Washington Research Project, Inc. v. HEW, 504 F.2d 238, 248 (D.C.Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 963 (1975) (degree of independent governmental decision-making authority considered); Rocap v. Indiek, 539 F.2d 174 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

Under its contractual relationship with DOE, BN is the contractor responsible for maintaining and operating NV. While DOE obtained BN's services and exercises control over the contract work, it does not supervise the day-to-day operations of BN. See Memorandum from Michael Brown, NV, to Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA Staff Attorney (August 6, 1999). We therefore conclude that BN cannot be considered an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

B. The Records Were Not Within DOE's Control at The Time Of Request

Although BN is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, its records which are relevant to the Coalition's request could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within DOE's control at the time the Coalition made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989); see Kissinger v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. In this case, NV has informed us that the information that the Coalition seeks, with the exception described below, was not in the agency's control at the time of the Coalition's request. See Record of Telephone Conversation Between Michael Brown, NV, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, Staff Attorney, OHA (August 17, 1999). Based on the facts, the responsive documents, other than the certified payroll records, clearly do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46; see also Forsham, 445 U.S. at 185-86.

C. The Contract Provides That Procurement-Related Records Are Contractor Property

Even if the contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between DOE and the contractor provides that they are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).” 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

We next look to the contract between DOE and BN to determine the status of the requested records. The contract provides that all records “acquired or generated” by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of DOE “[e]xcept as provided in paragraph b . . .” Contract DE- AC08-96NV11718 (September 23, 1995), Section H.32, Paragraph (a). Paragraph (b) of the DOE- BN contract states that all records related to any procurement action by BN are considered the property of the Contractor. Because the documents at issue are related to a procurement action by BN, we find that the requested records are not agency records and thus not subject to release under DOE regulations.

D. Certified Payroll Records Are Agency Records

We note however that the Coalition requested copies of certified payroll records. It appears that these records are agency records because they were in the possession of NV at the time of the request. BN is required to submit these records to the agency for the purpose of complying with the Davis-Bacon Act. See Memorandum from Michael Brown, NV, to Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA Staff Attorney (August 18, 1999). In addition, these records were in NV’s control at the time the Coalition made its FOIA request. Therefore, we shall remand this matter to NV to either release to the Coalition the requested certified payroll records or to issue a new determination adequately supporting the withholding of these documents. If a new determination is issued, NV should include a statement of the reason for denial, a specific explanation of how an exemption applies to the documents withheld and a statement why discretionary release is not appropriate. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1). NV should further review each document for the possible segregation of non-exempt material. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(3).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Coalition of Fair Contracting, Inc, OHA Case No. VFA-0509, on July 22, 1999, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Nevada Operations Office of the Department of Energy which shall either release the certified payroll records withheld in its June 2, 1999 Determination or issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0510, 27 DOE ¶ 80,226

August 31, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Sowell Todd Lafitte Beard and Watson LLC

Date of Filing: August 3, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0510

On August 3, 1999, Sowell Todd Lafitte Beard and Watson LLC (Sowell) completed the filing of an Appeal from a determination issued to it in response to a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Authorizing Official of the Savannah River Operations Office of the DOE (Authorizing Official) issued that determination on June 25, 1999. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the DOE release information withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5, 6 and 7(C). 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), (6), 7(C).

The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that the DOE shall nonetheless release to the public a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On November 19, 1998, Sowell filed a request with the DOE for all information concerning the Westinghouse Savannah River Company's voluntary separation program. The Authorizing Official released several documents in their entirety, but withheld names, social security numbers, and home addresses of non-federal employees from 15 documents pursuant to FOIA Exemption 6. The Authorizing Official also stated in his determination letter that the DOE's Office of Inspector General (OIG) deleted information from four of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5, 6 and 7(C).

II. Analysis

In its Appeal, Sowell states that the DOE should release the withheld information. Specifically, Sowell states that release of the information will reveal whether the DOE had properly performed its statutory duties regarding a DOE voluntary separation program at the Savannah River Operations Office.

A. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears) (footnote omitted). The courts have identified several privileges that fall under this definition. These privileges include the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only the "deliberative process" privilege is at issue here.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions by promoting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946 (Ct. Cl. 1958)) (Mink).

In order for Exemption 5 to shield a document, it must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

The OIG, pursuant to Exemption 5, redacted handwritten notes from three documents. We reviewed these handwritten notes and found that they contain some mathematical calculations and editorial comments made during OIG's investigation of the matter. We find that this redacted information is both predecisional and deliberative pursuant to Exemption 5. Furthermore, these redactions do not contain any segregable factual information. Accordingly, we must deny this portion of Sowell's appeal.

B. Exemption 6 and 7(C)

The majority of the documents contained information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 alone. As stated above, these redactions included names, social security numbers, and home addresses of non-federal employees. Only three documents contained information withheld pursuant to both Exemptions 6 and 7(C). In these three documents the OIG redacted names and other information that could be used to identify individuals.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990).

1. The Privacy Interest

As stated above, the majority of documents contained information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 alone. With regard to these documents, the Authorizing Official determined that there was a privacy interest in the identity of Westinghouse employees and other contractor employees, their social security numbers and home addresses. We agree that substantial privacy interests exist in this type of personal information concerning private citizens due to the great potential that a commercial entity could misappropriate names and addresses for commercial purposes. The courts have also reached this conclusion. See Sheet Metal Workers v. Department Of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3rd Cir. 1998) (the disclosure of names, social security numbers, or addresses of government contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identities of contractor employees, their social security numbers and home addresses.

We will now consider the OIG's redactions made pursuant to both Exemptions 6 and 7(C). The documents withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were compiled pursuant to an investigation of the voluntary separation program at Savannah River. In prior cases in which both Exemption 6 and 7(C) were invoked, we stated that provided the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). If we find that the OIG compiled three documents for law enforcement purposes, any of these documents that satisfy Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard may be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(C) is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). By law, the Office of Inspector General (OIG) is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. OIG is therefore a classic example of an organization with a clear law enforcement mandate. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732-33 (2d Cir. 1995) (Ortiz) and cases cited therein. In the present case, the OIG documents were compiled pursuant to an investigation of the voluntary separation program at Savannah River. Consequently, the OIG documents at issue were compiled for a law enforcement purpose.

We find that the OIG's redactions pursuant to both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were proper. The OIG redacted the names of individuals who were contacted in the OIG's investigation. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (KTVY- TV) (finding that withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985) (Cucarro); James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶

80,109 (1990). We agree that there is a privacy interest for these individuals providing information to government investigators.

2. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). In its Appeal, Sowell states that release of the withheld information will reveal much regarding a DOE voluntary separation program at the Savannah River Operations Office.

We find that there is a minimal public interest in the release of the withheld information. Sowell has not demonstrated how the disclosure of specific names, addresses and social security numbers of non-federal employees or the names of OIG's investigative sources will reveal anything of importance regarding the voluntary separation program or how it would serve the public interest. Also, revealing the names of private citizens, their addresses and social security numbers will not contribute significantly to the public's understanding of government activities. Accordingly, we agree with the Authorizing Official and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the material withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether documents may be withheld pursuant to either Exemption 6 or 7(C) courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); Safecard, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991). We have concluded above that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of the names of the contractor employees or investigative sources. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 or 7(C) is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the named individuals.

C. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). Since the Authorizing Official withheld only names, addresses and social security numbers, and the OIG also withheld only names and identifying information, we find that there is no reasonably segregable, factual, nonexempt material available for disclosure.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal Sowell Todd Lafitte Beard and Watson LLC filed on August 3, 1999 (Case Number VFA-0510) is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Energy Market & Policy Analysis, Inc.

Date of Filing: July 29, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0511

Energy Market & Policy Analysis, Inc., (EMPA) files this Appeal under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. EMPA appeals from determination letters issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EERE) and Oak Ridge Operations Office (OROO). As explained below, we will deny the Appeal.

EMPA submitted a request for the following five categories of material.

1. All documents relating to the award of a subcontract or subcontracts by Lockheed Martin Energy Research Corporation to the firm of Bob Lawrence and Associates relating to the preparation of two reports ...

2. The subcontract or subcontracts and any related documents including but not necessarily limited to defining or modifying the subcontract or subcontracts, the scope of work, the funding, or dates for completion of work.

3. All documents ... reflecting a review of draft reports and/or providing comments on draft reports submitted pursuant to the subcontract or subcontracts, including comments by DOE employees, if any.

4. Correspondence or other documents relating to the subcontract or subcontracts not included above, including correspondence with members of Congress or Congressional Committees, Subcommittees or staff relating to the contract or subcontracts.

5. Documents showing the cost of the work to the U.S. Treasury of the work completed under the specified subcontract or subcontracts.

EMPA received a determination letter from OROO, providing all documents that "could be located ... in response to items 1 and 3 of [EMPA's] request. No information could be located in response to items 2, 4, and 5 of [EMPA's] request." OROO's determination letter also notified EMPA that its "search did not extend to the files which are the property of the contractor, Lockheed Martin Energy Research Corporation [LMERC]. Since procurement-related records, such as the records pertaining to these subcontracts, are the property of the contractor and not agency records pursuant to an ownership of records clause, they are not accessible under the FOIA."

EMPA also received a determination letter from EERE, stating that the office "has investigated this matter and has found that no requested documents exist here. The Lockheed Martin Energy Research Corporation executed the award and has all associated documentation.... We understand that this FOIA request has also been made to the Lockheed Martin Energy Research Corporation. They hold any existing subject documents and will provide all those pertinent to your request for which FOIA is applicable."

EMPA presents three requests for relief in its appeal. The first is a general request that we "direct the appropriate officials at DOE Headquarters, Oak Ridge Operations Office, and, if appropriate, Lockheed Martin Energy Research Corporation, to comply fully with [its] FOIA requests ... without further delay." EMPA adds that at least one of the reports published as a result of the subcontract makes very clear that the work was done for and was funded by the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy.... The obvious involvement of EERE casts doubt on [its] assertion that no documents covered by my request exist at DOE Headquarters.... Documents provided by [OROO] make clear that Dr. James Daley and Dr. Christine Platt of EERE participated in the review of draft reports and, apparently, attended one or more meetings where the subcontract work was discussed. These facts cast further doubt on the assertion that no documents covered by [the] request exist at DOE Headquarters.

We contacted Dr. James Daley, who works in EERE, about EMPA's request. Concerning the report referred to above, Dr. Daley explained that his office's involvement was limited to approving the funding and reviewing a draft. He said his office reviewed a draft and returned it to the author with some notes. He stated that EERE kept no copies of documents relating to either the subcontract or the reports produced by the subcontract. In addition, we contacted OROO and were informed that personnel there conducted a search for documents relating to the subcontract. Consequently, we are convinced that EREE and OROO complied fully with the FOIA in searching for documents responsive to EMPA's request.

In its second request, EMPA asks that we "resolve the apparent contradiction between the assertions in the letters from [EERE] and [OROO] concerning access to documents in the possession of Lockheed Martin Energy Research Corporation." EMPA characterizes the two determination letters as "contradictory and perhaps evasive," because EERE said that LMERC would provide responsive records, while OROO said that LMERC records are not accessible under the FOIA.

While the FOIA requires agencies to make certain records available to the public, it does not require agencies to respond to questions. Nevertheless, we asked Dr. Daley to clarify his office's response. Dr. Daley said that he drafted EERE's determination letter. He explained that he used the name "Lockheed Martin Energy Research Corporation" to refer generally to the Oak Ridge site, since LMERC is the management and operating contractor at the site. Thus, given Dr. Daley's explanation, there is no contradiction between EERE's and OROO's letters. EERE intended to inform EMPA that it would refer the request to OROO, but incorrectly used the name of the management and operating contractor at the Oak Ridge site.

EMPA's third request asks "if DOE's contract with Lockheed Martin does, in fact, place documents 'outside the reach' of a FOIA request, please provide a reference to DOE's legal authority for including such a provision in the contract. Nearly all the work performed by Oak Ridge National Laboratory is paid for by U.S. taxpayers. There appears to be no logical reason to keep taxpayers from seeing pertinent documents covering work paid with tax dollars."

We note again that the FOIA does not require agencies to respond to questions. Nevertheless, we have reviewed EMPA's request. In framing this request, EMPA assumes that materials paid for by tax revenues are thereby subject to the FOIA. This assumption is incorrect. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80,152 at 80,620 (1998). The FOIA applies only to records that are maintained by agencies within the executive branch of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). It does not apply to materials that are paid for by tax revenues, but that are outside the executive branch, such as materials held by federal courts and Congress. E.g., Dow Jones & Co. v. Department of Justice, 917 F.2d 571, 574 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (Congress); Warth v. Department of Justice, 595 F.2d 521, 523 (9th Cir. 1979) (federal courts).

Agency records are defined as those documents created or obtained by an agency, and under agency custody and control at the time of the request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Tax Analysts). Our first question, then, is whether the requested materials were created by an "agency."

In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976) (Orleans), a case that did not involve the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization is considered a federal agency. The Court determined that "the question here is not whether the . . . [organization] receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Id. at 815. Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980).

LMERC is a privately owned and operated company. While the DOE exercises general control over the contract work performed by LMERC, it does not supervise the company's day-to-day operations. See Contract No. DE-AC05-84OR21400. We therefore conclude that LMERC is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA. Gary S. Foster, 27 DOE ¶ 80,208 (1999).

Materials that were not created by an agency may nevertheless be subject to the FOIA under the Tax Analysts test if the agency obtained them and they were within the agency's control when the request was made. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 144-46. In this case, we contacted representatives of both EERE and OROO and have determined that DOE did not have actual control of the requested materials.

Even if contractor records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release under DOE regulations if the contract between DOE and the contractor provides that the records in question are the property of the DOE. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. 1004.3(e)(1). We therefore examined the contract between DOE and LMERC. The contract, designated DE-AC05-84OR21400, provides in Section H.30 that:

(a) Except as is provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the Contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government ...

(b) Contractor's Own Records. The following records are considered the property of the Contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) above....

(9) Records related to:

(i) Procurement actions by the Contractor.

Therefore, records of LMERC's procurement agreement with Bob Lawrence & Associates fall within the categories of records excluded from government property.

We conclude that materials responsive to Items 2, 4, and 5 of EMPA's request were neither created nor obtained by the DOE, nor under the custody and control of the DOE at the time of the request. Consequently, these documents are not subject to release under the FOIA. In addition, we have determined that these records are not subject to release under the provisions of 10 C.F.R § 1004.3(e). We will therefore deny EMPA's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Energy Market & Policy Analysis, Inc., Case No. VFA-0511, is hereby denied.

sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

August 24, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Robert G. Smith

Case Number: VFA-0512

On July 30, 1999, Robert G. Smith (Smith) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determination, Richland released some responsive information to Smith. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the remainder of the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In December 1998, Smith applied for the position of Personnel Management Specialist, Vacancy Announcement 99 MP-10, in Richland, Washington. He was not selected for that position. According to Smith, a Richland employee informed him in May 1999 that the vacancy had been canceled, and that the job had been filled internally. (1) Smith indicated that he was never notified of the cancellation. Smith then wrote to Richland's Office of External Affairs and requested, inter alia, "a copy of the notification of job cancellation, to include date of cancellation and a list of applicants notified of this cancellation, if germane." Letter from Smith to Office of External Affairs, Richland (May 25, 1999) (Request Letter). Richland released some of the responsive information, but withheld the names of applicants notified of the cancellation under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Letter from Richland to Smith (June 29, 1999) (Determination Letter). In this Appeal, Smith challenges Richland's withholding of the names of all unsuccessful applicants.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripkis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripkis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

Richland determined that there was a privacy interest in the identity of the unsuccessful job applicants. According to Richland, each applicant made a "personal choice" to apply for the vacant position, and Richland invoked the FOIA to protect that choice from public disclosure. Determination Letter at 2.

Courts have similarly found that the disclosure of the identities of unsuccessful federal job applicants constitutes a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy For instance, Core v. U. S. Postal Service, 730 F.2d 946 (4th Cir. 1984), presents a fact pattern similar to this case.(2) Core was an unsuccessful applicant for a vacancy at the U. S. Postal Service ("the Service"). He argued that the Service had violated hiring regulations, and then requested information about the other unsuccessful job applicants. (3) The Service invoked Exemption 6 and withheld responsive information about the unsuccessful applicants, determining that harm could arise from such a disclosure. The Court upheld the withholding and found that "disclosure may embarrass or harm applicants who failed to get a job." Core, 730 F.2d at 949. The court reasoned that present or prospective employers or coworkers could learn that others were deemed better qualified for a competitive appointment. Id. See also Barvick v. Cisneros, 961 F. Supp. 1015, 1021 (D. Kan. 1996) (upholding agency's nondisclosure of identifying information on the unsuccessful applicants because it could lead to embarrassment or adversely affect their future employment or promotion prospects) (Barvick); Holland v. C.I.A., 1992 WL 233820, at *13-*14 (D.D.C. Aug. 31, 1992) (finding a privacy interest in the identity of an unsuccessful applicant for position of general counsel). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identities of unsuccessful federal job applicants.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). In his Appeal, Smith stated that release of the withheld information "will further the public interest by shedding light on particular hiring activities, at the Richland [Human Resources Office] HRO, which may be in violation of . . . regulations and Veteran's Law." Letter from Smith to Director, OHA (July 3, 1999).

We find that there is a minimal public interest in the release of the withheld information. Smith has not demonstrated how the disclosure of information about unsuccessful job applicants is necessary for the public to evaluate either Richland's hiring practices or the competence of the individual who received the appointment. Simply alleging that an agency has engaged in violations of hiring regulations does not justify releasing personal information. See Barvick, 941 F.Supp. at 1022 (quoting Hopkins v. U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991) (invocation of a legitimate public interest cannot itself justify the release of personal information)). Therefore, we agree with Richland and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the responsive material.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of law enforcement records could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); Safecard, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

We have concluded above that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of the names of the unsuccessful applicants. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the withheld material is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the named individuals.

C. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). Because Smith requested a list of names, we find that there was no reasonably segregable, factual, non-exempt material available for disclosure.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Robert Smith on July 30, 1999, OHA Case No. VFA-0512, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

September 7, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Vladeck, Waldman, Elias & Engelhard, P.C.

Case Number: VFA-0514

On August 3, 1999, Vladeck, Waldman, Elias & Engelhard, P.C. (Vladeck) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on June 29, 1999. In its determination, SR withheld portions of three documents that were responsive to a request for information that Vladeck filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. BACKGROUND

In a request for information dated May 18, 1998 (Request), Vladeck requested copies of reports and data submitted to the DOE regarding contractor compliance with federal equal employment laws and contractor conduct regarding personnel matters. On March 15, 1999, SR issued a determination letter releasing copies of various documents and indicating that information contained in ten documents were being withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. Vladeck appealed SR's determination to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) regarding the information withheld in the documents pursuant to Exemption 4. See Vladeck, Waldman, Elias & Englehard, P.C., 27 DOE ¶ 80,206 (1999) (Vladeck). In Vladeck, we remanded the case to SR so that it could issue another, more detailed and explicit, determination regarding Vladeck's Request Item Nos. 4, 7b, 10 and 11. Id. at 80,764-65.

Pursuant to our instructions in Vladeck, SR issued another determination on June 29, 1999, regarding documents responsive to Request Item No. 4, 7b, 10 and 11. In this determination, SR withheld portions of two documents (Documents No. 10 and 11) pursuant to Exemption 4. SR asserted that these documents had been submitted to SR on a "voluntary basis" and that the withheld information in the documents was of a type that the submitter of the information in the documents, Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC), would not customarily disclose to the public. SR withheld portions of another document (Document No. 4) pursuant to the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. SR stated that Document No. 4 was created at the DOE's request and that it contained a self-evaluation of WSRC's performance in operating the DOE's Savannah River facility. SR determined that Document No. 4 was a predecisional, deliberative document and that release of this document would impair the DOE's ability to obtain candid written assessments in the future. (1)

In its submission, Vladeck challenges SR's use of Exemptions 4 and 5 to withhold the information in Document Nos. 4, 10 and 11. Specifically, Vladeck asserts that Document No. 4 was improperly withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 because the document was not created by a DOE consultant to assist DOE in arriving at a policy decision; instead, Vladeck claims that Document No. 4 was a document that WSRC submitted to DOE so that DOE could assess its compliance with Executive Order 11246. (2)Vladeck argues that documents submitted to the government to assess the submitter's compliance with affirmative action law may not be withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

Vladeck also challenges SR's determination that Documents No. 10 and 11 were "voluntarily submitted" to DOE for Exemption 4 purposes. Vladeck asserts that these documents should not be considered "voluntarily submitted" since the documents were required to be submitted by Executive Order 11246 and "other federal regulations." Because these documents were "involuntarily submitted," Vladeck argues that SR should have used the Exemption 4 test articulated for such submissions. Vladeck argues that there could be no competitive harm to WSRC if Document Nos. 10 and 11 were released and thus, under the case law interpreting the application of Exemption 4 to involuntarily submitted documents, the information should be released.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (1) trade secrets or (2) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." (3) National Parks and Conservation Ass'n V. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 766 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government involuntarily is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (1) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (2) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the government obtained the information. Id. at 770. By contrast, information a submitter provides to an agency voluntarily is "confidential" if it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (Critical Mass). SR withheld portions of Documents Nos. 10 and 11 pursuant to Exemption 4.

We reject Vladeck's argument that Document Nos. 10 and 11 should be considered to be "involuntarily submitted" since the documents were required to be submitted pursuant to Executive Order 11246. Section 202 of Executive Order 11246 requires that contractors file Compliance Reports containing information as to the practices, policies, programs, and employment policies, programs, and employment statistics of the contractor. See Executive Order 11246, § 202 (1965). Document No. 10 is a summary of the "Towers-Perrin Survey" conducted on WSRC employees. This document provides a summary of a survey of the various opinions of the WSRC employees concerning employment issues. Document No. 11 is an Executive Summary of the "Towers-Perrin Survey" which describes in greater detail the opinion survey results. Neither of these documents is the type of report mandated by Executive Order 11246 or similar federal regulations. In addition, SR has informed this Office that Vladeck was provided all monthly reports containing the information requested in Executive Order 11246 and that WSRC was not required to submit Document Nos. 10 and 11 to SR. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Pauline Conner, SR, and Richard Cronin, OHA Staff Attorney, (August 25, 1999). Consequently, we believe that Documents No. 10 and 11 were voluntarily submitted to SR.

Because we find that Document Nos. 10 and 11 were voluntarily submitted to SR, these documents would be protected from disclosure by Exemption 4 if they contain information which WSRC would not customarily release to the public. As described above, Document Nos. 10 and 11 contain frank assessments of WSRC employee opinions regarding workplace issues and management practices. We find it highly unlikely that WSRC would customarily make such potentially sensitive information available to the public. Consequently, we believe that SR properly applied Exemption 4 to Document Nos. 10 and 11. Further, we find that SR segregated and released all non- withholdable information contained in these documents.

B. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears) (footnote omitted). The courts have identified several traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion, such as the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product privilege and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). In the present case, SR withheld portions of Document No. 4 pursuant to the deliberative process privilege.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions by promoting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946 (Ct. Cl. 1958)) (Mink).

In order for Exemption 5 to shield a document, the document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077-78 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

Document No. 4 is a letter from a WSRC official to an official of the DOE's WSRC Award Fee Board. This document contains WSRC's self-evaluation of performance for the period October 1, 1996 to March 31,1997. The withheld portions contain the WSRC official's assessment as to what he believes WSRC's accomplishments were in various areas along with his assessment of areas in which he believes WSRC can make improvements. SR has informed us that WSRC submitted this letter to SR in furtherance of WSRC's attempt to establish that it is eligible to receive an award fee from the DOE. See memorandum of telephone conversation between Pauline Conner, SR, and Richard Cronin, OHA Staff Attorney (August 26, 1999).

In assessing whether this document is properly within the deliberative process privilege, we take note of the fact that the creator of the document, a WSRC official, is not a DOE employee. For this reason, the document does not appear to be an "intra- or inter-agency" document. However, courts have used a "functional" approach when determining whether a document generated from a non- governmental entity may be considered to be an "intra- or inter-agency" document. See Durns v. Bureau of Prisons, 804 F.2d 701, 704 n.5 (D.C. Cir 1988). Under this approach, documents generated by outside entities upon which agency officials rely in making agency decisions can be deemed to be "intra- or inter-agency" documents for Exemption 5 purposes. See Formaldehyde Inst. v. HHS, 889 F.2d 1118 (D.C. Cir. 1989). In Document No. 4, WSRC provided SR with the necessary factual analysis to use in making its determination regarding a fee award. Functionally, Document No. 4 supplied information critical to the decision-making process. Consequently, we find that Document No. 4 is an "intra- or inter-agency" document for Exemption 5 purposes.

We have also determined that Document No. 4 is predecisional and deliberative. Document No. 4 contains WSRC's assessment of its accomplishments and shortcomings. While the bulk of the withheld material concerning WSRC's accomplishments is factual, disclosure of these facts would reveal WSRC's deliberations and opinions as to the areas of its performance that should merit an award from DOE. The portion of Document No. 4 concerning potential areas of improvement for WSRC operations also consists of deliberative and predecisional material. Further, we find that SR properly released all of the segregable, non-deliberative material contained in Document No. 4. In sum, we find that the predecisional, deliberative portions of Document No. 4 were properly protected by the deliberative process privilege and Exemption 5. (4)

C. The Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Notwithstanding our finding that SR properly applied Exemptions 4 and 5 to Document Nos. 4, 10 and 11, we must consider whether the public interest demands disclosure pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In applying this regulation, we note that the Department of Justice has reviewed its administration of the FOIA and adopted a "foreseeable harm" standard for defending FOIA exemptions. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Departments and Agencies (October 4, 1993) (Reno Memorandum). The Reno Memorandum indicates that whether or not there is a legally correct application of an exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. See Reno Memorandum at 1, 2. With regard to the material properly withheld in this matter pursuant to Exemption 5, the requested information consists of the opinions of a WSRC official concerning strengths and weaknesses of WSRC's management of the DOE Savannah River facility. The release of this information would in our opinion have a chilling effect on the willingness of WSRC and other contractors to give DOE accurate self-assessments, including frank appraisals of their own shortcomings, so that DOE may not only appropriately award contractors for good performance but also monitor their efforts at improvement. Consequently, we find that this harm satisfies the reasonably foreseeable harm standard articulated by the Attorney General and that the release of the material protected pursuant to Exemption 5 contained in the requested documents would not be in the public interest.

In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Chicago Power Group, 23 DOE ¶ 80,125 at 80,560 (1993). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4. Consequently, we will deny Vladeck's Appeal.

(1) The Appeal filed by Vladeck, Waldman, Elias & Engelhard, P.C. on August 3, 1999, Case No. VFA-0514, is hereby denied.

(1)SR withheld information in Document No. 7b pursuant to Exemption 6. Vladeck does not challenge SR's determination regarding information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

(2)Executive Order 11246 provides generally that a federal contractor not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color or national origin, and that it take affirmative action on their behalf, § 202, and also provides that it file reports demonstrating compliance with this policy, § 203.

(3)For the purposes of Exemption 4, the term "person" refers to a wide range of entities including partnerships, corporations, associations, and public or private organizations other than an agency. See Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.3d 93, 95 (2d Cir. 1996).

(4)Vladeck directs our attention to Witten v. A.H. Smith & Co., 100 F.R.D. 446 (D. Md. 1984) (Witten), for the proposition that the deliberative process privilege cannot be used to protect from disclosure critical self-evaluations concerning affirmative action plans and Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) reports. We believe Vladeck has misconstrued Witten. The court in Witten held that the critical self-analysis privilege does not protect such documents from discovery. Witten, 100 F.R.D. at 452. It did not consider whether the deliberative process privilege could be applied to those documents. Moreover, none of the documents at issue in the present case is an affirmative action plan or an EEO report.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, P.L.C.

Case Number: VFA-0515

On August 4, 1999, Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, P.L.C. (Smith), a law firm, filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office (SPR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 7, 1999. In its determination, SPR withheld various documents that were responsive to a request for information that Smith filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. BACKGROUND

In a March 30, 1999 request for information (Request), Smith requested copies of documents relating to two specific Strategic Petroleum Reserve Life Extension projects at the Strategic Petroleum Reserve's Big Hill and Bayou Choctaw sites. (1) After subsequent discussions with SPR officials, SPR provided Smith with an index of files (Index) which could contain responsive documents and asked Smith to select from the Index those files it wanted searched. Smith subsequently provided SPR with a list of the files from which it was requesting documents. On July 7, 1999, SPR issued a determination letter (Determination Letter) releasing copies of various documents. However, SPR's Determination Letter stated that "the summary sheets and bid item sheets . . . contain detail[ed] cost information, including indirect cost figures of the unsuccessful bidders and are being withheld pursuant to Exemption 4." Determination Letter at 2. The Determination Letter went on to state that "Exemption 4 provides that an agency can withhold such data . . . if release would cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained or impair the Government's ability to obtain such information in the future." Id.

Smith argues that SPR failed to provide it with a list of the withheld documents or a description of the withheld information. Smith also argues that it was not provided any explanation as to why Exemption 4 is applicable to the withheld information or why redacted copies of the withheld documents cannot be produced. Smith asks that we order SPR to provide it with a Vaughn Index of the withheld documents that includes a complete description of all withheld documents, a statement of why a FOIA exemption is applicable to each of the withheld documents, and a statement of why a redacted version of the documents cannot be provided. (2)

II. ANALYSIS

After conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, an agency is required by statute to provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intention to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

The written determination serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any information that the agency has withheld. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide if the agency's response was adequate and proper and provides this Office a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal. Research Information Services, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,139 (1996) (RIS).

An agency therefore has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,232 at 80,888 (1997); RIS, 26 DOE at 80,592. Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its author and recipient. An index of documents need not, however, contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the documents. Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 (1995). A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. RIS, 26 DOE at 80,592.

As an initial matter, we do not find that SPR should be required to produce a Vaughn Index of the documents at issue in this case. We have consistently held that, although such an index may be required when an agency is in litigation with a FOIA requester, this degree of specificity is not required at the administrative stages of a FOIA request. Rockwell International, 21 DOE ¶ 80,105 at 80,526-27 (1991).

Nonetheless, we have reviewed the SPR determination letter and find that it falls short of the basic requirements outlined in our discussion above. The Determination Letter, on its face, does identify the withheld documents as being summary sheets and bid item sheets contained in a particular file described in the Index. However, there is no indication of how many documents are being withheld or any description of these documents beyond that of "summary sheets or bid item sheets." Additionally, the Determination Letter contains no specific explanation regarding how Exemption 4 applies to the withheld documents. The only explanation provided is a statement that the documents contain "detail[ed] cost information, including indirect cost figures of the unsuccessful bidders" along with a restatement of the Exemption 4 standard for withholding information involuntarily submitted to the government.(3) Both the FOIA and the Department’s regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows the requester to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conversely, conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

Given our finding that the Determination Letter fails to meet the requirements for an adequate FOIA determination, we will remand this matter to SPR so that it may issue another determination regarding Smith's Request. Additionally, on remand, SPR may wish to consider whether there is releasable non-Exemption 4 material contained on the withheld summary sheets and bid item sheets. See Puget Sound Energy, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,193 (1999). Consequently, we will grant Smith's Appeal in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, P.L.C. on August 4, 1999, Case No. VFA-0515, is hereby granted in part as specified in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(1)The projects are part of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Life Extension Program which seeks to upgrade or replace most major systems in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve by the year 2000, and to streamline Strategic Petroleum Reserve facilities to reduce operating and maintenance costs.

(2)A Vaughn Index is recognized in the context of FOIA as an index identifying each responsive document, the exemption under which it is being withheld and an explanation why that exemption is applicable, or in the alternative a similar document describing each withholding. See Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F. 2d 820 (D.C. Cir 1974).

(3)Commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government involuntarily is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (1) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (2) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the government obtained the information. See National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

September 7, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:David E. Ridenour, P.E.

Date of Filing: August 9, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0516

David E. Ridenour, P.E., filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy Office of Inspector General (DOE/IG) issued to him on July 8, 1999. The determination responded to a March 27, 1998 request Ridenour submitted to the DOE. If we were to grant this Appeal, we would require DOE/IG to release, in their entirety, all documents responsive to Ridenour's request.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

Ridenour requested from the DOE “a copy of the directives under which the DOE IG conducts and/or reports the results of IG investigations. These documents are usually referred to as the 'IG Investigations Manual(s)' or 'IG Investigative Procedures.'” Letter from David E. Ridenour, P.E., to Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/Privacy Act Division, DOE (March 27, 1998). In its response to Ridenour's request, the DOE/IG identified 41 documents as responsive to the request. These documents, together, comprise the “Investigations Manual” of the DOE/IG's Office of Investigations. Of the 41 documents, 27 were released to Ridenour in their entirety, while 14 were released with material redacted. Some of the redacted information orginated at other federal agencies or the DOE Office of General Counsel and was therefore referred to those agencies and that office for review. The other redacted information was withheld by the DOE/IG under FOIA Exemption 7(E). In his Appeal, Ridenour asserts that DOE/IG should release all of the redacted information.

II. Analysis

First, regarding the information that the DOE/IG has referred elsewhere for review, any issues arising are not yet ripe for review. The Office of Hearings and Appeals has jurisdiction to consider Freedom of Information Act Appeals when “the Authorizing Officer has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request . . . or when the Freedom of Information Officer has denied a request for waiver of fees.” 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a).

This means that we do not exercise FOIA Appeal jurisdiction if a DOE office has not issued a determination in response to a FOIA request. Thus, to the extent that the DOE/IG has simply referred Ridenour's request to other offices, it has not issued a determination that Ridenour can appeal to the OHA. We do have jurisdiction over the DOE/IG's determination to withhold information under FOIA Exemption 7(E). We review this determination below.

A. Exemption 7(E) of the FOIA

Exemption 7(E) of the FOIA protects "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes . . . [that] would disclose techniques and procedures for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions, or would disclose guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions if such disclosure could reasonably be expected to risk circumvention of the law." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(E).

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7 is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). By law, OIG is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. OIG is therefore a classic example of an organization with a clear law enforcement mandate. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732-33 (2d Cir. 1995). Thus, we conclude that the "Investigations Manual" of the DOE/IG's Office of Investigations was compiled for law enforcement purposes.

Exemption 7(E) contains two clauses, each of which provides a separate basis for withholding. The first exempts information that "would disclose techniques and procedures for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions" and the second covers information that "would disclose guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions if such disclosure could reasonably be expected to risk circumvention of the law." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(E). In its response to Ridenour's FOIA request, the DOE/IG relied upon the first clause as the basis for withholding certain information.

The first clause of Exemption 7(E), unlike the second clause and some other FOIA exemptions, does not require a particular harm (such as circumvention of the law) be cited in order to justify its application. See Fisher v. Department of Justice, 772 F. Supp. 7, 12 n.9 (D.D.C. 1991) ("Law enforcement agencies' 'non-investigatory' law enforcement records, to the extent that they can be fairly regarded as reflecting techniques or procedures, are now entitled to categorical protection under Exemption 7.") Nonetheless, only techniques or procedures that are not well known to the public are entitled to Exemption 7(E) protection. See Albuquerque Publishing Co. v. Department of Justice, 726 F. Supp. 851, 858 (D. Ariz. 1989) ("[T]he government should avoid burdening the Court with an in camera inspection of information pertaining to techniques that are commonly described or depicted in movies, popular novels, stories or magazines, or on television. These would include, it would seem to us, techniques such as eavesdropping, wiretapping, and surreptitious tape recording and photographing. Instead, the government should release such information to plaintiff voluntarily.").

Applicable to material exempt under the FOIA generally, but particularly important with regard to Exemption 7(E), is the provision of the DOE regulations specifying that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In applying this regulation, we note that the Department of Justice has reviewed its administration of the FOIA and adopted a "foreseeable harm" standard for defending FOIA exemptions. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (October 4, 1993) (Reno Memorandum). The Reno Memorandum indicates that whether or not there is a legally correct application of an exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. See Reno Memorandum at 1, 2.

The Department of Justice has provided federal agencies with the following guidance regarding the relevance of the Reno Memorandum to the application of Exemption 7(E):

Exemption 7(E) is characteristically an exemption that protects, in the words of Attorney General Reno's FOIA Memorandum of October 4, 1993, “only a governmental interest.” As Attorney General Reno's FOIA Memorandum points out, such information is particularly well suited for discretionary disclosure when such disclosure can be made without “foreseeable harm.” The very broad, nonharm-based nature of Exemption 7(E)'s first clause leaves much room for discretionary disclosure upon application of the “foreseeable harm” standard.

Office of Information and Privacy, U.S. Department of Justice, Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 406-07 (1998) (pre-publication copy).

B. Application of Exemption 7(E) to Information Withheld by DOE/IG

We have examined the information withheld by the DOE/IG under Exemption 7(E) and find that much of it does not meet the above requirements for application of the exemption. For example, information on page 2-4 of Document 9 describes the provisions of a federal statute. We cannot see how this information could possibly disclose a law enforcement technique or procedure, and certainly information contained in a federal statute, if not well known publicly, is readily available to the public. Similar information is contained on page 2-C-1 of the same document; page 5-F-2 of Document 15; pages 7-36 and 7-38 through 7-48 of Document 19; and pages 8-18, 8-21, 8-A-1, and 8-A-2 of Document 21.

Other information, though arguably disclosing a law enforcement technique or procedure, such as those concerning use of deadly force (page 3-22 of Document 11), oaths (pages 7-12 and 7-13 of Document 19), and Miranda-type warnings (page 7-D-1 through 7-F-1 of Document 19), fall into the category of “techniques that are commonly described or depicted in movies, popular novels, stories or magazines, or on television,” Albuquerque Publishing, 726 F. Supp. at 858, are well known to the public, and are therefore outside the protection of Exemption 7(E).

Finally, to the extent that the information withheld by the DOE/IG would disclose techniques and procedures for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions, and those techniques or procedures are not well known to the public, the information should nonetheless be discretionarily released by the DOE/IG in accordance with the Reno Memorandum unless DOE/IG can articulate a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by Exemption 7(E) that would result from release of the information. Examples of information that might be safely released relate to employee appearance and grooming (Document 11, page 3-4), firearm care and safety (Document 11, pages 3-12, 3-18, 3-20, 3-21, 3-24, 3-25), general discussion of affidavits and their admissibility in administrative and court proceedings (Document 19, page 7-9), the standard format for reports of investigation, administrative reports to management, and office of investigations weekly OIG activity reports (Document 27, pages 11-5 through 11-8, 11-A-1, and 11-B-1; Document 31, page 13-J-1), and include a number of blank forms (e.g., Document 21, pages 8-E-2 and 8-L-1; Document 23, pages 9-A-1, 9-A-2, and 9-B-1; Document 29, page 12-A-2; Document 33, 14-I-1). We believe, however, that the DOE/IG is best equipped to review the information it has withheld, and articulate the reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by Exemption 7(E) that would result from its release.

We recognize that the interests protected by Exemption 7(E) are extremely important ones and that material covered by the exemption should not be released lightly. Nevertheless, federal courts and the Office of the Attorney General have place significant limitations on the extent to which agencies can utilize this exemption. We therefore will remand this matter to the DOE/IG to (1) release the material we have found above would not qualify for withholding under Exemption 7(E), or to explain why that information may be withheld pursuant to the FOIA(1)and (2) with respect to that information covered by Exemption 7(E), release the material to the extent that doing so would not result in an articulable and reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by Exemption 7(E). In all other respects, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by David E. Ridenour, P.E., on August 9, 1999, Case No. VFA-0516, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Department of Energy's Office of Inspector General for further consideration in accordance with the instructions contained in the foregoing decision.

(1)On remand, the IG should also consider whether it would be more appropriate to apply the second clause of Exemption 7(E), which protects “guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecutions,” to the material withheld, in view of the fact that the manual in several places (e.g., introduction to Document 19, page 8-9 of Document 21) refers to its contents as “guidelines.”

August 31, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Myers Bigel Sibley & Sajovec

Date of Filing:August 12, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0517

On August 12, 1999, Myers Bigel Sibley & Sajovec (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Federal Energy Technology Center (FETC) of the Department of Energy (DOE) on July 14, 1999. In that determination, FETC released some documents to the Appellant as the result of a request filed by the Appellant on May 27, 1999, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. That determination also withheld several documents pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. If the present Appeal were granted, the DOE would be ordered to release in its entirety the information that was withheld in the July 14, 1999 determination.

I. Background

In a submission dated May 27, 1999 (and supplemented on June 16, 1999), the Appellant filed a request for information under the FOIA for copies of documents regarding tests conducted in the course of a scientific project. In its July 14, 1999 determination letter (Determination Letter), FETC released some documents and withheld others, citing Exemption 4 of the Freedom of Information Act. FETC stated as its only justification that the withheld information is “business confidential material.” See Determination Letter.

In its August 12, 1999 Appeal, the Appellant made various arguments as to why the withheld information should be released based on patent law. However, these arguments are premature because FETC has failed to adequately justify its determination that the withheld records are exempt from release under Exemption 4. Nor did FETC state whether any non-exempt material could be segregated for release. Therefore, we are remanding this matter to FETC for a new determination.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9).

The only exemption at issue in the present case is found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) (Exemption 4). Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criterion. See, e.g. Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997) (appeal pending). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has specifically held that the term "commercial," as used in the FOIA, includes anything "pertaining or relating to or dealing with commerce." American Airlines, Inc. v. National Mediation Bd., 588 F.2d 863, 870 (2d Cir. 1978). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." Corporations are deemed "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4. See Allnet Communications Servs. v. FCC, 800 F. Supp. 984, 988 (D.D.C. 1992) ("person" under Exemption 4 "refers to a wide range of entities including corporations"), aff'd, No. 92-5351 (D.C. Cir. May 27, 1994); see also Ronson Management Corp., 19 DOE ¶ 80,117 (1989). Then, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." If the information is subject to a valid claim of legal privilege on the part of its submitter, it may properly be withheld under Exemption 4.

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential" the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained before withholding it under Exemption 4. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (Critical Mass.), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993); National Parks, 498 F.2d 765 at 770. In this case, because the information was submitted as part of a solicitation, it is considered to have been submitted voluntarily. It is therefore considered "confidential" if it meets the test set out in National Parks. Nayar & Company, P.C., 23 DOE ¶ 80,185 at 80,710 (1994).

In addition, once an agency decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997). This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associates, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). In addition, conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Lykes Bros. S.S. Co. v. Peña, No. 92-2780, slip op. at 13 (D.D.C. Sept. 2, 1993) (Westlaw, DCT database) (submitters "required to make assertions with some level of detail as to the likelihood and the specific nature of the competitive harm they predict"); Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("Conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA.").(1) Consequently, we must remand this case so that FETC may give the Appellant a specific explanation as to why Exemption 4 applies to the information at issue in the present case.

We also point out that the FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 89, 91 (1973); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Air Force, 556 F.2d 242, 259-62 (D.C. Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 927 (1978); Casson, Calligaro & Mutryn, 10 DOE ¶ 80,137 at 80,615 (1983). Segregation and release of non- exempt material is not necessary where it is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material so that release of the non-exempt material would "compromise" the withheld material, or where the amount of non-exempt material is small and so interspersed with exempt material that it would pose "an inordinate burden" to segregate. Lead Indus. Ass'n v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 83-86 (2d Cir. 1979). Consequently, FETC should consider whether non-exempt material can be released.

Accordingly, we will remand this case to FETC, which should promptly issue a new determination releasing any non-exempt information to the Appellant. FETC should clearly explain in its determination letter why release of any withheld information would either impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the information’s submitter. FETC should also state whether any non-exempt information can be segregated and released. For the reasons explained above, the present Appeal will be granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Myers Bigel Sibley & Sajovec, Case No. VFA-0517, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE’s Federal Energy Technology Center, which shall promptly issue a new determination in accordance with the guidance set forth in the above Decision.

September 22, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Technology & Management Services, Inc.

Date of Filing: August 20, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0518

On August 20, 1999, Technology & Management Services, Inc. (TMS) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Assistant Inspector General for Investigations, Office of the Inspector General (the OIG). The OIG issued this determination in response to a request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require the OIG to release additional information to TMS.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document which is exempted from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public unless the DOE determines that disclosure is contrary to federal law or the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In its request, TMS sought access to "any and all statements, memoranda or other documentation which refers to" (i) allegations that TMS or any of its employees has charged the DOE improperly pursuant to any contract being performed for the DOE, (ii) Roger Legassie or any other employee in connection with a specified contract or subcontract, (iii) Barbara McKee, SoBran, Inc., or SoBran, Inc. President Amos Otis in connection with the allegations referred to above, and (iv), OIG guidelines and procedures for verifying that allegations of impropriety are factually based and made in good faith.

The OIG conducted a search and identified 120 documents as responsive to TMS' request. Twenty-five of these documents were released in their entirety, fifty-one documents were released with portions withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) of the FOIA, and four were released with portions withheld pursuant to Exemptions 5, 6 and 7(C). (1)

Under Exemption 5, "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency" may be withheld. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). In applying Exemption 5, the OIG stated that this provision "protects the deliberative and consultative process of government," and that the material withheld under the exemption is "predecisional deliberative data that was subject to further review and possible change." OIG Determination at 2. Exemption 6 protects from mandatory disclosure "personnel and medical and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy . . . " 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6).

Exemption 7(C) provides that “records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes” may be withheld from disclosure, but only to the extent that the production of such documents “could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy . . . ” 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C). The OIG stated that it withheld "[n]ames and information that would tend to disclose the identity of . . . subjects, witnesses, sources of information, and other individuals" involved in the OIG's investigation of the allegations against TMS. OIG determination at 2. The OIG added that these individuals are entitled to privacy protections under Exemptions 6 and 7(C) so that they will be free from possible "harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions." Id.

In its Appeal, TMS contests the adequacy of the OIG's determination with respect to Exemption 5, and the OIG's application of Exemptions 5, 6 and 7(C) in withholding portions of the responsive documents. TMS further contends that, even if the withheld material is subject to these exemptions, the information should be released in the public interest. (2)

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 5

1. Adequacy of the Determination

It is well established that a FOIA determination must contain a reasonably specific justification for withholding material pursuant to an FOIA request. See Deborah L. Abrahamson, 23 DOE ¶ 80,147 (1993). A specific justification is necessary to permit the requesting party to prepare a reasoned appeal and to allow this Office to perform an effective review of the initial agency determination. We have not hesitated to remand a determination letter where the issuing office has not explained its reasons for applying an exemption, but has instead merely restated the language of the exemption. See, e.g., Richard W. Miller, 25 DOE ¶ 80,120 (1995).

In its appeal, TMS argues that the OIG's justification for withholding material under Exemption 5 is "totally conclusory," and "contains nothing more than the test to be applied with regard to . . . Exemption 5." We do not agree. In the determination, the OIG does state that the withheld material is predecisional and deliberative, which is essentially the standard for applying this exemption, but it then goes to include its reason for this finding, i.e., that the information did not set forth a final agency position on the issues at hand, but was instead "subject to further review and possible change." Avoiding the confusion that might result from the release of preliminary or tentative agency opinions and findings is a legitimate justification for applying Exemption 5. We conclude that the OIG adequately explained its determination with respect to this exemption.

2. The OIG's Application of Exemption 5

As we stated previously, Exemption 5 shields from mandatory disclosure “inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency.” 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). As such, the Supreme Court has construed it to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, that are normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). Accordingly, the exemption has been held to encompass the attorney work-product, attorney-client and deliberative process privileges. See, e.g., Sears; Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The deliberative process privilege shields from mandatory disclosure communications that are “predecisional,” i.e., that were made during agency consideration of a proposed action, and "deliberative," in that they "make recommendations or expresses opinions on legal or policy matters." Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1143-44 (D.C. Cir. 1975). See also Darci L. Rock, 13 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1985); Texaco, Inc., 1 DOE ¶ 80,242 (1978). The privilege serves to insure open, uninhibited and robust debate of various options by eliminating the fear of disclosure of preliminary viewpoints. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. Thus, by shielding predecisional deliberations from public scrutiny, the quality of final governmental decisions is enhanced. Sears, 421 U.S. at 149-51.

In its appeal, TMS contends that the material withheld from documents 4, 27, 82 and 92 is neither predecisional nor deliberative, and that the DOE has waived any applicable privilege under Exemption 5. Document 4 is a Memorandum of Investigative Activity dated July 30, 1997, that was authored by an OIG investigator. This document consists of the investigator's notes of an interview with an individual concerning one of the allegations against TMS, and the investigator's preliminary opinions as to the validity of the allegations. Document 27 is a letter dated February 10, 1997, from a DOE employee to an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia. Document 82 is a memorandum from the OIG investigator to an OIG official setting forth the investigator's recommendation as to whether the investigation should continue. Document 92 is a Memorandum of Investigative Activity dated December 2, 1997. In each case, the material withheld from these documents under Exemption 5 is nonfactual in nature and is composed of the preliminary opinions of the individuals concerned as to the validity of the allegations or as to the future course of the investigation. The withheld material is predecisional in that it was generated prior to any DOE finding concerning the allegations against TMS, and deliberative in that it sets forth the opinions and recommendations of the investigator and other individuals.(3)

Finally, we reject TMS' contention that the OIG has waived any privilege under Exemption 5. This argument is based on Washington Post Co. v. Department of the Air Force, 617 F. Supp. 602 (1985), in which the United States District Court for the District of Columbia held that by releasing a summary that presented, in outline form, the entire substantive content of a document, the Air Force waived any Exemption 5 privilege with respect to that document. That case is inapposite to the matter before us, since the documents released to TMS in redacted form do not constitute summaries that set forth the entire substantive contents of the original documents. We find that the OIG has not waived privilege with respect to these documents.

3. The Public Interest

The fact that this material falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

We find that release of the withheld material would not be in the public interest. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the manner in which its government operates, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the withheld portions of these communications are composed mainly of predecisional, nonfactual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld material is far outweighed by the chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. Accordingly, we conclude that release of the withheld information would result in foreseeable harm to the interests that are protected by the deliberative process privilege. See Memorandum from Janet Reno, Attorney General, to Heads of Departments and Agencies (October 4, 1993) (in order to withhold material, agency must first determine that release would foreseeably harm basic institutional interests that underlie the deliberative process privilege). For these reasons, we find that the OIG properly applied Exemption 5 in this matter.

B. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemption 6 and 7(C) were invoked and we have stated that in such cases we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., Valley Times, 23 DOE ¶ 80,154 (1993) (Valley Times). Exemption 6 allows an agency to withhold information if its release would constitute a “clearly” unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). By contrast, Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if its release could constitute a “reasonably” unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). In such cases, it is only necessary to address the application of Exemption 7(C) to the withheld material since the information was compiled for law enforcement purposes and any material which satisfies Exemption 7(C)’s “reasonableness” standard will be protected. Similarly, information not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that the release of the information constitutes a “clearly” unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The threshold test under Exemption 7(C) is whether the withheld information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The Exemption 7 “law enforcement” exception to mandatory release of information under the FOIA encompasses compliance with both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The OIG is charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud or abuse in programs administered or financed by the DOE. See Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. App. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), (d), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). The documents provided to TMS in redacted form were generated in the course of an OIG investigation into allegations of improper conduct by a DOE contractor. The documents were therefore compiled for law enforcement purposes within the meaning of Exemption 7(C).

In determining whether the release of law enforcement records could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, the courts have used a balancing test which weighs the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public’s interest in disclosure. Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 762 (1989). In this case, TMS maintains that disclosure of the information withheld under Exemptions 6 and 7(C) would further the public interest in "maintaining the sanctity of the governmental investigatory process." Appeal at 1. The firm claims that the DOE's investigation of TMS was abusive in that it took an inordinately lengthy amount of time to complete and interfered with its contractual relationships, while resulting in no civil or criminal prosecutions. TMS therefore suggests that the information is needed in order to expose official misfeasance or malfeasance in the investigatory process.

At the outset, we note that the names of the OIG employees who participated in the investigation were provided to TMS. The information that the firm seeks would identify witnesses who spoke to the OIG about the allegations against TMS, and others who cooperated in the investigation. While we agree with TMS that the public has a significant interest in maintaining the integrity of the government's investigatory processes, we find that this goal may best be achieved by withholding information of this kind, not by releasing it. Revealing the identity of individuals who cooperate with OIG investigations could subject the individuals to harassment, retaliation, or invasions of privacy. See, e.g., Valley Times, 23 DOE at 80,632; James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 (1991) . Potential witnesses in future OIG inquiries would therefore be much less likely to cooperate if they knew that their identities could later be revealed to the subject of the investigation. Moreover, release of the withheld information, by itself, would add little to the public's understanding of the investigatory process. While TMS could conceivably use the information to gain some insight into how the investigation was conducted, we find that interest to be outweighed by the very serious impact that disclosure could have on the OIG's ability to obtain needed information in future investigations. We therefore conclude that the OIG properly applied Exemptions 6 and 7(C) in withholding the information in question.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Technology & Management Services on August 20, 1999 is hereby denied.

(1)The remaining forty responsive documents were generated by other offices and agencies, and the documents were referred to these offices and agencies for review.

(2)TMS also requests that it be provided with a Vaughn index, i.e. an index identifying each responsive document, the exemption under which it is being withheld and an explanation of why that exemption is applicable. On previous occasions, we have stated that, although such an index may be required of the agency when it is in litigation with a FOIA requester, this degree of specificity is not required at the administrative stages of a FOIA request. See, e.g., Rockwell International, 21 DOE ¶ 80,105 at 80,527 (1991); Natural Resources Defense Council, 20 DOE ¶ 80,145 at 80,627 (1990). At the administrative level, determinations need only include a general description of the withheld material and a statement of the reason for the withholding. Therefore, we reject the Appellant's request for a Vaughn index.

(3)Because of a settlement agreement that was reached between the DOE and TMS on January 11, 1999, no final OIG report was issued. However, OIG has informed us that such a report would have been issued in the absence of a settlement.

September 30, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Jurgis Paliulionis

Case Number: VFA-0519

On August 24, 1999, Jurgis Paliulionis (Paliulionis) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Chicago Operations Office (CH) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determination, CH released some responsive information to Paliulionis. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the remainder of the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On June 2, 1999, Paliulionis filed a FOIA request with CH seeking all documentation relating to the Argonne Group Rewards and Recognition Plan for the previous 12 month period. In a determination letter, CH indicated that it located the documents responsive to Paliulionis' request. CH released most of the responsive information. However, it withheld the specific amounts of incentive awards paid to Argonne Group employees under Exemption 6. In his Appeal, Paliulionis challenges the withholding of the amounts of the awards.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

CH determined that there was a privacy interest in the specific amounts of each incentive award given to Argonne Group employees. According to CH, releasing the specific dollar amounts of the awards "would allow direct comparisons between employee awards and almost certainly incite jealousy in those employees receiving lower awards." See Determination Letter at 2.

We have consistently determined "that there is a real and substantial threat to employees' privacy if personal identifying information . . . were released." Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 15 DOE ¶ 80, 115 at 80, 537 (1987). See also Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 16 DOE ¶ 80, 102 at 80, 504 (1987); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80, 120 at 80, 569 (1985); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80, 104 at 80, 519 (1985). A similar privacy interest is involved in this case. It is important to note that Paliulionis has already been provided with a document listing the names of those employees in the Argonne Group who received incentive awards. If a document listing the dollar amounts of those awards were disclosed to the requester, the awards could be directly linked to the employees who received them. Release of this material would reveal considerable personal financial information about each Argonne Group employee given an incentive award and would certainly constitute a serious invasion of personal privacy. In addition, Courts have similarly found that even releasing favorable information about an employee, such as details of an employee's outstanding performance evaluation, can be protected on the basis that it "may well embarrass an individual or incite jealousy among co-workers." See Ripskis v. Hud, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). These considerations govern our determination. We therefore find a significant privacy interest in the amounts of the incentive awards.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on the operations and activities of the government." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). In his Appeal, Paliulionis stated that disclosure of the withheld information "would provide the [awards] process with a built-in system of checks and balances, which presently is lacking and would inspire others to follow suit . . . [T]he open process would have an adverse effect on the ability to manipulate and abuse the system, such as granting unjustified and gratuitous awards." See Appeal Letter at 2.

We find that there is a minimal public interest in the release of the withheld information. Paliulionis has not demonstrated what public interest would be served by releasing the specific values of employees' incentive awards. Simply alleging that disclosure of this information might affect the ability to manipulate and abuse the awards system does not justify releasing personal information. See Hopkins v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991) (invocation of a legitimate public interest cannot itself justify the release of personal information)). Therefore, we agree with CH and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the responsive material.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of the amounts of the incentive awards could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989).

We have concluded above that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of the specific amounts of the incentive awards. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the withheld material is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the Argonne Group employees.

C. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). We find that CH properly segregated and released all responsive information by withholding only the dollar amounts for each incentive award given.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Jurgis Paliulionis on August 24, 1999, OHA Case No. VFA-0519, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Hans M. Kristensen

Case Number: VFA-0520

Hans M. Kristensen filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) issued to him on July 12, 1999. In that determination, Albuquerque denied in part six requests for information that Mr. Kristensen submitted in May 1996, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. It provided copies of two particular documents, among others, from which information was withheld. That information was withheld as the result of the Department of Energy's Office of Declassification, as well as the Department of Defense's Defense Threat Reduction Agency (DTRA), reviewing the documents and determining that they contained classified information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the Department of Energy (DOE) to release the information that it withheld from those two documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In May 1996, Mr. Kristensen submitted a series of six requests under the FOIA to Albuquerque. Albuquerque responded to the requests by providing a number of documents. Among those documents were two from which information was deleted pursuant to a DOE determination that some of the withheld information warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA and a DTRA determination that the remainder of the withheld information warranted protection from disclosure under Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA. These two documents were identified as "Lightning/Nuclear Weapon Accidents and Incidents Reported by FC/DASA in the Period from Early 1961 to February 1968," and "Nuclear Weapon Accident Photos– B52 Flying Alert over Goldsboro, N.C."

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld portions of the two documents described above. In his Appeal, Mr. Kristensen contends that Albuquerque engaged in "excessive secrecy" and possibly outdated guidance when it withheld the volume of information that it did, particularly in light of the age of the information.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990).

The Director of Security Affairs (SA) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of SA reviewed those portions of the requested documents for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

In performing his review the Director of SA requested that DTRA also review the validity of the deletions made from the two documents. According to the Director of SA, DTRA withheld most of the information that was not disclosed to Mr. Kristensen. However, a small amount of information within the DTRA deletions was withheld by DOE as Formerly Restricted Data (FRD), concerning military utilization of nuclear weapons, or Restricted Data (RD), concerning weapons design information. These categories of information are still considered FRD or RD under current classification guidance. Under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, this information is classified, and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3. Nevertheless, the Director of SA has reduced the extent of the previously deleted portions to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

The Director of SA has also informed us that the material originally identified and redacted at the direction of DTRA is National Security Information (NSI) or FRD. Some of this material concerns military plans, weapons systems, or operations. As such, it is defined as National Security Information under Executive Order 12958, and DTRA therefore determined that it is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA, which exempts from mandatory disclosure matters that are classified under criteria established by an Executive Order. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1). The remaining material that DTRA deleted is related to the military utilization of nuclear weapons. DTRA has determined this information to be Formerly Restricted Data under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3. As a result of its review, DTRA has, like DOE, reduced the extent of the previously deleted portions to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations. The denying official for the information withheld by DTRA is Major General William F. Moore, USAF, Deputy Director, DTRA.

Based on the review performed by the Director of SA, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the continued withholding of much of those portions of the documents under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, nevertheless such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the documents that the Director of SA has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. However, because some previously deleted information may now be released as a result of the Director of SA's review, newly redacted versions of the two documents reviewed in this Appeal will be provided to Mr. Kristensen under separate cover. In these documents, the Director has marked all deletions made by the DOE as "DOE b(3)." The deletions now being made at the direction of DTRA are indicated on the documents as “DTRA b(1),” for those being withheld under Exemption 1 and “DTRA b(3),” for those being withheld under Exemption 3. Accordingly, Hans M. Kristensen’s Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Hans M. Kristensen on August 30, 1999, Case No. VFA-0520, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) Newly redacted versions of the documents entitled “Lightning/Nuclear Weapon Accidents and Incidents Reported by FC/DASA in the Period from Early 1961 to February 1968,” and “Nuclear Weapon Accident Photos– B52 Flying Alert over Goldsboro, N.C.”, in which additional information is released, will be provided to Mr. Kristensen.

September 30, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:William H. Keenan

Case Number: VFA-0521

William H. Keenan filed this Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Albuquerque Operations Office (AOO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Keenan challenges the adequacy of AOO's search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Keenan submitted an e-foia request stating that:

In August or September 1968, I and a number of other athletes were part of some test at the University of California Nuclear Medicine Facility at the AEC - Los Alamos. We were told that the test had something to do with a "whole body" measuring method involving the natural radiation of human tissue.... I am interested in learning more about the "whole" nature of those or any other tests that were conducted on us at the time.

On August 10, 1999, AOO issued a determination stating that it had found no records responsive to Keenan's request. Keenan then filed the present Appeal.

In his Appeal, Keenan contends that AOO's search was inadequate. He states that in 1967 or 1968, he was an athlete preparing for the Mexico City Olympics. According to Keenan, he was a member of a group of athletes who participated in a series of tests at Los Alamos.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have often stated that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980).

In a case involving the adequacy of the agency's search, "the issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we therefore examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing Keenan's Appeal, we contacted officials at AOO to learn the extent of the search that they had conducted. Upon receiving Keenan's request, AOO searched its listing of "Z numbers," a registry of persons who are not employees of Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) but who enter the facility to participate in programs there. Also searched were the files of the Employee Information System (searched under both Retrieve Employee and Update Non-Lab Personal Information); the Official Personnel Files Office; the Radiation Protection Services (Dosimetry) Office; the Occupational Medicine Archives; and the LANL Information Records Center.(1)

We contacted personnel at AOO and forwarded them a copy of Keenan's Appeal. After reviewing the Appeal and notes of their original search, they informed us that they knew of no other files that might contain records responsive to Keenan's request. They added, however, that agencies other than the DOE and its predecessors may have conducted tests at Los Alamos similar to the test described by Keenan in his submissions. They did not expect any records of such tests to be in the custody or control of AOO, nor to be found in the course of a reasonable search by AOO under the FOIA.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that AOO conducted an adequate search that was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Keenan's request. Therefore, we will deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by William H. Keenan, Case No. VFA-0521, is hereby denied.

(1)In his Appeal, Keenan noted his concern that AOO "seemed to merely have examined employee records." Personnel at AOO acknowledged that some of the files they searched were employee records. They informed us that they searched these files to ensure they would not overlook any responsive material, not because they believed Keenan was an employee at LANL. They also noted that they searched files containing material relating to non- employees.

October 8, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: BP Exploration, Inc.

Date of Filing: September 1, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0522

On September 1, 1999, BP Exploration, Inc. (BP) filed an Appeal from a determination the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office (SPR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on August 11, 1999. In that determination, SPR denied BP's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

In a January 14, 1999 request for information, BP sought a copy of a lease agreement between SPR and Exxon Pipeline Company (Exxon) for certain specified DOE pipelines. In its February 8, 1999 determination, SPR released a redacted copy of the lease agreement in which the various rental fees Exxon would pay the DOE for use of the pipelines were withheld. SPR withheld the fees pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. BP subsequently appealed SPR's February 8 determination to this Office. In an April 3, 1999 Decision, we found that SPR's February 8 determination letter did not justify SPR's withholding of the fee information because it did not adequately explain how Exemption 4 applied to the withheld information. BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,197 at 80,746 (1999). Consequently, we remanded the case to SPR so that it could either issue another determination adequately explaining why the information was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 or release the withheld information. Id.

SPR issued another determination on May 13, 1999. In this determination, SPR again withheld the rental fee information. SPR asserted that the fee information had been obtained from Exxon and that it was confidential. SPR stated that Exxon had informed it that Exxon would suffer commercial harm from the release of the fee information. BP subsequently appealed SPR's May 13 determination to this Office. In a July 8, 1999 Decision, we again found that SPR's justification for withholding the information was insufficient. BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 (1999). However, we again remanded the matter to SPR. We stated that we believed we did not have the expertise to analyze the potential economic harm to Exxon based upon the information available. Id.

SPR issued a third determination on August 11, 1999. In this determination, SPR again withheld the rental fee information. SPR asserts that the fee information is confidential because release of this information would cause competitive harm to Exxon. SPR states that Exxon intends to operate the leased pipeline system as a common carrier, which involves the setting of a tariff in accordance with Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) requirements. SPR states that the integrity of this rate making process would best be served if information BP is requesting remains confidential unless and until FERC intervention is called for. In other words, SPR maintains that BP can obtain whatever data is relevant to the tariff setting process under the supervision of the FERC in the context of a protest proceeding. Alternatively, SPR claims that the DOE's ability to obtain this information in the future would be jeopardized should it release the information to BP.

BP argues that SPR has not provided an adequate justification for its decision to withhold the requested information. BP challenges SPR's claim of competitive harm by asserting that Exxon will not be injured by the release of the lease rates. Appeal Letter dated September 1, 1999, from David K. Monroe and Gregg S. Avitabile, Galland, Kharasch, Greenberg, Fellman & Swirsky, P.C., Counsel for BP, to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE, at 6. In fact, BP asserts that it will not agree to a negotiated rate unless it has the lease fee information. Moreover, BP argues that SPR's rationale for withholding the information assumes that the information is "confidential" without applying the statutory criteria that define the term. Finally, BP challenges SPR's rationale for its alternate basis for withholding the information-- that disclosure would impair the DOE's ability to obtain information in the future-- contending that SPR has again focused on injury to the financial interest of the government, an argument that OHA rejected in its May 13 determination.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is (1) "commercial" or "financial," (2) "obtained from a person," and (3) "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government under non-voluntary conditions is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (i) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information that is provided to an agency voluntarily is considered "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. As we stated in our July 8, 1999 Decision, because Exxon was required to submit a proposed rental fee in negotiating the lease agreement with SPR, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily" submitted to SPR. BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 at 80,796 (1999); see William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999). Thus, as we held previously, for this information to be properly withheld under Exemption 4, the National Parks test must be met. In the July 8, 1999 Decision, we also found that the information was "commercial" and "obtained from a person." BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE at 80,796-97. Therefore, the only issue before us is whether this information is "confidential."

In this case, the withheld information would be considered "confidential" if release would (a) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of Exxon or (b) impair the government's ability to obtain the necessary information in the future. In its August 11 determination letter, SPR found that release would cause Exxon to suffer substantial competitive harm by hurting Exxon's negotiating position with potential pipeline shippers. Determination Letter dated August 11, 1999, from Michael McWilliams, Assistant Project Manager for Management and Administration, SPR, to Stephen J. Chrien, BP (August 11 Determination Letter). However, SPR still has not demonstrated how potential customers could use this information to negotiate lower rates and, therefore, cause competitive harm.

Understanding SPR's position requires reference to the FERC tariff proceedings. Specifically, there are two primary methods for setting the tariff under FERC guidelines. (1)

The first method is to negotiate a price with an unaffiliated shipper. This is what Exxon is currently attempting to do with BP. Under this method, SPR believes that the non-affiliated shipper could use the lease rate information to negotiate a lower tariff with Exxon, and thereby injure Exxon in a cognizable manner. However, SPR has failed to specifically explain how the non-affiliated shipper would be able to use this information to negotiate the lower tariffs and thereby cause Exxon competitive harm. BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE at 80,796. The second method is to consider the cost of service to determine the tariff. Under the cost of service method, the carrier determines the tariff and submits the supporting work papers to FERC. Again, SPR fails to explain how release of the withheld information would enable Exxon's competitors to injure Exxon economically for tariffs established under the cost of service method. It is true that we have found in FOIA cases that release of sensitive commercial information submitted to the DOE by a bidder in the procurement context could injure the bidder by allowing a competitor to undercut the bidder in succeeding procurement actions. See, e.g., William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999) (possibility of pipeline rental bid competition); City of Federal Way, 27 DOE ¶ 80,191 (1991). This is very different from the present situation, in which SPR has presented no evidence to support its contention that Exxon would suffer economic harm. Consequently, we can not find that SPR has demonstrated that disclosure of the lease rates would cause substantial harm to Exxon's competitive position.

Nor can we conclude that SPR has demonstrated that release of the information would impair the government’s ability to obtain the information in the future. SPR’s assertion that disclosing the lease fees would impair its ability to attract potential pipeline lessees in the future, in the absence of other information, is unpersuasive. Disclosure of contract prices have been found to be a "cost of doing business with the government." Racal-Milgo Gov't Sys. v. SBA, 559 F. Supp. 4, 6 (D.D.C. 1981); see ATT Info. Sys. v. GSA, 627 F. Supp. 1396, 1403 (D.D.C. 1986) ("strong public interest in release of component and aggregate prices in Government contract awards"). Moreover, SPR has attempted to equate the potential negative financial impact of a disclosure with the potential negative impact on its ability to obtain information in the future. SPR's financial argument simply does not address the criteria set forth in National Parks.

In essence, SPR seems to be arguing that the DOE should defer to FERC a decision on the releasability of the information BP requests, inasmuch as that information may be of significance in an eventual tariff proceeding at FERC. SPR refers us to no provision in the FOIA that would allow us to take into account of or give significance to the possibility of a later rate-making proceeding. Nor has SPR argued that the documents responsive to BP's request should be referred to FERC for processing. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(f) (setting forth the conditions under which referral to another agency is appropriate). The documentary information BP seeks is in the possession of the DOE, and the DOE has a statutory duty to reach a conclusion on the basis of the best information now available to it, including information about the likelihood of competitive harm.

Because SPR has failed to demonstrate that release of the withheld information would either cause substantial harm to the competitive position of Exxon or impair the government’s ability to obtain the necessary information in the future, we find that the withheld information is not "confidential" for Exemption 4 purposes. Thus, Exemption 4 was improperly applied by SPR to withhold the documents.

III. Conclusion

SPR has now had three opportunities to justify the withholding of the lease fees. SPR has once again failed to show that this information is “confidential” because it would either impair the government’s ability to obtain the information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of Exxon. Therefore, we will order the release of the lease fees in accordance with the notification provisions of 10 C.F.R. § 1004.11.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by BP Exploration, Inc., on September 1, 1999, Case No. VFA-0522, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraphs (2) and (3) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office of the Department of Energy which shall promptly release the requested information.

(3) Prior to the release of the information pursuant to Paragraph (2) of this Decision and Order, the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office of the Department of Energy shall, in accordance with 10 C.F.R. § 1004.11, notify the submitter of the intended release no less than seven (7) calendar days prior to the intended disclosure of the information in question.

(1)In its determination, SPR alleges that there are three methods to set a tariff rate. In fact, one of the three methods that SPR mentions, the market-based method, is only available should a carrier establish that it "lacks significant market power in the market in which it proposes to charge market-based rates." 18 C.F.R. § 348.1. This third method is not applicable here.

November 15, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Nevaire S. Rich

Date of Filing: September 10, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0523

On September 10, 1999, Nevaire S. Rich (Rich) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy (DOE) Freedom of Information Act and Privacy Act Division (DOE/HQ) issued to her. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determination, DOE/HQ released some responsive information to Rich. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the remainder of the responsive information.

I. Background

On July 30, 1998, Rich submitted five requests to DOE/HQ. Rich asked for the following information: (1) all documents describing difficulties encountered during the processing of civil rights complaints when dealing with officials of the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security (NN) since 1992; (2) all documents regarding the civil rights practices and trends of NN; (3) all documents regarding the costs of processing civil rights complaints up to the time of resolution; (4) all documents regarding settlements, including the number of settlements, settlement amounts and the names of DOE officials who negotiated the settlements on behalf of DOE; and (5) the number, basis and geographic location of each civil rights complaint. See Letters from Rich to DOE/HQ (July 30, 1998). DOE/HQ combined the five requests into one, and assigned the request to the Office of Civil Rights (DOE/OCR) for a search of its files. Letter from Acting Director, DOE/HQ to Rich (August 7, 1998). DOE/OCR performed a search that located 11 responsive documents. DOE/HQ released those documents to Rich. Ten were released in their entirety and one was released with the names of complainants deleted. Letter from DOE/HQ to Rich (June 29, 1999) (Determination Letter). In her Appeal, Rich challenges the adequacy of the search, arguing that the final response failed to address several of her requests and that the search results were incomplete.

Letter from Rich to Director, OHA (September 10, 1999) (Appeal).(1) Rich does not appeal the withholding of complainants' names.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted DOE/OCR to ascertain the scope of the search, particularly in light of Rich's contention that she has copies of responsive letters that were not released to her. In addition, Rich argues that even though she made more than one civil rights complaint about NN to DOE/OCR herself, DOE/OCR produced no evidence of her complaints in the responsive material. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Rich and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (September 30, 1999). At that time, DOE/OCR did not provide any details about the search or explain their inability to locate the responsive material that Rich already had in her possession. Electronic Mail Message from DOE/OCR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (October 1, 1999). Nonetheless, DOE/OCR accepted a copy of the appeal and agreed to contact this office with further information about the search. Id.

Sometime thereafter, DOE/OCR contacted OHA and we met to discuss the search. As a preliminary matter, DOE/OCR stated that files were retired after three years, and that it had released all of the responsive information in its possession. Memorandum of Meeting between Lynn Hull, DOE/OCR, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (October 19, 1999). DOE/OCR informed this office that it had searched every complaint file, and also searched for a corresponding case in the "settlement drawer." Id. In response to Rich's argument that Rich is aware of settlements that were not included in the responsive material, Ms. Hull stated that some settlements may have been too recently negotiated to appear in DOE/OCR's files. In addition, settlements that are negotiated and agreed upon in the field are not recorded at DOE/OCR if the field personnel do not notify DOE/OCR of the settlement. In reference to Rich's request for information about problems dealing with officials in named DOE offices, DOE/OCR does not maintain records that identify the number of times that a complaint was filed against a certain manager. Thus, DOE/OCR could not respond to Rich's request for documents about the difficulties encountered while processing complaints when dealing with officials of NN or other named offices. We therefore find that DOE/OCR conducted an adequate search of records in its possession.

Finally, DOE/OCR explained that it provided Rich a summary document of settlement information in response to one of her requests. We find that this was a logical, reasonable and user-friendly manner in which to present the data to the requester. See Charles E. Washington, 27 DOE ¶ 80,221 (1999). However, Rich has now made clear that she wishes to see all of the responsive documents, and under the FOIA, she is entitled to receive a copy of all responsive, non-exempt documents. Id. Accordingly, we shall remand this portion of the case to DOE/OCR for a further determination.(2) DOE/OCR should either promptly release all additional responsive material or explain the reason for the withholding of any such information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 10, 1999 by Nevaire Rich, OHA Case No. VFA-0523, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE Office of Civil Rights which will promptly issue a new determination in accordance with the guidance set forth in the above Decision.

(1)Rich filed this appeal after the thirty-day deadline specified in our regulations. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). We advised DOE/OCR, and they informed us that, despite the delay, they had nothing to add to the initial response. (2)In her request, Rich also sought information about Equal Employment Opportunity case investigations that are performed in connection with civil rights complaints. DOE/OCR informed OHA, but not the requester, that there is a privacy interest in much of this material. DOE/OCR should address this issue in the new determination.

October 13, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: BNFL, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0525

On September 14, 1999, BNFL, Inc. (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on August 11, 1999 by the Department of Energy's Federal Energy Technology Center (the FETC). In that determination, the FETC released a number of documents in response to a June 28, 1999 Request for Information filed by the Appellant under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, the FETC also withheld some responsive information under FOIA Exemptions 3, 4 and 5. This Appeal, if granted, would require FETC to release portions of the withheld information.

I. BACKGROUND

On June 28, 1999, the Appellant filed a Request for Information with DOE Headquarters' Freedom of Information Office. That office forwarded the Appellant's request to FETC and the DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge). On August 11, 1999, FETC issued a determination letter informing the Appellant that it had completed its portion of the search. The determination letter further informed the Appellant that it located a number of responsive documents. FETC released a large number of documents to the Appellant in their entirety. FETC, however, withheld some responsive information under FOIA Exemptions 3, 4 and 5.

The present Appeal was submitted on September 14, 1999, challenging several of FETC's withholdings as well as the adequacy of the DOE's search for responsive documents.(1) Specifically, the Appellant contends FETC:

1) failed to identify other authorizing officials having responsibility for the denial of records;

2) improperly withheld a memo under Exemption 4;

3) improperly withheld five documents under Exemption 5;

4) failed to explain why a discretionary release would not be appropriate for the withheld information; and,

5) failed to conduct an adequate search for responsive documents.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9). The only exemptions at issue in the present case are found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) (Exemption 4) and 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5).

A. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(c)

The Appellant contends that FETC failed to comply with DOE FOIA regulation 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(c) by failing to identify "any other Authorizing [or Denying] Officials having responsibility for the denial of records." Appeal at 2. This contention is without merit. The determination letter only applied to that portion of the search conducted by FETC. Therefore, the only Authorizing or Denying Official involved in the determinations at issue was the Director of FETC, who signed the determination letter.

B. Adequacy of the Search

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

The Appellant contends that FETC's search must have been inadequate because it erred in processing other aspects of the determination. This contention is, in essence, mere speculation. "Mere speculation that as yet uncovered documents may exist does not undermine the finding that the agency conducted a reasonable search for them." Safecard Services, Inc. v. Department of Justice, 926 F.2d 1197, 1201 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

The Appellant also contends that the DOE needs to search the Headquarters Office of Patent Counsel (OPC) of the DOE Office of General Counsel. The Appellant's attorney has indicated that he has had several conversations with various OPC representatives. These conversations apparently concerned the same subjects as the Appellant's FOIA request. Under these circumstances, the OPC's files should be included in the DOE's search for responsive documents. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to the DOE Headquarters Freedom of Information Office, which should coordinate this additional search for responsive documents.

C. Exemption 4

FETC withheld three documents under Exemption 4. The Appellant is only appealing FETC's withholding portions of one of these three documents. Portions of this document, which was prepared by FETC officials using information supplied to them by the Appellant's subsidiary, were withheld because they contained confidential commercial information submitted by a person to the DOE. However, our review of this withholding revealed that the information that FETC withheld from the Appellant under Exemption 4, was submitted to FETC by the Manufacturing Sciences Corporation (MSC). MSC is a subsidiary of the Appellant. (2) It is well settled that under the FOIA, a privilege cannot be asserted against a requester if it is the party to be protected by the privilege. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 771 (1989); Department of Justice v. Julian, 486 U.S. 1 (1988). Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to FETC, which should either promptly release this information to the Appellant or withhold it under another appropriate FOIA exemption.

D. Exemption 5

FETC withheld portions of six documents under Exemption 5. The Appellant contests the application of Exemption 5 to five of the six documents. These contested documents are identified as: (1) a Price Negotiation Memorandum (post-negotiation summary) dated 5/15/95, (2) a Price Negotiation Memorandum (pre-negotiation plan) dated 5/15/95, (3) a Price Negotiation Memorandum (pre-negotiation plan) dated 1/22/97, (4) correspondence from Jarr to Malhotra re: Covofinish Invention Being Used Under ORO Contract, and (5) correspondence dated 7/18/97 from Jarr to Marchick re: Covofinish Claim Re: DOE Rights in Patent No. 5,458,745.

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 incorporates those “privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context.” Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975); see also NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The determination letter indicates that FETC has withheld information from these five documents under the deliberative process privilege. It is well settled that the executive or deliberative process privilege is among the privileges that fall under this exclusion. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

The deliberative process privilege permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The purpose of the privilege is to protect the quality of agency decisions by promoting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946 (Ct. Cl. 1958)) (Mink).

In order for the deliberative process to shield a document, it must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971). Our review of the withheld information indicates that FETC failed to segregate a great deal of non-deliberative factual information from its withholdings.

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Accordingly, even if a document can properly be withheld under Exemption 5, we must consider whether the public interest nevertheless demands disclosure pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In applying this regulation, we note that the Department of Justice has reviewed its administration of the FOIA and adopted a "foreseeable harm" standard for defending FOIA exemptions. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (October 4, 1993) (Reno Memorandum). The Reno Memorandum indicates that whether or not there is a legally correct application of an exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. See Reno Memorandum at 1, 2.

Upon reviewing the information withheld by FETC under Exemption 5, it appeared that much of this information could be released to the public without revealing the agency's deliberations. The determination letter does not provide any indication or justification for withholding this information. Therefore, FETC has failed to articulate any foreseeable harm to a protected interest. On remand, FETC should review that information again and either release any information that could not reasonable be expected to harm a protected interest or clearly explain how release of that information could reasonably be expected to cause such harm.

On remand, FETC should review each of the five contested documents and should release all factual or descriptive information, sufficiently justify any withholding under Exemption 5, or consider withholding it under other exemptions. (3)

III. CONCLUSION

We are remanding part of the present Appeal to FETC. On remand, FETC shall either release the information it withheld under Exemptions 4 and 5 or provide a new justification for withholding. If FETC continues to withhold information under Exemption 5, it must explain which Exemption 5 privilege it is applying. In doing so, it must provide more than a simple restatement of the applicable test. Instead, it should include a statement of the reason for any withholding, a brief explanation of how the exemption applies to the matter withheld and an explanation of how the information it is withholding could reasonably be expected to cause harm if released to the public. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,221 at 80,861 (1997); Davis Wright & Jones, 19 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,510 (1989). In addition, we are remanding part of the present Appeal to the Headquarters Freedom of Information Office for an additional search for responsive documents. The rest of the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by BNFL, Inc., Case No. VFA-0525, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Federal Energy Technology Center and to the Headquarters Freedom of Information Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(1)The Appeal does not contest any of FETC's withholdings under Exemption 3.

(2)The Appellant's attorney indicates that he is also representing MSC. As MSC's representative, he has assured us that MSC has provided its consent to release this information to its parent.

(3)Some of this information might be appropriately withheld under the confidential commercial information privilege discussed at length in Federal Open Market Comm. v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340 (1979).

October 18, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Matthew Cherney, M.D.

Case Number: VFA-0527

Matthew Cherney, M.D., filed this Appeal in response to a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's Office of the Inspector General (OIG) on September 23, 1999. The determination deals with a request for information that Dr. Cherney submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Dr. Cherney requests the release of responsive material. As explained below, we will deny Dr. Cherney's Appeal.

I. Background

On March 9, 1999, Dr. Cherney filed a request under the FOIA for copies of documents relating to an inquiry conducted by the OIG. On April 5, the OIG advised Dr. Cherney that it had located responsive documents, but would withhold them from release pursuant to Exemption 7(A) of the FOIA. Exemption 7(A) authorizes the withholding of "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that production of such law enforcement records or information ... could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A).

In its April 5 determination, the OIG explained that:

A review of the responsive documents ... has been made.... The responsive documents are being withheld in their entirety pursuant to ... Exemption 7(A).... There has not been a final determination concerning this matter. Accordingly, Exemption 7(A) has been applied to the responsive documents. Release of the material at this time could prematurely reveal evidence and interfere with the ongoing enforcement proceeding.

Dr. Cherney appealed this determination. In reviewing his Appeal, we found that the OIG's explanation for withholding under Exemption 7(A) was inadequate in view of the principles enunciated in Bevis v. Department Of State, 801 F.2d 1386, 1388 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Bevis).

In Bevis, the court ruled that an agency withholding records under Exemption 7(A) "need not justify its withholding on a document-by-document basis," but instead may group the documents in categories. Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389. Moreover, when an agency elects to describe records by this approach, it "has a three-fold task. First, it must define its categories functionally. Second, it must conduct a document-by-document review in order to assign the documents to the proper category. Finally, it must explain how the release of each category would interfere with enforcement proceedings." Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389-90.

In our review of the April 5 determination, we found that the determination letter did not assign each responsive document to a functional category. We therefore granted the Appeal and remanded Dr. Cherney's request for a new determination. Matthew Cherney, M.D., 27 DOE ¶ 80,209 (May 28, 1999) (the May 28 decision).

On remand, OIG issued a new determination letter on September 23, 1999. In this determination, OIG continued to assert that the responsive documents are protected from withholding by Exemption 7(A). In addition, OIG grouped the responsive documents into nine functional categories. This determination is the subject of the present Appeal.

II. Analysis

Dr. Cherney's Appeal consists of five numbered items. Items 2, 3, and 4 consist of complaints about the performance of OIG and the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In regard to these items, we note that:

Under the FOIA an individual may only obtain access to records "written or transcribed to perpetuate knowledge or events" ... Therefore, FOIA neither requires an agency to answer questions disguised as a FOIA request ... or to create documents or opinions in response to an individual's request for information.

Hudgins v. IRS, 620 F. Supp. 19, 21 (D.D.C. 1985) (citations omitted). Accordingly, we will regard these complaints as outside the scope of an appeal under the FOIA.

Item 1 of the Appeal states in full that "there is no identifiable category into which congressional correspondence, documents of public record previously ordered released, fits. Let's have any and all congressional correspondence without delay -- as previously ordered."

In response to this item, we contacted personnel at OIG and asked them if there was any congressional correspondence among the records identified as responsive to Dr. Cherney's reqeust. They informed us that there were no items that could be described as "congressional correspondence." We need not, therefore, determine whether congressional correspondence should be released, or whether it fits into any of the functional categories specified in the September 9 determination letter.(1)

Item 5 of the Appeal states in full that "the decision itself is improper, as it is unsigned." However, Dr. Cherney did not include a copy of the determination letter with his Appeal. We contacted Dr. Cherney to request a copy of the determination letter. He requested that we obtain a copy from OIG. When we received a copy from OIG, we noted that the determination was clearly signed by Sandra L. Schneider, the Assistant Inspector General for Inspections of OIG. Since Dr. Cherney's assertion lacks merit, we will give it no further consideration.

III. Conclusion

Dr. Cherney's Appeal rests on the assumptions that (1) the OIG has copies of congressional correspondence that are responsive to his request and (2) the determination letter is unsigned. Since both assumptions lack merit, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Matthew Cherney, M.D., Case No. VFA-0521, is hereby denied.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: October 18, 1999

(1)Contrary to Dr. Cherney's assertion, the Office of Hearings and Appeals has not ordered OIG to release congressional correspondence. In our review of a previous Appeal by Dr. Cherney, the DOE's Office of Power Technologies informed us that it might have copies of congressional correspondence that it had not considered in its original response to him. We remanded the request to the Office of Power Technologies for a search for responsive records in its file of congressional correspondence, but did not order their release. Matthew Cherney, M.D., 27 DOE ¶ 80,212 (June 24, 1999) (the June 24 decision). In contrast to the June 24 decision, the present decision considers the determination of the OIG, and does not involve records in the possession of the Office of Power Technologies.

December 22, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Ashok K. Kaushal

Date of Filing: October 29, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0529

On October 29, 1999, Ashok K. Kaushal (Kaushal) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on September 14, 1999, by the Office of Inspector General (IG) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004 and the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

Kaushal wrote to the FOIA/Privacy Act Division at DOE headquarters and requested all documents created in response to a complaint he filed against Sandia National Laboratory. The FOIA/Privacy Act Division forwarded the request to the IG. The IG conducted a search of its files and located 69 responsive documents. On September 14, 1999, the IG notified Kaushal in a determination letter that it was releasing three documents in their entirety, withholding three documents in their entirety, and making partial disclosure of the other documents. Material in the partially disclosed documents was withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Additionally, the material in the documents withheld in full, Documents 20, 56 and 60, was withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6, 7(C) and 7(D). These documents are memoranda of interviews submitted by individuals who requested confidentiality. In this Appeal, Kaushal challenges the IG's withholding of Documents 20, 56 and 60 in their entirety. As explained below, we will uphold the IG's determination regarding these three documents.

II. Analysis

A. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F.

R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). We find that the withheld documents meet the threshold test of Exemption 6 as they are "similar files," the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, that is, as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996); F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982) (Abramson). The IG is a law enforcement body charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud or abuse in programs administered or financed by the DOE. See Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. app. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). As a result of its duties, we find that the IG compiles reports involving official misconduct for "law enforcement purposes" within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1995).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3 (Exemption 6); Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-663 (D.D.C. 1990) (Exemption 7(C)).

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, providing the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., David Ridenour, 27 DOE ¶ 80,143 (1998); Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Since, as discussed below, the responsive documents that were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7 (C) were also compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard will be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

1. Privacy Interest

In its determination, the IG stated that the three documents withheld in their entirety contain names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals involved in the IG investigation of Kaushal's complaints. According to the IG, these individuals are "entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions." Determination Letter at 1.

This office reviewed the three documents that were withheld from Kaushal. Those documents contained names of individuals who had some relation to the investigation. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. See Department of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 154, 176 (1991) ("[t]he invasion of privacy becomes significant when personal information is linked to particular interviewees"); Safecard Services, Inc., v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); Blumberg, Seng, Ikeda & Albers, 25 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,563 (1995); James Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991). Therefore, we find that the individuals whose identities are being withheld in this case have significant privacy interests in maintaining their confidentiality.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). It is well settled that disclosure of the identity of individuals who have provided information to government investigators is not "affected with the public interest." See, e.g., Safecard, 926 F.2d at 1205. In his Appeal, Kaushal did not offer any explanation of why he believes release of the material would be in the public interest. In fact, he did not address this issue at all. Therefore, we find that there is no public interest in the disclosure of the three documents at issue.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of law enforcement records could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); Safecard, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

We have concluded above that there is a cognizable privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that Kaushal has not provided any information about the existence of a public interest in the disclosure of the withheld information. After a thorough examination, we found no public interest in the withheld material. In the absence of any public interest to weigh against the real and identifiable privacy interest, the privacy interest must prevail.

B. Exemption 7(D)

The IG also invoked the protection of Exemption 7(D) in withholding three documents from Kaushal. Exemption 7(D) protects from mandatory disclosure records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes that could reasonably be expected to disclose the identity of a confidential source who furnished information on a confidential basis. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(D); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iv). Exemption 7(D) is meant to protect confidential sources from retaliation that may result from the disclosure of their participation in law enforcement activities, and to encourage cooperation with law enforcement agencies by enabling the agencies to keep their informants' identities confidential. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732 (2d Cir. 1995) (Ortiz). "A source is confidential if the source provided information under an express assurance of confidentiality or in circumstances from which such an assurance could be reasonably inferred." Id., citing U.S. v. Landano, 508 U.S. 165; 113 S. Ct. 2014, 2019 (1993). We reviewed Documents 20, 56 and 60, the unredacted documents in which several sources requested confidentiality. We conclude that an assurance of confidentiality could be reasonably inferred from material in the documents. Accordingly, we find that the IG properly withheld the identity of the confidential sources under Exemption 7(D).(1)

C. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). Our review of the documents found that the IG properly withheld the three documents in their entirety.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ashok K. Kaushal on October 29, 1999, OHA Case No. VFA-0529, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)The applicability of Exemption 7(D) is based on the circumstances under which the exemption is provided (i.e., granting confidentiality to a source), and not exclusively on the harm resulting from disclosure, as with Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Therefore, there is no balancing test applied under Exemption 7(D). See Jones v. F.B.I., 41 F.3d 238, 247 (6th Cir. 1994) (stating that if the source was confidential, the exemption may be claimed regardless of the public interest in disclosure); *Parker v. Case No. VFA-0530, 27 DOE ¶ 80,238

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Lewis R. Ireland, Ph.D.

Case Number: VFA-0530

On September 28, 1999, Lewis R. Ireland, Ph.D., (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Authorizing Official of the Department of Energy's Savannah River Operations Office (DOE/SR). In that determination, the Authorizing Official stated that DOE did not possess records responsive to the request for information that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Authorizing Official further stated that the records were owned by a company called Project Management Institute (not a DOE contractor or subcontractor). In his Appeal, the Appellant asserted that DOE possesses responsive records. Further, he stated that even if the requested records were owned by PMI, they should be subject to release under the FOIA.

Background

In his August 30, 1999 request for information, the Appellant sought records referencing himself that were generated on October 1, 1998 or later. He stated that he believed these files to be in the possession of Westinghouse Savannah River Corporation (WSRC) employee Harold Reeve.(1) In his determination, the Authorizing Official stated that no agency records exist regarding this request since any responsive records are solely owned by PMI. Therefore, he denied the request. The Appellant responded that he believes DOE possesses copies of responsive records and that its search was inadequate. In addition, he argued that these records were created using taxpayers' funds, and thus should be subject to release under the FOIA. Finally, he raised new questions about the relationship between PMI and DOE/SR and also alleged that the documents contain evidence of a federal crime.

Analysis

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. E.g., Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

We contacted DOE/SR to determine how it conducted the search. We learned that DOE/SR conducted a search of WSRC, which uncovered responsive email from Mr. Reeve's WSRC account referencing the Appellant. WSRC did not find any other responsive documents in its files. However, it explained that Mr. Reeve is working under the auspices of a "shared executive program" between WSRC and PMI. Under this program, Mr. Reeve spends equal amounts of time working for WSRC and PMI, although PMI is not a contractor for WSRC or DOE. Under this program, Mr. Reeve conducts PMI business from his WSRC location and computer, and he is permitted to keep PMI records at his WSRC location. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Dawn Goldstein, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals, and Pauline Conner and Jim Durkis, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE/SR (September 28, 1999). DOE/SR did not request that Mr. Reeve turn over any of his PMI records. We believe that Mr. Reeve was the logical focal point for DOE/SR's search, since the Appellant had stated that all responsive records were in his possession. We therefore find that DOE/SR conducted an adequate search of records in its possession and WSRC's possession.

We then inquired whether any responsive PMI records held in WSRC offices or the responsive email might be subject to mandatory release under the FOIA or DOE regulations. The Appellant asserted in his Appeal that all taxpayer-funded records are subject to release under the FOIA. This assertion is incorrect. See International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80,152 at 80,620 (1998). Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether any of the requested records are "agency records," and thus subject to the FOIA, under the criteria set out by the federal courts. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f) (describing the scope of the term "agency" under the FOIA). Second, records that do not meet these criteria can nonetheless be subject to release under the DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e); see 59 Fed. Reg. 63,884 (December 12, 1994). For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that no responsive record ever became an "agency record" of DOE's, or a record acquired or generated by WSRC in its performance of its DOE contract. Therefore, the responsive records are not subject to release under either the FOIA or DOE regulations.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as WSRC, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., BMF Enterprises, 21 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1991); William Albert Hewgley, 19 DOE ¶ 80,120 (1989); Judith M. Gibbs, 16 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1987) (Gibbs). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Gibbs, 16 DOE at 80,595-96.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The courts have identified certain factors to consider in determining whether we should regard an entity as an agency for purposes of federal law. In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976) (Orleans), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the . . . agency receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Id. at 815. In other words, an organization will be considered a federal agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham). See also Washington Research Project, Inc. v. HEW, 504 F.2d 238, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 963 (1975) (degree of independent governmental decision-making authority considered); Rocap v. Indiek, 539 F.2d 174 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

WSRC is a privately owned and operated company. While the DOE exercises general control over the contract work performed by WSRC, it does not supervise the company's day-to-day operations. We therefore conclude that WSRC is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA. In addition, since PMI is also a privately owned and operated company, and has no contractual connection to DOE, it also is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

Although neither WSRC nor PMI is an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, the requested records could be considered "agency records" if the DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time the Appellant made his FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts); see Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. In this case, we have determined that none of the records the Appellant seeks was in the agency's control at the time of his request. See Record of Telephone Conversation of Dawn Goldstein, Pauline Conner and Jim Durkis. Based on these facts, these documents clearly do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46; see also Forsham, 445 U.S. at 185-86.

Moreover, because any responsive records were generated as a result of the business of PMI, with no relationship to WSRC or DOE, we do not believe they would be encompassed by the DOE contractor record regulation. This regulation provides that some contractor-owned records may be subject to release under certain conditions. One of those conditions is that the responsive items are "records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract. . . ." See 10 C.F.R. 1004.3(e)(1). The responsive records in this case were not acquired or generated by WSRC in its performance of its contract with DOE. Although we believe the email to be WSRC property, since it utilized the WSRC server and a WSRC email account, it was not acquired or generated in WSRC's performance of its contract with DOE, because it exclusively relates to PMI business. Accordingly, we find that any responsive records that exist are not subject to release under the DOE regulations. Thus, since DOE/SR conducted an adequate search, and the requested records are neither "agency records" nor subject to release under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3, we must deny the Appeal at issue.(2)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Lewis R. Ireland, Ph.D., on September 28, 1999, Case No. VFA-0530, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

(1)1/ WSRC is the management and operating contractor at DOE's Savannah River site.

(2)2/ With regard to the new questions that the Appellant raises regarding the relationship between DOE/SR and PMI, these should be the subject of a new FOIA request that he may file with DOE/SR.

We also note that the allegation that responsive documents may contain evidence of a federal crime has no relevance to the FOIA analysis described above.

November 24, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:STAND, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0532

On October 13, 1999, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Appeal filed by STAND, Inc. STAND is appealing a determination by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque). Albuquerque issued a determination on September 21, 1999, in response to a request for information submitted in accordance with the provisions of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require DOE to conduct a further search for responsive materials.

On May 28, 1999, STAND, a community activist organization whose name stands for Serious Texans Against Nuclear Dumping, submitted a three part request for information to Albuquerque. On September 21, 1999, Albuquerque issued a determination letter indicating that its search had not identified any documents that are responsive to either of the first two portions of STAND's request. In its Appeal, STAND is only contesting the adequacy of Albuquerque's search for documents responsive to the first portion of its request. The first portion of STAND's request was for "A copy of all Unusual Occurrence Reports for the period November 1976 to June 1990." (Emphasis in the original). STAND contends that a DOE report, identified as LA-UR-96-150, indicates that there were approximately 1600 Unusual Occurrence Reports during this period. STAND specifically contends that the DOE's search for responsive documents should have included DOE Headquarters, the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory, Sandia National Laboratory, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory and the Pantex Plant.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

We reviewed the search for responsive documents conducted by Albuquerque and we are convinced that Albuquerque's search, which included the departmental elements cited in the appeal, was reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. However, in conducting our investigation of Albuquerque's search, we became aware that the requested documents may be in the custody of the DOE's Headquarters Office of Operating Experience Analysis, an element of the DOE's Office of Environment, Safety and Health (ESH). Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to ESH to conduct a further search for responsive documents and to issue a determination to STAND regarding the results of that search.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by STAND, Inc. on October 13, 1999, Case Number VFA-0532, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The portion of the Appeal concerning the search for responsive documents is hereby remanded to the Assistant Secretary for Environment, Safety and Health to conduct a further search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request and to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are located, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: The National Security Archive

Case Number: VFA-0533

The National Security Archive filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on September 16, 1999, by the Freedom of Information Manager, Department of the Air Force, 11th Wing (Air Force). In that determination, the Air Force denied in part a request for information that the National Security Archive filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. The Air Force stated that certain information deleted from the documents released to the National Security Archive was withheld after a review of the documents had been performed by the Office of Declassification (now Office of Nuclear and National Security Information (ONNSI)) of the Department of Energy's Office of Security Affairs. This Appeal, if granted, would require the Department of Energy (DOE) to release information that it withheld through the Air Force's September 16, 1999 determination.

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release to the public, upon request, documents in their possession and control. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On February 2, 1993, the National Security Archive submitted a request to the Air Force for four documents, including two RAND Corporation reports titled "The MIRV System and Some of its Implications: An Overview" and "The U.S. ICBM FORCE: Current Issues and Future Options.(1) Because these documents contained DOE information, the Air Force referred the documents to the DOE's Office of Declassification (OD) for a determination concerning their possible release. OD responded by returning the documents to the Air Force after marking the information to be withheld and providing an explanation of each withholding. The Air Force released to the National Security Archive redacted versions of the requested materials in a determination issued on September 16, 1999.

On October 16, 1999, the National Security Archive filed this Appeal. In its determination letter, the Air Force explained that the information withheld could not be released under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 and therefore was withheld under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. The information withheld contains information about the military utilization of atomic weapons that has been classified as Formerly Restricted Data (FRD).

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld portions from the reports that the Air Force provided to the National Security Archive. In its Appeal, the National Security Archive states that the Department of Defense has released information on the "warhead yields of Titan and Minuteman III warheads." Appeal Letter dated October 11, 1999, from William Burr, the National Security Archive, to Office of Hearings and Appeals, DOE. The National Security Archive further contends that this is the information withheld in the two documents at issue in this Appeal. Therefore, the National Security Archive argues that "when such information is already in the public record, the Department should be able to declassify it without violating statute or contributing, even indirectly, to nuclear proliferation." Id.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g.,Glen Milner, 27 DOE ¶ 80,115 (1998); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992). According to ONNSI, the portions of the two reports that the DOE deleted under Exemption 3 were withheld on the grounds that they contain information that has been classified as Formerly Restricted Data under the Atomic Energy Act and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure.

The Director of the Office of Security Affairs (SA) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this Appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of SA reviewed those portions of the two reports at issue for which the DOE had claimed an exemption from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

The Director of SA considered the concerns the National Security Archive specifically raised in its Appeal, and performed as well a general review of the material under the current classification guidance. Based on the review that the Director of SA performed, the DOE has determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the continued withholding of the information withheld in the initial determinations. In accordance with current joint Department of Defense/DOE classification guidance, the withheld information, which reveals yields of specific weapons, nuclear vulnerability and hardening data, and reliability of specific weapons, is still classified as FRD. Section 142 of the Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2162, prohibits the disclosure of such information. Consequently, this information was and is properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA.

A finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information. Nevertheless, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the two reports at issue that the Director of SA has determined to be properly classified must continue to be withheld from disclosure. Accordingly, the National Security Archive's Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that the National Security Archive filed on October 16, 1999, Case No. VFA-0533 is hereby denied.

December 13, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Wayne L. Pretti

Date of Filing: November 12, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0534

On November 12, 1999, Wayne L. Pretti filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on September 30, 1999. In its determination, Rocky Flats denied Mr. Pretti's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Rocky Flats to release the information it withheld.

Background

In a letter dated June 16, 1999, Mr. Pretti submitted a FOIA request to Rocky Flats for a copy of a report issued after an investigation of the billing practices of Systems Engineering and Management Associates, Inc. (SEMA). SEMA was a third tier contractor to Dyncorp Colorado, Inc. (DCI), a subcontractor at Rocky Flats. Allegedly, SEMA billed DCI for all hours SEMA's employees worked on the contract, including overtime. The investigation concerned whether SEMA paid overtime to its employees. Request Letter dated June 16, 1999, from Wayne L. Pretti to Mary Hammack, FOIA/PA Officer, Rocky Flats. Mr. Pretti also requested any documents prepared by DOE, Kaiser-Hill (KH), DCI, or SEMA(1) in response to the report. On September 30, 1999, Rocky Flats denied his request, stating that it did not have a copy of the report. Further, Rocky Flats claimed that, under the contract between Rocky Flats and KH, the report is not defined as an "agency record" because the contract "clearly defines internal complaint records, procurement records, and records pertaining to wages, salaries and benefits . . . as being the property of the contractor." Determination Letter dated September 30, 1999, from Mary Hammack, FOIA/PA Officer, Rocky Flats, to Wayne L. Pretti.

In response, Mr. Pretti filed this Appeal. He argues that the information cannot be an internal complaint record, because it is a report by a federal government agency independent of the DOE, KH, DCI, and SEMA. He alleges that the report deals with a violation of public law, not an internal complaint. He also argues that Rocky Flats has made an extremely broad interpretation of the contract language in order to reach its determination that the report is a record "related to any procurement action by the Contractor" and "pertaining to wages, salaries, and benefits." Appeal Letter dated October 25, 1999, from Wayne L. Pretti to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985);accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

The initial information Mr. Pretti requested is a report of an investigation into SEMA's billing practices. Mr. Pretti asserts that the investigation was conducted by a "federal government agency independent of the DOE, Rocky Flats, KH, DCI, and SEMA." Appeal Letter at 2. In fact, Rocky Flats has informed us that the investigation and subsequent report was completed by a contractor, but not KH. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation on December 1, 1999, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, and Mary Hammack, FOIA/PA Officer, Rocky Flats (December 1, 1999 Telephone Memorandum). Rocky Flats has stated that neither it nor KH possesses a copy of the report. Determination Letter dated September 30, 1999, from Mary Hammack, FOIA/PA Officer, Rocky Flats, to Wayne L. Pretti; December 1, 1999 Telephone Memorandum. Rocky Flats stated that both the DOE and KH parts of the facility were searched. The FOIA/PA Officer at Rocky Flats questioned DOE contracting officials, who would be most likely to possess knowledge about the report and the contractor. They were asked if any relevant information existed. The answer was negative. DOE personnel also checked the computer system that tracks all records maintained by Rocky Flats to confirm that no reference to SEMA or the report existed. It did not. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation on November 29, 1999, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, and Mary Hammack, FOIA/PA Officer, Rocky Flats; Memorandum of Telephone Conversation on December 2, 1999, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, and Mary Hammack, FOIA/PA Officer, Rocky Flats. In addition, the FOIA/PA Officer contacted KH personnel who are responsible for maintaining the contract records. Likewise, KH reported that it did not have a copy of the report. Id.

However, we do not believe the search can stop with KH. Relevant records could exist at DCI and SEMA. The contract between the DOE and KH contains a clause regarding the ownership of records acquired or generated in the performance of the contract. Contract No. DE-AC34-95RF00825, Section H.4. For the most part, records acquired or generated in the performance of the contract are considered government records. Id. In addition, section H.4 contains a provision stating that KH shall include a similar record-ownership provision in all subcontracts that are of a cost-reimbursement type. Id. The contract between KH and DCI contains the ownership-of-records clause. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation December 6, 1999, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney- Examiner, OHA, and Ken Leonardi, Attorney, KH. Therefore, DCI's records must be searched to ascertain if it possesses a copy of the report. If DCI has the report, Rocky Flats must then determine whether it is subject to disclosure under the FOIA or applicable regulation. In addition, if the contract between DCI and SEMA contains the ownership-of-records section, SEMA's records must also be searched. Therefore, we will remand the matter so a search of DCI's records can be performed and so Rocky Flats can ascertain whether the SEMA records must also be searched.

In his original request, Mr. Pretti also requested any documents prepared by DOE, KH, DCI, or SEMA in response to the report in addition to a copy of the report. In a letter dated September 27, 1999, to Rocky Flats, Mr. Pretti indicated that his request could be fulfilled in two parts by sending him a copy of the report first followed by the other documents. See Letter dated September 27, 1999, from Wayne L. Pretti to Mary Hammack, FOIA/PA Officer, Rocky Flats. It is our understanding that Rocky Flats believes its determination of September 30, 1999, to be a final determination and to answer all Mr. Pretti's requests. Since Rocky Flats referred only to the report and not to the other requested documents, the determination is incomplete. Therefore, we will also remand the Appeal on this matter for a determination regarding the other requested information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Wayne L. Pretti, on November 12, 1999, Case No. VFA-0534, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Rocky Flats Field Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner:Lewis R. Ireland, Ph.D.

Case Number: VFA-0535

On November 2, 1999, Lewis R. Ireland, Ph.D. (Appellant) filed a Motion for Reconsideration (Motion) of a Decision and Order issued to him by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). Lewis R. Ireland, Ph.D., 27 DOE ¶ 80,238 (1999). In that Decision, we denied Dr. Ireland's Appeal regarding his Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request to the DOE's Savannah River Operations Office (DOE/SR). In his current Motion, the Appellant requests reconsideration based on one additional material fact he is presenting to this Office for the first time.

Background

On August 30, 1999, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to DOE/SR seeking records referencing himself that were generated on October 1, 1998 or later. He stated that he believed these files to be in the possession of Westinghouse Savannah River Corporation (WSRC) employee Harold Reeve.(1)In his determination, the Authorizing Official stated that no agency records exist regarding this request since any responsive records are solely owned by Project Management Institute (PMI), a private entity. (2) Therefore, he denied the request. The Appellant responded, in relevant part, that these records were created using taxpayers' funds, and thus should be subject to release under the FOIA. He also alleged that the documents contain evidence of a federal crime. In the OHA's October 14 Decision, we upheld the determination of DOE/SR. Specifically, the OHA found that the records, composed solely of emails, dealt solely with PMI business. Because the responsive emails had not been obtained or controlled by DOE at the time of the request, they were not agency records. Further, since the responsive emails were not acquired or generated by WSRC in its performance of its contract with DOE, they were not subject to the DOE contractor records regulation, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3. Therefore, the OHA upheld the DOE/SR determination. On November 2, 1999, the Appellant filed the present Motion challenging our Decision.

Analysis

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. Nathaniel Hendricks, 25 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1996). In the past, we have looked to the standards contained in OHA's procedural regulations for guidance as to the appropriate substantive standards for use in this type of case. See Ron Vader, 23 DOE ¶ 80,183 at 80,704

(1993).(3)Those provisions require a showing of "significantly changed circumstances" be made before such motions are considered. 10 C.F.R. §1003.35. According to this regulation, "significantly changed circumstances" include the discovery of material facts which were not known at the time of the initial proceeding. 10 C.F.R. § 1003.35(a)(1). The Appellant's Motion provides one material fact which the Appellant has not previously brought to the DOE's attention. Therefore, we have decided to consider this material fact noted by the Appellant in his Motion for Reconsideration.(4)

The Appellant informed us for the first time of his belief that the responsive emails were addressed either from or to a "srs [Savannah River Site].gov" email address. He contends that a ".gov" address means that the email server utilized belongs to a government entity, in this case, the DOE, and any email on that server must therefore be an agency record. The Appellant is incorrect. The server utilized for "srs.gov" emails belongs to WSRC. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Dawn L. Goldstein and James Durkis, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE/SR (November 8, 1999). These emails could therefore not be agency records under the FOIA since they were not created or obtained by an agency at the time of the initial request. Further, we also find that the DOE contractor records regulation does not apply. Emails on this WSRC-owned server are governed by the WSRC/DOE contract. Because that contract gives ownership to DOE only of "records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract," these exclusively PMI-related emails are not subject to our contractor records regulation.(5) Consequently, the responsive emails to which the Appellant refers are not subject to mandatory release under either the FOIA or the DOE contractor records regulation. We shall deny the Appellant's Motion for Reconsideration.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Lewis R. Ireland, Ph.D., on November 2, 1999, Case Number VFA-0535, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)1/ WSRC is the management and operating contractor at DOE's Savannah River site.

(2)PMI's only connection to DOE is a 1995 partnership agreement, which is not the type of agreement which would bring PMI under DOE contractor records regulation, 10 C.F.R. §1004.3. PMI has no contractual connection to WSRC.

(3)Counsel for PMI submitted a letter opposing the Appellant's Motion for Reconsideration. See Letter from Richard A. Goldberg, PMI General Counsel, to Dawn L. Goldstein, Staff Attorney, OHA, and George B. Breznay, Director, OHA (November 17, 1999). In that letter, PMI Counsel noted that the Appellant had not complied with the procedural requirements of 10 C.F.R. § 1003.53 regarding notice to aggrieved parties. It is unnecessary to decide whether that provision applies in this context of a Motion for Reconsideration of a FOIA Decision, because any notice deficiency was cured when PMI received notice of this Motion for Reconsideration from WSRC and DOE and was given an opportunity to respond.

(4)In the Motion, the Appellant also noted other facts which we do not find to be material. He again argued that the responsive emails may contain evidence of a federal crime. As we stated in our prior Decision of this matter, this possibility has no bearing on our FOIA analysis. Second, the Appellant also noted his belief that at the time of the creation of the responsive emails, there was not a formal "shared executive program" between PMI and DOE, contrary to our statement otherwise in the original Decision. But regardless of whether Mr. Reeve was authorized to be conducting PMI business at the time of the responsive emails, the emails were not, in the words of Section 1004.3, "acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract," but instead dealt solely with PMI concerns. Therefore, neither fact would have changed our initial Decision.

(5)However, this server was searched and no responsive records were found. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Dawn L. Goldstein, and James Durkis (November 10, 1999).

In addition, we note that in researching the issues raised by this Appeal, we again confirmed that the emails do not relate to DOE or WSRC in any way. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Dawn L. Goldstein and Daniel Pushkin, Counsel, PMI (November 30, 1999).

December 2, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: November 2, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0536

On November 2, 1999, Barbara Schwarz filed an Appeal from determinations issued by the Department of Energy Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Group (DOE/FOI) and by the Department of Energy's Office of Inspector General (DOE/IG). These determinations responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A). However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA setting forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(B). Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In a request dated June 18, 1999, Ms. Schwarz requested from the DOE records on the following individuals or subjects:

1) As to that the Germans are behind the nuclear weapons and other weapons of nations that are hostile to the United States,

2) As to that the Germans are behind terror acts and wars against the United States or against other countries which the United States want to protect,

3) As to a civilian submarine in the Great Salt Lake, that protects it's [sic] residents from all kind of pollution and germs with the result that people stay young and have currently at least double the lifespan than people not living in this village,

4) As to L. Ron Hubbard and proposed energy programs and environmental programs and nuclear counterintelligence programs proposed by him,

5) As to Claude, Elizabeth, Phillip, Mark C., Harvey L., Edwin, Willard, Olivia Rathbun (de Rothschild) and proposed energy programs, environmental programs and nuclear counterintelligence programs proposed by them,

6) As to myself, Barbara Schwarz or misspelled version Schwartz,

7) As to if Mark C. Rathbun (de Rothschild)[,] members of his family, their attorneys or any Independent or Special Counsel inquired records pertaining to myself from the Dept. of Energy.

Letter from Barbara Schwarz to DOE (June 18, 1999).

On October 20, 1999, DOE/FOI sent a response to Ms. Schwarz. Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI (October 20, 1999). DOE/FOI first stated that it had informed Ms. Schwarz in a July 19, 1999 letter that items 1 and 2 of her request "did not describe the records you were requesting with sufficient specificity for the DOE to conduct a search for responsive documents. This response, therefore, responds to items 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of your request." Id. The response then informed Ms. Schwarz that the files of five offices at Headquarters were searched for documents responsive to your request. These offices were the Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs, the Policy, Standards and Analysis Division in the Office of Safeguards and Security, the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, the Office of Inspector General, and the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation.

Id. DOE/FOI reported that (1) the searches of the first three offices listed produced no documents responsive to items 3 through 7 of her request; (2) DOE/IG has already provided a separate response to Ms. Schwarz; and (3) the search of the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation located only one document, the July 19, 1999 letter to Ms. Schwarz referred to above regarding the lack of specificity of the first two items of her request. Id. That document was provided to Ms. Schwarz in its entirety along with DOE/FOI's October 20, 1999 response.(1)

II. Analysis

Ms. Schwarz's November 2, 1999 Appeal contends that the DOE's search for documents responsive to her request was inadequate. She also takes issue with the DOE/FOI's opinion that items 1 and 2 of her request did not sufficiently describe the records she was seeking. Finally, Ms. Schwarz contends that DOE/FOI ignored her request for a waiver of fees associated with the processing of her FOI request.

A. Ms. Schwarz's Request for a Fee Waiver

The DOE FOIA regulations state that the Department "will charge fees [to FOIA requesters] that recoup the full allowable direct costs incurred" but also state that, with certain exceptions, the "DOE will provide the first 100 pages of duplication and the first two hours of search time without charge." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). In addition, the DOE "will furnish documents without charge or at reduced charges if disclosure of the information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the Government and disclosure is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester." Id. On July 24, 1999, Ms. Schwarz sent to DOE/FOI a request for a waiver of fees associated with the processing of her request. Letter from Barbara Schwarz to Abel Lopez, DOE/FOI (July 24, 1999). In her Appeal, Ms. Schwarz complains that DOE/FOI ignored her fee waiver request in its October 20, 1999 response, and insists that the DOE make a decision on this request. Appeal at 1. We will dismiss this portion of Ms. Schwarz's appeal as moot because Ms. Schwarz does not claim the DOE charged her any fees for processing her request, and DOE/FOI has confirmed that the Department charged Ms. Schwarz no fees. Electronic mail from Sheila Jeter, DOE/FOI, to Steven Goering, OHA (October 10, 1999).

B. Adequacy of DOE's Search for Responsive Documents

Ms. Schwarz makes several arguments regarding the adequacy of the DOE's search for documents responsive to her request. First, the Appellant notes that the DOE/FOI did not conduct a search of all offices of the DOE, as she had specifically requested. Appeal at 1. Second, she states that she requested a "search certificate, a declaration by the officials that conducted the search. . . . I have a right to know who those people are and how they conducted exactly the search to retrieve those records." Id. at 2. Third, she refers to a letter she received from this office dismissing an earlier Appeal she filed after receiving a separate response to her request from DOE/IG. Id. at 3. We stated in that letter that Ms. Schwarz should wait until she received a final response to her request from DOE/FOI before filing an Appeal with our office. Letter from Thomas O. Mann, Deputy Director, OHA, to Barbara Schwarz (September 24, 1999) at 1. We also informed her that DOE/FOI assigned her request to DOE/IG, "as well as to DOE's Office of Management and Administration and the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security for searches." We went on to state that after "examining the documents you submitted, we have suggested that [DOE/FOI] also coordinate searches of DOE's Office of General Counsel, the Executive Secretariat, the Office of Public Affairs and the Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs." Id. Ms. Schwarz wants to know "why weren't those offices searched as it was promised . . . ?" Appeal at 3.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

First, applying the above standard, we cannot agree with Ms. Schwarz that the FOIA requires in the present case a search of every office in the DOE, no matter how small the probability of finding responsive documents. Such would be the epitome of an exhaustive search, far beyond the requirement that a search be reasonably calculated to uncover the materials Ms. Schwarz seeks.(2)

In support of her contention that she was entitled to a "search certificate," the Appellant cites Steinberg v. Department of Justice, 23 F.3d 548 (D.C. Cir. 1994). In that case, a U.S. Court of Appeals reviewed the lower court's granting of summary judgment to the Department of Justice. The Court of Appeals reversed the lower court, finding that the Justice Department had not shown that it had conducted a "reasonably thorough search of its records" because it had not described "in any detail what records were searched, by whom, and through what process." Id. at 551, 552. The Steinberg opinion, however, only addresses the showing an agency is required to make in support of a motion for summary judgment in a U.S. District Court. It does not state that an agency's response to a FOIA request must provide a detailed description of its search. In fact, the FOIA simply requires, without further elaboration, that an agency make a determination in response to a request and "notify the person making such request of such determination and the reasons therefor, and of the right of such person to appeal to the head of the agency any adverse determination; . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). Nor do the DOE FOIA regulations contain such a requirement, stating only, "Although a determination that no such record is known to exist is not a denial, the requester will be informed that a challenge may be made to the adequacy of the search by appealing within 30 calendar days to the Office of Hearings and Appeals." Thus we cannot agree with Ms. Schwarz that the DOE/FOI's response to her request was somehow deficient for not describing in detail the search for responsive documents.

Nonetheless, in order to determine for purposes of the present appeal whether the DOE conducted an adequate search, we have gathered additional information from the various offices responsible for carrying out the search. Initially, because Ms. Schwarz questions in her Appeal whether each of the offices mentioned in our September 24, 1999 letter to her were in fact searched, we sought to clarify to which offices DOE/FOI referred Ms. Schwarz's request. As DOE/FOI stated in its response, it referred the request to the "Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs, the Policy, Standards and Analysis

Division in the Office of Safeguards and Security, the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, the Office of Inspector General, and the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation." Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI (October 20, 1999). Subsequent to Ms. Schwarz filing her appeal, DOE/FOI informed us that it also coordinated searches of the Office of Public Affairs and the Office of Executive Secretariat. Electronic mail from Sheila Jeter, DOE/FOI, to Steven Goering, OHA (October 17, 1999); Electronic mail from Sheila Jeter to Steven Goering (October 10, 1999). Thus, it appears that DOE/FOI in fact coordinated searches of each of the offices mentioned in our September 24, 1999 letter.(3)

1. Office of Safeguards and Security

The Policy, Standards and Analysis Division in the Office of Safeguards and Security provided the following information regarding its search. First, the office's Central Personnel Clearance Index (CPCI) was searched for the names Barbara Schwartz and Barbara Schwarz. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Victor Hawkins, Office of Safeguards and Security, and Steven Goering, OHA (November 18, 1999). The CPCI is an computerized index of individuals who have held or been considered for security clearances. Id. The office also searched clearance documents on microfiche that predate the CPCI. Id. These microfiche documents are maintained in alphabetical order, and were searched under the names Barbara Schwartz and Barbara Schwarz. Id. Finally, a search was conducted of files of office correspondence dating from June 1993 to the present. The office searched these files by subject for correspondence related to the FOIA and Privacy Act. Id. The initial search of documents filed under this subject did not reveal documents that the office believed were responsive to the request. Id. A subsequent search, however, has revealed documents pertaining to L. Ron Hubbard that are arguably responsive to the request, and the Office of Safeguards and Security informs us that it will release these to the requester. Id.

2. Office of Public Affairs and Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs

One DOE management official coordinated the search for responsive documents in the Office of Public Affairs and the Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs. This official informed us that her standard procedure in response to FOIA requests is to send a memorandum to every staff member informing them of the request and asking them to get back to her by a date certain with any responsive documents located. Memorandum of telephone conversation between T.J. Hopkins, Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs, and Steven Goering, OHA (November 18, 1999). In the present case, no documents were located.

3. Office of Executive Secretariat

The official at DOE/FOI who coordinated the DOE's overall search also conducted a search of the DOE's Office of Executive Secretariat. Documents in this office are indexed in the Document On Line Coordination System (DOCS) system. The DOE/FOI official searched this system using the names of the individuals mentioned in Ms. Schwartz's request. This search only located one document, Ms. Schwarz's original FOIA request.

4. Office of Inspector General

After we contacted the DOE/IG regarding the present appeal, the office conducted a new search to confirm the results of its earlier search that found no responsive documents. Electronic mail from Jacqueline Becker, DOE/IG, to Steven Goering, OHA (October 19, 1999). We were informed that DOE/IG documents are maintained by three offices, the Office of Investigations, Office of Audits, and the Office of Inspections. Id. Each office has a computerized database in which any information maintained in a particular file can be retrieved electronically, and each office conducted computer database searches using the following keywords: Schwarz, Schwartz, Germans, Great Salt Lake, L Ron Hubbard, Hubbard, Eisenhower, Nazi, de Rothschild, and Rathbun. Id. These searches yielded no responsive documents. Id. The offices again distributed the request to DOE/IG Management, Directors and Team Leaders. Id. Upon their review, none recalled any cases or information concerning the individuals or subject matter mentioned above. Id. Finally, the Office of Audits manually reviewed all DOE OIG semiannual reports from 1982 to present with regard to the above- mentioned subject-matter. Id. This review also yielded no responsive documents. Id.

5. Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services

The Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services informed us that it searched the following files and records for the names of Barbara Schwarz or Barbara Schwartz: Senior Executive Performance Appraisal Records (based on career and non-career executive personnel data) in the Executive and Technical Resource Division; Lending Library files and records in the Career Resource Management Center; Computer database, office files and old office records in the Employment and Classification Division; Medical records and files, performance, conduct, leave, and family-friendly records and requests (e.g., leave transfer) in the Employee and Labor Relations Division. Electronic mail from Marilyn Greene, Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, to Steven Goering, OHA. The office also performed a name search of the Corporate Human Resources Information System (CHRIS) and a name search of the Department of Energy Information Database (DOEInfo). Id. No records or files were found for the names Barbara Schwarz or Barbara Schwartz. Id.

6. Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation

The attorney responsible for conducting a search of the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation told us that he first checked to see if his office had any litigation pending that might relate to the subpoenas referenced in her request. Electronic mail from Dow Davis, Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation, to Steven Goering, OHA (November 22, 1999). This revealed no responsive information. Id. He then asked a document control specialist in the office to conduct a computer search of two databases that track the office's correspondence, using the names and subjects referenced in Ms. Schwarz's request. Id. As noted above, this search yielded only a copy of the July 19, 1999 letter from DOE/FOI to Ms. Schwarz.

Based on the above descriptions, we conclude that the searches of the Office of Public Affairs, Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs, Office of Inspector General, and the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation were reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by Ms. Schwarz. Though there was not one uniform search method used, each office clearly made a thorough and conscientious effort to locate all responsive documents it might have, either by notifying employees of the request and asking them to provide responsive documents or by searching computerized document tracking systems, and in some cases by using both methods.

Similar methods were employed by both the Office of Safeguards and Security and the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services. We note, however, that the Office of Safeguards and Security limited its subject search to one subject (FOIA and Privacy Act) and both offices apparently limited their name searches to only that of Ms. Schwarz. For this reason, we find that these searches were reasonably calculated to locate some of the records sought by the requester, but clearly not all of them. We therefore will remand this matter to DOE/FOI to coordinate further searches of these two offices. For guidance in conducting a more thorough search, we suggest that these offices refer to the subject matter and name searches used by DOE/IG in its search, which we discuss in detail above.

C. Adequacy of Ms. Schwarz's Description of Documents Requested

The first two items of Ms. Schwarz's June 18, 1999 request sought records "[a]s to that the Germans are behind the nuclear weapons and other weapons of nations that are hostile to the United States," and "[a]s to that the Germans are behind terror acts and wars against the United States or against other countries which the United States want to protect, . . ." Letter from Barbara Schwarz to DOE (June 18, 1999). In a July 19, 1999 letter to Ms. Schwarz, DOE/FOI stated,

The DOE regulation that implements the FOIA provides, at 10 CFR 1004.4(c)(1), that a request "must enable the Department to identify and locate the records sought by a process that is not unreasonably burdensome or disruptive of DOE operations." The regulations further states that, where possible, specific information regarding dates, titles, file designations, offices to be searched, and other information that may help identify the records should be supplied by the requester.

We have determined that items 1 and 2 of your request do not reasonably describe the records you are seeking. Please provide more specific information that identify the particular documents to which you seek access so the appropriate programs can be searched for records responsive to the request. For example, you should identify those countries that you consider ?hostile' to the United States and that the United States wants to ?protect.'

Letter from Abel Lopez, DOE/FOI, to Barbara Schwarz (July 19, 1999).

Ms. Schwarz responded to DOE/FOI's July 19, 1999 letter by providing the following details as to the information she was seeking:

There is Saddam Hussein in Iraq. Do you have any indication as to that the Germans secretly set him up to any of his Anti-American hostilities? Do you have any record hereto?

Same goes for Osama Bin Laden.

Same goes for Iran.

Same goes for China.

Same goes for Libya. You must know that the Germans build [sic] in this decade secretly chemical weapons plants in Lybia, by knowing that Ghadafi targeted the United States. Do you have any records hereto?

As to my observations there are German programs that target the United States, it's [sic] moral and it's [sic] finances, and the lifes [sic] of U.S. citizens by getting them involved in actions of war. E.g., two countries start to fight, e.g. Israel and Palestine, or India and Pakistan, Iran and Iraq, Iraq and Kuwait, Russia and Afghanistan, Serbs against Bosnians and Albanians, etc., with the purpose that sooner or later the United States have to move in to restore peace and human rights. Do you have any records hereto?

Do you have any records to that the former war between Iran and Iraq was a set up so that Iraq would get secret information on U.S. weapons, which Iraq would then use in a war against the U.S. to defeat the U.S. and that this was set up secretly by the Germans?

Do you have any records as to that the Germans set up the Chinese secretly to spy out U.S. weapons?

Do you have any records that the Germans have plans to set up a war between China, any other country and the United States?

Letter from Barbara Schwarz to DOE/FOI (July 24, 1999).

We understand the position of DOE/FOI expressed in its October 20, 1999 response that, even with the additional information provided by Ms. Schwarz, the first two items of her request leave ambiguities that need to be resolved before DOE should undertake a search for responsive documents. For example, Ms. Schwarz does not indicate whether her use of the term "Germans" refers to the German government or individual Germans, or both. Nor is it clear whether she is seeking documents related to activities of the "Germans" during a specified period of time. By providing these examples, we in no way imply that Ms. Schwarz should be required to narrow the scope of her request. However, even a request for a broad scope of documents must be clear enough for the agency to determine what documents are being requested.

Yeager v. DEA, 678 F.2d 315, 322, 326 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (holding valid request encompassing over 1,000,000 computerized records: "The linchpin inquiry is whether the agency is able to determine ? precisely what records [are] being requested'" (quoting S. Rep. No. 854, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 12 (1974)). Thus, on remand, DOE/FOI should "invite the requester to confer with knowledgeable DOE personnel" in an attempt to clarify Ms. Schwarz's description of the documents she is seeking in items 1 and 2 of her request. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(c)(2).

For the reasons explained above, we will grant Ms. Schwarz's Appeal to the extent that we will remand this matter to DOE/FOI to coordinate a further search for responsive documents as described above. In all other respects, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0536, is granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Group for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(1)Ms. Schwarz apparently misunderstood DOE/FOI's October 20 letter as stating that the one document located in the search of the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation had been sent to her along with DOE/FOI's July 19, 1999 letter to her. Appeal at 2. We sought clarification from DOE/FOI, who informed us that the document located by that search was the July 19, 1999 letter. Electronic mail from Sheila Jeter, DOE/FOI, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (October 10, 1999).

(2)Ms. Schwarz also misreads the FOIA when she claims that she has "a right for [sic] two hours free search time and 100 copies of free document[s] from each of the offices of the Department of Energy." Appeal at 1. The statute simply provides that "[n]o fee may be charged by any agency under this section . . . for the first two hours of search time or for the first one hundred pages of duplication." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iv). This simply means, for example, that the DOE may not charge for the first two hours of its search. It does not mean that the first two hours of the search of each DOE office is free. And the statute certainly does not require an agency (let alone each office within an agency) to expend a specified amount of its resources (e.g., spend two hours on each search) in response to a FOIA request.

(3)Two offices we mentioned in our September 24, 1999 letter, the Policy, Standards and Analysis Division in the Office of Safeguards and Security, and the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, are offices within two of the offices searched, the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security and the Office of Management and Administration, respectively. We apologize to Ms. Schwarz for any confusion created by our September 24, 1999 letter.

November 24, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:STAND, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0537

Serious Texans Against Nuclear Dumping, Inc. (STAND) files this Appeal in response to a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque). The determination deals with a request that STAND submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its Appeal, STAND requests the release of material responsive to its request. As explained below, we will remand the request for further processing.

BACKGROUND

STAND requested from Albuquerque a copy of a document called the "Baseline Risk Assessment" (the Assessment). The objective of the Assessment is "to analyze the Pantex Plant site conditions in the absence of remedial action and to provide human health and environmental baseline data to be used in alternative remedial action evaluation."(1)

Albuquerque responded that it would not release any of the Assessment, claiming it was protected from release by the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5). STAND then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals.

EXEMPTION 5

The FOIA generally requires that all federal agency records be made available to the public, subject to certain specified exemptions. The Act provides, however, for nine categories of records that are exempt from mandatory disclosure. At issue in this case is Exemption 5 of the FOIA, which exempts "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). This provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958)).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In addition to providing categories of records exempt from mandatory disclosure, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

ALBUQUERQUE'S DETERMINATION LETTER

In its determination letter issued to STAND, Albuquerque explained its rationale for withholding as follows:

The document you are requesting is, indeed, in draft form and is currently in the process of being finalized. Therefore, this document is being withheld in its entirety pursuant to ... Exemption 5 of the FOIA which permits the withholding of predecisional information....

Current reviews between Texas Natural Resources Conservation Commission and the U.S. Department of Energy ... have involved extensive revisions. Premature release of this draft would have a chilling effect on the deliberative process being used in finalizing this document as it would likely inhibit creative thoughts and candid expression of ideas within the organizations involved, thereby undermining these organizations' abilities to perform their functions. After all reviews are complete, this document will be finalized and a copy will be placed in the DOE Reading Room in Amarillo, Texas.

The ... DOE regulations provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall be released regardless of their exempt status, unless the DOE determines that disclosure is contrary to public interest. For the reasons described above, I have determined that release of this information is not in the public interest.

CONCLUSION

The Determination Letter did not address the issues of whether the Assessment contains any releasable factual matter. Accordingly, we will remand this case to Albuquerque. On remand, Albuquerque shall review the withheld documents and segregate and release all factual portions of the Assessment, or issue a new determination that justifies their withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by STAND, Inc. on November 3, 1999, (Case No. VFA-0537) is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is remanded to Albuquerque Operations Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions provided in this Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

December 16, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: The Valley Times

Case Number: VFA-0538

On November 17, 1999, The Valley Times (The Times), a newspaper located in Pleasanton, California, completed the filing of an Appeal from a determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on October 6, 1999. In that determination, Albuquerque denied in part requests for information that The Times filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In its FOIA requests, The Times asked for the names and salaries of all Sandia National Laboratories (SNL) employees, and the numbers of employees at SNL's California site whose salaries fall within each of the following ranges: $0 to $25,000; $25,001 to $50,000; $50,001 to $100,000; $100,001 to $150,000; and over $150,000. SNL is operated for the DOE by Sandia Corporation, which is a subsidiary of Lockheed Martin Company.(1) In its October 6, 1999 response, Albuquerque identified as responsive to The Times' request Sandia Corporation's Report of Compensation, dated March 26, 1999. Sandia Corporation submitted this Report to the DOE in accordance with DOE Order 350.1, Contractor Human Resources Management Program, for contractor employee compensation information. Albuquerque released portions of this document to The Times, including the numbers of all Sandia Corporation employees whose salaries fall within the specified ranges, and a listing of all salaries in excess of $80,000. However, Albuquerque withheld information pertaining to employees' names, occupational codes and job titles pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4), (b)(6). In its Appeal, The Times contests Albuquerque's application of these Exemptions.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information which is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n. v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government involuntarily is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (i) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information that is provided to an agency voluntarily is considered "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. As previously stated, the Report of Compensation was submitted in compliance with a DOE Order. It was therefore involuntarily submitted, and we will employ the National Parks test in determining whether Albuquerque properly applied Exemption 4. It is undisputed that the withheld information is "commercial" in nature, and that it was submitted by a "person," as that term is used in Exemption 4. There is no claim that the withheld data are privileged in nature; therefore, unless it is "confidential," the information may not be withheld under this Exemption.

In its Appeal, The Times disputes Albuquerque's finding that the withheld information is confidential because its release would cause substantial harm to Sandia Corporation's competitive position. The Times argues that Sandia Corporation is a "government-funded institution" that competes for funding "primarily with other government-funded laboratories and universities, most of which release salary information on a regular basis." Appeal at 1. The Times concludes that release of the information would not result in a competitive disadvantage for Sandia Corporation. We do not agree. As an initial matter, we are not convinced by The Times' unsupported assertions concerning the practices of other laboratories. Moreover, we believe this is the type of information typically kept confidential by private concerns. Release of the withheld names and job codes would inform competitors and other technology-based companies of the salary levels of specific Sandia Corporation employees, thereby making it easier to hire them away. Losing highly qualified employees could damage Sandia Corporation's ability to meet its current contractual obligations or to compete for future government contracts. See, e.g., Glen M. Jameson, 26 DOE ¶ 80,236 (1997). We find that Albuquerque properly applied Exemption 4 in this case.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at

Applying these standards to the facts of this case, we believe that the individuals named in the report have a significant interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their employment status and salary level. Unlike federal government employees, whose names, job titles, work stations and salaries must be released under the FOIA (see 5 C.F.R. § 293.311), private sector employees have a reasonable expectation of privacy concerning the identity of their employers and the amounts of money that they are being paid. See Sowell (disclosure of names, social security numbers, or addresses of government contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); see also Sheet Metal Workers v. Department of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3rd Cir. 1998); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Therefore, we find that there is a significant privacy interest in the identities of contractor employees and their salaries.

Next, we do not believe that release of this information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations of the federal government. Although the data might provide insights into Sandia Corporation's workforce composition and employment practices, Sandia Corporation is not a government agency, but is instead, as previously stated, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Lockheed Martin Company. The Times argues that because Sandia Corporation receives government funding and performs a vital function, it should be considered a government agency for purposes of the FOIA. We do not agree. The federal government contracts with a large number of private entities to provide a variety of important, and sometimes vital, goods and services. The Times' argument, if carried to its logical conclusion, would largely erase the distinction between government agencies and these private entities. The FOIA does not require such a result.

Because there is a significant privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of the withheld information, and because it does not shed light on the operations of government, release of the Sandia Corporation employees' names and salaries would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Albuquerque correctly applied Exemption 6 in withholding this information. For the reasons set forth above, we will therefore deny The Times' Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by The Valley Times, Case No. VFA-0538, on November 17, 1999, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0539, 27 DOE ¶ 80,250

December 23, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: STAND, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0539

On November 19, 1999, STAND, Inc. (Serious Texans Against Nuclear Dumping) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it in response to a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on October 28, 1999 by the Albuquerque Operations Office (AL). This Appeal, if granted, would require that AL release responsive documents and grant STAND a fee waiver.

I. Background

STAND is a nonprofit, tax-exempt regional environmental and public policy citizens' group. On May 6, 1999, STAND submitted a FOIA request to AL for a copy of all news releases from DOE's Amarillo Area Office and its contractors between January 1, 1951 and May 3, 1999. In that letter, STAND also requested that AL waive all processing fees. Letter from STAND to FOIA Officer, AL (May 6, 1999). AL then informed STAND that without specific reasons why a fee waiver would be appropriate, AL was unable to make a determination on waiving fees for the request. Letter from AL to STAND (July 27, 1999). AL explained that the search costs would be substantial, due to the lengthy search required and the many pages of responsive records that could be released. Id. STAND responded with further information to justify the request for a fee waiver. Letter from STAND to AL (August 6, 1999) (Justification Letter). On September 30, 1999, AL denied the fee waiver, stating that the request was not likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. According to AL, the media had decided which releases were in the public interest, and had already published stories about those releases. Letter from AL to STAND (September 30, 1999) (Determination). AL told STAND that it could not process the request further without an agreement to pay processing costs. (1) STAND did not reply, and AL closed the file. Letter from AL to STAND (October 28, 1999). On November 19, 1999, STAND filed this Appeal requesting that AL waive all processing fees on its FOIA request. Letter from STAND to Director, OHA (November 19, 1999) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees for the processing of their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, it provides a two-pronged test for agencies to use in considering whether to waive fees. The two prongs can be summarized as the "public interest prong" and the "commercial interest" prong. See Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1998) (Murphy). The public interest prong requires an examination of whether disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(4)(A)(iii). The commercial interest prong asks whether the request is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. Id. The requester bears the burden of satisfying the two-prong test for a fee waiver. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997) (Ott).

In order to determine whether the requester meets the first prong (i.e., whether disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities) the DOE considers four factors:

(A) The subject of the request: whether the subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;

(B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure;

(D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8)(i). A requester who satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong must then address the second prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his or her commercial interest. See Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,199 (1997).

Also, I have determined that your request is not likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operation and activities of the government. News releases are given to the local press and those "experts" decide what is in the public interest in Amarillo and print what is of interest; thus putting the majority of the information requested in the public domain. . . . The information in your letter [of August 6, 1999] does not convince me that other news release information not in the public domain already would contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; therefore, your request does not meet the requirements for a fee waiver.

Determination Letter at 1. Thus, AL concluded that STAND failed to satisfy Factor D, and based its determination on that conclusion. In addition, in response to OHA's request for comments on the Appeal, the Office of the Chief Counsel at AL concurred in the FOIA Officer's denial and concluded that STAND did not provide sufficient justification to satisfy any of the factors. Memorandum from Jake Chavez, AL Office of Chief Counsel, to AL FOIA Officer (December 8, 1999).

Factor A

STAND alleges that the requested information concerns activities of the federal government because the Pantex Nuclear Weapons Plant is a federal facility, even though it has been operated by independent contractors since 1951. Justification Letter at 1. According to STAND, Pantex is an integral part of the nation's nuclear posture and national security strategy. We have reviewed copies of recent press releases, and find that they provide information about Pantex operations. The releases often contain quotes from Pantex executives and give the general public information about events and occurrences at the plant. AL argues that because the contractor has its own management and operating structure, press releases from the plant only describe activities of the contractor. We disagree. The plant is owned by a federal agency, and is considered part of the federal nuclear weapons complex. The general public views events occurring at Pantex and the other nuclear weapons plants as government activities and not merely the operations of a private company. Thus we find that STAND has satisfied the requirement of Factor A.

Factor B

The focus of this factor is on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Ott; Seehuus Associates, 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) (Seehuus). As we stated in Seehuus, "[i]f the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate." AL contends that the material has already been released, and is in the public domain. We acknowledge that the information in those recent releases that were chosen by the media for publication is in the public domain. Nonetheless, "the mere fact that particular records have been released to other requesters does not mean that the information contained in the records is readily available to the public." Compare Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 815 (2d Cir. 1994) with Friends of the Coast Fork v. United States Dep't of the Interior, 110 F.3d 53, 55 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that availability in an agency's public reading room does not necessarily justify denial of fee waiver). It is likely that the information contained in older press releases is not readily available to the interested public today. Therefore, we find that STAND has satisfied Factor B.

Factor C

This test requires us to consider whether the requested documents would contribute to the understanding of the subject by the public. Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780. To satisfy this factor, the requester must have the ability and intention to disseminate this information to the public. Id; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992).

We find that STAND has provided sufficient evidence of its ability and intention to disseminate this information to the public. The organization provided us a copy of its newsletter, the Nuclear Examiner, which it states is distributed to over 2,000 people. STAND also holds news conferences several times a year, operates a library available to the public, gives interviews to local television stations and newspapers, and distributes press releases. Justification Letter at 2-3. STAND gave us copies of several print articles with references to the organization and its program director, copies of press releases, and an article written by its program director. Therefore, we find that STAND has satisfied the Factor C test.

Factor D

In order to satisfy the requirements of Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 381 (1995)); see also Seehuus.

STAND argues that disclosure of the press releases is likely to contribute to an understanding of the operations and activities of the government. STAND contends that Pantex has a history of secrecy in its public affairs operations that has resulted in misperceptions of its safety record, environmental legacy, and impact on the region. Justification Letter at 2. According to STAND, "[a]nalysis of the Pantex public relations program, by focusing on its news releases over time, will substantially help people understand the validity of past and present statements concerning Pantex's impacts on their health, safety, and the environment." Id. STAND argues that the requested information is critical to raising the level of the public's understanding of Pantex operations because STAND, as a "nuclear watchdog group," provides information to counterbalance the often inaccurate press releases emanating from Pantex. Justification Letter at 3. As an example, STAND refers to a 1998 Pantex press release stating that workers followed standard procedures during disassembly operations that resulted in a fire. Pantex Plant News Release, "Weapons, Personnel In No Danger During Small Fire" (Dec. 30, 1998). However, after an investigation, DOE recommended a penalty for violations of nuclear safety requirements relating to the fire. Pantex Plant News Release, "DOE Issues Preliminary Notice of Violation" (September 23, 1999). According to STAND, this demonstrates that press releases are often inaccurate, those inaccuracies may go uncorrected for a long period of time, and the public can be lulled into a false sense of security about the plant's safety. STAND has requested copies of the original Pantex press releases in order to "dissolve public myths about past Pantex operations, and to further the debate on the role of federal agencies and their contractors in shaping public opinion." Justification Letter at 3.

We find that the release of past press releases would significantly enhance the public's level of understanding of the credibility of information that Pantex releases to the public. (2) As noted above, STAND has provided us with information that reflects serious inaccuracies in the press releases distributed by Pantex's public affairs organization.(3) See also The Nuclear Examiner at 5 (June 1999) (Pantex redefined a public description of its plutonium pits). Moreover, the group has proven its commitment to providing the community with accurate information about the operations of the Pantex nuclear weapons plant. Therefore, we find that STAND has satisfied the test for Factor D.

Having determined that STAND has satisfied the regulatory fee waiver requirements discussed above, we find that STAND should be granted a fee waiver regarding its May 6, 1999 FOIA request.(4) Accordingly, we shall grant this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by STAND, Inc. on November 19, 1999 (Case Number VFA-0539) is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) The fees assessed for complying with STAND's May 6, 1999 FOIA request shall be waived in full.

(1)AL has provided STAND with copies of recent (within the past two years) press releases. Memorandum from R. O'Dowd, AL Office of Chief Counsel, to C. Becknell, AL FOIA Officer (December 8, 1999).

(2)We reject AL's argument that the press releases that were not published as news stories do not contain information in the public interest. Memorandum from Ron O'Dowd, AL to Carol Becknell, AL (December 9, 1999). There are many reasons that a newspaper could decide not to publish a story from a press release, and we have no evidence that those decisions are based on the public interest.

(3)Although conclusory statements will not support a fee waiver request, the regulations do not require that the requester provide a certain amount or particular type of information to justify the significance to the public of the information sought. See Pederson v. Resolution Trust Corporation, 847 F. Supp. 851, 855

(D.Colo. 1994) (quoting McClellan Ecological Seepage Situation v. Carlucci, 835 F.2d 1282, 1284 (9th Cir. 1987)).

(4)AL contends that the required search would be burdensome. However, the fee waiver standards do not permit consideration of these concerns with regard to whether a fee waiver should be granted to a requester. See Government Accountability Project, 25 DOE ¶ 80,203 at 80,762 n.2. Nonetheless, we strongly encourage STAND to honor its repeated offers to work with AL to narrow the scope of the search and reduce processing time and costs. Justification Letter at 1; Appeal at 4.

December 20, 1999

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: TIC Holdings, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0540

On November 19, 1999, TIC Holdings, Inc. (TIC) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Management Office (SPR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on October 19, 1999. In its determination, SPR informed TIC that records responsive to its request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004 were not agency records but instead belonged to DynMcDermott Petroleum Operations Company (DynMcDermott), the management and operating contractor for the DOE's Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Thus the responsive documents were not subject to the FOIA. (1) Consequently, SPR did not provide a copy of the responsive documents to TIC. This Appeal, if granted, would require SPR to release the information it withheld.

Background

In a March 30, 1999 request for information (Request), TIC, through its counsel, Smith, Pachter, McWhorter and D'Ambriosio, P.L.C., requested copies of documents relating to two specific Strategic Petroleum Reserve Life Extension projects at the Strategic Petroleum Reserve's Big Hill and Bayou Choctaw sites. (2) After subsequent discussions with SPR officials, SPR provided Smith with an index of files (Index) which could contain responsive documents and asked Smith to select from the Index those files it wanted searched. Smith subsequently provided SPR with a list of the files from which it was requesting documents. On July 7, 1999, SPR issued a determination letter (Determination Letter) releasing copies of various documents. SPR's July 7 Determination Letter withheld Summary & Bid Item Sheets (cost summaries) created by unsuccessful competitors for the two Life Extension projects. TIC subsequently appealed the SPR's July 7 Determination Letter. In a September 1, 1999 Decision, we remanded the matter to SPR so that it could issue a more detailed, adequate response to TIC's Request. See Smith, Pachter, McWhorter and D'Ambriosio, P.L.C., 27 DOE ¶ 80,228 (1999). On October 19, 1999, SPR issued another determination letter regarding TIC's Request. In the October 19 Determination Letter, SPR found that the cost summaries were not "agency" records and thus were not subject to the FOIA. In response, TIC filed this Appeal. TIC argues that according to the provisions of the Department of Energy's Acquisition Regulations (DEAR), the withheld documents are the property of the Department of Energy and as such are subject to the FOIA. (3)

Analysis

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis the courts have fashioned for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as DynMcDermott, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997) (LASG). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See LASG, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). In making the determination whether an entity is an agency for purposes of the FOIA, the Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 & n. 11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, the DOE does not supervise DynMcDermott's day-to-day operations. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Deanna Harvey, SPR, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (December 9, 1999). We therefore conclude that DynMcDermott is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

Although DynMcDermott is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, its records relevant to the Appellant's request could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time the Appellant made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In this case, none of the potentially responsive documents was in the DOE's control or possession at the time of the Appellant's request. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Deanna Harvey, SPR, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (December 9, 1999). Based on these facts, the documents clearly do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46. (4)

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the documents in question are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

I. 103. DEAR 970.5204-79 - ACCESS TO AND OWNERSHIP OF RECORDS (JUN 1997)

(a) Government's Records. Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the Contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the Contractor either as the Contracting Officer may from time to time direct during the process of the work, or in any event, as the Contracting Officer shall direct upon completion or termination of the contract.

(b) Contractor's Own Records. The following records are considered the property of the Contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) of this clause.

(3) Records relating to any procurement action by the Contractor, except for records that under 48 C.F.R. (DEAR) 970.5204-9 Accounts, records, and Inspection, are described as the property of the Government . . . .

(c) Contract completion or termination. In the event of completion or termination of this contract, copies of any of the Contractor-owned records identified in paragraph (b) of this clause, upon the request of the Government, shall be delivered to the DOE or its designees, including successor contractors. Upon delivery, title to such records shall vest in DOE or its designees, and such records shall be protected in accordance with applicable federal laws (including the Privacy Act) as appropriate.

Our examination of the cost summaries indicates that they are related to DynMcDermott's procurement of services and material for the SPR Life Extension Program. The provisions of Paragraph I.103 therefore dictate that these records are contractor records and not government records. Thus, we find that the cost summaries are not DOE records for the purposes of 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e).

We reach this finding notwithstanding the two arguments asserted by TIC. First, TIC argues that paragraph (b) of DEAR Section 970.5204-79 gives the contracting officer discretion to identify which categories of documents are contractor documents. (6) Further, paragraph (b) of this section does not mandate which categories of documents be deemed contractor records in a DOE contract. TIC goes on to assert that DOE failed to specify in its determination letter which DEAR contractor records provisions the contracting officer inserted in the contract between DOE and DynMcDermott. November 18, 1999 Appeal Letter from Kit L. Kramer, Senior Attorney, TIC, to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals, at 3. Thus, TIC believes that the cost summaries may have been designated as government records by the provisions of the DOE-DynMcDermott contract. Second, TIC points out that paragraph (c) of DEAR Section 970.5204-79 provides that when contractor records are delivered to DOE they become the property of the DOE. TIC asserts that the cost summaries have been delivered to DOE and consequently the cost summaries are now DOE records. As discussed below, we find both of these arguments to be without merit.

With regard to TIC's first argument, Paragraph I.103(b) of the contract provides that records relating to procurement actions by DynMcDermott are deemed contractor property. The cost summaries themselves relate to bid pricing information from unsuccessful bidders for the SPR Life Extension projects. Consequently, as discussed earlier, we believe that pursuant to the DOE-DynMcDermott contract, the cost summaries are DynMcDermott-owned documents. With respect to the second argument, paragraph (c) of DEAR Section 970.5204-79 (which is incorporated verbatim in Paragraph I.103(c) of the DOE-DynMcDermott contract) is only operative when the contract between the DOE and the contract is completed or terminated. In the present case, the contract between DOE and DynMcDermott is currently on-going. Further, we have been informed by a contracting official at SPR that the SPR contracting officer has not requested possession of any of the cost summaries. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Anne Quern, Contracting Specialist, SPR, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA. (December 8, 1999). Consequently, neither DEAR Section 970.5204-79 nor Paragraph I.103 of the DOE-DynMcDermott contract has transferred title of the cost summaries to the government.

In sum, the cost summaries were not in the control or possession of DOE at the time of TIC's Request. Further, the cost summaries are not DOE records but are DynMcDermott-owned records. As such, they are not subject to the FOIA. Therefore, TIC’s appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by TIC Holdings, Inc., on November 19, 1999, Case No. VFA-0540, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S. C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: December 20, 1999

(1)In its October 19 Determination Letter, SPR also cited Exemptions 3 and 4 as justifying withholding the documents in the event the withheld documents are considered to be agency records.

(2)The projects are part of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Life Extension Program, which seeks to upgrade or replace most major systems in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve by the year 2000, and to streamline Strategic Petroleum Reserve facilities to reduce operating and maintenance costs.

(3)TIC also argued that the cost summaries are not protected by Exemption 3 or 4. Because we find that the cost summaries are not agency records and thus are not subject to the FOIA, we need not decide on the applicability of Exemptions 3 and 4 to these documents. Additionally, TIC argued that it had still not been given an adequate description of the withheld documents. In this regard, TIC is further advised that the cost summaries consist of two documents that contain bid pricing information created by two unsuccessful bidders for the Life Extension projects.

(4)We note that the fact that SPR subsequently obtained possession of the cost summaries for the purpose of responding to TIC's Request does not make the cost summaries under SPR's control for FOIA purposes. A document must be in the agency's control at the time of a FOIA request. See Tax Analysts , 492 U.S. at 145; Sangre de Cristo Animal Protection, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,121 at 80,551 (1995)

(5)Section 970.5204-9 of the DEAR referenced in paragraph (b)(3) of the DOE-DynMcDermott contract refers to government ownership of records relating to "financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents and other data evidencing costs allowable, revenues, and other applicable credits" pertaining to a contract. See DEAR Section 970.5204-9(d). None of the withheld documents relate to DOE-DynMcDermott contract accounts.

(6)DEAR Section 970.5204-79 is a form contract clause. Portions of this section of the DEAR were inserted verbatim in Paragraph I.103 of the DOE-DynMcDermott contract. This section also provides a list of form contract clauses to be used by the contracting officer in a contract to describe which categories of documents may be deemed contractor property.

January 5, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Robert A. Speir

Date of Filing:December 7, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0541

On December 7, 1999, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Appeal filed by Robert A. Speir appealing a determination by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Inspector General (the IG). (1) That determination was issued by the IG on November 4, 1999 in response to a request for information submitted by Speir in accordance with the provisions of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the IG to release any responsive documents it is withholding.

I. Background

The request sought access to documents containing information about the following four items:

(1) Copies of all records given to any member of Congress or congressional committee related to Speir's receipt of a cash award from the Project on Government Oversight;

(2) All internal records related to DOE consideration of the requests by members of Congress for materials, documents and records related to Speir's receipt of a cash award from the Project on Government Oversight, and also records related to any DOE review regarding the appropriateness of the award;

(3) Records relating to Speir's receipt of a cash award from the Project on Government Oversight provided to the Department of Justice or any other element of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government; and

(4) Copies of records of any contact with members of the press as related to this award.

On November 4, 1999, the IG issued a determination letter withholding an unknown quantity of responsive documents in their entirety under FOIA Exemption 7(A). (2)

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9).

The only exemption at issue in the present case is found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(a) (1994 & Supp. II 1996). Exemption 7(A) authorizes the withholding of "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that production of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings. " Id.

The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, i.e., as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982); William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996) (Payne). In order to withhold information under Exemption 7, an organization must have statutory authority to enforce a violation of a law or regulation within its authority. Church of Scientology v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 748 (9th Cir. 1979) (remanding to Naval Investigative Service to show that investigation involved enforcement of statute or regulation within its authority).

The IG is such an organization. The IG is charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud, or abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. app. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), (d), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). Accordingly, we have consistently found that the IG compiles information for law enforcement purposes within the meaning of Exemption 7. Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); Keci Corporation, 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1997). The courts have similarly found that the Inspector General's offices in other agencies exercise the requisite law enforcement functions to protect their investigatory files under Exemption 7. E.g., Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Therefore, we find that the documents at issue in this case satisfy the threshold test for application of Exemption 7.

Determining the applicability of Exemption 7(A) in particular requires a two-step analysis focusing on: (1) whether a law enforcement proceeding is pending or prospective; and (2) whether release of information about it could reasonably be expected to cause some articulable harm to the pending enforcement proceeding. See Miller v. USDA, 13 F.3d 260, 263 (8th Cir. 1993)(agency must make a specific showing of why disclosure of documents could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings); Crooker v. ATF, 789 F.2d 64, 65-67 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (agency had failed to demonstrate that disclosure would interfere with enforcement proceedings); Grasso v. IRS, 785 F.2d 70, 77 (3rd Cir. 1986) ("government must show, by more than conclusory statement, how the particular kinds of investigatory records requested would interfere with a pending enforcement proceeding").

In applying these standards in the past, the courts have found that agencies are not required to make a particularized, case-by-case showing of interference with their investigations. Rather, a generic determination of likely interference is sufficient. See Murray, Jacobs & Abel, 25 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1995) (Murray); NRLB v. Robbins Tire and Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 224 (1978); Crancer v. United States Dep't of Justice, 999 F.2d 1302, 1306 (8th Cir. 1993). It is important to note that even though an agency "need not justify its withholding on a document-by-document basis in court, [it] must itself review each document to determine the category in which it properly belongs." Bevis v. United States Dep't of State, 801 F.2d 1386, 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Bevis). Thus, when an agency elects to use the "generic" approach, it "has a three-fold task. First, it must define its categories functionally. Second, it must conduct a document-by-document review in order to assign the documents to the proper category. Finally, it must explain how the release of each category would interfere with enforcement proceedings." Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389-90; Murray, 25 DOE at 80,576.

Both the statute and the DOE's FOIA regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for any withholdings. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). A reasonably specific justification of a withholding allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Turning to the present appeal, we find that the IG has failed to provide a sufficient justification of its withholdings under Exemption 7(A). The IG's determination letter does not provide any description of the documents it is withholding. As a result, we are unable to determine how release of the withheld information could reasonably be expected to interfere with the investigation.

Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to the IG. On remand, the IG should release the withheld information, withhold it under an alternative FOIA exemption, or issue a new determination letter which includes a description of the withheld documents that is sufficient to provide a reviewer with an opportunity to grasp how disclosure of the documents could reasonably be expected to interfere with an on-going investigation.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Robert A. Speir on December 7, 1999, Case Number VFA-0541, is hereby granted in part and remanded to the Office of Inspector General which shall promptly implement the instructions set forth above.

(2) The portion of the Appeal concerning the timeliness of DOE's response to Speir's FOIA requests is dismissed.

(3) The Appeal is denied in all other aspects.

(1) Apparently, several other DOE offices are conducting separate searches for documents responsive to Speir's requests. The determination letter issued by the IG, and our review of the present Appeal, concern only the IG's withholdings under Exemption 7(A) of those responsive documents in its possession.

(2) Speir's Appeal also challenges the timeliness of DOE's response to his FOIA requests. However, this office does not have jurisdiction to consider Appeals concerning the timeliness of the agency's response to FOIA requests. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Accordingly, we will dismiss that portion of the present appeal concerning the timeliness of DOE's response to Speir's FOIA requests.

January 10, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: American Friends Service Committee

Case Number: VFA-0542

On December 10, 1999, American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Office of Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on November 3, 1999. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by AFSC pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, the OIG would be required to release the withheld portion of one document.

Background

On June 13, 1997, and March 3, 1998, AFSC submitted a FOIA request for "all documentation from 1969 to the present which addresses the deposit, presence and/or impact of radioactive materials at the Industrial Excess Landfill site in Uniontown, Ohio." Request Letter date June 13, 1997, from Gregory D. Coleridge, Director, AFSC, to Chief, FOIA/PA Branch, DOE (Request Letter); Letter dated March 3, 1998, from Gregory D. Coleridge, Director, AFSC, to Abel Lopez, Acting Director, FOIA/PA Division, Office of the Executive Secretariat, DOE. On May 3, 1999, OIG responded, releasing nine documents, two in their entirety.(1) OIG indicated that it was referring other documents to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC), the DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office, and the DOE's Ohio Field Office.

On November 3, 1999, OIG issued another determination releasing documents it had numbered 10 and 20 through 60. Determination Letter from Sandra L. Schneider, Assistant Inspector General for Inspections, OIG, to Gregory D. Coleridge, AFSC (Determination Letter). Seven documents were released in their entirety. The remainder were released with material withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) of the FOIA. Id. In response, AFSC filed this Appeal. AFSC appeals only the information withheld from Document 39,(2) a letter on EPA letterhead addresed to John C. Layton, Inspector General, DOE. AFSC argues that the withheld portions of Document 39 are outside the scope of Exemptions 6 or 7(C). Appeal Letter at 4-5, dated December 7, 1999, from Gary L. Cutler, Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle, to Director, OHA, DOE (Appeal Letter).

Analysis

In its Appeal, AFSC contends that the OIG applied Exemptions 6 and 7(C) in an overly broad manner.

AFSC states that OIG should not have redacted information from the document under Exemption 6 because it is not a document found in a personnel or medical file. Further, since the deletions "obviously refer to federal agency employees acting in their official capacities," they cannot be withheld under Exemption 7(C).

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990) .

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemption 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, provided the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). A document compiled for law enforcement purpose may be protected from disclosure if it satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard. Conversely, a document not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that release constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(C) is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In the present case, Document 39 was created by EPA's Office of Inspector General during an investigation of alleged misconduct concerning the Industrial Excess Landfill site in Uniontown, Ohio. Further, Document 39 was written in response to a letter from the DOE's OIG to EPA. By law, OIG is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. OIG is therefore a classic example of an organization with a clear law enforcement mandate. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Servs., 70 F.3d 729, 732-33 (2d Cir. 1995) (Ortiz) and cases cited therein. Consequently, Document 39 was created for a law enforcement purpose.

We agree with AFSC that the names of the federal officials acting in their official capacity should not have been redacted. We will remand the matter to OIG for it to release the names and titles of the federal agency officials where it is apparent that the officials were acting in their official capacity unless it can provide any other justification for its withholding. However, contrary to AFSC's assertion, not all of the redactions involved the names of federal agency officials. One of the deletions contains the name of a private individual. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. Safecard Services, Inc. v. SEC, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (finding that withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985); James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,109 (1990). OIG states that the individual named in Document 39 has a privacy interest in remaining free from intrusions into his or her professional and private life. OIG believes that release of this name would put its investigation in jeopardy. This individual originally approached OIG with a complaint concerning the Industrial Excess Landfill site in Uniontown, Ohio. We agree that there is a privacy interest for this individual providing information to government investigators. Accordingly, we will uphold the OIG's withholding of the private individual's name, but we will remand this matter to OIG for a new determination releasing the names and titles of the federal agency officials unless it can provide another justification.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by American Friends Service Committee, on December 10, 1999, Case No. VFA-0542, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(1) AFSC appealed the May 3, 1999 determination to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) on June 3, 1999. OHA issued its decision on July 1, 1999, partially granting AFSC's appeal, and remanding the matter to OIG. American Friends Service Committee, 27 DOE ¶ 80,214 (1999).

(2)OIG sent Document 39, a letter from an EPA employee to John C. Layton, Inspector General, DOE, to EPA for consideration of its releasability under the FOIA. EPA returned it to OIG, stating that it was not from its file. We find it difficult to understand how a letter on EPA letterhead could not be an EPA document, and we believe that it may have been overlooked when the thirty or more documents were reviewed by EPA. However, authorship of Document 39 does not alter our analysis in this case.

Case No. VFA-0544, 27 DOE ¶ 80,280

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Ashok K. Kaushal

Date of Filing: December 10, 1999

Case Number: VFA-0544

Ashok K. Kaushal files this Appeal in response to a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's Albuquerque Operations Office (AO). The determination deals with a request that Kaushal submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Kaushal requests the release of material responsive to his request. As explained below, we will remand Kaushal's request for further processing.

I. Background

Kaushal's FOIA request sought the release of documents relating to a complaint he had filed against Sandia National Laboratory (SNL). Twenty-four documents were found that were responsive to Kaushal's request. AO released twenty-one of these documents and withheld three in their entirety, claiming the documents were exempted from mandatory release pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5). Kaushal then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 5 and the Foreseeable Harm Standard

The FOIA generally requires that all federal agency records be made available to the public, subject to certain specified exemptions. The Act provides, however, for nine categories of records that are exempt from mandatory disclosure. AO withheld the three documents under Exemption 5 of the FOIA, which exempts "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Two civil discovery privileges that have been incorporated into Exemption 5, and which were cited by AO, are the attorney work-product privilege and the attorney-client privilege. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975).

Two documents, identified in the Determination Letter as Documents 74 and 91, were withheld under the attorney work-product privilege. A third document, identified in the Determination Letter as Document 92, was withheld under the attorney-client privilege. All three documents were related to a legal proceeding between Kaushal and SNL. The proceeding has been resolved.

The Determination Letter issued by AO explains how the withheld documents meet the criteria set out in Exemption 5. However, the Determination Letter does not discuss whether release of the withheld documents would cause a foreseeable harm to the to the interests protected by Exemption 5. As discussed below, we require a Determination Letter asserting Exemption 5 to include an articulation of foreseeable harm. If the Determination Letter fails to include an articulation of foreseeable harm, we have remanded the matter for a new determination. Joyce Ecomomus, 23 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1993); Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,164 (1993); Oxy USA, 24 DOE ¶ 80,101 (1994). Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to AO for a new determination.

The foreseeable harm standard was established by the "Memorandum for Heads of Departments and Agencies" (the Memorandum), issued by the Attorney General on October 4, 1993. The Memorandum states that "it shall be the policy of the U.S. Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency reasonably foresees that disclosure would be harmful to an interest protected by that exemption." Thus, under the standard set out in the Memorandum, it is not enough to assert a legally correct application of an exemption. In addition, the agency must articulate a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption.

While the Memorandum states that it does not create any substantive or procedural rights enforceable at law, it nevertheless establishes an important practical requirement. Memorandum at 2; Oxy USA, supra. The Department of Justice is responsible for defending in judicial litigation an agency's assertion of a FOIA exemption. According to the Memorandum, the Department of Justice will provide the defense only if the agency has articulated a reasonably foreseeable harm. Without the Department of Justice's defense, the agency may be ordered by the court to release the documents, notwithstanding the applicability of a FOIA exemption. Consequently the DOE requires its offices to provide an articulation of foreseeable harm whenever they assert a FOIA exemption, and failure to provide such an articulation is a ground for remand.

B. Segregability

The fact that a document meets the criteria for withholding discussed above does not necessarily mean that it may be withheld in its entirety. The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, material need not be segregated and released when the exempt and non-exempt material are so "inextricably intertwined" that release of the non-exempt material would compromise the exempt material, or where non-exempt material is so small and interspersed with exempt material that it would pose "an inordinate burden" to segregate it. Lead Industries Assoc. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2d Cir. 1979).

AO states in the Determination Letter that "the factual material [in the withheld documents] is so inextricably intertwined with exempt material ... that the release would either disclose the privileged information or the nonexempt material would only comprise a small portion of the documents and pose an inordinate segregation burden." Based on our review of the documents, however, we find that AO should reconsider the issue of segregability. For example, Document 91 is a brief memorandum from an employee of SNL informing the Legal Department that Kaushal had filed a complaint against SNL, and requesting a review of the matter. The amount of material in this document that could arguably be withheld under the FOIA is small, and the document could be released with minor redactions.

III. Conclusion

On remand, AO must review the withheld documents, segregate and release all non-exempt portions of the documents, and issue a new determination that justifies any withholding. The new determination should take into account the foreseeable harm standard set forth in the Attorney General's Memorandum, as discussed above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ashok K. Kaushal (Case No. VFA-0544) is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Albuquerque Operations Office for further proceedings consistent with the guidelines set forth in the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: David Rheingold

Date of Filing: January 4, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0545

On January 4, 2000, David Rheingold filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 12, 1999, by the Office of Public Affairs (PA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Rheingold challenges the adequacy of PA's search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

On November 12, 1999, Mr. Rheingold filed a request for information in which he sought a copy of the 1995 report by Carma International that evaluated press coverage for the Department of Energy. On November 12, 1999, PA issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search for the requested document. However, PA stated that it was unable to locate the document. See Determination Letter at 1.

On January 4, 2000, Mr. Rheingold filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Rheingold challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by PA. Mr. Rheingold asks that the OHA direct PA to conduct a new search for the requested document. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at PA to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Rheingold's request might exist. Upon receiving Mr. Rheingold's request for information, PA instituted a search of its internal files in its Press Office and its Resource Management Office, and also in the DOE's Procurement Office. Based on this search, PA was unable to locate the responsive document. Although PA acknowledged that it should have in its files an original copy of the report requested by Mr. Rheingold, it can only surmise that all copies of the report were inadvertently given out to the news media and an original copy was not maintained in its office. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Arlene Estep, PA, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (January 11, 2000).

Given the facts presented to us, we find that PA conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Rheingold's request. Accordingly, Mr. Rheingold's Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by David Rheingold, OHA Case No. VFA-0470, on January 4, 2000, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: STAND, Inc.

Case Number: VFA-0546

STAND, Inc. (Appellant) has filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge). In that determination, Oak Ridge released a number of documents in response to a Request for Information filed by the Appellant under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, Oak Ridge also withheld some responsive information under Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to release the information it withheld under Exemption 4.

I. BACKGROUND

On January 22, 1999, the Appellant filed a Request for Information with Oak Ridge. On October 26, 1999, Oak Ridge issued a determination letter releasing responsive information to the Appellant. Oak Ridge, however, withheld some responsive information under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 6. The present Appeal was submitted on December 28, 1999, challenging Oak Ridge's withholdings under Exemption 4.(1) The withholdings that the Appellant contests concern two documents, one generated by a contractor, the other generated by Oak Ridge itself.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9). The only exemption at issue in the present case is found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) (Exemption 4).

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information which is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criterion. See, e.g. Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997) (appeal pending). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has specifically held that the term "commercial" as used in the FOIA, includes anything "pertaining or relating to or dealing with commerce." American Airlines, Inc. v. National Mediation Bd., 588 F.2d 863, 870 (2d Cir. 1978). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) (1994 & Supp. II 1996). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." (2)

Once an agency decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

In the present case, Oak Ridge withheld information from two documents under Exemption 4. The first document is entitled "Audit of Off-Site Treatment, Storage, Disposal, and Recycle (TSDR) Facility" (the WCS Report). This audit of Waste Control Specialists (WCS) was conducted by a DOE contractor, Bechtel Jacobs Company (Bechtel). Oak Ridge withheld from this document Bechtel's ratings and scores of WCS for (1) Financial Strength, (2) Title Transfer, (3) Management Systems, (4) Historical Use, (5) Operations, Design, and Equipment, (6) Compliance, (7) Public Relations, (8) Facility Siting, and (9) Overall Evaluation. In addition, the entire portion of the WCS Report entitled "Concerns" was withheld. Finally, Oak Ridge withheld portions of those sections of the WCS Report entitled "Parent Company and Facility" and "Waste Analysis and Laboratory."

The ratings and scores in the audit report clearly cannot be withheld under Exemption 4. Oak Ridge asserts that release of this information could cause WCS competitive harm. This information, however, was generated for the DOE by another firm, Bechtel, rather than by WCS, and there is no evidence that WCS has any sort of privilege or proprietary interest in it. The legislative history of the statute clearly indicates that Congress intended that the protection of Exemption 4 only be applied to that information "which would customarily not be released to the public by the person from whom it was obtained." S. Rep. No. 813, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 9 (1965) (emphasis supplied), as cited at National Parks, 498 F.2d at 766. Accordingly, we find that Oak Ridge improperly withheld the scores and ratings under Exemption 4.

Moreover, the determination letter fails to describe the withheld portion of the WCS Report entitled "Concerns." Nor does the determination letter describe the information withheld from the sections of the WCS Report entitled "Parent Company and Facility" and "Waste Analysis and Laboratory." The determination letter also fails to state why release of this information could reasonably be expected to result in competitive harm to its submitter. Without a more detailed justification of these withholdings, we cannot sustain Oak Ridge's actions on STAND's FOIA request.

Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to Oak Ridge. On remand, Oak Ridge must either release the ratings and scores or issue a new determination letter with an appropriate justification for withholding the ratings and scores under one of the eight other FOIA exemptions. In addition, Oak Ridge must either release the other portions of the WCS Report it withheld under Exemption 4 or issue a new determination letter that both adequately describes the withheld information and provides an adequate justification for withholding it.

The second document from which Oak Ridge withheld information under Exemption 4 is the Audit Report resulting from the Oak Ridge Operations Office of Environmental Management's audit of WCS's Andrews, Texas Facility (the DOE Audit Report). The information that Oak Ridge withheld from this document appears to have been generated by the DOE. It is well settled that information generated by the federal government is not "obtained from a person" and is therefore excluded from Exemption 4's coverage. See, e.g., Board of Trade v. Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n, 627 F.2d 392, 404 (D.C. Cir. 1980). To the extent that the withheld information was not obtained from a person, it fails to meet a statutory threshold for withholding under Exemption 4. It therefore cannot be withheld under Exemption 4. We recognize, however, that the DOE Audit Report may contain information that the Office of Environmental Management obtained from WCS as it was performing its audit. Such information may in fact be confidential, proprietary information and therefore eligible for protection from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4. However, Oak Ridge has not segregated that type of information from other information in the DOE Audit Report that Oak Ridge itself generated. Accordingly, we are also remanding this portion of the Appeal to Oak Ridge. On remand, Oak Ridge should either release the information it withheld from the DOE Audit Report under Exemption 4 or issue a new determination letter that adequately justifies any withholdings from this document.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, we are remanding the present Appeal to the Oak Ridge Operations Office. On remand, Oak Ridge shall either release the information it withheld under Exemption 4 or provide a new justification for withholding in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by STAND, Inc., Case No. VFA-0546, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Oak Ridge Operations Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: February 3, 2000

(1)The Appeal does not contest any of Oak Ridge's withholdings under Exemption 6.

(2)In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely either to: (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

On January 27, 2000, Alice L. Thomas filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Freedom of Information Officer at the Department of Energy's (DOE) Western Area Power Administration (WAPA). The WAPA issued its determination in response to a request for information that Ms. Thomas submitted in accordance with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. The Appeal, if granted, would require the WAPA to release certain documents to Ms. Thomas.

In her FOIA request, Ms. Thomas sought access to a 1996 job announcement for a position in the Salt Lake City Area Office of the WAPA, documentation supporting the hiring of a specified individual for another position, and information pertaining to any awards or special recognition given to that individual and two other WAPA employees.

In response to this request, the WAPA provided Ms. Thomas with documents pertaining to any awards or special recognition given to the three named employees. However, in its determination letter the WAPA informed Ms. Thomas that the job announcement and documentation for the hiring of the individual for the other position had been destroyed pursuant to WAPA's records retention policies.

In her Appeal, Ms. Thomas contests the WAPA's claim that these records no longer exist. She asserts that the documents in question are "unscheduled" records, and that according to the Western Records Management Manual, such records must be maintained in the agency's files until a disposition has been approved by the Archivist of the United States. She therefore contends that these records should still be in the WAPA's files.

In its response to the Appeal, the WAPA has cooperated with this office and enclosed pages 21 and 22 of its Merit Promotion Plan, dated July 5, 1988. Paragraph 6 states, in pertinent part, that a "promotion case folder for each such position filled through competitive procedures must be maintained by the servicing personnel office for 2 years following the effective date of the personnel action . . . ." The WAPA then reiterated that, in accordance with this policy, the job announcement and the documentation supporting hiring for the other position were destroyed in 1998. Based on the record before us, we find no reason to question the veracity of the WAPA's response or to find that the destruction of the documents was improper. We will therefore deny Ms. Thomas' Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Alice L. Thomas on January 27, 2000 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: H & J Tool & Die Co.

Case Numbers: VFA-0548

On January 5, 2000, the law firm of Forchelli, Curto, Schwartz, Mineo, Carlino & Cohn, LLP (Forchelli) filed an Appeal on behalf of H&J Tool & Die Co. (H&J) with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a determination that DOE's Brookhaven Group (Brookhaven) issued to H&J on December 7, 1999. The determination concerned a request for information that H&J submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would result in the release of any existing responsive material to H&J.

I. Background

On November 4, 1999, Forchelli filed a FOIA request with DOE's Chicago Operations Office seeking copies of: (1) all documents from January 1, 1998 to the date of the request concerning H&J and/or any of its employees; (2) correspondence between two named individuals regarding bid solicitations and H&J; (3) all Brookhaven bid solicitation documents and contract award documents relating to lamination work on a certain project; (4) all lists of vendors, subcontractors and prospective bidders for lamination work that Brookhaven National Laboratory (BNL) has created since January 1, 1998; and (5) all documents relating to problems between BNL and H&J from January 1, 1998 to the date of the request. Letter from Forchelli to FOIA Officer, DOE Chicago Operations Officer (November 4, 1999) (Request). The Chicago Operations Office transferred the request to Brookhaven, which is one of the DOE group offices under its direction. In a determination letter, the Brookhaven Group Manager responded that DOE did not possess or own responsive documents. Letter from George Malosh, Authorizing Official, to H&J (December 7, 1999) (Determination Letter). Rather, the records requested were "contractor-owned procurement related records" of Brookhaven Science Associates, LLC (BSA), the company that operates BNL for DOE. Id. H&J appealed this determination, asserting that the requested records should be considered agency records because BNL is "under DOE's control." Letter from H&J to OHA (January 5, 2000) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the material requested can be considered "agency records" and thus subject to the FOIA, under the criteria set out by the federal courts. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f) (describing the scope of the term "agency" under the FOIA). However, in some circumstances records that do not meet these criteria can nonetheless be subject to release under the DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e); see 59 Fed. Reg. 63,884 (December 12, 1994). For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that the records in question are not "agency records" and that they are also not subject to release under the DOE regulations.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as BSA, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1998); BMF Enterprises, 21 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1991); William Albert Hewgley, 19 DOE ¶ 80,120 (1989); Judith M. Gibbs, 16 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1987) (Gibbs). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Gibbs, 16 DOE at 80,595.

A. BNL Is Not An Agency Under the FOIA

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (f). The courts have identified certain factors to consider in determining whether we should regard an entity as an agency for purposes of federal law. In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the . . . agency receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the federal government." Id. at 815. In other words, an organization will be considered a federal agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham). See also Washington Research Project, Inc. v. HEW, 504 F.2d 238, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 963 (1975) (degree of independent governmental decision-making authority considered); Rocap v. Indiek, 539 F.2d 174 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

Under its contractual relationship with DOE, BSA is the contractor responsible for maintaining and operating BNL. See Determination Letter. While DOE obtained BSA's services and exercises general control over the contract work, DOE does not supervise the day-to-day operations of BSA. Id. DOE's general oversight over BSA's contract work cannot be construed as "control" over BSA. We therefore conclude that BSA cannot be considered an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

B. The Records Were Not Within DOE's Control At The Time Of Request

Although BNL is not an agency for the purpose of the FOIA, its records relevant to H&J's request could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within DOE's control at the time Forchelli made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989); see Kissinger v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. In this case, Brookhaven has stated that the information that H&J seeks was not in the agency's control at the time of the appellant's request. See Determination Letter. Based on these facts, the responsive documents clearly do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46; see also Forsham, 445 U.S. at 185-86.

C. The Contract Provides That Employment-Related Records Are Contractor Property

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between DOE and the contractor provides that they are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).” 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

We next look to the contract between DOE and BSA to determine the status of the requested records. The contract provides that all records “acquired or generated” by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of DOE "[e]xcept as provided in paragraph b . . . . " Contract DE-AC02-98CH10886 (October 1, 1998), Article 94, Paragraph (a). See also International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1998). Paragraph (b) (3) of the DOE-BSA contract states that records relating to any procurement action by the contractor, except for records that are described as the property of the Government under 48 CFR 970-5204-9, are considered the property of the Contractor. Because the documents at issue are related to procurement activities of the contractor and do not fall within the previously-stated exception, the requested records are not the “property of DOE” and thus are not subject to release under DOE regulations.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 5, 2000 by H&J Tool & Die Co., OHA Case No. VFA-0548, is hereby denied.

the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Janice R. McLemore

Case Number: VFA-0551

On January 13, 2000, Janice R. McLemore completed the filing of an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (OR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) on December 1, 1999. (1) In her Appeal, Ms. McLemore asserts that OR failed to provide her documents that were responsive to a request for information that she had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. BACKGROUND

In a request dated September 10, 1999, Ms. McLemore asked for copies of her father's medical records from the DOE's Oak Ridge nuclear facility. Additionally, she requested copies of any records pertaining to any accidents or incidents in which her father may have been involved. Her father was an employee at the Y-12 Plant at Oak Ridge. Ms. McLemore provided OR with her father's name, social security number, badge number and the dates he worked at the Y-12 Plant. On October 6, 1999, OR provided Ms. McLemore with a partial response to her request, in which she was sent a number of documents including medical and radiation exposure records. In its final determination regarding her request, OR provided Ms. McLemore with additional medical records obtained from the federal records facility in Atlanta, Georgia. OR reported that it could not locate any records pertaining to accidents or incidents in which her father had been involved.

Ms. McLemore appeals OR's final determination on the grounds that she does not believe that OR has provided her with all of her father's medical records. Specifically she points out that she has not been provided with all her father's "H-meter" and "Y-meter" film exposure badge records or his "whole body count" radiation exposure records or urinalysis records. She requests that OR be directed to conduct another search for responsive records. (2)

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, the FOIA requires agencies to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

We contacted the FOIA Officer at OR to inquire as to the nature of OR's search for responsive documents. See Memoranda of telephone conversations between Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, OR and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (January 24, 2000). OR informed us that with regard to the portion of the request pertaining to Ms. McLemore's father's medical records, OR instituted searches of five systems of records that it determined were most likely to contain responsive information.(3) These five systems of records were searched using the information Ms. McLemore had provided. The system of records are described in the table below:

System of Record Name	Description of records contained in System
DOE-33	Personnel Medical Records
DOE-35	Personnel Radiation Exposure Records
DOE-71	Radiation Accident Registry
DOE-72	DOE Radiation Studies Registry
DOE-73	USDTPA Registry (4)

All responsive documents discovered in the searches of these systems of records were provided to Ms. McLemore.(5)

With regard to Ms. McLemore's request for records pertaining to accidents or incidents her father may have been involved in, OR conducted a search for responsive records in the Oak Ridge Records Holding Area which contains historical medical and personnel records from the beginning of the Manhattan Project at Oak Ridge. (6) In order that a more effective search could be conducted, OR examined the various administrative codes in Ms. McLemore's father's personnel file and determined the various buildings in the Y-12 Plant where her father may have worked. (7)OR then searched the Records Holding Area and found 100 boxes that contained documents concerning the buildings where Ms. McLemore's father may have worked during the time he was employed at the Y-12 Plant. All responsive documents from these boxes were subsequently provided to Ms. McLemore. OR does not know of any other location at Oak Ridge where responsive documents would be found.

Given the facts described above, we believe that OR's search was reasonably calculated to discover responsive documents. OR performed a search of the systems of records where responsive documents were most likely to exist. OR also conducted a search of the Records Holding Area for documents using the names of the buildings in which Ms. McLemore's father may have worked. Further, OR has no knowledge of other locations where responsive documents may exist. With regard to the lack of film badge information, OR has informed us that all badge readings are transcribed into paper records and then transcribed into an electronic database. Consequently, when a request for radiation exposure records is received, such as a request for film badge information, the electronic database is searched along with the duplicate microfiche records of the film badge readings. The film badges themselves are destroyed. (8) See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Linda Snapp, Radiation Controls/Privacy Act Officer, Y-12 Plant, Lockheed Martin Corporation and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (February 14, 2000). OR also informed us that if Ms. McLemore's father had a "whole body count" procedure, the records of the procedure would have been located in the Records Holding Area or in DOE systems of records No. 35, 71, 72 or 73. OR informed us that "whole body count" radiation exposure data may have been broken down into exposure data for various body parts and systems for an individual. Some of the medical records provided Ms. McLemore contain such breakdowns. Further, some of the records provided to Ms. McLemore contain exposure data determined from a "void." "Void" refers to a collected urine sample. OR has no indication that additional responsive records exist elsewhere. In sum, we find that OR conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to find responsive documents. Consequently, Ms. McLemore's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Janice R. McLemore on January 13, 2000, Case No. VFA-0551, is hereby denied.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: February 23, 2000

(1)Ms. McLemore's initial submission did not contain a statement indicating on which grounds she sought to appeal the December 1, 1999 determination letter. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(b). We contacted Ms. McLemore on January 13, 2000, and she informed us as to the grounds of her appeal. Consequently, we deem Ms. McLemore's appeal as filed on January 13, 2000.

(2)In her appeal, Ms. McLemore also sought to appeal OR's failure to respond to her subsequent request for documents relating to all accidents and incidents at Oak Ridge. In a conference call, OR and Ms. McLemore agreed to work together to try to narrow the scope of this request so that Ms. McLemore would be able to obtain documents in which she had a specific interest. See Record of conference call between Amy Rothrock, OR FOIA Officer, Janice McLemore, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (January 31, 2000). Ms. McLemore withdrew her appeal with regard to OR's failure to respond.

(3)A system of records is a group of records under DOE control from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol or other identifying number, symbol or identifying particulars assigned to the individual. See 10 C.F.R. § 1008.2 (m).

(4)The records contained in this system of records pertain to individuals who received the drug diethylenetriaminepentaacetic acid (DTPA) for treatment of actual or suspected internal contamination with transuranic elements (elements, such as plutonium, with atomic numbers higher than 92, the atomic number for uranium).

(5)Some of the records identified in the searches had to be obtained from a federal record center in Atlanta, Georgia.

(6)The Manhattan Project was the name of the effort to develop the first atomic bomb for the United States during World War II.

(7)Based upon the administrative codes found in his records, OR determined that Ms. McLemore's father may have worked in the following buildings at the Y-12 plant: Buildings 9201-1 (Alpha-1 Machine Shop), 9201-5 (Alpha-5 Machine Shop), 9201-5E (Alpha-5 East Machine Shop); 9201-5W (Alpha-5 West Machine Shop), 9204-4 (Beta-4 Production Facility), 9212 (A-Wing and F- Wing Machine Shop), 9215 (Rolling Mill), 9766 (Machine Shop) and 9998 (H-2 Foundry).

(8)We were informed that a number of old films exists which can not be linked to particular individuals and which can not be read for radiation exposure levels. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Linda Snapp, Radiation Controls/Privacy Act Officer, Y-12 Plant, Lockheed Martin Corporation and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (February 14, 2000)

February 17, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Margaret A. O'Neill

Date of Filing: January 18, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0552

On January 18, 2000, Margaret A. O'Neill filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services (Personnel) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on December 15, 1999. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by Ms O'Neill pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Personnel would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On August 18, 1999, Ms O'Neill submitted a FOIA request for

1. All records, including electronic mail [and] hand written notes, that pertain to the classification and review of all GS-0301-15 and GS 0343-15 position descriptions submitted by the Office of Counterintelligence for the Executive Assistant, Staff Director, and/or Executive Officer;
2. All materials prepared for use by management related to the review of comparable positions and;
3. All records of communication between management and staff related to the classification and review of particular positions and materials prepared for review of comparable positions.

Request Letter dated August 18, 1999, from Margaret A. O'Neill to FOIA Officer, FOI/Privacy Acts Division, DOE. On December 15, 1999, Personnel responded, releasing what it stated were all available records and documents. Determination Letter dated December 15, 1999, from Claudia A. Cross, Director, Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, DOE, to Margaret A. O'Neill. Personnel indicated that some of the records requested may no longer exist. Id.

On January 18, 2000, Ms O'Neill filed this Appeal. First, Ms O'Neill contends that records that no longer exist may possibly be retrieved if the records existed in electronic format.

Appeal Letter dated January 18, 2000, from Margaret A. O'Neill to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals, DOE. Secondly, Ms O'Neill asks that the Office of Hearings and Appeals order Personnel to stop destroying all records responsive to her FOIA request.(1) Id. Finally, Ms O'Neill asks that a more thorough search be conducted. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985);accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

In her Appeal, Ms O'Neill contends a further search for information responsive to her request should be conducted. She claims she has received, from another source, copies of electronic mail messages that were responsive to her request but were not released by Personnel. For this reason, Ms O'Neill believes that the search Personnel conducted was incomplete. In fact, Personnel has recently informed us that it has found additional responsive information. For that reason, we will remand the matter to Personnel to release the responsive information.

Personnel has not yet determined whether it is possible to search for information deleted from individuals' computers.(2) Ms O'Neill first requested on Appeal that she wanted all deleted electronic records to be searched. We believe this is a clarification of her original request, not a new request. Therefore, we will also remand the matter for a determination on this issue.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Margaret A. O'Neill, on January 18, 2000, Case No. VFA-0552, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(1) It has long been understood that the receipt of a FOIA request suspends the destruction of all documents responsive to that request. Therefore, such an order, were it possible, would be redundant.

(2)The availability of backup copies of deleted electronic mail messages varies within the DOE. It is dependent upon the procedures implemented by those who maintain each Local Area Network.

February 25, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Tri-Valley CAREs

Date of Filing:February 1, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0554

On February 1, 2000, Tri-Valley CAREs (Appellant) completed the filing of an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oakland Operations Office (Oakland). The Appellant challenges Oakland's determination that certain documents sought by it are not agency records and therefore are not subject to mandatory disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). 5 U.S.C. § 552; 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oakland to consider whether the requested documents could be released under the FOIA.

I. Background

On September 1, 1999, the Appellant filed a Request for Information seeking documents relating to the Inertial Confinement Fusion Program (the Program). In response to this Request, Oakland issued a determination on December 22, 1999.(1) In that determination, Oakland stated that it was not releasing personal notes made by participants on a conference call related to the Program because it found that these records are not agency records, and therefore not subject to the FOIA.(2) In its Appeal, the Appellant claims that these records should be considered agency records under the Federal Records Management Act and the related General Records Schedule 32. See Letter from the Appellant to Director, OHA (January 27, 2000). The Appellant has also noted its belief that the notes contain substantive material that it needs. See Letter from Appellant to Director, OHA (February 16, 2000).

II. Analysis

We have considered Oakland's determination that the notes are not agency records and find, for the reasons explained below, that more facts are needed before it can be determined whether this analysis is correct. Under the FOIA, an "agency record" is a document which is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Clear indications that a document is an "agency record" are when a document of this type is part of an agency file, and it was used for an agency purpose. Kissinger v. Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 157 (1980); Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc. v. Department of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1489-90 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (BNA); Ben Franklin, 20 DOE ¶ 80,110 at 80,526 (1990).(3)

In making the "agency records" determination, we look at the totality of circumstances surrounding the creation, maintenance, and use of the document(s) in question. BNA, 742 F.2d at 1492-93. We contacted Oakland to inquire as to the use and nature of the notes, as well as Oakland's search for the notes. Approximately twenty people participated in a conference call regarding the Program. Oakland sent a request to each of the participants requesting the following: (1) various responsive documents and (2) a description of any notes of the call in the participant's possession. At least one participant sent a copy of his notes to Oakland and at least one sent a brief description but did not send the notes. See Record of Telephone Conversation between RoseAnn Pelzner and Dawn L. Goldstein (February 16, 2000). In the descriptions, Oakland learned that the notes were created for the participants' personal convenience. At the time of the Appellant's FOIA Request, none of these notes were maintained in any official DOE file. Oakland also noted that some participants were neither DOE contractors nor DOE employees. However, the participants had not specified in their descriptions whether they had shared their notes with others, such as those not participating, in order to inform them of what had been said during the conference call. Thus, it was unclear how these notes were handled or if they may have been dispersed. See Memoranda of Telephone Conversations between Andrea Keith, Office of General Counsel, Oakland, and Dawn L. Goldstein (February 9 and 14, 2000).

We are unable to make a final determination from these facts. We are remanding this case in order that Oakland may ascertain whether these notes were shown to, circulated to, or used by other individuals for any reason, including some business purpose, such as informing them what had taken place, decision-making or performing a task. Oakland should also determine how widely, if at all, the information was disseminated. Oakland may wish to consult the list of factors contained in Ethyl Corp. v. United States EPA, 25 F.3d 1241, 1247 n.3 (4th Cir. 1994). Oakland should then determine whether, under the totality of the circumstances, any of the notes have attained the status of agency records. Certainly, if these notes were used solely as memory aids or mere personal work aids by the notetakers individually, the notes would not be agency records. See Washington Post v. United States Dep't of State, 632 F. Supp. 607 (D.D.C. 1986).(4) Consequently, we will remand this matter to Oakland, which should promptly issue a new determination to the Appellant.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CAREs on February 1, 2000, Case No. VFA-0554, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE's Oakland Operations Office, which shall promptly issue a new determination in accordance with the guidance set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: February 25, 2000

(1)Oakland stated in that determination that it was continuing to look for documents responsive to the Appellant's request. In a letter received by this Office on February 16, 2000, the Appellant noted the lack of a final response from Oakland to the remainder of its request. Section 1004.8(a) of the DOE Regulations states that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) has jurisdiction to consider Freedom of Information Act Appeals in the following circumstances:

> When the Authorizing Officer has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request . . . or when the Freedom of Information Officer has denied a request for waiver of fees. . . .
> 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a).

Since no appealable determination has been issued on the remainder of the Appellant's request, the circumstances for an administrative appeal on this issue do not exist. Under the circumstances, the Appellant does have the right to file a complaint with the appropriate federal district court. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B), (6)(C). Accordingly, we will not consider this portion of the Appellant's appeal. We have, however, reminded Oakland of the need to respond promptly to this request. See Record of Telephone Conversation between RoseAnn Pelzner, FOIA Officer, Oakland, and Dawn L. Goldstein, Staff Attorney, OHA (February 16, 2000).

(2)Oakland withheld other information in that December 22, 1999 determination. The Appellant is not appealing those withholdings. See Letter from Appellant to the Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (January 27, 2000).

(3)We note that the definition of agency records contained in the Federal Records Management Act, 44 U.S.C. 3301, and the related General Schedule 32 is instructive in a FOIA case but not dispositive. Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 183-84 (1980); BNA, 742 F.2d at 1493. This Office chooses to rely on the definition of agency records as developed in the FOIA context by federal courts as explained above. We further note that under the federal courts' definition of agency records, the substantive nature of the notes is also not dispositive. Nor does a requester's need for documents affect our FOIA analysis.

(4)If any of the notes were not mere memory aids or personal work aids, and were either created by or given to DOE contractors, Oakland should consider whether they fall within the provision of 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3, a regulation rendering some contractor-possessed documents subject to release. Moreover, even notes created by personnel not employed by DOE or a DOE-contractor could be subject to release, if these notes were then shared with and used by DOE personnel or DOE contractor personnel.

Case No. VFA-0555, 27 DOE ¶ 80,269

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Mary L. Michel

Case Number: VFA-0555

Mary L. Michel filed this Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination responded to a request for information she filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her Appeal, Michel challenges the adequacy of ORO's search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Michel submitted a request to ORO for copies of medical records of her late husband, John Michel. ORO responded by releasing John Michel's complete medical file, with some redactions to remove identifying information concerning other individuals.

Among the records ORO released was a document signed by John Michel and dated October 25, 1972. I will refer to this document as "the consent form." The consent form states, in part, that John Michel gave permission for his blood sample:

... to be used for purposes other than routine testing.... These uses ... might include such things as development of new tests, establishment of standards, accumulation of pooled reference serum, etc.... My name or any identifying data will not appear in any publication.... If tests are done that have clinical importance the results will be made part of my medical record.... If any of the results are thought to have prompt clinical significance I will be so informed.

Mary Michel appealed the adequacy of the search for responsive material conducted by ORO. She stated that she had "received all requested information except the results of the blood analysis agreed to in the [form] signed and dated by John W. Michel, 10-25- 72." The sole issue on appeal, then, is whether ORO should have discovered documents relating to a blood test associated with the consent form.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires federal agencies to release material to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies must search their records for responsive documents. We have often stated that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where we believe the search conducted was inadequate. E.g., Ashok K. Kaushal, 27 DOE ¶ 80,189 (1999); Hobart T. Bolin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1998).

In a case involving the adequacy of the agency's search, "the issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we therefore examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

Michel requested all medical records of John Michel, including special monitoring records and exposure records. In our review of Michel's Appeal, we ascertained that personnel at ORO searched the records of the site's medical department and located the medical file for John Michel that covered the full period of his employment at the site. These persons were not aware of any other place where John Michel's medical records could reasonably be found. In addition, we obtained information about the consent form from Judy Edwards, a laboratory technician with the ORO medical department. Edwards was working at the laboratory on October 25, 1972, when John Michel signed the consent form. She knew Mary Michel, and recalled that John Michel signed the consent form in order to give a blood sample to help calibrate a new blood test machine and to set standards for later tests. No individual blood test results were generated from this procedure. Thus, she believes there would be no responsive records specifically associated with John Michel's consent form dated October 25, 1972.

III. Conclusion

We believe that ORO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to find the materials requested by Mary Michel. Moreover, based on Edwards' statement, we find no ground for believing that there are further records associated with the consent form. We will therefore deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mary L. Michel, Case No. VFA-0555, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Westinghouse Savannah River Company, LLC

Date of Filing: February 1, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0556

On February 1, 2000, Westinghouse Savannah River Company, LLC (WSRC) filed an appeal of a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE's) Office of Inspector General (OIG) issued to it on December 21, 1999. That determination denied a request for information that WSRC filed on November 5, 1999, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that OIG release responsive documents, if they exist, that were withheld under FOIA Exemption 7(C), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(7)(C).

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On November 5, 1999, WSRC requested that the OIG release a copy of an investigative file regarding a named individual. Letter from WSRC to FOIA Officer, OIG (November 5, 1999). The OIG responded that it could neither confirm nor deny the existence of records responsive to WSRC's request, and denied the request under FOIA Exemption 7(C). 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C). Letter from Judith D. Gibson, OIG, to WSRC (December 21, 1999). An agency's statement in response to a FOIA request that it will neither confirm nor deny the existence of records is commonly called a "Glomar" response.(1)

WSRC subsequently appealed OIG's determination. Letter from WSRC to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (January 28, 2000) (Appeal). According to WSRC, the named individual in its request has waived his privacy rights by making allegations [of official misconduct] against WSRC and other defendants public through litigation. Id. If this Appeal were granted, OIG would be required to release the requested information, if it exists.

II. Analysis

This Decision and Order will focus on the propriety of OIG's determination of a privacy interest and OIG's use of the Glomar response in refusal to confirm or deny the existence of investigatory records concerning a third person. As detailed below, we will uphold both actions.

A. Exemption 7(C)

Exemption 7(C) of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C), allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that the production of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(C) is whether the agency compiled such information as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Amendments to the FOIA in 1986 extended the protection of Exemption 7 to all records compiled for "law enforcement purposes." See Attorney General's Memorandum on the 1986 Amendments to the Freedom of Information Act (Dec. 1987).

OIG is a law enforcement body charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud or abuse in programs administered or financed by the DOE. See Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. app. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), (d), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). As a result of its duties, we find that OIG compiles reports involving official misconduct for "law enforcement purposes" within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1995).

B. The Balancing Test Under Exemption 7(C)

In determining whether the disclosure of law enforcement records could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 762 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Safecard Services, Inc. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); Lesar v. Department of Justice, 636 F.2d 472, 486 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

1. The privacy interest

An individual who files an official complaint alleging irregularities in DOE's operations has a privacy interest in being protected from possible retaliation. We have previously found that sources mentioned in OIG files have a strong privacy interest in remaining anonymous. See Blumberg, Seng, Ikeda & Albers, 25 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,563 (1995); James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 (1991). Indeed, the courts have recognized the possibility of harassment or intimidation of these sources, and have consistently found that privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators are greatly amplified. Safecard, 926 F.2d at 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991), cited in Stoel Rives, LLP, 25 DOE ¶ 80,189 at 80,724 (1996). Therefore, unless that person has waived this privacy interest, he is entitled to protection from disclosure of his activities.

We find a cognizable privacy interest at stake in this case. WSRC argues that the named individual has waived his personal privacy by filing two lawsuits in which he relied on the findings of the OIG, thus choosing to make his allegations against WSRC and other defendants public through litigation. Appeal at 2. WSRC further argues that an invasion of the named individual's privacy by releasing the requested documents would not be unwarranted. Id. We do not accept as confirmation of an official proceeding WSRC's unsupported allegations that the named individual has filed two lawsuits based upon findings and actions made by the OIG. We have previously stated that we cannot accept unsubstantiated allegations as official confirmation that an enforcement file or proceeding exists. See Keci Corporation, 26 DOE ¶ 80,150 at 80,662 (1997) (Keci). Therefore, we find that the individual retains a personal privacy interest in the requested material.

2. The public interest in disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. We have held that the public interest in disclosure is measured not by the degree of the requester's interest in disclosure, but rather by "the right of the public to obtain the same information." The Die-Gem Co., Inc., 19 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,569 (1989) (quoting Nix v. United States, 572 F.2d 998, 1003 (4th Cir. 1978)). The Supreme Court has held that information which does not directly reveal government operations or activities "falls outside the ambit of the public interest that the FOIA was enacted to serve." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 775.

WSRC claims that there is an overriding public interest in the disclosure of the requested information. Appeal at 2. We agree that there is clearly a public interest in official misconduct. However, WSRC has neither explained the nature of the alleged misconduct nor provided any proof that allegations made by the named individual were part of an official proceeding. Courts have held that unsubstantiated allegations of official misconduct do not establish a public interest in disclosure. See McCutchen v. HHS, 30 F.3d 183 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (allegations that agency is not doing its job do not create a public interest sufficient to override privacy interest protected by Exemption 7(C)); Triestman v. Department of Justice, 878 F. Supp. 667 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (no substantial public interest in disclosure of information concerning possible investigation of law enforcement agent). Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of unsubstantiated allegations of official misconduct is negligible, and is outweighed by the individual's real and identifiable privacy interest.

C. Disclosure of the Existence of Records Would Reveal Exempt Information

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted employees of OIG to discuss the Glomar response to WSRC's FOIA request. According to OIG, once it determined that WSRC was a third party requesting information about the named individual, it followed its policy of refusing to confirm or deny the existence of records in response to a FOIA request when six factors exist.(2) See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Jackie Becker, Attorney, OIG and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA Staff Attorney (March 6, 2000). In this case, OIG determined that the six factors existed and on that basis issued a Glomar response to WSRC's FOIA request. In order to use a Glomar response with Exemption 7, there must be a cognizable privacy interest at stake and insufficient public interest in disclosure to outweigh that privacy interest. See William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996). A Glomar response is justified when the records sought, if they exist, would be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 7(C) of the FOIA, and the confirmation of the existence of such records would itself reveal exempt information. See Antonelli v. FBI, 721 F.2d 615 (7th Cir. 1983); William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996).

We find that OIG's Glomar response to WSRC was justified. Whether or not OIG enforcement records involving the named individual exist, refusal to confirm or deny the existence of these records is proper under Exemption 7(C). A Glomar response to such FOIA requests is necessary to protect the privacy rights of individuals whose identity may be revealed in an OIG investigation. By refusing to confirm or deny the existence of an enforcement file that mentions the named individual, OIG has properly protected that individual's privacy rights. Thus, we find that OIG was justified in providing a Glomar response to this request because the confirmation of the existence of such records would itself reveal exempt information. Accordingly, we will deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Westinghouse Savannah River Company, LLC on February 1, 2000, OHA Case No. VFA-0556, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)“Glomar” refers to the first instance in which a federal court upheld the adequacy of such a response. Phillippi v. CIA, 546 F.2d 1009 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (agency responded to a request for documents pertaining to a submarine-retrieval ship named the Hughes Glomar Explorer by neither confirming nor denying the existence of any such documents).

(2)When the following factors exist, OIG will issue a Glomar response: (1) the request is made by a third party; (2) the request is for information about a person identified by name; (3) the requested records, if they exist, would be contained in an enforcement file; (4) the named individual is not deceased; (5) the individual has not given the requester a waiver of his privacy right; and (6) there has been no official confirmation that an enforcement file or proceeding exists. See Keci, 26 DOE at 80,660 (quoting memorandum from Jackie Becker, OIG, to Linda Lazarus, OHA (November 27, 1996)).

April 3, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Center for Government Accountability

Date of Filing: March 6, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0558

The Center for Government Accountability (CGA) filed this Appeal on March 6, 2000 with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a determination that the DOE Office of the Inspector General (OIG) issued to CGA on February 2, 2000. The determination concerned a request for information that CGA submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, OIG would be required to release any responsive material.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On December 23, 1997, CGA requested copies of several categories of documents, including: (1) all documents that were withheld in FOIA request 94112804H; (2) all documents produced in the investigation of a complaint that CGA filed with OIG; and (3) all documents that pertain to the hiring of independent contractors by DOE and its prime contractors, including, but not limited to, Lockheed Martin. Letter from OIG to CGA (February 2, 2000) (Determination Letter). On February 2, 2000, the OIG provided some responsive material to CGA, but withheld two documents, Document 7 and Document 8, in their entirety under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. According to OIG, these documents were part of the final investigative report package concerning CGA's complaint.(1) Document 7 is the draft indexed report of investigation and draft transmittal memorandum. Document 8 is the report reference sheet. Determination Letter at 1. In its determination, OIG justified withholding these documents by explaining that the withheld material is deliberative information. OIG further stated that the disclosure of Documents 7 and 8 was not in the public interest, because disclosure "would inhibit frank and open discussion . . . and would hinder the government's ability to reach sound and well reasoned resolutions." Determination Letter at 2.

CGA appeals this determination and contends that the documents are not truly deliberative because OIG did not rely on the contents of Documents 7 and 8 to produce the final report, Document 52. Letter from CGA to Director, OHA (February 14, 2000). CGA also argues that the withheld draft report contains material of public interest, "especially because no public report was ever released." Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (NLRB). The "deliberative process" privilege falls under this exception, and this is the privilege that OIG relied upon in its determination. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

The deliberative process privilege shields from public disclosure records reflecting the predecisional, consultative process of an agency. See Matthew Cherney, M.D., 27 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1999); Los Alamos Study Group, 27 DOE ¶ 80,177 (1999) (LASG); Edwin S. Rothschild, 27 DOE ¶ 80,150 (1998) (Rothschild). Predecisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). This privilege was developed primarily to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making government decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp., v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. NLRB, 421 U.S. at 151 (1975).

CGA contends that Exemption 5 does not apply to Documents 7 and 8 because they were not part of the deliberative process used to produce the final report of investigation, Document 52. CGA alleges that Document 52, the final report, is "diametrically opposite to what I was told was in the draft report by [OIG investigators] Sumner and Bautz, and further is not consistent with documentation released in this FOIA [request]." Electronic mail message from David Hackett, CGA to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (March 16, 2000). CGA also argues that draft reports are not deliberative because "deliberation is generally finished by the time a draft report is produced." Letter from CGA to OHA (February 14, 2000). According to CGA, draft reports only require minor changes prior to release in final form, and thus cannot be considered deliberative. Id. After a thorough review of Documents 7, 8, and 52, we do not agree. An agency may determine that a document is predecisional without identifying an agency final decision based on that document, provided that the agency establishes both the deliberative process involved and the role played by the withheld documents in the course of that process. NLRB, 421 U.S. at 151 n.18; Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 868.; Hunt v. U.S. Marine Corp., 935 F. Supp. 46, 51 (D.D.C. 1996). Our review convinces us that Documents 7 and 8 were an integral part of the deliberative process that took place within OIG in order to arrive at findings on CGA's complaint. Therefore, we find that Documents 7 and 8 contain information that is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

CGA also argues that Documents 7 and 8 have information vital to the public interest because "they reflect findings that were later denied in the . . . final report." Electronic mail message from CGA to OHA (March 16, 2000). DOE regulations provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 522 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. However, OIG correctly determined that the release of Documents 7 and 8 would not be in the public interest since it found that releasing the documents would "inhibit frank and open discussion of matters and would hinder the government's ability to reach sound and well reasoned resolutions." Determination at 2.

The FOIA also requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering

Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material). Since the determination letter did not identify segregable, nonexempt factual material, we find OIG's determination to be insufficient in this regard. Our review finds that the documents contain some reasonably segregable factual information that may not be withheld under Exemption 5 unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material. Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to OIG. On remand, OIG must review the withheld documents and segregate and release all purely factual portions, or issue a new determination that justifies withholding the factual portions of the documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on March 6, 2000 by the Center for Government Accountability, OHA Case No. VFA-0558, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Inspector General, for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

March 15, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: PowerMax Inc.

Date of Filing: February 15, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0559

On February 15, 2000, PowerMax Inc. (PowerMax) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Nevada Field Office (NV) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on January 6, 2000. In its determination, NV informed PowerMax that records responsive to the request for information it submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, were not agency records and thus were not subject to the FOIA. Consequently, NV did not provide a copy of the responsive documents to PowerMax. This Appeal, if granted, would require NV to release the information it withheld.

Background

This FOIA Appeal arises out of a contract dispute involving PowerMax and Pavel Enterprises, Inc. (PEI). Bechtel Nevada (BN) is the management and operating support contractor for the Washington Aerial Measurements Operations (WAMO) facility at Andrews Air Force Base in Camp Springs, Maryland.(1) BN employed PEI to be the general contractor at the WAMO project. PowerMax is a subcontractor to PEI at the WAMO project.

In a December 10, 1999 request for information (Request), PowerMax requested copies of 16 categories of documents relating to BN's communications concerning the WAMO project and other WAMO project and contract documents concerning BN and PEI. The 16 categories of documents are listed below:

1. Meeting minutes and notes from the time of the pre-construction meeting to the end of the WAMO project.
2. Requisitions submitted by PEI to Bechtel as well as any related correspondence, checks, wire transfer information and other related documentation relating to payments requisitioned by PEI or payments made

3. Change orders and any settlement negotiation meeting minutes, notes, correspondence, and other documentation relating to any change orders proposed, contemplated or issued under the WAMO contract.

4. Schedules prepared by Bechtel or its contractors.

5. Information submitted by PEI which concerns subcontractors to be used on the project.

6. Correspondence, memoranda, faxes, and other documentation between Mr. Dwight Burch, Bechtel on-site field representative, and BN.

7. Correspondence, memoranda, faxes, and other documentation between Mr. Dwight Burch, Bechtel on-site field representative, and PEI.

8. Payment history of the WAMO project reflecting the payment made by Bechtel to PEI for the approved mechanical scheduled line items on a month to month basis from the project start-up through the date of this request, including copies of PEI's or Bechtel's actual monthly approved payment breakdowns.

9. PEI's initial job schedule submitted to Bechtel for approval, the approved schedule and any updated schedules.

10. A copy of PEI's performance and payment bond with BN for the WAMO project.

11. Correspondence, memoranda and other documentation between PEI and Bechtel concerning subcontractors that performed work on the WAMO project.

12. Correspondence or documentation addressing liquidated damages or other damages applicable to the WAMO project.

13. A copy of PEI's contract with BN.

14. Daily job reports, daily job information, field notes and similar documents from Mr. Dwight Burch of BN, the on-site representative.

15. Daily job reports, daily job information, field notes and similar documents submitted to BN from PEI.

16. Notices of delay from BN to PEI.

In its January 6, 2000 Determination Letter, NV stated that with regard to documents described in Request categories 1 through 9 and 11 through 16, all responsive documents to the Request are the property of BN. NV asserted that the DOE-BN contract provides that all procurement records are deemed by the contract to be the property of BN and not the DOE. Consequently, these records are not "agency records" and thus, not subject to the FOIA. With regard to Request category 10, BN released a copy of the Performance and Payment Bond to PowerMax. The Determination Letter states that while the Bond is a BN-owned document, BN has previously provided copies of that Bond to other parties.

PowerMax challenges NV's failure to provide responsive documents to its Request. In the Appeal, PowerMax asserts that PEI is in violation of the Federal Prompt Pay Act and that PEI is wrongfully "passing through" delay charges to PowerMax.

Analysis

As an initial matter, we do not agree with PowerMax's arguments regarding its need for the requested documents as justifying release of the documents under the FOIA. The FOIA applies to "records" that are maintained by "agencies" within the executive branch of government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). Consequently, the FOIA is applicable only where the requested documents may be considered an "agency record" or, pursuant to DOE regulation, is otherwise deemed to be the property of the DOE by contractual provision. Need is not relevant. Nevertheless, we have reviewed the facts of this case and find that NV was correct in its conclusion that the requested records would not be subject to release under the FOIA or DOE regulations.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis the courts have fashioned for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as BN, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997) (LASG). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See LASG, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 & n. 11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, although BN is the management and operating support contractor for WAMO, the DOE does not supervise BN's day-to-day operations. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Michael Brown, Office of Public Affairs and Information, NV, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (March 14, 2000). We therefore conclude that BN is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

Although BN is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, its records relevant to PowerMax's request could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time the Appellant made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In this case, none of the responsive documents at issue was in the DOE's control or possession at the time of the Appellant's request. At the time of the Request, all responsive records were in the possession of BN. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Michael Brown, Office of Public Affairs and Information, NV, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (February 17, 2000). Based on these facts, the documents do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145- 46.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the records in question are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

I. 117. 970.5204-79 - ACCESS TO AND OWNERSHIP OF RECORDS (JUNE 1997)

(a) Government-owned records. Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the contractor either as the contracting officer may from time to time direct during the process of the work, or in any event, as the contracting officer shall direct upon completion or termination of the contract.

(b) Contractor-owned records. The following records are considered the property of the contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) of this clause.

Contract No. DE-AC08-96PO11718, Modification A061.

The requested documents all pertain to BN's procurement of services and material for the WAMO project. Thus, the provisions of section I.117 quoted above indicate that such records would be contractor-owned records and not government records.

Because we find that the responsive documents are not agency records for the purposes of the FOIA and are not deemed to be DOE property by the DOE-BN contract, we find that the BN documents are not subject to release pursuant to the FOIA or DOE regulations. Consequently, PowerMax's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by PowerMax Inc., on February 15, 2000, Case No. VFA-0559, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S. C. §552 (a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

March 16, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Robert A. Speir

Case Number: VFA-0560

On February 16, 2000, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Appeal filed by Robert A. Speir appealing a determination by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Inspector General (the IG). That determination was issued by the IG on February 2, 2000 in response to our remand of a request for information submitted by Speir in accordance with the provisions of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the IG to release any responsive documents it is withholding.

I. Background

The request sought access to documents containing information about the following four items:

(1) Copies of all records given to any member of Congress or congressional committee related to Speir's receipt of a cash award from the Project on Government Oversight;

(2) All internal records related to DOE consideration of the requests by members of Congress for materials, documents and records related to Speir's receipt of a cash award from the Project on Government Oversight, and also records related to any DOE review regarding the appropriateness of the award;

(3) Records relating to Speir's receipt of a cash award from the Project on Government Oversight provided to the Department of Justice or any other element of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government; and

(4) Copies of records of any contact with members of the press as related to this award.

On November 4, 1999, the IG issued a determination letter withholding an unknown quantity of responsive documents in their entirety under FOIA Exemption 7(A). Speir appealed that determination, contending that the IG had improperly applied Exemption 7(A) in withholding information. Robert A. Speir, 27 DOE ¶ 80,251 (2000) (Speir I). In Speir I, we found that the IG failed to provide a sufficient justification of its withholdings under Exemption 7(A). Specifically we held: "The IG's determination letter does not provide any description of the documents it is withholding. As a result, we are unable to determine how release of the withheld information could reasonably be expected to interfere with the investigation." Speir I at 80,891. Accordingly, we remanded a portion of the Appeal to the IG, stating:

[T]he IG should release the withheld information, withhold it under an alternative FOIA exemption, or issue a new determination letter which includes a description of the withheld documents that is sufficient to provide a reviewer with an opportunity to grasp how disclosure of the documents could reasonably be expected to interfere with an on-going investigation.

Speir I at 80,891. On February 2, 2000, the IG issued a new determination letter in response to our remand. This new determination letter provides a description of the information it is continuing to withhold under Exemption 7(A). On February 16, 2000, Speir filed the present appeal, contending that the description provided by the IG of the withheld information is still inadequate.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9).

The only exemption at issue in the present case is found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A) (1994 & Supp. II 1996). Exemption 7(A) authorizes the withholding of "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that production of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings. " Id.

The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, i.e., as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982); William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996) (Payne). In order to withhold information under Exemption 7, an organization must have statutory authority to enforce a violation of a law or regulation within its authority. Church of Scientology v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 748 (9th Cir. 1979) (remanding to Naval Investigative Service to show that investigation involved enforcement of statute or regulation within its authority).

The IG is charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud, or abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. app. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), (d), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). Accordingly, we have consistently found that the IG compiles information for law enforcement purposes within the meaning of Exemption 7. Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); Keci Corporation, 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1997). The courts have similarly found that the Inspector General's offices in other agencies exercise the requisite law enforcement functions to protect their investigatory files under Exemption 7. E.g., Rural Housing Alliance v. United States Dep't of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Therefore, we find that the documents at issue in this case satisfy the threshold test for application of Exemption 7.

Determining the applicability of Exemption 7(A) in particular requires a two-step analysis focusing on (1) whether a law enforcement proceeding is pending and (2) whether release of information about it could reasonably be expected to cause some foreseeable harm to the pending enforcement proceeding. See Miller v. USDA, 13 F.3d 260, 263 (8th Cir. 1993) (agency must make a specific showing of why disclosure of documents could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings); Crooker v. ATF, 789 F.2d 64, 65-67 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (agency had failed to demonstrate that disclosure would interfere with enforcement proceedings); Grasso v. IRS, 785 F.2d 70, 77 (3d Cir. 1986) ("government must show, by more than conclusory statement, how the particular kinds of investigatory records requested would interfere with a pending enforcement proceeding").

In applying these standards in the past, the courts have found that agencies are not required to make a particularized, case-by-case showing of interference with their investigations. Rather, a generic determination of likely interference is sufficient. See Murray, Jacobs & Abel, 25 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1995) (Murray); NRLB v. Robbins Tire and Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 224 (1978); Crancer v. United States Dep't of Justice, 999 F.2d 1302, 1306 (8th Cir. 1993). It is important to note that even though an agency "need not justify its withholding on a document-by-document basis in court, [it] must itself review each document to determine the category in which it properly belongs." Bevis v. United States Dep't of State, 801 F.2d 1386, 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Bevis). Thus, when an agency elects to use the "generic" approach, it "has a three-fold task. First, it must define its categories functionally. Second, it must conduct a document-by-document review in order to assign the documents to the proper category. Finally, it must explain how the release of each category would interfere with enforcement proceedings." Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389-90; Murray, 25 DOE at 80,576.

Both the statute and the DOE's FOIA regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for any withholdings. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). A reasonably specific justification of a withholding allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Turning to the present appeal, we find that the IG has provided a sufficient description of the withheld records. The determination letter identifies the withheld information as “Memoranda documenting intergovernmental meetings, special agent investigative notes, notes of financial analysis, memoranda of investigative activity, and investigator’s case processing material.” Determination Letter at 1.

The determination letter also provides a sufficient articulation of the harm that could reasonably be expected to occur if the withheld information was released. Specifically the determination letter notes that:

Release of the withheld material at this time could prematurely reveal evidence and interfere with the ongoing enforcement proceeding. . . . [R]elease could tend to prematurely disclose enforcement efforts, or provide individuals involved in the investigation an opportunity to fabricate defenses, destroy evidence, intimidate actual or potential witnesses, or otherwise impede an appropriate resolution of the investigation.

Determination Letter at 1-2. Since we agree with the reasoning set forth by the IG in its determination letter, we find that the IG has properly withheld the information under Exemption 7(A).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Robert A. Speir on February 16, 2000, Case Number VFA-0560, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Leader Environmental, Inc.

Date of Filing: February 23, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0561

On February 23, 2000, Leader Environmental, Inc., (Leader) filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Operations Officer (DOE/OR) issued on January 11, 2000. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appellant challenges the adequacy of DOE/OR's search for documents responsive to its request.

I. Background

On November 29, 1999, the Appellant requested from DOE/OR "[h]istorical records from Army Office of Research and Development (OSRD) and Contracts between Army OSRD and Westinghouse or related to work at Bloomingfield, New Jersey, including OEMSR519 and OEMSR814." Letter from Tom Tuori, Leader, to Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR (November 29, 1999). In a subsequent electronic mail message to DOE/OR, Leader elaborated that the "first group of contracts we are looking for were executed in 1941, 1942 and/or possibly early 1943, and were for experimental uranium processing work conducted . . . to support atomic bomb production activities that were eventually transferred from the OSRD to the Manhattan District Corps of Engineers (the ?Manhattan Project')." Electronic mail from Tom Tuori, Leader, to Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR (December 9, 1999). Leader also expressed interest in material transfer documentation, bills of lading, receipts, invoices, etc. for the unprocessed uranium that was shipped to the Westinghouse Bloomfield, NJ plant; we suspect that the Army controlled the supply of uranium and was directly involved in the shipments of unprocessed uranium to Westinghouse. The shipments would have occurred during 1942 and early 1943.

Id. Finally, the Appellant provided the names of individuals it believed were involved in the transactions that were the subject of the documents it sought. Id.

In its January 11, 2000 determination, DOE/OR released certain documents it located that were responsive to Leader's request. Letter from Amy L. Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Tom Tuori, Leader (January 11, 2000). The present Appeal challenges the adequacy of DOE/OR's search for responsive documents. Letter from Thomas M. Tuori, Leader, to Director, Office of Hearing and Appeals (OHA) (February 17, 2000).

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, upon receiving the present Appeal, we contacted DOE/OR to inquire as to the search it conducted in response to Leader's request. DOE/OR informed us that historical contract documents such as those requested by Leader would be found in DOE/OR's Records Holding Task Group (RHTG) collection. Electronic mail from Linda Chapman, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (March 8, 2000). Staff in this group conducted a search of an RHTG database using the following keywords based on information supplied by Leader: "Westinghouse," "Bloomingfield," "OEMSR519," "OEMSR814," "Vannevar Bush," "J. W. Marden," "Harvey C. Rentschler," "R. C. Stuart," and "R. Newcombs." Electronic mail from Linda Chapman, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (March 3, 2000). This search revealed two documents entitled "Westinghouse Patent Clause" and three items of correspondence, copies of all of which were provided to the requester. Electronic mail from Linda Chapman, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (March 2, 2000).(1)

Based on the above descriptions, we conclude that DOE/OR's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by the Appellant. We have on numerous occasions found that a reasonable search of a computerized document tracking system meets the standard for adequacy set forth in the law. See, e.g., Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 at 80,874 (1999). Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Leader Environmental, Inc., Case Number VFA-0561, is hereby denied.

(1) In processing the present Appeal, we noticed that DOE/OR had searched using the keyword "Bloomingfield," and we pointed out to DOE/OR that the plant in issue was located in Bloomfield, New Jersey. DOE/OR then performed a similar search of the RHTG database using the keyword "Bloomfield." Electronic mail from Linda Chapman, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (March 22, 2000). This search produced an additional potentially responsive document, which has been forwarded to the requester. DOE/OR also searched two card files and one electronic database cataloging "SF-135" forms, which are used to record the transmittal and receipt of records. These additional searches located no responsive documents. Id.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Donald R. Patterson

Date of Filing: February 24, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0562

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by Donald R. Patterson from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Chicago Operations Office. In this determination, the Chicago Office denied Mr. Patterson's request for a waiver of fees with regard to a request that he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Mr. Patterson asks that we grant his request for a fee waiver.

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. The Act also provides for the assessment of fees for the processing of requests for documents. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(I); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the DOE is authorized to grant a full or partial waiver of applicable fees in certain circumstances.

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Mr. Patterson sought access to information relating to the investigation and resolution of allegations of reprisals taken against employees of the Argonne National Laboratory (Argonne) for reporting safety and health concerns; to modifications to the software program of Argonne's Advance Photon Source Access Control and Interlock System (APS); to an article which describes how to use the APS computer network and the Internet to search for jobs outside of Argonne; to an annual performance appraisal of Mr. Patterson for the period from June 1, 1995 through May 31, 1996; and to e-mail communications concerning daily meetings called by a named individual to check on the progress of APS technicians. Mr. Patterson further requested that all applicable fees arising from the processing of his request be waived. In support of this request, Mr. Patterson stated that release of this information would contribute to the public's understanding of government operations or activities. He said that the "disclosed information, if deemed to be appropriate, will be used as the basis for written and verbal communications with other members of the public" on the topics of how the government: (i) responds to allegations of retaliation against whistleblowers, (ii) controls modifications to safety equipment; (iii) implements its computer use policies; and (iv) oversees the work output of its contractor employees. January 16, 2000 Letter from Mr. Patterson to Linda Rohde, Chicago Operations Office, at 4. In a letter dated February 4, 2000, the Chicago Office denied Mr. Patterson's fee waiver request based on its findings that "(1) any benefit to the general public is outweighed by a personal benefit to [Mr. Patterson]; and (2) [Mr. Patterson has] not described [his] expertise in the subject area to effectively convey the information; and the specific method which will be utilized by [Mr. Patterson] to disseminate the information to the general public."

In his Appeal, Mr. Patterson argues that he will not benefit personally from the requested information. Instead, he contends that he will present the information to his elected representatives in an attempt to convince them that the current whistleblower laws and DOE policies are ineffective. He adds that, if requested, he will "testify at congressional hearings to inform all of Congress and the general public" about his concerns. Appeal at 3.

II. Analysis

The DOE will grant a full or partial waiver of applicable fees if disclosure of the information sought in a FOIA request (i) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government, and (ii) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii). The burden of satisfying this two- prong test is on the requester. Larson v. Central Intelligence Agency, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (per curiam). The DOE has implemented the statutory standard for fee waivers in its FOIA regulations. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8). Those regulations set forth the following four factors that an agency must consider to determine whether the requester has met the first statutory fee waiver condition, i.e., whether disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

(A) the subject of the request: whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government";

(B) the informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(C) the contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure; and

(D) the significance of the contribution to public understanding: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i). Finally, in addition to satisfying these four factors, the DOE must also find that disclosure of the requested information would not be primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii). In making this determination, the DOE must, in most cases, consider whether the requester has a commercial interest that would be furthered by the requested disclosure, and, if so, whether that commercial interest outweighs the public interest in disclosure.

After reviewing the arguments raised by Mr. Patterson, we find that he has failed to demonstrate that release of the requested information is in the public interest because it would be likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the activities of the government. Specifically, we find Factor (C), the contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure, to be dispositive of this matter. In previous cases, we have determined that in order to receive a waiver of fees, a requester must demonstrate both the intent, and the means, to disseminate the requested information to the general public. See, e.g., James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992). The federal courts have held that in considering whether a requester satisfies this criterion, the relevant inquiry is whether he or she will disseminate the disclosed records to a reasonably broad audience of persons interested in the subject. Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). The inability to disseminate information, by itself, is sufficient basis for denying a fee waiver request. Larson v. CIA, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988). See also Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1998) (Murphy).

In this case, Mr. Patterson has not demonstrated that he is capable of achieving the type of wide dissemination of information needed to qualify for a fee waiver. His statements that the information will form the basis of communications with an unspecified number of "other members of the public," and with his elected representatives, do not suggest that he will be able to disseminate the information to a reasonably broad audience of interested persons. See, e.g., Crooker v. Department of the Army, 577 F. Supp. 1220, 1223 (D.D.C. 1984) (rejecting fee waiver under previous standard for information of interest to a small segment of the scientific community); Fazzini v. United States Department of Justice, No. 90 C 3303, slip op. at 12 (N.D. Ill. May 2, 1991) (requester cannot establish a public benefit merely by alleging that he has corresponded with members of the media and intends to share the requested information with them). See also Murphy (doctoral student who intends to include requested information in thesis has not demonstrated ability to disseminate to a reasonably broad academic audience); Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,167 (1998) (stated intention to share information with the general public insufficient to show ability to achieve meaningful dissemination). While it is possible that Mr. Patterson's elected representatives could convey information of the type he requested to a broader audience, there is no indication that they would be interested in doing so, and Mr. Patterson's prospects of presenting the requested data and other information at any type of congressional hearing are, at best, speculative.

Furthermore, Mr. Patterson has not indicated that he has the technical expertise needed to make the requested information understandable to a significant portion of the public. A portion of his request is for technical information concerning modifications to the APS software. Mr. Patterson has not described his qualifications in this area, and has therefore failed to demonstrate an ability to effectively convey this information to others. See, e.g., McClellan Ecological Seepage Situation v. Carlucci, 835 F. 2d 1282 (9th Cir. 1987).

For these reasons, we find that disclosure of the requested information to Mr. Patterson is unlikely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities and is therefore not in the public interest. We conclude that the Chicago Office correctly denied his request for a fee waiver. (1)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Donald R. Patterson in Case No. VFA-0562 is hereby denied.

a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)In finding that any benefit to the general public would be outweighed by a personal benefit to Mr. Patterson, it appears that the Chicago Office incorrectly applied the second requirement for a fee waiver. As previously stated, that requirement is that release of the information not be primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. However, because Mr. Patterson has not documented that release of the information is in the public interest, we need not address the issue of whether such a release would be primarily in his commercial interest.

April 5, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Tri-Valley CAREs

Case Number: VFA-0563

On March 8, 2000, Tri-Valley CAREs filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Oakland Operations Office (Oakland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on February 3, 2000. In its determination, Oakland denied Tri-Valley CAREs' request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oakland to release the information it withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are reflected in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

Background

In a letter dated January 25, 2000, Tri-Valley CAREs submitted a FOIA request to Oakland for a copy of a report by Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) to DOE on rebaselining for the National Ignition Facility (NIF). Tri-Valley CAREs asserted that it was not a draft document. Further, it stated that it was signed by LLNL Associate Director George Miller and issued in November 1999. Request Letter dated January 25, 2000, from Sally Light, Nuclear Program Analyst, Tri-Valley CAREs, to Oakland. On February 3, 2000, Oakland denied the request, stating that the document was still a draft and, therefore, was being withheld under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated February 3, 2000, from Martin J. Domagala, Deputy Manager, FOIA Authorizing Official.

In its Appeal, Tri-Valley CAREs claims that the report is final and, therefore, not predecisional and deliberative. Appeal Letter dated March 2, 2000, from Marylia Kelley, Executive Director, Tri-Valley CAREs, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. Secondly, it argues that the report has been referred to as a "final" report and used by the Secretary of Energy Advisory Board (SEAB) NIF Task Force, which includes non-governmental members. Id. It claims the deliberative process privilege has been waived, if it existed at all. Id. Finally, Tri-Valley CAREs maintains that information that was not predecisional or deliberative should have been segregated and released. Id.

Analysis

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party … in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958)).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In addition to providing categories of records exempt from mandatory disclosure, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

We believe that the report Tri-Valley CAREs requested is a draft document. Although it was signed by George Miller, Associate Director of LLNL, it was not released to the public. It contained LLNL's recommendations to DOE for the rebaselining of the NIF. Tri-Valley CAREs argues that because the report was used by the SEAB, whose members consist of non-DOE employees, it has been released to the public. We disagree. Courts have determined that Exemption 5 protects from mandatory disclosure more than documents circulated strictly among agency personnel. See Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1078 (D.C. Cir. 1971). Exemption 5 has been found to extend as well to communications between an agency and individuals whom the agency consults. See, e.g., Lead Indus. Ass'n v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70,83 (2d Cir. 1979); American Soc. Of Pensions Actuaries v. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., 3 GDS ¶ 83,182, at 83,845 (D.D.C. 1983).

Specifically, courts have found that an agency's limited release of a document to outsiders to serve a legitimate government purpose does not waive the document's confidentiality under Exemption 5. See, e.g., Cooper v. Department of the Navy, 558, F.2d 274, 278 (5th Cir. 1977); modified on rehearing, 594 F.2d 484, 485 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 926 (1979); Badhwar v. Department of the Air Force, 629 F. Supp. 478 (D.D.C. 1986); see also Coalition for Safe Power, 16 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1987); Idaho Statesman, 7 DOE ¶ 80,102, at 80,504 (1981). The SEAB provides advice, information, and recommendations to the Secretary of Energy on DOE's basic and applied research activities, economic and national security policy, educational issues, laboratory management, and on any other activities and operations of the DOE as the Secretary requests. In this instance, the Secretary consulted with the SEAB to formulate recommendations on the rebaselining of the NIF. Disclosure of the report to the members of the SEAB in order to utilize their expertise in the rebaselining of the NIF consequently is not a waiver.

However, Oakland's Determination Letter did not address the issues of whether the report contains any factual information that could be released. Accordingly, we will remand the case to Oakland. On remand, Oakland shall review the document and segregate and release all factual portions of the report, or issue a new determination that justifies their withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CAREs, on March 8, 2000, Case No. VFA-0563, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Oakland Operations Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: March 13, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0564

On March 13, 2000, Barbara Schwarz filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on March 1, 2000, by the Office of Counterintelligence (OC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information she filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Ms. Schwarz challenges the adequacy of OC's search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Ms. Schwarz filed a request for information in which she sought information concerning German efforts (1) behind the nuclear weapons and other weapons of nations that are hostile to the United States; and (2) behind terrorists acts and wars against the United States or other countries that the United States wants to protect. On March 1, 2000, OC issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search of its files and found no documents responsive to the Appellant’s request. See Determination Letter. On March 13, 2000, Ms. Schwarz filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In her Appeal, Ms. Schwarz challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by OC.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at OC to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Schwarz' request might exist. Upon receiving Ms. Schwarz' request for information, OC instituted a search of its systems of records and files. Specifically, OC searched two of its system of records, DOE-81 "Counterintelligence Administrative and Analytical Records and Reports," and DOE-84 "Counterintelligence Investigative Records." Based on this search, OC indicated that it found no records responsive to Ms. Schwarz' request. OC has informed us that these two systems of records are the only two systems of records that would possibly contain responsive information. See March 27, 2000 Record of Telephone Conversation between Gary Chidester, OC and Kimberly Jenkins- Chapman, OHA. Given the facts presented to us, we find that OC conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Ms. Schwarz' request. Therefore, we must deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz, OHA Case No. VFA-0564, on March 13, 2000, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. ENG Services

Date of Filing: March 17, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0565

On March 17, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on March 2, 2000. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In that determination, documents were released to the Appellant. In its Appeal, the Appellant asserts that RFFO's search for records was inadequate. If granted, this Appeal would require RFFO to conduct a further search.

Background

In a letter dated November 1, 1999, the Appellant requested information pertaining to the visit of General Eugene E. Habiger, Director of Security and Emergency Operations, DOE, to RFFO.(1) He listed four specific items in his request, including:

1) Any and all unclassified documentation in the possession of the U.S. DOE which was specifically generated and/or gathered as a result of the visit and in order to present the status of safeguards and security at Rocky Flats to Gen. Habiger.

2) A listing (only) of the unclassified titles, dates and the office responsible for generating any and all classified documentation in the possession of the U.S. DOE which was generated, gathered and/or used as a reference material in the presentation of the status of safeguards and security at Rocky Flats to Gen. Habiger.

3) Any and all unclassified reports, notes, directions or instructions dealing in any way with the status of safeguards and security at Rocky Flats produced by the DOE or its contractors as a result of the above visit.

4) A listing (only) of the unclassified titles and dates for any and all classified reports, notes, directions or instructions dealing in any way with the status of safeguards and security at Rocky Flats produced by the DOE or its contractors as a result of the above visit.

Request Letter dated November 1, 1999, from David E. Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to Mary Hammack, FOIA/Privacy Act Officer, RFFO (Request Letter). On March 2, 2000, RFFO issued a determination releasing four documents to the Appellant. In addition, RFFO identified two classified documents that needed to be sent for review to DOE Office of Declassification.

On March 17, 2000, the Appellant filed this Appeal, alleging that RFFO's search for documents was too narrow. Appeal Letter dated March 9, 2000, from David E. Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (Appeal Letter). The Appeal contends "[t]he request covered information used to prepare for the visits, information presented during the visits, and information resulting from the visits" of General Habiger. Id. at 2. The Appellant believes that RFFO only looked at a portion of the information that was generated in preparation for the visits. Further, the Appellant believes that only DOE's contractor was searched for documents. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985);accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

The Appellant is requesting anything connected to General Habiger's visits to RFFO that was generated either prior to, during, or after those visits. It is our understanding that virtually no documents were created prior to General Habiger's visit. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated March 30, 2000, between Mary Hammack, FOI/Privacy Act Officer, RFFO, and Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE. We contacted RFFO to determine what type of search was conducted. We were told that the Facilities Disposition office was contacted initially to determine if it had any information in its possession. Facilities Disposition indicated that Communications--Tours and Visits should be contacted as well as Kaiser Hill Company L.L.C. Security (Kaiser-Hill) and Wackenhut Services, L.L.C. (Wackenhut). Kaiser-Hill and Wackenhut responded that they had no relevant documents. We specifically asked about the documents the Appellant alleged in the Appeal Letter should have been created, i.e., "Pope/Lavernier notes, findings, report or similar document providing the results of their weeks long investigation and the training documents, shift orders and post orders [Wackenhut] produced for the guard force to implement the use of hardened fighting positions." Appeal Letter at 1. RFFO indicated that it does not have any notes, findings, reports, or other documents from either Mr. Pope or Mr. Lavernier.(2) See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated April 4, 2000, between Mary Hammack, FOI/Privacy Act Officer, RFFO, and Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE. Further, Wackenhut did not create any training documents, shift orders, or post orders either prior to or during General Habiger's visit. As of the date of the Appellant's request, none of these documents had been created following General Habiger's visit. Id.

The Appellant asserts also that RFFO's response--namely, "no classified [documents] were produced by the DOE's contractors"-- shows that a whole category of information, i.e., DOE generated documents, were omitted from the search. Appeal Letter at 1. This is incorrect. In fact, as stated in the determination letter, RFFO, Kaiser-Hill, and Wackenhut were all searched for responsive documents. Determination Letter dated March 2, 2000, from Mary Hammack, FOI/Privacy Act Officer, RFFO, to Mr. David E. Ridenour, P. E. RFFO admits that the sentence was improperly worded but was intended to reiterate that both the DOE contractors and DOE offices were searched for documents. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated April 4, 2000, between Mary Hammack, FOI/Privacy Act Officer, RFFO, and Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE. Six documents were found at RFFO, four of which were released to the Appellant and two that must be reviewed by the DOE Office of Declassification.

We are convinced that RFFO followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in its request. See Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). The fact that the search did not uncover the documents that the Appellant believes may be in the possession of DOE does not mean that the search was inadequate. In the Appeal, the Appellant alleges that General Habiger personally assured him that he would “leave no stone unturned.” Appeal Letter at 1. The Appellant is apparently convinced that General Habiger’s comment proves that more documents must exist. We are unpersuaded by this argument. RFFO searched the appropriate offices and found only the four documents it released to the Appellant and the two classified documents that must be reviewed by the DOE Office of Declassification. The Appellant has not directed us to any other office at RFFO that should be searched, but merely asserts that there must be more information. Mere speculation that an as yet discovered document may exist does not undermine the conclusion that the agency conducted a reasonable search for responsive documents.

Conclusion

RFFO conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by the Appellant in its request. RFFO searched both DOE and its contractors administrative records and four documents were released to the Appellant. Therefore, we will deny the Appellant’s Appeal.

April 24, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Lisa R. Tunstall-German

Date of Filing: March 28, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0566

On March 28, 2000, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Appeal filed by Lisa A. Tunstall-German (the Appellant) appealing a determination by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services (Personnel). Personnel issued that determination on September 30, 1999, in response to a request for information submitted by the Appellant in accordance with the provisions of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Personnel to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

I. Background

The present case arises out of a personnel dispute. The Appellant was not selected for a Program Analyst position for which she had applied. Personnel apparently informed the Appellant that she was not selected for the Program Analyst position because she had declined the position. The Appellant claims that she never declined the position. On September 3, 1999, the Appellant filed a FOIA request with Personnel. The request sought "copies of all documentation that was submitted to reflect that [she] declined the position advertised in Vacancy Announcement Number:97-EE20- 0038, Program Analyst, GS-343-13." (1) On September 30, 1999, Personnel issued a Determination Letter to the Appellant in which it released one document that was responsive to her request, a selection certificate for the above-mentioned program analyst position. (2) The determination letter explained that the selection certificate was the only documentation available and further stated: "You will note that there is no requirement in the Merit Promotion Plan to retain information concerning the reason for declination by an applicant." (3) Determination Letter at 1 (emphasis supplied). On March 28, 2000, the Appellant filed the present appeal, contending that Personnel's search for responsive documents was not adequate. (4)

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9).

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

Personnel has apparently misinterpreted the Appellant's request. The Appellant was seeking any documents in Personnel's files that would show that she declined the position, while Personnel's Determination Letter indicates that it searched for information that would indicate the Appellant's reasons for declining the position.

Accordingly, we are remanding this request to Personnel. On remand, Personnel must conduct a search for any documents that would indicate that the Appellant declined the Program Analyst position. If Personnel locates any documents responsive to this request, it must issue a new determination letter either releasing or withholding them under an appropriately applied exemption. If Personnel's search fails to locate any documents that are responsive to the remanded request, it must issue a new Determination Letter describing the search and indicating that no responsive documents were located.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Lisa R. Tunstall-German on March 28, 2000, Case Number VFA-0566, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

Date: April 24, 2000

(1) The Appellant's request contained several elements; her Appeal, however, focuses on only one of these elements.

(2) The DOE's FOIA regulations require that an appeal be filed within 30 calendar days after the appellant receives a determination letter. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). The Appellant has missed this deadline by almost six months. Under these circumstances, we could exercise our discretion to decline jurisdiction over this matter. However, we have decided to consider the present Appeal.

(3) The Determination Letter released several other documents which were responsive to elements of the Appellant's request that are not at issue in the present case.

(4) The present Appeal also challenges a personnel determination affecting the Appellant. However, this office does not have jurisdiction under the Freedom of Information Act to consider these matters.

April 21, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: March 27, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0567

On March 27, 2000, Barbara Schwarz filed an Appeal from a determination by the Department of Energy Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Group (DOE/FOI). This determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A). However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA setting forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(B). Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In a request dated June 18, 1999, Ms. Schwarz requested from the DOE documents within the following categories:

1) As to that the Germans are behind the nuclear weapons and other weapons of nations that are hostile to the United States,

2) As to that the Germans are behind terror acts and wars against the United States or against other countries which the United States want to protect,

3) As to a civilian submarine in the Great Salt Lake, that protects it's [sic] residents from all kind of pollution and germs with the result that people stay young and have currently at least double the lifespan than people not living in this village,

4) As to L. Ron Hubbard and proposed energy programs and environmental programs and nuclear counterintelligence programs proposed by him,

5) As to Claude, Elizabeth, Phillip, Mark C., Harvey L., Edwin, Willard, Olivia Rathbun (de Rothschild) and proposed energy programs, environmental programs and nuclear counterintelligence programs proposed by them,

6) As to myself, Barbara Schwarz or misspelled version Schwartz,

7) As to if Mark C. Rathbun (de Rothschild)[,] members of his family, their attorneys or any Independent or Special Counsel inquired records pertaining to myself from the Dept. of Energy.

Letter from Barbara Schwarz to DOE (June 18, 1999).

On October 20, 1999, DOE/FOI sent a response to Ms. Schwarz. DOE/FOI first stated that it had informed Ms. Schwarz in a July 19, 1999 letter that items 1 and 2 of her request "did not describe the records you were requesting with sufficient specificity for the DOE to conduct a search for responsive documents. This response, therefore, responds to items 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of your request." Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI (October 20, 1999). The response then informed Ms. Schwarz that the files of five offices at Headquarters were searched for documents responsive to your request. These offices were the Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs, the Policy, Standards and Analysis Division in the Office of Safeguards and Security, the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, the Office of Inspector General, and the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation.

Id. DOE/FOI reported that (1) the searches of the first three offices listed produced no documents responsive to items 3 through 7 of her request; (2) DOE/IG has already provided a separate response to Ms. Schwarz; and (3) the search of the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation located only one document, the July 19, 1999 letter to Ms. Schwarz referred to above regarding the lack of specificity of the first two items of her request. Id. That document was provided to Ms. Schwarz in its entirety along with DOE/FOI's October 20, 1999 response.

Ms. Schwarz filed an Appeal on November 2, 1999, contending that the DOE's search for documents responsive to her request was inadequate. She also took issue with the DOE/FOI's opinion that items 1 and 2 of her request did not sufficiently describe the records she was seeking. On December 2, 1999, we issued a decision on the Appeal, in which we remanded the matter to DOE/FOI to coordinate further searches of the Office of Safeguards and Security (OSS) and the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services for documents responsive to items 3 through 7 of her request, and to invite Ms. Schwarz to confer with knowledgeable DOE personnel in an attempt to clarify her description of the documents she was seeking in items 1 and 2 of her request.

On March 9, 2000, DOE/FOI issued a new determination to the Appellant. DOE/FOI stated that a further search by the OSS located 40 responsive documents, which DOE/FOI enclosed with its determination. Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI, to Barbara Schwarz (March 9, 2000). DOE/FOI deleted information from five of the documents, citing Exemption 6 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6). Id. The additional search by the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, however, located no responsive documents. Id. at 2. The determination by DOE/FOI also reported the results of searches for documents responsive to items 1 and 2 of the request, by the Office of International Affairs, the Office of Security and Emergency Operations, and the History Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat. Of these searches, only that conducted by the History Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat revealed a potentially responsive document, which was released to the Appellant in its entirety. Id. at 2-3. The present Appeal challenges DOE/FOI's withholding of information under Exemption 6 as well of the adequacy of searches reported in DOE/FOI's March 9 determination letter.(1)

II. Analysis

A. DOE/FOI's Withholding of Information Under FOIA Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Fin. Management Serv., 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1056 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-70.

In its March 9 determination, DOE/FOI stated that it deleted from certain documents released to the Appellant the "names of individuals who held security clearances or who were subject to security investigations . . . ." Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI, to Barbara Schwarz (March 9, 2000) at 1. From our review of the documents, it appears that certain information regarding two employees of Atomic Energy Commission (AEC, a predecessor agency to the DOE)(2) contractors was brought to the attention of AEC Personnel Security officials in 1968. This information concerned the two AEC contractor employees' connections to the Hubbard College of Scientology. Redacted from the documents released to the appellant are the names of the two persons, as well as other information that could identify them.

We have no doubt that these two individuals have a significant privacy interest in preventing the public release of their identities in this context, as the Supreme Court has recognized under Exemption 6 the privacy interests of the subjects of official inquiries. Department of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352 (privacy interests of Air Force Academy cadets subject to honor and ethics inquiries); Church of Scientology v. United States Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 747 (9th Cir. 1979) ("A reasonable person would be very likely to find that disclosure of religious affiliations and activities would constitute an invasion of his or her privacy.").(3)

As for whether release of the information withheld would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government, the Appellant argues,

Disclosure of [information withheld under] Exemption 6 would be very well in [the] public interest, because the time showed that L. Ron Hubbard and also some other scientologists were target[s] of libel and slander by a German oriented, German originated and German controlled Nazi-conspiracy, in which also U.S. officials participated.

Appeal at 2. We disagree. The information already released to the appellant clearly sheds light on the operation and activities of the Government in investigating AEC contractor employees with connections to Scientology organizations. However, the information withheld from those documents, the names of the individuals investigated and other information that could identify them, says little if anything about the activities of the Government. Weighing the significant privacy interests at stake on one hand, and the slight public interest on the other, we conclude that Exemption 6 was properly applied to the information withheld from Ms. Schwarz.

B. Adequacy of DOE's Search for Responsive Documents

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v.

Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982). In order to determine whether the search conducted by these offices was adequate under the FOIA, we contacted each office and requested information as to how it went about its search.

1. Search on Remand for Documents Responsive to Items 3 Through 7 of Ms. Schwarz's Request

As discussed above, in a December 2, 1999 decision on an earlier Appeal filed by Ms. Schwarz, we remanded the matter to DOE/FOI to coordinate further searches of the Office of Safeguards and Security (OSS) and the Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services for documents responsive to items 3 through 7 of her request.

In response to our query, OSS provided the following information as to the search it conducted. First, the office determined that any document responsive to Ms. Schwarz' request would be found in a search of our Central Personnel Clearance Index (CPCI); our clearance records on microfiche that cover all clearances or individuals considered for clearances, extending back to the . . . late 1940's; and this office's Information Management Center (IMC), which contains correspondence and records covering the information and subjects that Ms. Schwarz asked about.

. . . Please be advised that the CPCI records were searched electronically and the microfiche records were searched manually. The records in IMC were searched both electronically and manually.

Memorandum from Lynn Gebrowsky, Policy Standards and Analysis Division, OSS, to Steven Goering, OHA (April 13, 2000).

The Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services searched its Senior Executive Performance Appraisal Records in the Executive and Technical Resource Division; Lending Library files and records in the Career Management Resource Center; Computer database, office files and old office records in the Employment and Classification Division; Medical records and files, performance, conduct, leave, and family-friendly records and requests (e.g., leave transfer) in the Employee and Labor Relations Division; and Correspondence files. In each of these areas, the Office conducted a manual search of office files, and an automated search of computer hard drives by all staff members in all existing software applications. The office also performed a name search of its computerized Corporate Human Resources Information System (CHRIS) and Department of Energy Information Database (DOEInfo). Electronic mail from Marilyn Greene, Office of Headquarters and Executive Personnel Services, to Steven Goering, OHA (April 19, 2000).

2. Search for Documents Responsive to Items 1 and 2 of Ms. Schwarz's Request

Ms. Schwarz also challenges the adequacy of searches for documents responsive to items 1 and 2 of the request, by the Office of International Affairs, the Office of Security and Emergency Operations, and the History Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat. These three offices provided the following information regarding their respective searches.

The Office of Security and Emergency Operations conducted a visual file search of all its internal files as well as an electronic query of the SOCOTS correspondence tracking system. Electronic mail from Pat Daly, Office of Security and Emergency Operations, to Steven Goering, OHA (April 19, 2000). The Office of International Affairs coordinated a search of its entire organization by "consultation with IA managers on whether they would have any documents relating to any terrorist acts or threats to the U.S. from any nation within their respective offices including employees under their supervision." Electronic mail from Nicole Chesley, Office of International Affairs, to Steven Goering, OHA (April 14, 2000).

Finally, a historian in the History Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat stated that she did not believe her division would have any documents responsive to the first two items of the Appellant's request, but nonetheless consulted an index that categorized by subject documents of the AEC Secretariat dating from 1958 through 1974. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Marie Hallion, Office of the Executive Secretariat, and Steven Goering, OHA (April 10, 2000).

Based on the above descriptions, we conclude that the searches conducted by all of the above offices were reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by Ms. Schwarz. Though there was not one uniform search method used, each office clearly made a conscientious effort to locate all responsive documents it might have, either by notifying personnel of the request and asking them to provide responsive documents, or by searching indices, document tracking systems, and computer systems.(4)

In sum, because we find that DOE/FOI properly withheld information from the requester under Exemption 6, and that the DOE offices conducted adequate searches for documents responsive to Ms. Schwarz's request, the present Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0567, is hereby denied.

Office of Hearings and Appeals

(1) Ms. Schwarz also complains that DOE files contain mainly negative and untrue information about L. Ron Hubbard. However, the purpose of the FOIA is to provide access to documents the government has, not to ensure that the documents the government has are accurate or portray subjects in a positive light.

(2) The Appellant asks in her Appeal why the DOE has not conducted a search of the Atomic Energy Commission or the "Energy, Research and Development Office, . . ." Appeal at 2. The Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA), like the AEC, is a predecessor agency to the DOE. As such, ERDA and the AEC no longer exist.

(3) Contrary to the argument of the Appellant, the death of L. Ron Hubbard has no relevance to whether the information was properly withheld under Exemption 6. Appeal at 2.

(4) Ms. Schwarz asserts in her Appeal that no DOE offices searched for documents responsive to items 3 through 7 of her request. Appeal at 1-2. This is not correct. As discussed in our December 2, 1999 decision on Ms. Schwarz's earlier Appeal, six DOE offices conducted searches in response to this portion of the appellant's request. Ms. Schwarz also specifically complains that the Office of International Affairs and the Office of Security and Emergency Operations only conducted searches for documents responsive to items 1 and 2 of her request. Appeal at 2. However, under the DOE FOIA regulations, the Freedom of Information Officer at any DOE location, in this case the Director of DOE/FOI at DOE Headquarters, has the authority to determine which office would have "responsibility for, custody of, or concern with the records requested." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(a). We can therefore safely assume that DOE/FOI forwarded the items of Ms. Schwarz's request to the offices it determined was most likely to have responsive documents. Further, we see no basis, and the appellant provides us none, to question the determination of DOE/FOI that the Office of International Affairs and the Office of Security and Emergency Operations would not have documents responsive to items 3 through 7 of her request.

May 31, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: David E. Ridenour

Date of Filing: April 10, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0570

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that David E. Ridenour filed from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Albuquerque Operations Office (AOO). In this determination, AOO informed Mr. Ridenour that no documents were located that were responsive to a request for information that he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require AOO to conduct a further search for responsive materials.

In his request, Mr. Ridenour sought access to all records relating to a report that he alleges AOO prepared about him in 1997. Such records were to include communications between AOO and other state and federal offices or private investigatory agencies about the report, documents concerning the cost of the investigation and distribution of the report, and documents concerning the propriety of conducting the investigation and the qualifications of the investigators, such as the mission statement of the Office assigned the work and the job description of David Fredrickson, the author of the report. In its response, AOO informed Mr. Ridenour that the investigator searched for responsive documents "but could not locate any. [Mr. Fredrickson] also stated ? The referenced report was prepared under the direction and auspices of the Office of Chief Counsel (OCC) [at] Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO). The report and all background materials were turned over to that Office at the conclusion of the investigation. Therefore, the records, as well as the authority for release, remain with OCC, RFFO.'" Determination letter at 1. The letter also stated that the AOO's Office of Chief Counsel searched for responsive documents, but could not locate any, and that Mr. Ridenour's request was being transferred to RFFO, which would respond directly to him.

In his Appeal, Mr. Ridenour contests the adequacy of AOO's search for responsive documents. He argues that it is not credible that the AOO conducted an investigation and prepared a report, yet did not keep a copy of the report. Moreover, Mr. Ridenour contends that he should have been provided copies of the investigating office's mission statement and the job description of the named investigator. Finally, Mr. Ridenour argues that these and other responsive documents, such as telephone billing records, letters, and timekeeping and pay records exist, and he contends that AOO should have searched its phone records, mail logs, e-mails, faxes and the word processing system backups and archive tapes for the period during which the report was generated.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to evaluate the adequacy of the search, we contacted the AOO. We were informed that the investigation referred to by Mr. Ridenour was not an investigation of him by AOO, but was instead an inquiry by the Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO) into its own internal operations, and that the inquiry was conducted entirely at RFFO using RFFO equipment and office space. See May 5, 2000 memorandum from Mr. Fredrickson to Carolyn Becknell, Acting FOI Officer; see also memorandum of May 16, 2000 telephone conversation between Terry Martin Apodaca, AOO, Mr. Fredrickson, and Robert Palmer, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Mr. Fredrickson further stated that although the report was drafted in Albuquerque, he worked on a laptop computer offsite in order to minimize distractions, that all hard copies were forwarded to RFFO, and the disks used “were not retained . . . after completion of the inquiry.” Id. With regard to Mr. Ridenour’s contention that he should have been provided with copies of the investigating office’s mission statement and Mr. Fredrickson’s job description, Ms. Apodaca stated that RFFO, and not AOO, was the investigating office and should be in possession of the mission statement, and that AOO erred in not providing a copy of Mr. Fredrickson’s job description to Mr. Ridenour. By letter dated May 18, 2000, AOO provided Mr. Ridenour with the job description.

Based on the foregoing, we find no reason to believe that additional responsive documents exist in AOO’s phone records, mail logs, e-mails, faxes, or the word processing system backups and archive tapes. We further conclude that AOO’s search for responsive documents was adequate, and that Mr. Ridenour’s Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by David Ridenour on April 10, 2000 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Robert H. Calhoun, Jr.

Date of Filing: April 27, 2000

Robert H. Calhoun, Jr. (Calhoun) filed this Appeal on April 27, 2000 with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a determination that the DOE Albuquerque Operations Office (AO) issued to Calhoun on March 27, 2000. The determination concerned a request for information that Calhoun submitted pursuant to the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, and the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Parts 1004 and 1008. If the present Appeal were granted, AO would be required to release any responsive material.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

The Privacy Act was enacted to prevent the unnecessary dissemination of personal information compiled about individuals by federal agencies. The Act also requires each agency to permit a requester to gain access to information pertaining to him which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). However, under the Privacy Act, agencies may provide that some systems of records are not subject to the Act's disclosure provisions, but only to the extent that those records fall under certain specified exemptions. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k).

I. Background

On October 28, 1999, Calhoun requested a copy of his DOE Personnel Security File (PSF). AO found 70 documents in Calhoun's PSF and withheld portions of five documents, specifically Documents 11, 25, 26, 27, and 28. See Letter from AO to Calhoun (March 27, 2000) (Determination Letter). The Director of the Personnel Security Division of AO withheld portions of Documents 11, 25, 26, 27, and 28 pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5) (Exemption 5 of the Privacy Act) and 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(d) (Exemption 7(d) of the FOIA). According to the DOE, the information deleted from these documents was obtained by sources who were promised confidentiality in exchange for their information. Determination Letter at 2. Other withheld documents contained information that was generated by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), and that material was referred to OPM for review and possible release. Id.

Calhoun appealed the Determination in a letter to OHA. He contends that the withheld documents should be released to him "in a paraphrased manner," i.e., without names, times and dates. Letter from Calhoun to OHA (April 17, 2000) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

A. Privacy Act Exemption (k)(5) and FOIA Exemption 7(D)

In first party requests such as this one, information responsive to the request is provided to the requester unless there is an exemption in each statute authorizing withholding. Applicable here are Privacy Act Exemption (k)(5) and FOIA Exemption 7(D).

Exemption (k)(5) of the Privacy Act permits the withholding of "investigatory material compiled solely for the purpose of determining suitability, eligibility or qualifications for Federal civilian employment, . . . or access to classified information, but only to the extent that the disclosure of such material would reveal the identity of a source who furnished information to the Government under an express promise that the identity of the source would be held in confidence . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5). See Roy Chavez, 27 DOE ¶ 80,203 (1999). In creating Exemption (k)(5), Congress recognized the need to protect the sources of information to whom promises of confidentiality had been made. See Chey Temple, 25 DOE ¶ 80,194 (1996). AO stated that the sources were given confidentiality in this investigation. Determination Letter at 2. See also Frank Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999).

Exemption 7(D) of the FOIA provides that "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes" may be withheld, "but only to the extent that the production of such documents "could reasonably be expected to disclose the identity of a confidential source . . . which furnished information on a confidential basis . . . and, in the case of a record or information compiled by . . . an agency conducting a lawful national security intelligence investigation, information furnished by a confidential source." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(D); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iv). Exemption 7(D) is designed to protect confidential sources from retaliation that may result from the disclosure of their participation in law enforcement activities, and to encourage cooperation with law enforcement agencies by enabling the agencies to keep their informants' identities confidential. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732 (2d. Cir. 1995). A source is confidential if the source provided information under an express assurance of confidentiality or in circumstances from which such an assurance could be reasonably inferred. Id., citing United States v. Landano, 508 U.S. 165; 113 S. Ct. 2014, 2019 (1993). We find that AO gave the sources an express assurance of confidentiality. Determination Letter at 2.

Calhoun does not contest the applicability of either exemption. In fact, he states that he "can appreciate the concern for confidentiality." Appeal Letter. Rather, he suggests that the material be furnished to him without identifying names, times and dates. Id.

After a careful review of unredacted copies of the five withheld documents, we concur with AO's deletions from Documents 11, 25, 26, and 27. AO properly deleted information that could compromise the identity of confidential sources. However, we do not agree with AO's withholding of Document 28 in its entirety. According to AO, that action was necessary in order to shield from the requester the identity of the office that originated the document. Nonetheless, we find that the last page of Document 28 may contain releaseable information, i.e., information that would not, if released, reveal the identity of the confidential informant. Therefore, we find that DOE/AL should release the non-exempt information on the final page of Document 28, or issue a determination justifying any continued withholding of non-exempt information on this page.

B. Segregability

The FOIA also requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material); Greenpeace, 26 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1996), citing Canyon Consultants, 21 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1991) (release of non-exempt material not required if it would compromise the confidentiality of the withheld material). We conclude that, with the previously mentioned exception, AO did properly identify and release segregable, non-exempt material to the requester.

C. Public Interest

We find that release of the withheld material would not be in the public interest. Although DOE is committed to keeping the public informed about the agency, DOE is also concerned with preserving the privacy rights of confidential sources. By releasing the responsive documents with only those withholdings necessary to prevent identification of specific individuals (as AO has done in this case), DOE can provide maximum information while safeguarding individual rights and safety. Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997).

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Center for Public Integrity

Case Number: VFA-0572

On April 19, 2000, the Center for Public Integrity (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on April 10, 2000 by the Department of Energy's Office of Fossil Energy (FE). In that determination, FE withheld several documents in response to a Request for Information filed by the Appellant on January 5, 2000 under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require FE to release the withheld information.

I. BACKGROUND

This Appeal arises from the sale of NPR-1, commonly known as the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve, conducted by FE. On January 5, 2000, the Appellant filed a request for information with FE, seeking in pertinent part: "The names of all entities that placed bids on NPR-1, any portion thereof, and the amounts of all bids."

On April 10, 2000, FE issued a determination letter indicating that it was withholding the names of the unsuccessful bidders and the amounts of their bids under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Determination Letter at 1. FE contended that release of the bid amounts and identities of the unsuccessful bidders would cause substantial competitive harm to the firms that submitted the unsuccessful bids and would impair FE's ability to obtain similar information in the future. The present Appeal challenges FE's withholdings under Exemption 4.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert, denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

The only exemption that FE expressly claimed in the present case is found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) (Exemption 4). Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). “Like all FOIA exemptions, Exemption 4 is to be read narrowly in light of the dominant disclosure motif expressed in the statute.” Washington Post Co. v. United States HHS, 865 F.2d 320, 324 (D.C. Cir. 1989). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks).

Where, as in this case, the agency determines that the information at issue is not a trade secret, but is instead “commercial or financial” and “obtained from a person,” it must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." If the information is subject to a valid claim of legal privilege on the part of its submitter, it may properly be withheld under Exemption 4. In order to determine whether the information is "confidential" the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm’n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (Critical Mass), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Information is considered to have been submitted involuntarily if, as in this case, any legal authority compels its submission, including informal mandates that call for the submission of the information as a cost of doing business with the government. Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 460 n.3 (D.D.C. 1997). Since the withheld information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that its disclosure is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained before withholding it under Exemption 4. National Parks, 498 F.2d 765 at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d 871 at 879.

Once the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department’s implementing regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to understand the basis for claiming the exemption and to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("Conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

In this case, FE does not contend that the withheld information contains “trade secrets.” Moreover, since it is clear that the withheld information is “commercial,” “was obtained from a person,” and is not “privileged,” the only issue in the present case is whether the withheld information is “confidential” in nature.

FE has set forth three reasons for withholding the bid amounts and identities of the unsuccessful bidders as confidential information protected by Exemption 4. First, FE contends that release of this information would cause substantial competitive harm to the unsuccessful bidders. Second, FE contends that release of this information would impair the Government's ability to obtain future bids for assets it wishes to sell. Third, FE contends that releasing this information would be inconsistent with the mandate of legislation requiring that the sale of NPR-1 be conducted in a manner "consistent with commercial practices." National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996, Pub. L. 104-106 (110 Stat. 186).

Competitive Harm

We first consider FE's withholding of the documents under Exemption 4's "competitive harm" prong. The determination letter contends that:

Release of this information would likely cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the persons to whom it pertains. Since the oil and gas business is highly competitive, the knowledge that a company is bidding on an oil and gas producing property would reveal business strategy and would affect the amount of bids that will have to be offered on the next property. Also release of the specific dollar amount bid on the Elk Hills property could reveal the bidder's valuation methodology and analytical approach to formulating that bid and could provide insight into the company's growth strategies.

Determination Letter at 2.

The issue before us arises in an atypical context. It involves bid information submitted by entities seeking to purchase from a federal agency. In contrast, most of the FOIA cases involving bid information have involved entities that submitted bids in an effort to sell the government goods and services. However, this distinction does not affect the validity of relevant FOIA case law or its applicability here. It matters not that information was submitted in this case in order to buy from the government rather than to sell to it. What this body of case law requires us to focus on is the likelihood of competitive harm - i.e. whether a bidder's competitors could use the information provided to predict the submitter's future bids.

The information sought here is the total bid amounts. Our previous cases, as well as the courts, have viewed with skepticism claims that the release of total bid amounts would cause harm by allowing a bidders's competitors to predict its future bidding strategy. Accordingly, this office has consistently held that the total price of a contract, after the contract has been awarded, usually does not reveal details of the submitter's bidding strategy and thus cannot normally be withheld under Exemption 4. See Baker, Donaldson, Bearman & Caldwell, 27 DOE ¶ 80,164 (1998) (Baker) (citing Covington & Burling, 20 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,571 (1990)); Morgan, Lewis & Bockius 20 DOE ¶ 80,165 at 80,688 (1990) (Morgan). Nor does the mere fact that the contents of a document might be useful to competitors in future bids constitute sufficient ground to withhold the document. Baker, 27 DOE at 80,655 (citing Morgan, 20 DOE at 80,688). The courts clearly mandate that in order to receive protection under Exemption 4, the expected harm must be substantial in nature. See, e.g., National Parks and Conservation Association v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974).

The courts have carefully scrutinized the withholding of aggregate pricing data, such as total bid amounts, under Exemption 4. In Pacific Architects & Engineers v. United States Department of State, 906 F.2d 1345 (9th Cir. 1990) (Pacific Architects), the Ninth Circuit found that aggregate pricing information was not confidential under Exemption 4 since it was made up of a number of fluctuating variables, and therefore would not allow competitors to calculate its bidding strategy. In Gulf & Western Industries, Inc. v. United States, 615 F.2d 527, 530 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (Gulf), the D.C. Circuit enunciated a standard for determining whether the disclosure of commercial information would likely cause substantial harm to a firm's competitive position. That court found that disclosure of information will result in substantial competitive harm if its release allows competitors to estimate, and thus undercut, the submitter's future bids. Gulf, 615 F.2d at 530. Courts have not upheld protection under Exemption 4's competitive harm prong when agencies have been unable to convincingly show that release of information would be of substantial assistance to competitors attempting to estimate and undercut the submitter's bids. See, e.g., Pacific Architects; GC Micro Corp. v. Defense Logistics Agency, 33 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 1994); Acumenics Research and Technology v. United States Department of Justice, 843 F.2d 800, 807 (4th Cir. 1988).

While the law does not require FE to engage in a highly sophisticated economic analysis of the possible harm to the bidders that might result from disclosure, see Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA , 704 F.2d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1983), in order to prevail, FE must meet its burden of showing substantial competitive harm to the bidders. FE has not met this burden.

In accordance with the DOE's FOIA regulations, FE solicited comments on the advisability of releasing the unsuccessful bids from each of the unsuccessful bidders. Six of the 14 unsuccessful bidders responded to FE's request for comments. Those six commenters each expressed concerns that release of the bid amounts and the identities of the bidders might allow their competitors to outbid them in future sales of petroleum producing properties. However, we are of the impression that release of the bid amounts and the identities of the bidders would not provide the bidders' competition with substantial insight into their bidding strategies. A bid amount appears to us to be dependent on several variables including the bidder's estimates of: the productive capacity of a unique petroleum producing property, future market conditions, applicability of future production technology and the particular bidder's expected future supply and demand for petroleum products. With so many variables involved, it is unlikely that much useful information about a bidder's future acquisition strategies can be gleaned from the release of the bid amounts.

We note that an unpublished decision by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Raytheon Co. v. Department of the Navy, No. 89-2481 (D.D.C. 1989) (Raytheon) contains some discussion and analysis which relate to the issues raised herein. In Raytheon, the court considered a request for the total cumulative amount that an unsuccessful bidder had bid for a government contract. The district court found that the total cumulative price could be properly withheld under Exemption 4, since its release could be expected to cause substantial harm to the unsuccessful bidder's competitive position.

The Raytheon court's ultimate holding that the unsuccessful bid amount could be withheld under Exemption 4's competitive harm standard is based upon evidence presented in a confidential affidavit that demonstrated factually how the contract price could be used by the bidder's competitors to derive data harmful to its competitive position. This evidentiary showing has not been made here. Finally, we note that the Raytheon case apparently involved only bid amounts and not the identity or identities of the bidders, so it has no bearing on the issues concerning the withholding of bidders' identities.

It may well be the case that FE, with its expertise in the oil and gas industry, may have knowledge or insight, that we lack, into how the withheld information might be used to estimate a submitter's future bids. However, the determination letter does not satisfactorily explain how knowledge that a particular firm placed a bid on all or part of NPR-1 or of the amount it bid would allow its competitors to estimate that firm's future bidding strategy. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the appeal to FE to issue a new determination letter in accordance with the instructions set forth below.

The Appellant contends that the potential for competitive harm to these bidders has been diminished by the passage of time. The Appellant notes that the bids were submitted over 30 months ago. During this time, the Appellant correctly contends, the oil and gas industry has undergone significant change. As courts have noted, the passage of time can, in some circumstances, mitigate the potential for harm that could have otherwise resulted from the release of commercial information. See Lee v. FDIC, 923 F. Supp. 451, 455 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); Teich v. FDA, 751 F. Supp. 243, 253 (D.D.C. 1990). Therefore, in weighing whether to withhold the information under Exemption 4's competitive harm prong, FE must consider the effect of the passage of time on the potential for competitive harm if the information were released, and provide an explanation of its reasoning in its new determination letter should it decide to withhold this information.

Impairment

We now turn to FE's contention that release of the unsuccessful bids would impair the government's ability to obtain similar information in the future. Essentially, FE is contending that release of unsuccessful bids would impair the government's ability to receive bids in future sales of government-owned oil and gas properties.

The courts have denied protection under the impairment prong when the benefits associated with submission of particular information make it unlikely that the agency's ability to obtain similar submissions in the future will be impaired. See, e.g., McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. NASA, 981 F. Supp. 12, 15 (D.D.C. 1997) (finding that release of contract price information would not cause impairment since "[g]overnment contracting involves millions of dollars and it is unlikely that release of this information would cause [the agency] difficulty in obtaining future bids") (reverse FOIA suit) (appeal pending); Badhwar v. United States Department of the Air Force, 622 F. Supp. 1364, 1377 (D.D.C. 1985), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 829 F.2d 182 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (no impairment when submission mandatory if supplier wished to do business with the government); Racal-Milgo Gov't Sys. v. SBA, 559 F. Supp. 4, 6 (D.D.C. 1981) (no impairment because "[i]t is unlikely that companies will stop competing for Government contracts if the prices contracted for are disclosed"); but see Orion Research v. EPA, 615 F.2d 551, 554 (1st Cir. 1980) (finding impairment for technical proposals submitted in connection with government contract because release "would induce potential bidders to submit proposals that do not include novel ideas"). These cases recognize that the benefits of doing business with the government can be considerable and are generally sufficient to ensure that firms will continue to submit bids even if these bids are made public. We find no reason suggesting that this logic does not apply to the facts of the present case. Accordingly, we are not persuaded by FE's contention that release of the withheld information would impair FE's ability to obtain bids on future sales of petroleum producing properties.

National Defense Authorization Act

FE further contends that releasing this information would be inconsistent with the mandate of § 3412(d) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996. Section 3412(d) requires that DOE's sale of NPR-1 be conducted in a manner "consistent with commercial practices." National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996, Pub. L. 104-106 (110 Stat. 186). FE contends that since the commercial practice in the oil and gas industry is to keep bids for properties confidential, this statute requires that FE must not release the bids. FE's reliance on this statute is misplaced.

The FOIA allows the withholding of information under other statutes only if they meet the criteria set forth in Exemption 3. See, e.g., Essential Information, Inc. v. USIA, 134 F.3d 1165, 1168 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Exemption 3 allows the withholding of information prohibited from disclosure by another statute only if the statute either "(A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3) (1994 & Supp. II 1996). The D.C. Circuit has expressly held that "a statute that is claimed to qualify as an Exemption 3 withholding statute must, on its face, exempt matters from disclosure." Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press v. United States Department of Justice, 816 F.2d 730, 735 (D.C. Cir.); modified on other grounds, 831 F.2d 1124 (D.C. Cir. 1987); rev'd on other grounds, 489 U.S. 749 (1989).

Section 3412(d) of the National Defense Authorization Act is clearly not a withholding statute under Exemption 3, since it does not specifically indicate that the agency must withhold particular information. We therefore find that the information sought cannot be withheld on that basis.

Duty to Segregate

We note also that FE withheld both the unsuccessful bid amounts and the unsuccessful bidders' identities. The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). However, segregation and release of non-exempt material is not necessary when it is inextricably intertwined with the exempt material, such that release of the non- exempt material would compromise the confidentiality of the withheld material. Lead Industries Association v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 83-86 (2d Cir.

1979). The duty to segregate and release non- exempt material requires FE to consider separately the identities of the unsuccessful bidders and the bid amounts. FE has not demonstrated, for example, how releasing the bid amounts without identifying the parties who submitted the bids could enable competitors to predict their competitors' future bidding strategies.

Accordingly, on remand, FE must conduct an additional review of any information it seeks to withhold from the Appellant in order to determine whether it contains information that can be segregated and released to the public.

Correspondence with the Office of the Vice President

At the same time that it requested the names of bidders and bid amounts, the Appellant also requested: "Any memoranda, correspondence, or other documents regarding any communication between the Office of the Vice President of the United States and DOE regarding the sale of NPR-1."

The Determination Letter indicated that FE's search for documents had not identified any documents that were responsive to this request. Determination Letter at 3. However, during the pendency of the present Appeal, FE submitted a number of documents to this office. Among these documents was a report on the sale of NPR-1 prepared by the DOE and addressed to Vice President Gore, albeit in his capacity as President of the United States Senate.

The DOE report delivered to the Vice President in his capacity as President of the Senate is a responsive document and should have been so identified. However, since FE has indicated that it has provided the Appellant with the document, its failure to identify it as responsive requires no corrective action.

III. CONCLUSION

We are remanding the present Appeal to FE. On remand, FE shall either release all or part of the withheld information or provide a new justification for any continued withholdings.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Center for Public Integrity, Case No. VFA-0572, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Fossil Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

Date of Filing: April 21, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0573

On April 21, 2000, David Ingwersen (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Golden Field Office (GFO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on March 30, 2000. That determination concerned a request for information the Appellant submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In that determination, no documents were released to the Appellant. In his Appeal, the Appellant asserts that GFO's search for records was inadequate. If granted, this Appeal would require GFO to conduct a further search.

Background

In a letter dated November 1, 1999, the Appellant requested information pertaining to "an invention submitted by Mr. A. Wallis Crane in 1977 to the Office of Energy Related Inventions for Evaluation." Request Letter dated February 13, 2000, from David Ingwersen to George P. Lewett, Chief, Office of Energy-Related Inventions, Department of Commerce (Commerce). On March 30, 2000, GFO issued a determination stating that a thorough search was conducted, including records from Commerce, which previously administered the Energy-Related Inventions Program. Determination Letter dated March 30, 2000, from Frank M. Stewart, Manager, GFO, DOE, to David Ingwersen (Determination Letter). The Energy-Related Inventions Program is now named the Inventions and Innovations Program and managed by the DOE through the GFO. GFO received the Program's files from Commerce approximately six months ago. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated May 2, 2000, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE, and Christopher Powers, GFO (May 2, 2000 Telephone Conversation Memorandum). The Determination Letter stated that the Inventions and Innovations Program's files contain material from the late 1970s. However, nothing referring to Mr. Crane was found. Determination Letter.

On April 21, 2000, the Appellant filed this Appeal, alleging that GFO's response is a "?sluff off' attempt, knowing that there is no penalty for such behavior." Appeal Letter received April 21, 2000, from David Ingwersen to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter). The Appellant includes, with the Appeal, a copy of a "1984" letter from Commerce indicating that Mr. A. Wallis Crane submitted an invention in 1977.(1) Id. at Item 1. The Appellant believes that GFO has acted in bad faith and made an incomplete search. Id.

Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

The Appellant is requesting “all information regarding an invention submitted by Mr. A. Wallis Crane in 1977.” Request Letter dated February 13, 2000, from David Ingwersen to George P. Lewett, Chief, Office of Energy-Related Inventions, Commerce. GFO’s FOIA Officer informed us that GFO searched both the hard files and the database containing the information which was transferred from Commerce to GFO regarding the Inventions and Innovations Program. In addition, the database containing the information regarding all GFO’s regular office files were searched. Telephone Conversation dated April 25, 2000, between Janet. R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE, and Christopher Powers, FOIA Officer, GFO; Telephone Conversation dated May 11, 2000, between Janet. R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE, and Christopher Powers, FOIA Officer, GFO. Also, GFO has checked the database(2) of its Inventions and Innovations Program files to verify its accuracy and found it to be correct. May 2, 2000 Telephone Conversation Memorandum. The files do contain some information that contains the date 1977, specifically applications for inventions. However, GFO is not sure whether the date indicates when the applications were submitted or when the inventions were invented. Id. In any event, no records responsive to the Appellants’ request were found. GFO has also informed us that it has not destroyed any records in the six months since they were received from Commerce. Id.

We are convinced that GFO followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material the Appellant sought in his request. See Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). The fact that the search did not uncover the documents that the Appellant believes may be in the possession of DOE does not mean that the search was inadequate. In the Appeal, the Appellant alleges that GFO did not see the information he was requesting on a computer screen and therefore claims it does not exist. Appeal Letter at 1. We have on numerous occasions found that a reasonable search of a computerized document tracking system, if that system covers all records that could possibly contain information responsive to the request, meets the standard for adequacy set forth in the law. See, e.g., Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 at 80,874 (1999). GFO has met this standard. Moreover, in this case, GFO went beyond checking the computer screen. GFO also confirmed that the database was accurate, checked its own files, and attempted to confirm with Commerce that GFO has all the records from the Program.(3) Id. Further, the “1984" letter from Commerce that the Appellant included with his Appeal merely confirms that the information he is requesting existed in 1984 at Commerce. The letter does not indicate that the requested information was still in existence when the Inventions and Innovations Program’s files were transferred to GFO some 15 years later.

Conclusion

GFO conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the material the Appellant sought in his request. GFO searched the database of the Inventions and Innovations Program and all of its archived files. Based on the above descriptions, we conclude that GFO’s search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records the Appellant sought. Therefore, we will deny the Appellant’s Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on April 21, 2000, by David Ingwersen, Case No. VFA-0573, is hereby denied.

(1)We note that the letter the Appellant includes with his Appeal is a copy with the date and address blanked out. It is the Appellant's contention that this letter was written and/or received in 1984.

(2)It is our understanding that because both the database and the underlying files were received from Commerce, and GFO had no knowledge if the information was correct, it validated the accuracy of the database. This was accomplished by checking the database to see if it would respond correctly for information GFO knew that the files contained.

(3)GFO attempted to contact Commerce but determined that no one with any knowledge of the Energy-Related Inventions Program, as it was called at Commerce, remains with that Department. Memorandum of Telephone Message dated May 10, 2000, left by Christopher Powers, FOIA Officer, GFO.

Case No. VFA-0575, 27 DOE ¶ 80,279

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Edward A. Slavin, Jr.

Date of Filing:April 24, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0575

Edward A. Slavin, Jr., files this Appeal pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552.(1) Slavin's Appeal concerns a decision of the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Operations Office (ORO) refusing to expedite the processing of his requests. As explained below, we will deny the Appeal.

Background

Between March 19 and March 31, 2000, Slavin filed six FOIA requests with ORO. He asked that each request be given expedited processing, under the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E). Rather than expediting Slavin's requests, ORO responded that they would be processed on a "documents first in, documents first out basis." Slavin then filed the present Appeal.

A highly condensed version of each request that Slavin filed is listed below, with the number assigned to it by ORO.

Request #00-233: various documents, including all documents bearing Slavin's name, and all documents relating to activities of various DOE officials, to the selection of and billing by various contractors, to the handling of whistleblower cases, and to affirmative action by legal contractors of ORO.

Request #00-239: documents relating to Millard Day, said by Slavin to be a party in a whistleblower case before the Department of Labor, including all documents bearing Day's name, personnel files of persons involved in the case, and documents relating to legal preparation by DOE attorneys.

Request #00-245: documents relating to an accident at ORO's Y- 12 plant on December 8, 1998, particularly concerning individuals involved with the accident and disciplinary actions taken against them.

Request #00-249: all documents mentioning Linda Gass.

Request #00-250: all documents mentioning the Anderson County, Tennessee, executive.

Request #00-251: documents relating to hiring data and personnel records for attorneys at ORO, including all personnel, security, and health files and files concerning hiring of attorneys.

Analysis

Under the FOIA, an agency must respond to a request for information within twenty working days. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). As a general rule, agencies process FOIA requests on a "first-in, first-out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Open America v. Watergate Special Prosecution Force, 547 F.2d 605, 614-16 (D.C. Cir. 1976). The FOIA also provides, however, for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

Granting one requester expedited processing gives him a preference over previous requesters, by moving his request “up the line” and delaying processing of other requests. Exner v. FBI, 542 F. 2d 1121 (1976). Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be provided only when the requester demonstrates “compelling need,” or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i).

“Compelling need,” as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the Federal Government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v).

Slavin has failed to demonstrated a compelling need for expediting any of his six requests. In his submissions requesting the information, he implies that expediting his requests will save lives. He claims in each request that “due to the chilling effects of on-going anti-whistleblower harassment upon the workforce, employees are reluctant to engage in protected activity under environmental and occupational safety laws which can needlessly cause the loss of human lives in accidents and exposures.”

We are firmly committed to providing expedited processing of FOIA requests where there is a reasonable expectation that failure to do so would jeopardize the life or physical safety of an individual. Slavin, however, has provided us with no reason to believe that release of the documents he has requested will accomplish those goals. There is no discernible connection between any of the extensive set of documents requested by Slavin and any individual’s health or physical safety. We have only Slavin’s assertion that release of the documents will somehow prevent the “loss of human lives in accidents and exposures.” In the absence of some other urgency, however, a requester “cannot meet his burden by merely making a naked assertion ... in order to accelerate his FOIA processing." Edmond v. U.S. Attorney, 959 F. Supp. 1, 6 (D.D.C. 1997) (Edmond). Thus, we find that Slavin’s unsupported assertion is insufficient to establish a need for expedited processing.

Slavin also implies in his requests that he meets the second criterion for expedited processing – that he is a person primarily engaged in disseminating information, and has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the Federal Government. He states that, among other accomplishments, he was the editor of a newspaper from 1981 to 1983 and was recommended for a Pulitzer Prize, and has published a book and seven articles in American Bar Association Publications. He further claims to have the “ability to inform the people of Anderson County and the world regarding Oak Ridge pollution.” Despite Slavin’s past occupations, however, he is currently an attorney and not primarily engaged in disseminating information. In connection with this FOIA request, he has a client who is employing him to perform services of a legal nature. Moreover, he has not shown that there is any urgency to inform the public about the contents of the documents he is requesting. We therefore find no basis in Slavin’s submissions for expediting the processing of his requests.(2)

Conclusion

Slavin has not shown the exceptional need or urgency that would warrant his being given preferential treatment by expediting the processing of his requests. Therefore, we find that ORO should respond to his requests in a manner consistent with applicable FOIA statutory and regulatory provisions. Sangre de

It is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Edward A. Slavin, Jr. (Case No. VFA-0575) is hereby denied.

(2) Slavin raised an additional ground for expedited processing in his Appeal. At the time the Appeal was filed, Slavin was the attorney of record for Linda Gass, a complainant in a whistleblower case before the Office of Hearings and Appeals (Case No. VWA-0028). Slavin stated that expedited processing was required because of the "the urgency of obtaining information in a timely manner," since "Gass's [whistleblower] hearing ... currently scheduled for one month from now – is being obstructed due to ... [DOE's] obstreperous delays..." While this FOIA Appeal was under consideration, Gass filed her whistleblower complaint with the Department of Labor, and her complaint with the Department of Energy was dismissed. Since there is no longer a need to expedite these documents for the DOE hearing, we will give no consideration to this argument for expediting.

May 26, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. Eng. Services

Date of Filing: May 1, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0576

On May 1, 2000, R.E.V. Eng. Services (R.E.V.) filed with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) an Appeal from a determination by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Inspector General (DOE/IG). That determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9).

R.E.V. requested from DOE/IG documents regarding "the (unsealed) False Claims Act case: ?United States of America, ex rel., David E. Ridenour, et al., v. Kaiser-Hill Company, L.L.C., et al.' Civil Action No. 97-WM-2191, filed October 08, 1997, in the United States District Court for the District of Colorado . . . ." Letter from David E. Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V., to DOE/IG (undated). In an April 11, 2000 response to R.E.V., DOE/IG stated that it had reviewed documents responsive to the request, including "case processing forms and printouts, memoranda of investigative activity, and internal memoranda," and that "responsive documents are being withheld in their entirety pursuant to subsection (b)(7)(a) of the [FOIA], or Exemption 7(A)." Letter from Herbert Richardson, Principal Deputy Inspector General, DOE/IG, to David Ridenour (April 11, 2000) at 1. DOE/IG explained that "[r]elease of the withheld material at this time could prematurely reveal evidence and interfere with enforcement proceedings" and that "it is not in the public interest to disclose certain material compiled as part of an ongoing law enforcement proceeding." Id.

II. Analysis

The only exemption at issue in the present case is found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(A) (1994 & Supp. II 1996). Exemption 7(A) authorizes the withholding of "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that production of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings. " Id.

A. Whether the Documents Withheld Were Compiled for Law Enforcement Purposes

The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, i.e., as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982); William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996) (Payne). In order to withhold information under Exemption 7, an organization must have statutory authority to enforce a violation of a law or regulation within its authority. Church of Scientology v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 748 (9th Cir. 1979) (remanding to Naval Investigative Service to show that investigation involved enforcement of statute or regulation within its authority).

DOE/IG is charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud, or abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. App. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), (d), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). Accordingly, we have consistently found that DOE/IG compiles information for law enforcement purposes within the meaning of Exemption 7. Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); Keci Corporation, 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1997). The courts have similarly found that the Inspector General's offices in other agencies exercise the requisite law enforcement functions to protect their investigative files under Exemption 7. E.g., Rural Housing Alliance v. United States Dep't of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Because the documents at issue in the present case are part of a DOE/IG investigative file, we find that the documents were compiled for law enforcement purposes and therefore satisfy the threshold test for application of Exemption 7.

B. Whether a Law Enforcement Proceeding is Pending

Determining the applicability of Exemption 7(A) in particular requires a two-step analysis focusing on (1) whether a law enforcement proceeding is pending and (2) whether release of information about it could reasonably be expected to cause some foreseeable harm to the pending enforcement proceeding. See Miller v. USDA, 13 F.3d 260, 263 (8th Cir. 1993) (agency must make a specific showing of why disclosure of documents could reasonably be expected to interfere with enforcement proceedings); Crooker v. ATF, 789 F.2d 64, 65-67 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (agency had failed to demonstrate that disclosure would interfere with enforcement proceedings); Grasso v. IRS, 785 F.2d 70, 77 (3d Cir. 1986) ("government must show, by more than conclusory statement, how the particular kinds of investigatory records requested would interfere with a pending enforcement proceeding").

The arguments of the Appellant go to both steps of this analysis. First, R.E.V. argues that the enforcement proceeding in question is not currently pending.

> The information requested pertains only to the investigation made of [my False Claims Act case] and the recommendation that resulted from that specific investigation. As the Government, [Department of Energy and Department of Justice], chose not to participate in the Qui Tam case, there can be no "ongoing enforcement proceeding" in that area.

Appeal at 1-2. However, we contacted DOE/IG after the filing of the present Appeal, and DOE/IG informed us that the investigations of the Justice and Energy Departments into this matter have not yet been closed. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Jacqueline Becker, DOE/IG, and Steven Goering, OHA (May 8, 2000). Having no evidence to the contrary other than the bare assertions of the Appellant, we will accept the representations of DOE/IG and conclude that the enforcement proceeding in question is currently pending.

C. Whether Release of the Documents Could Reasonably be Expected to Interfere with the Pending Enforcement Proceeding

The Appellant further contends that release of the documents withheld would not interfere with the enforcement proceeding in question. He asserts that "[a]fter three (3) years of public and private discussions, every individual or corporation possibly involved is well aware of their position. Efforts to ? fabricate defenses, destroy evidence, intimidate . . . witnesses or otherwise impede . . .' if indeed there were any, are long ago in place." Appeal at 2 (ellipses in original).

We do not agree with this contention. The Supreme Court has found that agencies are not required, in support of withholding of information under Exemption 7(A), to make a particularized, case-by- case showing of interference with their investigations. Rather, agencies may rely on a showing that, "with respect to particular kinds of enforcement proceedings, disclosure of particular kinds of investigatory records while a case is pending would generally ?interfere with enforcement proceedings.'" NRLB v. Robbins Tire and Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 236 (1978) (Robbins).

In making the "generic determinations" endorsed by the Court in Robbins, an agency has "a three- fold task," as articulated by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in Bevis v. United States Dep't of State, 801 F.2d 1386, 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1986). "First, it must define its categories functionally. Second, it must conduct a document-by-document review in order to assign the documents to the proper category. Finally, it must explain how the release of each category would interfere with enforcement proceedings." Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389-90.

With regard to the first part of the task, the court in Bevis spoke of categories that are sufficiently distinct to allow a court to grasp "how each . . . category of documents, if disclosed, would interfere with the investigation." The hallmark of an acceptable . . . category is thus that it is functional; it allows the court to trace a rational link between the nature of the document and the alleged likely interference.

Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389 (quoting Crooker v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 789 F.2d 64, 67 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (quoting Campbell v. Department of Health and Human Services, 682 F.2d 256, 265 (D.C. Cir. 1982)) (emphasis in original)). Applying this principle to the categories before it, the court in Bevis found that although some of the categories employed by the agency (the FBI), allow the court to "trace a rational link [to] . . . the alleged likely interference," others do not. For example, certain of the categories selected by the FBI define the nature of the information contained in the included documents, e.g., "the identities of possible witnesses and informants," "reports on the location and viability of potential evidence," and "polygraph reports." Such categories satisfy the Crooker functionalism requirement because they allow the court to assess the FBI's representations of how release of the documents would result in interference to the Salvadoran proceedings.

On the other hand, other categories employed by the FBI give absolutely no indication of the substance of the information contained. For example, some categories are identified only as "teletypes," or "airtels," or "letters." These provide no basis for a judicial assessment of the FBI's assertions that release of the documents so categorized would interfere with enforcement proceedings. The FBI cannot carry its burden with such irrelevant classifications.

Id. at 1390.

Turning to the present case, we find that DOE/IG identified three categories into which fell the documents responsive to the Appellant's request, specifically "case processing forms and printouts, memoranda of investigative activity, and internal memoranda." Unlike the categories approved in Bevis, none of these categories "define the nature of the information contained in the included documents." For example, the category "case processing forms and printouts" could easily encompass documents that reveal nothing of substance relating to a particular investigation, similar to categories we have found in prior cases would "not seem to pose a threat of interference with the ongoing . . . investigations." Anibal L. Taboas, 25 DOE ¶ 80,207 at 80,774 (1996) (rejecting category designated "notices of acceptance or dismissal of complaints").

Further, given a standard definition of the word "memorandum," e.g., "a written record or communication, as in a business office," Webster's II New Riverside University Dictionary 741 (1984), the categories "memoranda of investigative activity" and "internal memoranda" could include every document in an investigative file. When the "generic determinations" allowed under Exemption 7(A) employ categories that are this broad, those categories run the risk of becoming the very "blanket exemptions" Congress sought to avoid in crafting Exemption 7. Robbins, 437 U.S. at 236 ("Amendment of Exemption 7 was designed to eliminate ?blanket exemptions' for Government records simply because they were found in investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes . . . .").(1)

Thus, while it would not necessarily be fair to say that the categories named by DOE/IG give "no indication of the substance of the information contained," the categorization of these documents should be refined. This will allow our office, a court, and the public "to trace a rational link between the nature of the document and the alleged likely interference." Bevis, 801 F.2d at 1389, 1390. We will therefore remand this matter to DOE/IG so that it may issue a new determination to the Appellant, regrouping the documents it believes should be withheld into categories that are sufficiently distinct to allow one who is not privy to the actual contents of the documents to grasp how each category of documents, if disclosed, would interfere with the investigation.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by R.E.V. Eng. Services, Case No. VFA-0576, is granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Inspector General for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

Case No. VFA-0577, 27 DOE ¶ 80,282

June 8, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Mark A. Graf

Date of Filing: May 22, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0577

On May 22, 2000, Mark A. Graf filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on April 17, 2000, by the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Graf challenges the adequacy of Rocky Flats' search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

On January 30, 2000, Mr. Graf filed a request for information in which he sought a copy of a November 13, 1996 Memorandum, "Abstract Report of Inspection on ?Alleged Tape Recordings of Conversations at the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site' and Other Management Issues" (S941S094). On April 17, 2000, Rocky Flats issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search for the requested document. However, Rocky Flats stated that it was unable to locate the document. See Determination Letter at 1.

On May 22, 2000, Mr. Graf filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Graf challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Rocky Flats. Mr. Graf asks that the OHA direct Rocky Flats to conduct a new search for the requested document. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076

(D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Rocky Flats to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Graf's request might exist. Upon receiving Mr. Graf's request for information, Rocky Flats instituted a search of the offices that might possibly possess the requested document. Those offices included the Office of Chief Counsel and the Office of Facilities Disposition (the security office). Based on this search, Rocky Flats was unable to locate the responsive document. See Record of Telephone Conversation Between Mary Hammack, Rocky Flats, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (May 30, 2000). In his Appeal, Mr. Graf states that he confirmed several facts regarding the requested document with the Headquarters FOIA office of the DOE. In light of the unsuccessful search conducted by Rocky Flats, Mr. Graf may wish to pursue his request directly with Headquarters FOIA office.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that Rocky Flats conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Graf's request. Accordingly, Mr. Graf's Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mark A. Graf, OHA Case No. VFA-0577, on May 22, 2000, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: John Michael Unfred, P.C.

Case Number: VFA-0581

On June 22, 2000, John Michael Unfred, P.C. (Unfred) completed filing this Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office of the DOE (DOE/AL) issued to Unfred on April 18, 2000. The determination concerned a request for information that Unfred submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, DOE/AL would be required to release any responsive material.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On January 16, 2000, Unfred requested copies of any Cooperative Research and Development Agreements (CRADAs) involving the technology described in U.S. Patent No. 5,858,457. Letter from DOE/AL to Unfred (April 18, 2000) (Determination Letter). Unfred requested: (1) any responsive CRADAs including any statements of work (SOW) and any appendices thereto; (2) any documents reflecting the negotiation of the responsive CRADA(s); (3) any documents reflecting the award, changes, modification or amendment of the CRADA(s); and (4) any documents of the contracting officer that reevaluate the quality of the technology. Letter from Unfred to Director, OHA (May 30, 2000) (Appeal).

DOE/AL determined that CRADA SC97/01489 between Sandia Corporation and Air Products and Chemicals, Inc. (APCI), a procurement document of Sandia National Laboratory, was responsive to the request. However, DOE regulations require that DOE contact the firm who submitted the requested information in order to give that firm the opportunity to identify proprietary, financial, or commercial information contained in the documents. Consequently, a representative of APCI reviewed the documents and identified all proprietary information. Letter from APCI to DOE/AL (February 25, 2000) (APCI Letter). On April 18, 2000, DOE/AL released the following three documents to Unfred, withholding all of the material that APCI had identified as proprietary: (1) CRADA 01489 Version 3/12/98, withholding Appendices A (SOW) and C (Background Intellectual Property); (2) CRADA 01489 Version 3/10/99, Amendment 1, withholding Appendices A (SOW) and C (Background Intellectual Property); and (3)

CRADA 01489 Version 2/23/98, withholding Appendix A (SOW). Determination Letter at 1. All redacted information was withheld under FOIA Exemption 4. Id. On June 22, 2000, Unfred filed this Appeal with OHA, contending that the response was "both untimely and inadequate." Appeal at 2. He further argued: (1) that DOE improperly relied upon the Trade Secrets Act in refusing to consider whether it is in the public interest to disclose non-exempt information; (2) that there is segregable information in the documents that DOE is obliged to release; (3) that DOE has made only conclusory assertions that competitive injury would result to APCI if the documents were released; and (4) that the documents were not fully identified to the requester. Id.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (1) trade secrets or (2) information that is "commercial or financial, obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Association v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government involuntarily is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (1) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (2) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the government obtained the information. Id., at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information a submitter provides to an agency voluntarily is "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

We have reviewed the redacted material and find that most of the deleted information was properly withheld under the National Parks test. (1) The documents contain specific details of the project that could cause substantial harm to APCI's commercial success in near term commercial opportunities. We agree with APCI's argument that public release of any proprietary information could enable a competitor to decrease its development time for the same product and diminish APCI's's chance to commercialize the technology developed under the CRADA. APCI Letter at 2-3. See Judicial Watch, Inc. v. United States Dep't of Commerce, 83 F. Supp. 2d 105 (D.D.C. 1999) (finding disclosure of proprietary information outlining the development of a venture would permit competitors to undercut development effort). As a result of our review, we find that release of most of the withheld information could cause substantial harm to APCI's competitive position. Therefore, we conclude that most of the information withheld (e.g., subject matter of the CRADA, scope of the product, costs, background intellectual property) is subject to withholding under FOIA Exemption 4. (2)

A. DOE/AL Determination Letter

Unfred argues that the determination letter was not timely, and did not adequately identify the responsive documents. We disagree. Although the FOIA requires an agency to inform the requester of its decision to grant or deny access to requested records within 20 working days, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i), the federal courts have held that agencies may exceed the initial time limits in certain situations. See, e.g., Zuckerman v. FBI, No. 94-6315, slip op. at 8 (D.N.J. Dec. 6, 1995) (resource limitations); Open Am. v. Watergate Special Prosecution Force, 547 F.2d 605, 614-16 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (agency need not adhere strictly to first-in, first-out processing so long as proceeding expeditiously and fairly). See also Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996) (Larson) (no legal error in exceeding initial time limit). In this case, DOE regulations required DOE/AL to provide APCI with 10 working days to identify proprietary information. DOE/AL informed Unfred that APCI's review would cause processing to exceed the 20 day limit. Electronic mail message from Terry Apodaca, DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (July 24, 2000). Thus, we find that the Determination Letter was timely within the standards established by the federal courts. Larson, 25 DOE at 80,763. Further, we find that DOE/AL adequately identified the responsive documents by CRADA number, version, and subject. Determination Letter at 1.

Unfred also argues that the determination stated "conclusory assertions." We do not agree. DOE/AL adequately explained its basis for finding Appendix A, the Statement of Work, to be exempt from withholding under Exemption 4. (3) In the Determination Letter, DOE/AL described the withheld information and further explained that release would be competitively harmful to APCI, "due to the highly competitive environment of supplying the next generation dielectrics for integrated circuits currently envisioned by the electronics industry." Determination Letter at 2. See Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 185 F.3d 898 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (Public Citizen) (finding competitive harm where disclosure of proprietary information would eliminate much of the time and effort otherwise required to market a product).

B. Public Interest Inquiry and Trade Secrets Act

As we have stated in previous cases, we do not make the typical inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest in cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4. See FOIA Group, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,111 (1998); Tactical Weapons Working Group, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,170 (1997). Courts have held that if information falls within the scope of Exemption 4, it also falls within the scope of the Trade Secrets Act. Bartholdi Cable v. FCC, 114 F.3d 274, 281 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (when information shown to be protected by Exemption 4, government is generally "precluded from releasing" it due to Trade Secrets Act); CNA Fin. Corp. v. Donovan, 830 F.2d 1132, 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (noting that Trade Secrets Act appears to cover practically any commercial or financial data collected by any federal employee from any source). We therefore reject Unfred's assertion that DOE/AL improperly refused to consider a public interest release of the withheld information.

C. Segregable Information

The FOIA also requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material). The determination letter did not identify any segregable, non-exempt factual material. However, our review finds that the March 12, 1998 and February 23, 1998 versions of the Statement of Work contain some factual information that may not be withheld under Exemption 4 unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material. See, e.g., Center for Public Integrity, 27 DOE ¶ 80,277 (2000) (non-exempt material is inextricably intertwined if its release would compromise the confidentiality of withheld material). In the section entitled "Background," the second sentence contains some segregable information. In the section entitled "Reasons for Cooperation," the first sentence of paragraph two, the first sentence of paragraph three, and the final sentence also contain some segregable information. Accordingly, we shall remand these two documents to DOE/AL. On remand, DOE/AL must review the aforementioned versions of the Statement of Work and segregate and release all purely factual portions, or provide a detailed explanation for withholding them.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on June 22, 2000 by John Michael Unfred, OHA Case No. VFA-0581, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Albuquerque Operations Office for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(2)In addition, material that is "commercial or financial information that is privileged or confidential, under the meaning of [FOIA Exemption 4]" shall not be disclosed when obtained from a non-federal party participating in a CRADA under Chapter 63 of United States Code Title 15. 15 U.S.C.A. § 3710a(c)(7)(A).

August 1, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Mark Donham

Date of Filing: July 6, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0583

On July 6, 2000, Mark Donham filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on May 5, 2000. In its determination, Oak Ridge denied Mr. Donham's request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to release the information it withheld.

Background

In an email dated April 11, 2000, Mr. Donham submitted a FOIA request to Oak Ridge for "a copy of the contracts between Steve Kay and the SSAB and Design Integration Group and the SSAB." Email Request dated April 11, 2000, from Mark Donham to John Sheppard, Paducah Site Office, DOE. SSAB is the Paducah Site Specific Advisory Board, a local board of the DOE Environmental Management Site Specific Advisory Board. Email from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) dated July 17, 2000, at 2 (July 17, 2000). The SSAB is a federally chartered advisory board under the Federal Advisory Committee Act. The Design Integration Group (DIG) is a subcontractor to Bechtel Jacobs Company, LLC (BJC), the prime contractor at the Paducah Site Office. Id. Finally, Steve Kay, also a subcontractor to BJC, is employed as the facilitator for the Paducah SSAB. Id. On May 5, 2000, Oak Ridge denied Mr. Donham's request, stating that the contracts were not agency records and were in the possession of BJC. Determination Letter dated May 5, 2000, from Amy L. Rothrock, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge, to Mark Donham.

In response, Mr. Donham filed this Appeal.(1) He argues that the SSAB is solely funded by the DOE and is federally chartered. Appeal Letter dated June 4, 2000, from Mark Donham to OHA, DOE. He believes that since the SSAB contracts he is requesting are solely funded by the DOE, he should be able to obtain copies of them. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

The information Mr. Donham requested is copies of the contracts between Steve Kay and the SSAB and between DIG and the SSAB. Request Email. Mr. Donham asserts that the SSAB is solely funded by the DOE, and he believes that, therefore, DOE should disclose copies of the contracts to him. Appeal Letter. Oak Ridge has informed us that the SSAB does not have procurement ability. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated July 19, 2000, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE, and John Sheppard, Paducah Site Office, Oak Ridge, DOE (July 19, 2000 Telephone Conversation). Procurement for the SSAB support requirements are handled by the prime contractor, BJC, after consultation with DOE and the SSAB. Id. Oak Ridge has searched for copies of the contracts and not found them. Indeed, Oak Ridge is certain that it does not possess the contracts. Id. Therefore, we must address whether procurement records between BJC and a sub-contractor are subject to the FOIA.

To make this determination, we must first assess whether any such records are "agency records" for purposes of the FOIA. We have frequently held that prime contractors such as BJC are not government agencies. ChemData, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,228 (1997) (outlining complete argument why the contractor's procurement records are not subject to the FOIA). We find that the analysis we applied to Rocky Flats in the ChemData case is equally applicable here. Therefore, its procurement records are not "agency records." Id. Next, we must determine whether the requested records are nevertheless subject to disclosure under section 1004.3(e) of our regulations. The DOE regulations state that [w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

10 C.F.R. 1004.3(e)(1).

We therefore next look to the contract between DOE and BJC to determine the status of the withheld records. According to the contract, all "records relating to any procurement action by [BJC]" are contractor-owned records. Contract No. DE-AC05-98OR22700, Section 1-100.970.5204-79(b)(3). Under the FOIA, the record is therefore a contractor record, not an agency record, and it is not subject to the FOIA. We shall completely deny Mr. Donham's appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mark Donham, on July 6, 2000, Case No. VFA-0583, is hereby denied.

July 18, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Government Accountability Project

Case Number: VFA-0584

On June 19, 2000, the Government Accountability Project (GAP) filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Group (DOE/FOI). This determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A). However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA setting forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(B). Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In an April 4, 2000 request, GAP requested from the DOE

Any and all records reflecting the request for payment or reimbursement of legal fees and/or costs associated with litigation in the case of Mark Graf v. Wackenhut Services Limited Liability Company, dated December 16, 1999, and encaptioned Case No. 1998-ERA-37 brought before the U.S. Department of Labor and recently adjudicated. This request is intended to include, but not be limited to - - · Any and all records reflecting the payment and/or reimbursement of any monies paid by, or agreed to be paid by Department of Energy to the Wackenhut Services LLC company, a subcontractor at the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site (RFETS) and/or Kaiser-Hill, Inc., a DOE contractor at the RFETS site, related to or generated in connection with legal claims by Mr. Mark Graf, an employee of Wackenhut. This request is intended to include but not be limited to correspondence, memoranda, invoices, bills, and demands for payment, whether in written or electronic format.

Appeal at 1.

On May 24, 2000, DOE/FOI issued a determination to GAP, stating that at "DOE Headquarters, searches have been conducted by the Office of Safeguards and Security in the Office of Security Affairs and the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation. The searches by these offices did not locate any documents that are responsive to your request." Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI, to Thomas Carpenter, GAP (May 24, 2000). The determination letter went on to explain that the DOE's "Rocky Flats Field Office is conducting a search for responsive documents. Upon completion of the search and the review of any documents determined to be responsive to your request, that office will provide a final response to you." Id.

In its Appeal, GAP notes that on May 23, 2000, the day before the response to me was dated, the General Counsel for the DOE, Ms. Mary Ann Sullivan, testified extensively [before the House Commerce Committee] on the matter of DOE's reimbursement of contractor litigation costs in whistleblower cases. The matter of whether DOE had reimbursed the contractor in the Mark Graf whistleblower case was specifically discussed at length by Ms. Sullivan.

Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). Nonetheless, "the standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

As an initial matter, we find that DOE/FOI's referral of the request to the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation and the Office of Safeguards and Security was "reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials," since the documents requested concerned contractor litigation costs and the respondent in the case at issue, Wackenhut Services Limited Liability Company, provided security services as a subcontractor to the DOE. We thus turn to whether these two offices each conducted an adequate search, basing our determination upon the description of the searches the offices have provided to us. The Deputy General Counsel for Litigation informed us that when he performed the search, which was completed on or before April 26, 2000, he believed that any such records, if they existed, would be located at DOE's Rocky Flats Field Office (DOE/RF). See Electronic Mail from Marc Johnston, Deputy General Counsel for Litigation, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 23, 2000). He nonetheless consulted with members of his staff familiar with the Graf case, who confirmed that their office would not have responsive documents. Id. We also contacted the Office of Safeguards and Security (OSS), who explained that it, too, believes that "the most likely location of information responsive to the request" is DOE/RF, but that "if any documents responsive to Mr. Carpenter's request existed in this office . . . they would be located in the Field Operations Division, . . . [which] provides field assistance and policy implementation guidance to" DOE/RF. Memorandum from Lynn Gebrowsky, Office of Safeguards and Security, to Steven Goering, OHA (July 3, 2000). OSS therefore consulted its Desk Officer responsible for DOE/RF in the Field Operations Division, who confirmed that the Field Operations Division had no records responsive to the request. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Victor Hawkins, OSS, and Steven Goering, OHA (July 7, 2000). In addition, after our receipt of the present Appeal, OSS's Information Management Center performed a search of its computerized document tracking system for responsive documents, and found none. Id.

The appellant cites an abundance of news reports implying at the very least that, as of her testimony on May 23, 2000, the DOE General Counsel may have had documents that would have been responsive to GAP's request. Appeal at 2-3. However, the issue before us is not whether DOE Headquarters currently has responsive documents, or even whether it had such documents as of the date of DOE/FOI's May 24, 2000 response. Rather, the pertinent issue is the adequacy of the searches of the two DOE Headquarters offices. In this respect, the numerous reports cited by the Appellant do not help us to determine whether the DOE Headquarters offices searched would have likely had any responsive documents, because those searches were conducted well before the May 23, 2000 congressional hearing. See Freedom of Information Act Request Certification (April 26, 2000) (signed by Marc Johnston, Deputy General Counsel for Litigation); Memorandum from Winnie Lehman, Office of Safeguards and Security, to Abel Lopez, DOE/FOI (May 17, 2000).

Indeed, the reports cited by GAP indicate that the testimony of DOE Headquarters officials at the hearing relied upon information provided by DOE/RF, and that as late as May 18, 2000, DOE/RF officials informed Headquarters that there had been no reimbursement of contractor costs in the Mark Graf whistleblower case. Appeal at 3. Under these circumstances, it is quite possible that further information, and responsive documents, passed from Rocky Flats to Headquarters in the days leading up to the May 23 hearing. However, we certainly cannot expect searches conducted at Headquarters prior to that time to have uncovered such documents.

Based on the descriptions provided to us, we conclude that the searches of the Office of the Deputy General Counsel for Litigation and the Office of Safeguards and Security were reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by GAP. Though there was not one uniform search method used, each office clearly made a thorough and conscientious effort to locate all responsive documents it might possess, either by notifying knowledgeable employees of the request and asking them to provide any responsive documents or by searching a computerized document tracking system, or both. For the reasons explained above, we will deny the present Appeal.(1)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Government Accountability Project, Case No. VFA-0584, is hereby denied.

September 21, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Government Accountability Project

On July 13, 2000, Government Accountability Project (GAP) filed an Appeal from two determination letters issued to it on May 18, 2000, and May 22, 2000, by the Department of Energy's Richland Operations Office (Richland). Those determinations were issued in response to a request for information that GAP submitted on March 17, 2000, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its Appeal, GAP asserts that Richland failed to provide it with documents in its possession that are responsive to its request.

The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that the DOE shall nonetheless release to the public a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest.

I. Background

On March 17, 2000, GAP filed a request for information in which it sought "any and all records generated in connection with United States of America ex rel. David R. Carbaugh v. Westinghouse Hanford Company and Fluor Daniel Hanford, Inc., Civil Action No. SC-96-0171-WFN." See Letter from GAP to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (June 21, 2000) (Appeal Letter). On March 30, 2000, GAP narrowed this request to invoices, billing statements, requests for payment and documents related to the above captioned litigation. On May 18, 2000, Richland issued a determination which stated that it identified several documents responsive to GAP's request. See Letter from Yvonne Sherman, FOIA Officer, Richland to GAP (May 18, 2000) (May 18 Determination Letter). However, Richland indicated that it was withholding certain portions of these documents pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). Id. Richland also determined that a portion of one document was not responsive and redacted this information. In addition, on May 22, 2000, Richland issued a second determination which stated that since its May 18th determination, it had located two additional documents responsive to GAP's request. See Letter from Yvonne Sherman, FOIA Officer, Richland to GAP (May 22, 2000) (May 22 Determination Letter). Richland withheld these documents in their entirety pursuant to FOIA Exemption 4.

On July 13, 2000, GAP filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In its Appeal, GAP challenges Richland's May 18 and May 22 determinations and asserts that: (1) DOE should produce an entire document without deeming portions of it as unresponsive unless it claims a privilege; (2) monthly statements of legal expenses incurred by Fluor Hanford, Inc. (FHI) were improperly withheld under Exemption 4; (3) information regarding Westinghouse Hanford Company (WHC) legal expenses was relevant and should have been produced; and (4) two identified letters generated by WHC were improperly withheld under Exemption 4 and should have been produced.(1) Based on these assertions, GAP asks that the Office of Hearings and Appeals direct Richland to release the responsive documents requested.

II. Analysis

Adequacy of Richland's Withholding for Lack of Responsiveness

In its Appeal, GAP first contends that information was improperly withheld from a June 22, 1999 WHC Letter to Theodore Turpin. Appeal Letter at 2. In its May 18 Determination Letter, Richland indicated that it redacted information from the letter it provided to GAP because it deemed the information as not responsive to GAP's request. After reviewing this document, we have determined that the information redacted from the letter does not fall within the scope of GAP's request and thus is unresponsive. It is important to note that the document in question here addresses several different topics of which only one was responsive to GAP's request. Under these circumstances, it is reasonable to redact nonresponsive information. Accordingly, we will uphold Richland's determination to redact information from the letter that is nonresponsive to the Appellant's request.(2)

Adequacy of the Richland Exemption 4 Justification

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either: (1) trade secrets or (2) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks).

The courts recognize two distinct tests for determining whether information is "confidential" for purposes of this Exemption, depending on whether the government obtained it voluntarily or involuntarily. In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government involuntarily is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (1) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (2) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the government obtained the information. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). By contrast, information a submitter provides to an agency voluntarily is "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

GAP's remaining arguments generally assert that Richland improperly withheld information pursuant to Exemption 4. Specifically, GAP disputes that the information withheld, including monthly statements of legal expenses incurred by FHI, information regarding WHC legal expenses, and two letters generated by WHC, was submitted voluntarily and therefore subject to the test set forth in Critical Mass. Richland has stated:

According to the Department of Energy's contract with Fluor Hanford, Inc., privileged and confidential legal documents prepared by or for contractors that are not reimbursed under the contract are the property of FHI and not subject to the provisions of the FOIA. RL [Richland] has not made a determination as to whether it will reimburse its contractors for this litigation. Therefore, until that decision is made, RL must protect the information as if the decision was not to reimburse the contractor.

We have also withheld monthly statements of costs incurred from the law firms. We have determined that these documents were not required to be submitted to DOE as they were submitted voluntarily by FHI and would not be required to be submitted to DOE unless litigation costs were reimbursed. At this stage, the documents have been provided to DOE as a courtesy to assist us in our budget planning processes.

May 18 Determination Letter.

Richland also applied the above explanation to the other requested documents. It appears that Richland analyzed the confidentiality of the requested documents under the test set forth in Critical Mass, as if they had been submitted to the DOE voluntarily. However, it is unclear that the withheld documents were in fact voluntarily submitted. We contacted officials at the Richland office to ascertain the process by which the DOE reimburses litigation costs. Based on these discussions, it is apparent that the general method for contractors to receive reimbursement for their litigation costs is through submitting documents to the DOE. It is also apparent that this is the contractors' only method of obtaining payment and that they submit these documents for the purpose of receiving reimbursement from the DOE. We are therefore not convinced that these documents were voluntarily submitted to the DOE, but rather believe that they were involuntarily submitted, in order to receive reimbursement. Accordingly, we will remand the portion of GAP's Appeal related to Exemption 4 to Richland with a direction to analyze the documents under the standard set forth in National Parks and to issue a new determination with respect to the documents in question.(3)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Government Accountability Project on July 13, 2000, is granted as specified in paragraph (2).

(2) This matter is remanded to the Department of Energy's Richland Operations Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: September 21, 2000

(1) In its Appeal, GAP says it is unclear whether Richland identified any documents regarding WHC's legal expenses. Richland has informed us that it did identify documents in that category and applied the same Exemption 4 analysis to these documents as it did to the FHI legal expenses in both its May 18 and May 22 Determination Letters.

(2) GAP may, however, elect to file a new FOIA request for the entire document.

(3) In addition, GAP requests that it be provided with a Vaughn index, i.e. an index identifying each responsive document, the exemption under which it is being withheld and an explanation of why that exemption is applicable. On previous occasions, we have stated that, although such an index may be required when an agency is in litigation with a FOIA requester, this degree of specificity is not required at the administrative stages of a FOIA request. See, e.g., Rockwell International, 21 DOE ¶ 80,105 at 80,527 (1991); Natural Resources Defense Council, 20 DOE ¶ 80,145 at 80,627 (1990). At the administrative levels, determinations need only provide a general description of the withheld material, and a statement of the reason for withholding each document. Therefore, we reject GAP's request for a Vaughn index. However, in its new determination Richland should provide sufficient details to meet this second standard.

July 26, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Martin Becker

Date of Filing: June 27, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0588

On June 27, 2000, Martin Becker completed the filing of an Appeal from a determination issued to him in response to a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Principal Deputy Inspector General (Authorizing Official) of the Office of the Inspector General of the DOE (OIG) issued that determination on May 23, 2000. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the DOE release information withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5, 6 and 7(C). 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), (6), 7(C).

The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that the DOE shall nonetheless release to the public a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On November 10, 1999, Mr. Becker filed a request with the DOE for copies of any written information related to audits, investigations or inquiries the DOE prepared concerning the use of funds appropriated in line items 92-D-150 and 92-D-153 for use at the Savannah River Site. The Authorizing Official released several documents in their entirety, but redacted information from other documents or withheld documents in their entirety pursuant to Exemptions 5, 6 and 7(C).

II. Analysis

In his Appeal, Mr. Becker makes several arguments. First, he states that the DOE should release documents and portions of documents withheld pursuant to Exemption 5. Specifically, Mr. Becker argues that the DOE should release document 73 in its entirety and release the redacted information withheld from documents 84, 129 and 141. He argues that the DOE failed to provide him with a description of document 73 and did not segregate and release those portions of document 73 to which Exemption 5 does not apply. Second, Mr. Becker contends that the DOE should not have redacted names pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) from numerous documents. He states that the public interest in the release of the withheld names outweighs the privacy interest. Third, Mr. Becker requests that the DOE provide a description of documents numbered as 4, 5, 22-36, 40, 42-45, 48, 49, 53-60, 62-72, 79, 83, 86-97, 99-100, 104, 111, 114, 124, 131, 135, 143, 147- 149, 150-169, and 171-175. (1) Finally, Mr. Becker requests that the DOE release copies of documents referred to in document 81, since he believes these documents are responsive to his FOIA request. (2)

A representative of the DOE IG's office has informed us that the office mistakenly withheld two responsive documents: document 73 and the "Executive Brief Complete" (referred to in document 81). The DOE IG's office is currently reviewing these documents and will either release them to Mr. Becker or provide an explanation for withholding. The DOE IG's office also provided information to us concerning the other documents referred to in document 81, which Mr. Becker claims are responsive to his FOIA request. Specifically, the DOE IG's office confirmed that one of these documents, referred to as "Agent Notes," was destroyed, pursuant to DOE IG's standard procedures, prior to Mr. Becker's FOIA request. The DOE IG's office also stated that another document referred to in document 81 by the title, "Criminal and Civil Referrals, Responses and Results Documented in Case File," is document 143. The DOE IG's office confirmed that it returned document 143 to the Department of Justice, where the document had originated, prior to Mr. Becker's FOIA request. See Record of July 20, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Linda Duvall, FOIA and Privacy Act Division, and Leonard M. Tao, OHA Staff Attorney. Accordingly, the remaining documents referred to in document 81 are not subject to Mr. Becker's FOIA request.

We have confirmed, as mentioned in the Authorizing Official's May 23, 2000 letter, that various DOE offices have not yet completed determinations concerning the releasability of responsive information. Id. Since final determinations have not been made on the documents of which Mr. Becker has requested descriptions, we will dismiss the portion of this appeal concerning documents 22-28, 30, 32-36, 40, 42-45, 48, 49, 53-60, 63- 67, 83, 86-97, 99-100, 104, 111, 114, 124, 131, 135, 147-149, 150-169, and 171-175 as not yet ripe for adjudication. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a).

A. Exemption 5

We will first consider Mr. Becker's Exemption 5 arguments concerning documents 84, 129 and 141. Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears) (footnote omitted). The courts have identified several privileges that fall under this definition. These privileges include the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only the "deliberative process" privilege is at issue here.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions by promoting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946 (Ct. Cl. 1958)) (Mink).

In order for Exemption 5 to shield a document, it must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

The Authorizing Official, pursuant to Exemption 5, redacted information from documents 84, 129 and 141. We reviewed the redacted information and found that it contains preliminary estimates of time needed to conduct the investigation, contemplated investigative actions, and various editorial comments concerning the IG investigation. We find that the redacted information in these documents is both predecisional and deliberative pursuant to Exemption 5. Furthermore, these redactions do not contain any segregable factual information. Accordingly, we must deny the portion of Mr. Becker's appeal relating to these documents.

B. Exemption 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990).

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemption 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, provided the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Since, as discussed below, all of the documents involved here were compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard is entitled to protection. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(C) is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). By law, the OIG is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. OIG is therefore a classic example of an organization with a clear law enforcement mandate. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732-33 (2d Cir. 1995) (Ortiz), and cases cited therein. In the present case, the OIG documents were created pursuant to an investigation of alleged misconduct concerning the Westinghouse Savannah River Company. Consequently, the OIG documents at issue were created for a law enforcement purpose.

1. The Privacy Interest

We have carefully reviewed the redactions the Authorizing Official made in 33 documents pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C). The Authorizing Official redacted from the documents the names of individuals who were contacted in the OIG's investigation. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (KTVY- TV) (withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985) (Cucarro); James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,109 (1990). The Authorizing Official states that the individuals named in the responsive documents have a privacy interest in remaining "free from intrusions into their professional and private lives." We agree that there is a privacy interest that protects these individuals who provided information to government investigators.

2. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that “sheds light on an agency’s performance of its statutory duties.” Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). In his Appeal, Mr. Becker states that release of the withheld names could help his attempt to recover money on behalf of the United States. He argues that the people whose names have been withheld could provide testimony to support his qui tam action.

We find that Mr. Becker has not met his burden of demonstrating that disclosure of the withheld names would serve the public interest. Courts have held that unsubstantiated allegations of an agency’s misconduct are insufficient to establish a public interest in disclosure. In Spirko v. United States Postal Service, 147 F.3d 992 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals found no public interest in names and information pertaining to suspects and law enforcement officers absent any evidence of alleged misconduct by the agency. Moreover, the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals found that “when . . . governmental misconduct is alleged as the justification for disclosure, the public interest is ?insubstantial’ unless the requester puts forward ?compelling evidence that the agency denying the FOIA request is engaged in illegal activity’ and shows that the information sought ?is necessary in order to confirm or refute that evidence.’” Davis v. United States Department of Justice,968 F.2d 1276, 1282 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (quoting Safecard at 1205-06). In his Appeal, Mr. Becker merely speculates that agency misconduct exists to form the basis of his qui tam action. Moreover, he can only speculate that the people whose names were withheld might provide supportive testimony in his litigation against the federal government. Such speculation is not enough for us to find that the release of these names would shed light on the agency’s performance of its statutory duties. Accordingly, we agree with the Authorizing Official and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the material withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 and 7(C).

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether documents may be withheld pursuant to either Exemption 6 or 7(C), courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); Safecard. We have concluded above that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is no more than a minimal public interest in the release of the names of the investigative sources. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 or 7(C) from documents

1, 8, 10- 11, 14, 16, 37-39, 41, 46, 52, 75, 77-78, 81-82, 85, 98, 103, 129-130, 132-134, 141-142, 144-146, 170, 176 and 204 is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the named individuals.

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). The Authorizing Official withheld, for the most part, only names and identifying information. However, during our review of the redacted documents, we found information withheld in document 75 (a one page document) that is segregable and factual. Accordingly, we will remand this document to the OIG to either release additional factual information from document 75 or provide a detailed explanation for withholding. We affirm the Authorizing Official's findings concerning the remaining documents withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 or 7(C).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal Martin Becker completed filing on June 27, 2000 (Case Number VFA-0588) is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Principal Deputy Inspector General of the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of Energy to either release documents 73, 75, and the "Executive Brief Complete" (referred to in document 81) or provide a detailed explanation for withholding information.

Date: July 26, 2000

(1)Since the filing of Mr. Becker's appeal, Mr. Becker has informed us that he has received copies of documents 29, 31, 62, 79, 143 and descriptions of documents 4, 5, and 68-72. Since Mr. Becker requested descriptions of these documents and the DOE complied, we will not conduct a further review regarding these documents.

(2)Mr. Becker also states that the DOE failed to perform an adequate search in that the DOE did not provide him an allegedly responsive DOE IG report, ER-B-98-02. Mr. Becker is correct in so far as that document was not provided to him. However, we find that this is not evidence of an inadequate search. The DOE IG representative informed us that the Authorizing Official did not provide the audit report to Mr. Becker because the report did not refer to any of the line item information Mr. Becker requested. Thus, the Authorizing Official did not find that the report was responsive to Mr. Becker's request. See Record of July 20, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Linda Duvall, FOIA and Privacy Act Division, and Leonard M. Tao, OHA Staff Attorney.

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Donald R. Patterson

Case Number: VFA-0589

On June 23, 2000, Donald R. Patterson (Patterson) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him in response to a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on May 23, 2000 by the Chicago Operations Office (DOE/CO). This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/CO release responsive documents and grant Patterson a fee waiver.

I. Background

On May 10, 2000, Patterson submitted a FOIA request to DOE/CO for a copy of "all government owned records relating to any alleged or actual incidents of reprisal against any [Argonne National Laboratory] ANL employees for 'whistleblowing.'" Letter from Patterson to Linda Rohde, FOI Officer, DOE/CO (May 10, 1000) (Request). Patterson further stated that he sought the information for personal use, and requested a fee waiver for the request. In the Request, Patterson addressed four factors that DOE/CO had previously advised him would be considered in granting a fee waiver. First, he explained that his request concerned the operations and activities of the government, since he sought information about DOE and a DOE contractor, ANL. Second, he wrote that the information would contribute to an understanding of how DOE investigates charges of whistleblowing and complaints of contractor retaliation against the whistleblower. Third, according to Patterson, the information would contribute to an understanding by the general public of the subject matter of the request. He states that he planned to present the information to elected representatives and testify at congressional hearings, if provided the opportunity. Request at 3. Finally, Patterson alleged that the disclosure was likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations because "public understanding of the means that government takes to assure the safety of contractor employees is of utmost significance." Id. at 3. Patterson further stated that he would disseminate the information to the general public by submitting it to organizations dedicated to publicizing retaliation by DOE against DOE contractor employees. He stated that he intended to encourage the groups to post the documents on the Internet, and if they did not, he would create his own web site and post the documents there. Id. at 4-5.

On May 23, 2000, DOE/CO issued a determination letter, and denied Patterson's request for a fee waiver. DOE/CO indicated that it denied the request because Patterson did not demonstrate the capability of widely disseminating this information and because he failed to demonstrate any specialized knowledge that could enable him to effectively convey the information to others. Letter from DOE/CO to Patterson (May 23, 2000) (Determination). On May 30, 2000, Patterson wrote to DOE/CO requesting further explanations of its denial. DOE/CO sent Patterson an electronic mail message advising him to review the determination letter, insisting that the determination letter adequately explained the reasons for denying his request. On June 23, 2000, Patterson filed this Appeal. Letter from Patterson to Director, OHA (June 23, 2000) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees for the processing of their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a) (4)(A)(I); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, it provides a two-pronged test for agencies to use in considering whether to waive fees. The two prongs can be summarized as the "public interest prong" and the "commercial interest" prong. See Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1998) (Murphy). The public interest prong requires an examination of whether disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(4)(A)(iii). The commercial interest prong asks whether the request is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. Id. The requester bears the burden of satisfying the two-prong test for a fee waiver. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997) (Ott).

In order to determine whether the requester meets the first prong (i.e., whether disclosure will contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities) the DOE considers four factors:

> (A) The subject of the request: whether the subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;
> (C)The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure;
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a) (8)(i). A requester who satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong must then address the second prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his or her commercial interest. See Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,199 (1997).

In denying Patterson's fee waiver request, the DOE/CO FOIA Officer opined that Patterson had not demonstrated a capability of widely disseminating this information, and that he had failed to demonstrate any specialized knowledge that would enable him to effectively convey this information to others. Determination at 1. Thus, DOE/CO concluded that Patterson failed to satisfy factor C, and based its determination on that conclusion. After reviewing Patterson's submission and the relevant case law, we find that DOE/CO properly denied Patterson's request for a fee waiver.

Factor C

This test requires us to consider whether the requested documents would contribute to the understanding of the subject by the public. Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780. To satisfy this factor, the requester must have the ability and intention to disseminate this information to the public. Id.; see also STAND, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,250 (1999) (STAND); Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992).

Patterson states that he will use the disclosed information as "the basis for written and verbal communications with other members of the public on the topic of the government's response to allegations of retaliation against ?whistleblowers' . . . ." Request at 3. He plans to present the information to elected representatives, members of Congress (if provided the opportunity to testify at hearings), and public interest organizations, encouraging them to post the documents on their web sites. Id. at 4. Further, Patterson indicates that he would create his own website if the public interest organizations were not receptive to the information he offered. Id.

We find that Patterson has not provided sufficient evidence of his ability and intention to disseminate this information to the public. Courts have previously stated that passively making information available to anyone who might seek access to it does not meet the burden of demonstrating that the material will be disseminated to the public. See Van Fripp v. Parks, No. 97-0159, slip op. at 12 (D.D.C. Mar. 16, 2000) (emphasizing that placement in library amounts to a passive method of distribution that does not entitle requester to a fee waiver); Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n v. United States Dep't of the Interior, No. 96-3077, slip op. at 47 (D.Or. June 19, 1997) (finding placement in library insufficient to merit a fee waiver). Merely placing the data in the public domain without analysis or explanation does not contribute to the public's understanding. S.A. Ludsin & Co. v. SBA, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8617, at *16. Patterson's plan to post information on a website or submit that information to a public interest group is a passive method of placing the information in the public domain, compared to, for instance, distributing the material in a newsletter or journal. See, e.g., STAND, 27 DOE at 80,888. In addition, we have stated in a previous case involving the same requester that there is no indication that Patterson's elected representatives would be interested in conveying the information to a broad audience. See Donald Patterson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,267 (2000) (Patterson). Therefore, we find that Patterson has not satisfied the factor C test. The inability to disseminate information, by itself, is sufficient basis for denying a fee waiver request. See Patterson, 27 DOE at 80,927 (citing Larson v. CIA, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988)). Accordingly, we shall deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Donald Patterson on June 23, 2000, OHA Case Number VFA-0589, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation

Date of Filing: July 3, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0591

On July 3, 2000, Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation (NMPC) filed an Appeal from a determination the Energy Information Administration (EIA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on June 1, 2000. In that determination, EIA released redacted versions of copies of Form EIA-867 submitted by certain firms.(1) NMPC had requested this information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

In a March 3, 1995 request for information, NMPC sought copies of Form EIA-867 that certain firms had filed and any predecessor forms filed by those same firms for any year prior to 1995. Request Letter dated March 3, 1995, from William J. Mertens, Swidler & Berlin, Chartered, Attorney for NMPC, to Freedom of Information Act Officer, DOE. On May 19, 1995, after EIA had failed to issue a determination within the regulatory deadline, NMPC filed suit in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, where summary judgment was granted to the DOE and the interveners. Appeal Letter dated June 30, 2000, from William J. Mertens, Esq., Asbill, Junkin, Moffitt & Boss, Chtd., Counsel for NMPC, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter). Following NMPC's appeal of the summary judgment order, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit granted the appeal and remanded the matter to the District Court for a determination on the merits. Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. v. Department of Energy, 169 F.3d. 16 (D.C. Cir. 1999). As a result of an mediation process at the District Court, the parties agreed to stay the case until the completion of the administrative proceedings at DOE, specifically EIA's issuance of a determination letter on the NMPC FOIA request and any subsequent appeal to the OHA by NMPC. Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. v. Department of Energy, Dkt. No. 95CV00952 (D.D.C. February 23, 2000). On June 1, 2000, EIA issued the determination letter releasing the redacted copies of the Form EIA- 867 to NMPC. Determination Letter dated June 1, 2000, from John Geidl, Director, Office of Coal, Nuclear, Electric, and Alternate Fuels, EIA, DOE, to William J. Mertens, Esq. Asbill, Junkin, Moffitt & Boss, Chtd., Counsel for NMPC (Determination Letter). NMPC then filed this Appeal.

In the June 1, 2000 determination, EIA withheld portions of Form EIA-867 submitted by Ellicottville Energy, Inc. (Laidlaw), General Mills, Inc. (General Mills), Oxbow Power of Tonawanda New York, Inc. (Oxbow), and Sithe Independence Station (Sithe) (collectively the submitters).(2) The four submitters involved in this Appeal all operate cogeneration plants. A cogeneration plant produces electricity for its own use and sells any extra electricity to customers, such as NMPC. In this case, the submitters are involved in manufacturing lumber and food products and in agriculture production. Sithe operates a cogeneration plant that supplies electricity and produces steam for a thermal host, i.e., a company which purchases the steam to operate its business.

In its determination, EIA rejected NMPC's claim that the same or substantially similar information to that withheld is already in the public domain. Determination Letter at 1. EIA also determined that the withheld information is confidential because release of this information would cause competitive harm to the four submitters by revealing plant operational processes and costs of service and profit margins. The EIA states that releasing the information would put the submitters at a competitive disadvantage in contract renegotiations involving the sale of power to NMPC. Also, the EIA states that the submitters would be at a competitive disadvantage in their respective industries and as energy producers in direct competition with utilities such as NMPC. Id. at 2-3. In addition, EIA states that release of the information would have a chilling effect on its ability to obtain the information in the future. Id. at 3. Finally, EIA states that discretionary disclosure of this information would not be in the public interest. Id.

In its Appeal, NMPC argues that EIA's withholding of the information on the grounds that release of the information would negatively impact its ability to obtain the information in the future is "conclusory" and "failed to heed the express holding of the Court of Appeals." Appeal Letter at 3-4. Secondly, NMPC claims that the Court of Appeals found there is no actual competition between the submitters and NMPC. Id. at 4-5. Further, NMPC argues that even if actual competition exists, because the information is historical in nature, i.e., from 1995 and earlier, substantial competitive injury to the submitters is unlikely. Id. at 5. NMPC also reasserts that the information has already been released in the Qualifying Facility Monitoring Report which the submitters are required to submit to NMPC under New York law. It asserts that the data in this report and in EIA Form-867 are identical or equivalent and DOE has already conceded that the information was substantially identical. Id. NMPC also argues that the Report is not confidential. Id. at 8.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is (1) "commercial" or "financial," (2) "obtained from a person," and (3) "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government under non-voluntary conditions is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (i) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information that is provided to an agency voluntarily is considered "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. Because Form EIA-867 is a mandatory filing under the Federal Energy Administration Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-275), we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily" submitted to EIA. BP Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 at 80,796 (1999); see William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999). Thus, as we have held previously, for this information to be properly withheld under Exemption 4, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement for Exemption 4 protection is that the withheld information must be "commercial or financial." Courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (citing Washington Post Co. v. HHS, 690 F.2d 252, 266 (D.C. Cir. 1982). The specific information submitted on Form EIA-867 by Laidlaw, General Mills, Oxbow, and Sithe is their respective facility's generator rating in kilowatts, fuel information, thermal and generation information, and electric generator information. This information is commercial information. Second, the information must be "obtained from a person." "Person" refers to a wide range of entities, including corporate entities. Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979). As we stated above, all of the submitters of the requested forms are either corporate entities or partnerships and, therefore, meet this requirement.

Finally, to qualify for Exemption 4 protection under National Parks, information must also be "confidential." Withheld information is "confidential" if it meets the test set out in National Parks. In this case, the withheld information would be considered "confidential" if release would either (a) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters or (b) impair EIA's ability to obtain the necessary information in the future. In reviewing whether release would cause substantial competitive harm we analyze two elements: 1) the submitters must face actual competition and 2) disclosure would likely cause substantial competitive injury. National Parks and Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 679 (1976) (National Parks II).

The first question is whether the submitters face actual competition. We believe that the submitters have shown that they do face competition. However, they have employed different methods to demonstrate competition. Laidlaw has convinced us that release of the information would cause it competitive harm within its primary industry, the manufacturing of lumber and wood products. In contrast, the other submitters have shown that release of the information would cause competitive harm within their secondary industry, the sale of electric power, in which they are in direct competition with NMPC.

Laidlaw is a lumber company involved only secondarily in the electric industry. It is in direct competition with other entities engaged in the manufacturing of lumber and wood products other than furniture. Its competitors include Weyerhaeuser and Georgia Pacific. Finding that competition exists, we need to address whether the firm would face substantial competitive harm if the requested information were released. Laidlaw has provided sufficient information to show that release of the information would enable its competitors in the lumber industry to make accurate estimates of its energy consumption and, thereby, gain insight into its custom lumber drying operations. Letter dated March 17, 2000, from Craig M. Indyke, Esq., Read and Laniado, LLP, attorney for Laidlaw, to John Colligan, EIA. Release of the information would allow its competitors to discover its unique method of drying lumber and to replicate its methods. Laidlaw's competitors should not be permitted to gain the advantage of its experience at little effort or expense. To do so would tend to discourage companies from developing better processes and products. Therefore, we believe that Laidlaw would suffer substantial competitive harm within the lumber industry were the information on Form EIA-867 released to NMPC.

Both Sithe and Oxbow have argued that disclosure of the requested information would cause them competitive harm in electricity sales made in competition with NMPC and other suppliers. With the promulgation of Rule 888 and 889, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) opened access to electric transmission lines. Promoting Wholesale Competition Through Open Access Non-discriminatory Transmission Services by Public Utilities; Recovery of Stranded Costs by Public Utilities and Transmitting Utilities, 61 Fed. Reg 21539 (1996); Open Access Same-Time Information System (formerly Real-Time Information Networks) and Standards of Conduct, 61 Fed. Reg. 21737 (1996). The new structure of the wholesale market for power in New York State allows for market-based rates for sales of energy through a competitive bid-based market. Comment Letter at 2, dated March 21, 2000, from Curtis P. Lu, Latham & Watkins, Attorney for Sithe/Independence Power Partners, L.P. , to Robert Schnapp, Director, Electric Power Division, EIA, DOE (Sithe Comment Letter); Comment Letter at 1, dated March 7, 2000, from David W. Clark, Counsel, Oxbow, to Robert Schnapp, Director, Electric Power Division, EIA, DOE. According to Sithe, market participants in this highly competitive market can submit daily bids to the New York Independent System Operator (NYISO) to sell energy at market-based prices. Sithe Comment Letter. Thus, success for market participants hinges on who can offer the most competitive prices. Id. at 4. Again, finding competition in this industry, we must ascertain whether release of the withheld information would cause substantial competitive harm.

Release of the requested information would allow NMPC and other competitors in the energy market to determine the submitters' costs of energy production and make an accurate estimate of their operating margins. With this information, a competitor of Sithe or Oxbow could accurately estimate their bids and thereby have a significant competitive advantage over each firm in future bids. Id. Neither Laidlaw nor General Mills made this specific argument. However, since the spot market in New York is open to any firm that generates electricity, we believe this argument is equally applicable to them.

We have also considered the following three arguments that NMPC has raised in its Appeal. NMPC's first argument concerns EIA's determination that disclosure of this information would put the four submitters at a competitive disadvantage when they renegotiate contracts with NMPC. EIA determined that disclosure of the requested information would reveal the submitters' costs of production and allow NMPC to calculate accurate estimates of their operating margins. EIA found this information would give NMPC an advantage in its contract renegotiations with the submitters since NMPC would have confidential information normally not known to an adversary in a negotiation. However, NMPC argues that the potential risk of competitive harm that might result was too remote in the occasional renegotiation of long-term contracts. As the court in Niagara Mohawk pointed out, National Parks II looked at the long-term nature of the contracts involved in that case--30, 20, and 5 years--and determined that there would not be substantial commercial harm in releasing the information. National Parks II, 547 F.2d at 681 n.28. Similarly, the contracts involved here are of long duration. We contacted all of the submitters and determined that their electricity purchase contracts with NMPC are 15 and 30 years in length.(3) We, therefore, do not agree with this aspect of EIA's determination.

We must also address NMPC's argument that release of the historical data requested in the case will not cause harm. Appeal Letter at 5. We disagree. The information contained in the copies of Form EIA-867 that the four submitters have filed is only approximately five years old and does not change significantly from year to year. Memorandum of meeting held July 11, 2000, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Richard A. Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA, and William M. Schwartz, Attorney, OHA, and John C. Geidl, Director, Office of Coal, Nuclear, Electric and Alternate Fuels, EIA, Robert M. Schnapp, Director, Electric Power Division, EIA, and John G. Colligan, EIA. Therefore, disclosing this five to eight year old information to NMPC would in essence be disclosing current information to NMPC.

Finally, NMPC argues that the requested information is already in the public domain, because the same information is collected periodically on the New York Public Service Commission (PSC) Qualifying Facility Monitoring Report (QFM). EIA determined that the information is not the same and further, that the QFM Report is not public information. We agree with EIA that the QFM Report is not public. Each Qualifying Facility–in this case, Laidlaw, General Mills, Oxbow, and Sithe-- sends a copy of the form to the relevant electric utility--in this case, NMPC. The Report is not filed with the PSC nor is it made public in any way. Simply because NMPC may have the ability to make the information public does not mean that the information is public. As Laidlaw stated in its comments, it is highly unlikely that one of its competitors would approach NMPC for a copy of the QFM Report, and even more unlikely that NMPC would provide it to the competitor. Comment Letter dated July 17, 2000, to Director, OHA, DOE, from Craig M. Indyke, Read and Laniado, LLP, Attorney for Laidlaw. Because we find that the QFM Report is not in the public domain, we find that confidentiality of the information in the report has not been waived. We need not address whether the information contained in it is the same as that on the requested EIA form.(4)

III. Conclusion

EIA determined that release of the requested information would put the submitters at a substantial competitive disadvantage. We agree. The submitters would be competitively harmed either in their primary industry or in direct competition with NMPC and others for the sale of electricity in the deregulated energy market in New York State. However, we do not agree with EIA that competitive harm may also occur in the renegotiation of contracts between the submitters and NMPC. Finally, despite NMPC's assertions, we have determined that the requested information, though at least five years old, reflects current data and that it is not already in the public domain. Therefore, we find that the information EIA withheld from NMPC is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4. In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See e.g., Vladeck, Waldmas, Elias & Engelhard, P.C., 27 DOE ¶ 80,230 at 80,835 (1999). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4. Consequently, we uphold EIA's June 1 determination and shall deny the NMPC Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation, on July 3, 2000, Case No. VFA-0591, is hereby denied.

(2)We find these entities are either corporations or partnerships. At least two of these companies have had a name change since NMPC filed its original request. The names we have listed are those on Form EIA-867. Ellicottville Energy, Inc., was sold to Laidlaw Energy & Environmental, Inc. Sithe is referred to in many different ways in the various filings in this case. We will refer to it as Sithe.

(3)Sithe's contract, although of long duration, has a thirty day written notice of cancellation clause. Sithe Comment Letter at 2.

(4)Since we have found that the requested information can be withheld under the first prong of the National Parks test, whether its disclosure would cause competitive harm, we need not address the second prong of the National Parks test, whether release of the information will impair the government's ability to acquire similar information in the future.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioners: Virginia Johnson

Terrence Willingham

Dates of Filing: July 5, 2000

July 19, 2000

On July 5, 2000, Virginia Johnson filed an Appeal from a determination by the Department of Energy Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Group (DOE/FOI). On July 19, 2000, Terrence Willingham filed an Appeal from a determination by DOE/FOI. These determinations responded to requests for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. ' 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. ' 552(a)(6)(A). However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA setting forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. ' 552(a)(6)(B). Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.1.

I. Background

In a request dated May 18, 1999, Ms. Johnson requested “information from the [DOE]’s Automated Complaints Tracking System regarding complaints filed, processed, investigated, settled or adjudicated within the DOE,” including

- all final agency decision and/or settlements, including all awards of monies, promotions, backpay, payment of medical and/or legal expenses, and all compensatory damages
- all discrimination complaints filed by and settled in favor of DOE supervisors and DOE managers
- a copy of the complete Settlement Agreement entered into between Patricia Howse-Smith and the DOE.

Appeal at 1.

In a July 9, 1999 request, Mr. Willingham sought “copies of settlement agreements the Department of Energy entered into [from] 1992 to the present.” Letter from Terrence Willingham to Abel Lopez, DOE/FOI (July 9, 1999).

In response to the requests, DOE/FOI provided the following categories of documents to Ms. Johnson and Mr. Willingham,(1) deleting from the documents certain information under Exemption 6 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. ' 552(b)(6).

Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI, to Virginia Johnson (June 2, 2000); Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI, to Terrence Willingham (June 2, 2000).

In her Appeal of DOE/FOI’s response, Ms. Johnson raises a number of issues. First, she requests a detailed justification of the deletion of material from the documents under Exemption 6. Second, Ms. Johnson notes that “Enclosure 3 [an output of data from the complaints tracking system] contains a total of 231 listed settlement agreements,” and she was provided copies of only “70 settlement agreements from 1992 through 1999.” Third, she requests that she “be provided in writing an explanation of Enclosure 1, . . .” Finally, she states that she was never provided “all discrimination complaints filed by and settled in favor of DOE supervisors and DOE managers,” as she specifically requested. Johnson Appeal at 1-2. Mr. Willingham raises an issue similar to one brought forth by Ms. Johnson, complaining that “only about one third of [settlement agreements in cases listed as settled in the complaints tracking system] were provided to me.” Willingham Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

A. DOE/FOI's Withholding of Information Under FOIA Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. ' 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Fin. Management Serv., 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1056 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-70.

In its June 2 determinations, DOE/FOI explained,

> The names and other identifying information of individuals who have filed complaints with > the Department have been withheld under Exemption 6. Disclosure of this information could subject the individuals to embarrassment, and unwanted communications and attention that would intrude into their personal lives. Moreover, disclosure of this information will not reveal any aspect about the operations and activities of the Government.

Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI, to Virginia Johnson (June 2, 2000); Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOI, to Terrence Willingham (June 2, 2000).

We agree with the justification given by DOE/FOI for withholding identifying information from the documents it provided to the requesters. The federal courts have found a significant privacy interest in the names of federal employee parties to employment disputes. Rothman v. USDA, No. 94-8151, slip. Op. at 6 (C.D.Cal. June 17, 1996) (entire settlement agreement related to charge of employment discrimination that "could conceivably lead to embarrassment or friction with fellow employees or supervisors"); cf. Norwood v. Federal Aviation Admin., 993 F.2d 570 (6th Cir.) (identifying information from documents related to air traffic controllers strike).

As for whether release of the information withheld would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government, we note that the information already released to the appellants clearly sheds light on the operation and activities of the Government as a respondent to discrimination complaints. However, the information withheld from those documents, the names of the individuals who filed complaints and other information that could identify them, says little if anything additional about the activities of the Government.

Ms. Johnson argues that releasing the location of the complainant within the DOE complex would be unlikely to identify the complainant. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Virginia Johnson and Steve Goering, OHA (July 26, 2000). However, if that information were in the hands of a fellow employee at the same DOE location, the employee very likely could use the information contained in the settlement agreement to identify the complainant. Moreover, the location of the complainant within the DOE complex adds no significant information regarding the activities of the Government, and thus does not appreciably further the public interest. Looking at the information withheld in this case, weighing the significant privacy interests of the complainants at stake on one hand and the slight public interest on the other, we conclude that DOE/FOI properly applied Exemption 6.

B. Adequacy of DOE's Search for Responsive Documents

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE & 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

We contacted the DOE's Office of Civil Rights within the Office of Economic Impact and Diversity (DOE/ED), which conducted the search for responsive documents. They informed us that settlement agreements that would have existed at the time of the requests at issue would have been found in the complaint files maintained by that office. Electronic mail from William Garrett, DOE/ED, to Steven Goering, (July 25, 2000). DOE/ED states that all settlement agreements kept in those files were provided to the requesters. Electronic mail from William Garrett, DOE/ED, to Steven Goering, (July 26, 2000). DOE/ED further explained,

> The fact that there may be 144 complaints for which no settlement agreements were provided may be attributable to several reasons: (1) the period of time involved, including a time before our record keeping was exact; (2) the fact that some of the complaints involved Field cases for which copies of settlement agreements may not have been provided [to DOE Headquarters]; and (3) the fact that some of the complaints may have been settled by [DOE's Office of General Counsel] for which copies of the settlement agreements were not provided.

This explanation by DOE/ED might well account for the fact that the office does not have copies of a number of settlement agreements, despite the fact that its own database lists the cases as settled. What remains unexplained, despite our offering DOE/ED ample opportunity to provide an explanation, is that some of the cases involved complaints filed against DOE/ED which were settled as recently as the month prior to Ms. Johnson's request. It is baffling that DOE/ED would not have a copy of a settlement agreement in such a case. More troubling is the fact the DOE/FOI informed us that DOE/ED told it, while the requests were in process, that DOE/ED would not provide certain settlement agreements to DOE/FOI for processing because of promises of confidentiality in cases involving DOE/ED employees.(2)

We therefore will remand this case to DOE/FOI for further processing. First, DOE/FOI should refer the matter back to DOE/ED, which must conduct a new search and provide to DOE/FOI unredacted copies of all settlement agreements in its possession, whether or not DOE/ED believes those agreements to be responsive to the Appellants' requests.(3) DOE/FOI can then independently determine which of the agreements provided are responsive to the requests, and release those agreements to the requesters, with information withheld as necessary under applicable FOIA exemptions. Second, if this new search does not account for all cases known to have been settled, DOE/FOI should refer the request to the DOE's Office of General Counsel and appropriate field offices to conduct searches for responsive documents.

C. Remaining Issues Raised on Appeal

Ms. Johnson raises two additional issues in her Appeal. First, she asks for "an explanation of Enclosure 1, the Complaints Tracking System closure legend . . ." Appeal at 1. We consider this outside the scope of the present Appeal, since the FOIA does not "require[] an agency to answer questions . . ." Matthew Cherney, M.D., 27 DOE ¶ 80,239 at 80,857 (quoting Hudgins v. IRS, 620 F. Supp. 19, 21 (D.D.C. 1985)). Second, Ms. Johnson states that she was never provided "all discrimination complaints filed by and settled in favor of DOE supervisors and DOE managers," as she specifically requested. Appeal at 1-2. We note that this particular item of Ms. Johnson's request is confusing, at best, since a case is not typically "settled in favor" of one party. Rather a settlement represents a compromise by parties in lieu of a decision in favor of one of the parties. Thus, on remand, DOE/FOI should consult with Ms. Johnson to clarify this portion of her request.

For the reasons stated above, the present matter will be remanded to DOE/FOI for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1)The Appeals filed by Virginia Johnson, Case No. VFA-0592, and Terrence Willingham, Case No. VFA-0594, are granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and are in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Group for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3)This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1). Though Ms. Johnson and Mr. Willingham filed separate requests, DOE/FOI provided the same documents to each requester “as a matter of administrative convenience and discretion . . .” Letter from Abel Lopez, DOE/FOI, to Virginia Johnson (June 2, 2000).

(2). Any promise of confidentiality would be unlikely to override the FOIA. See Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1287 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (“agencies cannot alter the dictates of the Act by their own express or implied promises of confidentiality”); Robles v. Environmental Protection Agency, 484 F.2d 843, 846 (4th Cir.1973) ("While, perhaps, a promise of confidentiality is a factor to be considered, it is not enough to defeat the right of disclosure."); Ackerly v. Ley, 420 F.2d 1336, 1340 n.3 (D.C. Cir. 1969) (“pledge[s] of confidentiality cannot, in and of themselves, override the Act.”). In any event, the existence of such promises would be a hollow justification for not providing documents, since many, if not most, of the settlement agreements that DOE/ED did provide to DOE/FOI, redacted copies of which were released to the requesters, also contained confidentiality clauses of one form or another.

(3). DOE/ED has informed us that many of the files that would contain settlement agreements have been archived. Electronic mail from William Garrett, DOE/ED, to Steven Goering, (July 25, 2000). On remand, DOE/ED shall either retrieve those files or refer the request for a search at the site where those files are now located.

October 19, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Oleta Longmire

Date of Filing: September 28, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0595

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by Oleta Longmire from a determination that the Freedom of Information Officer of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (ROO) issued to her. In this determination, ROO stated that it could not locate any documents that were responsive to the request for information that Ms. Longmire filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If we were to grant the Appeal, this matter would be remanded to ROO for a new search.

In her FOIA request, Ms. Longmire sought access to her deceased husband's medical records. In its determination, ROO stated that medical records at the site at which Mr. Longmire worked were maintained by the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation (HEHF), and that HEHF had thoroughly searched its records, by name and by social security number, without success. In her Appeal, Ms. Longmire challenges the adequacy of HEHF's search.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to obtain further information about the FOIA request and about the scope of the search, we contacted Ms. Longmire, ROO and HEHF. We were informed that HEHF had conducted computerized searches of all four databases in which responsive documents might have been located, and that no such documents were found. However, we learned that HEHF would not have records for individuals who were employed at Hanford prior to 1965. Ms. Longmire informed us that Mr. Longmire worked at Hanford during 1945 and 1946. (1) We then ascertained that E.I. Dupont de Nemours, Inc. (Dupont) operated the Hanford facility for the federal government during that period, and that if Mr. Longmire's Hanford records still existed, Dupont would have them. See memorandums of September 29, 2000 telephone conversations between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, Angela Lowman, ROO, Cheryl Holland, HEHF, and Ms. Longmire.(2) For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that ROO's search for responsive documents was reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials, and was therefore adequate. We will therefore deny

Ms. Longmire's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Oleta Longmire in Case No. VFA-0595 is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: October 19, 2000

(1)At the time that it performed the search, ROO did not know the dates of Mr. Longmire's employment.

(2)We then informed Ms. Longmire that she could request the records by letter addressed to: E.I. Dupont de Nemours, Inc., Hall of Records, Wilmington, Delaware, 19898.

September 6, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Randall Brown

Date of Filing: July 28, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0597

Randall Brown (Brown) filed this Appeal on July 28, 2000, with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a determination that the DOE Ohio Field Office (DOE/Ohio) issued to Brown on July 3, 2000. The determination concerned a request for information that Brown submitted pursuant to the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. If the present Appeal were granted, Ohio would be required to release any responsive material.

The Privacy Act was enacted to prevent the unnecessary dissemination of personal information compiled about individuals by federal agencies. The Act also requires each agency to permit a requester to gain access to information pertaining to him that is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). DOE regulations define a system of records as "a group of any records under DOE control from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particulars assigned to the individual." 10 C.F.R. § 1008.2 (m).

I. Background

According to Brown, he was a truck driver for a DOE sub-contractor during 1971 and 1972. Brown alleges that he was exposed to radiation during those years as a result of entering controlled areas at several DOE sites and transporting radioactive materials. Telephone Conversation between Brown and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 29, 2000). Brown currently suffers from kidney disease, and at the request of one of his doctors, is seeking information on the extent of his exposure to radiation. Letter from Brown to Senator Jim Bunning (November 26, 1999) (Request). In his Request, Brown had asked for all records relating to Brown located in DOE facilities in Paducah, Kentucky; Portsmouth, Ohio; Oak Ridge, Tennessee; Cincinnati, Ohio; and Erwin, Tennessee. The Senator forwarded the Request to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). The EPA informed Brown that it had some responsive material, but advised him that the DOE may have additional material, and forwarded the Request to DOE headquarters. Letter from EPA to Brown (December 15, 1999). The FOIA/Privacy Act Division of DOE (DOE/HQ) determined that DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office (DOE/OR) may have some responsive material, and it transferred the Request to the FOIA Officer at that location.

The DOE/OR FOIA Officer found no responsive material, and transferred the Request to the FOIA Officer at DOE/Ohio in a memo dated May 9, 2000. On July 3, 2000, DOE/Ohio sent Brown a determination letter stating that no responsive records could be located. On July 28, 2000, Brown filed this

Appeal.

II. Analysis

We have investigated the searches conducted by DOE/OR and DOE/Ohio in response to Brown's Request. DOE/OR contacted the following DOE locations for responsive material: the K-25 plant, the Y-12 plant, Oak Ridge National Laboratory, Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant, Portsmouth Gaseous Diffusion Plant, and plants in Weldon Springs and Newport News, Virginia. DOE/OR also searched medical, personnel, personnel security, and industrial hygiene records for information related to Brown. However, Brown worked for a sub-contractor, and, according to DOE/OR, sub- contractors, not DOE, maintain records on sub-contractor employees. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Linda Chapman, DOE/OR, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 17, 2000). In addition, a dosimetry manager at the former K-25 plant stated that persons entering the controlled areas for a short period of time, such as truck drivers like Brown, were assigned Personnel Nuclear Accident Dosimeters (PNADs). Electronic Mail message from N. Kiely, Dosimetry Manager, East Tennessee Technological Park, to Linda Chapman, DOE/OR (April 24, 2000). However, the PNADs are not normally used to assess radiation dose to an individual, and are read only in the case of a "criticality." Id. Thus, while it is common for individuals to be issued PNADs, they are often excluded from radiation monitoring programs. Id.

DOE/Ohio informed us that they contacted the Fernald Environmental Management Project (Fernald), the DOE contractor at the Fernald Site. Fernald's Dosimetry Division searched its files against Brown's name and Social Security number, but no responsive records were located. Electronic mail message from Marian Schomaker, DOE/Ohio, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 15, 2000). As a further search, Fernald also checked Security Vehicle logs from the time period that Brown referenced in his request (1971-72). There was an entry in the logs for two temporary badge numbers assigned to "R. Brown," an employee of a firm called Eck Miller. Fernald concluded that this was not the requester, assuming that Brown had worked for Union Carbide. Nonetheless, Fernald conducted a search using the two badge numbers, but found no related records. According to DOE/Ohio, these are the only locations where responsive records would be found. No other areas maintain dosimetry information. Electronic Mail Message from Marian Schomaker, DOE/Ohio, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 15, 2000).

To further this investigation, we contacted Brown, who told us that he had indeed worked for Eck Miller in 1971-1972. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Brown and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 29, 2000). We informed DOE/Ohio that the requester was in fact the "R. Brown" listed in the log, and the Fernald Records Manager conducted another search of its archives using "R. Brown" and Brown's Social Security number. No responsive material was located other than the logs. Electronic Mail Message from DOE/Ohio to Valerie Vance Adeyeye (August 30, 2000). We have requested that DOE/Ohio send Brown a copy of the logs containing his name.

Based on the foregoing, we conclude that DOE/OR and DOE/Ohio have adequately searched all the systems of records under their control that might reasonably be expected to contain the material sought by Brown. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 28, 2000 by Randall Brown, OHA Case No. VFA-0597, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner:Martin Becker

Date of Filing: August 2, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0599

On August 2, 2000, Martin Becker filed a Motion for Reconsideration of a Decision and Order that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 26, 2000. Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0588 (July 26, 2000). The Decision and Order considered Becker's Appeal of a determination the Principal Deputy Inspector General of the Office of the Inspector General of the DOE (IG) issued on May 23, 2000. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

On November 10, 1999, Mr. Becker filed a request with the DOE for copies of any written information related to audits, investigations or inquiries the DOE prepared concerning the use of funds appropriated in line items 92-D-150 and 92-D-153 for use at the Savannah River Site. The Authorizing Official released several documents in their entirety, but redacted information from other documents or withheld documents in their entirety pursuant to Exemptions 5, 6 and 7(C). Letter from Herbert Richardson, Principal Deputy Inspector General, to Martin Becker (May 23, 2000).

In considering Becker's Appeal, we upheld the IG's withholding of information under FOIA Exemption 5. We also affirmed the IG's findings (with the exception of one document that we remanded to the IG for further consideration) concerning the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 and 7(C), based upon our determination that the public interest in disclosure of the information was outweighed by real and identifiable privacy interests.

In requesting reconsideration of our decision, Becker argues that “the factual premise for OHA's determination of public interest . . . is incorrect. I am not in litigation with the agency or the federal government. The [decision] on page 5 states 'in his litigation against the federal government.'” Motion for Reconsideration at 1. Becker also contends that our decision did not adequately address one portion of his appeal, in which he referred to one of the documents he received, identified as Document 81, and contended that he had not been provided all other documents that were referenced in Document 81.

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Nathaniel Hendricks, 25 DOE & 80,173 (1996). We will exercise that discretion here to consider the issues raised by the Appellant.

II. Analysis

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, that is, as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996); F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The IG is a law enforcement body charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud or abuse in programs administered or financed by the DOE. See Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. app. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), (d), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). As a result of its duties, we find that the IG compiles reports involving official misconduct for "law enforcement purposes" within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1995).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripkis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripkis, 746 F.2d at 3 (Exemption 6); Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-663 (D.D.C. 1990) (Exemption 7(C)).

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, providing the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., David Ridenour, 27 DOE ¶ 80,143 (1998); Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Because all of the responsive documents that were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were also compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard will be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

A. Privacy Interests

In identifying the relevant privacy interests in our July 2000 decision we stated,

Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (KTVY- TV) (withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985) (Cucarro); James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,109 (1990).

Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0588 (July 26, 2000) at 4. Mr. Becker argues that if the IG has withheld the names of federal employees, similar privacy interests would not be implicated by their release. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Martin Becker and Steven Goering, OHA (October 20, 2000). Indeed, some of the identities the IG withheld were those of law enforcement personnel of both the IG and the Department of Justice, though the IG's determination refers only to the withholding of the identities of "subjects, witnesses, sources of information, and other individuals . . . ." Letter from Herbert Richardson, Principal Deputy Inspector General, to Martin Becker at 2. Because the IG's determination does not explain why it withheld information identifying law enforcement personnel, or even specify that it did withhold such information, the determination is not adequate. An explanation of withholding under the FOIA must be "sufficient to allow the requester to understand the determination and if appropriate to formulate a meaningful appeal." See City of Federal Way, 27 DOE ¶ 80,191 at 80,725-26 (1999); Klickitat Energy Partners, 25 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1995); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,527 (1984); Exxon Co., USA, 5 DOE ¶ 80,178 at 80,813 (1980); Cities Service Co., 5 DOE ¶ 80,101 at 80,502 (1980). Therefore, we will remand this matter to the IG to either release the names of the federal employees or issue a new determination explaining its continued withholding of those names.(1)

B. Public Interest

Mr. Becker also takes issue with our July 2000 decision's analysis of the public interest, in which analysis we stated that unsubstantiated allegations of an agency's misconduct are insufficient to establish a public interest in disclosure. In Spirko v. United States Postal Service, 147 F.3d 992 (D.C. Cir. 1998), the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals found no public interest in names and information pertaining to suspects and law enforcement officers absent any evidence of alleged misconduct by the agency. Moreover, the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals found that "when . . . governmental misconduct is alleged as the justification for disclosure, the public interest is 'insubstantial' unless the requester puts forward 'compelling evidence that the agency denying the FOIA request is engaged in illegal activity' and shows that the information sought 'is necessary in order to confirm or refute that evidence.'" Davis v. United States Department of Justice, 968 F.2d 1276, 1282 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (quoting Safecard at 1205-06). In his Appeal, Mr. Becker merely speculates that agency misconduct exists to form the basis of his qui tam action. Moreover, he can only speculate that the people whose names were withheld might provide supportive testimony in his litigation against the federal government. Such speculation is not enough for us to find that the release of these names would shed light on the agency's performance of its statutory duties.

Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0588 (July 26, 2000) at 5.

However, Mr. Becker's focus on our mischaracterization of his litigation as being "against the federal government" misses the point of the above analysis. Notwithstanding the identity of the defendant in his qui tam action, the finding relevant to our public interest analysis was that Mr. Becker "merely speculates" as to the existence of misconduct and "can only speculate that the people whose names were withheld might provide" testimony supporting his allegations of misconduct. The fact that the misconduct about which he speculates was allegedly on the part of a government contractor, rather than a government agency, or that he brings his qui tam action on behalf of the public, does not make those allegations, or his belief that the individuals whose privacy is at stake would support the allegations, any less speculative.(2)

To assure us that he is not merely speculating, the Appellant provides what he believes are the names of the individuals whose identities have been shielded by redactions, and argues that these individuals "will be able to help the Court [hearing the qui tam case] understand our contentions in a manner helpful to the U.S." Addendum to 8/2/00 Request for Reconsideration (August 14, 2000). However, to determine the public interest in information requested under the FOIA, we must consider whether the release of the information would "shed[] light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties . . . ." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. While the documents the IG already provided to Mr. Becker may in fact shed light on the activities of the IG, little if any additional light would be shed by revealing the individual indentities redacted from the documents. And though the Appellant may believe that knowing those identities could aid him in his qui tam action, and thereby indirectly further the public interest, whether an invasion of privacy is warranted cannot turn on the purposes for which the request for information is made. Except for cases in which the objection to disclosure is based on a claim of privilege and the person requesting disclosure is the party protected by the privilege, the identity of the requesting party has no bearing on the merits of his or her FOIA request.

Id. at 771. We therefore agree with the IG that substantial privacy interests clearly outweigh the insignificant public interest in the identities of some of individuals withheld from the requester.

B. Whether the IG's Determination Identified All Responsive Documents

In his Appeal, Mr. Becker referred to one of the documents that the IG provided to him, identified as Document 81 and titled "Case Closure Checklist," and contended that this document referred to other documents that the IG had not provided to him. In our decision, we noted that the IG had inadvertently not provided to Mr. Becker one of the documents referred to in Document 81, an "Executive Brief." Although this document has since been provided to Mr. Becker, he asks for reconsideration because he does not believe our decision adequately addressed whether all documents referred to in Document 81 or attached to that document have been provided to him.

First, we note that Mr. Becker's original request sought "any reports, summaries or other written reflections of any audits, investigations or inquiries, prepared by the DOE IG, DOE CFO or any other authorized DOE component concerning use of funds appropriated in Line-Items 92-D-150 and 92-D-153 for use at the Savannah River Site." The fact that Mr. Becker may have now identified additional documents that are referenced in the documents the IG provided to him does not necessarily mean that these additional documents should have been identified by the IG or provided to Mr. Becker in response to his original request. For example, there may be documents referred to in Document 81 that fall outside the scope of Mr. Becker's original request, and Mr. Becker certainly may request those documents through a separate FOIA request. However, the relevant question for purposes of this decision is whether the IG conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Mr. Becker's original request and identified to the Appellant each of the documents it located.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE & 80,152 (1995). Nonetheless, "the standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

We therefore have contacted the IG and obtained information from the individual responsible for conducting the search. She informed us that she first searched the IG's case tracking database, using as search terms the two line items specified in Mr. Becker's request. This search did not reveal any cases. The IG then contacted Mr. Becker to clarify what he was looking for, and was thereby able to identify two case files, Nos. I98SR009 and I96SR026 (corresponding to IG investigations of complaints filed by Mr. Becker). The entire contents of both of these files were considered responsive to Mr. Becker's request, and all documents in these files were identified to Mr. Becker in the IG's response to his request.

Subsequently, the IG provided to Mr. Becker printouts from the case tracking database itself, including the "Executive Brief" referred to in Document 81. The IG has confirmed that the case files and database records corresponding to the two case numbers would be the only locations of files responsive to Mr. Becker's request. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Jacqueline Becker and Linda Duvall, IG, and Steven Goering, OHA (September 6, 2000).

Based on the above description, we conclude that the IG's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by Mr. Becker. Indeed, the IG's initial search of its case tracking database would have been adequate. Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 at 80,874 (1999). And yet the IG went beyond this by consulting with the requester to identify the specific case files in which he was interested. The IG has also assured us that all documents contained in the case files and the tracking database have been identified to Mr. Becker, and we have no reason to believe otherwise.

In sum, we find that the IG conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Mr. Becker's request and identified to him all documents that it located. We also find as we did in our earlier decision that the IG properly weighed the public and privacy interests at stake in deciding to withhold identifying information of private citizens under Exemption 7(C). However, we will remand this matter to the IG to issue a new determination to the requester releasing the information identifying federal employees or explaining its continued withholding of that information. In all other respects, the present Motion for Reconsideration will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Martin Becker on August 2, 2000, OHA Case No. VFA-0599, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of the Inspector General to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1) In this regard, the Appellant contends that under Exemption 7(C) only the names of government employees who are "arresting officers" should be withheld. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Martin Becker and Steven Goering, OHA (October 20, 2000). However, the federal courts have generally held the identities of law enforcement personnel exempt from disclosure pursuant to Exemption 7(C), and these holdings have not been limited to the identities of arresting officers. See, e.g., Doherty v. United States Dep't of Justice, 779 F.2d 49, 52 (2d Cir. 1985) ("Identities of FBI agents, of FBI non-agent personnel, [and] of employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service . . . are embraced by exemption (b)(7)(C).").

(2) Mr. Becker also reiterates an argument that he made in connection with his Appeal, stating that we should not base our finding regarding the public interest on whether the IG has found wrongdoing. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Martin Becker and Steven Goering, OHA (August 8, 2000); Facsimile transmission from Martin Becker to Bill Schwartz, OHA (July 14, 2000). We do not. Our finding in our Appeal decision as to the lack of public interest was not based upon any finding of the IG, but rather on the speculative nature of Mr. Becker's allegations.

September 28, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. Eng. Services

Dates of Filing: August 3, 2000

August 16, 2000

This Decision and Order concerns two Appeals that David E. Ridenour d/b/a R.E.V. Eng. Services (R.E.V.) filed from determinations issued to him by the Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). RFFO issued these determinations in response to requests for information that R.E.V. filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeals, if granted, would require RFFO to release certain documents to R.E.V. Because they concern the same documents and raise the same issues, we will consider the two Appeals jointly.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under DOE regulations, a document which is exempted from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public unless the DOE determines that disclosure is contrary to federal law or the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On February 19, 2000, R.E.V. submitted a FOIA request to the DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office (AOO). In this request, R.E.V. sought access to a specific report and to documents pertaining to that report. The report was prepared by David Fredrickson, the Director of AOO's Personnel Security Division, at the request of RFFO's Office of Chief Counsel, and concerned internal RFFO operations. In its March 16, 2000 determination, AOO stated that it had conducted a search for responsive documents, but that none could be found. AOO further indicated that because it believed that RFFO possessed documents that were responsive to R.E.V.'s request, AOO would transfer the request to RFFO for further processing. R.E.V. appealed the adequacy of AOO's search for responsive documents, and the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) found that search to be adequate. David Ridenour, Case No. VFA-0570 (May 31, 2000). Subsequent to its initial search, and on its own initiative, AOO conducted another search. As a result of this search, Mr. Fredrickson located a copy of his final report, his cover memorandum, and the first page of the memorandum from Rocky Flats in which his assistance in this matter was requested. Believing RFFO to be the appropriate repository for these documents, he sent them to that facility's Office of Chief Counsel. See May 5, 2000 memorandum from Mr. Fredrickson to Carolyn A. Becknell, Acting Freedom of Information Officer, AOO.

On July 14, 2000, RFFO issued two separate determinations to R.E.V. The first determination sets forth RFFO's response to AOO's referral of R.E.V.'s February 19 FOIA request. In this determination, RFFO withheld the report in its entirety pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). Specifically, RFFO states that the report was prepared in response to a Merit Systems Protection Board claim by Mr. Ridenour, and includes a discussion of the factual bases of that claim. Because the report was prepared by an individual working under the guidance of an attorney, and in contemplation of the MSPB claim, RFFO found the report to be attorney work- product, and therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure. RFFO further stated that it was unable to locate any documents relevant to "tasking, statement of work and/or contract" with respect to Mr. Fredrickson and the report. July 14 Determination Letter (RF00-016) at 2. (1)

RFFO issued the second determination letter (RF00-018) in response to a separate FOIA request filed by R.E.V. on March 26, 2000. In this request, R.E.V. sought access to "records relating to ?security investigations' on [Mr. Ridenour], internal or external to the agency." In its second determination, RFFO interpreted this request as being for records that were not previously provided to Mr. Ridenour in response to an earlier Privacy Act request, and stated that no additional responsive documents were found. RFFO specifically stated that the report did not concern a security investigation of Mr. Ridenour, and was therefore not responsive to this request. In addition, RFFO reiterated its finding that the report was exempt from mandatory release pursuant to Exemption 5. In its Appeals, R.E.V. contests RFFO's application of Exemption 5 in withholding the report. (2)

II. Analysis

A. RFFO's Application of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from mandatory disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The United States Supreme Court has held that this exemption incorporates every civil discovery privilege which the government enjoys under statutory and case law. United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799 (1984); FTC v. Grolier, 103 S.Ct. 2209 (1983) (Grolier). See also Peter T. Torell, 15 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1987) (Torell). One of these privileges is for attorney work-product. That privilege serves to "provide working attorneys with a ?zone of privacy' within which to think, plan, weigh facts and evidence . . . , and prepare legal theories." Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F2d. 854, 864 (D.C. Cir. 1980). The privilege is applicable to material that was prepared by an attorney "in contemplation of litigation." See Hickman vs. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 509-10 (1947). The attorney work-product privilege is also applicable to material prepared by a non- attorney under the supervision of an attorney, Durham v. United States Department of Justice, 829 F. Supp. 428, 432-33 (D.D.C. 1993), and to documents prepared in anticipation of administrative proceedings. Exxon Corp. v. Department of Energy, 585 F. Supp. 690, 700 (D.D.C. 1983).

R.E.V. asserts that the report was not prepared in contemplation of litigation, but was instead a security report, that there is insufficient evidence to establish that Mr. Fredrickson, a non-attorney, was supervised by an attorney, that there are currently no pending administrative claims or lawsuits filed by R.E.V. against the DOE, and that the DOE has waived the privilege by failing to maintain confidentiality of the report. Finally, R.E.V. argues that even if RFFO properly applied Exemption 5 in withholding the report, we should release that document on public interest grounds.

We addressed and rejected most of R.E.V.'s arguments in Charlene Pazar, 27 DOE ¶ 80,104 (1998) (Pazar). In that case, we determined that the specific report sought here was properly withheld under the attorney work-product privilege incorporated into Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Specifically, we found that the report was prepared in response to an administrative claim, i.e., a Merit Systems Protection Board complaint filed by Mr. Ridenour, that Mr. Fredrickson worked under the direct supervision of RFFO's Office of Chief Counsel, that the report has been kept in strict confidence by RFFO, and that release of the report was not in the public interest, despite the fact that the administrative claim for which it had been prepared had been dismissed.

R.E.V.'s arguments have not convinced us that Pazar was wrongly decided. However, two of these contentions are arguably new and deserve further discussion. R.E.V. claims that because RFFO did not have control over one copy of the report for a period of three years (the copy inadvertently retained and apparently misplaced by Mr. Fredrickson from May 1997 to May 2000), confidentiality has not been maintained, and the attorney work-product privilege is no longer applicable. We do not agree. The fact that an agency document may have been misplaced does not mean that the confidentiality of that document has been breached. Indeed, the federal courts have generally found that an exemption has been waived with respect to a given document only after an actual disclosure of that document to an individual outside of the agency has occurred. See, e.g., Cooper v. Department of the Navy, 594 F.2d 484, 488 (5th Cir. 1978); Powell v. United States, 584 F. Supp. 1508, 1520-21 (N.D. Cal. 1984); Direct Response Consulting Serv. V. IRS, No.94-1156, 1995 WL 623282, at 5 (D.D.C. August 21, 1995). Here, no disclosure occurred. There is simply no support in the record for R.E.V.'s contention that "unauthorized individuals" had access to the report, R.E.V. Appeal at 3, or that the document's confidentiality was otherwise breached.

R.E.V. also points out that the Merit Systems Protection Board proceeding for which the report was prepared has been terminated. However, the purpose of the privilege, which is to protect the integrity of the adversarial process, remains applicable. In FTC v. Grolier Inc., 462 U.S. 19 (1983) (Grolier), the U.S. Supreme Court found that attorney work-product privilege survives the termination of the proceeding for which that work-product was produced. 462 U.S. at 28. For the forgoing reasons, we conclude that RFFO properly withheld the report under Exemption 5.

B. The Public Interest

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. R.E.V. argues that discretionary release of the report would be in the public interest because it would foster debate as to whether the assignment of Mr. Fredrickson to the investigation of RFFO procedures was an appropriate use of DOE resources. Appeal at 3.

We find the public interest in the amount of resources expended by the assignment of one employee to perform a task of limited duration to be minimal, at best. On the other hand, we find that release of the report would result in foreseeable harm to the interests that the attorney work-product privilege was designed to protect. See FOIA Update, U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Information and Privacy (Spring 1994); Memorandum from Janet Reno, Attorney General, to Heads of Departments and Agencies (October 4, 1993) (in order to withhold material, agency must first determine that release would foreseeably harm basic institutional interests that underlie Exemption 5). As Justice Brennan stated in Grolier, "[i]t would be of substantial benefit to an opposing party (and of corresponding detriment to an agency) if the party could obtain work product generated by the agency in connection with earlier, similar litigation against other persons . . . [H]e could gain insight into the agency's general strategic and tactical approach to deciding . . . on what terms [lawsuits] may be settled." 462 U.S. 19 at 30 (Brennan, J., concurring). In view of RFFO's Office of Chief Counsel's belief that there is a substantial likelihood of further proceedings by Mr. Ridenour against the DOE, see memorandum of September 12, 2000 telephone conversation between Mr. Palmer and James Long, Office of Chief Counsel, RFFO, we do not believe that discretionary release of the report would be appropriate.

We will therefore deny R.E.V.'s Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by R.E.V. Eng. Services on August 16, 2000 is hereby denied.

(1) RFFO has since informed us that it has located six responsive documents that were not identified in its July 14th determinations, including documents referred to in the May 5th Fredrickson memorandum, and that it will shortly issue another determination to R.E.V. concerning these documents. See memorandum of September 12, 2000 telephone conversation between Mary Hammack, RFFO, and Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney.

(2) R.E.V. also alleges that AOO, RFFO and OHA engaged in a conspiracy to conceal the existence of responsive documents and to improperly deny it access to those documents. Because consideration of these charges is beyond our jurisdiction, we will not address R.E.V.'s conspiracy claim in this Decision, except to note that the allegations are false.

September 1, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:R.E.V. ENG Services

Date of Filing:August 4, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0601

On August 4, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services (R.E.V.) filed an Appeal from a determination the Director of the FOIA/Privacy Act Division (Director) of the Office of the Executive Secretariat at the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to the firm on July 14, 2000. In that determination, the Director denied an April 7, 2000 request for information that R.E.V. filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

In R.E.V.'s request for information, the firm sought copies of documents related to any proposed or implemented changes in security procedures since General Eugene Habiger allegedly visited the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site in August and September 1999, including changes resulting from additional alleged recent visits from two other DOE employees: Mr. Pope and Mr. Lavernier. In his determination, the Director found no documents responsive to the request. In this Appeal, R.E.V. contends that the Director should have found responsive "trip reports recommending changes and RFFO [Rocky Flats Field Office] responses either implementing or contesting changes . . . likely to have resulted from the Lavernier/Pope visits." In accordance with R.E.V.'s Appeal, we have reviewed the adequacy of the search for responsive documents resulting from the alleged Lavernier/Pope visits.

Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology

v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

We have investigated the DOE's search made in response to the R.E.V. request. In this investigation, we contacted representatives of the Director and the RFFO to ascertain the validity of R.E.V.'s contention that there must exist responsive information in the form of trip reports and RFFO responses recommending changes in security following the alleged Lavernier/Pope visits. Both the Director's representative and the RFFO FOIA Officer informed us that, at the time of the R.E.V. request, neither Mr. Pope nor Mr. Lavernier had visited the RFFO. See Record of August 28, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Leonard M. Tao, OHA Staff Attorney, and Brenda Washington, DOE FOIA/Privacy Act Office; and Record of August 29, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Leonard M. Tao, OHA Staff Attorney, and Mary Hammack, RFFO FOIA Officer. Thus, since the alleged visits had not occurred at the time of the request, the Director's representative and the RFFO FOIA Officer confirmed that neither office's search resulted in any responsive information.(1) Id. We find that the Director and the RFFO searched all of the DOE offices that would likely have responsive information. Since neither of these offices possess responsive information and we have no reason to believe that other DOE offices possess responsive information, we must deny R.E.V.'s appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal R.E.V. ENG Services filed on August 4, 2000, Case No. VFA-0601, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: XXXXXXX

Date of Filing: August 28, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0602

On August 28, 2000, XXXXXXX filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Ohio Field Office (Ohio) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 14, 2000. 1/ XXXXXXX submitted two requests for information pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, and the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a. In its determination, Ohio informed XXXXXXX that it could not locate any documents pursuant to a search mandated by the Privacy Act. Ohio also informed XXXXXXX, however, that it located three documents pursuant to a search under the FOIA. Ohio determined that two of these three documents were not agency records and thus were not subject to release under the FOIA. Ohio released to XXXXXXX the other document after withholding portions under the FOIA. XXXXXXX challenges the search conducted for responsive documents and Ohio's withholding of information. This Appeal, if granted, would require Ohio to conduct another search for responsive documents and release the information it withheld.

Background

XXXXXXX filed two requests with DOE Headquarters in Washington, D.C., under the FOIA and the Privacy Act, in which she requested documents regarding the following categories of information:

> 1. Information regarding a May 2, 2000 meeting between XXXXXXX and Randy Tormey (Ohio Office of Chief Counsel), Nat Brown, Sandra Cramer (Office of Diversity) and Bob Folker (Deputy Manager) including all reports, letters, notes, meeting minutes, and management decisions pertaining to XXXXXXX generated by the above named offices;

1/ XXXXXXX's initial submission to us did not contain a copy of the determination letter she sought to appeal as required by 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). She subsequently supplied us with the determination letter on August 28, 2000.

2. A copy of the investigation report issued by the Ohio Field Office Work Place Threat Assessment Team concerning XXXXXXXXXXX supervisory harassment complaint; and

3. All reports, letters, notes, meeting, minutes, and management decisions regarding a meeting between Bob Folker, Randy Tormey, and Sandra Cramer regarding a statement authored by XXXXXXX's physician.

On June 15, 2000, these requests were forwarded to Ohio for processing.

In its July 14, 2000 determination letter responding to both of XXXXXXX's requests, Ohio stated that it searched its systems of records subject to the Privacy Act and could find no documents that were responsive to her request. Pursuant to the FOIA, Ohio identified three documents possibly responsive to her requests. Two of these documents, a page of notes authored by Sandra Cramer regarding a May 16, 2000 meeting (Cramer Notes) and a two-page handwritten document written by Randy Tormey (Tormey Notes) concerning a May 2, 2000 meeting, were not provided to XXXXXXX since Ohio determined that the documents were not agency records under the FOIA and thus were not subject to release. The remaining document was a one-page document (Report) printed out from the Ohio Field Offices' Workplace Violence Threat Assessment Team Database (WPV Database). Ohio provided XXXXXXX with a redacted version of this document. Ohio stated that the withheld material consisted of unsworn statements, personal opinions and witness speculations that it asserted were subject to the deliberative process privilege and were thus withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Ohio also withheld names and other identifying information of individuals mentioned in the Report pursuant to Exemption 6. Ohio found that the privacy interest of the interest of the individuals mentioned in the Report outweighed the public interest in releases of the names.

XXXXXXX maintains that Ohio has failed to provide her all of the responsive documents in its possession. In support of her claim,XXXXXXX names several individuals who may have interviewed people in connection with her complaint.XXXXXXX also states that the Workplace Violence Threat Assessment Team (Team) completed an investigation in May 2000 relating to an Equal Employment Opportunity complaint she had filed and that the Team had a meeting on May 3, 2000.

Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

1. Search under the Privacy Act

The Privacy Act requires, inter alia, that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her contained in any system of records the agency maintains. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The DOE regulations define a system of records as "a group of any records under DOE control from which some information can be retrieved by using the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particulars assigned to the individual." 10 C.F.R. § 1008.2(m).

We contacted Ohio to inquire as to the search for records it conducted pursuant to the Privacy Act. Ohio informed us that it did not specifically search for records in any of its systems of records because none of them was likely to contain the very detailed type of records described in XXXXXXX's request. We subsequently reviewed a list of the system of records maintained at Ohio. We agree that none of the systems of records maintained at Ohio was likely to contain the requested records. Consequently, we find that Ohio's decision not to search any of its system of records under the Privacy Act was reasonable.

2. Search under the FOIA

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, the FOIA requires agencies to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Consequently, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. NSA, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

We spoke to several officials at Ohio to determine the extent of the search that was made for responsive documents. Upon receiving the two requests from XXXXXXX, the FOIA Officer, Marian Schomaker, immediately contacted each of the individuals referenced in the requests. Each of the individuals then conducted a search to locate responsive documents. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Marian Schomaker, Ohio Field Office, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (September 5, 2000). Mr. Tormey and Ms. Cramer each located notes that were identified in Ohio's determination letter. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Randy Tormey, Ohio Field Office, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (September 5, 2000); Memorandum of telephone conversation between Sandra Cramer, Ohio Field Office, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (September 5, 2000). Ms. Schomaker then contacted Tim Marcus of the Ohio Workplace Violence Threat Assessment Team and asked him to search for responsive documents. Mr. Marcus searched the WPV Database and located one document which was subsequently provided to XXXXXXX in part. Mr. Marcus informed us that any notes taken by investigators on the Team are destroyed after he personally places the information into the MPV database. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Tim Marcus, Workplace Violence Threat Assessment Team, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (September 5, 2000). Ms.

Schomaker also had a search conducted for responsive documents in the office of the Deputy Manager. 2/

Given the above description of the search conducted for responsive documents, we find that Ohio conducted an adequate search for responsive documents. Ohio contacted each of the individuals XXXXXXX referenced in her requests and asked each to locate any responsive documents. 3/ Ohio then searched the Team records in order to locate any records regarding its investigation concerning XXXXXXX's complaint. While XXXXXXX references a May 2000 investigation by the Team in her appeal, we have been informed that the Team did not in fact conduct an investigation. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Marian Schomaker, Ohio Field Office, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA, (September 5, 2000); E-mail from Tim Marcus to Marian Schomaker (July 15, 2000) 4/ In sum, Ohio conducted a search reasonably calculated to locate documents responsive to XXXXXXX's requests.

B. Agency Records

We have considered Ohio's determination that the Tormey and Cramer Notes were not agency records and find it to be correct. Under the FOIA, an "agency record" is a document that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of a FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Clear indications that a document is an "agency record" are when a document of this type is part of an agency file, and it was used for an agency purpose. Kissinger v. Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 157 (1980); Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc. v. Department of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1489-90 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (BNA); J. Eileen Price, 25 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1995) (Price).

In making the "agency records" determination, we look at the totality of the circumstances surrounding the creation, maintenance and use of the documents in question. See BNA 742 F.2d at 1492-93; Price. We contacted Ms. Cramer, who informed us that she created her notes regarding the May 16, 2000 meeting for her personal use so that she would remember details regarding the meeting. Her notes were not kept in any DOE record system but were kept in a personal file that she uses for her notes. She also informed us that her practice is to dispose of such notes after an

2/ Mr. Folker, Deputy Manager at the time of the meetings, had left his position by the time of XXXXXXX's FOIA requests.

3/ In her appeal, XXXXXXX identified another individual who might have responsive documents. In light of the fact that this new information not available to Ohio when it processed her request, XXXXXXX should consult with Ohio to see if additional documents can be located.

4/ Ohio did not provide XXXXXXX a copy of Marcus' July 15, 2000 E-mail since it did not believe that it was responsive to her original request. Ohio has informed us that it will be sending XXXXXXX a copy of the E-mail in its entirety.

appropriate period of time. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Sandra Cramer, Ohio Field Office, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (September 5, 2000). Mr. Tormey stated that he customarily takes notes at meetings he attends for his personal use. He never incorporated his notes of the May 2, 2000 meeting in any DOE record. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Randy Tormey, Ohio Field Office, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (September 5, 2000). From the facts surrounding the creation and use of the Cramer and Tormey Notes, it is apparent that they do not possess any of the attributes of an agency record. They were never maintained in an agency file nor used for any official agency purpose. See Price. Consequently, we find that Ohio correctly determined that the Cramer and Tormey Notes were not agency records under the FOIA.

C. Exemption 5

Ohio withheld portions of the fifth paragraph in the Event Summary Section of the Report pursuant to Exemption 5. Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears) (footnote omitted). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only the "deliberative process" privilege is at issue here.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. In order for Exemption 5 to shield a document, the document must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87-91 (1973). An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1078 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

We have reviewed the withheld text and find that it was not properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 5. All of the material withheld pursuant to Exemption 5, except for a portion of one sentence, discussed below, appears to be factual and does not seem to be deliberative. Consequently, we will remand this matter to Ohio. On remand, Ohio should either release this material or issue another determination letter explaining why this material should be withheld. The material withheld from the sentence beginning "[H]is determination at the time . . . ." refers to the impressions and opinion of an individual concerning a workplace incident. This material appears to be deliberative and predecisional and thus properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 5.

Ohio deleted names and other identifying information from the Report pursuant to Exemption 6. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

We find that the individuals whose names were withheld have a strong privacy interest in remaining anonymous. The Report references individual names concerning an investigation of an accusation that Ohio management appeared to tolerate an atmosphere that could result in workplace violence. Given the sensitive nature of the investigation and the potential for harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, we find that significant privacy interests exists in the identities of individuals mentioned in the Report. See Cappabianca v. Commissioner, United States Customs Service, 847 F. Supp. 1558, 1564 (M.D. Fla. 1994) (witnessess and co-workers have substantial privacy interest in the nondisclosure of their participation in an investigation for Exemption 6 purposes). Accordingly, we find that the individuals whose identities were withheld have a significant privacy interest in maintaining their confidentiality. 5/

5/ It should be noted that scope of a privacy interest under Exemption 6 will always be dependent on the context in which it has been asserted. Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, 97 F.3d 575, 581 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (Armstrong). For example, civilian federal employees normally have no expectation of privacy concerning their names, titles and similar information. See 5 C.F.R. § 293.311. However, the name of a federal employee involved in a workplace situation of a sensitive nature might be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. See Armstrong, 97 F.3d at 582 (dicta indicating that FBI might be entitled in certain factual contexts to use a categorical rule protecting the names of FBI agents pursuant to Exemption 6).

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

In Reporters Committee, the Supreme Court found that in FOIA contexts, the public interest in disclosure must be measured in terms of its relation to the FOIA's basic purpose. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 772. The Court identified the basic purpose of the FOIA as "to open agency action to the light of public scrutiny." Id. (quoting Department of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352, 372 (1976)). Therefore, the Court held that official information that sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties falls squarely within the FOIA's statutory purpose. Id. at 773. The Court further found that information about private citizens that is contained in government files but reveals little or nothing about an agency's own conduct does not further the basic purpose of the FOIA. Id. After examining the Report, it is not apparent that release of the individuals' names and identifying information would contribute to the public's understanding of the DOE's behavior or performance in carrying out its duties. Thus, in the present case, we conclude there is little or no public interest in the disclosure of the names and identifying information withheld in the documents at issue in the present case.

3. The Balancing Test

Because release of the individuals' names or other identifying information could reasonably be expected to subject them to harassment or intimidation or other personal intrusions, we find that significant privacy interests exist for these individuals. After weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against little or no public interest, we find that release of information revealing the individuals' identities could reasonably be expected to constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Consequently, we find that the Ohio properly withheld the information redacted from the Report under Exemption 6.

E. Conclusion

In sum, we find that Ohio conducted an adequate search for documents pursuant to the FOIA and Privacy Act and properly withheld information in the Report pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. We also find that Ohio correctly determined that the Cramer and Tormey Notes were not agency records and not subject to release pursuant to the FOIA. However, we find that Ohio improperly withheld factual material in the Report pursuant to Exemption 5. Consequently, XXXXXXX's Appeal will be granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by XXXXXXX, on August 28, 2000, Case No. VFA-0602, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Department of Energy's Ohio Field Office for further consideration in accordance with the instructions contained in the foregoing decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. §552 (a)(4)(B) and 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Martin Becker

Date of Filing: August 10, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0603

On August 10, 2000, Martin Becker (Becker) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of the Inspector General (IG) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him. In that determination, the IG released copies of some documents in their entirety, released some with redactions, and withheld one in its entirety. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In 1999, Becker submitted a FOIA request to DOE. The IG issued a response to the request, and Becker appealed the response on June 27, 2000. On July 26, 2000, OHA granted the appeal in part and remanded the request to the IG for further action. See Martin Becker, OHA Case No. VFA-0588 (July 26, 2000). As a result, the IG released additional documents, but continued to withhold some exempt information. One of the documents released was Document 207, which contained some material that was withheld under FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C). On August 10, 2000, Becker appealed the redactions in Document 207. Letter from Becker to OHA (August 10, 2000).

II. Analysis

A. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, that is, as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996); F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982) (Abramson). The IG is a law enforcement body charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud or abuse in programs administered or financed by the DOE. See Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. app. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), (d), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). As a result of its duties, we find that the IG compiles reports involving official misconduct for "law enforcement purposes" within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1995).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripkis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripkis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripkis, 746 F.2d at 3 (Exemption 6); Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-663 (D.D.C. 1990) (Exemption 7(C)).

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, providing the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., David Ridenour, 27 DOE ¶ 80,143 (1998); Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Since, as discussed below, all of the responsive documents that were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were also compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard will be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

1. Privacy Interest

In its determination, the IG stated that the withheld portions of Document 207 contained names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals involved in the IG investigation of Becker's allegations. According to the IG, these individuals are "entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions." Determination Letter at 2. The IG further determined that the public interest in the identity of individuals whose names appear in investigative files does not outweigh the individuals' privacy interests. The IG segregated all releasable information from the withheld material. Id.

This office reviewed redacted and unredacted copies of Document 207. The IG withheld the names of three federal employees and one private citizen. All of the individuals were involved in some way with the IG's investigation.

Because of the possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of third parties mentioned or interviewed in the course of an investigation. See Neely v. FBI, 208 F.3d 461, 464 (4th. Cir. 2000) (withholding names of third parties mentioned or interviewed in course of investigation); Department of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 154, 176 (1991) ("[t]he invasion of privacy becomes significant when personal information is linked to particular interviewees"); Safecard Services, Inc., v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard). See also Frank Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999); Blumberg, Seng, Ikeda & Albers, 25 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,563 (1995); James Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991). It is not necessary that harassment rise to the level of endangering physical safety before the protections of Exemption 7(C) can be invoked. Miller v. Bell, 661 F.2d 623 (7th Cir. 1981). Therefore, we find that the private citizen whose identity is being withheld in this case has a significant privacy interest in maintaining his or her confidentiality.

However, we find that, as a general matter, there simply is no privacy interest in material stating or describing a federal employee's official actions or duties "unless the work somehow reveals something personal or private about the individual . . . or there is some other special circumstance (for example, a reasonable, articulable belief that the person could be subject to harassment. . .)." Mary Feild Jarvis, 26 DOE ¶ 80,190 at 80,787 (1997) (quoting The Cincinnati Enquirer, 25 DOE ¶ 80,206 (1996) (Enquirer). See also James E. Minter, 27 DOE ¶ 80,140 at 80,595 (1998); William H. Payne, 25 DOE ¶ 80,190 (1996). We did not discern, nor did the IG offer, such a special circumstance. William Hyde, 18 DOE ¶ 80,102 at 80,509 (1988) (upholding the non-disclosure of document and identity of its author when the DOE field office described the requester's harassment of the author, a federal employee). As we have stated in the past, absent unusual circumstances usually directly related to the nature of the job, individuals do not have a privacy interest in the fact that the federal government employs them. Enquirer, 25 DOE at 70,769. Therefore, we will remand this matter to the IG to either release the names of the federal employees or issue a new determination explaining its continued withholding of those names.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest as regards the identity of the private citizen, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). The public interest is insubstantial in this type of case unless the requester puts forward compelling evidence that the agency denying the request is engaged in illegal conduct. Safecard, 926 F.2d at 1205-06. In his Appeal, Becker has not offered any compelling evidence of illegal conduct on the part of the agency. Therefore, we find that there is little or no public interest in the disclosure of the identity of the private citizen.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of law enforcement records could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); Safecard, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

We have concluded above that there is a cognizable privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that Becker has not provided sufficient evidence to justify finding a substantial public interest in the disclosure of the withheld information. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the identity of the private citizen is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of that individual.

C. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). Our review of Document 207(both redacted and redacted) found that, with the exception of the names of the federal employees, the IG did release all reasonably segregable, factual, non-exempt material (e.g., document titles, factual narrative).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Martin Becker on August 10, 2000, OHA Case No. VFA-0603, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of the Inspector General to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. ENG Services

Date of Filing: September 6, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0605

On September 6, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on August 16, 2000. In its determination, Rocky Flats partially denied R.E.V. ENG Services' request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Rocky Flats to release the information it withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. BACKGROUND

In a letter dated April 8, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services submitted a FOIA request to Rocky Flats for documents pertaining to a FOIA request and the later appeal filed by Charlene Pazar on June 9, 1997, for the "Final Report that was prepared for the [Rocky Flats] Office of Chief Counsel by David Frederickson of the Albuquerque Field Office.(1) Request Letter dated April 8, 2000, from David Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to Mary Hammack, FOIA/Privacy Act Officer, Rocky Flats (Request Letter).

On August 16, 2000, Rocky Flats released eight documents, withholding only residential addresses and telephone numbers under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated August 16, 2000, from Barbara A. Mazurowski, Manager FOI Authorizing/Denying Official (Determination Letter), at 3. Rocky Flats also partially denied the request. It withheld eight documents in their entirety under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Id. at 2.

In its Appeal, R.E.V. ENG Services disputes the withholding of information under Exemption 5. First, R.E.V. ENG Services claims that "[t]he nature of [the document Rocky Flats identified as ?Note for Retained Copies'] is too unclear from the vague description given." Appeal Letter at 3 dated August 29, 2000, from David E. Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (Appeal Letter). R.E.V. ENG Services also claims that no attempt has been made to reasonably segregate factual information from the note. Id. In regard to the other seven documents withheld in their entirety under Exemption 5, R.E.V. ENG Services argues that Rocky Flats did not specify whether the documents were being withheld because they were deliberative or attorney-work product. Id. R.E.V. ENG Services continues that Rocky Flats must assert Exemption 5 for each document individually. It contends that a blanket denial is insufficient. Id. Further, R.E.V. ENG Services argues that Rocky Flats has not attempted to segregate factual information from these documents. Id. at 4. (R.E.V. ENG Services is not appealing the withholding of the residential addresses and telephone numbers made under Exemption 6.)

II. ANALYSIS

A. Deliberative Process Privilege or Attorney Work-Product

Rocky Flats has identified the "Note for Retained Copies" as attorney work-product. However, we could not ascertain from the Determination Letter whether the other seven documents were withheld because they were deliberative and pre-decisional, or attorney work-product, or both. From our discussions with Rocky Flats, we have determined that one of those seven documents, a memorandum from James D. Long Jr., to Mary Hammack, dated June 23, 1997 (Long Memorandum), was withheld as attorney work-product. Therefore, two documents must be reviewed on the basis that they were withheld as attorney work-product, the "Note for Retained Copies" and the Long Memorandum. The other six documents were withheld on the grounds that they were deliberative and pre- decisional.

B. Attorney Work-Product Documents

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The attorney work-product privilege serves to "provide working attorneys with a ?zone of privacy' within which to think, plan, weigh facts and evidence . . . , and prepare legal theories." Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 864 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). It protects documents prepared by an attorney in contemplation of litigation. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 509-10 (1947); Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3). This privilege is also applicable to material prepared by a non-attorney who was supervised by an attorney. Nishnic v. Department of Justice, 671 F. Supp. 771, 772-73 (D.D.C. 1987). Finally, because factual work-product is not "routinely" or "normally" discoverable, it can also be protected under Exemption 5. See United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799 (1984) (Weber); FTC v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 19, 26 (1983) (Grolier).

The first document we must review is the "Note for Retained Copies." The description of this document is nothing more than its title. The lack of a full description renders it difficult to determine its nature. A document must be described with enough specificity to allow the requester (1) to ascertain whether the claimed exemptions reasonably apply to the documents and (2) to formulate a meaningful appeal. See Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150, at 80,622 (1995), citing James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,164 (1992); Harold Fine, 17 DOE ¶ 80,136 at 80,588 (1988); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,527 (1984). Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The description need not, however, contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527. A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of a document by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id.; Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE at 80,622. With the exception of providing the name of the "Note," none of the other descriptive items required by the Arnold & Porter decision were provided in the determination letter. More importantly, Rocky Flats failed to provide any explanation of how the attorney work-product privilege applies to the "Note." Rocky Flats has failed to include a specific description of the "Note" in its Determination Letter. Rocky Flats provided our Office with a copy of the "Note" and we have reviewed it.

Although we agree with Rocky Flats that it contains attorney work-product, we will remand the matter to Rocky Flats for a better description of this document and an explanation of how the privilege applies to the "Note."

Likewise, the Memorandum from James D. Long, Jr., to Mary Hammack, dated June 23, 1997, contains attorney work-product information. We believe this document is properly identified by its title. As we stated previously, the description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. But a determination must adequately justify the withholding of a document by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527; Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 (1995). Again, Rocky Flats has failed to provide any explanation of how the attorney work-product privilege applies to this document. Therefore, we will also remand this document to Rocky Flats for similar considerations.

C. Deliberative Process and Predecisional Documents

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862. The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to these general rules that factual information should be released. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Comms. v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In addition to providing categories of records exempt from mandatory disclosure, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

Rocky Flats withheld six documents because they contain information that is predecisional and part of the deliberative process. We have also been provided with copies of those documents. We have reviewed these documents and believe that they were properly withheld under Exemption 5. These documents demonstrate the normal frank and independent discussions that occur in making governmental decisions. However, we also believe that they contain factual information that could be segregated and released to the requester. For example, the first document listed in the Determination is a "Status Sheet, which contains documented conversations, telephone calls and electronic mail concerning" the FOIA Request. Determination Letter at 2. Some of the information contained in this document is nothing more than dates. This information could be segregated and released. Another line indicates that a telephone call was received and from whom, information that could be segregated and released. Therefore, we will remand the withheld documents to Rocky Flats. On remand, Rocky Flats shall review the documents and segregate and release all factual portions of them or issue a new determination that justifies their withholding.

III. THE PUBLIC INTEREST

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. R.E.V. ENG Services argues that discretionary release would be in the public interest. Appeal Letter at 4.

Despite the fact that Rocky Flats need not segregate the factual material in a document that is protected by the attorney work-product privilege, we believe that Rocky Flats should release the factual information in both the "Note" and the Memorandum. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of an exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (October 4, 1993) at 1, 2 (Reno Memorandum). The factual information can be released without foreseeable harm to the agency, even though it would not "normally" or "routinely" be discoverable in litigation. Portions of the "Note" are factual information that could easily be segregated and released to R.E.V. ENG Services without adversely harming the interest protected by the attorney work-product privilege. One such portion is a discussion of a statute and its requirements. Therefore, we will remand both the "Note" and the Memorandum to Rocky Flats to segregate and release the factual information or to provide justification sufficient to articulate a reasonably foreseeable harm in releasing any portion of either document. In regard to the documents withheld under the deliberative process privilege, since we are remanding this matter to Rocky Flats, we will not review those documents to determine whether the information should be released because it is in the public interest to do so. On remand, Rocky Flats should also review the documents to determine if it would be in the public interest to release any information that could be properly withheld.

IV. CONCLUSION

Rocky Flats properly withheld the documents under the Exemption 5 deliberative process and attorney work-product privileges, even though it did not identify which privilege it was using for each document. We have clarified that only the "Note for Retained Copies" and the Long Memorandum were withheld under the attorney work-product privilege. We are remanding this matter to Rocky Flats to provide a better description of these two documents and how the attorney work-product privilege applies to them. We are also remanding these two documents for Rocky Flats to segregate the factual information within them or issue a new determination that justifies their withholding. The other six documents were withheld under the deliberative process privilege. Again, Rocky Flats did not segregate the factual material from any of these documents. We will remand the matter for Rocky Flats to review the documents, and segregate and release all factual portions of them or issue a new determination that justifies their withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by R.E.V. ENG Services, on September 6, 2000, Case No. VFA-0605, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Rocky Flats Field Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0607, 28 DOE ¶ 80,149

February 7, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Chuck Hansen

Date of Filing: September 11, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0607

Chuck Hansen filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's Oakland Operations Office (Oakland) issued to him on August 31, 2000. In that determination, Oakland denied in part one of seven documents that Mr. Hansen requested in September 1990, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Oakland provided Mr. Hansen with a copy of Document Number COPJ 79-203, "LLL-Designed Weapons in the Stockpile– Problems/Reliability," dated May 14, 1979, from which information was withheld. Oakland withheld that information as the result of the Department of Energy's Office of Declassification reviewing the document and determining that it contained classified information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the Department of Energy (DOE) to release the information that it withheld from that document.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In September 1990, Mr. Hansen submitted a request under the FOIA to Oakland, for seven specified documents. Oakland responded to the request by providing the first requested document in November 1999. In a second response to Mr. Hansen, Oakland provided a redacted version of COPJ 79-203 from which information was deleted pursuant to a DOE determination that the withheld information warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA.

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld portions of the document described above. In his Appeal, Mr. Hansen contends that Oakland acted in an arbitrary and capricious manner when it withheld the information that it did, particularly because most, if not all, of that information has already been made public, and because the data at issue are 20 to 40 years old.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990).

The Director of Security Affairs (SA) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of SA reviewed those portions of the requested document for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

In performing his review the Director of SA determined that the information Oakland withheld concerns nuclear weapons design and specific developmental problems and design corrections. These categories of information are still considered Restricted Data under current classification guidance. Under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, this information is classified, and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3. Nevertheless, in determining that a few sentences, headings and footnotes are not classified, the Director of SA has reduced the extent of the previously deleted portions to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

Based on the review performed by the Director of SA, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the continued withholding of much of those portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Director of SA has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. However, because some previously deleted information may now be released as a result of the Director of SA's review, a newly redacted version of the document reviewed in this Appeal will be provided to Mr. Hansen under separate cover. In this document, the Director has marked all deletions made by the DOE as "b(3)." Accordingly, Chuck Hansen’s Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Chuck Hansen on September 11, 2000, Case No. VFA-0607, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A newly redacted version of the document entitled “LLL-Designed Weapons in the Stockpile–Problems/Reliability,” Document Number COPJ 79-203, dated May 14, 1979, in which additional information is released, will be provided to Mr. Hansen.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Northwest Technical Resources, Inc.

Date of Filing: September 18, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0611

On September 18, 2000, Northwest Technical Resources, Inc. (NTR) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it in response to a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on August 17, 2000, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland). This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search, release responsive documents, and grant NTR a fee waiver.

I. Background

On May 25, 2000, NTR submitted a FOIA request to Richland for copies of : (1) all documents, correspondence, and information related to Subcontract 0000X-MR-G0066 between NTR and Bechtel Hanford Inc. (Bechtel) and (2) all documents, correspondence, and information related to Subcontract 0000X-SC-G0131 between NTR and Bechtel. Letter from NTR to Richland (May 25, 2000) (Request). NTR narrowed the request on June 2, 2000, to exclude the actual contract. Letter from NTR to Richland (June 2, 2000). Richland conducted a search of its files and sent two interim responses and one final response to NTR. In the final response, Richland released responsive information, with some material withheld under Exemption 6, and other material deleted because it was "not responsive." Letter from Richland to NTR (August 17, 2000). Richland also charged NTR $358.51 for the search. (1)

On September18, 2000, NTR filed this Appeal. In the Appeal, the company stated that it did not receive all responsive material and that it should be granted a fee waiver. Letter from NTR to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (September 18, 2000) (Appeal). NTR specifically asked for the release of three documents referring to Subcontract 0000X-SC-G0131 (the same three documents that NTR identified in its second request) and for the release of the information that was deleted from seven procurement documents.

II. Analysis

A. ADEQUACY OF SEARCH

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Dep't. of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't. of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted Richland to ascertain the scope of the search, particularly in light of NTR's identification of specific documents that were not released to the company. Richland informed us that, after searching its files in response to NTR's second request, Richland had located some additional responsive material. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dorothy Riehle, Richland, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (October 3, 2000). The additional material related to Subcontract 0000X-SC-G0131, the subject of this Appeal. Richland released that additional material to NTR on September 13, 2000, apparently as NTR was sending this Appeal to OHA. Letter from Richland to NTR (September 13, 2000). We therefore find that Richland has conducted an adequate search of records in its possession.

B. FEE WAIVER

NTR also appealed the assessment of fees associated with the request. Appeal at 2. According to NTR, its request seeks information that will provide "valuable insight" to the public regarding federal government activities related to contract negotiations. Id. For the following reasons, we find that Richland properly charged NTR for the search.

Although the FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees for the processing of their requests, the statute does allow for a fee waiver under certain circumstances. See Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1998) (describing the test for a fee waiver). However, NTR did not ask Richland to waive the fees associated with this request. In fact, NTR agreed to incur charges up to $100 and asked Richland to obtain NTR's approval of any charges in excess of that amount. Request at 1. Therefore, Richland was not required to make a determination on NTR's eligibility for a fee waiver. Because OHA's jurisdiction is limited to the contents of a final determination, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8, this issue is not before us.

C. NON-RESPONSIVE INFORMATION

Richland redacted some information from the responsive documents, and identified the redacted data as "not responsive to [NTR's] request." Determination at 1. NTR then requested that Richland disclose the non-exempt portion of the non-responsive material. Appeal at 2. We reviewed this material and agree with Richland that it does not pertain to NTR's request for information about the Bechtel-NTR contracts. In fact, the redacted material deals with contracts between Bechtel and other private companies. Therefore, we find that the non-responsive material is not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Accordingly, we shall deny this portion of the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Northwest Technical Resources, Inc. on September 18, 2000, OHA Case Number VFA-0611, is hereby denied.

October 19, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Doney, Crowley, Bloomquist & Uda, P.C.

Date of Filing:September 20, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0613

On September 20, 2000, Doney, Crowley, Bloomquist & Uda, P.C. filed an Appeal from a final determination the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) issued on August 14, 2000. In that determination, BPA redacted information from two documents released in response to a request for information the appellant filed on June 28, 2000, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the withheld information.

Background

In the appellant's request for information, the firm sought copies of documents from BPA related to any settlement agreements in the litigation known as ALCOA Inc. and Vanalco, Inc. v. Bonneville Power Administration. In his determination, the BPA FOIA Officer released eight documents, but redacted the agreed amounts of power BPA would supply to Alcoa from two of the documents pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA.(1) In this Appeal, the appellant contends that the FOIA Officer improperly redacted the power amounts. In accordance with the Appeal, we have reviewed the FOIA Officer's decision to withhold these power amounts pursuant to Exemption 4.

Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. United States Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. United States Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). "Like all FOIA exemptions, Exemption 4 is to be read narrowly in light of the dominant disclosure motif expressed in the statute." Washington Post Co. v. HHS, 865 F.2d 320, 324 (D.C. Cir.

1989). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks).

Where, as in this case, the agency determines that the information at issue is not a trade secret, but is instead "commercial or financial" and "obtained from a person," it must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." If the information is subject to a valid claim of legal privilege on the part of its submitter, it may properly be withheld under Exemption 4. In order to determine whether the information is "confidential" the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (Critical Mass), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Information is considered to have been submitted involuntarily if, as in this case, any legal authority compels its submission, including informal mandates that call for the submission of the information as a cost of doing business with the government. Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 460 n.3 (D.D.C. 1997). Since the information withheld in this case was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that its disclosure is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom it obtained the information before withholding it under Exemption 4. National Parks, 498 F.2d 765 at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d 871 at 879.

Once the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's implementing regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to understand the basis for claiming the exemption and to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 185 F.3d 898, 906 (D.C. Cir. 1999); Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("Conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

BPA has set forth its reasons for withholding the power amounts as confidential information protected by Exemption 4. Specifically, BPA contends that release of this information would cause substantial competitive harm to Alcoa. Furthermore, BPA states that the redacted information is of the type that is and has been customarily held in confidence by agencies and submitters. Thus, BPA contends that if the "strategic and confidential" information is released, Alcoa and other submitters will have a "distinct disincentive to contract with BPA" in the future.

In analyzing BPA's redaction of the power amounts to be supplied to Alcoa under Exemption 4's "competitive harm" prong, we find that BPA has not sufficiently described the substantial competitive harm that might result from disclosure of the information. BPA provided the general assertion that release of the power amounts "could cause substantial harm." We find that this sole statement is far too conclusory in nature.(2) The courts have required that a submitter provide "adequate documentation of the specific, credible, and likely reasons why disclosure of the document would actually cause substantial competitive harm." Lee v. FDIC, 923 F. Supp. 451 at 455 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). Since BPA has not articulated any details from the submitter that would shed light on the competitive harm that Alcoa might suffer if the redacted information were released, we must remand this matter back to BPA. Accordingly, we will require that BPA issue a new determination letter describing in sufficient detail the substantial competitive harm that would result if the power amounts were released.

We turn next to BPA's contention that release of the power amounts would impair the government's ability to obtain similar information in the future. Essentially, BPA is contending that release of the power amounts to be supplied to Alcoa would impair the government's ability to make future sales of its power. The courts have denied protection under the impairment prong when disclosure will not, in fact, diminish the flow of information to the agency, such as when the benefits associated with submission of information make it unlikely that the agency's ability to obtain future submissions will be impaired. See, e.g., McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. NASA, 981 F. Supp. 12, 15 (D.D.C. 1997) (finding that release of contract price information would not cause impairment since "[g]overnment contracting involves millions of dollars and it is unlikely that release of this information would cause [the agency] difficulty in obtaining future bids") (reverse FOIA suit) (appeal pending); Badhwar v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, 622 F. Supp. 1364, 1377 (D.D.C. 1985), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 829 F.2d 182 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (no impairment when submission mandatory if supplier wished to do business with the government); Racal-Milgo Gov't Sys. v. SBA, 559 F. Supp. 4, 6 (D.D.C. 1981) (no impairment because "[i]t is unlikely that companies will stop competing for Government contracts if the prices contracted for are disclosed"); but see Orion Research v. EPA, 615 F.2d 551, 554 (1st Cir. 1980) (finding impairment for technical proposals submitted in connection with government contract because release "would induce potential bidders to submit proposals that do not include novel ideas"). These cases recognize that the benefits of doing business with the government can be considerable and are generally sufficient to ensure that firms will continue to do business with the government even if some submitted information is made public. Since the BPA has not explained in sufficient detail how its ability to negotiate future power sales would be impaired, we find that BPA has not satisfied the impairment prong of Exemption 4. Accordingly, we will require that BPA also address this impairment issue in sufficient detail in the determination letter.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Doney, Crowley, Bloomquist & Uda, PC., Case No. VFA-0613, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(1)The FOIA Officer also utilized Exemption 5 of the FOIA to withhold 21 documents generally described as "draft documents, personal observations and notes, recommendations, and comments." The appellant has not appealed this portion of the FOIA Officer's determination.

(2) We note that "the mere fact that the contents of a document might be useful to competitors in future contract bids does not constitute sufficient ground to withhold the document unless the document is unique." Baker, Donaldson, Bearman & Caldwell, 27 DOE ¶ 80,164 (1998), citing Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, 20 DOE ¶ 80,165 at 80,688 (1990). The courts clearly mandate that in order to receive protection under Exemption 4, the expected harm must be substantial in nature. See, e.g., National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Doney, Crowley, Bloomquist & Uda, P.C.

Date of Filing: September 20, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0614

On September 20, 2000, Mr. R. Allan Payne of Doney, Crowley, Bloomquist & Uda, P.C., filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 14, 2000, by the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Payne challenges the adequacy of BPA's search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

On June 28, 2000, Mr. Payne filed a request for information in which he sought "copies of documents which relate to, reference, form the basis of or evidence any study, process, analysis, report or survey conducted by or on behalf of the Bonneville Power Administration regarding the survivability of the Direct Service Industries." On August 14, 2000, BPA issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search for the requested information and identified six documents responsive to Mr. Payne's request. See Determination Letter.

On September 20, 2000, Mr. Payne filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Payne challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by BPA and states that he is aware that more documents exist that are responsive to his request. Mr. Payne asks that the OHA direct BPA to conduct a new search for the requested information. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130

(1993). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at BPA to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Payne's request might exist. Upon receiving Mr. Payne's request for information, BPA instituted a search of its internal files. Based on this search, BPA located six responsive documents. See Determination Letter at 1. However, before the Appeal, Mr. Payne had a telephone conversation with BPA in which he fully explained his request. BPA conducted another search for responsive documents and located three additional documents. BPA has indicated that its search consisted of reviewing its program files and identifying individuals who would possibly have knowledge of the subject matter in question as the office has undergone several reorganizations. Those individuals were asked to conduct a search of their files. BPA further indicated that it possesses no other documents responsive to Mr. Payne's request. Given the facts presented to us, we find that BPA conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Payne's request. Accordingly, Mr. Payne's Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Doney, Crowley, Bloomquist & Uda, P.C., OHA Case No. VFA-0614, on September 20, 2000, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0615, 28 DOE ¶ 89,129

December 1, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Center for Public Integrity

Date of Filing: September 21, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0615

On September 21, 2000, the Center for Public Integrity (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on August 4, 2000 by the Department of Energy's Office of Fossil Energy (FE). In that determination, FE continued to withhold several documents in response to a Request for Information filed by the Appellant on January 5, 2000, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require FE to release the withheld information.

I. BACKGROUND

This Appeal arises in connection with the sale of NPR-1, commonly known as the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve, conducted by FE. On January 5, 2000, the Appellant filed a request for information with FE, seeking in pertinent part: "The names of all entities that placed bids on NPR-1, any portion thereof, and the amounts of all bids."

On April 10, 2000, FE issued a determination letter indicating that it was withholding the names of the unsuccessful bidders and the amounts of their bids under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. April 10, 2000 Determination Letter at 1. FE contended that release of the bid amounts and identities of the unsuccessful bidders would cause substantial competitive harm to the firms that submitted the unsuccessful bids and would impair the government's ability to obtain similar information in the future. On April 17, 2000, the Appellant filed an appeal with this office, pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8, challenging FE's withholdings under Exemption 4. On May 19, 2000, we issued a decision and order on the Appeal in which we found that FE had failed to adequately justify its withholdings under Exemption 4. Center for Public Integrity, 27 DOE ¶ 80,277 (2000) (CPI). Accordingly, in CPI, we granted the Appeal and remanded the determination to FE with instructions requiring that office to either release the information it had withheld under Exemption 4 or issue a new determination letter containing an adequate justification of its withholdings. Id. On August 4, 2000, FE issued a new determination letter, which continued to withhold the bid amounts and identities of the unsuccessful bidders under Exemption 4. The August 4 determination also withheld the same information under Exemption 3. The present Appeal, which contends that FE continues to improperly withhold the bid amounts and identities of the unsuccessful bidders under Exemptions 3 and 4, was filed on September 21, 2000.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(b)(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)- (b)(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly – that is, precisely – construed. Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970) (citing provision now codified at 5 U.S.C. § 552(d)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980). The only exemptions that FE claims in the present case are found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3) (Exemption 3) and 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) (Exemption 4).

Exemption 3 allows the withholding of information under other statutes, but only if they meet specific criteria. See, e.g., Essential Information, Inc. v. USIA, 134 F.3d 1165, 1168 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Specifically, Exemption 3 allows the withholding of information prohibited from disclosure by another statute only if the statute either "(A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3) (1994 & Supp. II 1996). The D.C. Circuit has expressly held that "a statute that is claimed to qualify as an Exemption 3 withholding statute must, on its face, exempt matters from disclosure." Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 816 F.2d 730, 735 (D.C. Cir.), modified on other grounds, 831 F.2d 1124 (D.C. Cir. 1987), rev'd on other grounds, 489 U.S. 749 (1989). An agency must also establish that the records in question fall within the withholding provision of the non-disclosure statute. See A. Michael's Piano v. FTC, 18 F.3d 138, 143 (2d Cir. 1994); Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1284 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Fund for Constitutional Government v. National Archives & Records Service, 656 F.2d 856, 868 (D.C. Cir. 1981); Goland v. CIA, 607 F.2d 339, 350 (D.C. Cir. 1978).

In its August 4, 2000 determination letter, FE claims that section 303B(m) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (FPASA), as amended, that was added by section 821 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997, specifically prohibits the release of the requested information under the FOIA. (1)

That section provides:

(b) CIVILIAN AGENCY ACQUISITIONS.--Section 303B of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253b) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(m) PROHIBITION ON RELEASE OF CONTRACTOR PROPOSALS.--(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), a proposal in the possession or control of an executive agency may not be made available to any person under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

"(2) Paragraph (1) does not apply to any proposal that is set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract entered into between the agency and the contractor that submitted the proposal.

"(3) In this subsection, the term 'proposal' means any proposal, including a technical, management, or cost proposal, submitted by a contractor in response to the requirements of a solicitation for a competitive proposal.".

Pub. L. 104-201, § 821. (2)

FE's claim has considerable force. It is clear that this statute is a withholding statute under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3)(A). It does more than set criteria permitting withholding. Instead it forbids agencies to disclose the materials it covers. Moreover the prohibition is structured broadly to impose its threshold prohibition on "any" described proposal, and then specifies a narrowly-described exemption from the statutory prohibition. Finally there is no doubt from the statute's text that, in adopting it, Congress intended to affect disposition of FOIA requests because the operative prohibition is directed explicitly to "ma[king] available [the described information] to any person under section 552 of title 5, United States Code."

FE has argued convincingly that section 821 applies to the bids at issue in the present case. FE concluded that all the elements prescribed in this statute are met in the case of the NPR-1 bids. August 4, 2000 Determination Letter at 9. According to FE, the NPR-1 bids are "proposals" as that term is defined in the Act since each bid, in this context, was a "proposal" to enter into a contractual relationship with the government for the sale of a specific property. Id. Further, the bids were submitted "in response to the requirements of a solicitation for a competitive proposal," and those bids "were in the possession or control of the Department as the statute requires." Id. Finally, the unsuccessful bids for NPR-1 were not set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract entered into between the agency and the contractor that submitted the proposal. Id. at 10. The bidder's name as well as the bid amount formed part of each proposal as that term is used in the statute. Id. Therefore, FE maintains, the statute prohibits the public release of the unsuccessful bidders' names and bid amounts because this information was contained in each offeror's "proposal" submitted "in response to" a competitive "solicitation." Id.

The Appellant challenges FE's reliance on section 821 to withhold the NPR-1 bids under Exemption 3 on the ground that "the scope of that provision does not extend to sales of government property." September 21, 2000 Appeal at 3. The Appellant asserts that the statute must be read in the context of the statutory scheme of which it is a part, and notes that the first section of the FPASA subchapter containing this provision reads: "The purpose of this subchapter is to facilitate the procurement of property and services." Id. Further, the Appellant argues that sales of government property are governed generally by a separate section of the FPASA, codified at 40 U.S.C. § 484 (disposal of surplus property). Based on its assertion that the meaning of the statute, and therefore, its applicability to the NPR-1 bids, is controlled by the placement of section 821 in the FPASA rather than by the actual text of the provision, the Appellant maintains that section 821 "falls well short of the Exemption 3 standard that withheld information be ? specifically exempted from disclosure by statute. . . .'" 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3) (emphasis added).

FE's August 4 determination carefully considered whether the application of section 821 to the NPR- 1 bids was precluded because they were generated by a sale of government property rather than a government procurement of goods or services. In support of its interpretation of the statute, FE cites several factors that "counsel against a construction . . . that would limit its application to the acquisition of goods and services by the Government." August 4, 2000 Determination Letter at 10. To begin with, there is the text of the provision itself. FE points out that "[n]owhere does [the text] describe its application as being directed to ?procurements' or ?acquisitions.'" Id. FE notes that the provision employs terms that define its reach, e.g., "proposal," "contract," "solicitation," and "competitive proposal," and acknowledges that this statutory usage suggests "prominent elements of the typical process by which the Government seeks goods or services from the commercial sector." Id. But nowhere does this text confine itself to procurement proposals. In fact, the text states, "the term 'proposal' means any proposal . . . submitted by a contractor in response to the requirements of a solicitation for a competitive proposal." FPASA § 303B(m)(3), as added by section 821 (emphasis added). According to FE, the fact that no such linkage to the procurement process was specified in the broad definition of "any proposal" used in the Act means that Congress did not intend to limit its applicability to acquisitions. August 4, 2000 Determination Letter at 11. In support of this view, FE points out that elsewhere in the FPASA, where Congress sought to confine the term "proposal" to acquisitions, it did so explicitly, e.g., in 41 U.S.C. § 253(j)(1)(A), (j)(2)(A), and (j)(2)(B)(ii). Therefore, according to FE, Congress's use of the broad "any proposal" language of section 821 indicates that Congress legislated more broadly than just to govern acquisitions.

As FE correctly notes, the placement of this provision in the FPASA, which deals prominently with procurements, does not defeat its construction of the statute, since the FPASA also deals with government property sales. August 4, 2000 Determination Letter at 11. The particular legislative history which we have reviewed also contains no suggestion that section 821 was intended to be confined to contractor proposals made in acquisitions. In fact, as FE points out, the relevant portion of the House report states that the legislation's objective was to relieve the "significant administrative burden on federal agencies receiving [FOIA] requests for release of contractor proposals . . ." to "allow federal agencies to dispense with the lengthy line-by-line reviews which are presently required. . . ." H.R. Rep. No. 104-563 at 327 (1996). Withholding the information sought here would be in harmony with that purpose.

The critical difference between the positions urged by FE and the Appellant in this case is their construction of section 821. FE focused on the text, which uses the broad language discussed above, including the term "any proposal." The Appellant does not contest FE's reading of the text, for it is clear that the plain meaning of the text would justify withholding the unsuccessful NPR-1 bids under Exemption 3. As noted above, the Appellant bases its narrow interpretation of the statute not on its text but on a comparison of the titles of the various sections of the FPASA, and the placement of the provision in a section dealing with procurement. These factors, rather than the language of the actual text of section 821, guide Appellant's position .

The Appellant's reliance on the title of the subchapter where the provision appears, rather than the plain meaning of the text, cannot be sustained. "[T]he title of a statute . . . cannot limit the plain meaning of the text. For interpretive purposes, [it is] of use only when [it] shed[s] light on some ambiguous word or phrase." Pennsylvania Department of Corrections v. Yesky, 524 U.S. 206, 212 (1998), quoting Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 331 U.S. 519, 528-529 (1947). "[Headings and titles] are but tools available for the resolution of a doubt. But they cannot undo or limit that which the text makes plain." Trainmen at 529; accord, United States v. Minker, 350 U.S. 179, 185 (1956). Nor does an inference, drawn from section 821's placement in the FPASA, that Congress had in mind only acquisition transactions create an ambiguity that would warrant resort to the statute's headings and titles to narrow its plain text. Even if that inference were correct, "that Congress did not envision" application of section 821 to sales transactions "is irrelevant" "in the context of an unambiguous statutory text. . . . [T]he fact that a statute can be applied in situations not expressly anticipated by Congress does not demonstrate ambiguity. It demonstrates breadth." Pennsylvania Department of Corrections, 524 U.S. at 212, quoting Sedima, S.P.R. L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 499 (1985) (internal quotations omitted).

In the present case there is no ambiguity, and we find that since Congress did not limit the applicability of the term "any proposal" in this provision to acquisitions, the language of section 821 clearly covers the competitive proposals containing the unsuccessful bids to purchase NPR-1 that DOE solicited pursuant to the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996. Congress has spoken plainly to forbid their release. Therefore, we find that the records at issue were properly withheld under Exemption 3. Because our finding that the unsuccessful bids for NPR-1 may be withheld under Exemption 3 controls the disposition of the present Appeal, we will not also analyze the issues and arguments raised by the Appellant concerning Exemption 4.

III. CONCLUSION

We have found that FE is required to withhold unsuccessful bidders' identities and the amounts of their bids under section 821 and therefore may withhold this information under Exemption 3. Since this information should not be released under the FOIA, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) Section 303B(m) is codified at 41 U.S.C. § 253b(m). For sake of clarity of provenance it is cited hereinafter as section “821” or the “Act.”

(2)Section 821 also added an identical restriction to 10 U.S.C. § 2305. Case No. VFA-0617, 28 DOE ¶ 80,122

November 1, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Anter Corporation

Date of Filing: October 3, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0617

This Decision addresses a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) appeal filed on October 3, 2000, by Anter Corporation (Anter), and is governed by the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552, and the Department of Energy (DOE) implementing regulations, 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, Anter's appeal will be denied in part and remanded.

I. Background

With nine exemptions, the FOIA requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a),(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3,.10(b). Anter filed a FOIA request with the DOE Idaho Operations Office, seeking information relating to the decisional process in selecting an award for DOE Request for Proposal No. R00-18376, for which Anter had placed an unsuccessful bid. At issue in this appeal is a responsive document, dated June 2, 2000, entitled "Technical Evaluation of Proposals for The Laser Flash Thermal Diffusivity Instrument" (the responsive document). The first section of the document provides highlights of comments from named individuals who had experience with Anter's laser flash thermal diffusivity instrument (Anter's diffusivity instrument), and the second section summarizes and compares those comments. Citing Exemption 5 of the FOIA, the Idaho Operations Office FOIA Officer released the responsive document, but redacted the first section. In her determination, the FOIA Officer described the redacted material as "predecisional deliberative data, the release of which would likely ? stifle honest and frank communication within the agency.'" In its appeal, Anter seeks release of the redacted information.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 of the FOIA shields from disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 incorporates the executive "deliberative process" privilege, which permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 150 (1975); Coastal States Gas Corp. v. United States Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The purpose of the deliberative process privilege is to promote high-quality agency decisions by fostering frank and independent discussion among individuals involved in the decision-making process.

Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

Information within the purview of the deliberative process privilege must be both predecisional and deliberative. Information is predecisional if it is prepared or gathered in order to assist an agency decisionmaker in arriving at a decision. Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Eng. Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Predecisional information is also deliberative if it reflects the give-and-take of the consultative process, Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866, so that disclosure would reveal the mental processes of the decision-maker, National Wildlife Federation v. United States Forest Service, 861 F.2d 1114, 1119 (9th Cir. 1988).

Information protected by the deliberative process privilege may include "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency," Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 854, but does not include factual information, unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with exempt material, Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971). In some circumstances, "disclosure of even purely factual material may so expose the deliberative process within an agency that it must be deemed exempted under [Exemption 5]." Mead Data Cent., Inc. v. United States Dep't of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 256 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (Mead Data).

That a document is reportorial in nature is irrelevant to whether information within it may be withheld. "It would exalt form over substance to exempt documents in which staff recommend certain action or offer their opinions on given issues but require disclosure of documents which only ?report' what those recommendations and opinions are." Mead Data, 566 F.2d at 257 (documented summary of discussions among agency staff properly withheld, although document did not include affirmative recommendations or opinions).

Analysis of the responsive document in its entirety, with respect to the foregoing principles, reveals that the redacted information includes material that falls within the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5, as well as material that is factual in nature and thus outside the privilege. The information shielded by the deliberative process privilege includes the opinions and subjective statements of the individuals whom the DOE consulted in evaluating Anter's diffusivity instrument. These statements are predecisional, because they were gathered as part of the process leading to the DOE's final award determination. The statements are also deliberative, because they address potential problems with, and available alternatives to, Anter's diffusivity instrument. See Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 867 (noting document is deliberative in nature if it weighs pros and cons of agency adoption of one viewpoint or another). See also Chemical Weapons Working Group, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,170 (March 27, 1997) (finding technical evaluation of submitter's proposal within deliberative process privilege).

Because the statements themselves are protected under Exemption 5, the fact that the responsive document merely reports the statements, without affirmatively setting forth a recommendation, is immaterial. See Mead Data, 566 F.2d at 257 (finding reportorial document within Exemption 5). Disclosure of the statements would frustrate the purpose of Exemption 5, as individuals involved in evaluating bid proposals may resolve to "temper their candor with a concern for appearances to the detriment of the decision-making process." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866 (quoting and citing United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 705 (1974)).

On the other hand, certain redacted statements appear purely factual in nature and, absent sufficient explanation supporting application of the deliberative process privilege, must be released. Because the FOIA Officer's determination does not make clear how the factual statements are "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material discussed above, the FOIA Officer must reexamine the responsive document and either release the factual information, or provide a detailed explanation supporting application of Exemption 5.(1)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Anter Corporation on October 3, 2000, Case No. VFA-0617, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office for further action in accordance with the directions set forth in this Decision.

(1)In addition, the names of the individuals listed in the responsive document appear to be outside of the scope of Exemption 5, but may fall within the purview of another FOIA exemption.

October 31, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. ENG Services

Date of Filing: October 3, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0618

On October 3, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on September 21, 2000. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by R.E.V. ENG Services pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Albuquerque would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On August 1, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services submitted a FOIA request for all documents concerning a May 5, 2000 Memorandum from David Fredrickson, Director, Personnel Security Division, Albuquerque, to Carolyn A. Becknell, Acting FOI Officer, Office of Public Affairs, Albuquerque, including telephone conversation records, letters, electronic mail messages, notes, and drafts. Request Letter dated August 1, 2000, from David E. Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to Terry Martin Apodaca, Albuquerque (Request Letter). The May 5, 2000 Memorandum was sent to Ms Becknell, indicating that Mr. Fredrickson had a copy of a report(1) he had prepared on behalf of the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) Chief Counsel's Office and that he had sent it to Rocky Flats. R.E.V. ENG Services alleges that background information exists regarding Mr. Fredrickson's decision to send the report to Rocky Flats. Therefore, in its August 1, 2000 Request, R.E.V. ENG Services also asked for any information regarding the decision to send to Rocky Flats the report referenced in the May 5, 2000 Memorandum. Id. On August 9, 2000, Albuquerque sent R.E.V. ENG Services a letter stating that "the results of [the] search for responsive documents have been referred to Ms. Mary Hammack [of Rocky Flats] for her office's review as they are responsible for the final releasability determination." Determination Letter dated August 9, 2000, from Carolyn A. Becknell, Acting Freedom of Information Officer, Office of Public Affairs, Albuquerque, to David E. Ridenour (August 9, 2000 Determination Letter) (emphasis added).

After clarifying their respective roles concerning this request, Rocky Flats and Albuquerque agreed that Albuquerque was the appropriate office to respond to the August 1, 2000 Request. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation held September 14, 2000, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA; William Schwartz, Staff Attorney, OHA; Terry Apodaca, Albuquerque; Mary Hammack, Rocky Flats; and James D. Long, Jr., Rocky Flats. Thereafter, on September 21, 2000, Albuquerque issued a determination stating that no documents existed that were responsive to R.E.V. ENG Services' request. Determination Letter dated September 21, 2000, from Carolyn A. Becknell, Acting Freedom of Information Officer, Office of Public Affairs, Albuquerque, to David E. Ridenour (September 21, 2000 Determination Letter).

In response to the September 21, 2000 Determination Letter from Albuquerque, R.E.V. ENG Services filed this Appeal asking for a clarification of the apparent dichotomy between the August 9, 2000 Determination Letter, which seems to indicate that responsive information was sent to Rocky Flats, and the September 21, 2000 Determination Letter, which clearly indicates that Albuquerque has no relevant documentary information to release to the requester. Appeal Letter dated September 26, 2000, from David E. Ridenour, R.E.V. ENG Services, to Director, OHA, DOE (September 26, 2000 Appeal Letter). R.E.V. ENG Services requests any information that was sent to Rocky Flats. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

We have contacted Albuquerque to determine what type of search was conducted. We now have the full story. Albuquerque contacted David Fredrickson's office to ascertain whether any documents were prepared in association with the May 5, 2000 Memorandum referenced in the request. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, and Terry Apodaca, Albuquerque (October 5, 2000). Id. We have been told that the May 5, 2000 Memorandum was sent to Rocky Flats by way of an interoffice envelope. Id. Therefore, no shipping form or label would have been generated. Id. According to the information we received, Mr. Fredrickson gave to his assistant verbal instructions for writing the May 5, 2000 Memorandum, so no notes were generated. Id. Mr. Fredrickson did not have any electronic mail or telephone contact or correspondence with Rocky Flats prior to his sending the documents referenced in the May 5, 2000 Memorandum. Id. Finally, Rocky Flats did not know the information referenced in the Memorandum existed at Albuquerque prior to its receipt from Mr. Fredrickson. Therefore, there were no instructions from Rocky Flats to Albuquerque regarding which office would be responsible for reviewing the documents for releasability. Id. Consequently, no documents ever existed at Albuquerque that were responsive to R.E.V. ENG Services' request, despite the implication from the August 9, 2000 Determination Letter that responsive documents had been sent to Rocky Flats.

Albuquerque's finely crafted August 9, 2000 Determination Letter indicating that "the results of [the] search for responsive documents" were referred to Rocky Flats was not intended to mislead the requester but rather to give no indication of whether any responsive documents had in fact been found at Albuquerque.(2) The only "result" referred to Rocky Flats by the August 9, 2000 Determination Letter was the fact that there were no responsive documents. Id. Based on the circumstances of this case and the search Albuquerque performed, we are convinced that Albuquerque followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by R.E.V. ENG Services in its request. Accordingly, the R.E.V. ENG Services Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by R.E.V. ENG Services, on October 3, 2000, Case No. VFA-0618, is hereby denied.

district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: October 31, 2000

(1)The report itself has been the subject of a number of FOIA requests to both Albuquerque and Rocky Flats by R.E.V. ENG Services and others. In fact, the May 5, 2000 Memorandum was written in response to an earlier FOIA request that R.E.V. ENG Services filed with Albuquerque. Albuquerque responded to that request by stating that it had no responsive documents. However, after the determination, Mr. Fredrickson found a copy of the report and sent it to Rocky Flats. He then sent the May 5, 2000 Memorandum to Ms Becknell.

(2)Albuquerque chose this wording because, at the time the August 9, 2000 Determination was written, Albuquerque understood that all FOIA determinations regarding this material, even the existence or nonexistence of the material, were to be made by Rocky Flats, not Albuquerque. This misunderstanding as to which office was primarily responsible was corrected during the September 14, 2000 telephone conversation discussed above.

November 8, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Northwest Technical Resources, Inc.

Case Numbers: VFA-0619

On October 11, 2000, Northwest Technical Resources, Inc. (NTR) filed an Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a determination that DOE's Richland Operations Office (DOE/RL) issued to NTR on September 13, 2000. The determination concerned a request for information that NTR submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would result in the release of any existing responsive material to NTR.

I. Background

On August 17, 2000, NTR filed a FOIA request with DOE/RL seeking information related to the award of a technical services contract between NTR and Bechtel Hanford, Inc. (BHI); information regarding the award of a contract between Kelly Temporary Services, Inc. (Kelly) and BHI; information related to a DOE/RL report about the contract between NTR and BHI, and information that states that NTR's contract was supported by inadequate cost/price analysis. Letter from NTR to DOE/RL (August 17, 2000) (Request). DOE/RL released some information about the contract between NTR and BHI to NTR, but found no additional responsive information (some responsive information had been provided to NTR in response to an earlier request). Letter from DOE/RL to NTR (September 13, 2000). Further, DOE/RL informed NTR that the Kelly contract was between Kelly and Bechtel National, Inc., and was not an agency record. Id. NTR disagreed and filed this appeal, alleging that the Kelley-Bechtel National contract was in fact an agency record. Letter from NTR to OHA (October 11, 2000) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the material requested can be considered "agency records" and thus subject to the FOIA, under the criteria set out by the federal courts. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f) (describing the scope of the term "agency" under the FOIA). Second, records that do not meet these criteria can nonetheless be subject to release under the DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e); see 59 Fed. Reg. 63,884 (December 12, 1994). For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that the records in question are not "agency records" and that they are also not subject to release under the DOE regulations.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as Bechtel National, Inc., are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1998); BMF Enterprises, 21 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1991); William Albert Hewgley, 19 DOE ¶ 80,120 (1989); Judith M. Gibbs, 16 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1987) (Gibbs). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Gibbs, 16 DOE at 80,595.

A. Bechtel National Is Not An Agency Under the FOIA

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (f). The courts have identified certain factors to consider in determining whether we should regard an entity as an agency for purposes of federal law. In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the . . . agency receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the federal government." Id. at 815. In other words, an organization will be considered a federal agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham). See also Washington Research Project, Inc. V. HEW, 504 F.2d 238, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 963 (1975) (degree of independent governmental decision-making authority considered); Rocap v. Indiek, 539 F.2d 174 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

We find that Bechtel National, Inc., parent company of BHI, cannot be considered an agency under FOIA because Bechtel National is not subject to substantial federal control. BHI, a subsidiary of Bechtel National, has a contractual relationship with DOE as the Environmental Restoration Contractor (ERC) at the Hanford site. See Contract DE-AC06-93RL12367. BHI previously entered into subcontracts with local vendors, such as NTR, for office support for the Environmental Restoration Program. However, Bechtel National now contracts with Kelly to provide office support to BHI for the ER program. (1) See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dorothy Riehle, DOE/RL and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (October 19, 2000). There is no contractual relationship between Bechtel National and DOE in this case. We therefore conclude that Bechtel National cannot be considered an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

B. The Records Were Not Within DOE's Control At The Time Of Request

Although Bechtel National is not an agency for the purpose of the FOIA, its records relevant to NTR's request could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within DOE's control at the time NTR made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989); see Kissinger v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. However, DOE/RL has informed us that the information that NTR seeks was not in the agency's control at the time of the appellant's request. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation Between Dorothy Riehle, DO/RL and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (November 3, 2000). Based on these facts, the responsive documents clearly do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46; see also Forsham, 445 U.S. at 185-86.

C. There is No Contractual Relationship Between Bechtel National and DOE

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between DOE and the contractor provides that they are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

As stated previously, there is no contractual relationship between Bechtel National and DOE. Therefore, we find that the requested records are not agency records and are not subject to release under DOE regulations.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 11, 2000 by Northwest Technical Resources, Inc. OHA Case No. VFA-0619, is hereby denied.

the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Heart of America, Northwest

Date of Filing:October 27, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0620

Heart of America, Northwest ("Heart of America") filed this Appeal in response to a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Richland Operations Office (Richland). The determination concerns a request for records that Heart of America submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its Appeal, Heart of America requests the release of additional material responsive to its request. As explained below, we will deny the Appeal.

BACKGROUND

In May 2000, Heart of America sent Richland a request for copies of certain records pertaining to a contract between British Nuclear Fuels, PLC, (BNFL) and the DOE's Office of River Protection (ORP).(1) The contract, denominated "TWRS Privatization Contract No. DE-AC06-RL13308," (the "contract"), dealt with waste treatment and immobilization services at the DOE's Hanford site.

In determination letters issued on June 23 and September 5, 2000, Richland responded by sending Heart of America copies of some requested records, and by stating that it did not have the other requested records. Heart of America then filed the present Appeal, claiming that Richland had improperly withheld documents it had in its possession.(2)

Heart of America had organized its FOIA request into six items, with some of the items further broken down into categories of records. It has appealed Richland's response to three of its items. We will discuss each item separately below.

HEART OF AMERICA'S APPEAL

1. Item 1

In Item 1 of its request, Heart of America asked for various records "relating to costs projected to be incurred by ... BNFL for waste treatment services pursuant to [the contract] and elements of proposed fixed price for unit of treated waste...." Item 1 was subdivided into a number of categories. Category E of Item 1 requested "review of A-8/Fixed Unit prices, including disclosures of rate increases to Congress, the State of Washington, the Hanford Advisory Board, Heart of America Northwest or the public."

Richland replied by releasing responsive documents for most of the categories under Item 1. With regard to Category E, however, Richland stated that it had no responsive documents.

In its Appeal of this response, Heart of America argues that Richland "improperly claims that the documents they do have in their possession are not responsive because they were not generated by the agency and are consequently not agency records. This is an erroneous interpretation of the [FOIA] statute and an improper attempt to withhold a proper request under the act."

2. Item 3

Under Item 3 of its request, Heart of America asked for projected price and cost elements and potential increases in price from the original contract figures. Richland responded that "there was no documented information between BNFL ... and ... ORP that is responsive to this portion of your request. BNFL ... notified ORP's management verbally for the first time in early April 2000 that the price could exceed the contract target."

Heart of America appealed Richland's response to Item 3 by arguing that Richland "did not assert a specific FOIA exemption as a legal basis for refusing to disclose the requested information. Rather, [Richland] improperly claims that the documents they do have in their possession are not responsive because they were not generated by the agency and are consequently not agency records."

3. Item 6

Under Item 6 of its request, Heart of America asked for records dealing with subcontracts and allowable costs incurred by BNFL or related companies for public relations, lobbying, or public communications in support of the contract. Richland responded that "ORP has no responsive documents. This information was not a BNFL ... deliverable and therefore not an agency record or subject to the FOIA."

Heart of America appealed this response by claiming that the records requested under Item 6 "were all costs that BNFL, Inc., and its subcontractors were seeking reimbursement for and were in the possession of ... ORP. Consequently, they are agency records ... and must be made available."

ANALYSIS

Heart of America has assumed that Richland has the documents in question, but is withholding them on the ground that they are not "agency records." Richland, however, has stated only that it does not have the documents in question. Nevertheless, we will examine Heart of America's contention that the documents in question are agency records and that Richland should therefore have them.

The FOIA applies to "records" that are maintained by "agencies" within the executive branch of government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). Consequently, the FOIA is applicable only where the requested documents may be considered an "agency record."

The language of the FOIA does not define the term "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting the phrase "agency records," we have applied a two-step analysis for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as BNFL, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch ... or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day- to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 & n. 11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, although BNFL was a contractor for ORP, the DOE did not conduct extensive, detailed, and day-to- day supervision of BNFL's operations.(3) We therefore conclude that BNFL is not an "agency" within the meaning of the FOIA.

Although BNFL is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, its records could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time of the FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In this case, none of the responsive documents at issue was in the DOE's control or possession at the time of the request.(4) Based on these facts, the documents do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth in Tax Analysts.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the records in question are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "when a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

The contract between BNFL and ORP does not contain a clause that explicitly provides for the ownership of various records. It provides only that certain specified "deliverables" become the property of the government. The documents requested by Heart of America are not included among the "deliverables," as stated in the determination letter, and therefore would be, if they exist, contractor-owned records and not government records.(5)

CONCLUSION

As noted above, Richland stated in its determination letter that it did not have certain documents requested by Heart of America. Nothing raised in Heart of America's Appeal causes us to question Richland's determination. However, Heart of America argues in its Appeal that Richland withheld these documents on the ground that they were not agency records. Based on our findings above, we conclude that these documents, if they exist, would not be agency records within the meaning of the FOIA, and would not be deemed DOE property by the contract. Consequently, we conclude that the documents are not subject to release pursuant to the FOIA or DOE regulations. We will accordingly deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Heart of America, Northwest, Case No. VFA- 0620, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S. C. §552 (a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

(1) The Office of River Protection is an agency of the Department of Energy. It was established in 1998 to safely manage tank waste retrieval, treatment, and disposal at the DOE's Hanford site.

(2) Heart of America also expressed its disapproval that Richland responded by referring to internet addresses for certain documents rather than providing the documents themselves. However, after Heart of America filed this Appeal, Richland issued a new determination letter, releasing paper copies of the documents that were referred to by internet address in the first two determination letters. Thus, we need not consider Heart of America's objection to receiving internet addresses.

November 29, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Norris Ramage

Date of Filing: October 16, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0621

On October 16, 2000, Norris Ramage filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Operations Office (DOE/OR) issued on September 29, 2000. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Mr. Ramage requested from DOE any records concerning his father, James Dennis Ramage, who was employed by a DOE subcontractor between 1950 and 1955 at the Department's Paducah (Kentucky) Gaseous Diffusion Plant, and any information regarding the subcontractor, F.H. McGraw. Letter from Norris Ramage to Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR (undated); Letter from Norris Ramage, to Paul Seligman, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Health Studies (undated). In response to this request, DOE/OR issued a determination releasing a radiation exposure record, "the only record located on Mr. Ramage . . . ." Letter from Amy L. Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Norris Ramage (September 29, 2000). DOE/OR also informed Mr. Ramage that, in "response to your request for information on the activities of F.H. McGraw, no records could be found." Id. Mr. Ramage challenges the adequacy of DOE/OR's search for documents responsive to his request.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485

(D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, upon receiving the present Appeal, we contacted DOE/OR to inquire as to the search it conducted in response to Mr. Ramage's request. DOE/OR informed us that it searched the medical, personnel, radiation exposure (dosimetry) and similar files in the possession of the DOE, the current DOE contractor and the United States Enrichment Corporation (USEC), the company that leases the facility and retains custody of some records that they share with DOE for epidemiological and regulatory uses by government agencies.

Electronic mail from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, OHA (November 2, 2000). Specifically, DOE/OR stated that the following Privacy Act systems of records(1) were searched:

DOE-5 Personnel Records of Former Contractor Employees

DOE-33 Personnel Medical Records

DOE-35 Personnel Radiation Exposure Records

DOE-71 and DOE-72 Radiation Accident and Radiation Study Registries

Electronic mail from Amy Rothrock to Steven Goering (November 16, 2000). In addition, DOE/OR performed a search of its procurement records and of medical, exposure, and personnel files in its Records Holding Area, which contains historical medical and personnel records from the beginning of the Manhattan Project at Oak Ridge. Id.(2)

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that DOE/OR performed a search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that DOE/OR's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Mr. Ramage sought. See Janice R. McLemore, 27 DOE ¶ 80,258 (2000) (DOE/OR search of pertinent Privacy Act systems of records and Records Holding Area constituted adequate search for medical records of requester's father). Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Norris Ramage, Case Number VFA- 0621, is hereby denied.

November 15, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Shapiro Fussell Wedge Smotherman

Martin & Price, LLP

Date of Filing: October 17, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0622

On October 17, 2000, Shapiro Fussell Wedge Smotherman Martin & Price (Shapiro) filed an Appeal from two determinations issued to the firm on September 11, 2000, and September 19, 2000, by the Golden Field Office (Golden) of the Department of Energy (DOE). Those determinations concerned a request for information that Shapiro submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Golden would be ordered to release the requested information or to issue new determinations.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

Shapiro filed a FOIA request seeking "all documents relating, referring or pertaining to the Vermont Biomass Gasifier located in Burlington, Vermont." In both its September 11 and September 19, 2000 determination letters, Golden identified a number of documents responsive to Shapiro's request. However, Golden withheld portions of this information pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 5 of the FOIA. See September 11, 2000 and September 19, 2000 Determination Letters.

On October 17, 2000, Shapiro filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In its Appeal, Shapiro challenges certain portions of Golden's determinations related to information Golden withheld under Exemption 4. Specifically, Shapiro asserts that it is uncertain, based on Golden's determination letters, how the withheld information would fall within Exemption 4. Shapiro asks that the OHA direct Golden to release the withheld information.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. After conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, the agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search, and if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency inform the requester of its right "to appeal to the head of the agency any adverse determination." Id.

The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (1) adequately describe the results of the searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify any exemption under which information was withheld. Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,797 (1996). It is well established that a FOIA determination must contain a reasonbly specific justification for withholding material pursuant to a FOIA request. See Deborah L. Abrahamson, 23 DOE ¶ 80,147 (1993). A specific justification is necessary to allow this Office to perform an effective review of the initial agency determination and to permit the requesting party to prepare a reasoned appeal. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

In the present case, Golden withheld responsive information under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. In its determination letters, Golden provided Shapiro with generic explanations regarding how Exemption 4 applies to the responsive information. Instead of providing specific justification for applying Exemption 4 to the material withheld in this case, Golden has merely restated the language of Exemption 4, without adequately explaining the reasons why Golden concluded that the responsive information is exempt from disclosure under the provisions of the FOIA. We find these explanations to be insufficiently informative and short of what is legally required. Furthermore, we note that there does not appear to have been any attempt to segregate and release any non-exempt information from exempt information in any of the withheld information.

Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to Golden either to release to Shapiro all of the information responsive to its request or to issue new determinations adequately supporting the withholding of the information. If new determinations are issued, Golden should include a statement of the reason for denial, a specific explanation of how the exemption applies to the information withheld and a statement why discretionary release is not appropriate. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1). Golden should further review each document for the possible segregation of non-exempt material. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(3).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Shapiro Fussell Wedge Smotherman Martin & Price, LLP, OHA Case No. VFA-0622, on October 17, 2000, is hereby granted in part as set forth below in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Golden Field Office of the Department of Energy, which shall either release the responsive information withheld in its September 11 and September 19, 2000 determinations or issue new determinations in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: October 20, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0623

Barbara Schwarz (Appellant) appeals from a determination of the FOI/Privacy Act Division of the Department of Energy (DOE) Headquarters (DOE/FOI) denying Appellant's request for fee waiver, which she filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, and the DOE implementing regulations, 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request, but provides that, absent a waiver, requesters must pay applicable processing fees. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). This appeal, if granted, would waive the processing fees associated with Appellant's FOIA request.

I. Background

On July 19, 2000, Appellant filed a FOIA request with the DOE/FOI. Appellant requested records indicating that the German government secretly (1) motivated the Cuban government to foster hostile relations with the United States; (2) implanted a Communist form of government in Cuba or any other Communist state; (3) invented Communism; and (4) controlled or controls the countries of the former Soviet Union, Korea, Vietnam, Cuba or China. Pursuant to 10 C.F.R. 1004.4(e), the DOE/FOI issued a letter to Appellant on August 23, 2000, which sought either an assurance to pay the fees associated with processing her request, or a request for fee waiver. On September 9, 2000, Appellant filed a request for fee waiver (Waiver Request).(1) That request was denied, and it is that denial which is the subject of this appeal.

Appellant based her Waiver Request on three main premises. First, Appellant stated that she is indigent and cannot afford to pay applicable search fees. Waiver Request at 1. Second, Appellant maintained that she requests the records for "personal" reasons, to be used as evidence that she was abducted from the United States by the German government. Id. Third, Appellant asserted that she requests the records for "educational reasons as to the secret German Nazi infiltration of the U.S. government and other countries." Waiver Request at 2. To that end, Appellant further asserted that she intends to distribute the information in the records to the public through use of the Internet. Id.

On October 5, 2000, the DOE/FOI denied Appellant's Waiver Request, and, on October 20, 2000, Appellant appealed the denial with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In her appeal, Appellant maintains that she is entitled to a fee waiver on substantially the same bases she set forth in her Waiver Request, as cited above, and makes several statements in support of the truth of her assertion that the "United States government is secretly infiltrated by German Nazi conspiracy." Appeal letter at 1. Appellant further asserts she is entitled to two hours of free search time and 100 copies of documents at no charge (the initial processing fees), and appeals from the DOE/FOI's alleged denial of the initial processing fees.

II. Applicable Legal Principles

The FOIA generally obligates requesters to pay processing fees, "except that the first 100 pages of reproduction and the first two hours of search time will be furnished without charge." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a), (b)(4). Either an assurance of willingness to pay fees assessed in accordance with Section 1004.9, or a request for fee waiver, must be included in a FOIA request. The FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest, because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government (the public interest prong); and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester (the commercial interest prong). 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

In order to satisfy the public interest prong, the DOE requires that a requester show each of the following:

(A) The subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);

(B) Disclosure of the requested records is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);

(C) Disclosure of the requested records would contribute to an understanding of the subject by the general public (Factor C); and

(D) Disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

If a requester satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong, he must then satisfy the commercial interest prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his commercial interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii). Administrative appeals of fee waiver denials generally are reviewed de novo. See Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,167 (September 29, 1998).

In denying Appellant's Waiver Request, the Director of the DOE/FOI found that Appellant failed to satisfy each element of the public interest prong. We agree. After performing a de novo review of the merits of Appellant's fee Waiver Request, we find that disclosure is not in the public interest and, therefore, Appellant should not be granted a fee waiver.

III. Analysis

Factor A under the public interest prong requires that the requested records be sought for their informative value with respect to specifically identifiable government operations or activities. See Van Fripp v. Parks, No. 97-0159, slip op. at 10, (D.D.C. Mar. 16, 2000) (characterizing request as "fishing expedition that does not relate to defined operations or activities of the government") (Van Fripp); Atkin v. EEOC, No. 91-2508, slip op. at 27-28 (D.N.J. Dec. 4, 1992) (finding requested list of agency attorneys and their bar affiliations "clearly does not concern idenifiable government activities or operations"). A request for access to records for their intrinsic informational content alone will not entitle one to a fee waiver. See Carney v. United States Dep't of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating subject matter of information sought relevant to consideration of fee waiver) (Carney).

In this case, records indicating that the German government secretly controls or controlled certain governments might have intrinsic informative value and be of general interest. However, Appellant has failed to show that such records have informative value with respect to a specifically identifiable operation or activity of the United States government. Appellant's Waiver Request and appeal letter are laden with denouncements of Nazi Germany and personal attestations as to the reality of discrete, worldwide German influence, but they do not address the issue relevant to a FOIA fee waiver determination, namely, whether the information Appellant seeks relates to or will shed light upon a particular aspect of government conduct. Because Appellant has failed to show that the requested records have informative value with respect to specifically identifiable government operations or activities, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor A.

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney, 19 F.3d at 814. Because, as explained with regard to Factor A, there is no evidence linking the subject matter of Appellant's request to a specifically identifiable government operation or activity, disclosure of the requested information is not likely to contribute to or enhance public understanding of a specific government operation or activity. Thus, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor B.

Factor C requires that the requested material contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the individual understanding of the requester or a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. United States Dep't of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the ability and intention to disseminate the requested information to the public. See Larson v. Central Intelligence Agency, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 & n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding inability to disseminate information alone is sufficient basis for denying fee Waiver Request); Donald R. Patterson, 28 DOE ¶ 80,107 (2000) (denying fee waiver based on requester's failure to satisfy Factor C). Furthermore, passively making information available to anyone who might access it does not satisfy Factor C, because merely placing data in the public domain without analysis or explanation will not contribute to the public's understanding of the subject matter. See Van Fripp, slip op. at 11-12 (finding "it is plaintiff's burden to disseminate the requested information to the public and not, merely, to make it available"); Donald R. Patterson, supra (citing Van Fripp, supra).

Although Appellant asserts that she intends to distribute the requested information on the Internet, we have previously held that posting information on a website is a passive method of dissemination and insufficient for purposes of Factor C. See Donald R. Patterson, supra ("Patterson's plan to post information on a website . . . is a passive method of placing information in the public domain, compared to, for instance, distributing the material in a newsletter or journal."). Because Appellant has set forth no evidence that she will use a means of distribution other than the Internet, she has not demonstrated the ability and intention to disseminate the requested information to the public at large. Thus, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor C.

Under Factor D, the last element of the public interest prong, disclosure must contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities. Because, as explained with regard to Factor A, Appellant has not shown that the requested information relates to specifically identifiable government operations or activities, release of the requested information will not significantly contribute to public understanding of government operations or activities. Thus, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor D.

The foregoing analysis reveals that Appellant has not satisfied the public interest prong, and on that basis alone, should not be granted a fee waiver. It is therefore unnecessary to proceed to analysis of the commercial interest prong.

In addition, to the extent Appellant claims entitlement to a fee waiver because she is indigent, and because she seeks the requested information for personal reasons, we note that neither basis is a proper consideration under the FOIA for purposes of making a fee waiver determination. See Ely v. United States

Postal Serv., 753 F.2d 163, 165 (D.C. Cir. 1985) ("Congress rejected a fee waiver provision for indigents."); McClain v. United States Dep't of Justice, 13 F.3d 220, 220-21 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding fee waiver inappropriate where requester sought to serve private rather than public interest).

Finally, we need not address Appellant's assertion that the DOE/FOI denied her two free hours of search time and 100 copies free of charge (the initial processing fees). It appears that the October 5, 2000 determination from the DOE/FOI denied only Appellant's fee Waiver Request and not the initial processing fees provided for by 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a), (b)(4) (quoted supra).

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, Appellant has failed to show that disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. Therefore, her appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz on October 20, 2000, OHA Case Number VFA-0623, is hereby denied.

Case No. VFA-0624, 28 DOE ¶ 80,130

December 4, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Judith A. Neal

Date of Filing:November 2, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0624

On November 2, 2000, Judith Neal filed an Appeal from a determination the FOIA Officer of the Oak Ridge Operations Office (FOIA Officer) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to her on August 10, 2000. In that determination, the FOIA Officer denied a request for information that Ms. Neal filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA generally requires that a federal agency release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency either may or must withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

In Ms. Neal's request for information, she sought copies of documents pertaining to her mother, Carrie W. Smith, who worked at Oak Ridge during the Manhattan Project. The FOIA Officer's determination letter indicated that she found no documents responsive to the request. In this Appeal, Ms. Neal asks us to verify that the DOE conducted a search that included her mother's maiden name, Carrie W. Wilson, as well as her married name, Carrie W. Smith. In accordance with Ms. Neal's Appeal, we have reviewed the adequacy of the search for responsive documents.

Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

We have investigated the DOE's search made in response to Ms. Neal's request. In this investigation, we contacted the FOIA Officer to answer Ms. Neal's question concerning the extent of the DOE's search. The FOIA Officer informed us that she conducted a search using Ms. Neal's mother's social security number. She stated that a social security number search ensured that all records for Carrie Smith, Carrie Wilson, or any other names her mother might have used would be retrieved if they existed. Furthermore, the FOIA Officer informed us that all of the relevant DOE records from this time period were located in "the vault" and these records were organized by social security number. See Record of November 27, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Leonard M. Tao, OHA Staff Attorney, and Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge Operations Office FOIA Officer. Thus, we find that the FOIA Officer's use of Ms. Neal's mother's social security number to search for responsive records was the most effective and comprehensive method possible and there is no need for a separate search using only Ms. Neal's mother's maiden name. Since the FOIA Officer conducted a search that was the most likely to reveal any responsive information and she confirmed that no responsive documents exist, we find the FOIA Officer's search to be adequate and must deny Ms. Neal's appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal Judith A. Neal filed on November 2, 2000, Case No. VFA-0624, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Linda G. Shown

Date of Filing: November 3, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0625

On November 3, 2000, Linda Shown, Esq. (Shown) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her in response to a request for documents concerning Lester Mays that Shown submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on October 19, 2000, by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge). This Appeal, if granted, would require that Oak Ridge perform an additional search.

I. Background

Lester Mays was employed by Tennessee Eastman (then the civilian contractor at the Oak Ridge site) from September 1944 to May 1945. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Amy Rothrock, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) Staff Attorney (November 28, 2000). Mr. Mays worked at what is now the Y-12 plant in Oak Ridge. Id. According to Shown, when Mr. Mays left Tennessee Eastman, he brought home a container filled with a thick white substance that he had scraped from machinery during his employment at the plant. Letter from Shown to Director, OHA (November 3, 2000) (Appeal). After Mays' death his widow called "someone in authority" to remove the substance from her home, and two "government workers" dressed in "full protective gear and with protective equipment" went to the residence and removed the container. Id. Mays' widow requested (but never received) either a report on the contents of the container or a receipt for the container. Appeal at 2.

On August 30, 2000, Shown filed a FOIA request with Oak Ridge on behalf of Lester Mays' son for "a copy of the complete file pertaining to his father . . . including but not limited to medical records, work related records, and any other information regarding Mr. Lester H. Mays." Letter from Shown to Oak Ridge (August 30, 2000). The request did not, however, mention the alleged removal of the substance from the home. Oak Ridge searched DOE historical files and found responsive personnel records that included some medical records. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (November 28, 2000). Oak Ridge released those records to Shown along with the determination on October 19, 2000. Letter from Oak Ridge to Shown (October 19, 2000). Shown then filed this Appeal, contending that additional records pertaining to Lester Mays "must exist" because of the circumstances surrounding the removal of the mysterious substance from the Mays home in the 1960s. Appeal at 2. Mays' family believes that his death was caused by radiation exposure during his employment at Oak Ridge, and they allege that Oak Ridge should have responsive records in its possession relating to what they believe was his radiation exposure. Id.

II. Analysis

A. ADEQUACY OF SEARCH

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted Oak Ridge to ascertain the scope of the search, particularly in light of Shown's description of the removal of the container. Oak Ridge informed us that they were not aware of the container incident that allegedly occurred in the 1960s. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, DOE Staff Attorney (November 28, 2000). As a result, Oak Ridge had performed its search using Mr. Mays' Social Security number, and limited its search to DOE historical files. Id. If an accident occurred in the 1940s, the Health Physics Department would have generated a memo about the incident. Id. Oak Ridge also searched for any Health Physics files regarding Mr. Mays, and found no responsive material. Id. Oak Ridge did not search the Y-12 facility because the plant did not begin keeping detailed records on employees until the 1950s, over five years after Mr. Mays left Tennessee Eastman. Id. The Y-12 facility retained only a personnel card on each World War II-era employee, unless the individual was sick or involved in a hazardous material spill. Id. As for the allegation of radiation exposure, radiation exposure records were not initiated until the mid-1950s, after Mr. Mays had left the facility. Id. We therefore find that Oak Ridge conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the responsive material, i.e., records relating to a World War II-era employee. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied. (1)

(1)Because the request did not contain any information about the alleged removal of the canister from the Mays residence, Oak Ridge was unaware of the incident. However, after we notified Oak Ridge of Shown's allegation, Oak Ridge agreed to initiate a search of Y-12 files for information relating to the 1960s incident. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (November 28, 2000). At Oak Ridge's request, Shown provided additional information about the incident to the FOIA office in order to facilitate the new search.

December 4, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. ENG Services

Date of Filing: November 3, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0626

On November 3, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on October 4, 2000. In its determination, Rocky Flats denied R.E.V. ENG Services' request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Rocky Flats to release the information it withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that is required to be withheld or may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. BACKGROUND

In a letter dated August 1, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services submitted a FOIA request to Rocky Flats for "information pertaining to the Rocky Flats Field Office tasking" for the "Final Report that was prepared for the [Rocky Flats] Office of Chief Counsel by David Fredrickson of the Albuquerque Field Office." Request Letter dated August 1, 2000, from David Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to Mary Hammack, FOIA/Privacy Act Officer, Rocky Flats. In an additional letter dated August 1, 2000, R.E.V. ENG Services submitted a FOIA request to Rocky Flats for documents delivered to Rocky Flats and referenced in a May 5, 2000 Memorandum from David M. Fredrickson, Director, Personnel Security Division, Albuquerque, to Carolyn A. Becknell, Acting FOIA/Privacy Act Officer, Albuquerque.(1) Second Request

Letter dated August 1, 2000, from David Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to Mary Hammack, FOIA/Privacy Act Officer, Rocky Flats.

On October 4, 2000, Rocky Flats denied both the August 1, 2000 requests, withholding six responsive documents,(2) claiming they were exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5. Rocky Flats claimed that the documents were attorney work-product. Determination Letter dated October 4, 2000, from Barbara A. Mazurowski, Manager, FOI Authorizing/Denying Official, Rocky Flats, to David E. Ridenour, P. E., R.E.V. ENG Services (Determination Letter).

In its Appeal, R.E.V. ENG Services disputes the withholding of information under Exemption 5. First, R.E.V. ENG Services asserts that claiming that the OF 41 Routing and Transmittal Form is attorney work-product strains the limits of credulity. Appeal Letter dated October 31, 2000, from David E. Ridenour, P.E., R.E.V. ENG Services, to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. The Appellant believes that Rocky Flats' justification in support of withholding the remainder of the documents rests on the assertion that he will be suing the government. R.E.V. ENG Services claims that no lawsuit is contemplated. Id.

II. ANALYSIS

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The attorney work-product privilege serves to "provide working attorneys with a ?zone of privacy' within which to think, plan, weigh facts and evidence . . . , and prepare legal theories." Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 864 (D.C. Cir. 1980). It protects documents prepared by an attorney in contemplation of litigation. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 509-10 (1947); Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3). This privilege is also applicable to material prepared by a non-attorney who was supervised by an attorney. Nishnic v. Department of Justice, 671 F. Supp. 771, 772-73 (D.D.C. 1987). Finally, because factual work-product is not "routinely" or "normally" discoverable, it can also be protected under Exemption 5. See United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799 (1984); FTC v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 19, 26 (1983) (Grolier). In order to claim the attorney work-product privilege, a lawsuit need not have already been filed. The privilege "extends to documents prepared in anticipation of foreseeable litigation, even if no specific claim is contemplated." Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1208 (D.C. Cir. 1992). Further, termination of litigation does not cancel the protection for attorney work-product material. Grolier, 462 U.S. at 28.

We have reviewed copies of all six documents withheld by Rocky Flats. As an initial matter, we agree with the Appellant that the "Routing and Transmittal Slip" does not contain any information that can be considered attorney work-product.(3) Other than the information listed in its description in the Determination Letter, it contains Mr. Fredrickson's room and telephone numbers. Further, it contains two sentences indicating what it is transmitting. None of this information can be construed to be attorney work-product. We believe it should be released in its entirety.

The other five documents are a letter and four memoranda. The second document we consider is a copy of a letter dated May 13, 1997, from Mell Roy, Chief Counsel, Rocky Flats, to Bruce Twining, Manager, Albuquerque. We believe that this document deals essentially with a personnel matter; however, it does contain some information that may be considered attorney work-product. The last four documents, all memoranda, contain similar, often identical, information. The first memorandum is from James D. Long, Jr., Attorney-Advisor, Rocky Flats, to Mr. Fredrickson, outlining what questions Mr. Fredrickson's inquiry should answer. The last three documents are cover memoranda from Mr. Fredrickson to Ms Roy, transmitting the report. These memoranda are essentially the same document with different dates. These three memoranda essentially replicate Mr. Long's memoranda.

A determination must adequately justify the withholding of a document by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 at 80,622 (1995); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,527 (1984). In the present case, the Determination Letter provides only a statement that the documents are attorney work-product. This justification is the type of conclusory explanation that we have found to be invalid previously. Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,528. Arnold & Porter required that an explanation be set forth showing how the exemption applied to the specific document. That explanation must show that serious thought was given to the reasons justifying the withholding of each document. Id. at 80,529. In this case, with the exception of providing a blanket statement that the documents are attorney work-product, Rocky Flats included no other justification. More importantly, Rocky Flats failed to specifically provide any explanation of how the attorney work-product privilege applies to these documents. Although we believe that portions of these documents may contain attorney work-product, we believe Rocky Flats is in the best position to make that initial assessment. We will remand the matter to Rocky Flats for a better description of the documents and an explanation of how the privilege applies to them.

III. THE PUBLIC INTEREST

In a typical case, the fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1.

Despite the fact that Rocky Flats need not segregate the factual material in a document that is protected by the attorney work-product privilege, we believe that Rocky Flats should release the factual information in these documents in furtherance of the public interest. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of an exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (October 4, 1993) at 1, 2 (Reno Memorandum). The factual information can be released without foreseeable harm to the agency, even though it would not "normally" or "routinely" be discoverable in litigation. Portions of the documents are factual information that could easily be segregated and released to R.E.V. ENG Services without adversely harming the interest protected by the attorney work-product privilege. Therefore, we will remand the six documents to Rocky Flats with a direction to segregate and release the factual information or to provide justification sufficient to articulate a reasonably foreseeable harm in releasing any portion of the documents.

IV. CONCLUSION

We are remanding the Routing and Transmittal Slip to Rocky Flats for its release. We are also remanding the letter and four memoranda to Rocky Flats so that it may provide an adequate justification of how the attorney work-product privilege applies to these documents. Rocky Flats should review these six documents, and segregate and release all factual portions of them, or issue a new determination that justifies their withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by R.E.V. ENG Services, on November 3, 2000, Case No. VFA-0626, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Rocky Flats Field Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(1)The Fredrickson Memorandum was written in response to an earlier FOIA request that R.E.V. ENG Services filed with Albuquerque. Albuquerque responded to that request by stating that it had no responsive documents. However, after the determination, Mr. Fredrickson found a copy of the report and sent it to Rocky Flats. He then sent the May 5, 2000 Memorandum to Ms Becknell.

(2)The determination letter refers to eight documents. Included within those eight documents are the original report, which has been the subject of two previous FOIA Appeals. R.E.V. ENG Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,115 (2000); Charlene Pazar, 27 DOE ¶ 80,104 (1998). In these cases, we found that the report was attorney work-product. Therefore, we will not revisit the matter. Another document mentioned in the determination letter is a "note for retained copies." This was also the subject of a previous FOIA Appeal. R.E.V. ENG Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 (2000). In that case, we remanded the matter to Rocky Flats for a new determination justifying the withholding of this document. Because that remand is still pending, we will not review that document again.

(3)We note that in the Determination Letter, this document is identified as containing the date "July 7, 1997." The date on the copy we received was "July 2, 1997." We believe this to be a typographical error in the Determination Letter.

Case No. VFA-0627, 28 DOE ¶ 80,133

December 11, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner:Martin Becker

Date of Filing:November 13, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0627

Martin Becker (Appellant) appeals from a determination of Department of Energy (DOE) Savannah River Operations Office (SROO) issued in response to his request for documents, which he filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, and the DOE implementing regulations, 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, the DOE/SRO stated that the DOE neither owned nor possessed the documents responsive to Appellant's FOIA request, and, therefore, could not release them. For the reasons set forth below, this appeal is granted and remanded to the SROO for a new determination in accordance with this decision.

I. Procedural History

On September 22, 2000, Appellant filed a FOIA request with the SROO, seeking a copy of any lease entered into by Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) at Centennial Corporate Center in Aiken, South Carolina, since January 1, 1996 (the lease). WSRC is the management and operating (M&O) contractor at the DOE Savannah River Site and enters into various subcontracts, such as the lease, with third parties for the purpose of fulfilling its M&O contract with the DOE.

The SROO responded with a determination letter dated October 26, 2000. The determination letter stated:

The documents responsive to your request are neither owned nor possessed by [the DOE]. Specifically, DOE's [M&O contract with WSRC] provides:

The following records are considered property of the Contractor and are not Government documents: non-accounting records relating to any procurement action by the Contractor.

The records you have requested involve a WSRC subcontract and are thus procurement-related records of WSRC. DOE itself performed a search and we have no documents responsive to your request.

On November 13, 2000, Appellant filed this appeal from the SROO's determination. In his appeal letter, Appellant maintains that the lease is owned by the DOE, because it is "the only document that can actually verify for DOE in accord with [Department of Energy Acquisition Regulations] that the correct amounts are being (or have been) requested from DOE by Westinghouse for lease payments, and [a]s a result, in addition to statutory possession, DOE would have actual possession of the lease after a ?reasonable' search."

II. Applicable Legal Principles

Unless requested material falls within one of nine statutory exemptions, the FOIA generally requires a federal agency to release its records to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3. See also NLRB v. Robbins Tire & Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 242 (1978).(1) The threshold inquiry in this case is whether the documents requested are "agency records" subject to the FOIA. As enumerated by the U.S. Supreme Court in United States Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144 (1989) (Tax Analysts), two requirements must be satisfied in order for materials to qualify as "agency records" (collectively, "the Tax Analysts test"). First, an agency must either create or obtain the materials. To that end, FOIA obligates an agency to provide access to only those documents which it in fact has created and obtained, not documents the agency merely could have created or obtained. Kissinger v. Reporters Com. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 151-52 (1980) (Kissinger). The FOIA does not obligate an agency to create, retain, or compile documents as a matter of course, or procure records specifically in response to a FOIA request. Id. Second, the agency must be in control of the requested materials at the time the FOIA request is made. "By control we mean that the materials must have come into the agency's possession in the legitimate conduct of its official duties." Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145.

Even if requested documents are not "agency records" under the Tax Analysts test, however, they nevertheless may be subject to disclosure under DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) provides that "[w]hen a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)."

As will be discussed below, although the lease is not an "agency record" under the Tax Analysts test, the SROO has failed to provide an adequate explanation as to why the lease is not subject to disclosure under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

II. Analysis

A. The Lease is not an Agency Record Under the Tax Analysts Test

1. The Lease was not Created by a Government Agency

It is well settled that a private entity may be considered a government agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807, 815 (1976). Although the DOE exercises general control over contractual work, it does not supervise the day-to-day operations of WSRC. Thus, the fact that WSRC participated in the creation of the lease does not render the document one created by a government agency.

2. The Lease was not in the SROO's Possession at the Time of

Appellant's FOIA Request

As indicated above, the FOIA obligates an agency to disclose only those documents which it in fact has created or obtained, not documents it merely could create or obtain. See Kissinger, 445 U.S. at 152. The relevant date for determining whether an agency has obtained documents is the date of the corresponding FOIA request. Id. The FOIA imposes no duty upon an agency to retain documents that have come into its possession or retrieve documents the agency once possessed. Id.

In this case, the SROO stated in its October 26, 2000 determination letter that it found no documents responsive to Appellant's September 22, 2000 FOIA request. In addition, in late November 2000, this office contacted officials from the Site Services Division (SSD) and Contracts Management Division (CMD), who confirmed that their searches of their respective offices failed to uncover the lease. Telephone Conversations with Ron Jernigen, Tom Reynolds and Larry Snyder, Nov. 22, 2000; Telephone Conversation with Tom Reynolds, Nov. 27, 2000.

Appellant contends that because the lease is the "only" document that the SROO can use to verify reimbursement of allowable expenses in accordance with Department of Energy Acquisition Regulations DEAR, the SROO should have obtained and filed a copy of the lease. Telephone Conversation with Martin Becker, Nov. 15, 2000. Furthermore, Appellant maintains, even if the SROO does not physically possess a copy of the lease, it has "statutory possession" and could have "actual possession of the lease after a ?reasonable' search.(3) Appeal Letter dated Nov. 13, 2000.

According to the Deputy Director of the CMD, however, the SROO verifies allowable expenses through use of a computerized database known as the Procurement Control System (PCS). Telephone Conversation with Tom Reynolds, Nov. 22 and 27, 2000. WSRC's Purchasing Department enters information from the lease into the PCS, which it then transfers to WSRC's Accounting Department. Id. The Purchasing Department, not the Accounting Department, maintains a copy of the lease. Telephone Conversation with Tom Reynolds, Nov. 27, 2000. The Accounting Department uses the PCS data to seek payment from the SROO. Id. See also Telephone Conversation with Tim Fischer of the SROO Office of Chief Counsel, Nov. 28, 2000.

The SSD and CMD officials concede that they had obtained a copy of the lease for approval purposes in 1996, when the lease was in development, but maintain that they did not have a copy within their possession and control at the time of Appellant's FOIA request. Telephone Conversations with Ron Jernigen, Tom Reynolds and Larry Snyder, Nov. 22, 2000; Telephone Conversation with Tom Reynolds, Nov. 27, 2000. The Deputy Director of the CMD further indicated that the approval copy of the lease initially may have been retained in CMD files, but because the files are purged every two years as a matter of course, the copy probably was discarded in 1998. Telephone Conversations with Tom Reynolds, Nov. 22 and 27, 2000.

Based on the foregoing, we find that the SROO did not have a copy of the lease on the date relevant to the Tax Analysts test, i.e., at the time of Appellant's FOIA request. The SROO has found it acceptable to rely upon the PCS, not solely the lease, in verifying allowable expenses. Regardless of whether the SROO has actual ownership of the lease under the DEAR, it has chosen not to exercise its authority to obtain a copy of the lease, and the FOIA does not require an agency to retrieve a responsive document merely because it can. See Kissinger, supra.

Because WSRC is not an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA, and the SROO has not obtained the responsive documents, we conclude that the lease is not an agency record under the Tax Analysts test.

B. The Lease May be Subject to Disclosure Under DOE Regulations

Although the lease is not an "agency record" under the Tax Analysts test, it may be subject to disclosure under DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) states, "[w]hen a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)."

Section H.27(a) of the M&O contract states, "[except for records defined as contractor-owned,] all records acquired or generated by the Contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government." As the SROO's determination letter indicates, Section H.27(b)(3) defines contractor-owned records as including, inter alia, "non-accounting records relating to any procurement action by the contractor."

As an initial matter, we find, and the SROO has not disputed, that the lease is a record acquired or generated by WSRC in its performance of the M&O contract. WSRC generated and entered into the lease for the purpose of fulfilling its obligations under the M&O contract. On that basis alone, the lease could be subject to disclosure under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

The SROO contends, however, that the lease falls squarely within Section H.27(b)(3) as a "contractor-owned," "non-accounting record," and, as such, is specifically excepted from Section H.27(a). Therefore, according to the SROO, the lease is outside the purview of 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) and not subject to its disclosure provisions. Determination Letter, Oct. 26, 2000.

In support of the SROO's position, its Office of Chief Counsel (OCC) notes that it is WSRC's Purchasing Department that keeps the lease on file, while the Accounting Department utilizes PCS data. Telephone Conversations with Tim Fischer, Nov. 15 and 28, 2000. The OCC contends that because the Accounting Department processes allowable expenses, the lease would be subject to disclosure only if the Accounting Department maintained a copy of it. Id. If anything, argues OCC, it is the PCS data used by the Accounting Department, not the lease, which constitute an accounting record. Id.

We are not persuaded by SROO's argument. Although it may be true that, under the M&O contract, "non-accounting," "contractor-owned" records are not subject to disclosure, the SROO has failed to provide an adequate explanation in support of its position that the lease fits within that category. The distinction OCC attempts to make between WSRC's Accounting and Purchasing Departments is entirely its own creation and irrelevant for purposes of 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). Regardless of where the lease is kept within WSRC's organization, the lease provides direct support for the accounting information in the PCS that WSRC uses to seek payment of allowable expenses from the SROO.

Indeed, contrary to the SROO's assertion in its determination letter, the fact that the SROO does not have the lease in its physical possession is also irrelevant for purposes of the DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1), unlike the Tax Analysts test, does not require that a record be created or obtained by an agency in order for it to be subject to disclosure. Under the plain language of that regulation, records "in possession of the Government or contractor" and designated as property of the government shall be made available to the public, unless a FOIA exemption applies. The DOE regulations do not distinguish contractor-owned records from government-owned records-- and the M&O contract does not distinguish accounting records from non-accounting records-- depending upon where the records are kept.

Finally, we note that an argument can be made that the lease in fact is an accounting record. Section I.79(d) of the M&O contract provides that "all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents . . . and other data evidencing costs allowable, [and] collections accruing to the Contractor in connection with the work under this contract . . . shall be the property of the Government . . . ." (emphasis added). WSRC's Purchasing Department enters information into the PCS directly from the lease. It is reasonable to conclude, and the OCC concedes, that the lease is a "supporting document" to WSRC's books of account and evidences costs allowable, i.e., lease payments. Telephone Conversation with Tim Fischer, Nov. 28, 2000.(4) It seems to stretch reasonable interpretation of the M&O contract too far to find that the lease supports WSRC's books of account under Section I.79(d) but is a "non-accounting"record under Section H.27(b)(3).

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, we find that the lease is a record acquired or generated by WSRC in its performance of the M&O contract, and as such, may be subject to disclosure under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). Furthermore, the SROO has failed to set forth an adequate explanation as to why the lease is excepted from 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) as a "contractor-owned," "non-accounting" record. Therefore, this matter will be remanded to the SROO to issue a new determination. In its determination, the SROO must release any responsive documents, provide an adequate explanation as to why the documents are contractor-owned, or provide another adequate explanation for withholding them.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act appeal filed by Martin Becker on November 13, 2000, Case No. VFA-0627 is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Savannah River Operations Office to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

(1)"Records" includes "all books, papers, maps, photographs, machine readable materials, or other documentary materials, regardless of physical form or characteristics made or received by an agency of the United States Government under Federal law or in connection with the transaction of public business." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 183 (1980). It is undisputed that the lease at issue in this case constitutes a "record" for purposes of the FOIA.

(2)Department of Energy Acquisition Regulations, 48 C.F.R. § 970.52 et seq., set forth uniform acquisition policies and model language to be incorporated in DOE management and operating contracts. Under the M&O contract, which incorporates DEAR language, WSRC may seek reimbursement of expenses incurred under subcontracts, such as the lease, entered into for the purpose of fulfilling M&O obligations.

(3)"We assume that by stating that the DOE has "statutory possession" of the lease, Appellant means to assert that the lease is property of the DOE under its M&O contract with WSRC, which incorporates DEAR language.

(4)OCC further argues, however, that Section I.79(d) should be construed as designating only primary supporting documents as property of the government. Otherwise, OCC contends, almost every record related to a subcontract "except negotiation notes" would be subject to disclosure. Telephone Conversation with Tim Fischer, Nov. 28, 2000. This is a burden- related argument and does not control here. We also note that this argument rests upon OCC's unsupported position that the lease does not provide direct support for WSRC's allowable expenses.

Case No. VFA-0629, 28 DOE ¶ 80,134

December 11, 2000

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Timothy C. Cronin

Date of Filing: November 14, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0629

On November 14, 2000, Timothy C. Cronin filed an Appeal from a determination the DOE's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) issued on August 17, 2000. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Mr. Cronin requested from BPA

a copy of all documents, notes, e-mails or other writings or recordings which relate to, reference or evidence any investigations, requests for waivers or grants of waivers of conflicts of interest for any [BPA] employee or agent including, but not limited to BPA Administrator, Judith Johansen with respect to the power rate case known as WP-02 and the Record of Decision for the Power Subscription Strategy dated December 21, 1998.

Letter from Timothy C. Cronin to Freedom of Information Act Officer, BPA (July 5, 2000). After filing the request, the requester agreed with BPA to narrow the scope of the request to BPA employees who were "policy makers," including political appointees who worked on the WP-02 Rate Case and the Record of Decision for the Power Subscription Strategy dated December 21, 1998, rather than all BPA employees or agents. The requester defined "policy makers" as those employees with the responsibility to file financial disclosure forms. Electronic mail from Keshmira McVey, Attorney, BPA, to Steven Goering, OHA (November 30, 2000). In response to the request, BPA issued a determination stating that it was "unable to locate any agency records in response to your request." Letter from Gene Tollefson, Freedom of Information Officer, to Timothy Cronin (August 17, 2000). Mr. Cronin challenges the adequacy of DOE/OR's search for documents responsive to his request.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, we contacted BPA and found out the following regarding its search. The BPA Office of General Counsel searched its ethics files, in particular the file pertaining to the BPA Administrator. Second, all staff in BPA's General Counsel's office were informed of the request, and asked to produce any responsive documents. Finally, all policy-making BPA employees who worked on the WP-02 Rate Case and the Record of Decision for the Power Subscription Strategy dated December 21, 1998, were contacted to determine if they had knowledge of any responsive documents. This search process produced no responsive documents.(1) In addition, BPA's agency ethics officer was aware of no investigations into possible conflicts of interest with respect to the rate case referenced in the request. Electronic mail from Keshmira McVey, Attorney, BPA, to Steven Goering, OHA (November 30, 2000).

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that BPA performed a diligent search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that BPA's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Mr. Cronin sought. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Timothy C. Cronin, Case Number VFA-0629, is hereby denied.

(1) BPA did have documents that it did not consider responsive to the request, but that it thought might be of interest to the requester. Case No. VFA-0630, 28 DOE ¶ 80,135

January 4, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Supplemental Order

Name of Petitioner: John Michael Unfred, P.C.

Date of Filing: June 22, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0630

On July 28, 2000, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) granted in part a Freedom of Information Act appeal filed by John Michael Unfred, P.C. (Unfred) in response to a determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office of the DOE (DOE/AL) issued to Unfred on April 18, 2000. Unfred requested information relating to certain Cooperative Research and Development Agreements (CRADAs) between the DOE and a private company. DOE/AL contacted the company in order to give that firm an opportunity to identify proprietary information. The firm identified all of the Statements of Work contained in the CRADAs as proprietary, and DOE/AL withheld that material from Unfred. OHA remanded the matter to DOE/AL to identify and release any segregable, non-exempt information in the Statements of Work to Unfred. John Michael Unfred, P.C., 28 DOE ¶ 80,104 (2000).

Subsequent to the issuance of the July 28, 2000 decision, it has been brought to our attention that DOE guidelines for drafting CRADAs indicate that proprietary information in a Statement of Work contained in a CRADA must be clearly marked as proprietary. The Statements of Work that were withheld from Unfred had no such markings. Thus, we find that the Statements of Work in the CRADAs under review cannot be considered proprietary and therefore are not exempt from disclosure pursuant to the FOIA on that basis. On remand, DOE/AL must release the Statements of Work in their entirety or provide a detailed explanation for continuing to withhold them on some other ground.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Decision and Order of July 28, 2000, OHA Case No. VFA-0581, is hereby amended as set forth above.

the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

February 1, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Gilbert M. Arriola

Date of Filing: November 20, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0631

On November 20, 2000, Gilbert M. Arriola filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 2, 2000 by the Director of Human Resources Management of the Department of Energy (HR). That determination concerned a request for information that Mr. Arriola submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, DOE would be ordered to release the materials withheld.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public, whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In a request submitted to HR on January 12, 2000, Mr. Arriola requested the following documents:

(1) A copy of the Senior Executive Service Selection Certification for the position of Deputy Assistant Secretary for International Materials Protection and Emergency Cooperation, Announcement Number: ETR 99-ES-10-040.

(2) A copy of the complete application package submitted by the employee selected for the position including the dates MA received it.

(3) Copies of all documentation and notes, regarding the selection of the selected employee, taken prior to, during and subsequent to his selection; by all employees involved, in anyway, with the processing of his application, and by any boards or at any hearings or meetings.

(4) Copies of Standard Forms 50-B, “Notification of Personnel Action,” for the selected employee, since his/her employment, transfer, or detail with the Department of Energy.

(5) Copies of all documentation having to do with the transfer, detail or assignment of the selected employee to the Department of Energy and the identification of personnel responsible for making the decision to transfer, detail or assign the selected employee to the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security.

(6) The period of time the selected employee worked at the Department of Energy prior to his/her selection.

(7) Identification of the supervisor the selected employee reported to prior to his/her selection.

(8) Information on whether the selected employee was in any way identified as a replacement for Notra Trulock, the former Director, Office of Intelligence and the identification of who, in the Department of Energy, was involved in the matter.

(9) Copies of any Department of Energy statements or news releases announcing or responding to newspaper or other public comments, including comments made by Notra Trulock, on the selected employees identification as the person to replace him as the Director of the Office of Intelligence.

(10) The identity of the selecting official(s).

See Letter from Gilbert M. Arriola to Abel Lopez, Director of Freedom of Information Act and Privacy Group (January 12, 2000).

On November 2, 2000, HR issued a determination which identified documents responsive to Mr. Arriola's request. However, HR redacted information from these documents and withheld some of the materials pursuant to Exemption 5 and Exemption 6 of the FOIA. HR stated that the requested information is both "predecisional and deliberative" and falls clearly within the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. In addition, HR found that there is no public interest in the disclosure of an individual's personal information. However, there is a viable privacy interest that would be threatened by such disclosure and thus the information is withholdable under Exemption 6. See Determination Letter at 1-2.

On November 20, 2000, Mr. Arriola filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Arriola challenges HR's determination with respect to Items 3, 4, 5, and 9. He disagrees with the application of Exemptions 5 and 6 to Item 3 of his request and requests that OHA direct HR to release all of the requested information.

II. Analysis

A. Item 3 of Appellant's Request

In Item 3 of his request, Mr. Arriola requested "copies of all documentation and notes, regarding the selection of the selected employee, taken prior to, during and subsequent to his selection; by all employees involved, . . . , with the processing of his application, and by any boards or at any hearings or meetings." In its determination, HR released several responsive documents including the Executive Resources Board Subcommittee Case and Evaluation Summary Sheet, copies of E-mails and other memoranda regarding the selection process. However, it withheld the names of the panel members of the Executive Resources Board, responsible for rating the selected employee. Mr. Arriola asserts that Americans of Hispanic origin are severely underrepresented in DOE at the Senior Executive Service level. According to Mr. Arriola, disclosure of this information may reveal a discriminatory pattern and practice in the selection practice that has a direct impact on the underrepresentation of Hispanics. He therefore asserts that there is a public interest in knowing DOE's selection practices. After a thorough discussion with HR, we find that the names of the panel members were properly withheld under Exemptions 5. However, we also find that HR's determination letter with respect to Exemption 6 was insufficiently informative.

1. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). In withholding the requested information, HR relied upon the “deliberative process” privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)) (Mink). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

The material withheld by HR is a list of the names of panel members who sat on the Executive Resources Board. This Board is responsible for rendering an opinion of the best qualified candidates. These opinions are then forwarded to the selecting official, who then makes the final determination concerning the appointment. The selecting official, however, is not bound by these opinions. Thus, the Board’s examination of the candidates is predecisional and part of the deliberative process, i.e., it is advice to the selecting official on which candidate should be appointed to the position. We uphold HR’s decision to withhold the names of the panel members. Disclosure of the panel members’ names might discourage future participation in application evaluations. It is precisely this kind of information that the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5 is designed to protect. See Robert E. Caddell, 20 DOE ¶ 80,164 at 80,683.

2. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure “[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.” 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to “protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information.” Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d. Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

After reviewing HR’s determination letter with respect to Exemption 6, we have concluded that HR provided a generic explanation of how Exemption 6 applies to the responsive information. We find this explanation to be insufficiently informative and short of what is legally required. It is well established that a FOIA determination must contain a reasonably specific justification for withholding material pursuant to a FOIA request. See Deborah L. Abrahamson, 23 DOE ¶ 80,147 (1993). A specific justification is necessary to allow this Office to perform an effective review of the initial agency determination and to permit the requesting party to prepare a reasoned appeal. HR did not adequately explain the reasons why the names of the panel members are exempt from disclosure under the provisions of FOIA Exemption 6. Although we found that HR properly withheld the names of the panel members under Exemption 5, it would follow that there is no need to analyze Exemption 6 any further. However, HR applied Exemption 6 to withhold documents responsive to Item 4 of Mr. Arriola's request. Therefore, we shall remand this matter to HR to either release to Mr. Arriola all of the information responsive to his request (except for the names of the panel members) or to issue a new determination adequately supporting the withholding of the responsive information in the documents pursuant to Exemption 6. If a new determination is issued, HR should include a statement of the reason for denial, a specific explanation of how Exemption 6 applies to the documents withheld and a statement why discretionary release is not appropriate. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1).

B. Item 4 of Appellant's Request

In Item 4 of his request, Mr. Arriola requested "copies of Standard Forms 50-B, "Notification of Personnel Action", for the selected employee, since his/her employment, transfer, or detail with the Department of Energy." In response to this request, DOE provided Mr. Arriola with the SF-50 for the SES Career Appointment of Selectee and withheld certain personal information pursuant to Exemption 6. Mr. Arriola asserts that he was not provided with all of the Standard Forms 50-B for the selected employee.

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing Item 4 of Mr. Arriola's request, we contacted officials at HR to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Item 4 of Mr. Arriola's request might exist. HR informed us that it instituted a search of its files and located one document responsive to Mr. Arriola's request. It further informed us that it found no other documents responsive to Mr. Arriola's request. See January 16, 2001 Record of Telephone Conversation between Marilyn Greene, HR and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA. Given the facts presented to us and the nature of the HR records, we find that HR conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Mr. Arriola's request.

C. Item 5 of Appellant's Request

In Item 5 of Mr. Arriola's request, he requested "copies of all documentation having to do with the transfer, detail, or assignment of the selected employee to the Department of Energy and the identification of personnel responsible for making the decision to transfer, detail, or assign the selected employee to the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security." HR provided Mr. Arriola with various responsive documents and information. In its determination letter, HR stated that the final copy of the "Reimbursable Interagency Agreement Between the U.S. Department of Energy and the Central Intelligence Agency" will be provided to Mr. Arriola when it becomes available. Mr. Arriola asserts that this response is "unacceptable" and argues that the "DOE is required to prepare reimbursable agreements for detailees at the time they are assigned to the DOE." See Appeal Letter at 2. After contacting officials at HR, we were informed that it is not in possession of the Interagency Agreement Mr. Arriola seeks. HR further informed us that the Central Intelligence Agency never sent the agreement back to the DOE. It is now in the process of attempting to locate the agreement. Based on our discussions, we are satisfied that HR is acting in good faith, that the document is not currently in DOE's possession and that HR will provide Mr. Arriola with the interagency agreement when it becomes available.

D. Item 9 of Appellant's Request

Finally, Mr. Arriola appeals HR's response to Item 9 of his initial request in which he asks for "copies of any Department of Energy statements or news releases announcing or responding to newspaper or other public comments, including comments made by Notra Trulock, on the selected employee's identification as the person to replace him as the Director of the Office of Intelligence." In its determination letter, HR stated that no responsive documents or information was available in the Office of Human Resources, and it forwarded Mr. Arriola's request to the Office of Public Affairs for their direct response. Mr. Arriola asserts that he has yet to be contacted by the Office of Public Affairs. We contacted HR to ascertain the status of this portion of Mr. Arriola's request. That office informed us that they would check on the status of this request with the Office of Public Affairs and contact Mr. Arriola as soon as possible.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we have concluded that HR properly applied Exemption 5 to the names of the panel members. However, we found that HR's determination letter with respect to Exemption 6 was insufficiently informative. Therefore, we shall remand this matter to HR to either release to Mr. Arriola all of the information responsive to his request (except for the names of the panel members) or to issue a new determination adequately supporting the withholding of the documents pursuant to Exemption 6. We also find that HR acted properly with respect to the remainder of the request.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Gilbert M. Arriola on November 20, 2000, Case Number VFA-0631, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Deparment of Energy, Office of Human Resource Management, which should issue a new determination with respect to the application of Exemption 6 in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeals

Names of Petitioners:Neil Mock and Scott Lebow

Dates of Filings: December 4, 2000

December 14, 2000

Case Numbers: VFA-0632

VFA-0637

On December 4, and December 14, 2000, Neil Mock and Scott Lebow (the Appellants) filed Appeals from two final determinations that the Idaho Operations Office (DOE-ID) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on October 25 and December 1, 2000. Those determinations concerned requests for information the Appellants submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determinations, a number of documents were released to the Appellants in their entirety, other documents were released with portions redacted, and a number of documents were withheld in their entirety. In these Appeals, the Appellants are challenging DOE-ID's withholding and redaction of a limited number of the over 150 documents involved in the requests. In addition, the Appellants are challenging DOE-ID's determination that subcontractor personnel files are not agency records. If granted, this Appeal would require DOE-ID to produce the subject documents in their entirety.

I. Background

A brief background to the underlying facts will be useful in understanding the cases, which are being consolidated because of the similar subject matter for consideration in this determination. In August 1995, the Appellants filed claims with the DOE-ID Contractor Employee Protection Program pursuant to 10 C.F.R. Part 708, alleging that Lockheed Martin Idaho Technologies Company (Lockheed), the prime contractor at Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory (INEEL), and Coleman Research Company (Coleman), a subcontractor at INEEL, had retaliated against them for disclosing that Coleman and Lockheed had not complied with environmental statutes and the terms of their contracts with DOE. Once a complaint is filed under this program, the first step is to attempt to informally resolve the dispute. 10 C.F.R. § 708.7. DOE-ID requested that Lockheed and Coleman provide a response to the whistleblower complaints. Appeal Letter dated December 4, 2000, from Debra A. Hill, Osborn Maledon, Attorney for Appellants, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (December 4, 2000 Appeal Letter).

In formulating their response, Coleman and Lockheed interviewed a number of employees. The attempt at informal resolution was unsuccessful, and the matter was referred to DOE Headquarters under the process outlined in the regulations. See 10 C.F.R. § 708.7(c). In two letters dated June 12, 2000,(1) the Appellants requested an extensive amount of information pursuant to the FOIA concerning their Employee Concerns files and their whistleblower complaints. Request Letter dated June 12, 2000, from Debra A. Hill, Osborn Maledon, Attorney for Appellants, to Carl R. Robertson, Freedom of Information Officer, DOE-ID; Request Letter dated June 12, 2000, from Debra A. Hill, Osborn Maledon, Attorney for Appellants, to FOIA/Privacy Act Division, DOE Headquarters. Among the documents requested were the Appellants' personnel files at DOE-ID, Lockheed, and Coleman. Id. In order to provide the information to the Appellants more quickly, DOE-ID issued two determinations; the first determination dealt with a portion of the responsive information and the second determination dealt with the remainder of the responsive information, most of which was housed in DOE-ID archives. The October 25, 2000 Determination Letter released a number of documents but withheld others in their entirety relying on Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated October 25, 2000, from Nicole Brooks, FOI Officer, DOE-ID, to Debra A. Hill, Esq., Osborn Maledon, Attorney for Appellants (October 25, 2000 Determination Letter). The December 1, 2000 determination released a number of documents to the Appellants, but withheld their Coleman personnel files. Determination Letter dated December 1, 2000, from Nicole Brooks, FOI Officer, DOE-ID, to Debra A. Hill, Esq., Osborn Maledon, Attorney for the Appellants (December 1, 2000 Determination Letter). As an initial matter, DOE-ID noted that the personnel records were not in its possession. Id. Secondly, DOE-ID found that the documents are not agency records under the contract with Lockheed. Id.

On December 4 and 14, 2000, the Appellants filed these Appeals. Initially, in the December 4, 2000 Appeal, Case No. VFA-0632, the Appellants challenge DOE-ID's withholding of Documents 12-17, 28-30, 59, 82-111, and 113-116 under both Exemptions 5 and 6. December 4, 2000 Appeal Letter. The Appellants claim there is not sufficient information to determine whether the documents can be withheld under Exemption 5. Id. Further, the Appellants claim that the Exemption must be construed as narrowly as possible and that DOE-ID did not indicate that the documents contained opinions or deliberations by which DOE-ID formulated a decision. Id. at 2. The Appellants also challenge the withholdings under Exemption 6, claiming that the only individuals with a privacy interest would be the Appellants. Id. at 3. Second, the Appellants challenge the withholding of Documents 19 and 21 under Exemption 5 (the attorney-client privilege).(2) Id. at 4, 5. The Appellants claim that since these documents were authored by a Coleman attorney and addressed to a Coleman employee, and vice versa, respectively, and in the possession of DOE, the attorney-client privilege has been waived. Id. Third, the Appellants challenge the redactions made to Documents 45, 46, and 48, claiming that one of the Appellants has already seen the unredacted documents and, in addition, the redactions are inconsistent. Id. at 5. Fourth, the Appellants challenge the withholding of Document 124 under Exemptions 5 and 6, claiming that DOE-ID has failed to provide sufficient information about the document to show that it is exempt from disclosure under the FOIA. Id.

Finally, in their December 14, 2000 Appeal, Case No. VFA-0637, the Appellants challenge DOE-ID's finding that the Coleman personnel files are not agency records. Appeal Letter dated December 14, 2000, from Debra A. Hill, Osborn Maledon, Attorney for Appellants, to Director, OHA, DOE.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party … in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in a civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

1. Deliberative Process

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958)).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications v. Department of the Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In addition to providing categories of records exempt from mandatory disclosure, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

DOE-ID has failed to provide a sufficient justification that the information contained in Documents 12-17, 28-30, 59, 82-111, 113-116, and 124 should be withheld under Exemption 5. These documents are primarily handwritten notes of interviews with personnel. October 25, 2000 Determination Letter. As an initial matter, we note that although these records were apparently generated by either Lockheed or Coleman, the documents could still be withheld under Exemption 5, if the documents became part of DOE-ID's deliberative process and were used or relied upon to formulate a DOE decision or policy. However, DOE-ID's determination is insufficient for us to concede that is the case here. DOE-ID must specifically address whether each of these documents was predecisional and deliberative. If a document meets this test, it may be withheld provided its release would stifle the communication within the agency or harm the agency's deliberative process. DOE-ID did not explain fully how Exemption 5 applies to these documents. In this connection, I note that after DOE-ID referred the whistleblower matter to DOE Headquarters, DOE Headquarters dismissed the Appellants' complaint because they had filed an action in Idaho District Court. Therefore, no final decision was issued in this matter that would have required DOE to rely upon or use these documents. However, the fact that no final determination was issued does not necessarily mean that the documents are not deliberative. If they demonstrate the normal give-and-take of an agency decision, they could be considered exempt under the FOIA. As an additional matter, DOE-ID did not segregate the factual information from these documents. Therefore, we will remand these documents for a new determination fully explaining how Exemption 5 applies to these documents. Even if DOE-ID finds that Exemption 5 applies, it must segregate the factual information from the documents.(3)

2. Attorney Work Product

The attorney work-product privilege serves to "provide working attorneys with a ?zone of privacy' within which to think, plan, weigh facts and evidence . . . , and prepare legal theories." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 864. It protects documents prepared by an attorney in contemplation of litigation. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 509-10 (1947); Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3). This privilege is also applicable to material prepared by a non-attorney who was supervised by an attorney. Nishnic v. Department of Justice, 671 F. Supp. 771, 772- 73 (D.D.C. 1987). Finally, because factual work-product is not "routinely" or "normally" discoverable, it can also be protected under Exemption 5. See United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 792, 799 (1984) (Weber); FTC v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 19, 26 (1983) (Grolier).

We agree with the Appellants that Documents 19 and 21 cannot be withheld under Exemption 5, because they are letters from a Coleman employee to a Coleman attorney and vice versa, respectively. However, we believe that these documents should be reviewed under Exemption 4 of the FOIA, which extends protection to documents that contain either (A) trade secrets or (B) information which is (1) "commercial or financial," (2) "obtained from a person," and (3) "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Assn. v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks).

We find that Documents 19 and 21 are commercial within the meaning of Exemption 4. Commercial includes anything "pertaining or relating to or dealing with commerce." American Airlines, Inc. v. National Mediation Bd., 588 F.2d 863, 870 (2d Cir. 1978). In addition, the information was obtained from a person, as we consider corporations, such as Coleman, to be persons. Finally, the documents consist of information that is subject to the attorney-client privilege. Communication between a client, in this instance Coleman, and the client's attorney are privileged. The attorney-client privilege protects "confidential communications between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Cent., Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Release of these documents could impair the government's ability to acquire these same types of documents in the future. The contractor could require an agreement in future contracts that this type of information would be contractor records as opposed to agency records, and refuse to allow DOE to see this type of information in the future. Because we are relying on the government impairment prong of Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993), we are not required to obtain the submitter's views as to the application of Exemption 4 to the documents. Although it relied on Exemption 5 for withholding Documents 19 and 21, DOE-ID properly withheld the documents, because they are exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See also Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999); Sowell, Todd, Lafitte and Watson LLC., 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (1999) (Sowell).

DOE-ID applied Exemption 6 to Documents 12-17, 28-30, 59, 82-111, 113-116, and 124, to withhold the names of contractor employees in these handwritten notes. These notes were taken during interviews conducted by Coleman and Lockheed after the Appellants filed their retaliation complaint with DOE-ID.

Applying these standards to the facts of this case, we believe that the individuals named in the handwritten notes have a significant interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their opinions and comments. Whether guaranteed confidentiality or not, these individuals would not want their opinions disseminated to the general public. It is our belief they would expect such opinions to be kept confidential within the confines of the DOE and its contractors. Dissemination of their names would lead to less candor in any whistleblower proceedings in the future. Also, individuals would want to be spared the embarrassment of being named in a whistleblower action. Cappabianca v. Commissioner, United States Customs Service, 847 F. Supp. 1558, 1564 (M.D. Fla. 1994) (witnesses and co-workers have substantial privacy interest in the nondisclosure of their participation in an investigation for Exemption 6 purposes). Therefore, we find that there is a significant privacy interest in the identities of contractor employees.

Next, release of this information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations of the federal government. Although the information might provide insight into the opinions of the Appellants' co-workers, the identity of those individuals who were interviewed would not further the public interest as it would not shed light on the operations of the federal government.

Because there is a significant privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of the withheld information, and because it does not shed light on the operations of government, release of the contractor's employees' names would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. DOE-ID correctly applied Exemption 6 in withholding this information.

DOE-ID also applied Exemption 6 to Documents 45, 46, and 48. The Appellants challenge the redaction of names in these documents on a number of grounds. As an initial matter, the Appellants assert that one of the Appellants has seen two of the documents previously, as part of his employment. Therefore, he knows the documents' content, including the names listed in them. The Appellants argue there is no privacy interest to be protected. However, we note that, according to the FOIA, once a document has been released to one requester pursuant to a FOIA request, the document must be released to subsequent requesters. Therefore, it is immaterial if the Appellant has already seen the documents. The identity of the requester is generally irrelevant when making a FOIA determination. Secondly, the Appellants believe that the redactions are inconsistent because not all names were redacted. However, names of non-supervisory or non-management contractor personnel may be redacted, as is the case with Documents 45 and 48, even when supervisors' names are released. It should be noted that scope of a privacy interest under Exemption 6 will always be dependent on the context in which it has been asserted. Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, 97 F.3d 575, 581 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (Armstrong). For example, civilian federal employees normally have no expectation of privacy concerning their names, titles, and similar information. See 5 C.F.R. § 293.311. However, the name of a federal employee involved in a workplace situation of a sensitive nature might be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. See Armstrong, 97 F.3d at 582 (dicta indicating that FBI might be entitled in certain factual contexts to use a categorical rule protecting the names of FBI agents pursuant to Exemption 6). We agree with DOE-ID that a substantial privacy interest exists in the identities of private citizens due to the great potential that a commercial entity could misappropriate names for commercial purposes. The courts have also reached this conclusion. See Sheet Metal Workers v. Department Of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3d Cir. 1998) (the disclosure of names, social security numbers, or addresses of government contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees' names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identities of these contractor employees.

DOE-ID informs us that no names were redacted from Document 46. However, the copy of the document sent to us by the Appellants does appear to contain redactions. DOE-ID indicated that the original document was highlighted and when copied, the highlighted portions may appear to be redactions. In addition, in its list of documents, DOE-ID indicated that Document 46 contains redactions. On remand, we will order DOE-ID to provide the Appellants with the best available copy of that document, so that they can read those names that are highlighted on the original. We find, however, that DOE-ID properly withheld the names of the non-supervisory or non-management contractor personnel listed on Documents 45 and 48.

C. Agency Records

The Appellants are appealing DOE-ID's determination that the Coleman personnel records are not "agency records." DOE-ID has stated that it does not possess the Coleman personnel records. It has contacted Coleman and asked for the records, but Coleman has declined. We will examine the Appellants' contention that the documents in question are agency records and that DOE-ID should therefore have them.

The FOIA applies to "records" that are maintained by "agencies" within the executive branch of government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). Consequently, the FOIA is applicable only where the requested documents may be considered an "agency record."

The language of the FOIA does not define the term "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting the phrase "agency records," we have applied a two-step analysis for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as Coleman, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch ... or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 & n. 11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, although Coleman was a contractor for Lockheed, the DOE did not conduct extensive, detailed, and day-to-day supervision of its operations. We therefore conclude that Coleman is not an "agency" within the meaning of the FOIA.

Although Coleman is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, its records could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's possession or control at the time of the FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). As stated previously, none of the responsive documents at issue was in the DOE's control or possession at the time of the request. Based on these facts, the documents do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth in Tax Analysts.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the records in question are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "when a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

In 1999, Lockheed transferred management of INEEL to Bechtel BWXT Idaho, LLC (Bechtel). Under the terms of the transfer agreement, Lockheed was to transfer to Bechtel all documents acquired or generated pursuant to the performance of the Lockheed contracts, except records maintained by Lockheed(4) after September 30, 1999, including personnel files of employees transferring to Lockheed Contracts Close Out Offices. 1999 Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory Transfer Agreement dated September 14, 1999, at 5.B., at 3. This would appear to mean that Lockheed, and by reference Coleman, was required to turn over its personnel records to Bechtel. If that had occurred, the records would then be available to DOE-ID. However, DOE-ID does not have the records and, under the FOIA, we cannot order that it produce documents that are not in its possession. There may be remedies at law to obtain such documents, but the FOIA is not one of them.

III. Conclusion

DOE-ID failed to provide sufficient justification for withholding the information contained in Documents 12-17, 28-30, 59, 82-111, 113-116, and 124, under Exemption 5. In addition, DOE-ID did not segregate the factual information from these documents. We will remand for a new determination fully justifying why these documents are exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5 and we will require that DOE-ID segregate the factual material. Although DOE-ID relied on Exemption 5 and the attorney-client privilege to withhold Documents 19 and 21, we believe these documents should be withheld under Exemption 4 and the attorney-client privilege. Therefore, we uphold DOE-ID's withholding of Documents 19 and 21. DOE-ID properly invoked Exemption 6 to withhold names and other personnel identifiers in Documents 12-17, 28-30, 45, 48, 59, 82-111, 113-116, and 124 and Documents 45 and 48. It should provide the Appellants with the best possible copy of Document 46, so that they can read the names highlighted in the original. Finally, DOE-ID cannot produce the Coleman personnel records because it does not have possession of them and did not have them at the time of the request. Based on the reasons stated above, we will remand the Appeal to DOE-ID to review Documents 12-17, 28-30, 59, 82-111, 113- 116, and 124. DOE-ID should segregate all factual information and issue a new determination fully justifying their withholding under Exemption 5. It must also produce its best copy of Document 46. The Appeal is denied in all other respects.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on December 4, 2000, by Neil Mock and Scott Lebow, Case No. VFA-0632, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office of the Department of Energy which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) The Appeal filed on December 14, 2000, by Neil Mock and Scott Lebow, Case No. VFA-0637, is hereby denied.

(1)One letter was sent to the FOI Office at DOE-ID. The other letter was sent to FOIA/Privacy Act Division at DOE Headquarters. Since the requests were almost identical, the Appellants agreed that DOE-ID could handle the requests. Determination Letter dated October 25, 2000, from Nicole Brooks, FOI Officer, DOE-ID, to Debra A. Hill, Esq., Osborn Maledon, Attorney for Appellants (October 25, 2000 Determination Letter)

(2)The Appellants also challenge the withholding of Document 18. However, Document 18 will not be considered in this Appeal as DOE-ID has determined that it should be released to the Appellants.

(3)We note that the handwritten notes that DOE-ID withheld are virtually illegible. In order to withhold any portions of the document under Exemption 5, DOE-ID must be able to read them well enough to determine which portions are segregable and releasable and which portions fall within the protection of Exemption 5.

(4)In this contract, Lockheed is referred to as LMITCO, a term which included its Teaming Partners and other Team Members. Although the Appellants argue that Coleman is not necessarily included in that definition, December 4, 2000 Appeal Letter at 2, DOE-ID states that the definition included Coleman. Memorandum from Nicole Brooks, FOI Officer, DOE-ID, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE, dated December 12, 2000. We believe that since DOE-ID is the most knowledgeable party about this, and we accept its assertion that Coleman was covered by the transfer agreement.

January 29, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Amigos Bravos

Date of Filing:December 6, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0634

On December 6, 2000, Amigos Bravos filed an Appeal from a determination the Freedom of Information Officer and the Freedom of Information Denying Official of the Albuquerque Operations Office (FOIA Officials) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on October 31, 2000. In that determination, the FOIA Officials denied a request for information that Amigos Bravos filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA generally requires that a federal agency release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency either may or must withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

In Amigos Bravos' request for information, the firm sought copies of documents regarding the participation of the DOE and/or Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) in the 1998 Triennial Review of the New Mexico Water Quality Standards. In the FOIA Officials' determination letter, they responded to the firm's request for numerous documents by releasing some documents, redacting others, and informing Amigos Bravos that they could not locate others. In this Appeal, Amigos Bravos asks us to order the release of documents the FOIA Officials determined were not agency records, order the release of information the FOIA Officials withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemption 6, and order a further search for other documents. In accordance with the Amigos Bravos Appeal, we have reviewed all of these requests.

Analysis

1. Adequacy of the Search

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

We have investigated the DOE's search made in response to the Amigos Bravos request for "all documents regarding LANL employees who participated in the 1998 Triennial Review." In their determination letter, the FOIA Officials stated that neither the DOE nor LANL had any responsive documents. Amigos Bravos contends that "numerous" LANL employees attended the public hearings over eleven days for the 1998 Triennial Review and that at least one of these attendees must have kept an accounting of items such as hours of attendance, communication costs, per diem amounts and travel expenses. A FOIA contact from the DOE's Los Alamos Area Office (FOIA contact) informed us that she reinvestigated whether any responsive documents exist. In her reinvestigation, she confirmed that the DOE does not have any attendance records, per diem reimbursement claims for travel expenses, or any other responsive documents. She stated that the hearings were held in Santa Fe, New Mexico, only 27 miles from LANL, and that LANL employees do not typically file for reimbursement of expenses for trips of this distance. See January 2, 2001 Record of Telephone Conversation between Leonard M. Tao, OHA Attorney, and Lisa Cummings, Los Alamos Area Office Attorney.

Amigos Bravos also requested all documents provided to or received from persons providing legal and consulting services. The FOIA Officials did not identify specific documents, but stated that responsive documents concerning this request "are publicly available at the LANL Reading Room in Los Alamos." Amigos Bravos informed us that it has reviewed the documents in the LANL Reading Room, but it asks us to require that the DOE clarify whether all responsive documents are in the LANL Reading Room. During our investigation, the FOIA contact stated to us that other responsive documents exist outside of the LANL Reading Room. See Memorandum of December 18, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Leonard M. Tao, OHA Attorney/Advisor, and Lisa Cummings, Los Alamos Area Office Attorney. Accordingly, we will remand this portion of the Amigos Bravos appeal and direct that the FOIA Officials identify responsive documents located outside of the LANL Reading Room and either release the responsive documents or provide a detailed explanation for withholding.

2. Exemption 6

The FOIA Officials withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 the names of two contractor employees and an employee's "z" number. The FOIA contact informed us that every LANL employee and many LANL visitors are assigned a "z" number upon entering the facility. Amigos Bravos contends that the DOE's redactions of these names and "z" number are unlawful because the disclosure of this information "would not constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6." The firm states that release of the withheld information will reveal which LANL program is providing support to the New Mexico Municipal League, a private association of municipalities.

As an initial matter, the FOIA contact informed us that the FOIA Officials mistakenly redacted the employee's "z" number. See Memorandum of December 18, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Leonard M. Tao, OHA Attorney/Advisor, and Lisa Cummings, Los Alamos Area Office Attorney. Accordingly, we will remand this portion of the Amigos Bravos appeal and direct that the FOIA Officials release the redacted "z" number to Amigos Bravos. However, as described below, we find that the FOIA Officials properly withheld the names of contractor employees pursuant to Exemption 6.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. See Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy . See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990).

A. The Privacy Interest

The FOIA Officials determined that there was a privacy interest in the identities of the contractor employees. We agree that a substantial privacy interest exists in the identities of private citizens due to the great potential that a commercial entity could misappropriate names for commercial purposes. The courts have also reached this conclusion. See Sheet Metal Workers v. Department of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3d Cir. 1998) (the disclosure of names, social security numbers, or addresses of government contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees' names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identities of these contractor employees.

B. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). In its Appeal, Amigos Bravos states that release of the withheld information will reveal which LANL program is providing support to the New Mexico Municipal League, a private association of municipalities.

We find that there is a minimal public interest in the release of the withheld information. Amigos Bravos has not demonstrated how the disclosure of specific names of non-federal employees will reveal anything of importance regarding the DOE or how it would serve the public interest. Moreover, Amigos Bravos has not shown how revealing the association of a LANL program to the New Mexico Municipal League alone will benefit the public interest at large. Also, revealing the names of private citizens will not contribute significantly to the public's understanding of government activities. Accordingly, we agree with the FOIA Officials and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the names withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

C. The Balancing Test

In determining whether documents may be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); SafeCard Services v. Securities and Exchange Comm'n, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991). We have concluded above that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of the names of the contractor employees. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the names withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the named individuals.

3. Agency Records

The FOIA Officials determined that various documents Amigos Bravos sought were not “agency records” and thus not subject to the FOIA, under the criteria set out by the federal courts. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f) (describing the scope of the term “agency” under the FOIA).(1) Once the FOIA Officials made this determination, the regulations required them to consider whether the records that did not meet these criteria were nonetheless subject to release under the DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e); see 59 Fed. Reg. 63,884 (December 12, 1994). The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). Therefore, when the DOE deemed that the requested records failed to qualify as "agency records," they might still have been subject to release if the contract between the DOE and the LANL contractor provided that the documents in question are the property of the agency.

Most of the requested documents that the FOIA Officials deemed were not “agency records” concerned legal and consulting services that LANL either used or proposed using. In their determination letter, the FOIA Officials stated that these legal and consulting services documents are “legal records” that the contract between the DOE and LANL clearly defines as being the property of the contractor. However, in our discussions with the FOIA contact, she informed us that the DOE may have made a mistake in their classification of some of these requested documents. In fact, she stated that some of these legal and consulting services records may not in fact be “legal records.” See Memorandum of December 18, 2000 Telephone Conversation between Leonard M. Tao, OHA Attorney/Advisor, and Lisa Cummings, Los Alamos Area Office Attorney. Since the FOIA contact acknowledged that a mistake may have been made in the DOE’s determination that responsive documents were “legal records” and thus the property of the contractor, we must remand this matter for a more thorough review. Accordingly, we order that the DOE identify all documents responsive to the Amigos Bravos request for “legal and consulting services” records and either release responsive documents or provide a detailed explanation for withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal that Amigos Bravos filed on December 6, 2000, Case No. VFA-0634, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Freedom of Information Act Officials of the Albuquerque Operations Office of the Department of Energy for further action in accordance with the directions set forth in this Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0635, 28 DOE ¶ 80,157

March 29, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Woolcott & Co.

Date of Filing: December 11, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0635

On December 11, 2000, H. Jay Spiegel & Associates (Spiegel), attorneys for Woolcott & Co. (Woolcott), filed an Appeal from a determination issued to Woolcott by the Department of Energy's Schenectady Naval Reactors Office (Schenectady). In that determination, Schenectady released some documents in their entirety, released some documents with redactions, and withheld some documents in their entirety. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On June 25, 1999, Woolcott submitted a FOIA request to DOE for copies of "any documents, research materials, submission, grant applications, or any other material related to U.S. Statutory Invention Registration No. H1115." Attachment 1 to Letter from the Office of Naval Reactors (DOE/NR) to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) Staff Attorney (January 31, 2001). (1) DOE's Headquarters FOIA Division then transferred the request to Schenectady. (2) Schenectady searched its files and released 279 pages of responsive material. Id. However, Schenectady withheld some material under FOIA Exemptions 3, 4 and 6. Letter from Schenectady to Woolcott (November 9, 2000) (Determination). On December 11, 2000, Spiegel filed an Appeal on behalf of Woolcott. Letter from Spiegel to Director, OHA (December 11, 2000) (Appeal). In the Appeal, Spiegel requested that Schenectady compare the responsive material with U. S. Statutory Invention Registration No. H1115, a public document, and release any responsive material found in its possession that was also found in the public document. Id.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

In its determination, Schenectady stated that it withheld small portions of two documents under Exemption 6 in order to protect the privacy rights of the private citizens mentioned in those documents. Determination at 3-4. The agency redacted the home address and home phone number of a non-Federal employee from one document, and also redacted from a second document the names and home addresses of contractor personnel, along with the amounts of the cash awards given to these individuals. According to Schenectady, those individuals are "entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions." Determination at 3. Schenectady further explained that because the requester knew the identity of one of the cash award recipients, disclosure of the amount of the award (all recipients received the same amount) could enable the requester to determine how much cash that individual had received. Attachment 10 to Letter from DOE/NR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (January 31, 2000) (Attachment 10).

This office reviewed unredacted copies of the two documents. We find that Schenectady properly withheld the names and addresses of the private citizens listed in the material, and also properly withheld the amount of the cash awards. This office has previously held that disclosure of the amount of a cash award to a requester who knows the identity of a recipient would constitute a "serious invasion of personal privacy." See Jurgis Paliulionis, 27 DOE ¶ 80,235 (1999) (Paliulionis).

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest in the identity of a private citizen, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). Spiegel has not offered any evidence of a public interest in the disclosure of the withheld material. Therefore, we find that there is little or no public interest in the disclosure of the identity of the private citizens and of the amount of their cash awards.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of the responsive information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U. S. at 762 (1989); Safecard Services, Inc. v. Securities Exchange Commission, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

We have concluded above that there is a cognizable privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that Spiegel has not provided any evidence to justify finding a substantial public interest in the disclosure of the withheld information. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the identities of the private citizens and their cash awards is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of those individuals. See Paliulionis, 27 DOE at 80,846.

B. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (1) trade secrets or (2) information that is "commercial or financial, obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Association v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). Information a submitter provides to an agency voluntarily is "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass).

We have reviewed the documents withheld under this exemption (a letter with three attached technical drawings) and find that the deleted information was properly withheld under the Critical Mass test. First, the information withheld was clearly commercial information. The withheld material referred to a new product that had been designed for commercial application. Second, the information was obtained from the manufacturer, a corporation. We have previously found that corporations are deemed "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4. See Myers Bigel Sibley & Sajovec, 27 DOE ¶ 80,225 (1999). Finally, we find that the information withheld was properly considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4. The submitter provided the information voluntarily to Schenectady. Attachment 10 at 1. Material submitted voluntarily will be protected from disclosure by Exemption 4 if the material contains information that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. See Vladeck, Waldman, Elias & Engelhard, P.C. , 27 DOE ¶ 80,230 (1999).

After reviewing the withheld material, we find that the information that Foster-Miller, the manufacturer of the product, provided to Schenectady is not of the type that a company would customarily make available to the public. The documents in question contain specific details of a project that, if released, could cause substantial harm to Foster-Miller's commercial success. In fact, the technology under discussion is subject to three pending legal cases. Letter from Foster-Miller to Director, DOE/NR (September 26, 2000). None of the design drawings are available to the public. Id. Thus, in view of the competitive environment in which Foster-Miller operates, we agree with the company's argument that public release of any proprietary information could cause substantial harm to the company's competitive position. The information contained in the letter, when viewed in conjunction with the design drawings, has great commercial value to the company. Therefore, we conclude that the information withheld is properly subject to withholding under FOIA Exemption 4. (3)

C. Exemption 3

Exemption 3 of the FOIA allows agencies to withhold information that is "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute [other than the FOIA itself] provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). As articulated by the U.S. Supreme Court in CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 167 (1985), application of Exemption 3 is a two-step process. First, an agency must determine whether the statutory provision in question satisfies the foregoing requirements of Exemption 3, and if so, the agency must next determine whether the subject information falls within the purview of that statutory provision. Id. See also Kelly, Anderson & Associates, Inc., Case No. VFA-0638, 28 DOE ¶ 80,137 (2001). In its determination, Schenectady used the protection of two statutes, 10 U.S.C. § 130 and 22 U.S.C. § 2778, to withhold a technical drawing (in its entirety) and a portion of another document under Exemption 3.

1. The Technical Data Statute

The first statute used by Schenectady ("technical data" statute) prohibits disclosure of "any technical data with military or space application in the possession of, or under the control of, the Department of Defense, if such data may not be exported lawfully outside the United States without an approval, authorization, or license" granted under specified statutes. 10 U.S.C. § 130 (a). The term "technical data with military or space application" is defined as "any blueprints, drawings, . . . or other technical information that can be used, or be adapted for use, to design, engineer, produce, manufacture, operate, repair, overhaul, or reproduce any military or space equipment or technology concerning such equipment." 10 U.S.C. § 130(c).

The "technical data" statute has been found to satisfy subpart (B) of the Exemption 3 criteria because it refers to sufficiently "particular types of matter to be withheld." Chenkin v. Department of the Army, No. 93-494, slip op. at 7 (M.D. Pa. Jan. 14, 1994); affirmed, 61 F.3d 894 (3d Cir. 1995) (Chenkin); Colonial Trading Corp. v. Department of the Navy, 735 F. Supp. 429, 431 (D.D.C. 1990). It therefore qualifies as a statute upon which a claim of withholding under Exemption 3 may be based. See Keith E. Loomis, 25 DOE ¶ 80,183 (1996) (Loomis).

2. The Arms Export Control Act

Schenectady also based its use of Exemption 3 on the Arms Export Control Act. Under this statute, the President is authorized to control the import or export of "defense articles and defense services" and is also "authorized to designate those items which shall be considered as defense articles and defense services." 22 U.S.C. §2778(a)(1). These items cannot be exported without special licensing. Id. at (a)(2), (a)(3), (b). Items designated as "defense articles and defense services" are found on the United States Munitions List ("the List"). Id.; 22 C.F.R. § 121.1. Among the restricted items on the List are "technical data and defense services," "naval nuclear propulsion plants" and facilities and "any machinery, device, component or equipment specifically developed, designed or modified for use in such plants or facilities." 22 C.F.R. § 121.1, Category VI (Vessels of War and Special Naval Equipment), Sections (e)-(g).

The United States Munitions List defines "technical data and defense services directly related to the defense articles" mentioned above as including information required for the design, development and manufacture of defense articles, including blueprints, drawings, plans, instructions and documentation. 22 C.F.R. § 121.1, Category VI, Section (g); 22 C.F.R. § 120.10(a)(1). Thus, we find that the Arms Export Control Act, through its reference to the United States Munitions List, also satisfies subpart (B) of the Exemption 3 criteria because it refers to sufficiently "particular types of matters to be withheld." See Chenkin.

3. Use of Exemption 3 Was Justified

Consistent with Executive Order 12344, 3 C.F.R. § 128 (1982), reprinted in 42 U.S.C. § 7158 (1995), and statutorily prescribed by the Department of Defense Authorization Act, P.L. 98-525, 98 Stat. 2492 (1984), the Director of DOE/NR has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving classified Naval Reactors information and Naval Nuclear Propulsion Information (NNPI). See Loomis, 25 DOE at 80,706 (1996). Upon referral of this Appeal from OHA, the Director of NR reviewed the responsive material and concluded that the withheld information is

Naval Nuclear Propulsion Information (NNPI). Determination at 2. The withheld information contains details of the design of steam generator equipment, which meets the definition for non-releasable sensitive military technical data. Attachment 10. The federal regulations treat NNPI as technical data with military application of the sort envisioned in 10 C.F.R. § 130. See, e.g., 15 C.F.R. §§ 778.1, 778.5. The withheld material is also properly classified under Category VI, Sections (e)-(g) of the U.S. Munitions List. 22 C.F.R. § 121.1. Consequently, information accurately identified as NNPI is exempt from mandatory disclosure to the public under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. Determination at 1-2. (4)

DOE/NR has stated that this material was not disclosed to the general public in the public document mentioned by Spiegel (U.S. Statutory Invention Registration No. H1115). Id. DOE/NR indicated that because it would be unable to control further dissemination of the responsive material if it were released to any member of the public, such disclosure would be "tantamount to disclosure to foreign nationals." Attachment 10 at 2. We have no evidence that Woolcott has the license required by the Arms Export Control Act to export the responsive information. Disclosure to foreign nationals is also prohibited by the technical data statute, and requires continued protection from release. Id.; see also Loomis, 25 DOE at 80,706 (consideration of the public interest is not permitted where non- disclosure is required by statute).

However, after a second review of the withheld material, DOE/NR has agreed to release additional responsive material. Letter from DOE/NR to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (March 23, 2001). DOE/NR recommends the release of the last three sentences in Section 9 of Attachment 8, and also portions of a redacted sentence in Section 10. A newly redacted version of Attachment 8, disclosing all releasable information, will be provided to the appellant under separate cover.

D. Segregable Information

The FOIA also requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material).

As regards the letter and drawings withheld under Exemption 4, the determination letter did not identify any segregable, non-exempt factual material. This office has reviewed the documents. The letter is very brief and presents most of the product information in the form of "bullets." Thus, we find that the small amount of segregable, non-exempt factual material in the letter is inextricably intertwined with the exempt information. Our review disclosed no segregable, non-exempt factual material in the drawings. Therefore, we find that Schenectady's withholding under Exemption 4 was correct. Finally, we find that Schenectady properly released all segregable, non-exempt factual material under Exemption 6.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Woolcott & Co. on December 11, 2000, OHA Case No. VFA-0635, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)U. S. Statutory Invention Registration No. H1115, filed with the U. S. Patent Office in July 1990, describes a robot arm apparatus provided for inspecting and/or maintaining the interior of a steam generator. The U.S. government has rights to the invention pursuant to a contract between DOE and General Electric Company. Exhibit 2 to Letter from Spiegel to Director, OHA (December 11, 2000).

(2)Schenectady reports to DOE/NR in Washington, D.C. DOE/NR has dual agency status–the Director of the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program (within the Department of Defense) is also the DOE's Deputy Assistant Secretary for Naval Reactors. See Memorandum from Acting Director of Administration and Management, DOE to Director of Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program (June 9, 1993); Memorandum from Deputy Director for Naval Reactors to Assistant Secretary for Human Resources and Administration, DOE (Aug. 3, 1993).

(3) In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See Greenpeace USA, 26 DOE ¶ 80,219 (1997).

(4)It is not clear whether DOE/NR acted as a Department of Defense entity or a DOE entity in withholding the information under 10 U.S.C. §130, the "technical data" statute. That statute refers to material in the possession or control of the Department of Defense. OHA does not have jurisdiction over appeals regarding information that is in the possession or control of another agency. Nonetheless, there is no such restriction on information under the Arms Export Control Act, which also satisfies the requirements of Exemption 3.

January 10, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. Engineering Services

Date of Filing: December 11, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0636

On December 11, 2000, R.E.V. Engineering Services ("R.E.V. Eng. Services" or "the Firm") filed an Appeal from a partial determination issued on November 30, 2000, by the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In this Appeal, the Firm contends that Rocky Flats has failed to acknowledge or respond to its FOIA request in a timely fashion and conducted an inadequate search for a non-classified document.(1)

I. BACKGROUND

By letter dated July 11, 2000, the Firm filed a FOIA request with Rocky Flats seeking a copy of a document that is commonly known as the "1999 SSSP." On November 30, 2000, the Rocky Flats FOIA/Privacy Act Officer wrote a letter that responded to the Firm's FOIA request by stating, in relevant part, that:

. . . we have located the classified document known as the ?1999 SSSP' . . . No unclassified version of this document exists. The Departments of Energy's processes dictate two mandatory reviews of classified documents that are responsive to FOIA requests. They are time intensive and taking up to two years for our Washington, D.C. office to complete The withheld classified document has been determined to be responsive to your request, therefore the field local classification staff will review the document first. After this review is completed, the document will be sent to the Document Declassification Division, Office of Security and Emergency Operations, Washington, D.C. for the final determination review . . .

On December 11, 2000, the Firm filed an Appeal in which it alleges that Rocky Flats had (1) failed to acknowledge or respond to its FOIA request within the time required by law, and (2) failed to conduct an adequate search for an unclassified, electronic version of the 1999 SSSP. In support of its argument that the search performed was inadequate, the Firm states that the electronic version of the 1999 SSSP was marked for classification at the time that it was prepared, and that the electronic document could provide a completely unclassified record with little effort.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Failure to Process a FOIA Request in a Timely Fashion

The portion of the Firm's Appeal that is based on the failure to process a FOIA request within the time specified by law must be dismissed because OHA does not have the jurisdiction to decide this issue. Section 1004.8(a) of the DOE regulations grants OHA jurisdiction to consider FOIA appeals only in the following circumstances:

When the Authorizing Officer has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request . . . or when the Freedom of Information Officer has denied a request for waiver of fees.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Section 1004.8(a) has been construed to confer jurisdiction on OHA only when an Authorizing Official has issued a determination that (1) denies a request for records, (2) states there are no records responsive to the FOIA request, or (3) denies a request for a waiver of fees. Suffolk County, 17 DOE ¶ 80,111 at 80,524 (1988). OHA has consistently held that Section 1004.8(a) does not confer jurisdiction when the requester has not received an initial determination from an Authorizing Official, or when an appeal is based on the agency's failure to process a FOIA within the time specified by law. John H. Hnatio, 13 DOE ¶ 80,119 at 80,566 (1985) (dismissing appeal because no determination issued); Tulsa Tribune, 11 DOE ¶ 80,161 at 80,741 (1984) (no administrative remedy for agency's non-compliance with a timeliness requirement).(2) Accordingly, the portion of the Appeal that deals with the agency's failure to process a FOIA request within the time specified by law must be dismissed.

B. Reasonableness of the Search for Unclassified Records

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted the Rocky Flats FOIA/Privacy Act Officer to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed for the unclassified document. Based on information received from the Classification Officer for the DOE Rocky Flats Field Office, the FOIA/Privacy Act Officer informed us that no electronic or paper unclassified version of the "1999 SSSP" document exists. See E-Mail Message from Mary Hammack to Linda Lazarus (January 4, 2001). Although the FOIA/ Privacy Act Officer indicated that the electronic version of the classified document had been "portion marked," she also stated that there was no evidence that the interrelationships of the various paragraphs to each other had been reviewed for classified information. The FOIA/Privacy Act Officer further informed us that no part of a classified document may be released before the DOE declassification process has been completed. Id.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that Rocky Flats conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover an unclassified version of the 1999 SSSP. Therefore, we must deny this part of the Firm's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) As set forth above, the Appeal filed by R.E.V. Engineering Services on December 11, 2000, is dismissed in part and denied in part.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: January 10, 2001

(1)In its Appeal, the Firm also requested that we order Rocky Flats to waive all charges that relate to this FOIA request because of the significant public interest in the subject, or in the alternative, refrain from charging fees for the time that the agency will spend reviewing these records. We dismiss both these issues on procedural grounds. First, we are without jurisdiction to determine whether all charges should be waived because the Firm never asked Rocky Flats for such a waiver, and, under 10 C.F.R. §1004.8(a), our jurisdiction is limited to issues that have already been determined. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between David Ridenour, R.E.V. Eng. Services and Linda Lazarus, OHA Staff Attorney (December 12, 2000). Second, the part of the Appeal that involves the propriety of the proposed charges for the agency review of documents will be dismissed as moot because the Rocky Flats FOIA Officer has indicated that a new determination will be issued on the calculation of fees. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Mary Hammack, FOIA/Privacy Act Officer and Linda Lazarus (January 4, 2001).

(2)Because it did not receive a timely response to its FOIA request, the Firm is considered to have exhausted its administrative remedies. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(d)(4); 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(c). Accordingly, under the FOIA, the Firm may seek the release of the requested documents in federal district court. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). However, the agency's failure to comply with the ten day time limit does not result in a waiver of any FOIA exemptions. See Suffolk County, 17 DOE ¶ 80,111 at 80,524 (1988) ; James E. Davis, 11 DOE ¶ 80,151 at 80,689 (1983).

January 17, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner:Kelly, Anderson & Associates, Inc.

Date of Filing:December 19, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0638

This decision addresses a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) appeal filed by Kelly, Anderson & Associates, Inc. (Kelly) pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, Kelly's appeal will be granted and remanded for a new determination in accordance with this decision.

I. Background

With nine exemptions, the FOIA requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a), (b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3, .10(b). On September 13, 2000, Kelly filed a FOIA request with the FOIA/Privacy Act Division of the DOE Headquarters, seeking a copy of the winning proposal (the winning proposal) that resulted in contract DE-AT01-00AD00165 (the resultant contract). In response, a Procurement Analyst for Headquarters' Procurement Services, Corporate Services Division (the Analyst) withheld the requested document and issued a determination letter to Kelly on November 17, 2000, which stated:

The costs proposals are withheld in their entirety. They are authorized to be withheld pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA, as authorized by the National Defense Authorization Act of 1997 (NDAA), Pub. L. No. 104-201, 821, 110 Stat. 2422, 2609 (1997). The NDAA contains a section prohibiting making a proposal in the possession or control of an executive agency available to any person under the [FOIA].

On December 19, 2000, Kelly appealed the Analyst's determination. In its appeal letter, Kelly states:

By "winning proposal," [we] meant to convey our request for the Technical and Management Sections of the winning proposal, not the Cost Section, which we understand is proprietary to the selected company. Therefore, it would be fully acceptable to [Kelly] if the document provided included deletions of all such proprietary information.

II. Applicable Legal Principles

Exemption 3 of the FOIA allows agencies to withhold information that is specifically exempted from disclosure by statute [other than the FOIA itself] provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld.

5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). As articulated by the U.S. Supreme Court in CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 167 (1985) (Sims), application of Exemption 3 is a two-step process. First, an agency must determine whether the statutory provision in question satisfies the foregoing requirements of Exemption 3, and, if so, the agency must next determine whether the subject information falls within the purview of that statutory provision. Id.

III. Analysis

Applying the foregoing legal principles, the initial question in this case is whether the NDAA provides a statutory exemption to disclosure within the meaning of Exemption 3. We have previously held that it does. See, e.g., Chemical Weapons Working Group, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,170 (1997) (Chemical Weapons); Patricia McCracken, 26 DOE ¶ 80,227 (1997). Section 821(b)(1) of the NDAA, "Prohibition On Release of Contractor Proposals, Civilian Agency Acquisitions," (Section 821(b)(1)) provides that "a proposal in the possession or control of an executive agency may not be made available to any person under [the FOIA]," unless such proposal is set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract entered into between the agency and the contractor that submitted the proposal. (emphasis added).(1) The plain language of Section 821(b)(1) allows no discretion in withholding contractor proposals that are not set forth or incorporated by reference in a contract. The section therefore satisfies Subpart A of Exemption 3. See Chemical Weapons, supra.

We must next determine whether the subject information, i.e., the winning proposal, withheld by the Analyst is a "proposal" for purposes of Section 821(b)(1). We find that it is. Section 821(b)(3) of the NDAA defines "proposal" to mean "any proposal including a technical, management, or cost proposal, submitted by a contractor in response to the requirements of a solicitation for a competitive proposal." The winning proposal was submitted by a contractor in response to solicitation DE-RQ01- 00AD77777, which sought competitive proposals.

Our finding that the Sims test is satisfied, however, does not end our inquiry in this case. Section 821(b)(1) further requires us to ask whether the winning proposal is set forth or incorporated by reference in the resultant contract. If so, by its own terms, Section 821(b)(1)'s shield is lifted. Examination of the resultant contract reveals that the proposal is incorporated by reference therein. The resultant contract provides that "[a]ll work will be in accordance with the attached statement of work and performed pursuant to [the winning] technical and price proposal of [a certain date] . . . ." Contract DE-AT01-00AD00165. This direct incorporation by reference places the winning proposal outside the protection of Section 821(b)(1) and, thus, also outside the protection of Exemption 3.

Although Exemption 3 is inapplicable to this case, it appears that the requested proposal may be protected under another FOIA exemption, such as Exemption 4, which protects from disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4).

IV. Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing analysis, the winning proposal is not protected from disclosure under Exemption 3 but may be protected under another FOIA exemption. This matter is therefore remanded to the Supervisory Procurement Analyst (SPA) for a new determination. In its determination, the SPA must either release the requested documents or provide another reason for withholding them.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The appeal filed by Kelly, Anderson & Associates, Inc. on December 19, 2000, Case Number VFA-0638, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOIA/Privacy Act Division of the Department of Energy Headquarters to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0639, 28 DOE ¶ 80,139

January 22, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Kathie Light

Date of Filing: December 21, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0639

On December 21, 2000, Kathie Light (Light) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to her. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determination, Richland released some responsive information to Light. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the remainder of the responsive information as well as to conduct a more thorough search for responsive documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In a request dated September 11, 2000, Light wrote Richland and requested copies of all documents and electronic communications concerning herself generated by eight named individuals as well as two unions (Item 1), the American Federation of Government Employees- Local 788 (AFGE) and the National Federation of Federal Employees - Local 181 (NFFE), dated from January 1, 2000 to September 11, 2000. (1) Additionally, Light requested documents relating to applicants for a job announcement (No. Richland-00-MP-44) (2) including applications, qualification analysis worksheets for eligible applicants and ranking panel score sheets (Item 2). Lastly, with regard to the job announcement, Light asked for all documents or electronic communications from five named individuals (Item 3).

In its November 6, 2000 Determination Letter, Richland provided Light with copies of documents responsive to Item 1 and 3. With regard to documents generated by AFGE and NFFE that might be responsive to Item 1, Richland stated that since those records were not agency records, they were not subject to the FOIA. Further, documents generated by three of the named individuals in their capacities as union officials that could be responsive to Items 1 and 3 would thus also not be subject to the provisions of the FOIA. Richland also stated that it had contacted Richland's Office of Site Services (OSS) and had been informed that any electronic messages responsive to Item 1 would be no longer be in existence. OSS informed Richland that it maintained backup tapes of messages only for the previous 28 days; thus messages older than 28 days would have been erased when the tapes were recycled.

With regard to Item 2, Richland released redacted copies of the Qualification Analysis Worksheets for each eligible candidate and the rating sheets. In these documents Richland withheld the applicants' names, scores, names of individuals on the selection panel and "any other personal information" pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Richland also withheld in their entirety, pursuant to Exemption 6, the application materials each applicant submitted along with the written responses to the ranking criteria that each applicant submitted (application materials). Richland determined that, after considering the privacy interests of the individuals referenced in the withheld material and the public interest in the release of the withheld material, that release of the withheld information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy.

In her submission, Light asserts several grounds for appeal. First, Light argues that any documents created or possessed by AFGE and NFFE and their officials are agency records and subject to the FOIA, since the documents were generated on government-owned equipment and that there was no explicit agreement authorizing union use of government-owned equipment until April 16, 2000. Thus, any documents generated on government owned equipment prior to April 16, 2000 should be considered agency records. Second, she challenges withholding in their entirety all the application materials pursuant to Exemption 6. Lastly, she asserts that an inadequate search was conducted for responsive documents. In particular, she states that Richland failed to contact OSS in a timely enough fashion to prevent the destruction of electronic documents and that there should exist documents from three of the named officials who were involved in a Richland management decision to remove labor relations from Light's job responsibilities.

II. Analysis

A. Agency Records

Under the FOIA, an "agency record" is a document that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of a FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Clear indications that a document is an "agency record" are when a document of this type is part of an agency file, and it was used for an agency purpose. Kissinger v. Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 157 (1980); Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc. v. Department of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1489-90 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (BNA); J. Eileen Price, 25 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1995) (Price). In making the "agency records" determination, we look at the totality of the circumstances surrounding the creation, maintenance and use of the documents in question. See BNA, 742 F.2d at 1492-93; Price.

With regard to the potentially responsive documents in possession of the two unions, AFGE and NFFE, and their officials, Richland has stated that none of these documents were created by Richland nor has Richland exercised control over these documents. In this regard, Richland has been informed that any potentially responsive documents that are in the possession of the unions or their officials, other than the ones already provided to Richland, are used exclusively for union operations. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Dorothy Riehle, Richland, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (January 5, 2001). Consequently, we find that the responsive documents in possession of AFGE and NFFE and their officials, that are used for exclusively union operations, are not agency records and are not subject to the FOIA.

Our conclusion is not changed by Light's assertion that until April 16, 2000, neither union had a valid agreement with DOE to use DOE equipment to create documents and that use of DOE equipment prior to April 16, 2000, makes any such document created before that date an agency document. In Gallant v. NLRB, the United States Court of Appeals held that documents may not be considered agency documents solely because they were created by an individual on agency time on agency equipment. Gallant v. NLRB, 26 F.3d 168, 171-72 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (Gallant). In examining existing case law, the court in Gallant held that while use of agency resources by an agency employee in the creation of a document is a factor in determining whether a document is an agency record, it is not as significant as other factors such as the purpose for which the document was created, the actual use of the document, and the extent to which the author or other agency employees acting in the scope of their employment relied on the document to carry out agency business. Id. at 172. Thus, the fact that agency resources were used to create a document is insufficient alone to render a document an agency record. Id. As described earlier, the union documents at issue in this case were used exclusively for union purposes and have not been in the control of Richland. Consequently, responsive documents possessed by the unions and their officials and used exclusively for union operations are not agency records.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripkis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripkis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

Richland determined that there was a privacy interest in the identity of the unsuccessful job applicants. According to Richland, each applicant made a "personal choice" to apply for the vacant position, and Richland invoked the FOIA to protect that choice from public disclosure. Determination Letter at 2.

Courts have similarly found that the disclosure of the identities of unsuccessful federal job applicants constitutes a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy For instance, Core v. U.S. Postal Service, 730 F.2d 946 (4th Cir. 1984), presents a fact pattern similar to this case. (3) Core was an unsuccessful applicant for a vacancy at the U.S. Postal Service ("the Service"). He argued that the Service had violated hiring regulations, and then requested information about the other unsuccessful job applicants. (4) The Service invoked Exemption 6 and withheld responsive information about the unsuccessful applicants, determining that harm could arise from such a disclosure. The Court upheld the withholding and found that "disclosure may embarrass or harm applicants who failed to get a job." Core, 730 F.2d at 949. The court reasoned that present or prospective employers or coworkers could learn that others were deemed better qualified for a competitive appointment. Id. See also Barvick v. Cisneros, 961 F. Supp. 1015, 1021 (D. Kan. 1996) (Barvick) (upholding agency's nondisclosure of identifying information on the unsuccessful applicants because it could lead to embarrassment or adversely affect their future employment or promotion prospects). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identities of unsuccessful federal job applicants.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). In her Appeal, Light does not specifically identify a public interest that would be served by release of the application materials but asserts that there may have been irregularities in the process of selecting applicants for the "best qualified" list for the job announcement, especially since she believes that other, less qualified individuals were put on the list.

We find that there is a minimal public interest in the release of the withheld information. Light has not demonstrated how the disclosure of information about each job applicant is necessary for the public to evaluate Richland's hiring practices. Simply alleging that an agency has engaged in violations of hiring regulations does not justify releasing personal information. See Barvick, 941 F. Supp. at 1022 (quoting Hopkins v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991) (invocation of a legitimate public interest cannot itself justify the release of personal information)). This is especially true in this case where Richland hired no one pursuant to the job announcement. Thus, release of the withheld information would tell us little about Richland's hiring practices. Therefore, we agree with Richland and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the responsive material.

3. The Balancing Test

We have concluded above that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of the names of the unsuccessful applicants. Therefore, we find that the release of the application materials would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Consequently, we believe Richland properly withheld the information pursuant to Exemption 6.

C. Adequacy of the Search

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, the FOIA requires agencies to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Consequently, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. NSA, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

We contacted Richland to determine the extent of the search that had been conducted for responsive documents. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Dorothy Riehle, Richland, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (January 2, 2001); Memorandum of telephone conversation between Dorothy Riehle, Richland, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (January 11, 2001). Richland informed us that upon receipt of the request it contacted each of the named individuals and asked each to conduct a search. Richland also undertook a search at its office of Human Resources. Richland then contacted the Office of Site Services (OSS) to determine the existence of responsive electronic messages. Richland was informed that any electronic messages responsive to the request would have been deleted 28 days after their creation. Given the facts presented to us, we believe that Richland conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Light's request.

Light's arguments to the contrary are unavailing. Light asserts that Richland's delay in contacting OSS resulted in the destruction of potentially responsive electronic documents. Upon receipt of Light's FOIA Request, a Richland official immediately contacted OSS and was informed that all messages older than 28 days old were destroyed. Because this official had been informed that Richland's Human Resources office had already provided her with all documents that might be on the OSS computer (other than union messages), she did not ask OSS to conduct a search until October 3, 2000. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Dorothy Riehle, Richland, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (January 11, 2001). Given the evidence before us, we do not believe that Richland was acting in bad faith in conducting the search. While Light finds it inconceivable that there is no documentation regarding the decision to remove one of her job responsibilities, the central issue to be resolved is not whether there might exist any other documents possibly responsive to the request, or whether such documents should exist, but rather whether the search for documents was adequate. See Weisburg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir 1984); Citizens Commission on Human Rights v. FDA, 45 F.3d 1325 (9th Cir. 1995). Even if Light is correct that additional documents exist, the FOIA only requires that Richland conduct a reasonable search for documents. As described above, we find that Richland's search was reasonably calculated to discover responsive documents and thus is sufficient under the FOIA.

D. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). We have reviewed a sample of the application materials and find that there is no segregable material that can be provided to Light. The very small amount of segregable material contained in the application materials is inextricably intertwined with the protectable identifying information in the applications materials. Consequently, we find that Richland properly withheld the application materials in their entirety.

III. Conclusion

In sum, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Light's FOIA Appeal. Further, any responsive union documents used exclusively for union purposes are not agency records for the purposes of the FOIA. Lastly, Richland properly withheld in their entirety the application materials for job announcement No. Richland-00-MP-44. Thus, Light's appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

Case No. VFA-0640, 28 DOE ¶ 80,141

January 25, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Wiley, Rein & Fielding

Date of Filing:December 26, 2000

Case Number:VFA-0640

On December 26, 2000, Wiley, Rein & Fielding filed an Appeal from a determination the Manager of the Ohio Field Office of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on November 22, 2000. In that determination, the Manager stated that she could not locate records responsive to a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request that Wiley, Rein & Fielding filed on November 3, 2000. The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. See 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

In its November 3, 2000 request for information, Wiley, Rein & Fielding sought copies of certified payroll records of any subcontractors to Fluor Fernald at the Fernald Environmental Management Project site for the years 1998 and 1999. In her determination, the Manager stated that no agency records exist regarding these certified payroll records. Wiley, Rein & Fielding contends that the DOE must have responsive records.

Analysis

In the Manager's response to the Wiley, Rein & Fielding request, she determined that the payroll records were not DOE "agency records" because the records were the property of the contractor and not in the possession or control of the DOE at the time of the request. Wiley, Rein & Fielding states that Department of Labor regulations require government contractors to submit to the government the weekly payroll records for their employees and subcontractor employees. See 29 C.F.R. § 5.5(a)(3)(ii)(A). Furthermore, the firm states that the Federal Acquisition Regulation also requires government contractors involved in construction services that exceed $2,000 in value to submit employee payroll information to the government. See 48 C.F.R. § 52.222-8. Wiley, Rein & Fielding contends that, in light of these regulations, there must exist payroll "agency records" responsive to its request.

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the requested payroll records are "agency records," and thus subject to the FOIA, under the criteria set out by the federal courts. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f) (describing the scope of the term "agency" under the FOIA). Second, records that do not meet these criteria may nonetheless be subject to release under the DOE regulations. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e); see 59 Fed. Reg. 63,884 (December 12, 1994). For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that the records in question are not "agency records" and that they are also not subject to release under the DOE regulations.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. §

552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., BMF Enterprises, 21 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1991); William Albert Hewgley, 19 DOE ¶ 80,120 (1989); Judith M. Gibbs, 16 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1987) (Gibbs). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Gibbs, 16 DOE at 80,595.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The courts have identified certain factors to consider in determining whether we should regard an entity as an agency for purposes of federal law. In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the . . . agency receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Id. at 815. In other words, an organization will be considered a federal agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham). See also Washington Research Project, Inc. v. HEW, 504 F.2d 238, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 963 (1975) (degree of independent governmental decision-making authority considered); Rocap v. Indiek, 539 F.2d 174 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

Under its contractual relationship with the DOE, Fluor Fernald is the contractor responsible for maintaining and operating the Fernald Environmental Management Project. While the DOE obtained Fluor Fernald's services and exercises general control over the contract work, it does not supervise the contractor's day-to-day operations. See Contract No. DE-AC24-01OH20115. We therefore conclude that Fluor Fernald is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

Although Fluor Fernald is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, its records relevant to the Wiley, Rein & Fielding request could become "agency records" if the DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time the firm made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989); see Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. In this case, while the contract between the DOE and Fluor Fernald requires that the contractor submit on a weekly basis the payroll records to the DOE Contracting Officer, we have determined that the records the firm seeks were not in the agency's control at the time of the firm's request. Although it is unclear if the DOE's Contracting Officer reviewed these particular payroll records, the Manager's representative informed us that, regardless, these records would have been returned to the contractor.(1) See January 18, 2001 Record of Telephone Conversation between Renee Holland, DOE Ohio Field Office, and Leonard M. Tao, OHA Staff Attorney. Since the Manager's representative confirmed that the payroll records were not in the DOE's control at the time of the firm's request, these documents clearly do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46; see also Forsham, 445 U.S. at 185-86.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the document in question is the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

We therefore next look to the contract between the DOE and Fluor Fernald to determine the status of the requested records. That contract generally states,

Except as is provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the Contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government . . .

Contract No. DE-AC24-01OH20115, Section H.20 (a). Paragraph (b)(4) of the "Contractor's Own Records" section of the contract states that the excluded category of contractor's records includes "Records and files pertaining to wages, salaries, benefits and benefit administration." Furthermore, paragraph (b)(7) of this section states that "All records relating to any procurement action by the contractor" are considered contractor records. Since the subcontractor payroll records Wiley, Rein & Fielding requests are documents the contract states are contractor records, we find that the records sought by the firm are neither "agency records" within the meaning of the FOIA nor subject to release under the DOE regulations. Accordingly, we must deny the Wiley, Rein & Fielding Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal that Wiley, Rein & Fielding filed on December 26, 2000, Case No. VFA-0640, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0641, 28 DOE ¶ 80,140

January 24, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: December 22, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0641

Barbara Schwarz filed this Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Division (FOI/PA). This determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Schwarz sent a letter to the Office of Hearings and Appeals, dated March 22, 2000, that contained both an appeal of an earlier FOIA determination, and a request for additional material under the FOIA. We issued a Decision and Order with respect to the appeal portion of the letter, designated Case No. VFA-0567, in Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,273 (2000).

The request portion of Schwarz's letter was forwarded to the FOI/PA for processing pursuant to the FOIA. In a Determination Letter dated December 4, 2000, FOI/PA stated that it was providing Schwarz with documents responsive to some of her requests, and informed her that no responsive documents were located for her other requests. Schwarz then filed this appeal, challenging the adequacy of the search for responsive documents, a lack of response to a request for a fee waiver, and a failure to provide a "search declaration."

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of Search

Schwarz claims that the search for responsive records was inadequate because she was not provided with two categories of records. The first category consists of records pertaining to a civil suit in the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia, Case No. 00-1610-HHK, which Schwarz says she filed against the Department of Energy. The second category consists of records that Schwarz describes as pertaining to "a town or village with name Chattanooga in Utah (Note: not Tennessee)."

Neither the civil case nor the town of Chattanooga, Utah, are mentioned in Schwarz's request letter. Furthermore, no reasonable interpretation of Schwarz's request letter would suggest that records pertaining to the civil case or to Chattanooga, Utah would be responsive to her request. An appellant may not use the appeal process to expand the scope of a FOIA request. F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1996); Energy Research Foundation, 22 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1992); Cox Newspapers, 22 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1992); Bernard Hanft, 21 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1991); John M. Seehaus, 21 DOE ¶ 80,135 (1991). We will therefore deny this portion of Schwarz's appeal.

B. Request for a Fee Waiver

The DOE FOIA regulations state that the DOE will provide up to two hours of search time and up to 100 pages of duplication without cost, and may charge fees for processing FOIA responses that exceed those limits. In addition, the regulations provide for certain circumstances in which the DOE may waive the fees. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9.

Schwarz was not charged any fees in connection with her FOIA request. Nevertheless, she claims in her appeal that FOI/PA "ignored" her request for a waiver of fee. As we have explained before to Schwarz, a request for a "fee waiver" is moot if no fees have been charged. Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 (1999). We will therefore dismiss this portion of Schwarz's appeal as moot.

C. Request for a search declaration

Woven throughout Schwarz's appeal are requests for a detailed description of how the search was conducted. She asserts that the determination ... is very unspecific.... I was not explained the records system.... I received absolutely no search document.... I always had requested a search certification or declaration by Dept. of Energy employees as to the result of their searches. With letter of December [4, 2000, the FOI/PA] Office mailed me first time a certification as to a search.... However, the certificate is not under oath, as requested and the no records determination is not true, and no evidence as to the search was attached... I insist on the search declaration.

As we have explained to Schwarz before, neither the FOIA nor the relevant DOE regulations requires the agency to supply a "search certificate" or a detailed description of the search that was conducted. Barbara Schwarz, supra. Furthermore, we believe that requiring a "search declaration" at the administrative stage of review is unnecessary and unproductive. We will therefore deny this portion of the appeal.

III. Conclusion

We find that, on appeal, Schwarz has requested records that were not within the scope of her original request. Consequently, we find no reason to remand her original request for a further search. In addition, we find no basis to grant Schwarz's request for a "search declaration," and we find her request for a fee waiver to be moot. We will therefore deny this Appeal in part and dismiss it in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0641, is hereby dismissed with respect to the fee waiver issues it raises, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R. E. V. Eng. Services

Date of Filing: December 26, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0642

On December 26, 2000, David Ridenour (Ridenour) of R. E. V. Eng. Services (REV) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him in response to a request for documents that REV submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on December 13, 2000, by the Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO). This Appeal, if granted, would require that RFFO perform an additional search.

I. Background

In a previous case, Ridenour had submitted a request for information under the FOIA to the RFFO. See R.E.V. Eng. Services, OHA Case Nos. VFA-0600/0604, 28 DOE ¶ 80,115 (2000). The OHA attorney responsible for processing that case had telephone conversations with an attorney at RFFO in order to adjudicate that appeal related to the request. Id. In a memorandum memorializing one of those conversations, the OHA attorney referred to a "belief" in the Office of Chief Counsel (OCC) that "there is a substantial likelihood of further proceedings by Mr. Ridenour against the DOE." 28 DOE ¶ 80,115. OHA used this information to support its decision to uphold the RFFO's nondisclosure of a document under one of the FOIA exemptions. Id.

On October 10, 2000, Ridenour submitted another FOIA request to RFFO for "information pertaining to RFFO's Office of Chief Counsel's ?belief that there is a substantial likelihood of futher proceedings by Mr. Ridenour against the DOE.' " Letter from Ridenour to RFFO (October 16, 2000) (Request). Ridenour referenced the telephone memorandum previously mentioned. On December 13, 2000, the RFFO FOIA/Privacy Act Officer issued a determination letter stating that no responsive records were located. Letter from RFFO to Ridenour (December 13, 2000) (Determination Letter). On December 26, 2000, Ridenour filed this Appeal. Letter from Ridenour to Director, OHA (December 26, 2000). He argued that because OHA considered the OCC's anticipation of future litigation important enough to memorialize and use in its decision making, the OCC must have documentation of that belief in its files. Appeal at 1-2.

II. Analysis

A. ADEQUACY OF SEARCH

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Dep't

of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted RFFO to ascertain the scope of the search. The FOIA/Privacy Act Officer informed us that the original request was sent to the OCC on October 23, 2000 for a search of its files. The OCC searched its files and stated that "there are no records of which this office is aware that pertain to RFFO's Office of Chief Counsels' belief that there is a substantial likelihood of further proceedings by Mr. Ridenour against the DOE." Letter from James Long, Attorney, OCC to Mary Hammack, FOIA/Privacy Act Officer (October 23, 2000); Electronic Mail Message from James Long to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (January 25, 2001). The OHA attorney who adjudicated Case No. VSO-0600/0604 informed us that Ridenour had received a copy of the telephone memorandum that memorialized the pertinent conversation between OHA and OCC. Memorandum of Conversation between Robert Palmer and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorneys (January 11, 2001). We therefore find that the agency conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the responsive material.

Moreover, we find no evidence that the statement that Ridenour touts as OCC policy amounts to more than verbal conjecture by an OCC staff member that an individual who has filed several federal and administrative cases recently (including nine FOIA appeals in the past ten months) is likely to engage in future litigation. See R.E.V. Eng. Services, Case No. VFA-0636, 28 DOE ¶ 80,137 (2001); Case No. VFA-0626, 28 DOE ¶ 80,131 (2000); Case No. VFA-0618, 28 DOE ¶ 80,121 (2000); Case No. VFA-0605, 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 (2000); Case No. VFA-0601, 28 DOE ¶ 80,109 (2000); Case Nos. It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by R.E.V. Eng. Services December 26, 2000, OHA Case Number VFA-0642, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Thomas J. Balamut

Date of Filing: December 28, 2000

Case Number: VFA-0643

On December 28, 2000, Thomas J. Balamut (Balamut) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Chicago Operations Office (CH) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determination, CH released some responsive information to Balamut. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the responsive information it withheld from him.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On October 10, 2000, Balamut filed a FOIA request with CH seeking a list of individual dollar amounts and a brief description of each cash award given to employees in the Chicago Operations Office, Argonne Group for Fiscal Year (FY) 1999 and FY 2000. In a determination letter, CH indicated that it located the documents responsive to Balamut's request. CH released most of the responsive information. However, it withheld the individual names of award recipients associated with individual dollar amounts for the Argonne Group employees under Exemption 6. In his Appeal, Balamut challenges the application of Exemption 6 to the withheld information.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6);

10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

CH determined that there was a privacy interest in the individual names of the award recipients associated with individual dollar amounts given to Argonne Group employees. According to CH, individual award recipients have "a significant privacy interest in protecting from disclosure the amount of his or her award." CH further stated that "disclosing an individual's award would not serve a significant public interest because it would not directly reveal the operations or activities of the government." See Determination Letter at 1.

We have consistently determined "that there is a real and substantial threat to employees' privacy if personal identifying information . . . were released." Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 15 DOE ¶ 80,115 at 80,537 (1987). See also Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 16 DOE ¶ 80,102 at 80,504 (1987); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80,120 at 80,569 (1985); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80, 104 at 80,519 (1985). The same type of privacy interest is involved in this case. If a document listing the individual names of award recipients associated with individual dollar amounts were disclosed to the requester, the awards could obviously be directly linked to the employees who received them. Release of this material would reveal considerable personal financial information about each Argonne Group employee given an incentive award and would certainly constitute a serious invasion of personal privacy. In addition, courts have similarly found that even releasing favorable information about an employee, such as details of an employee's outstanding performance evaluation, can be protected on the basis that it "may well embarrass an individual or incite jealousy among co-workers." See Ripskis , 746 F.2d at 3. These considerations govern our determination. We therefore find a significant privacy interest in the individual names of the award recipients.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on the operations and activities of the government." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). In his Appeal, Balamut states that " incentives to improve performance work only when individuals can measure their performance and resulting awards against some standard, which is the performance and resulting awards of others. They can then determine that the system is equitable. If this information is not open and public then the system is not a true incentive system, but rather a system of patronage, and results in a disincentive to employee's performance." See Appeal Letter at 1.

We agree with Balamut's assertion that there is a public interest in the release of the withheld information.

However, alleging that recognition of incentive awards should properly be made public does not by itself justify releasing personal information. See Hopkins v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991) (invocation of a legitimate public interest cannot itself justify the release of personal information)). Therefore, we must balance both the privacy and public interests in this case.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of the names of individual award recipients could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989).

We have concluded above that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. In addition, we find that although there is a public interest in the release of the names of the award recipients, we agree with CH that the public interest in disclosure of the withheld material is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the Argonne Group employees.

C. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). We find that CH properly segregated and released all responsive information by withholding only the names of individual award recipients associated with the dollar amounts of the awards given.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Thomas Balamut on December 28, 2000, OHA Case No. VFA-0643, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

January 31, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Kenneth P. Brooks

Date of Filing: January 2, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0644

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by Kenneth P. Brooks from a determination issued to him by the Freedom of Information Officer of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Albuquerque Operations Office (AOO). In this determination, AOO provided to Mr. Brooks four documents that he requested pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Mr. Brooks challenges the adequacy of the search for responsive documents.

In his FOIA request, Mr. Brooks sought access to all documents relating to him as a previous DOE employee or as an employee of a DOE contractor, including a 1989 letter from a named DOE attorney to Mr. Brooks' attorney, all "1990s correspondence" written to or by Martin Marietta or Lockheed Martin or their attorneys, and all documents relating to his security clearance or background investigations. In its response, AOO described the search for responsive documents that was performed. AOO stated that Mr. Brooks' request was referred to the Offices of Chief Counsel (OCC) and Equal Opportunity (OEO), the Employee Concerns Program (ECP), the Personnel Security Division (PSD), and the Headquarters Office of the Executive Secretariat, Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts Division.

In the determination, AOO said that OCC located four documents that are responsive to Mr. Brooks' request. However, OCC "stated that ?we could not locate the 1989 letter [from the named DOE attorney to Mr. Brooks' attorney]. Last year [OCC] did destroy some documents that were in our safe that we believe were related to Brooks' case. They were destroyed per our records management guidance DOE 1324.2A, Schedule 7, 9, e.'" AOO determination at 2.

The determination further indicated that OEO and ECP searched their files for responsive documents, and were unable to locate any. ECP searched their inactive and active Employee Concerns, Potential Whistleblowers and Whistleblowers files dating from 1992 to the present. Id.

PSD searched for Mr. Brooks' Personnel Security File, and found it to be located at the Oak Ridge Operations Office. The determination stated that Mr. Brooks' request was therefore referred to Oak Ridge and to the Headquarters FOI and Privacy Acts Division, and that these offices would respond directly to Mr. Brooks. Id. (1)

In his Appeal, Mr. Brooks alleges that the documents he seeks would have been located in the same files as the documents that were provided to him, and that AOO is withholding responsive documents in an attempt "to cover up their illegal actions." Appeal at 2. Mr. Brooks provided no evidence to support this allegation.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

Based on the description set forth in AOO's determination, we find that the search for responsive documents in this case was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information, and it was therefore adequate. However, in view of Mr. Brooks' allegation that additional documents should have been located in the files in which the four OCC documents were found, we contacted that Office. We were informed that its reading file, in which copies of outgoing correspondence were kept, and its local storage area were searched. No responsive documents were located in the reading file, and no responsive material other than the four identified documents was found in the local storage area. See memorandum of January 25, 2001 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Margaret Sanchez, OCC. We conclude that the search for responsive documents was adequate despite Mr. Brooks' unsupported allegation of a cover up. We will therefore deny Mr. Brooks' Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Kenneth P. Brooks in Case No. VFA-0644 is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)In the determination, AOO also stated that Mr. Brooks withdrew the portions of his request that involved searching the DOE archives in Atlanta, Georgia for records concerning the Pinellas Plant. In his Appeal, Mr. Brooks argues that this withdrawal was conditioned upon the production of the information that he seeks from the other DOE facilities that were searched. He contends that since he has not received this information, the "Pinellas" portion of his request should not be considered as withdrawn. In the alternative, he attempts to submit a new request for the Pinellas files as a part of his Appeal. As an initial matter, it is possible that Mr. Brooks will receive some or all of the documents that he seeks from the Oak Ridge Operations Office or from the Headquarters FOI and Privacy Acts Division. In any event, the DOE regulations do not allow for the filing of a new FOIA request as part of a FOIA Appeal. See generally 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4, 1004.8. Therefore, if Mr. Brooks does not receive the information that he requested from these offices, he should file a new request for the Pinellas files.

Case No. VFA-0645, 28 DOE ¶ 80,143

January 29, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Frank M. Laiza

Date of Filing: January 2, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0645

On January 2, 2001, Frank M. Laiza filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Richland Operations Office (DOE/RL) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on December 5, 2000. In its determination, DOE/RL informed Mr. Laiza that it located no agency records responsive to the request for information he submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Mr. Laiza is employed by a DOE contractor at the Department's Hanford Site near Richland, Washington. In 1994, 1997, and 2000, Mr. Laiza filed employee concerns with his employer. On November 16, 2000, Mr. Laiza requested from DOE/RL copies of the concerns he filed in 1994 and 1997, "and all supporting documentation that was filed with them . . . ." Electronic Mail from Frank Laiza to Dorothy C. Riehle, DOE/RL (November 16, 2000). In its December 5, 2000 response to Mr. Laiza's request, DOE/RL stated that it "conducted a thorough search of [DOE/RL] Office of Special Concerns (SCO) and no documents were located." DOE/RL also informed Mr. Laiza that records of employee concerns filed with his employer were property of the employer under the contract between DOE and the employer. Letter from Marla Marvin, Director, Office of Intergovernmental, Public and Institutional Affairs, DOE/RL, to Frank Laiza (December 5, 2001). In his Appeal, Mr. Laiza contends that DOE/RL's statement that it could locate no responsive documents contradicted what he was told in a July 11, 2000 conversation with a DOE/RL employee.(1) Mr. Laiza states he was told that "every employee concern written since the beginning of the employee concerns program, whether filed with DOE-RL or the contractor was on record at DOE-RL and could be obtained with a FOIA request." Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

A. Whether DOE/RL Conducted an Adequate Search for Responsive Documents

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v.

Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, we contacted DOE/RL and obtained the following information relevant to the search at issue in this case. The Office of Special Concerns (SCO) at DOE/RL tracks all employee concerns filed with DOE contractors at the Hanford site. This is done by means of periodic reporting to SCO by the contractors, telling SCO the case number assigned to the concern and the name of the contractor employee responsible for handling the concern. This does not mean that, as Mr. Laiza understood it, “every employee concern written since the beginning of the employee concerns program, whether filed with DOE-RL or the contractor was on record at DOE-RL and could be obtained with a FOIA request.” Appeal at 1. In general, an employee concern and supporting documentation is maintained by the DOE contractor with which it was filed, unless the concern becomes the basis for a complaint filed with DOE/RL’s SCO. Thus, in response to Mr. Laiza’s request, DOE/RL searched SCO, which had in its possession only one employee concern filed by Mr. Laiza. He filed that concern with his employer in 2000, and it subsequently became the subject of a complaint he filed with SCO. SCO informed us that the two previous concerns Mr. Laiza filed with his employer were not filed with SCO, and therefore SCO had no documents responsive to Mr. Laiza’s request.(2) Under these circumstances, we find that DOE/RL’s search was “reasonably calculated to uncover” the materials Mr. Laiza is seeking.

B. Whether Responsive Documents in the Possession of DOE Contractors are Subject to Release

To the extent that the records Mr. Laiza has requested are not in the possession of DOE/RL but are in the possession of DOE contractors, we find for the reasons below that those documents are not subject to release under the FOIA or DOE regulations. The FOIA is applicable only where the requested documents may be considered an “agency record” or, pursuant to DOE regulation, is otherwise deemed to be the property of the DOE by contractual provision.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis the courts have fashioned for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as WHC and FHI, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997) (LASG). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See LASG, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 & n.11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, the entities that would be in possession of the employee concerns at issue are Westinghouse Hanford Corporation (WHC) (with respect to the 1994 concern) and Fluor Hanford, Inc. (FHI) (with respect to the 1997 concern). Although these two companies were contracted by the DOE to operate the Hanford site, the DOE did not supervise either contractor’s day-to-day operations. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Dorothy C. Riehle, DOE/RL, and Steven Goering, OHA (January 17, 2001). We therefore conclude that WHC and FHI are not "agencies" subject to the FOIA.

Although WHC and FHI are not agencies for the purposes of the FOIA, their records responsive to Mr. Laiza’s request could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time Mr. Laiza made his FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). However, as discussed above, none of the responsive documents at issue was in the DOE's control or possession at the time of the Appellant's request. Based on these facts, the documents do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the records in question are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under" the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

The relevant provisions in the WHC contract are as follows:

H-8 OWNERSHIP OF RECORDS

(a) Government records.

Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the Contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government, and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the Contractor either as the Contracting officer may from time to time direct during the process of the work, or in any event, as the Contracting officer shall direct upon completion or termination of the contract.

(b) Contractor records.

The following records are considered the property of the Contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) above.

. . . .

(2) Employee Assistance Program and Employee Concerns Program records and files maintained on individual employees; . . .

Contract No. DE-AC06-87RL10930.

DOE’s contract with FHI contains similar language providing that “[e]mployment-related records such as . . . employee concern program records” are “considered property of the Contractor . . . .” Contract No. DE-AC06-96RL13200 at H-34. Because the contracts in this case do not provide that employee concern records are property of the Government, such records are not subject to release under DOE regulations.

In sum, because we find that DOE/RL conducted an adequate search of records that would be subject to release under the FOIA or DOE regulation, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Frank M. Laiza on January 2, 2001, Case No. VFA-0645, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S. C. §552 (a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)Mr. Laiza also states that DOE/RL did not comply with the FOIA because it did not respond to his request within twenty working days as the Act requires. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). Whether DOE/RL responded within the time set forth in the FOIA statute and regulations is not an issue within our jurisdiction, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8, and that issue is in any event now moot because DOE/RL has issued its response.

(2)SCO has not maintained the periodic reports from the contractors that would have contained the case numbers and name of the contractor employee responsible for addressing Mr. Laiza's 1994 and 1997 employee concerns.

Case No. VFA-0646, 28 DOE ¶ 80,147

February 2, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner:Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing:January 8, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0646

This decision addresses the combined appeals of Barbara Schwarz (Appellant) from two Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) determinations issued to her by the FOI/Privacy Act Division of the Department of Energy (DOE) Headquarters (DOE/FOI). The determinations denied Appellant's requests for fee waivers, which she had filed in connection with two separate FOIA requests, regarding related subject matter. Appellant's respective appeals from those determinations were received by this office on January 8, 2001 and assigned the same case number, VFA-0646. For the reasons set forth below, the appeals will be denied.

I. Background

Appellant filed a FOIA request, dated November 19, 2000, with the DOE/FOI for "records pertaining to inquiries/subpoenas of Mark C. Rathbun's (De Rothschild) or his family's attorney or an Independent or Special Counsel or Congress for any records, e.g., FOIA/PA or litigation records on me, Barbara Schwarz or misspelled version Schwartz." In the request for information, Appellant also requested a waiver of associated copying and processing fees (Waiver Request One). Waiver Request One is apparently based upon Appellant's assertions therein that (1) she is indigent and cannot afford to pay the required fees, (2) she needs the requested documents to find and free Mr. Rathbun, who Appellant believes has been wrongfully imprisoned by a "German Nazi conspiracy," and (3) the requested documents "will be of high interest for the American public and will shed light as to how a German infiltrated government works."

By letter dated November 20, 2000 (Waiver Request Two), Appellant requested a waiver of the fees associated with her October 10, 2000 FOIA request for any records pertaining to former President Dwight D. Eisenhower.(1) Appellant filed two supplements to Waiver Request Two, dated December 16, 2000 and December 18, 2000, respectively. In Waiver Request Two, as supplemented,

Appellant asserts that she is entitled to a fee waiver because (1) she is indigent and cannot afford to pay the required fees, (2) she needs the requested documents in order to prove that she was kidnapped from America as a child and taken to Germany by a "German Nazi conspiracy," (3) she intends to make the records available to Congress and the public via the Internet, and (4) it is "important for the American public," and would greatly contribute to the public's understanding of how the government works, to know that the U.S. Government is "secretly infiltrated by a German Secret Service."

Evidently, Appellant's supplements to Waiver Request Two and the DOE/FOI's determinations denying original Waiver Requests One and Two crossed in the mail.(2) In separate letters, each dated December 12, 2000, the DOE/FOI denied Appellant's respective requests for fee waivers, finding that neither request satisfied the requirements for granting a fee waiver, found at 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8). Appellant's appeal from the denial as to Waiver Request One shall be referred to as Appeal One, and her appeal from the denial as to Waiver Request Two shall be referred to as Appeal Two.

Appeals One and Two set forth essentially the same assertions as Waiver Requests One and Two, respectively. In Appeal One, Appellant further contends that she has "absolutely no commercial interest [in the requested documents]. I have a private interest in those records and very much so a historical and educational interest of which the American public should profit." She also argues that, regardless of the fee waiver, she is entitled to, but was denied, two "free" hours of search time and 100 "free" copies of records. In Appeal Two, Appellant contends that the DOE/FOI "violated the 20 working days response time to respond to [her October 10, 2000] FOIA request and request for fee waiver," and again argues that she is entitled to, but was denied, free search time and copies.

II. Applicable Legal Principles

The FOIA generally requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request, but provides that, absent a fee waiver, requesters must pay applicable processing fees. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). Either an assurance of willingness to pay fees assessed in accordance with Section 1004.9, or a request for fee waiver, must be included in a FOIA request. The FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest, because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government (the public interest prong); and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester (the commercial interest prong). 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

In order to satisfy the public interest prong, the DOE requires that a requester show each of the following:

(A) The subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);

(B) Disclosure of the requested records is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);

(C) Disclosure of the requested records would contribute to an understanding of the subject by the general public (Factor C); and

(D) Disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

If a requester satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong, he must then satisfy the commercial interest prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his commercial interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii). Administrative appeals of fee waiver denials generally are reviewed de novo. See Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,167 (September 29, 1998).

In denying Appellant's Waiver Requests One and Two, the DOE/FOI found that Appellant failed to satisfy each element of the public interest prong. We agree. After performing a de novo review of the merits of both waiver requests, we find that disclosure of the information Appellant seeks is not in the public interest and, therefore, Appellant should not be granted a fee waiver.

III. Analysis

Factor A under the public interest prong requires that the requested records be sought for their informative value with respect to specifically identifiable government operations or activities. See Van Fripp v. Parks, No. 97-0159, slip op. at 10 (D.D.C. Mar. 16, 2000) (characterizing request as "fishing expedition that does not relate to defined operations or activities of the government") (Van Fripp); Atkin v. EEOC, No. 91-2508, slip op. at 27-28 (D.N.J. Dec. 4, 1992) (finding requested list of agency attorneys and their bar affiliations "clearly does not concern identifiable government activities or operations"). A request for access to records for their intrinsic informational content alone will not entitle one to a fee waiver. See Carney v. United States Dep't of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating subject matter of information sought relevant to consideration of fee waiver) (Carney).

Records pertaining to Mark Rathbun (De Rothschild) and former President Dwight D. Eisenhower might have intrinsic informative value and be of general interest. However, Appellant has failed to show that such records have informative value with respect to a specifically identifiable operation or activity of the United States government. Appeals One and Two are laden with Appellant's denouncements of Nazi Germany and personal attestations as to the truth of her suspicions, but they do not address the issue relevant to a FOIA fee waiver determination, namely, whether the information Appellant seeks relates to or will shed light upon a particular aspect of government conduct. Because Appellant has failed to show that the requested records have informative value with respect to specifically identifiable government operations or activities, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor A.

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney, 19 F.3d at 814. Because, as explained with regard to Factor A, there is no evidence linking the subject matter of Waiver Requests One and Two to specifically identifiable government operations or activities, disclosure of the requested information is not likely to contribute to or enhance public understanding of a specific government operation or activity. Thus, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor B.

Factor C requires that the requested material contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the individual understanding of the requester or a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. United States Dep't of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the ability and intention to disseminate the requested information to the public. See Larson v. Central Intelligence Agency, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 & n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding inability to disseminate information alone is sufficient basis for denying fee Waiver Request); Donald R. Patterson, 28 DOE ¶ 80,107 (2000) (denying fee waiver based on requester's failure to satisfy Factor C). Furthermore, passively making information available to anyone who might access it does not satisfy Factor C, because merely placing data in the public domain without analysis or explanation will not contribute to the public's understanding of the subject matter. See Van Fripp, slip op. at 11-12 (finding "it is plaintiff's burden to disseminate the requested information to the public and not, merely, to make it available"); Donald R. Patterson, supra (citing Van Fripp, supra).

Although Appellant asserts that she intends to distribute the requested information on the Internet, we have previously held that posting information on a website is a passive method of dissemination and insufficient for purposes of Factor C. See Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE _____, Case No. VFA- 0623) (Oct. 20, 2000) (citing Donald R. Patterson, supra ("[P]lan to post information on a website . . . is a passive method of placing information in the public domain, compared to, for instance, distributing the material in a newsletter or journal.")). Because Appellant has set forth no evidence that she will use a means of distribution other than the Internet, she has not demonstrated the ability and intention to disseminate the requested information to the public at large. Thus, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor C.

Under Factor D, the last element of the public interest prong, disclosure must contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities. Because, as explained with regard to Factor A, Appellant has not shown that the requested information relates to specifically identifiable government operations or activities, release of the requested information will not significantly contribute to public understanding of government operations or activities. Thus, Appellant has failed to satisfy Factor D.

The foregoing analysis reveals that Appellant has not satisfied the public interest prong, and on that basis alone, should not be granted a fee waiver with regard to Requests One and Two. It is therefore unnecessary to proceed to analysis of the commercial interest prong.

In addition, to the extent Appellant claims entitlement to a fee waiver because she is indigent, and because she seeks the requested information for personal reasons, we note that neither basis is a proper consideration under the FOIA for purposes of making a fee waiver determination. See Ely v. United States Postal Serv., 753 F.2d 163, 165 (D.C. Cir. 1985) ("Congress rejected a fee waiver provision for indigents."); McClain v. United States Dep't of Justice, 13 F.3d 220, 220-21 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding fee waiver inappropriate where requester sought to serve private rather than public interest).

We also note that we have no jurisdiction to consider Appellant's assertion that the DOE/FOI failed to respond within the statutory time limits to her October 10, 2000 request for information. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). In any case, the DOE/FOI's December 12, 2000 determination, and Appellant's appeal therefrom, renders her assertion moot.

Finally, we need not address Appellant's assertion that the DOE/FOI denied her two free hours of search time and 100 copies free of charge (the initial processing fees). It appears that the determinations dated December 12, 2000, from the DOE/FOI denied only Appellant's fee waiver requests, and not the initial processing fees provided for by 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii), 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a), (b)(4) (quoted supra).

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, Appellant has failed to show that disclosure of the requested information in Waiver Requests One and Two is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. Therefore, Appeals One and Two will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act appeals filed by Barbara Schwarz on January 8, 2001, and assigned OHA Case Number VFA-0646, are hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

(1)The November 20, 2000 request was essentially a remailing of her October 10, 2000 request for information, which included a request for fee waiver.

(2)Because the supplements essentially reiterate the arguments set forth in Waiver Request One, however, the supplements likely would not have changed the DOE/FOI's decision to deny Appellant's request for a fee waiver. In addition, we note that Appellant apparently remailed the supplements to the DOE/FOI on

December 26, 2000.

Case No. VFA-0648, 28 DOE ¶ 80,150

February 9, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Dianne D. Taylor

Date of Filing: January 24, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0648

On January 24, 2001, Dianne D. Taylor (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Savannah River Operations Office (Savannah River) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on December 21, 2000. That determination concerned a request for information the Appellant submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination indicated that no responsive documents were identified as a result of the search conducted in response to the Appellant's request. In her Appeal, the Appellant asserts that Savannah River's search for records was inadequate. If granted, this Appeal would require Savannah River to conduct a further search.

Background

On December 5, 2000, the Appellant requested a copy of the personnel security file for her father, Ernest Gerric Duncan, Jr., as well as his radiation exposure, medical, and personnel records. Request Letter dated December 5, 2000, from Dianne D. Taylor to Pauline Conner, FOI/Privacy Act Officer, Savannah River (Request Letter). On December 21, 2000, Savannah River issued a determination stating that a thorough search was conducted, including contractor-owned records. Determination Letter dated December 21, 2000, from David G. Darugh, Authorizing Official, Savannah River, to Dianne Taylor. Savannah River found no documents responsive to the request. Id. On January 24, 2001, the Appellant filed this Appeal, challenging Savannah River's search as inadequate. Appeal Letter finalized January 24, 2001, from Dianne D. Taylor to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter).

Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler,

Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985) (Miller); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

The Appellant is requesting a copy of Mr. Duncan's personnel security file and his radiation exposure, medical, and personnel records. Request Letter. Savannah River's FOIA Officer informed us that the Savannah River Personnel Security Department searched its computer database for Mr. Duncan's name and social security number. No responsive records were found. The contractor on site, Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC), also conducted a search of the medical and legal departments' computer databases, paper files and indexes of old records that had been sent to storage, using both Mr. Duncan's name and social security number. Electronic Mail Message sent January 30, 2001, from Pauline Conner, FOI/Privacy Act Officer, Savannah River, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney- Examiner, OHA; Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, January 25, 2000, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, and Pauline Conner, FOI/Privacy Act Officer, Savannah River (January 25, 2000 Telephone Memorandum). No responsive records were located. WSRC's radiation department searched its year-by-year computerized exposure listing, "lektriever" database,(1) and microfiche and microfilm. No responsive records were located. Id. Finally, WSRC's personnel department searched its old indexes of records. No responsive records were located. Id. None of these departments destroys records. Id.

When asked if records for other employees from the early 1950s had ever been located, the FOI/Privacy Act Officer stated that records for 20-year employees had been found. January 25, 2000 Telephone Memorandum. However, she indicated that Mr. Duncan worked at Savannah River for only a year or two. Id. During the time the Appellant claimed her father worked at Savannah River, the site was just being built. Id. Further, during the time he worked there, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) did the personnel security investigations, not Savannah River. She indicated that possibly the FBI could have responsive records on him. Id. In any event, no records responsive to the Appellant's request were found at Savannah River or its contractor, WSRC.(2)

We are convinced that Savannah River followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material the Appellant sought in her request. See Miller, 779 F.2d at 1384-85. The fact that the search did not uncover documents that the Appellant believes may be in the possession of DOE does not mean that the search was inadequate. Savannah River searched both its records and those of the contractor, using Mr. Duncan's name and social security number. Both computer and hand searches were conducted. No responsive records were located. We cannot identify, nor has the Appellant, another office at either Savannah River or Westinghouse that would have responsive records. Therefore, we will deny the Appellant's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 24, 2001, by Dianne D. Taylor, Case No. VFA-0648, is hereby denied.

(1)"Lektriever" is the brand name of a mechanical, revolving shelf file where the Westinghouse radiation department's paper files and microfiche records are stored. The database keeps a listing of every name in the records system along with comments about whether the file is paper or microfiche, the social security number, termination date, and address. On January 12, 2001, Mr. Darugh responded that because Union Carbide was the prime contractor at the Oak Ridge Operations Office and not at Savannah River, Ms Taylor should contact Oak Ridge to determine if it had information on her father. Letter dated January 12, 2001, from David G. Darugh, Authorizing Official, Savannah River, to Dianne D. Taylor. It is possible that the FBI or the Oak Ridge Operations Office may have Mr. Duncan's personnel security file.

Case No. VFA-0649, 28 DOE ¶ 80,153

March 15, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Martin Becker

Date of Filing: February 7, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0649

On February 7, 2001, Martin Becker filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Savannah River Operations Office (DOE/SR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on January 12, 2001. In its determination, DOE/SR informed Mr. Becker that it had no documents responsive to the request for information he submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

On September 22, 2000, Mr. Becker filed a FOIA request with the DOE/SR, seeking a copy of any lease entered into by Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) (including any subsidiaries or affiliates thereof) at Centennial Corporate Center in Aiken, South Carolina, since January 1, 1996. WSRC is the management and operating (M&O) contractor at the DOE Savannah River Site.

DOE/SR responded with a determination letter dated October 26, 2000. The determination letter stated,

The documents responsive to your request are neither owned nor possessed by [the DOE]. Specifically, DOE's [M&O contract with WSRC] provides:

The following records are considered property of the Contractor and are not Government documents: non-accounting records relating to any procurement action by the Contractor.

The records you have requested involve a WSRC subcontract and are thus procurement-related records of WSRC. DOE itself performed a search and we have no documents responsive to your request.

On November 13, 2000, Mr. Becker filed an Appeal from DOE/SR's determination. We issued a decision on that Appeal on December 11, 2000, in which we found that DOE/SR had failed to set forth an adequate explanation as to why the lease in question was contractor-owned. Thus, we remanded the matter to DOE/SR to issue a new determination and either release any responsive documents, provide the adequate explanation that was lacking from its first determination, or provide another adequate explanation for withholding them.

DOE/SR issued a new determination on December 21, 2000, in which DOE/SR's Authorizing Official stated,

In my original final determination dated October 26, 2000, I stated that the lease agreement was considered contractor-records. However, an oversight was made and I should have also stated that we have no documents responsive to your request. Therefore, the explanation for not releasing the documents you requested is that they do not exist. WSRC did not enter into any new leases, renewals or extensions at the Centennial Corporate Center since January 1, 1996. . . . As such, we do not have and never did have documents responsive to your request.

Letter from David G. Darugh, DOE/SR, to Martin Becker (December 21, 2000). In a subsequent letter to Mr. Becker, DOE/SR stated, "Any lease currently in place at the Centennial Corporate Center involves private interests not associated with our M&O contract between WSRC and [DOE]." Letter from David G. Darugh, DOE/SR, to Martin Becker (January 12, 2001).

On February 7, 2001, Mr. Becker filed the present appeal, arguing that the "requested lease does not involve ?private interests not associated' with the M&O contract issued to WSRC." Appeal at 1. Mr. Becker cites a document submitted with his appeal as evidence that

1. The tenant of the Centennial Corporate Center in Aiken, South Carolina, is Westinghouse Safety Management Solutions (WSMS).
2. WSMS is a wholly-owned subsidiary of WSRC.
3. WSMS is a WSRC subcontractor.
4. WSMS bills WSRC for reimbursement of costs incurred, including the cost of rental space, through an Inter-Work Requisition (IWR).

Appeal at 2 (footnotes omitted). Based on the above facts, Mr. Becker argues that federal regulations require "WSRC to maintain a copy of the lease between WSMS and Centennial Partners, and these lease documents are property of the Government." Id.

II. Analysis

Unless requested material falls within one of nine statutory exemptions, the FOIA generally requires a federal agency to release its records to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3. See also NLRB v. Robbins Tire & Rubber Co., 437 U.S. 214, 242 (1978). In our December 11, 2000 decision, we found that because "WSRC is not an ?agency' for purposes of the FOIA, and [DOE/SR] has not obtained the responsive documents, . . . the lease is not an agency record" subject to the FOIA. However, we also found that the lease may be subject to disclosure under DOE regulations. Specifically, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) states, "[w]hen a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)."

A. Whether WSRC Possesses Records Subject to Release Under DOE Regulations

WSRC's M&O contract with the DOE contains a provision entitled "Access to and Ownership of Records," a standard clause which DOE regulations require be inserted in all M&O contracts. 48 C.F.R. 970.5204.3. Section I.88 of the contract states, "Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government . . . ." CONTRACT NO. DE-AC09-96SR18500, MODIFICATION NO. M068 at 102. Thus, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) requires that DOE make available to the public records that are in the possession of WSRC that are "property of the Government" under this clause.

However, as noted above, WSRC has stated that it has no document responsive to Mr. Becker's request. The company explained that in response to the request, the Facilities Management Group and the Procurement Group were contacted regarding leasing activities of WSRC for space in the Centennial buildings. Both groups responded there were no new leases, extensions, or renewals after 1/1/96 on space at Centennial Corporate Center. The initial lease was for the period 10/17/91 to 10/17/96, and WSRC did not exercise its 5-year renewal option. The Procurement Department was not involved with any negotiations on behalf of WSMS for its space leased in Centennial.

Electronic Mail from Adrian Smith, WSRC, to Steven Goering, OHA (February 26, 2001). Mr. Becker contends that, because WSRC incurred costs in reimbursing WSMS for a portion of the payments WSMS made pursuant to the lease, WSRC is required by regulation to keep a copy of the lease between WSMS and Centennial Partners. We have reviewed the regulation cited by Mr. Becker,(1) which we discuss in greater detail below, and find that while it does impose certain record- keeping requirements on WSRC, the lease in question is not necessarily among the documents that the regulation requires WSRC to maintain. More importantly, the regulation directly relevant to this case, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1), requires DOE to make available records that are actually "in the possession" of WSRC, not records that the appellant argues ought to be in WSRC's possession. We find that WSRC has provided us with a reasoned explanation for its conclusion that it does not have a copy of the lease between WSMS and Centennial Partners.

B. Whether WSMS Possesses Records Subject to Release Under DOE Regulations

We also asked WSMS whether any of its contracts with the DOE (or subcontracts thereto) contain the "Access to and Ownership of Records" clause, which DOE regulations also require be inserted in certain subcontracts. 48 C.F.R. § 970.5204-3(g). WSMS's General Counsel responded, "Time limitations prevent me from providing you with an exact tally of which of our contracts contain [this clause]. A few of our many contracts would meet the threshold for its passdown." Electronic Mail from Matt Alan, General Counsel, WSMS, to Steven Goering, OHA (February 22, 2001). Thus, to the extent WSMS acquires or generates records in the performance of any of its contracts containing the clause, those records are generally property of the Government, which 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) requires DOE make available to the public, subject to certain exceptions set forth in subsection (b) of the ownership of records clause.

In this case, the relevant exception is contained in subsection (b)(3), which classifies as property of the contractor "[r]ecords relating to any procurement action by the contractor, except for records that under 48 CFR 970.5232-3, Accounts, Records, and Inspection, are described as the property of the government; . . ." 48 C.F.R. 970.5204.3(b)(3). WSMS contends that the lease by which it procured office space "was executed independent of performance under any one or more DOE contracts" and in any event is a record relating to a procurement action by the contractor, and therefore is property of WSMS. Electronic Mail from Matt Alan, General Counsel, WSMS, to Steven Goering, OHA (February 22, 2001).

WSMS is clearly correct that a record acquired or generated independent of performance under a contract containing the ownership of records clause could not have been acquired or generated in the performance of that contract, and therefore could not be property of the Government under that clause. However, the information provided by WSMS does not address whether additional copies of the lease were acquired or generated in WSMS's performance of a contract containing the relevant clause. WSMS contends that when applying the ownership of records clause to any copy of the lease, only the circumstances of the original acquisition or generation of the document, in this case the execution of the lease, are relevant. Electronic Mail from Matt Alan, General Counsel, WSMS, to Steven Goering, OHA (February 28, 2001). WSMS reasons that to the extent the lease was originally acquired or generated "independent of performance under any one or more DOE contracts," the lease and all copies thereof fall outside of the scope of the ownership of records clause. Thus, WSMS did not provide any information on what other copies of the lease are in its possession and under what circumstances those copies were generated.

We disagree with WSMS's interpretation of the ownership of records clause. To illustrate how a copy of the lease in question would in fact become property of the Government, we turn to the example of a copy of the lease generated in compliance with 48 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3, "Accounts, Records, and Inspection," which we mentioned above and now quote in pertinent part:

970.5232-3 Accounts, records, and inspection.

As prescribed in 48 CFR 970.3270(a)(2), insert the following clause:

Accounts, Records, and Inspection (DEC 2000)

(a) Accounts. The contractor shall maintain a separate and distinct set of accounts, records, documents, and other evidence showing and supporting: all allowable costs incurred; collections accruing to the contractor in connection with the work under this contract, other applicable credits, negotiated fixed amounts, and fee accruals under this contract; and the receipt, use, and disposition of all Government property coming into the possession of the contractor under this contract. The system of accounts employed by the contractor shall be satisfactory to DOE and in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles consistently applied.

(d) Disposition of records. Except as agreed upon by the Government and the contractor, all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents, system files, data bases, and other data evidencing costs allowable, collections accruing to the contractor in connection with the work under this contract, other applicable credits, and fee accruals under this contract, shall be the property of the Government, and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the contractor either as the contracting officer may from time to time direct during the progress of the work or, in any event, as the contracting officer shall direct upon completion or termination of this contract and final audit of accounts hereunder. Except as otherwise provided in this contract, including provisions of Clause__, Access to and ownership of records, all other records in the possession of the contractor relating to this contract shall be preserved by the contractor for a period of three years after final payment under this contract or otherwise disposed of in such manner as may be agreed upon by the Government and the contractor.

(g) Subcontracts. The contractor further agrees to require the inclusion of provisions similar to those in paragraphs (a) through (g) and paragraph (h) of this clause in all subcontracts (including fixed-price or unit-price subcontracts or purchase orders) of any tier entered into hereunder where, under the terms of the subcontract, costs incurred are a factor in determining the amount payable to the subcontractor.

48 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3. Any of WSMS's contracts that contains the above clause requires WSMS to "maintain a separate and distinct set of accounts, records, documents, and other evidence" as described in paragraph (a) of the clause. If, pursuant to paragraph (a), WSMS generated a copy of the lease and maintains that copy as part of a separate and distinct set of records, that copy is a record distinct from the original copy of the lease, and that distinct record clearly was generated by WSMS in its performance of any contract containing the ownership of records clause.

Moreover, as discussed above, the ownership of records clause specifically brings within its scope records relating to any procurement action that are acquired or generated in the performance of a contract containing the clause, if those records are of the type described in 48 C.F.R. § 970.5232- 3(d), i.e., "all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents, system files, data bases, and other data evidencing costs allowable, collections accruing to the contractor in connection with the work under this contract, other applicable credits, and fee accruals under this contract . . . ." Certainly a copy of the lease generated pursuant to paragraph (a) of the "Accounts, Records, and Inspection" clause would fall within the scope of paragraph (d) of the same clause, and as such would be property of the government under the ownership of records clause.

The WSMS General Counsel offers a different interpretation, arguing that a subcontractor's HQ lease may fall under the ?supporting documents' language [of paragraph (d) of the "Account, Records, and Inspections" clause]. I say ?may' because there is nothing requiring DOE or WSRC to request the lease. . . .

Consistent with our earlier discussions, DOE owns such documents solely to the extent the record is in DOE's possession.

Electronic Mail from Matt Alan, General Counsel, WSMS, to Steven Goering, OHA (March 6, 2001).

However, we see nothing in paragraph (d) of the "Account, Records, and Inspections" clause indicating that ownership of a record by the Government is dependent upon the Government having possession of the record. Indeed, the paragraph specifically refers to records that are "in the possession of the contractor . . . ." Similarly, the DOE FOIA regulation that provides access to records that are property of the Government states that it applies to "records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor. . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) (emphasis added).

IV. Conclusion

We find, as explained above, that WSRC has provided a reasonable explanation for its conclusion that it does not have a copy of the lease requested by Mr. Becker. WSMS, on the other hand, has at least one copy of the lease, but claims that any and all copies of the lease are property of WSMS. The above analysis shows, by way of the example of a copy created under the "Account, Records, and Inspections" clause, that a copy of the lease certainly can be property of the Government under the ownership of records clause, and therefore subject to the DOE FOIA regulations.

Based on the foregoing, we find that any copy of the lease requested by Mr. Becker that is in the possession of WSMS and that was generated in compliance with 48 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3, "Accounts, Records, and Inspection," is a record that is property of the Government subject to disclosure under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). We will therefore remand this matter to DOE/SR, which shall, in compliance with 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1), obtain a copy of any such record from WSMS and provide it to Mr. Becker, unless the record or reasonably segregable portions of it are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). If WSMS generated no copy of the lease in compliance with 48 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3, DOE/SR shall request that WSMS identify, using our interpretation of the relevant contract clauses as set forth in this opinion, any copy of the lease that was in any other way acquired or generated by WSMS in its performance of a contract containing the relevant ownership of records clause. DOE/SR shall obtain a copy of any such record from WSMS if it finds, in accord with our analysis contained in this opinion, that the record is property of the Government. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1) ("DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor"). DOE/SR shall provide a copy of the record to Mr. Becker, unless the record or reasonably segregable portions of it are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Martin Becker on February 7, 2001, Case No. VFA-0649 is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Savannah River Operations Office to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0650, 28 DOE ¶ 80,152

March 2, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Radioactive Waste Management Associates

Date of Filing:February 12, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0650

Radioactive Waste Management Associates (RWMA) filed this Appeal in response to a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Ohio Field Office (OH). The determination deals with a request that RWMA submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its Appeal, RWMA requests the release of material responsive to the request. As explained below, we will remand RWMA's request for further processing.

I. Background

RWMA's FOIA request sought the release of records relating to "the handling, reprocessing, and storage of uranium recovered at the NFS-West Valley reprocessing plant and stored at ... Fernald, Ohio." OH located one responsive document, a two-volume draft report titled "Ohio Field Office Recycled Uranium Project Report, May 15, 2000, DOE-OH-00-0001" (the draft report). However, OH withheld the draft report in its entirety, claiming it was exempt from mandatory release pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5). RWMA then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that all federal agency records be made available to the public, subject to certain specified exemptions. The Act provides, however, for nine categories of records that are exempt from mandatory disclosure. OH withheld the draft report under Exemption 5 of the FOIA, which exempts "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). This provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. Department of Health and Human Services, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

The fact that a document meets the criteria for withholding discussed above does not necessarily mean that it may be withheld in its entirety. The FOIA requires that “any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, material need not be segregated and released when the exempt and nonexempt material are so "inextricably intertwined" that release of the nonexempt material would compromise the exempt material, or where nonexempt material is so small and interspersed with exempt material that it would pose "an inordinate burden" to segregate it. Lead Industries Assoc. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2d Cir. 1979).

OH states in the Determination Letter that “because of the way the findings are presented in this draft report, it would be virtually impossible to segregate out any nonexempt material.” Based on our review of a sample of the draft report, however, we find that OH should reconsider the issue of segregability. For example, the draft report contains a table of contents, a list of tables, a list of figures, and introductory matter that do not appear to qualify for withholding under Exemption 5.

III. Conclusion

On remand, OH must review the withheld document, segregate and release all nonexempt portions of the documents, and issue a new determination that justifies any withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Radioactive Waste Management Associates (Case No. VFA-0650) is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Ohio Field Office for further proceedings consistent with the guidelines set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are located, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Robert J. Ylimaki

Date of Filing: February 16, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0651

This Decision concerns an Appeal filed by Robert J. Ylimaki from a determination that the Chicago Operations Office issued to him on January 24, 2001. In that determination, Chicago denied in part a request for information that Mr. Ylimaki filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Mr. Ylimaki sought access to the dollar amounts of Special Act or Service Awards given to grade GS-15 employees at the Chicago Office, broken down by division. He also requested the salaries of specific Chicago Office employees and the amounts of any performance awards or bonuses given to these employees during fiscal year 1999. In its response, the Chicago Office withheld the division-by-division breakdown under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6). Exemption 6 protects from mandatory disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Id. In support of its determination, the Chicago Office stated that since the number of GS- 15 employees per division is so small, disclosure of the withheld information would "allow with minimal analysis and the process of elimination, the identification of individual special act awards by employee." The Chicago Office added that an individual "has a significant privacy interest in protecting from disclosure the amount of his or her award, since releasing the amount would allow direct comparison between employee awards and almost certainly incite jealousy in those employees receiving lower awards." Determination at 1. However, the Chicago Office released a list of the GS- 15 bonuses broken down by major groups, and the salaries of specific employees. The amounts of these employees' bonuses were also withheld under Exemption 6.

In his Appeal, Mr. Ylimaki contends that federal regulations require that the requested information be released. He cites 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a), an Office of Personnel Management regulation, which states, in pertinent part, that the "following information . . . about most present and former Federal employees, is available to the public: . . . (4) Present and past annual salary rates (including performance awards or bonuses, incentive awards, merit pay amount, Meritorious or Distinguished Executive Ranks, and allowances and differentials)." With regard to the Chicago Office's application of Exemption 6, he contends that the privacy interests of the employees involved is minimal at best, and that there is a substantial public interest in releasing evidence of what he claims are abuses in the awarding of bonuses at the Chicago Office. He therefore requests that we instruct the Chicago Office to release the withheld material.

II. Analysis

Contrary to Mr. Ylimaki's position, 5 C.F.R. § 293.311 does not necessarily require the release of the information that he seeks. Paragraph (b) of that regulation provides that the information described in paragraph (a) need not be released if it

(1) Is selected in such a way that would reveal more about the employee on whom information is sought than the six enumerated items [in paragraph (a)], the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy; or

(2) Would otherwise be protected from mandatory disclosure under an exemption of the FOIA.

5 C.F.R. § 293.311(b). In its determination, the Chicago Office did not contend that the release of the requested information would reveal more about the employee on whom information is sought than the items enumerated in paragraph (a); instead, it took the position that one of those items, i.e., performance awards or bonuses, is itself exempt from mandatory release under the FOIA. We must therefore evaluate the Chicago Office's application of Exemption 6.

The purpose of that Exemption is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See also Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999); Sowell, Todd, Lafitte and Watson LLC., 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (1999) (Sowell). In keeping with the rule that exemptions to the FOIA be construed narrowly, see EPA vs. Mink, 410 U.S. 73 (1973), the "clearly unwarranted" language of Exemption 6 weights the scales in favor of disclosure. Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

Applying these standards to the facts of this case, we believe that a significant privacy interest is at stake. We find that the GS-15 employees in the Chicago Office have a significant interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their bonuses. As set forth in the determination, disclosure of these amounts would almost certainly lead to comparisons between bonuses given to employees, and could engender jealousy among those who received lesser amounts, or who received no awards, and promote discord in the workplace. See, e.g., Thomas J. Balamut, 28 DOE ¶ _____, Case No. VFA- 0643 (February 6, 2001); Jurgis Paliulionis, 27 DOE ¶ 80,235 (1999). Next, we find that release of the requested information would further the public interest by helping to reveal how the federal government compensates its employees. Since we have found that there are competing privacy and public interests in the information in question, we must now balance these interests to determine whether the information should be disclosed. For the reasons that follow, we conclude that the GS-15 employees' privacy interests outweigh the public interest in disclosure, and that the Chicago Office properly withheld the material in question.

At the outset, we recognize that federal employees are public servants, and that the public has a significant interest in knowing how its employees are paid. This interest is reflected in the fact that the DOE and other federal agencies generally make available to the public the salaries of their employees. See, e.g., 5 C.F.R. § 293.311. In fact, such information is so readily available that we have previously stated that it must be released under the FOIA because federal employees have no reasonable expectation of privacy in this area. The Valley Times, 27 DOE ¶ 80,247 (1999). The fact that bonuses and performance awards are a part of their recipients' compensation and are specifically referred to in the regulation under which federal salaries are generally released indicates that the public interest in this information is significant.

However, the Chicago Office has demonstrated that there is a substantial possibility that harassment of the GS-15 employees would result from the release of this type of information. Specifically, the Chicago Office has cited specific instances of inappropriate behavior by some of its employees. See letter from Chicago Office to Office of Hearings and Appeals, March 15, 2001, at 2; memorandum of March 13, 2001 telephone conversation between Linda Rhode, Chicago Office, and Robert Palmer, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Such harassment would disrupt the functioning of the Chicago Office and would adversely affect its ability to perform the responsibilities with which it is charged. We have previously found the potential for harassment of employees to be a sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 6. See, e.g., William Hyde, 18 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988). Because the potential for harassment in this case outweighs the public interest in disclosure, we will deny Mr. Ylimaki's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Robert J. Ylimaki, Case No. VFA-0651, on February 16, 2001, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner:David A. Mitchell

Date of Filing:February 20, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0652

This decision addresses the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) appeal filed by David Mitchell (appellant) pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, the appeal will be granted in part and remanded for a new determination in accordance with this decision.

I. Background

The appellant(1) filed a FOIA request dated October 26, 2000 with the DOE Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management (OCRWM) in Yucca Mountain, Nevada, seeking records relating to:

OCRWM Management's investigation of the charge of harassment and intimidation made by Bill Belke, Site NRC, against Bob Clark, Acting Director of OCRWM's Office of Quality Assurance . . . including a November 23, 1999 report filed with the OCRWM Concerns Program.

By letter dated October 27, 2000, the appellant amended his FOIA request to seek additional records relating to:

Concerns raised by [the appellant] in late summer/early fall 1999 to the [DOE OCRWM] Concerns Program, regarding Quality Assurance and Work Environment Issues, relating to his employment with MACTEC, Inc. and work performed at the Sandia National Laboratory and Yucca Mountain Project [including] those concerns that were referred by OCRWM to the DOE Inspector General and DOE Security [and] the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

By letter dated December 20, 2000 to the appellant's attorney, the OCRWM FOIA Office (OCRWM/FOI) partially denied the appellant's FOIA request, stating the following:

[D]ocuments consisting of 1,303 pages in which all third party names, residential addresses, employee numbers and/or social security numbers, employee signatures, their listed witness names and third party performance appraisals contained within have been redacted pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(6) [("Exemption 6") of the FOIA], because release of this information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [that] far outweighs any possible public interest to be served by release of this information.

Also pursuant to Exemption 6, the OCRWM/FOI withheld in their entirety 7 resumes consisting of 66 pages, stating that exempt information is "so intermingled [with nonexempt information] that no substantive portions could be segregated for release as nonexempt." In addition, pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9, the OCRWM/FOI responded, "you are categorized as a commercial requester." The OCRWM/FOI further stated that although the appellant had originally stated a willingness to pay an amount of not more than $100, "when this office informed your firm of the actual cost, an e-mail confirmation was received from [your assistant], stating your firm's willingness to pay the amount of $951.20." (2)

The appellant, who has filed a reprisal complaint against a DOE contractor and submitted his FOIA requests "for the purpose of obtaining information regarding the government investigation [into his] allegations," appealed from the OCRWM/FOI's determination on February 20, 2001. In his appeal, he asserts the following:

(A) The OCRWM/FOI was "overzealous" in redacting certain documents under Exemption 6, since many of the redacted documents had been supplied in unredacted form to the appellant through case discovery, "created as a result of concerns raised by the appellant to the DOE," or previously exchanged between the DOE and the appellant himself. The Appellant further asserts that "information obtained by the DOE in investigating . . . concerns [including documents relevant to the DOE's Interim Final Report] should not be withheld from the person who raised those concerns."

(B) The OCRWM/FOI erroneously categorized the appellant as a "commercial requester" for purposes of charging processing fees associated with this FOIA requests.

(C) The appellant is entitled to either a fee waiver or a reduction in fees in proportion to the amount of time "inappropriately spent reviewing and redacting information from documents previously produced by or to" the appellant.

(D) The OCRWM erred in charging the appellant $951.20 for processing his FOIA request, since the appellant had stated a willingness to pay not more than $100 and the OCRWM denied him the opportunity to narrow his FOIA requests after he learned of the actual cost. The appellant maintains that because he needed the requested documents for an upcoming trial, he was effectively forced to accept the charge and subsequently dispute it through this administrative appeal.

We address each of the appellant's assertions in kind below.

II. Analysis

A. Whether Exemption 6 Protects the Redacted and Withheld Information

With nine exemptions, the FOIA requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request. Exemption 6 protects from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). "Similar files" include all documents which contain information that applies to a particular individual. Department of State v. Washington Post, 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). If documents are of the type described in Exemption 6, then an agency must undertake a three step analysis, as enumerated by the Supreme Court in Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Auth., 510 U.S. 487, 495-96 (1994) (FLRA), in determining whether Exemption 6's protection applies. First, an agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld under Exemption 6. See also Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. Finally, the agency must weigh the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of that person's privacy. With these principles in mind, we shall now review the contested documents.

1. Documents Relating to Appellant's Reprisal Allegations

The first set of documents relate to the appellant's allegations of reprisal against a DOE contractor and consist of a schedule and transcripts of interviews of contractor employees; pages from two DOE Interim Final Reports of investigations (and addendums thereto) into the appellant's allegations; an Issue Analysis Plan prepared by the OCRWM Employee Concerns Program (EC) manager; various Deficiency Reports and Quality Assurance Checklists prepared by contractor employees; and various handwritten and typed memoranda, letters, and emails (many authored by or addressed to the appellant) regarding the EC's investigation into the appellant's allegations. We have reviewed unredacted copies of the documents and, as discussed below, we find that in every instance the OCRWM/FOI properly and meticulously applied Exemption 6 in withholding only third party names, residential addresses, employee or social security numbers, and employee signatures (collectively, "the redacted information").(3)

As a threshold matter, we find that the redacted information constitutes a "similar file," because it applies to particular individuals.(4) Having so found, we must next determine whether disclosure of the information would constitute an invasion of privacy and how severe an invasion it would be. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 763, defines privacy as encompassing "the individual's control of information concerning his or her person," which "includes the prosaic . . . as well as the intimate and potentially embarrassing," Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. HUD, 936 F.2d 1300, 1302 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (PDWPF).

In this case, the redacted information includes not merely names, but also intimate information, such as addresses and employee and social security numbers. We therefore find that there is a privacy interest in the redacted information. Furthermore, because the purpose for which a FOIA requester seeks information is immaterial, if we were to find that the appellant is entitled to receive the information sought, that same information would have to be provided, for example, to creditors, salesmen, and commercial organizations. PDWPF, 936 F.2d at 1303. See also, Reporters Committee, 498 U.S. at 771 (Congress clearly intended the FOIA "to give any member of the public as much right to disclosure as one with a special interest [in a particular document]"). We therefore find that the privacy interest in the redacted information is significant.(5)

On the other hand, the public interest in disclosure of the redacted information is virtually nonexistent and consequently does not override the significant privacy interests involved. Although appellant claims a unique entitlement to disclosure of the redacted information because it relates to allegations and concerns raised by him, the relevant inquiry in determining whether there is a public interest in disclosure is the extent to which disclosure would serve the "core purpose of the FOIA," i.e., to "contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of government." FLRA, 510 U.S. at 1012. Put another way, proper emphasis is upon the public's right "to be informed about what their government is up to," not the specific interest of a person seeking disclosure in a particular case. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 772. See also, Professional Review Organization v. Department of HHS, 607 F. Supp. 423, 427 (D.D.C. 1985). "[W]hether an invasion of privacy is warranted cannot turn on the purposes for which the request for information is made." Reporters Committee, 498 U.S. at 772. The redacted information in the memos consists of the names of contractor employees. The names deal with the alleged failure of a contractor to comply with relevant laws. In this case, the names do not cast light on what the DOE "is up to," and there is no obvious public interest in its disclosure. See PDWPF, 936 F.2d at 1303 (information potentially revealing contractor's failure to pay prevailing wages on HUD-assisted projects does not shed light on HUD activity). In addition, the fact that a small portion of the redacted information is contained in DOE Interim Final Reports regarding the appellant's allegations does not change the fact that the information regards the activities of private, non-federal employees and has no apparent bearing upon government activities.

Furthermore, that the redacted information may be contained in discoverable documents is irrelevant for purposes of the FOIA and Exemption 6. “Regardless of the requested information’s usefulness in a separate proceeding, the FOIA does not supplant discovery or enlarge discovery rights. Being a private litigant neither diminishes nor enhances the merits of a FOIA request.” Barvick v. Cisneros, 941 F. Supp. 1015, 1020 (D. Kan. 1996) (Barvick) (citing National Labor Relations Board v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 143 n.10 (1975). In the same vein, also immaterial is the fact that the redacted information is contained in documents originally created by or sent to the appellant himself, as the identity of the requesting party generally has no bearing on the merits of his FOIA request. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 771.

Based upon the foregoing, we find that the OCRWM/FOI properly applied Exemption 6 to the redacted information.

2. The Resumes

The second set of disputed documents consists of 7 resumes of contractor employees (collectively, “the resumes”), which the OCRWM/FOI wholly withheld under Exemption 6, based upon its determination that exempt information in the resumes is “so intermingled that no substantive portions could be segregated for release as non-exempt.” We agree that the resumes must be completely withheld, but do so based upon the determination that Exemption 6 protects all information in the resumes, i.e., there is no non-exempt information to segregate.

Our review of unredacted copies of the resumes reveals that they are inherently personal in nature, i.e., pertain to particular individuals, and therefore invocation of Exemption 6 analysis is proper. We further find that the resumes trigger a privacy interest, as they contain the names of private individuals, and their addresses, telephone numbers, education and employment histories. As discussed above, an individual has a significant privacy interest in his name and contact information. Furthermore, each non-federal employee represented by one of the resumes has at least a small privacy interest in the history set forth therein. Even a nominal privacy interest is sufficient to justify withholding the resumes in this case, because there is no public interest involved. As with the redacted information, the resumes regard private contractor employees and, as such, disclosure will not contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. The resumes therefore may be withheld in their entirety.

B. Whether The Appellant is a Commercial Use Requester

The FOIA delineates three types of costs--"search costs," "duplication costs," and "review costs"--and places requesters into three categories that determine which of these costs a given requester must pay. If a requester wants the information for a "commercial use," it must pay for all three types of costs incurred. In contrast, educational institutions and the news media are required to pay only duplication costs, and all other requesters are required to pay search and duplication costs but not review costs. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b).

The appellant asserts that the OCRWM/FOI erroneously categorized him as a “commercial use requester.” We agree. In defending its categorization of the appellant, the OCRWM/FOI explained that it looked to the attorney who had filed the FOIA requests on behalf the appellant. OHA telephone conversation with the OCRWM/FOI Officer, Feb. 29, 2001. The OCRWM/FOI asserted that because the attorney directly filed the FOIA requests, presumably for a fee to be paid by her client (i.e., the appellant), the attorney was properly charged the commercial use rate. For the purpose of assessing processing fees, however, when one party files a FOIA request on behalf of another, agencies must look to the party for whom the request is made. See Government Accountability Project (GAP), 25 DOE ¶ 80,203 (1996) (analyzing whether client seeking documents, not organization that actually filed request, is “commercial use requester”); OMB Fee Guidelines, 52 Fed. Reg. at 10,017-18. Thus, in determining whether the commercial rate applies to this case, we must look through the attorney to the appellant.

In doing so, we find that the appellant is not a commercial use requester. A "commercial use" is defined as "one that furthers a commercial, trade or profit interest as those are commonly understood." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.2(c). In this case, the appellant seeks to use the requested information in proceedings stemming from his complaint of reprisal against a DOE contractor. Information helpful to a retaliation claim may further a requester's interest in compensation or retribution, but not an interest in commerce, trade, or profit. McClellan Ecological Seepage Situation v. Carlucci, 835 F.2d 1282, 1285 (9th Cir. 1987). Therefore, the appellant is not a commercial use requester for purposes of FOIA. See GAP, supra.

C. Whether Appellant is Entitled to a Fee Waiver or Reduction of Fees

The appellant asserts that he is entitled to a fee waiver or reduction of fees for "time inappropriately spent reviewing and redacting information previously produced by or to [the appellant].(6) We disagree.

In asserting that he is entitled to a waiver or reduction of fees, appellant fails to recognize the distinction between documents produced through the FOIA and documents produced through case discovery. As discussed above, the identity of a requester generally has no bearing upon the merits of his FOIA request; even the fact that the requester has unredacted copies of documents in his possession has no bearing upon whether those same documents must be produced to him in redacted form under the FOIA. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 772. Because we have found that the responsive documents were properly redacted in this case, it may be appropriate to charge redaction fees, if the appellant, once placed in the proper request category, is subject to such fees.

D. Whether Charging Appellant Processing Fees in Excess of $100 Was Proper

Appellant asserts that because he submitted a written statement to the OCRWM/FOI that he would pay processing fees up to $100 and requested advance notice if the fees would exceed that amount, the OCRWM/FOI should not have charged him $951.20, or any amount in excess of $100. Although we do not have jurisdiction to simply reduce FOIA processing fees, we contacted the Director of the DOE FOI/Privacy Act Division (the FOIA Director) regarding this matter. The Director indicated that it would have been proper for the OCRWM/FOI to obtain the appellant's authorization for the greater amount prior to incurring the $951.20 cost, allow the appellant to narrow his FOIA request, incur production costs only up to $100, or choose to produce all of the responsive documents to him at a charge of no more than $100. OHA telephone conversation with the Director, Mar. 15, 2001. Although resolution of the fee dispute remains with the appellant and the OCRWM/FOI, we note that our finding that the OCRWM/FOI improperly categorized appellant as a commercial requester may effect a reduction in fees charged.

III. Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing analysis, we find that the redacted information and the withheld resumes are properly protected from disclosure under Exemption 6. We further find that the appellant is not a commercial use requester for purposes of assessing processing fees, but that he is not entitled to or reduction in fees, except to the extent that his improper categorization may have affected the fees charged to him. This matter is therefore remanded to the DOE Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management for a new determination as to how the appellant must be categorized under 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(a)(ii) and 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b), for the purpose of assessing processing fees.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The appeal filed by David Mitchell on February 20, 2001, Case Number VFA-0652, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOIA/Privacy Act Division of the Department of Energy Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)All documents filed by the appellant in this matter were actually filed on his behalf by his attorney.

(2)As discussed below, the appellant consented to pay $951.20 with the intent of subsequently appealing the fee.

(3)Although the OCRWM/FOI indicated that it also withheld third party witness names and performance appraisals, no such information was redacted from the contested documents sent to this office for review by the appellant. Most of the redacted information therein is contractor employee names.

(4)Because the type of privacy and public interests associated with the redacted information is essentially the same, it is unnecessary to perform a separate analysis of each piece of redacted information. We therefore will conduct an Exemption 6 analysis for the redacted information in its entirety.

(5)We note that because we find that there is no identifiable public interest in disclosure (discussed infra), even a nominal privacy interest would weigh against disclosure.

(6)”We note that appellant has not asserted that he is entitled to a waiver of or reduction in fees under the FOIA’s fee waiver provisions. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(a)(iii).

Case No. VFA-0653, 28 DOE ¶ 80,166

April 24, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:H & J Tool & Die Company, Incorporated

Date of Filing:March 12, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0653

H & J Tool & Die Company, Incorporated ("the Firm") has appealed two determinations issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. On March 12, 2001, the Firm appealed a determination issued on January 19, 2001, by the Office of the Inspector General ("OIG") on the grounds that the OIG had failed to follow proper procedures and had improperly withheld certain information.(1) On April 4, 2001, the Firm appealed a related determination that was issued by the FOIA and Privacy Act Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat (FOIA Office) on November 29, 2000, on the grounds that DOE had failed to conduct an adequate search for documents that were responsive to its FOIA request.

I. BACKGROUND

By letter dated November 16, 2000, the Firm sent a letter to the FOIA Office seeking documents regarding a complaint that had been filed with the OIG as well as all other documents relating to the Firm. On November 29, 2000, the FOIA Office sent the Firm a letter which indicated that the request for documents relating to the OIG complaint had been assigned to the OIG to conduct a search for responsive documents and provide a direct reply to the Firm. In this letter, the FOIA Office did not mention that the Firm had also requested documents about the Firm, nor did it indicate that any other DOE office had been asked to search for responsive documents.

By letter dated January 19, 2001, the OIG responded to the portion of the Firm's FOIA request that sought documents regarding a specific OIG complaint by indicating that:

1. The OIG had located responsive documents;
2. The OIG was releasing four of these documents in their entirety;
3. The OIG did not provide two documents to the Firm because it believed that the Firm already had these documents; and
4. The OIG released one document (a copy of a completed OIG complaint form) to the Firm with names and other information withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) and § 552(b)(7)(C).

The Firm appealed the determination of the OIG to OHA on the grounds that the OIG failed to provide two documents because it believed that the Firm already had these documents and wrongfully withheld information from a document under Exemptions 6 and 7(C) of the FOIA.(2) The Firm also explained that it was challenging the adequacy of the search conducted by the FOIA Office for all documents that contained information about the Firm. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Joseph A. Hauger, Jr., President, H & J Tool & Die Company, and Linda Lazarus, Staff Attorney, OHA (April 4, 2001).

II. ANALYSIS

A. Adequacy of the Search

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted the FOIA Office and ascertained that, except for the referral to the OIG to search for records pertaining to a specific complaint, DOE had not yet searched for documents that contain information about the Firm. For this reason, the FOIA Office has requested that this matter be remanded to it so that such a search may be conducted. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sheila Jeter, FOIA and Privacy Act Specialist, and Linda Lazarus (April 6, 2001). As this request is reasonable, this matter will be remanded to the FOIA Office to conduct a new search for records that contain information about the Firm.

B. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

The Firm also challenges the fact that the OIG had redacted material from a copy of a completed OIG complaint form involving a DOE contractor pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7 (C) of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6), (7)(C). Before providing this document to the Firm, the OIG had redacted the names and other information that could identify certain contractor employees. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Caroline Nielsen, OIG, and Linda Lazarus (April 23, 2001). These redactions are proper.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Ripskis v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990) .

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemption 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, provided the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcement purpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Since, as discussed below, all of the documents involved here were compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard may be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement that they constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(C) is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). By law, the OIG is charged with investigating waste, fraud, and abuse in programs and operations administered or financed by the DOE. 5 U.S.C. Appendix 3 § 4. The OIG is therefore a classic example of an organization with a clear law enforcement mandate. Ortiz v. Department of Health and Human Services, 70 F.3d 729, 732-33 (2d Cir. 1995). In the present case, the OIG documents were created during an investigation of possible irregularities in the procurement process and during the processing of a FOIA request. Consequently, the OIG documents at issue were created for a law enforcement purpose.

We find that there is a privacy interest here. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals whose names are contained in investigative files. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985). We have followed the courts' lead. James L. Schwab, 21 DOE 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE 80,129 (1990). Therefore, we find that release of the individuals' identities or information that could identify these individuals would result in significant invasions of privacy.

In Reporters Committee, the Supreme Court narrowed the scope of the public interest in the context of the FOIA. The Court found that only information which contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the Government is within the public interest as that term is used in the FOIA. Id. We fail to see how release of the identities of individuals in the present case would inform the public about the operations and activities of Government. Accordingly, we find that there is little or no public interest in disclosure of the individuals's identities or information that could identify these individuals.

After weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against an insubstantial or non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing the individuals' identities would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Accordingly, we find that information that would reveal the identities of the individuals were properly withheld under Exemptions 6 and 7(C). While we are strongly committed to keeping the public fully informed about DOE actions, we are also mindful of the need to preserve the privacy rights of individuals. By releasing the responsive document with only those redactions necessary to prevent identification of specific individuals, which is what has been done here, the agency can provide as much information as possible while safeguarding individual privacy rights.

C. Documents in the Firm's Possession

The OIG did not provide the Firm with copies of two document based on the belief that the Firm already had copies of these documents in its possession. Although the Firm has these documents, the FOIA only permits the government to withhold documents when information is exempt from disclosure under the statute. Accordingly, we will remand this matter to the OIG with instructions to either provide these documents or issue a new determination that sets forth a justification for withholding these documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by H & J Tool & Die Company, Incorporated, on March 12, and April 4, 2001 (Case Number VFA-0653) is hereby granted as set forth in paragraphs (2) and (3) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOIA and Privacy Act Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat for further action in accordance with this decision.

(3) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of the Inspector General for further action in accordance with this decision.

(4) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: April 24, 2001

(1)On February 26, 2001, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received an Appeal from the Firm. By letter dated February 28, 2001, OHA informed the Firm that its Appeal would not be considered as properly filed until OHA received a copy of the determination letter that was the subject of the Appeal. On March 12, 2001, OHA received a copy of this determination letter from the Firm.

(2)The Firm also appealed because the OIG had failed to make a determination about the releasability of a document which had originated in the Chicago Operations Office (Chicago). Instead of issuing a determination, the OIG had returned this document to Chicago and requested that Chicago send a determination directly to the Firm. Chicago is in the process of making a determination concerning the releasability of this document. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Linda Rohde, FOIA and Privacy Act Officer, and Linda Lazarus (April 23, 2001). Although we will not consider this aspect of the Firm's Appeal at this time, the Firm will have the opportunity to appeal Chicago's determination after it has been issued.

Case No. VFA-0654, 28 DOE ¶ 80,156

March 28, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R. E. V. Eng. Services

Date of Filing: March 1, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0654

On March 1, 2001, David Ridenour (Ridenour) of R. E. V. Eng. Services (REV) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him in response to a request for documents that REV submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on February 20, 2001, by the DOE's Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO). This Appeal, if granted, would require that RFFO release additional responsive information to REV or provide a detailed explanation of its reasons for withholding such material.

I. Background

In a previous case, Ridenour had appealed RFFO's determination withholding certain information under the FOIA. See R.E.V. Eng. Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 (2000). In that decision, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) granted the Appeal and remanded the matter to RFFO to perform another review of the documents responsive to Ridenour's request. Id. After a further review, RFFO released two documents in their entirety but continued to withhold portions of five documents. Letter from RFFO to Ridenour (February 20, 2001) (Determination). According to RFFO, those documents were exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

In this Appeal, Ridenour contends that RFFO did not properly establish the applicability of Exemption 5 to any of the redacted documents. Letter from Ridenour to Director, OHA (March 1, 2001) (Appeal). He further alleges that RFFO did not specify the role played by each withheld document in the deliberative process, thus making it impossible for him to understand the basis for the withholding. Appeal at 1. Ridenour asks that OHA remand this issue to RFFO with direction to release the withheld documents in their entirety or to provide a clear and understandable document-by-document reason for withholding the material. Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

The Deliberative Process Privilege

Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974) (Sears). It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions.

EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

This office has previously reviewed the five documents in question, and we stated at that time that portions of those documents were properly withheld under Exemption 5. *See R.E.V. Eng Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 (2000) (R.E.V. Eng). We also found that the documents contained some factual information. However, the issue currently under appeal is whether RFFO has provided the necessary information for Ridenour to understand RFFO's basis for withholding material under Exemption 5. We find that it has not.

A document must be described with enough specificity to allow the requester (1) to ascertain whether the claimed exemptions reasonably apply to the documents and (2) to formulate a meaningful appeal. See R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE at 80,543; Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 at 80,622 (1005), citing James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,164 (1992); Harold Fine, 17 DOE ¶ 80,136 at 80,588 (1988); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,527 (1984). Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE at 80,543; Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527.

We find that RFFO has adequately described the withheld documents. The following two descriptions are representative of the descriptions of the six documents:

1) Status Sheet, which contains documented conversations, telephone calls and electronic mail concerning Ms. Charlene Pazar's FOIA Request No. RF97-038.

2) Electronic message, dated 10/27/97, from Mary Hammack to Jeremy Karpatkin, Communications and Economic Development, RFFO, subject: FOIA request in OCC for Concurrence.

Determination at 2. RFFO has adequately identified the subject matter, date, author and recipient of the documents.

However, a determination must also adequately justify the withholding of a document by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527; Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE at 80,622. The determination in this case contains no explanations of how the deliberative process privilege applies to each document. RFFO wrote in the determination:

The deleted portions of the . . . five documents contain deliberative information which is exempt from mandatory disclosure under the provisions of the FOIA. Portions of the five documents contain[ing] frank and independent discussion and/or recommendatory in nature are, therefore, deliberative process documents. The deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5 protects from disclosure materials that reflect the personal opinions, analyses, or recommendations of those individuals involved. The factors that are weighed to determine whether documents are protected by the deliberative process privilege include: (1) whether the documents are "deliberative" (i.e., whether it reflects the give-and-take of a consultative process); (2) whether the documents are so candid or personal in nature that public disclosure would stifle honest and frank communication in the future; and (3) whether the documents are recommendatory of what will become a final document.

The DOE regulations provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall be released, regardless of their exempt status, unless the DOE determines that disclosure is contrary to public interest. For the reasons described above, I have determined that release of those portions of the five documents is not in the public interest.

Determination at 2.

The paragraphs quoted above do not explain how Exemption 5 applies to the specific documents withheld from Ridenour. Rather, RFFO has merely restated the applicable law without explaining how that law applies to the withheld information. See Animal Legal Defense Fund v. Department of Air Force, 44 F. Supp. 2d 295 (D.D.C. 1999) (stating that the need to describe each withheld document under Exemption 5 is particularly acute because the deliberative process privilege depends on the document and its role in the administrative process); Senate of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico v. Department of Justice, 823 F.2d 574, 585-86 (D.C. Cir. 1987). (1)

We find that RFFO has not provided the necessary information for the requester to understand RFFO's basis for withholding material under Exemption 5. Accordingly, this Appeal is granted. We remand this matter to RFFO to provide an explanation of how the deliberative process privilege applies to each of the five withheld documents. This explanation should set forth the deliberative process involved and the role that the withheld material played in that process.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by R.E.V. Eng. Services December 26, 2000, OHA Case Number VFA-0642, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Rocky Flats Field Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)RFFO also makes a conclusory assertion that release of the material is not in the public interest. Determination at 2. Even though this statement is also inadequate, we note that the requester has not presented any evidence that release of the withheld information is in the public interest.

Case No. VFA-0655, 28 DOE ¶ 80,160

April 11, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Nevada Nuclear Waste Task Force, Inc.

Date of Filing: March 12, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0655

On March 12, 2001, Nevada Nuclear Waste Task Force, Inc. (Nevada) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on February 5, 2001, by the Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management (OCR) of the Department of Energy. That determination concerned a request for information that Nevada submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, OCR would be ordered to release the requested information.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On December 18, 2000, Nevada filed a FOIA request seeking a copy of all comments received from reviewers of the Site Recommendation Consideration Report Overview. See Appeal Letter at 1. In its February 5, 2001 determination letter, OCR stated that it withheld the requested comments in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. The Determination Letter further stated that the documents requested involve communications that are predecisional and are part of a deliberative process "in that they involve recommendations and opinions on policy matters relating to the consideration of the Yucca Mountain site under the Nuclear Waste Policy Act." See Determination Letter at 1. The Determination Letter also concluded that releasing the requested comments would likely stifle honest and frank communication within the agency. Id. at 1.

On March 12, 2001, Nevada filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In its Appeal, Nevada asserts that OCR's application of Exemption 5 to the requested comments was too broad. See Appeal Letter at 1. Specifically, it argues that OCR should have only withheld information that is specifically deliberative in nature and released "all other information . . . that is not specifically deliberative, such as background information, facts, figures, sender and receiver information, dates, times and other information." Nevada further asserts that release of this information is in the public interest. Id. For these reasons, Nevada requests that the OHA direct OCR to release the requested information.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). In withholding the reviewers' comments, Nevada relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)) (Mink). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151.

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

The records at issue are reviewers' comments to a draft of an overview of a Site Recommendation Consideration Report. The reviewers were DOE and contractor employees who were responsible for rendering comments on the substance, style and tone of the draft Report. (1) Given the facts presented to us, we find that the requested comments are intra-agency, pre-decisional and part of the deliberative process. It is well settled that draft documents, by their very nature, are pre-decisional and deliberative. This category of documents has been afforded Exemption 5 protection because draft documents typically reflect "tentative views which might be altered or rejected upon further deliberation by the authors or by their superiors." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866; Committee to Bridge the Gap, 20 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1990). Consequently, we have determined that Exemption 5 was properly applied to the information at issue. In addition, after a thorough review of the comments at issue, we find that the factual material requested by Nevada in its Appeal is inextricably intertwined with the exempt material, and thus properly withheld.

III. Public Interest Determination

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE shall release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Notwithstanding our finding that OCR properly applied Exemption 5 to the reviewers' comments in this case, we must consider whether the public interest nevertheless requires disclosure pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In applying this regulation, we note that the Department of Justice has reviewed its administration of the FOIA and adopted a "foreseeable harm" standard for defending FOIA exemptions. See Memorandum from Janet Reno, Attorney General, to Heads of Departments and Agencies (October 4, 1993) (stating that the Department of Justice will defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption).

In the present case, the requested information consists of reviewers' comments made by DOE and contractor officials which were submitted in response to a draft of an overview of a report. The release of this information would in our opinion have a chilling effect on the willingness of OCR officials to make recommendations or voice opinions regarding highly sensitive and controversial issues. Employees and managers would be less likely to communicate their recommendations on this and similar issues if they knew or suspected that an agency would release their opinions to the public. OCR officials have stated that, and we agree, the release of the requested information would result in a foreseeable harm in that the candor of future agency deliberations would be substantially diminished. Consequently, we find that this harm satisfies the reasonably foreseeable harm standard that the Attorney General articulated and that the release of the material contained in the requested information and protected pursuant to Exemption 5 would not be in the public interest. See Dennis Kirson, 26 DOE ¶ 80,225(1997).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Nevada Nuclear Task Force, Inc., on March 12, 2001, Case Number VFA- 0655, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)It is well settled that many documents generated outside of agencies are withholdable under the deliberative process privilege. In order to determine whether documents generated outside of agencies are part of the deliberative process, the courts have employed a functional test. Under this functional approach, opinions and recommendations generated by outside consultants are considered part of the deliberative process if they were created pursuant to agency initiative in order to assist the agency in its decision making. See Nuclear Control Institute, 27 DOE ¶ 80,128 at 80,565 (1998) (citing Formaldehyde Institute. V. HHS, 889 F.2d 1118, 1123 (D.C. Cir. 1989)). In this case, contractor officials have been made part of the deliberative process.

Case No. VFA-0656, 28 DOE ¶ 80,158

April 10, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:CTG Media & PBN News

Date of Filing: March 13, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0656

Gary Scurka of CTG Media & PBN News filed an Appeal from a determination of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Freedom of Information Act and Privacy Act Division (FOIA/PA). The determination responded to a request for information that Scurka filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. §§ 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Scurka requested records from the DOE involving (1) "The Peacemaker," an action film released in 1997; (2) Dream Works, the company that produced "The Peacemaker;" and (3) Jessica Stern, a former official with the National Security Council, and meetings Stern allegedly had with a DOE official.

In its response to Scurka's request, FOIA/PA stated that a search was conducted by several offices of the DOE, and that no responsive records were found.(1) Scurka then filed the present Appeal, challenging the adequacy of FOIA/PA's search for responsive records.

II. Analysis

In evaluating a search for responsive records, "the issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original). An adequate search under the FOIA is one that is reasonable, not exhaustive. As one court noted, "the standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). We will remand a case for further processing when it is evident that the search conducted was not reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

In order to assess the adequacy of the search in this case, we contacted the staff of FOIA/PA. In the course of our assessment, we learned that responsive records might exist in the Office of Public Affairs, the Office of Intelligence, and the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security.(2)

Accordingly, we will remand this matter to FOIA/PA to conduct a further search for responsive documents in the custody of the Office of Public Affairs, the Office of Intelligence, and the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security. On remand, FOIA/PA shall ensure that there is a thorough and adequate search for all records responsive to Scurka's request. After a search of these offices has been conducted, FOIA/PA will issue a new determination stating the results of that search.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by CTG Media & PBN News, Case Number VFA-0656, is hereby granted in part as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Freedom of Information Act and Privacy Act Division to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)FOIA/PA did not provide a final determination on two items in Scurka's request. Because the DOE has not yet issued a determination regarding these two items of Scurka's request, they are not before us on appeal at this time. One item, dealing with special atomic demolition munitions, was referred by FOIA/PA to the DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office. The second item is Scurka's request for records about an individual named Phillip Petersen. FOIA/PA, in its determination letter dated February 26, 2001, asked Scurka to provide additional identifying information about Petersen. Scurka did not provide the additional information until April 9, 2001, and sent it to the OHA rather than to FOIA/PA. The OHA has forwarded the additional information to FOIA/PA for processing.

(2)The Office of Public Affairs was not included in the original search for responsive documents. The Office of Intelligence and the Office of Nonproliferation and National Security were included, and both offices reported that they found no responsive documents. It appears, however, that the searches in these offices were limited in scope; the Office of Intelligence, for example, reported that it found no records relating to the "The Peacemaker," but did not mention other items in Scurka's request.

Case No. VFA-0658, 28 DOE ¶ 80,159

April 10, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: The Wenatchee World

Date of Filing: March 13, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0658

On March 13, 2001, The Wenatchee World (The World), a newspaper located in Wenatchee, Washington, filed an Appeal from a determination that the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on February 27, 2001. In that determination, BPA denied in part a request for information that The World filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In its FOIA request, The World sought access to contracts by which BPA sold power to, and purchased power from, Alcoa, Inc. (Alcoa). BPA identified four documents as being responsive to this request, and released three of those documents in their entirety. The fourth document, Confirmation Agreement, Contract No. 01PB-23944, was released with price information withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 5 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4), (b)(5). This Agreement concerned the purchase of power by BPA from Alcoa. In its Appeal, The World contests BPA's application of these Exemptions.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information which is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n. v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government involuntarily is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption

4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (i) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. Id. at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). By contrast, information that is provided to an agency voluntarily is considered "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. We have generally considered information submitted as a prerequisite to doing business with the government as having been involuntarily submitted. See, e.g., Glen M. Jameson, 25 DOE ¶ 80,191 (1996); Hanford Education Action League, 23 DOE ¶ 80,143 (1993). We will therefore employ the National Parks test in determining whether BPA properly applied Exemption 4.

It is undisputed that the withheld information is "commercial" in nature, and that it was submitted by a "person," as that term is used in Exemption 4. There is no claim that the price information is privileged in nature; therefore, unless it is "confidential," the information may not be withheld under this Exemption. In its determination, BPA contends that the price information is confidential because its release would likely cause substantial harm to Alcoa's competitive position.

In its Appeal, The World contests this conclusion. It argues that information of this sort has been released to the public by BPA and other aluminum manufacturers, thereby undermining any claim of competitive harm. In support of this argument, The World cites news articles from the Associated Press (AP) and an internet website entitled "The Daily News Online." The AP article contains pricing information concerning the sale of electricity by BPA to Kaiser Aluminum Corp. (Kaiser), and the resale of that electricity to BPA. The Daily News article contains similar information about BPA's dealings with Longview Aluminum LLC (Longview).

After reviewing The World's submission and BPA's response, we find that BPA properly applied Exemption 4 in withholding the pricing information. (1) Although some pricing information regarding these other BPA transactions has previously been made public, we find that there are substantial differences between these sales and BPA's dealings with Alcoa, and that the potential for competitive harm from the release of the Alcoa price information is significantly greater. BPA's contract with Kaiser permitted the firm to resell the electricity it purchased from BPA on the open market. See Associated Press Article; Memoranda of April 3-4, 2001 Telephone Conversations between Mark Miller, BPA, and Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney. Therefore, the price of that electricity when it was resold to BPA was set by market forces, and did not necessarily reflect Kaiser's fixed costs. However, under Alcoa's contract, the firm could only resell the energy to BPA. Consequently, the resale price was significantly lower, and much more reflective of overhead and fixed costs that remain even when the firm's production facilities are shut down. Id. BPA's contract with Longview, like its agreement with Alcoa, limited the resale rights of the purchaser. Id. However, the Longview deal was much bigger and more complicated, and contained requirements that were not set forth in the Alcoa deal. For example, Longview was required to take its "load," or purchases of electricity from BPA, down to zero for the remainder of the year, to support certain federal legislation, and to pay its laid-off employees 100 percent of the salary and benefits. Id. Therefore, the revenue realized by Longview from its resale to BPA reflected not only a recovery of fixed costs, but also compensation for these additional services. For these reasons the release of the Alcoa pricing information would reveal substantially more about that company's overhead and other fixed costs than was revealed by the information cited in The World's Appeal. Alcoa's competitors could use this information to gain an advantage in pricing and competitive bidding situations. We conclude that BPA properly applied Exemption 4 in withholding the information in question. See, e.g., The FOIA Group, 27 DOE ¶ 80,111 (1998).

B. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149; 95 S. Ct. 1504, 1515 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall within this exemption: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). However, the Supreme Court has recognized that Exemption 5 also incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184; 95 S. Ct. 1491, 1500 (1975). Accordingly, "[t]he test under Exemption 5 is whether the documents would be routinely or normally disclosed upon a showing of relevance." F.T.C. v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 19, 26; 103 S. Ct. 2209, 2214 (1983) (citing Sears, 421 U.S. at 148-49; 95 S. Ct. at 1515 (1975)). Therefore, if a privilege is well recognized by statute or in the case law, it may properly be invoked under Exemption 5. See United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 797, 799-801; 104 S. Ct. 1488, 1492-93 (1984).

Among the privileges incorporated by the courts under Exemption 5 is the "confidential commercial information privilege." See, e.g., Federal Open Market Comm. v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340; 99 S. Ct. 2800 (1979) (Merrill) (holding that since disclosure of Domestic Policy Directives would significantly harm the Government's monetary functions or commercial interests, they could properly be withheld under Exemption 5); Government Land Bank v. General Services Administration, 671 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1982) (Land Bank) (withholding a government generated real estate appraisal). "The Federal courts have long recognized a qualified evidentiary privilege for trade secrets and other confidential commercial information." Merrill, 443 U.S. at 356; 99 S. Ct. at 2810. The courts have applied this privilege in the FOIA context to prevent the Government from being placed at a competitive disadvantage and to facilitate the consummation of contracts. Id., 443 U.S. at 360; 99 S. Ct. at 2812. Exemption 5 therefore "protects the government when it enters the marketplace as an ordinary commercial buyer or seller." Land Bank , 671 F.2d 665 (footnote omitted).

The protection afforded by this privilege is limited in scope and lasts only as long as necessary to protect the government's commercial interests. Id. Moreover, the application of this privilege is not automatic. Merrill, 443 U.S. at 362; 99 S. Ct. at 2813. The burden is upon the agency to show that the records it seeks to withhold under the privilege are confidential and that their disclosure might be harmful. American Standard v. Pfizer, Inc., 828 F.2d 734, 746 (Fed. Cir. 1987) (applying the privilege in the civil discovery context). In the civil discovery context, once these burdens are met, the burden shifts to the party seeking disclosure to prove that disclosure should occur by establishing a substantial need for those documents. R&D Business Systems v. Xerox Corp., 152 F.R.D. 195; 196-197 (D. Colo. 1993) (Xerox). In the FOIA context, however, the individual FOIA applicant's need for information is not to be taken into account in determining whether materials are exempt under Exemption 5. See Merrill, 443 U.S. at 362-63; 99 S. Ct. at 2813, and cases cited therein. Accordingly, courts have found that documents which are immune from discovery absent a showing of substantial need are not "routinely" or "normally" available to parties in litigation and therefore are exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 5. F.T.C. v. Grolier, Inc., 462 U.S. 19, 27; 103 S. Ct. 2209, 2214 (1983).

Accordingly, if the agency has shown that it has maintained the confidentiality of the withheld records and that their release might result in harm to the government's commercial interests, the agency could properly withhold records under Exemption 5. In the present case, there is no indication in the record that BPA has not maintained the confidentiality of the information in question. We therefore turn to the next issue before us: whether release of the price information would likely result in harm to BPA's commercial interests or its ability to consummate future contracts. We conclude that it would. Specifically, BPA has informed us that in the near future, it will be negotiating contracts similar to its agreement with Alcoa. See Memorandum of April 4, 2001 Telephone Conversation between Mr. Miller and Mr. Palmer. The withheld price information, if released, would establish a benchmark for future negotiations, and would make it extremely difficult for BPA to obtain more favorable terms. We therefore conclude that BPA properly applied Exemption 5 in withholding the information. See, e.g., The Oregonian, 26 DOE ¶ 80,336 (1997) (load amounts and exit fees properly withheld by BPA under Exemption 5); Convergence Research, 26

DOE ¶ 80,239 (1997) (load amounts and price information properly withheld by BPA under Exemption 5).

III. Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

We find that release of the withheld material would not be in the public interest. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the manner in which the government operates, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the withheld information consists of confidential commercial information that if released would affect BPA's abilities to conduct future business. Any benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld information is, we believe, outweighed by the likelihood of harm to these commercial interests. Accordingly, we conclude that release of the withheld information would result in foreseeable harm to the interests that are protected by the confidential commercial information privilege. See FOIA Update, U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Information and Privacy (Spring 1994); Memorandum from Janet Reno, Attorney General, to Heads of Departments and Agencies (October 4, 1993) (in order to withhold material, agency must first determine that release would foreseeably harm basic institutional interests that underlie Exemption 5.)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by The Wenatchee World, Case No. VFA-0658, is hereby denied.

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Puget Sound Energy, Inc.

Date of Filing: March 19, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0659

On March 19, 2001, Puget Sound Energy, Inc., (Puget) filed an Appeal from a determination the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on February 15, 2001. In that determination, BPA released redacted versions of material responsive to a request that Puget filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The FOIA requires that a federal agency generally release documents to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that a federal agency may withhold at its discretion. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

In its January 4, 2001 request for information, Puget sought copies of all executed or partially executed power sales contracts BPA has entered into since January 1, 2000. Request Letter dated January 4, 2001, from William A. Gaines, Vice President, Energy Supply, Puget, to Freedom of Information Act Officer, BPA. On February 15, 2001, BPA issued a determination releasing the information Puget had requested, but redacting portions of the contracts because the material was exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4 of the FOIA, which exempts "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." Determination Letter dated February 15, 2001, from Gene Tollefson, BPA, to William R. Maurer, Perkins Coie, LLP, Attorney for Puget. Puget then filed this Appeal.

In its Appeal, Puget first argues that BPA's determination is inadequate, because it has not provided an explanation of why the information has been redacted. Appeal Letter dated March 16, 2001, from William R. Bue, Perkins Coie, LLP, Attorney for Puget, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. Puget also challenges the withholding on the basis that the information is not commercial or financial, obtained from a person or confidential. Id. at 4.

We have spoken with BPA. Upon further review of the contracts, BPA believes that it has redacted too much information from the contracts that Puget requested. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated April 6, 2001, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE, and Tim Johnson, Attorney, BPA. Therefore, we will remand the matter to BPA for a new determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Puget Sound Energy, Inc., on March 19, 2001, Case No. VFA-0659, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:John Kasprowicz

Date of Filing:March 19, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0660

This decision addresses the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) appeal filed by John Kasprowicz (appellant) pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, the appeal will be denied.

I. Background

Appellant filed a FOIA request with the DOE Chicago Operations Office (Chicago Office), in which he sought the individual dollar amounts of Business Plan Awards for fiscal year 2000 (the FY 2000 BP Awards) for all Chicago Office GS-13 and GS-14 employees, separated by division, as well as "all awards of any kind given to individuals in [the Technical and Administrative Services Group and the Safety and Technical Services Group (TAS-STS)] in the past [six] months by name and dollar amount." In its response, the Chicago Office released the dollar amounts of the GS-13 and GS- 14 FY 2000 BP Awards broken down by groups only, and withheld from the list the Office of the Manager and the Ames Group, the division-by-division breakdown, and the names of and dollar amounts given to employees in TAS-STS (collectively, "the withheld information"). Citing Exemption 6 of the FOIA, the Chicago Office explained that "release of [the withheld] information will allow with minimal analysis and process of elimination, the identification of individual business plan awards by employee." The Chicago Office asserted that "[t]hese records are withholdable from third parties under [the FOIA] Exemption 6, 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(6), [because] the employees' privacy interest in their awards clearly outweighs any minute public interest, if any, which might exist in discovering the individuals' award amounts."

In this appeal, appellant contends that although "[s]alary [and award] information may be alloyed with a significant privacy interest in the private sector, [it] is not granted such interest in federal employment, since the taxpayer has a weightier interest in that same employee's salary." Appeal at 2 (emphasis omitted). Appellant further argues that "the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has deemed [the withheld information] as releasable under FOIA" and cites OPM regulation, 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a), which states, in relevant part:

The following information . . . about most present and former Federal employees, is available to the public: (1) Name; (2) Present and past position titles and occupational series; (3) Present and past grades; (4) Present and past annual salary (including performance awards or bonuses, incentive awards, merit pay amount, Meritorious or Distinguished Executive Ranks, and allowances and differentials)."

Appeal at 1-2. Finally, appellant asserts, the Chicago Office's determination not to release the awards received by TAS-STS employees raises the suspicion "that they are funneling awards to their friends through various means/methods" and "a presumption of disclosure is warranted where there may be significant evidence of corruption." Appeal at 4. Appellant seeks release of the withheld material.

II. Applicable Legal Standards

With nine exemptions, the FOIA requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request. Exemption 6 protects from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). "Similar files" include all documents which contain information that applies to a particular individual. Department of State v. Washington Post, 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). If documents are of the type described in Exemption 6, then an agency must undertake a three step analysis, as enumerated by the Supreme Court in Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Auth., 510 U.S. 487, 495-96 (1994), in determining whether Exemption 6's protection applies. First, an agency must determine whether a privacy interest would be invaded by disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld under Exemption 6. See also Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. Finally, the agency must weigh the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of that person's privacy.

III. Analysis

Application of the foregoing principles to this case reveals that Exemption 6 properly protects the withheld information. As a threshold matter, we find that withheld information applies to particular individuals and is therefore within the broad definition of a "similar file" for purposes of Exemption 6.

We next find, and agree with the Chicago Office, that there is a privacy interest at stake. Employees have a privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their salaries and awards, because disclosure of the withheld information "would allow direct comparison between employee awards and almost certainly incite jealousy in those employees receiving lower awards." See Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

We disagree with the Chicago Office's determination, however, that there is no public interest in the withheld information. We find that there is. In Robert J. Ylimaki, 28 DOE _____ (VFA-0651) (Mar. 23, 2001), which involved a FOIA appeal from the Chicago Office's withholding of bonus information for specific employees, "we recognize[d] that federal employees are public servants, and that the public has a significant interest in knowing how its employees are paid." Nevertheless, in balancing the privacy and public interests to find that Exemption 6 shielded the bonus information, we stated the following:

[T]he Chicago Office has demonstrated that there is a substantial possibility that harassment of GS-15 employees would result from this type of information. Specifically, the Chicago Office has cited specific instances of inappropriate behavior by some of its employees. . . . Such harassment would disrupt the functioning of the Chicago Office and would adversely affect its ability to perform the responsibilities with which it is charged. . . . Because the potential for harassment . . . outweighs the public interest in disclosure, we will deny Mr. Ylimaki's Appeal.

Here, as with the bonus information at issue in Ylimaki, the public has a significant interest in knowing how its employees are paid, including salaries and awards. However, also as in Ylimaki, the privacy interest in the withheld information overrides the public interest in disclosure. Because this appeal arises from a Chicago Office determination and regards salary and award information, our reasoning set forth in Ylimaki is applicable here. There is a substantial possibility that harassment of Chicago Office GS-13 and GS-14 employees would result from release of the withheld information, and this potential for harassment outweighs the public interest involved. See also, William Hyde, 18 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988) (finding potential for harassment of employees is sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 6). The withheld information is therefore protected by Exemption 6.

We reject appellant's assertion that OPM regulation, 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a), requires disclosure of the withheld information. Pursuant to Section 293.311(b), information described in paragraph (a) (as cited supra) need not be released if it would "otherwise be protected from mandatory disclosure under an exemption of the FOIA." Because we find that Exemption 6 properly applies to this case, the withheld information is exempt from disclosure under 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(b).

We also reject appellant's assertion that "a presumption of disclosure is warranted where there may be significant evidence of corruption." Appeal at 4. "Any general public interest in mere allegations of wrongdoing does not outweigh an individual's privacy interest in unwarranted association with such allegations." Barvick v. Cisneros, 941 F. Supp. 1015, 1022 (D. Kan. 1996) (citation omitted).

IV. Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing, we find that the significant privacy interest in the withheld information overrides the public interest involved and that therefore the information may be properly withheld under Exemption 6.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed on March 19, 2001, by John Kasprowicz, Case No. VFA-0660, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Caron Balkany

Date of Filing: March 19, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0661

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Caron Balkany filed from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Albuquerque Operations Office (AOO). In this determination, AOO informed Ms. Balkany that it did not locate any documents that were responsive to a request for information that she filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require AOO to conduct a further search for responsive materials.

I. Background

Ms. Balkany filed a request in which she sought information concerning "(1) The Department of Energy's 1989 investigation at Rocky Flats of Department of Justice search warrant allegations of illegal night time burning at Building 771 incinerator at Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant. This may have been a Tiger Team investigation. The results were made public in 1989, but apparently not the full investigation; and (2) A Letter from Michael J. Norton, U.S. Attorney for the District of Colorado to Deputy Secretary Henson Moore dated December 1, 1989." On March 2, 2001, AOO issued a determination which stated that a search was conducted at the Rocky Flats Office in Golden, Colorado, and at AOO, and found no documents responsive to Ms. Balkany's request. See Determination Letter. On March 15, 2001, Ms. Balkany filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In her Appeal, Ms. Balkany challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by AOO.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-95 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at AOO and Rocky Flats to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Balkany's request might reasonably be located. We were informed of the following. Upon receiving Ms. Balkany's request for information, AOO instituted a search of its Environmental, Health and Safety Division, its Office of Chief Counsel, the DOE Reading Room at the University of New Mexico, and the Rocky Flats Field Office. AOO also indicated that in 1989, the AOO and Rocky Flats offices were raided by the FBI simultaneously. The FBI confiscated all original files pertaining to Rocky Flats that were located at either AOO or Rocky Flats. The FBI did not allow AOO or Rocky Flats to make copies of those files. March 20, 2001 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Terry Martin Apodaca, AOO, and Toni Brown, Paralegal Specialist, Office of Hearings and Appeals; March 22, 2001 e-mail message from Terry Martin Apodaca, AOO, to Toni Brown, Office of Hearings and Appeals. We contacted the FOIA Officer at Rocky Flats who informed us that an extensive search was conducted and that no responsive documents were located. March 30, 2001 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Mary Hammack, Rocky Flats and Toni Brown, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Rocky Flat's search included the Office of Chief Counsel, Kaiser Hill and employees of Kaiser Hill's Records Management Office.

Finally, AOO interpreted Ms. Balkany's request for the "DOE's 1989 investigation" as contending that the DOE created a report based on the FBI's 1989 investigation of Rocky Flats. AOO has informed us that the report Ms. Balkany seeks was not a DOE report, but rather a report prepared by the contractor, Rockwell Corporation, and AOO does not have a copy of that report. March 22, 2001 e-mail message from Terry Martin Apodaca, AOO to Toni Brown. A broader interpretation of that portion of the request would be for any documents concerning illegal night time burning at Rocky Flats that DOE created, even after the raid. We asked AOO and Rocky Flats to look for documents of this type. AOO reported that there were no documents responsive to that request. April 13, 2001 e-mail message from Margaret Sanchez, AOO, to Toni Brown. The Rocky Flats office stated that any reports created after the FBI's seizure of documents would have been generated by AOO, since the AOO office oversaw the Rocky Flats office. Furthermore, she mentioned that very few current Rocky Flats employees have personal knowledge of the seizure because they started their employment after that event occurred. April 10, 2001 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Mary Hammack, Rocky Flats, and Toni Brown, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Given the facts presented to us, we find that AOO conducted an adequate search, reasonably calculated to discover documents at AOO and Rocky Flats that were responsive to Ms. Balkany's request.

However, we believe that some Headquarters offices may have material responsive to Ms. Balkany's request. Therefore, we will refer this request to the Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Division for a search of Headquarters elements, particularly the Offices of Environment, Safety and Health, the Inspector General, the General Counsel, and the Executive Secretariat for responsive documents. These offices are the Headquarters counterparts of offices that AOO searched and offices that may have received Tiger Team or other documents from AOO or Rocky Flats that would be responsive to Ms. Balkany's request. Therefore, we will grant Ms. Balkany's Appeal in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Caron Balkany, Case No. VFA-0661, on March 19, 2001, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph 2 below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby referred to the Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Division of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Attorney General of New Mexico

Date of Filing: March 19, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0662

On March 19, 2001, the Office of the Attorney General of New Mexico (AGNM) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it in response to a request for documents that the AGNM submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on February 15, 2001, by the DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office (DOE/AL). This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/AL perform an additional search.

I. Background

On February 1, 2001, the AGNM submitted a FOIA request to DOE/AL and the DOE's Carlsbad Operations Office (DOE/COO) for: (1) all documents that may identify or consider the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant (WIPP) site in Carlsbad, New Mexico as a potential site for the storage or disposal of spent reactor fuel or high-level radioactive wastes; (2) all documents suggesting the WIPP site in New Mexico as an alternative site to the Yucca Mountain site in Nevada; (3) all documents setting forth alternative sites if Yucca Mountain is not selected to be the DOE site receiving high level radioactive waste or spent reactor fuel; and (4) all letters and other correspondence to or from DOE concerning these issues (including internal communications). Letter from the AGNM to DOE/AL and DOE/COO (February 1, 2001) (Request).

On February 7, 2001, DOE/AL sent the AGNM a letter stating that both DOE/AL and DOE/COO were conducting a search for responsive records. Letter from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, DOE/AL to the AGNM (February 7, 2001) (Acknowledgment Letter). The DOE/AL FOIA Officer also stated in the letter that she had notified the DOE Headquarters WIPP Office (DOE/HQ WIPP Office) and the DOE Yucca Mountain Office (Yucca Mountain) about the request, and asked them to perform a "cursory search." Id; Memorandum from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Staff Attorney, OHA (March 27, 2001) (Memo) at 1. (1) The DOE/HQ WIPP Office found no responsive records. Acknowledgment Letter at 1. Personnel at both offices advised the FOIA Officer that DOE/COO was the most likely site to contain responsive material. Memo at 1-2.

On February 15, 2001, DOE/AL sent a final determination. In the Determination Letter, DOE/AL indicated that it had searched its Waste Management Division, Site Programs Divisions, Nuclear Programs Division, Environment, Safety and Health Division, and Office of Chief Counsel but did not locate any responsive records. Letter from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, DOE/AL to the AGNM (February 15, 2001) (Determination). DOE/AL also stated that Yucca Mountain had no responsive records. Id. Finally, the FOIA Officer informed the AGNM that DOE/COO was still searching and would send a separate response directly to the requester. Id.

The AGNM filed this Appeal on March 19, 2001. Letter from the AGNM to Director, OHA (March 19, 2001). In the Appeal, the AGNM outlined five alleged "deficiencies" in the Determination: (1) failure to perform an adequate search in the DOE/AL offices; (2) failure to forward the request to DOE/HQ WIPP Office; (3) failure to forward the request to Yucca Mountain; (4) failure to forward the request to DOE/HQ FOIA Office; and (5) failure to have the decision signed off by an authorizing official. Id. The AGNM requested that OHA remand this matter for an adequate search. Id. at 3.

II. Analysis

A. ADEQUACY OF SEARCH

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988). We contacted DOE/AL to ascertain the scope of the search and to address the five allegations set forth in the Appeal.

(1) Alleged Failure to Perform an Adequate Search at DOE/AL

In the Appeal, the AGNM argued that DOE/AL had performed an inadequate search of its offices because it had not searched remote offices under its control, such as Sandia National Laboratory, Los Alamos National Laboratory, Pantex, Carlsbad Operations or "a significant number of other site offices." Appeal at 2.

The DOE/AL FOIA Officer informed us that she performed an adequate but not exhaustive search. She stated that she searched the offices that were recommended to her as possibly containing responsive records, and all of the recommendations were that DOE/COO had the documents that the requester wanted. Memo at 1. According to the FOIA Officer, she was not required to search every office under DOE/AL's control without a reasonable belief that responsive records were located there. Electronic mail message from Carolyn Becknell, DOE/AL FOIA Officer to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 6, 2001).

(2) Alleged Failure to Forward the Request to the DOE/HQ WIPP Office in the Office of the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Integration and Disposition

The AGNM alleges that DOE/AL did not forward the request to the DOE/HQ WIPP Office. Appeal at 1. However, the DOE/AL FOIA Officer informed us that she did contact the WIPP office in Washington, D.C. directly and asked that office to perform a "cursory look." Its search found no responsive records. Memo at 2.

(3) Alleged Failure to Forward the Request to Yucca Mountain

The AGNM also alleges that the DOE/AL FOIA Officer did not forward the request to the Yucca Mountain Office. However, the FOIA Officer indicated that she promptly contacted an employee at Yucca Mountain, who also performed a "cursory look." Memo at 2. This employee found no responsive records, and recommended that the FOIA Officer search DOE/COO. Id.

(4) Alleged Failure to Forward the Request to the DOE/HQ FOIA Office

The AGNM further contends that the DOE/AL FOIA Officer neglected to forward the request to the FOIA Office at DOE/HQ in Washington, D.C. Appeal at 1. The FOIA Officer confirms that she did not forward the request to DOE/HQ. Memo at 1. However, this is because she knew that the Office of the Secretary of Energy had received a copy of the request, and would follow its standard procedure of transferring the request to the FOIA Office at DOE/HQ for processing. Id. In order to confirm this, she contacted DOE/HQ on February 6, 2001, to see if it had received the request. Id. She actively monitored the status of the request until notified that the FOIA Office at DOE/HQ had received the request and conducted a search. Memo at 2. The FOIA Office at DOE/HQ sent the AGNM a letter dated March 15, 2001, indicating that no responsive records were found. Memo at 2.

(5) Alleged Failure to Secure the Signature of an Authorizing Official on a Final Determination

The AGNM argues that "it is also not clear that the FOIA officer who handled this FOIA request was in fact the authorizing official who could sign the final response." Appeal at 3.

Ms. Becknell states that she is the FOIA Officer for DOE/AL and as such has the authority to sign acknowledgment letters or a "no responsive record" response to a request. Memo at 2. Her responses to the requester were also approved by the DOE/AL Office of Chief Counsel. Id. We also note that Ms. Becknell is recognized by this office as the FOIA Officer for DOE/AL.

B. Adequacy of the Initial Search

As a result of our communications with the FOIA Officer, it is clear that DOE/AL and the other DOE offices performed an adequate initial search. The search was not exhaustive, nor was it required to be. Contrary to the appellant's assertions, the FOIA Officer actively fulfilled her duties and contacted the offices named in Items 2-4 (DOE/HQ WIPP Office, Yucca Mountain, DOE/HQ FOIA Office). In addition, while processing this Appeal we were informed that DOE/COO, the site recommended to the FOIA Officer as containing responsive records, did in fact locate and release responsive material to the AGNM. Memo at 6-8. However, these records had not yet been released to the AGNM at the time that it filed the Appeal. Id.

C. Evidence of Additional Responsive Documents

In previous cases we have held that challenges to the adequacy of the agency's search must be supported by the presentation of some evidence that a requested document, unidentified by the agency in its search, does in fact exist. See Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 at 80,630 (1995) (Butler) (citing Sun Co., 11 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1983); Vinson & Elkins, 4 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1979)). The AGNM has presented evidence in the Appeal that additional responsive documents exist. First, the AGNM identified an April 9, 1999 newsletter published by the Sandia National Laboratory containing information that Sandia had done studies prior to 1980 concerning the development of the WIPP site. Appeal at 2. In addition, the AGNM also identified a 1980 WIPP Environmental Impact Study (EIS) that was not located in the DOE/AL search. Id. (2)

We have also, in the past, remanded a case if a FOIA Officer confirms a "reasonable possibility that responsive documents may exist at another location." See Butler, 25 DOE at 80,630. However, the DOE/AL FOIA Officer has indicated that Sandia performed the WIPP studies under the direction of DOE/COO, and the search of DOE/COO uncovered documents that were actually created at Sandia.

Electronic mail message from DOE/AL FOIA Officer to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 6, 2001) Id. She is convinced that a search of Sandia would uncover only duplicate documents. Id. Her thesis is supported not only by consistent recommendations from FOIA personnel in other locations who advised her to focus her search efforts on DOE/COO, but also by the discovery of Sandia-created WIPP documents at DOE/COO. Memo at 1-2. Therefore, we find that DOE/AL conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the material requested by the AGNM. (3) Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Attorney General of New Mexico on March 19, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0662, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)DOE/AL has informed us that a “cursory search” or “cursory look” is a form of initial inquiry used to determine whether responsive material exists at a certain location. The procedure is initiated by faxing a copy of the request to an office that may contain responsive records and asking that office to check indexes, file plans and other similar documents for responsive material. Unlike a full FOIA search, the responding office is not required to identify each document specifically. However, if the office finds responsive records, the FOIA Officer then transfers the request there. That location then conducts a thorough search and identifies the responsive material. Electronic Mail Message from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (March 28, 2001).

(2)We were informed that the EIS was located at DOE/COO and released to the AGNM on March 29, 2001. Memo at 6; Electronic Mail Message from DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 6, 2001).

(3)Despite her belief that all of the responsive documents were located at DOE/COO and released by that office, the DOE/AL FOIA Officer has agreed to ask Sandia to perform a “cursory search ” so that she can answer the AGNM’s concern about documents at that site. Electronic mail message from DOE/AL to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 6, 2001).

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: International Consulting Services

Date of Filing: March 23, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0663

On March 23, 2001, International Consulting Services (ICS) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on March 2, 2001, by the National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination concerned a request for information that ICS submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, NETL would be ordered to release the requested information or to issue a new determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

ICS filed a FOIA request seeking information regarding the Ultra Clean Fuels solicitations and the proposals submitted in response to the solicitation. In its March 2, 2001 determination letter, NETL identified a number of documents responsive to ICS's request. However, NETL withheld portions of this information pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. See March 2, 2001 Determination Letter.

On March 23, 2001, ICS filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In its Appeal, ICS challenges NETL's withholding of information it believes is non-proprietary. Specifically, ICS asserts that NETL should redact material not specifically found to be proprietary under Exemption 4. ICS asks that the OHA direct NETL to release the withheld information.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. After conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, the agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search, and if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency inform the requester of its right "to appeal to the head of the agency any adverse determination." Id.

The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (1) adequately describe the results of the searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify any exemption under which information was withheld. Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,797 (1996). It is well established that a FOIA determination must contain a reasonably specific justification for withholding material pursuant to a FOIA request. See Deborah L. Abrahamson, 23 DOE ¶ 80,147 (1993). A specific justification is necessary to allow this Office to perform an effective review of the initial agency determination and to permit the requesting party to prepare a reasoned appeal. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id. In addition, the FOIA requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material).

In the present case, NETL withheld responsive information under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. We note that there does not appear to have been any attempt to segregate and release any non-exempt information from exempt information in any of the withheld information. Until NETL attempts to segregate non-exempt information for release, we will not consider the applicability of Exemption 4 to any of the withheld information. Accordingly, we shall remand this matter NETL either to release to ICS all of the information responsive to its request or to segregate and release any non- exempt information and issue a new determination adequately supporting the withholding of the information it does not release. If a new determination is issued, NETL should include a statement of the reason for denial, a specific explanation of how the exemption applies to the information withheld and a statement why discretionary release is not appropriate. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by International Consulting Services, OHA Case No. VFA-0663, on March 23, 2001, is hereby granted in part as set forth below in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Energy Technology Laboratory of the Department of Energy, which shall either release the responsive information withheld in its March 2, 2001 determination or issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. Engineering Services

Date of Filing: March 26, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0664

On March 26, 2001, R.E.V. Engineering Services (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a partial determination issued to it on March 8, 2001, by the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appellant contends that Rocky Flats has failed to: (1) acknowledge or respond to its FOIA request in a timely fashion, (2) conduct an adequate search for the requested document, (3) adequately explain or justify its determination, (4) provide for an adequate segregation of nonexempt information, and (5) properly classify it in the fee category which only requires payment of search fees, and (6) grant its request for a fee waiver.

By letter dated July 11, 2000, the Appellant filed a FOIA request with Rocky Flats seeking a copy of a document that is commonly known as the “1999 SSSP." On November 30, 2000, Rocky Flats informed the Appellant that the SSSP is currently a classified document and that the DOE would conduct a two stage review of the document in accordance with the DOE classification regulations.

On December 11, 2000, the Appellant filed an Appeal in which it alleged that Rocky Flats had (1) failed to acknowledge or respond to its FOIA request within the time required by law, and (2) failed to conduct an adequate search for an unclassified, electronic version of the 1999 SSSP. On January 10, 2001, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) issued a decision and order adjudicating these two issues. R.E.V. Engineering Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,135 (2001) (REV I). In that opinion, we found that the portion of the Appeal that was based on the failure to process a FOIA request within the time specified by law must be dismissed because OHA does not have jurisdiction to decide such an issue. To this end, we stated:

Section 1004.8(a) has been construed to confer jurisdiction on OHA only when an Authorizing Official has issued a determination that (1) denies a request for records, (2) states there are no records responsive to the FOIA request, or (3) denies a request for a waiver of fees. Suffolk County, 17 DOE ¶ 80,111 at 80,524 (1988). OHA has consistently held that Section 1004.8(a) does not confer jurisdiction when the requester has not received an initial determination from an Authorizing Official, or when an appeal is based on the agency’s failure to process a FOIA within the time specified by law. John H. Hnatio, 13 DOE ¶ 80,119 at 80,566 (1985) (dismissing appeal because no determination issued); Tulsa Tribune, 11 DOE ¶ 80,161 at 80,741 (1984) (no administrative remedy for agency's non-compliance with a timeliness requirement). Accordingly, the portion of the Appeal that deals with the agency’s failure to process a FOIA request within the time specified by law must be dismissed.

REV I, 28 DOE at 80,581. The Appellant has raised this same issue once again, and once again we will dismiss the portion of the present Appeal that merely reiterates the claim that Rocky Flats had not responded to its FOIA request in a timely manner.

The Appellant also reiterates the claim, made in its previous appeal, that Rocky Flats' search for responsive documents was inadequate. We previously considered this contention in REV I. In that decision we found that: "Given the facts presented to us, we find that Rocky Flats conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover an unclassified version of the 1999 SSSP. Therefore, we must deny this part of the Firm's Appeal." REV I, 28 DOE at 80,582. Since the Appellant has not presented any new evidence or compelling arguments concerning Rocky Flats' search for responsive documents, we will not reconsider our previous determination in REV I. Accordingly that portion of the present Appeal challenging the adequacy of the search by Rocky Flats will be dismissed.

The present Appeal also contends that Rocky Flats failed to adequately segregate non-exempt information from exempt information. However, and as the Appellant is well aware, the DOE has yet to make a determination concerning the SSSP's release. As we have discussed above, OHA's FOIA appeal jurisdiction exists only when an Authorizing Official has issued an actual determination on an issue. Until an Authorizing Official has issued a determination on an issue, that issue is not ripe for review by this office. Accordingly, we are dismissing that portion of the present Appeal challenging the adequacy of segregation by Rocky Flats.

The only currently justiciable issues raised by the Appellant concern Rocky Flats' fee determinations. The FOIA generally requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request, but provides that, absent a fee waiver, requesters must pay applicable processing fees. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). The processing fees charged to a requester depend upon the nature of the request. The FOIA sets forth 3 categories of request for this purpose at 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii). Depending on the identity of the requester and their intended use of the requested information, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii) provides for the charging of fees for: (i) document duplication alone for an "educational institution" or "representative of the news media," (ii) search time, duplication, and review time, where the request "appears to be for commercial use", and (iii) search time and duplication for all other requesters. The DOE FOIA regulations implement this provision at 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9.

Rocky Flats, correctly noting that the Appellant is a commercial concern, classified the Appellant's request as a "commercial use" request as defined in 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii)(I). However, Rocky Flats determination is apparently based upon its reasoning that since the Appellant is a commercial concern, it seeks disclosure of the information for commercial use. This is not necessary true. It is conceivable that a commercial requester might make non-commercial use of information disclosed to it under the FOIA. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to Rocky Flats. On remand, Rocky Flats must either re-categorize the request or explain why it has determined that the information was requested for commercial use.

Either an assurance of willingness to pay fees assessed in accordance with Section 1004.9, or a request for fee waiver, must be included in a FOIA request. The FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest, because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government (the public interest prong); and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester (the commercial interest prong). 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

In order to satisfy the public interest prong, the DOE requires that a requester show each of the following: (A) The subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A); (B) Disclosure of the requested records is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B); (C) Disclosure of the requested records would contribute to an understanding of the subject by the general public (Factor C); and

(D) Disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D). 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

If a requester satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong, he must then satisfy the commercial interest prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his commercial interest. 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.9(a)(8)(ii). Administrative appeals of fee waiver denials generally are reviewed de novo. See Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,167 (1998).

The FOIA and DOE's FOIA regulations require that the agency provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of a fee waiver determination. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id. The written determination letter serves to inform the requester of the results of the agency's fee waiver determination. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

In the present case, the determination letter fails to apply the four factors set forth at 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8)(i). As a result, the determination letter does not satisfy DOE's obligation to fully explain and justify its determination as required by the applicable FOIA case law. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to Rocky Flats with instructions to apply the four factors set fourth at 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8)(i). After applying these factors, Rocky Flats must issue a new determination letter which either grants a full or partial fee wavier or denies the request for a fee waiver. If the new determination letter denies the request for a fee waiver it must include a full explanation of its determination. A full explanation of such a determination would include an explanation of how Rocky Flats applied the four factors set forth at 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8)(i).

Rocky Flats apparently reasoned that since the Appellant is a commercial concern, its interest in disclosure of the requested information is primarily in its commercial interest. This is not necessary true. It is conceivable that a commercial requester might have non-commercial interests in information disclosed to it under the FOIA. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to Rocky Flats. On remand, Rocky Flats must grant the fee wavier request or provide a through explanation of why it is denying the Appellants fee wavier request.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) As set forth above, the Appeal filed by R.E.V. Engineering Services on March 26, 2001, is dismissed in part, granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2), and denied in all other aspects.

(2) Those portions of the Appeal concerning fee determinations are hereby remanded to the Rocky Flats Area Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

May 9, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Attorney General of New Mexico

Date of Filing: April 11, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0665

The Attorney General of New Mexico (New Mexico) filed an Appeal from a determination issued on March 15, 2001, by the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant Office (WIPP Office) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, we are remanding this matter to the WIPP Office to perform an additional search for responsive documents.

On February 1, 2001, New Mexico submitted a FOIA request to DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) and Carlsbad Operations Office (Carlsbad) for (1) all documents that may identify or consider the WIPP site in Carlsbad, New Mexico as a potential site for the storage or disposal of spent reactor fuel or high-level radioactive wastes; (2) all documents suggesting the WIPP site in New Mexico as an alternative site to the Yucca Mountain site in Nevada; (3) all documents setting forth alternative sites if Yucca Mountain is not selected to be the DOE site receiving high level radioactive waste or spent reactor fuel; and (4) all letters and other correspondence to or from DOE concerning these issues (including internal communications).

On March 15, 2001, Paul Detwiler, an attorney-advisor in the DOE Office of General Counsel, issued a determination letter to New Mexico. In this letter, Mr. Detwiler indicated that he was responding to the February 1, 2001 FOIA request that New Mexico had sent to Albuquerque and Carlsbad, and also stated that the WIPP Office had reviewed its files and had not found any responsive documents. Mr. Detwiler further explained that "[t]he reason for this lack of responsive documents is that DOE does not consider WIPP as a potential storage or disposal facility for high- level waste or spent fuel because the WIPP Land Withdrawal Act explicitly prohibited these activities at WIPP."

On April 10, 2001, New Mexico appealed the March 15, 2001 determination issued by Mr. Detwiler. In this Appeal, New Mexico indicated that it believed that the search conducted by the WIPP Office was inadequate because it appeared that a search had not been conducted for responsive documents that pre-date 1992.(1)

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

As we find that records that pre-date 1992 could reasonably contain information responsive to the FOIA request that New Mexico filed, we inquired into the adequacy of the search conducted by the WIPP Office. As part of this inquiry, we contacted Timothy Harms, an environmental engineer who conducted the search for responsive documents in the WIPP Office. Mr. Harms told us that he searched for documents that were responsive to New Mexico's FOIA request by reviewing his own records, the official WIPP Office (EM-23) files, and historical files from an organization (EM-34) that had previously been responsible for Headquarters management of the WIPP facility. Mr. Harms explained that he reviewed all the records in the WIPP Office which, in his professional opinion, had a reasonable probability for containing a discussion on the potential for disposal of either high-level waste or spent fuel at WIPP. Mr. Harms also explained that, as part of his search, he reviewed strategic plans (some dating back to 1982), legal briefs, and other programmatic documents, and also asked all of his colleagues in the WIPP office whether they had responsive documents. Electronic Mail Message from Timothy Harms, WIPP Office, to Linda Lazarus (May 4, 2001). After we explained that New Mexico was concerned about documents that pre-date 1992, Mr. Harms stated that an additional search was warranted. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Linda Lazarus and Timothy Harms (May 7, 2001). We will remand this matter to the WIPP Office to perform a new search. Following this search, the WIPP Office should issue a new determination letter that releases all information responsive to the request or identifies any responsive information it is withholding and provides adequate justification for such withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Office of the Attorney General of New Mexico on April 11, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0669, is hereby granted. This matter is hereby remanded to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant Office (WIPP Office) to perform an additional search for documents and to release them or provide justification for withholding any portion of them.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)On March 15, 2001, New Mexico sent a FOIA request to the WIPP Office, the Headquarters FOIA Office, and the Nevada Operations Office in which it requested the documents that it had requested from Albuquerque and Carlsbad as well as certain other documents. In its Appeal, New Mexico also alleges that the determination issued by Mr. Detwiler on March 15, 2001, was really issued in response to that FOIA request. However, we find that the evidence is to the contrary. The determination letter issued by Mr. Detwiler on March 15, 2001, indicates that it is written in response to the FOIA request that New Mexico filed on February 1, 2001. Moreover, DOE has not yet issued a determination in response to the March 15, 2001 FOIA request filed by New Mexico. New Mexico will have the opportunity to appeal this determination after it has been issued. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Linda Lazarus, Staff Attorney, OHA and Alexander C. Case No. VFA-0666

September 7, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Appellant:Martin Becker

Date of Filing:April 16, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0666

Martin Becker appeals from a determination of the Savannah River Operations Office (SROO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination was issued in response to his request for documents, which he filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, and the DOE implementing regulations, 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, we will remand Becker's request for further processing.

Background

Becker filed a FOIA request with SROO on September 22, 2000. In his request, he sought "a copy of any leases (including renewals and/or extensions) by Westinghouse Savannah River Company [WSRC] (including any subsidiaries or affiliates thereof) at Centennial Corporate Center in Aiken [South Carolina] since 1/1/96." We will refer to the record requested by Becker as "the lease."

SROO has denied Becker's request three times. Each denial has been appealed by Becker. Following each of the first two appeals by Becker, we remanded the request for further processing. Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,133 (2000) (Becker I); Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,153 (2001) (Becker II).

In our two earlier decisions, we made the following findings. WSRC is the management and operating (M&O) contractor at the DOE's Savannah River Site. Westinghouse Safety Management Solutions (WSMS) is a subcontractor to WSRC, and is the tenant holding the lease. The relationship between WSMS, WSRC, and the DOE was explained by a DOE contracting official as follows:

WSMS ... provide[s] support to WSRC ... via a contractual document referred to as an "Interworks Requisition." WSMS' services are paid for by WSRC on a cost- reimbursement basis. The costs paid to WSMS by WSRC are then charged by WSRC to DOE.

Neither the DOE nor WSRC has a copy of the lease. Becker I, 28 DOE at 80,576-77; Becker II, 28 DOE at 80,622-23. WSMS, however, has at least one copy of the lease. Becker II, 28 DOE at 80,624.

We also found that the lease was not an agency record for the purposes of the FOIA, because it was neither created by the DOE, nor in the possession of the DOE at the time of the request. Becker I, 28 DOE at 80,576. We stated, however, that the lease may still be subject to mandatory disclosure under a provision of the DOE regulations, the Contractor Records regulation, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). The Contractor Records regulation states:

When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) [i.e., the FOIA].

Thus, the Contractor Records regulation provides for the disclosure of certain records that are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA itself. See Sangre de Cristo Animal Protection, Inc. v. Department of Energy, No. 96-1059, slip op. at 3-6 (D.N.M. Mar. 10, 1998) (holding that records that the DOE neither possessed nor controlled and that were created by an agency contractor, although not agency records, are accessible under the Contractor Records regulation). Because we have previously determined that the lease is not subject to the FOIA, our discussion below is concerned solely with the applicability of the Contractor Records regulation to any copy of the lease in the possession of WSMS.

Analysis

To determine whether the lease is subject to disclosure under the Contractor Records regulation, we must consider three distinct criteria. First, we will consider whether the contract by which WSMS performs services for WSRC, and ultimately for the DOE, contains a provision whereby the Contractor Records regulation is applicable to WSMS. Next, we will consider whether the lease is a type of document that is deemed the property of the government by operation of the applicable contract. Finally, we will consider whether the lease was acquired or generated by WSMS in the performance of a relevant contract. As discussed below, we conclude that the lease meets all of these criteria.

1. Does the contract provide that records the contractor acquires or generates are the property of the government?

In Becker I, we examined certain provisions of WSRC's contract with the DOE dealing with whether the lease is the property of the government. We found in Becker II that the Contractor Records regulation is applicable to WSMS, though WSMS does not contract directly with the DOE. As we found in Becker II, the DOE acquisition regulations provide for the insertion of certain clauses regarding the government's ownership of contractor records into all M&O contracts. In addition, the regulations require that these clauses "pass down" to - i.e., be integrated into - certain subcontracts between the M&O contractor and other parties. We noted in Becker II that WSMS acknowledges that some of its subcontracts meet the threshold for the pass down of these clauses. Becker II, 28 DOE at 80,622. We conclude that WSMS has at least one contract that includes the requisite provision.

2. Does the contract provide that the lease is exempt from government ownership?

In Becker II, we noted that Section H.27 of the contract between WSRC and the DOE incorporates the Access to and Ownership of Records clause (the "Ownership of Records clause").(1) Becker II, 28 DOE at 80,622. The Ownership of Records clause states that "except as provided in paragraph b of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government...." We noted that the relevant exception to the general policy of government ownership of records is found in paragraph b(3) of the Ownership of Records clause, which exempts "non-accounting records relating to any procurement action by the Contractor" from government ownership. WSMS contends that the lease is a non-accounting procurement record, and thus exempt from government ownership under paragraph b(3).

The term "non-accounting procurement record" is not explicitly defined in either the contract or the DOE regulations. We find, however, that a provision of the DOE acquisition regulations addresses the issue of accounting records. The Accounts, Records, and Inspection regulation, 10 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3, provides that "except as agreed upon by the Government and the contractor, all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents, system files, data bases, and other data evidencing costs allowable ... shall be property of the Government." The lease is clearly a form of "data evidencing costs allowable." As such, it serves an accounting purpose, and therefore cannot be considered a "non-accounting" procurement record. We conclude that the lease is an accounting record within the meaning of the Ownership of Records clause, and is therefore the property of the DOE.

3. Was the lease acquired or generated in the performance of a contract?

The next issue in determining whether the lease is subject to the Contractor Records regulation is whether WSMS acquired or generated the lease in the performance of its subcontract with WSRC. We find that it did.

WSMS was incorporated as a subsidiary of WSRC in January 1997. It entered into its first contract to provide services to WSRC on October 1, 1997. It acquired its lease for space in the Centennial Corporate Center on November 27, 1997.(2) A DOE contracting officer stated that "WSMS's services are paid for by WSRC on a cost-reimbursement basis. The costs paid to WSMS by WSRC are then charged by WSRC to DOE. I would assume that WSMS recovers the lease costs of its facilities by including those costs in its overhead rates charged to all customers, including WSRC."(3) In addition, WSMS has acknowledged that "the cost of [the lease] is indirectly part of the costs of the services WSMS provides for all of its customers, government and commercial, one of which is WSRC."(4)

Thus, WSMS pays rent on the lease while performing its contract with WSRC, and receives reimbursement for at least part of the rent under the terms of that contract. Finally, as stated above, WSRC then charges the costs that it pays to WSMS to DOE, under the terms of its contract with the agency. Acquiring a lease for office space and contemporaneously entering into a service contract that provides for reimbursement of the rent for that space is a sufficient factual basis for us to conclude that the lease in question was acquired or generated by the contractor in the performance of the contract.

Conclusion

We have found that the lease, which is partially paid for by DOE funds, was acquired or generated by WSMS in its performance of a contract, and is the property of the government. We therefore find that the lease is subject to mandatory disclosure to the public under the DOE's Contractor Records regulation. The lease or any portion thereof may be withheld, however, if it would be exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1)

We shall therefore remand this matter to SROO. On remand, SROO must review the lease, segregate and release all non-exempt portions of it, and issue a new determination that justifies any withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0666 is hereby granted in part as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Savannah River Operations Office to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Alan Hoffmann

Date of Filing: May 1, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0668

On May 1, 2001, Alan Hoffmann filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on April 16, 2001. That determination concerned a request for information submitted by Alan Hoffmann pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Albuquerque would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On January 19, 2001, Alan Hoffmann submitted a FOIA request for "an overview of the scope of beryllium surface levels at the Kansas City Allied Signal-Honeywell Plant." Electronic Mail Request Letter dated January 19, 2001, from Alan Hoffmann to Terry Apodaca, Office of Public Affairs, Albuquerque (Request Letter). Mr. Hoffmann was specifically interested in the first six months of 1996 but indicated that anything available since 1996 would be satisfactory. Id. On April 16, 2001, Albuquerque issued a determination supplying Mr. Hoffmann with current surface samples. Determination Letter dated April 16, 2001, from Carolyn A. Becknell, Freedom of Information Officer, Office of Public Affairs, Albuquerque, to Alan Hoffmann (Determination Letter). In response to the April 16, 2001 Determination Letter from Albuquerque, Alan Hoffmann filed this Appeal asking that Albuquerque conduct an additional search for records from 1996. Appeal Letter received May 1, 2001, from Alan Hoffmann, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter).

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

We have contacted the Kansas City Area Office(1) (Kansas City) to determine what type of search was conducted. That office indicated that it conducted a search of its database and other records. Memorandum of May 14, 2001 Telephone Conversation between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, DOE, and David Hampton, Office of Public Affairs, Kansas City. Ms. Hampton indicated that Kansas City did not conduct survey samples for beryllium prior to the year 2000.

Since no beryllium testing was conducted at the Kansas City plant prior to 2000, it is reasonable that no test results were located for the period 1996 to 1999. Nevertheless, Kansas City did perform a database search, though unsuccessful, for such records. Consequently, we conclude that Albuquerque conducted an adequate search for the requested information. Based on the circumstances of this case and the search Albuquerque performed, we are convinced that Albuquerque followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material sought by Mr. Hoffmann in his request. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Alan Hoffmann, on May 1, 2001, Case No. VFA-0668, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Attorney General of New Mexico

Date of Filing: May 3, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0669

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by the Attorney General of New Mexico from a determination issued to him by the Freedom of Information Officer of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Carlsbad Field Office (CFO). In this determination, the CFO provided to the Attorney General 42 documents that he requested pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, the Attorney General challenges the adequacy of the search for responsive documents.

In his FOIA request, the Attorney General sought access to all documents identifying or considering the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant (WIPP) site in Carlsbad, New Mexico, as a potential site for storage or disposal of spent reactor fuel or high level radioactive wastes, and all documents setting forth alternative sites that may be considered if the Yucca Mountain site in Nevada is not selected to receive these materials. In response to this request, CFO searched its facilities and located the 42 documents, which were provided to the Attorney General in their entirety. In his Appeal, the Attorney General contends that further responsive documents exist, and requests that we remand this matter to the CFO for a further search.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to determine the scope of the search that was performed, we contacted the CFO. That Office informed us that certain facilities were inadvertently excluded from the initial search, and requested that we remand this matter for the performance of a more complete search. See memorandum of May 30, 2001 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, Office of Hearings and Appeals and Dennis Hurtt, CFO. We will therefore grant the Attorney General's Appeal and remand this proceeding to the CFO for another search.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Attorney General of New Mexico in Case No. VFA-0665 is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2).

(2) This matter is remanded to the Carlsbad Field Office for the performance of another search for responsive documents.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: May 15, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0671

On May 15, 2001, Barbara Schwarz (Schwarz) filed an Appeal from three determinations issued to her in response to requests for documents that she submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determinations were issued on March 22, April 19, and April 27, 2001, by the DOE Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Division (DOE/HQ). This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ perform an additional search and grant Schwarz a fee waiver.

I. Background

This Appeal concerns three FOIA requests that Schwarz submitted to DOE, the Department of the Army, and the Department of State. The request that was originally submitted to the Department of State (DOS) was subsequently referred to DOE after DOS searched its files and found responsive information that related to DOE. The request that was submitted to the Department of the Army asked for material related to litigation with DOE.

In her first request, Schwarz asked that DOS send Schwarz a copy of all records pertaining to her. Letter from Schwarz to DOS (October 21, 1999). DOS searched, and during its search found one responsive document that also contained information related to DOE. Letter from M. Grafeld, DOS to Abel Lopez, DOE/HQ (March 26, 2001). DOS referred the document to DOE, and DOE released the document to Schwarz in its entirety. On September 13, 2000, Schwarz requested the Department of the Army (the Army) to provide her with copies of records relating to her litigation with several government agencies, including DOE. Letter from Schwarz to the Army (September 13, 2000). The Judge Advocate General (JAG) of the Army forwarded the portion of the request pertaining to DOE to DOE/HQ on March 26, 2001 for appropriate action. Letter from JAG to DOE/HQ (March 26, 2001). On April 19, 2001, DOE/HQ informed Schwarz that the DOE Office of General Counsel (DOE/OGC) searched but found no responsive documents relating to her litigation with DOE. Letter from DOE/HQ to Schwarz (April 19, 2001). Finally, in the third request at issue in this Appeal, Schwarz asked DOE/HQ on December 18, 2000, for all information on several matters including: (1) earthquakes that may have been caused by individuals with access to power plants;

(2) the negative affects of electricity in residential areas; (3) alleged bribes by the German Secret Service to Utah Power employees; (4) the mental health of DOE and nuclear power plant employees; and (5) the alleged secret and illegal infiltration of the DOE by the "German Nazi Secret Service." Letter from DOE/HQ to Schwarz (March 22, 2001) (Determination). She also requested that DOE waive fees in processing her request. Id. On March 22, 2001, DOE/HQ denied Schwarz's request for a fee waiver and asked for an assurance that she would pay processing fees before initiating a search. Id. Schwarz appealed all of these determinations and asks that OHA grant the fee waiver and order DOE/HQ to conduct another search for responsive material. She also argues that she is entitled to two free hours of search time and 100 free pages of records. Letter from Schwarz to Director, OHA (May 15, 2001) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

Schwarz submits several reasons to justify her qualification for a fee waiver. First, she claims that she is indigent. Appeal at 2. Schwarz also contends that DOE has approved fee waivers for requesters who did not meet the requirements for a fee waiver. Id. (1) Finally, Schwarz argues that the requested information concerns government activities and that she is capable of disseminating the material to the public via the Internet and press releases. Appeal at 3.

A. Fee Waiver

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees for the processing of their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a) (4)(A)(I); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, it provides a two-pronged test for agencies to use in considering whether to waive fees. The two prongs can be summarized as the "public interest prong" and the "commercial interest" prong. See Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1998) (Murphy). The public interest prong requires an examination of whether disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(4)(A)(iii). The commercial interest prong asks whether the request is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. Id. The requester bears the burden of satisfying the two-prong test for a fee waiver. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997) (Ott).

In order to determine whether the requester meets the public interest prong (i.e., whether disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities) the DOE considers four factors:

(A) The subject of the request; whether the subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;

(B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure;

(D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding; whether the disclosure is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8)(i). A requester who satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong must then address the second prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his or her commercial interest. See Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,199 (1997). In denying Schwarz's fee waiver request, the Director of the DOE/HQ based this conclusion on Schwarz's alleged failure to provide justification for any of the four factors. Determination at 1. After reviewing Schwarz's arguments de novo, we agree, and find that DOE/HQ properly denied Schwarz's request for a fee waiver based on the four factors in 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8).

1. Factor A

DOE/HQ argues that the information requested "may not concern the operations or activities of the government and specifically the Department of Energy." Letter from DOE/HQ to Schwarz (March 22, 2001) at 2. We agree. Information regarding electricity, earthquakes, and the causes of earthquakes is not likely to concern the operations or activities of government. Records must be sought for their informative value with respect to specifically identified government operations or activities. See Van Fripp v. Parks, No. 97-0159, slip op. at 10 (D.D.C. Mar 16, 2000). In addition, Schwarz has requested information on the mental health of DOE and power plant employees, and the alleged bribery of DOE employees. This information could, arguably, concern the operations of the agency. However, Schwarz has not specifically identified any DOE operations or activities nor has she made more than a conclusory statement about the public interest in this information. Oglesby v. Department of the Army, 920 F.2d 57, 66 n.11 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (conclusory statements insufficient to make public interest showing). Thus, there is a "tenuous link" between furnishing the requested information and any benefit to the general public. NTEU v. Griffith, 811 F.2d 644, 647 (D.C. Cir. 1987). For instance, Schwartz argues that the American people need to know this information because "whatever comes from the government might not always be in the best interest of the United States." Appeal at 3. She also states that Americans want to know of a "secretly infiltrated DOE" so that they can "protect their lives and those of their family members." Id. These are conclusory statements that do not enlighten the agency about any potential public interest in the requested material. Therefore, we find that Schwarz has failed to satisfy Factor A.

2. Factor B

In order for the disclosure to be "likely to contribute" to an understanding of specific DOE operations or activities, the responsive material must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating that it is relevant to consider subject matter of fee waiver request). We cannot find that the requested information, if it exists, would contribute to an understanding of DOE operations or activities. Allegations of agency malfeasance do not warrant a fee waiver without further evidence that informative material will be found. See AFGE v. Department of Commerce, 632 F. Supp. 1272, 1278 (D.D.C. 1986); aff'd on other grounds, 907 F.2d 203 (D.C. Cir. 1990). Thus, Schwarz has failed to satisfy Factor B.

3. Factor C

This test requires us to consider whether the requested documents would contribute to the understanding of the subject by the general public. To satisfy this factor, the requester must have the ability and intention to disseminate this information to the public. See STAND, 27 DOE ¶ 80,250 (1999) (STAND); Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992).

We find that Schwarz has not proven an ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. She states that she wants to inform the public via the Internet and that she intends to prepare a document for Congress to use as a basis for legislation against the alleged infiltration. Appeal at 3. She adds that she is capable of dissemination via the Internet and press releases. Id.

This falls far short of the proof required to establish the requester's ability to disseminate responsive material to the public. See STAND, 27 DOE at 80,250. A requester cannot establish public benefit by alleging an intent to share the requested information with the public. See Donald R. Patterson, 28 DOE ¶ 80,107 (2000). In addition, Schwarz has not established that there is a broad audience of persons interested in the subject of earthquakes, alleged Nazi infiltration of the DOE and the mental health of DOE employees. Mere access to the Internet does not prove an individual's ability to disseminate information under Factor C. Id; Barbara Schwarz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,126 (2000). Therefore, we find that Schwarz has not satisfied the Factor C test.

4. Factor D

Under Factor D, disclosure must contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities. Because, as explained with regard to Factor A, Schwarz has not shown that the requested information relates to specifically identifiable government operations or activities, release of the requested information will not significantly contribute to public understanding of government operations or activities. Thus, Schwarz has failed to satisfy Factor D. Because Schwarz has not satisfied the public interest prong, it is unnecessary to analyze the commercial interest prong. We therefore find that DOE/HQ properly denied Schwarz's request for a fee waiver. (2)

B. ADEQUACY OF SEARCH

Schwarz asks that OHA order DOE/HQ to conduct a new search because she contends that more responsive documents exist at DOE and that DOE must have records regarding her cases against the Departments of Treasury, Health and Human Services, and the FBI. Appeal at 1. She requests detailed information about the search for these documents, including "search records" and a "search declaration" by the Acting Deputy Counsel for Litigation. Appeal at 2.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988). We have analyzed the search conducted by DOE/HQ and find that the search was adequate.

Schwarz filed a FOIA appeal with the Army on September 13, 2000. Her appeal contained a FOIA request for copies of records related to her litigation with DOE and other agencies. Letter from the Army to DOE/HQ (March 26, 2001). The Army searched its files in response to Schwarz's request and found no responsive material. The Army then referred the request to the agencies that were actually parties to the litigation. Id. In the request, Schwarz stated that she sued DOE and gave a specific case number. DOE/HQ contacted the Department of Justice (DOJ) about the case, and was informed that because Schwarz did not file the case properly, the case was never sent to DOE. Letter from Sheila Jeter, DOE/HQ to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 1, 2001). Nonetheless, DOE/OGC still conducted a search of its files using the case number, but found no responsive documents. Letter from DOE/HQ to Schwarz (April 19, 2001).

We find that DOE/OGC conducted an adequate search reasonably calculated to uncover the material requested by Ms. Schwarz. Even though DOJ informed DOE that the case was never sent to DOE, DOE/OGC still searched its files for responsive material using the case number. DOE/OGC was not required to provide a detailed description of its search or a "search certificate." The FOIA simply requires the agency to notify the requester of the determination, the reasons for the determination, and of the requester's right to appeal. See Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 at 80,872 (1999).

C. PROCEDURAL ISSUES

Schwarz raised other objections to the manner in which DOE/HQ handled the FOIA appeals. She alleged that DOE/HQ attempted to "act like the final authority," that she was not provided a copy of her appeal, and that she did not receive a transmittal form from the agencies. Appeal at 1. Upon review of Schwarz's allegations and DOE's response, we conclude that Schwarz has misinterpreted much of the correspondence relating to her requests for information. DOE/HQ has never claimed to be nor acted as if it were the final authority on the Army and DOS appeals. Rather, those agencies relinquished to DOE the responsibility for processing information related to DOE, and DOE has exercised that authority in its responses to Schwarz. See Letter from DOS to DOE/HQ (March 26, 2001); Letter from the Army to DOE/HQ (March 26, 2001). DOE/HQ has also stated that it will send Schwarz a copy of the transmittal memos that she requested in the Appeal. Letter from Sheila Jeter, DOE/HQ to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 1, 2001).

In conclusion, we find that DOE/HQ conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the responsive material. DOE/HQ also properly denied Schwarz's request for a fee waiver. Accordingly, the Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz on May 15, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0671, is hereby denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: June 27, 2001

(1)Schwarz did not offer any evidence that DOE approved "unqualified" FOIA requests. Therefore, we will not address that issue. We further note that indigence is not a basis for a waiver of fees under the FOIA. See Barbara Schwarz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,126 (2000); Ely v. United States Postal Service, 753 F.2d 163, 165 (D.C. Cir. 1985) ("Congress rejected a fee waiver provision for indigents.").

(2)Regarding Schwarz's entitlement to two hours of free search time and 100 free copies, we note that DOE/HQ did not deny these items. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a), (b)(4). See Barbara Schwarz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,126 (2000). Rather, the Determination denied only Schwarz's fee waiver request. It is the policy of DOE/HQ to require a requester to address fees before assigning a control number to the request and initiating a search. After DOE/HQ begins the search, the first two hours are free. See Schwarz, 27 DOE at 80,871 n2. However, DOE/HQ informed us that Schwarz did not include an assurance to pay in her request, nor did she submit one to that office after the determination letter specifically requested assurance. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sheila Jeter, DOE/HQ and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 21, 2001).

Case No. VFA-0672, 28 DOE ¶ 80,172

June 14, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner: Anthony Delgado

Date of Filing: May 17, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0672

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Anthony Delgado filed from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) FOIA/Privacy Act Division. In that determination the FOIA/Privacy Act Division informed Mr. Delgado that no documents were located that were responsive to a request for information that he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require the FOIA/Privacy Act Division to conduct a further search for responsive materials.

BACKGROUND

In his request, Mr. Delgado sought documents that discuss radiation exposure as the cause of neurofibromas (multiple nerve tumors). Mr. Delgado also asked for statistical information about DOE employees and DOE contractor employees who may have been afflicted with such tumors. The reformulated request was then assigned to the Headquarters Office of Environment, Safety and Health (E&H).

ANALYSIS

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a standard of reasonableness. McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at the Office of Environment, Safety and Health to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Delgado's request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Mr. Delgado's request for information, the E&H official instituted a search of all personal documents, office documents, library books, and the memories of its employees, and requested the E&H California office to conduct a computer search for information pertaining to neurofibromas in current or former DOE employees. This search yielded no responsive documents.

E&H also informed us that within the morbidity and mortality studies of DOE contractor employees since the early 1970s there were no special analyses of neurofibromas, and the condition was not singled out in the tabular materials in the published reports. E&H further concluded that some individuals included in the studies may have had neurofibromas, without the existence of the tumors being recorded. In order to find out if any of those individuals did have neurofibromas, each death certificate would have to be reviewed on an individual basis. This information is maintained in a database by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, and E&H has no access to it. Memorandum of May 31, 2001, Telephone Conversation between Dr. Gerald Petersen, E&H, and Toni Brown, Paralegal Specialist, Office of Hearings and Appeals.

Based on the foregoing, we find no reason to believe that additional responsive documents subject to the FOIA exist at the DOE. We conclude that the Headquarters' Office of Environment, Safety and Health's search for responsive documents was adequate, and that Mr. Delgado's Appeal should therefore be denied.(1)

(1)In an effort to assist Mr. Delgado, the Office of Environment, Safety and Health conducted a search of its public database system called the Human Radiation Experiments Information Management System (HREX). Employing a computerized word search, it located the term "neurofibromas" 22 times. That system is available to Mr. Delgado, as a member of the public, on the internet at http://hrex.dis.anl.gov.

Case No. VFA-0673, 28 DOE ¶ 80,174

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Nevada Desert Experience

Date of Filing: May 22, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0673

On May 22, 2001, Nevada Desert Experience (Nevada) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 23, 2001, by the Oakland Operations Office (Oakland) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information Nevada filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Nevada challenges the adequacy of Oakland's search for documents responsive to its request.

I. Background

On February 12, 2001, Nevada filed a request for information in which it sought "information regarding DOE's activities related to the Vision for 2020 program overseen by the U.S. Space Command." On February 26, 2001, Oakland issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search at Oakland and the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) and located a document responsive to Nevada's request. See February 26, 2001 Determination Letter. In addition, Oakland referred Nevada to the LLNL Department of Defense Program website and to two books available through the Air Force. On March 9, 2001, Nevada wrote to Oakland stating that its determination letter was inadequate. Specifically, Nevada asserted that Oakland did not appear to have searched DOE-wide for documents as originally requested.

On March 23, 2001, Oakland issued a second determination which stated that it conducted another search at Oakland and at DOE Headquarters and located no additional documents responsive to Nevada's request. See March 23, 2001 Determination Letter. Nevada responded to this letter on April 14, 2001, again stating its dissatisfaction with Oakland's search for responsive documents. On April 23, 2001, Oakland issued its final determination letter indicating that it conducted two separate and complete searches for documents responsive to Nevada's request. See April 23, 2001 Determination Letter. It further indicated that Nevada was provided with all documents responsive to its request that were found at the LLNL and that DOE Headquarters located no documents responsive to the request. Id. Further, Oakland stated that the searches conducted in response to Nevada's request were reasonably calculated to uncover all responsive documents. Id.

On May 22, 2001, Nevada filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In its Appeal, Nevada challenges the adequacy of the searches conducted by Oakland. Specifically, Nevada requests that Oakland conduct a more thorough search for DOE-generated documents. See Appeal Letter at 2.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Oakland to ascertain the extent of the searches that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Nevada's request might exist. Upon receiving Nevada's request for information, Oakland instituted two separate searches of its database as well as referred Nevada's request to DOE Headquarters for an additional search. Based on these searches, Oakland located and produced one relevant record that was responsive to Nevada's request. Oakland has informed us that these searches, including the one conducted at DOE Headquarters, did not locate any other responsive documents. It further stated that searches were conducted in all locations that were likely to have responsive documents. Oakland reiterated that all personnel responsible for the searches were provided with a copy of Nevada's original FOIA request. See June 20, 2001 Record of Telephone Conversation between Jack Hug, Oakland and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Given the facts presented to us, we find that Oakland conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Nevada's request. Therefore, we must deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Nevada Desert Experience, OHA Case No. VFA-0673, on May 22, 2001, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Southern California Edison

Date of Filing: May 22, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0674

On May 22, 2001, Southern California Edison (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on April 26, 2001 by the Department of Energy's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). In that determination, BPA, responded to a Request for Information filed by the Appellant on March 7, 2001 under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. BPA's determination released several responsive documents to the Appellant and withheld two documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the withheld information and to conduct an additional search for responsive documents.

I. BACKGROUND

This Appeal arises out of a contract dispute between the Appellant and the BPA. On March 7, 2001, the Appellant filed an eight-part request for information with BPA. On April 26, 2001, BPA issued a determination letter indicating that it was releasing several responsive documents and withholding two responsive documents under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. BPA also indicated that it did not have any documents that were responsive to three of the eight parts of the Appellant's request. The present Appeal challenges the adequacy of BPA's search and its withholdings under Exemption 5.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The only exemption that BPA claims in the present case is found at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) (Exemption 5).

Exemption 5

BPA withheld two documents in their entirety under Exemption 5: (1) an e-mail message sent by Timothy

R. Smith to Claire Hobson on August 23, 2000 (Document 1), and (2) an e-mail message sent by Timothy R. Smith to four BPA employees on August 25, 2000 (Document 2).

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975); see also NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

The Deliberative Process Privilege

The determination letter indicates that BPA has withheld both documents under the deliberative process privilege. It is well settled that the deliberative process privilege is among the privileges that fall under Exemption 5. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862.

The deliberative process privilege permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The purpose of the privilege is to protect the quality of agency decisions by promoting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. See EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (citing Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946 (Ct. Cl. 1958)) (Mink).

In order for the deliberative process to shield a document, it must be both pre-decisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Even then, however, the exemption only covers the subjective, deliberative portion of the document. Mink, 410 U.S. at 87-91. An agency must disclose factual information contained in the protected document unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

The Appellant claims that the deliberate process privilege does not apply to either of the two documents withheld by BPA. In support of this contention, the Appellant correctly notes that in order to be protected under the deliberative process privilege, information must be generated prior to the adoption of an agency's policy or decision. However, both documents, which consist of the author's opinions of how BPA should respond to a written inquiry submitted by the Appellant on August 18, 2000 (the August 18, 2000 inquiry), were generated as part of the agency's deliberations about its proper response to the August 18, 2000 inquiry. Accordingly, we find that both documents can be withheld under Exemption 5's deliberative process privilege.

The Attorney-Client Privilege

BPA withheld Document 2, an e-mail message sent by Timothy R. Smith to four BPA employees on August 25, 2000, under the attorney-client privilege as well as the deliberative process privilege. The attorney-client privilege exists to protect confidential communications between attorneys and their clients made for the purpose of securing or providing legal advice. In Re Grand Jury Proceedings 88-9 (MIA), 899 F.2d 1039 (11th Cir. 1990); In Re Grand Jury Subpoena of Slaughter, 694 F.2d 1258, 1260 (11th Cir. 1982); 8 J. Wigmore, Evidence, § 2291, p. 590 (McNaughton Rev. Ed. 1961); McCormack, Law of Evidence, Sec. 87, p.175 (2nd ed. E. Cleary 1972). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. Clark v. American Commerce National Bank, 974 F.2d 127 (9th Cir. 1992) (Clark). The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those disclosures necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 96 S. Ct. 1569, 1577 (1976) (Fisher). In other words, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client.

The Appellant claims that Document 2 cannot be withheld under the attorney-client privilege. This e-mail message proposes a course of action in response to a letter to BPA from the Appellant. One of the recipients of the message was a BPA attorney. It is clear from the context of the e-mail message that its author was soliciting legal advice from that BPA attorney (as well as comments from the other three recipients). This e-mail message was clearly a confidential communication between an attorney and his client made for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. Accordingly, this document is protected by the attorney-client privilege.

The Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Accordingly, even if a document can properly be withheld under Exemption 5, we must consider whether the public interest nevertheless demands disclosure pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In applying this regulation, we note that the Department of Justice has adopted a "foreseeable harm" standard for defending FOIA exemptions. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (October 4, 1993) (Reno Memorandum). The Reno Memorandum indicates that whether or not there is a legally correct application of an exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. See Reno Memorandum at 1, 2.

BPA's determination does not indicate that it considered the public interest in disclosing this information. Accordingly, we are remanding the portion of the Appeal withholding the two e-mail messages to the BPA. On remand, BPA must either release these two documents or issue a new determination indicating that release of these documents would not be in the public interest.

B. Adequacy of the Search

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (D.C. Cir. 1983), modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

The Appellant asserts that the BPA's search for responsive documents was flawed in a number of aspects. First, the Appellant indicates that one of the documents released to it by BPA, the December 21, 2000 Federal Columbia River Power System Biological Opinion, is not responsive to its request. The Appellant asserts that BPA should have instead released the May 2000 Federal Columbia River Power System Biological Opinion to it. BPA indicates that it apparently misunderstood that Appellant's request and is willing to conduct a further search for the May 2000 Federal Columbia River Power System Biological Opinion. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to BPA. On remand, BPA shall conduct a further search for the May 2000 Federal Columbia River Power System Biological Opinion and shall then either release this document to the Appellant or issue a new determination letter justifying its withholding.

The Appellant further asserts that it was provided with an incomplete copy of one responsive document.

Apparently, the Appellant received pages 2 though 10 of this document, which it describes as "Convert Last Years." BPA indicates that it cannot identify any document entitled (or described as) Convert Last Years among the documents it released to the Appellant in response to the present request. Resolution of this situation will require BPA to consult with the Appellant. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to BPA. On remand, BPA shall consult with the Appellant in order to identify the document the Appellant has described as Convert Last Years.

The Appellant also claims that it "requires definitions of the terms, rows, and columns on the chart contained [in the Convert Last Years document]." Appeal at Page 2. However, it is well settled that the FOIA does not require agencies to either create a document that does not already exist in order to satisfy FOIA requests or to answer questions directed at them by requesters. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d). Instead, the FOIA is limited to requiring the "disclosure of certain documents which the law requires the agency to prepare or which the agency has decided for its own reasons to create." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 162 (1975); see also Renegotiation Bd. v. Grumman Aircraft Eng'g Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 192 (1975); Yeager v. Drug Enforcement Administration, 678 F.2d 315 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

The Appellant also contends that BPA failed to correctly interpret a part of its request. Part 5 of the Appellant's request sought:

All documents that evidence, support, or refer to the representation contained in the December 19, 2000, letter of Mr. Stephen R. Oliver to all BPA Pacific Northwest Regional Customers showing that BPA determined it had sufficient surplus power for the August 1, 2000 to July 31, 200[1] operating year.

Request at 2 (emphasis supplied). BPA's determination letter responded to this request in the following manner:

No such records exist. Contrary to the characterization in [the Appellant's] request, Mr. Oliver's letter does not in any way represent that BPA had sufficient surplus power for any operating year. It provided information only regarding the available authority for marketing Excess Federal power pursuant to 16 U.S.C. § 832m(b). That being the case, there are no documents that would be responsive to this request.

Determination Letter at 3. The Appeal claims that the Request sought "all documents ?that evidence, support or refer' to the representations made in the letter." Appeal at page 3 (emphasis supplied). It is clear that the Request sought those documents that support a specific alleged representation, while the Appeal claims that it sought any documents supporting any representation made in Mr. Oliver's letter. The Appeal is therefore attempting to broaden the scope of the Request. It is well settled that we do not permit FOIA appellants to broaden their requests for information in their appeals. See, e.g., Alan J. White, 17 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,539 (1988); see also Arthur Scala, 13 DOE ¶ 80,133 at 80,622 n.2 (1986). Since the Appellant now wishes to obtain information of a broader nature than that which it sought initially, its broadened request is a new request for information. The Appellant should therefore file a new request for information with the BPA in order to obtain the information it is seeking.

III. CONCLUSION

We are remanding a portion of the present Appeal to BPA. On remand, BPA shall: either release all or part of the withheld e-mail messages or issue a new determination letter indicating that releasing this information would not be in the public interest, consult with the Appellant as indicated above, and conduct a further search for the May 2000 Federal Columbia River Power System Biological Opinion and then either release this document to the Appellant or issue a new determination letter justifying its withholding..

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Southern California Edison, Case No. VFA-0674, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Myrtle W. Bowers

Date of Filing: June 1, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0675

On June 1, 2001, Myrtle W. Bowers filed an Appeal from a determination the DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office (DOE/AL) issued on February 15, 2001. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Ms. Bowers requested from DOE/AL "radiation exposure information for John C. Bowers," the requester's late husband. Letter from Myrtle Waynick Bowers to Freedom of Information Officer, DOE/AL (Jan. 20, 2001). Mr. Bowers started to work with AEC [the Atomic Energy Commission, predecessor agency to the DOE] at the Clarksville Modification Center in 1949 and worked there until 1960 then worked there for Mason & Hanger Inc. without interruption of his employment until late summer of 1965 when they moved much of the operation to Pantex [a DOE facility near Amarillo, Texas]. He chose not to move to Amarillo but took other employment in the Clarksville area . . . .

Electronic mail from Gilbert B. Bowers to Steve Goering, OHA (June 25, 2001).

On February 15, 2001, DOE/AL responded to Ms. Bowers, stating that the "Records Management personnel at our Pantex Plant in Amarillo, Texas, searched for exposure information pertaining to your deceased husband but could not locate any." Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, Freedom of Information Officer, DOE/AL, to Myrtle W. Bowers (Feb. 15, 2001).

In her appeal, Ms. Bowers states,

I believe records should be available either at Pantex or in DOE records storage covering his radiation exposure for four primary reasons.

- First, radiation levels were monitored continuously at the Clarksville Modification Center both during AEC's operation of the Center from 1949 through 1960 and later during MHC's operation of the Center from 1960 through 1965 so overall information on environmental quality should exist.

- Second, while during the initial years under AEC individual dosage and exposure was not measured[,] it was measured and monitored with individual dosimeters during MHC's management of the Center so individual dosage and exposure information should be available for at least the period 1960 through 1965.
- Third, MHC's Chief Counsel did indicate in a message (copy attached) on January 16, 2001 that a container of records from Clarksville had been found at Pantex.
- Fourth, while handling a nuclear warhead [Mr. Bowers] sufferred a work related accident in which part of his index finger was cut off leading to his hospitalization at the base hospital. This occurred before the operations were taken over by MHC and would surely be a matter of record in AEC files for the period from 1949 through 1960.

Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, we contacted the Pantex Plant and found out the following regarding its search. First, Pantex personnel explained to us that when the Clarksville site was closed in 1965, "at least some of the records were transferred to the Medina [Texas] site. When Medina closed the following year, 1966, records were transferred from Medina to the Fort Worth Federal Records Center [FRC] and to Pantex, another Mason & Hanger site." Electronic Mail from Clinton Fitts, Pantex, to Steven Goering, OHA (July 16, 2001);

In response to Ms. Bowers' request, Pantex Records Management personnel consulted an index of Clarksville/Medina records in its possession, and located an "Annual Report of Radiation Exposure for Clarksville for 1964," "a file labeled weekly reports from Clarksville," and 25 boxes "that have some Clarksville records in them." Id.; Electronic Mail from Clinton Fitts, Pantex, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 27, 2001); Electronic Mail from Clinton Fitts, Pantex, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 26, 2001). However, the Annual Report did not contain Mr. Bowers' name. Further, Pantex personnel do not believe the weekly reports or the 25 boxes (which, according to its index of records, contain "policy and procedure type files") would contain exposure records. Electronic Mail from Clinton Fitts, Pantex, to Steven Goering, OHA (June 27, 2001).

Pantex personnel also searched "the BWXT Pantex Inactive Records Database" for information concerning "57 boxes of personnel, medical and payroll records [that] were transferred from Pantex to the Fort Worth FRC by BWXT Records Management last year." Electronic Mail from Clinton Fitts, Pantex, to Steven Goering, OHA (July 16, 2001). (BWXT is the current DOE contractor operating the Pantex facility.) The database contains an "itemized listing of the records transferred." Id. This search revealed no responsive documents. Pantex also contacted the Fort Worth FRC to inquire about any other records it might have with respect to the Clarksville site. "The FRC searches records by agency number, specifically code 434 for the DOE. [The FRC] indicated there were no longer any records pertaining to the Medina/Clarksville site." Id. Finally, DOE/AL accessed a National Archives and Records Adminstration database and determined that the Atlanta Federal Records Center (the center responsible for the region in which Clarksville is located) did not have records identified as being from the Clarksville site. Electronic Mail from Terry Apodaca, DOE/AL, to Steve Goering, OHA (July 16, 2001).

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that the Pantex Plant and DOE/AL performed a diligent search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Ms. Bowers sought. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Myrtle W. Bowers, Case Number VFA-0675, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Arnold Kramish

Date of Filing: June 7, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0676

Arnold Kramish filed an Appeal from a determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him on May 24, 2001. In that determination, Albuquerque denied in part a request for information that Mr. Kramish submitted on October 28, 1997, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, for a copy of a letter he himself had written "from the AEC Office of Intelligence, on May 4, 1950, addressed to Frederic de Hoffman, at Los Alamos." Albuquerque provided a copy of the letter and its attachment from both of which information was withheld. That information was withheld as the result of the DOE's Document Declassification Division (formerly the Office of Declassification) reviewing the document and determining that it contained classified information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the information that it withheld from the letter and attachment.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In response to Mr. Kramish's request for a copy of his May 4, 1950 letter, Albuquerque provided a copy from which the bulk of the text had been withheld. As justification for withholding the information, Albuquerque asserted that the information was related to nuclear weapon design and therefore had been classified as Restricted Data pursuant to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq. Such information, according to Albuquerque, is exempt from disclosure to the public under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld portions of the letter and attachment. In his Appeal, Mr. Kramish contends that materials published subsequent to the date of the letter may contain information similar to that which has been withheld in this case, in which event the withholding of that information should be reconsidered.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990).

The Director of Security Affairs has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of Security Affairs (now the Director of Security and Emergency Operations) (Director) reviewed those portions of the requested document for which the DOE had claimed exemption from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

According to the Director, the DOE determined on review that the requested letter contains information concerning nuclear weapon research. This type of information has been classified as Restricted Data (RD) under the DOE's current classification guidance. Under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, RD is one form of classified information, and is therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3.

Mr. Kramish argues that a number of public documents, including the work of English and Soviet scientists, have disclosed "vast information on the dawn of the thermonuclear weapons era." The DOE has considered this claim carefully. We note that with respect to requests for classified information, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has held that information must be "officially acknowledged" to have been released to the public in order for such a release to be considered a public disclosure. See Fitzgibbon v. CIA, 911 F.2d 755, 765 (D.C. Cir. 1990). The DOE does not officially acknowledge that the information it continues to withhold has been released. That information is therefore classified under the current classification guidance.

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the continued withholding of some portions of the letter and attachment under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, nevertheless such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the letter and attachment that the Director has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Director has reduced the extent of the previously deleted portions to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations. Because some previously deleted information may now be released, newly redacted versions of the letter and attachment reviewed in this Appeal will be provided to Mr. Kramish under separate cover. Accordingly, Arnold Kramish's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Arnold Kramish on June 7, 2001, Case No. VFA-0676, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A newly redacted version of Arnold Kramish's May 4, 1950 letter, together with its attachment, addressed to Frederic de Hoffman at Los Alamos, in which additional information is released, will be provided to Mr. Kramish.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Southern California Edison

Date of Filing: June 13, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0677

On June 13, 2001, Southern California Edison (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on May 14, 2001, by the Department of Energy's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). In that determination, BPA responded to a Request for Information filed by the Appellant on March 21, 2001 under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. BPA's determination released several responsive documents to the Appellant. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release additional information to the Appellant.

This Appeal arises out of a contract dispute between the Appellant and BPA. On March 21, 2001, the Appellant filed a twelve-part request for information with BPA. On May 14, 2001, BPA issued a determination letter indicating that it was releasing several responsive documents to the Appellant. On June 13, 2001, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal in which it challenges the adequacy of BPA's determinations. (1) Specifically, the Appellant notes that although a substantial amount of information has been redacted from the documents released to it by BPA, the determination letter neither attempts to justify these redactions nor even acknowledges that BPA has withheld any information. (2)

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

The statute requires that after conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, the agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

A written determination letter informs the requester of the results of the agency's search for responsive documents and of any withholdings that the agency intends to make. In doing so, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

It therefore follows that the agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (1) adequately describe the results of searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption(s) under which information was withheld. Research Information Services, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,139 (1996); Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,205 at 80,767 (1996). Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester and the review authority must speculate about the appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

In the present case, it is clear that BPA's determination is not adequate. Information has been redacted from responsive documents without any explanation or justification. Accordingly, we are remanding this Appeal to BPA. On remand, BPA must either release the information it redacted or issue a new determination letter which explains and justifies its withholdings in accordance with the requirements set forth above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Southern California Edison, Case No. VFA-0677, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: July 3, 2001

(1)The Appeal was based upon two separate determinations regarding two different FOIA requests. Accordingly, we have split the Appeal into two separate Appeals. Those issues arising from the determination letter issued on May 14, 2001, which responded to a request filed on March 21, 2001, will continue to be adjudicated under Case Number VFA-0677. Those issues arising from the determination letter issued on June 4, 2001, which responded to a request filed on April 21, 2001, will be adjudicated under Case Number VFA-0678.

(2)The Appellant also notes, correctly, that the determination letter fails to inform it of its appeal rights as required by 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7. Since the Appellant was able to file a valid appeal in a timely manner, despite this omission, BPA's error was harmless in this instance.

Case No. VFA-0678, 28 DOE ¶ 80,177

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Southern California Edison

Date of Filing: June 13, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0678

On June 13, 2001, Southern California Edison (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on June 4, 2001, by the Department of Energy's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). In that determination, BPA responded to a Request for Information filed by the Appellant on April 2, 2001, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. BPA's determination released several responsive documents to the Appellant. However, BPA also withheld information under two FOIA exemptions. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release additional information to the Appellant.

This Appeal arises out of a contract dispute between the Appellant and BPA. On April 2, 2001, the Appellant filed a seven-part request for information with BPA. On June 4, 2001, BPA issued a determination letter indicating that it was (1) releasing several responsive documents to the Appellant, and (2) withholding some responsive information under Exemptions 4 and 5. On June 13, 2001, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal in which it contends that BPA's withholdings were improper. (1)

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. See Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemptions 4 and 5 are at issue in the instant case.

The Two Contracts Withheld in Their Entireties

BPA has apparently withheld two contracts in their entireties under Exemption 4, contending that they are "proprietary and confidential" and could cause competitive harm to the parties that contracted with BPA if released. (2) The determination letter fails to explain why BPA concluded that release of these contracts could reasonably be expected to result in competitive harm.

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criteria. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997) (appeal pending). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has specifically held that the term "commercial," as used in the FOIA, includes anything "pertaining or relating to or dealing with commerce." American Airlines, Inc. v. National Mediation Bd., 588 F.2d 863, 870 (2d Cir. 1978). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Once an agency decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA"). In the present case, BPA's conclusory Exemption 4 determinations do not meet the requirements set forth above. Accordingly, we shall remand that portion of the Appeal pertaining to the two contracts to BPA for a more thorough justification of its withholdings. On remand, BPA must then either release the two contracts it has withheld or issue a new determination letter providing a detailed justification for withholding in accordance with the instructions set forth above. If BPA continues to withhold the two contracts, it must issue a new determination letter showing that it has applied the Exemption 4 analysis set forth above and the results of this analysis.

We note that BPA has apparently withheld the two contracts in their entireties. The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Accordingly, BPA should have also reviewed the withheld material under the standard set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). However, there is no indication in the record that BPA has done so. On remand, if BPA determines that withholding the contracts is appropriate, it must review them in order to determine whether any portions of the documents could be released without harming the interests protected by Exemption 4 (or any other applicable FOIA exemption).

Pricing and Quantity Data

BPA has also apparently withheld pricing and quantity data under Exemption 5's confidential commercial information privilege from a number of the documents it released to the Appellant. Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall within this exemption: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862. However, the Supreme Court has recognized that Exemption 5 also incorporates those "privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context." Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Accordingly, "[t]he test under Exemption 5 is whether the documents would be ?routinely' or ? normally' disclosed upon a showing of relevance." F.T.C. v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 19, 26 (1983) (citing Sears, 421 U.S. at 148-49) Therefore, if a privilege is well recognized by statute or in the case law, it may properly be invoked under Exemption 5. See United States v. Weber Aircraft Corp., 465 U.S. 797, 799-801 (1984).

Among the privileges incorporated by the courts under Exemption 5 is the "confidential commercial information privilege." See, e.g., Federal Open Market Comm. v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340 (1979) (Merrill) (holding that since disclosure of Domestic Policy Directives would significantly harm the Government's monetary functions or commercial interests, they could properly be withheld under Exemption 5); Government Land Bank v. General Services Administration, 671 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1982) (Land Bank) (withholding a Government-generated real estate appraisal). The courts have applied this privilege in the FOIA context to prevent the Government from being placed at a competitive disadvantage and to facilitate the consummation of contracts. Merrill, 443 U.S. at 356. Exemption 5 therefore "protects the government when it enters the marketplace as an ordinary commercial buyer or seller." Land Bank, 671 F.2d at 665 (footnote omitted). However, it is important to note, the protection afforded by this privilege is limited in scope and lasts only as long as necessary to protect the government's commercial interests. Id.

In Merrill, the Court stated that the confidential commercial information privilege protects information generated in the process of awarding a contract. Merrill, 443 U.S. at 360. However, the Court also indicated that the privilege expires upon the awarding of the contract. Id. Since the pricing and quantity data withheld by BPA is contained in existing contracts between BPA and purchasers of electricity, it is not protected by the confidential commercial information privilege, which expires upon the awarding of a contract. Accordingly, we are remanding the pricing and quantity data to BPA for review. On remand, BPA must either release the information it redacted or issue a new determination letter which explains and justifies its withholdings in accordance with the requirements set forth above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Southern California Edison, Case No. VFA-0678, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

July 19, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: June 20, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0679

On June 20, 2001, Barbara Schwarz filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her in response to a request for documents that she submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on June 7, 2001, by the DOE Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Division (DOE/HQ). This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ grant Ms Schwarz a fee waiver.

I. Background

This Appeal concerns a FOIA request Ms Schwarz originally filed with DOE/HQ on May 17, 2001. The request did not contain either an assurance to pay any fees associated with the request or a request for a waiver of the fees as required by the DOE FOIA Regulations. On May 17, 2001, DOE/HQ sent Ms Schwarz a letter asking if she was willing to provide such an assurance or was requesting a fee waiver. Letter dated May 18, 2001, from Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/PA Act Division, to Barbara Schwarz (May 18, 2001 Letter). Ms Schwarz responded on May 25, 2001, that she could not pay any fees and was entitled to a fee waiver since "the documents are in the public interest, because they contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations and activities of the government and I have no commercial interest at all with those documents." Letter dated May 25, 2001, from Barbara Schwarz, to Abel Lopez and Sheila Jeter, FOIA/PA Act Division (May 25, 2001 Letter). In response, DOE/HQ denied Ms Schwarz' fee waiver request. Determination Letter dated June 7, 2001, from Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/PA Act Division, to Barbara Schwarz. She filed this Appeal on June 20, 2001, claiming that other similar requests for fee waivers from different individuals have been granted. Appeal Letter dated June 18, 2001, from Barbara Schwarz to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

Ms Schwarz submits several reasons to justify her qualification for a fee waiver. First, she claims that she is indigent. Appeal Letter. Ms Schwarz also contends that DOE has approved fee waivers for other requesters in the same or similar circumstances. Id. Finally,

Ms Schwarz argues fee waivers were granted to other requesters who did not need the records as urgently as she and for requests that would not significantly contribute to the public's understanding of how the government works.(1) Appeal Letter.

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees for the processing of their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, it provides a two- pronged test for agencies to use in considering whether to waive fees. The two prongs can be summarized as the "public interest prong" and the "commercial interest" prong. See Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1998). The public interest prong requires an examination of whether disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii). The commercial interest prong asks whether the request is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. Id. The requester bears the burden of satisfying the two-prong test for a fee waiver. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997).

In order to determine whether the requester meets the public interest prong (i.e., whether disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities), the DOE considers four factors:

(A) The subject of the request: whether the subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;

(B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure;

(D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i). A requester who satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong must then address the second prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his or her commercial interest. See Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,199 (1997). In her May 25, 2001 Letter, Ms Schwarz does not even attempt to provide any justification for the four factors. In denying Ms Schwarz' fee waiver request, the Director of DOE/HQ based this conclusion on Ms Schwarz' alleged failure to provide any justification for any of the four factors. Determination Letter at 1. Given the lack of information in Ms Schwarz' fee waiver request and Appeal, we find that DOE/HQ properly denied Ms Schwarz' request for a fee waiver based on the four factors in 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8).(2)

In her Appeal, Ms Schwarz argues that fee waivers were granted other requesters in the same or similar circumstances. Appeal Letter. She offers no support for this contention. All requesters must provide justification relating to the four factors in order to be granted a waiver, a requirement that she has not fulfilled. Finally, Ms Schwarz argues fee waivers were granted to others that did not need the records as urgently as she, and the information they sought would not contribute as significantly to the public's understanding of how the government works. Id. However, she has provided no support for this contention, and without more we have no means to consider its validity.

Ms Schwarz argues that despite the fee waiver denial, she is entitled to two hours of free search time and 100 pages of free copies. Only certain categories of requesters are entitled to two hours of free search time and 100 pages of free copies. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b). DOE/HQ made no determination as to Ms Schwarz' category. Therefore, we will remand the Appeal to DOE/HQ to determine Ms Schwarz' category and whether she is entitled to two hours of free search time and 100 pages of free copies.

III. Conclusion

DOE/HQ properly denied Ms Schwarz' request for a fee waiver because the request contained no justification for granting that waiver. However, DOE/HQ did not determine whether Ms Schwarz' category would entitle her to two hours of free search time and 100 pages of free copies. Accordingly, the Appeal is denied in part and granted in part and remanded to DOE/HQ.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz on June 20, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0679, is hereby denied in part and granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is remanded to DOE Headquarters FOIA/Privacy Act Division for further processing in accordance with the instructions provided in this Decision.

(1)Ms Schwarz did not offer any evidence to support any of her claims. We note that indigence is not a basis for a waiver of fees under the FOIA. See Barbara Schwarz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,126 (2000); Ely v. United States Postal Service, 753 F.2d 163, 165 (D.C. Cir. 1985) ("Congress rejected a fee waiver provision for indigents.").

(2)Also in the May 25, 2001 Letter, Ms Schwarz requests that her fee waiver requests of November 19, 2000, October 10, 2000, and December 18, 2000, be granted. DOE/HQ responded that two of those requests were previously denied and the third could not be identified. Determination Letter. Ms Schwarz does not address this issue in her Appeal. While her May 25, 2001 Letter could be considered a revival of her arguments raised in those previous requests, we note that those fee waiver requests have already been denied, and we will not address those arguments in this Decision.

Case No. VFA-0680

July 20, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. Engineering Services

Date of Filing: June 21, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0680

On June 21, 2001, R.E.V. Engineering Services ("the Firm") filed an Appeal under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, because the FOIA and Privacy Act Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat (FOIA Office) has failed to respond to the Firm's FOIA request in a timely fashion or provide an explanation for the delay. In its Appeal, the Firm requests that the FOIA Office release the requested information or explain the delay, and provide a date certain for the release of the requested information.

The Firm's appeal must be dismissed because OHA does not have the jurisdiction to decide matters that relate to whether the agency has responded to a FOIA request in a timely fashion. Section 1004.8(a) of the DOE regulations grants OHA jurisdiction to consider FOIA appeals in the following circumstances:

When the Authorizing Officer has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request . . . or when the Freedom of Information Officer has denied a request for waiver of fees.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Section 1004.8(a) has been construed to confer jurisdiction on OHA when an Authorizing Official has issued a determination that (1) denies a request for records, (2) states there are no records responsive to the FOIA request, or (3) denies a request for a waiver of fees. Suffolk County, 17 DOE ¶ 80,111 at 80,524 (1988). OHA has consistently held that Section 1004.8(a) does not confer jurisdiction when the requester has not received an initial determination from an Authorizing Official, or when an appeal is based on the agency's failure to process a FOIA within the time specified by law. John H. Hnatio, 13 DOE ¶ 80,119 at 80,566 (1985) (dismissing appeal because no determination issued); Tulsa Tribune, 11 DOE ¶ 80,161 at 80,741 (1984) (no administrative remedy for agency's non-compliance with a timeliness requirement). Accordingly, this Appeal must be dismissed.(1)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) As set forth above, the Appeal filed by R.E.V. Engineering Services on June 21, 2001, is dismissed .

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)Because it did not receive a timely response to the FOIA request that it submitted, the Firm is considered to have exhausted its administrative remedies. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(d)(4); 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(c). Accordingly, under the FOIA, the Firm may seek the release of the requested documents in federal district court. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). However, the agency's failure to comply with the statutory time limit does not result in a waiver of any FOIA exemptions. See Suffolk County, 17 DOE ¶ 80,111 at 80,524 (1988); James E. Davis, 11 DOE ¶ 80,151 at 80,689 (1983).

Case No. VFA-0681, 28 DOE ¶ 80,181

July 23, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:David B. McCoy

Date of Filing:June 27, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0681

This decision addresses the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) appeal filed by David B. McCoy (Appellant) pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, the appeal will be granted in part and remanded.

I. Background

Appellant filed a FOIA request with the DOE Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) for 23 categories of documents ostensibly related to "Liquid Radioactive Waste Management Systems," and specifically, the Process Equipment Waste Evaporator (PEWE). Appellant also sought a waiver of the fees associated with processing his request, stating that his FOIA request is in the public interest and he has no commercial interest in obtaining the requested documents.

In response, the Idaho FOIA Office (Idaho/FOI) asked Appellant to complete the filing of his FOIA request by providing additional information justifying a fee waiver. Appellant filed a supplement (the supplement), in which Appellant asserted that he is entitled to a fee waiver, because

1. The DOE has not provided adequate information to the public regarding the [Resource Conservation and Recovery Act] Part B Application [for the PEWE].
2. Appellant is an attorney with "prior experience in analyzing nuclear industry documents," and that information "from facilities which [he has] received, analyzed and briefed was disseminated and resulted in . . . legal actions publicized in the press . . . utilized by other public organizations as well as reporters for newspapers . . . [and] posted on the Internet by organizations such as [the Environmental Defense Institute (EDI)] and utilized in press releases by EDI . . . ."
3. Appellant has "no commercial interest in obtaining the FOIA materials but wish[es] only to provide the public with a clear picture of the actions of the government in its ongoing failure to properly permit and inform the public of the serious consequences of ill-made past and present decision making."

Appellant's supplemental letter, April 30, 2001.

The Idaho/FOI accepted as filed Appellant's original FOIA request and the supplement on April 30, 2001. After considering both documents, the Idaho/FOI denied Appellant's request for a fee waiver. In its determination, the Idaho/FOI cited the regulations governing fee waiver requests, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8), which provide that a waiver or reduction of a FOIA fee will be granted where disclosure of the information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. The Idaho/FOI found that Appellant failed to meet the applicable standard, because

1. Although Appellant "specifically linked the requested information to the [PEWE] . . . the link [between the requested information and the operations or activities of the government] is tenuous for some of the documents requested . . . ."
2. Appellant failed to show that the information requested is "meaningfully informative about government operations" and would "be likely to contribute to an increased public understanding of the operations or activities. . . . Additionally, [his] previous requests regarding the PEWE, in which [he had] been granted a fee waiver, are very similar to this request. As such, this additional information . . . will not increase the public's understanding beyond what [has been provided]."
3. Appellant failed to show the ability to extract, synthesize and convey the requested information to a reasonably broad audience of persons interested in the subject matter.
4. Appellant has not shown that the requested information will significantly increase the public's understanding of the operation of the PEWE "beyond what is already being provided to you in a previous request."

Determination letter, May 21, 2001.

In his appeal, Appellant argues on procedural grounds that by failing to respond to his request within the regulatory deadline, the Idaho/FOI wholly "waived its right to deny the fee waiver request." Appellant responds to the substance of Idaho/FOI's determination as follows:

1. "DOE has the burden of proof that the documents requested do not relate to government operations."
2. The requested documents "taken as a whole" relate to serious public health and safety concerns at the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratories (INEEL). There is a public need for the information "due to the extraordinary veil of secrecy that shrouded" INEEL and the DOE's failure to provide adequate information regarding the PEWE Part B application. Appellant "is not held to laying out in advance with specificity what documents will show in relation to government operations . . . . The nature of the documents can only be shown by the documents themselves." In addition, because, "on far less information than is currently requested," the Idaho/FOI waived the fees associated with processing Appellant's previous FOIA request, the Idaho/FOI is "arbitrarily raising the level of its fee information requirements to avoid disclosure of embarrassing information."
3. Members of the EDI and "[n]umerous persons in Idaho" are interested in the requested information. In addition, as stated in the supplement, Appellant is an environmental attorney whose analysis of nuclear industry documents has been utilized by the press and public interest groups. Appellant submitted copies of seven newspaper articles that either were authored by Appellant or make reference to him and his analysis.
4. Because "nothing has been provided to [Appellant] from his previous FOIA Request regarding the PEWE," the Idaho/FOI unjustifiably relied upon that request as a basis for denying Appellant a fee waiver here.

Appeal letter, June 16, 2001.

II. Applicable Legal Standards

The FOIA generally requires federal agencies to release documents to the public upon request, but provides that, absent a fee waiver, requesters must pay applicable processing fees. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). The FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees, but only if a requester shows that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest, because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government (the public interest prong); and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester (the commercial interest prong). 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

In order to satisfy the public interest prong, a requester must show each of the following:

(A) The subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);

(B) Disclosure of the requested records is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);

(C) Disclosure of the requested records would contribute to an understanding of the subject by the general public (Factor C); and

(D) Disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

If a requester satisfies the four factors of the public interest prong, he must then satisfy the commercial interest prong by showing that disclosure of the information is not primarily in his commercial interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii). Fee waiver denials generally are reviewed de novo. See Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,167 (1998).

III. Analysis

As initial matters, we note the following. Contrary to Appellant's assertion, the Idaho/FOI issued a timely determination to him. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(d)(1) requires that the DOE respond to FOIA requests within 20 working days. Rather than rejecting Appellant's FOIA request as improperly filed, the Idaho/FOI allowed Appellant to amend his FOIA request by filing the supplement. Upon receipt of the supplement, the Idaho/FOI deemed it and the original request as having been filed on April 30, 2001. Thus, the Idaho/FOI's May 21, 2001 response was within the statutory deadline. In any case, the failure of a DOE office to respond to a FOIA request within 20 working days does not cause a of waiver of its ability to render a determination. Rather, it gives to the requester the right of review in district court. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(d)(4).

In addition, we emphasize that the FOIA places the burden on the individual to show that he qualifies for a fee waiver. Contrary to Appellant's contention, the burden is not on the government to show that he does not qualify. Finally, the fact that Appellant received fee waivers in the past is not necessarily relevant to determining whether he is entitled to a fee waiver here. As indicated by a reading of Factors A through D of the public interest prong, whether a requester is entitled to a fee waiver depends upon the nature of the specific request at issue.

We now turn to the issue of whether the public interest prong is satisfied in this case. As discussed below, we find that Appellant has satisfied each element of the public interest prong and therefore may be entitled to a fee waiver or partial fee waiver.

We begin with Factor A. Factor A requires that requested records be sought for their informative value with respect to a specifically identifiable government operation or activity. See Van Fripp v. Parks, No. 97-0159, slip op. at 10 (D.D.C. Mar. 16, 2000). Appellant requested 23 categories of documents ostensibly related to the PEWE. We have little trouble concluding that the requested information relates to a specifically identifiable government operation or activity, i.e., the PEWE. Indeed, the Idaho/FOI so found.

The Idaho/FOI further stated, however, that "the link is tenuous for some of the documents requested such as the Denson notegrams." The Idaho/FOI provided no additional detail on that point, perhaps because it proceeded to find that disclosure of the requested information does not satisfy the other public interest factors and that, therefore, Appellant was not entitled to a fee waiver for any documents. As further discussed below, upon remand, the Idaho/FOI must segregate those documents that satisfy Factor A from those that it believes do not satisfy Factor A and provide an adequate explanation for the distinction.

We next proceed to Factor B. Factor B requires that the requested information be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities. More specifically, Factor B asks whether the requested information is already in the public domain or is otherwise common knowledge among the general population. Glen Milner, 26 DOE ¶ 80,147 (1996). If the information is already within the public domain or common knowledge, then release to the requester would not likely contribute, or add to, public understanding of the subject matter. Milner, supra.

Appellant contends that the requested information is not already within the public domain; the Idaho/FOI contends that it is. In determining that the requested information does not satisfy Factor B, the Idaho/FOI found that the subject FOIA request is "very similar" to Appellant's "previous requests." Thus, reasoned the Idaho/FOI, the "additional information [Appellant is] requesting will not increase the public's understanding beyond what is already being provided to [him in response to previous requests]."

It may be true that the duplicative release of information that has already been released to the Appellant, and thereby placed in the public domain, will not contribute or add to the public's understanding of that information. This reasoning withstands scrutiny, however, only if Appellant indeed received documents responsive to his previous similar requests. The Appellant has not received documents responsive to his previous similar requests. OHA telephone conversation with Appellant, July 13, 2001. The Idaho/FOI confirmed that it has not produced documents responsive to the previous similar requests, as it is in the process of searching for information relative to those requests. OHA telephone conversation with Idaho/FOI, July 16, 2001. Whether and to what extent it will actually produce documents to Appellant will depend upon the nature of the documents discovered. The Idaho/FOI acknowledged that certain documents may fall within a FOIA exemption, which would protect them from disclosure.(1) Id. Because the Idaho/FOI has not released the documents responsive to Appellant's previous requests, those documents are not already within the public domain. We therefore find that disclosure of the documents requested here would satisfy Factor B.

Factor C asks whether disclosure of the requested material would contribute to the understanding of the subject matter by the public, meaning a "reasonably broad audience of persons interested in the subject, as opposed to the individual understanding of the requester." See Judicial Watch, Inc. v. United States Dep't of Justice, 122 F. Supp. 2d 13, 18 (D.D.C. 2000) (Judicial Watch). Thus, the requester must have the ability and intention to disseminate the requested information to the public, and analyze and explain the information in a manner that will contribute to public understanding of it. See Larson v. Central Intelligence Agency, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 & n.5 (D.C. Cir. 1988).

We find that Appellant satisfies Factor C. As the Idaho/FOI acknowledged, Appellant is knowledgeable on issues related to environmental law and the nuclear industry. The newspaper articles Appellant submitted, which either were authored by him or cite his work, demonstrate his ability to explain and analyze technical information, establish his contacts with press organizations and public interest groups, confirm his history of publicizing information, and evidence his ability and intention to disseminate the requested information at issue in this case. See Landmark v. Internal Revenue Serv., Civ. No. 97-1474, slip op. at 4 (D.D.C. 1997) (as discussed in Judicial Watch, supra, 122 F. Supp. 2d at 19) (finding past newspaper articles authored by non-journalist plaintiff demonstrated ability to disseminate requested information); Government Accountability Project, 25 DOE ¶ 80,203 (1996) (finding past ability to obtain media coverage and interest newspapers on certain issues demonstrated ability to disseminate requested information); Knolls Action Project, 25 DOE ¶ 80,148 (1995) (finding record of involvement with published articles demonstrated ability to disseminate requested information). In addition, the newspaper articles, which relate to environmental law and the nuclear industry, evidence that there exists a reasonably broad audience of persons who would be interested in information relating to the PEWE. Based upon the foregoing, we find that Appellant has the ability and intention to explain, analyze and disseminate the requested information to a reasonably broad audience of interested persons.

In order to satisfy Factor D, disclosure of requested information must be likely to contribute significantly to the public understanding of government operations or activities. Put another way, the public understanding of the subject matter after disclosure, as compared to the level of public understanding prior to disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent. Glen Milner, 26 DOE ¶ 80,147 (1996).

Appellant contends that because there is little, if any, information regarding the PEWE within the public domain, disclosure of the requested information would enhance public understanding of the subject matter to a significant extent. As with Factor B, the Idaho/FOI contends that disclosure of the information would not enhance public understanding of the subject matter "beyond what is already being provided to [Appellant] in a previous request[s]." The Idaho/FOI's argument fails, however, for the same reason it fails with regard to Factor B. Appellant has not received documents responsive to the referenced previous requests, and, indeed, the Idaho/FOI has produced none. Thus, the information allegedly similar to the subject FOIA request is not already within the public domain. We therefore find that release of the requested documents would satisfy Factor D.

Based upon the foregoing, we find that disclosure of the requested documents is in the public interest. However, because the Idaho/FOI did not reach the issue of whether Appellant satisfies the commercial interest prong test set forth in the FOIA, we cannot review that finding here. Therefore, we will remand this matter to the Idaho/FOI for a further determination. Upon remand, the Idaho/FOI must specifically identify those documents which it found do not satisfy Factor A and provide an adequate explanation for that finding. For the remainder of the documents that do satisfy Factor A, the Idaho/FOI must proceed to analyze whether Appellant satisfies the commercial interest prong and therefore may be entitled to a fee waiver as to those documents. If, prior to issuing its determination in this matter, the Idaho/FOI releases documents responsive to Appellant's previous FOIA requests, the Idaho/FOI may provide an adequate explanation as to why disclosure of the information requested in this case does not satisfy Factors B or D. In that circumstance, the Idaho/FOI would not need to proceed to analyze whether Appellant satisfies the commercial interest prong.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The appeal filed by David B. McCoy, Case Number VFA-0681, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE Idaho Operations Office to issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: American Friends Service Committee

Date of Filing: June 28, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0682

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that the American Friends Service Committee (hereinafter referred to as the Committee) filed from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge, Tennessee Operations Office (Oak Ridge). In this determination, Oak Ridge informed the Committee that it failed to locate documents responsive to two requests for information that the Committee filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct a further search for responsive materials.

I. Background

In the Committee's November 3, 1999 FOIA request, it sought information concerning "access to and copies of all documentation from both the DOE and Goodyear Atomic Corporation from 1969 to the present which addresses the deposit, presence, transportation and/or impact of radioactive and other materials at the community landfill in Uniontown, Ohio (known as either the 'Industrial Excess Landfill' 'IBL,' 'Kittinger landfill,' and/or 'Kittinger dump'). " The Committee's November 4, 1999 FOIA request sought information concerning "access to and copies of all documentation from 1966 to the present related to the transportation and/or disposal of radioactive materials from the centrifuge plant operated by the Goodyear Atomic Corporation for the federal government located at Wingfoot Lake in Suffield Township in Ohio." On May 23, 2001, Oak Ridge issued a determination letter regarding both FOIA requests. Oak Ridge's determination letter stated that a search had been conducted and no documents responsive to the Committee's requests could be found. See Determination Letter. On June 26, 2001, the Committee filed its present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In the Appeal, the Committee challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-95 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

One request concerns DOE's radioactive waste management activities at the Goodyear Aerospace facility at Wingfoot Lake. The other request concerns waste shipments to the industrial landfill in Uniontown, Ohio, which is located near Wingfoot Lake. Oak Ridge referred both requests to its Environmental Restoration and Waste Management Organization, which searched all facilities under Oak Ridge's jurisdiction in Piketon, Ohio; Weldon Spring, Missouri; Newport News, Virginia; the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant, Oak Ridge National Laboratory and the Y-12 Weapons plant in Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and the offices of its contractors. Oak Ridge also contacted individuals for background information on the work and record holders for any responsive records.

Oak Ridge was informed that the only DOE work performed at the Wingfoot Lake facility was the centrifuge project from approximately 1980 through 1984. All DOE official agency records on the project were archived according to DOE record managers at Oak Ridge. Oak Ridge employees familiar with this project have indicated that those archived records contain no information regarding the disposal of radioactive material from the Wingfoot Lake facility. August 21, 2001 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, and William Schwartz, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Some classified records from the late 1970's through early 1980's on the centrifuge project at the Wingfoot Lake facility were located in an Oak Ridge classified vault, but they deal only with project development and design, not waste management. See July 31, 2001 e-mail message from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, to Toni Brown, Office of Hearings and Appeals.

Oak Ridge also indicated that Oak Ridge's waste management organization had no separate records of any waste shipments to the Kittinger landfill, such as manifests listing sanitary wastes or radioactive wastes. Any DOE waste from the DOE work at the Wingfoot Lake facility was designated classified waste, according to the DOE site representative assigned to the centrifuge project between 1980 and 1984. All classified waste would have been shipped to the Gaseous Diffusion Plant at Piketon, Ohio, for burial in a DOE classified burial ground, not shipped to a local industrial landfill. Finally, an Oak Ridge official stated that radioactive materials were not used at the Wingfoot Lake facility during the centrifuge project.(1)

Given the facts presented to us, and particularly the representation that no radioactive materials were used in the DOE work performed at Wingfoot Lake, we find that Oak Ridge conducted an adequate search, reasonably calculated to discover documents at Oak Ridge and the Piketon, Ohio facilities that were responsive to the Committee's request. The fact that no responsive documents were located, despite this extensive search, does not render the search inadequate. Consequently, we will deny the Committee's appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the American Friends Service Committee, Case No. VFA-0682, on June 28, 2001, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are located or in the District of Columbia.

(1)We suggest that the Committee contact Goodyear Aerospace directly to obtain the information it seeks regarding work Goodyear may have performed for other entities, or contact other agencies for which the work was performed. The Committee may also want to contact the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) about any radioactive materials licensing or permitting of the facility for types of work other than the DOE work. The Committee may also want to check the township, county or State public records in Ohio, to see whether the industrial landfill was granted a permit to receive radioactive wastes. Finally, we have been informed that this landfill is an Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Superfund site. The EPA may have records on any radioactive wastes deposited in the industrial landfill and where they originated from.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Caron Balkany

Date of Filing: July 10, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0684

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by Caron Balkany from a determination issued to her by the Freedom of Information Officer of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Albuquerque Operations Office (AOO). In this determination, AOO informed Ms. Balkany that it was unable to locate a document that she requested pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her Appeal, Ms. Balkany challenges the adequacy of the search for this document.

In her FOIA request, Ms. Balkany sought access to portions of the 1989 Assessment of Environmental Conditions conducted by the DOE Special Assignment Environmental Team. In its response, AOO informed Ms. Balkany that its Environmental Restoration Division in Albuquerque had searched for this document, but had been unable to locate it. (1) In her Appeal, Ms. Balkany states that she is already in possession of portions of the document, and requests that the DOE conduct a "more thorough[] search" for the requested material. Appeal at 1.

In order to determine whether there was additional information that might assist AOO in locating the requested document, we contacted Ms. Balkany. She informed us that the document was an environmental assessment of the operations of the DOE's Rocky Flats facility, and that she obtained the portions of the document that were in her possession from a reading room located at Rocky Flats. She also stated that the document included the following caption: "DOE/EH-0107." See memorandum of July 31, 2001 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Ms. Balkany.

We then relayed this information to AOO. AOO confirmed that it does not have the document Ms. Balkany seeks, but informed us that there is a substantial possibility that the requested document is in the offices of the Assistant Secretary for Environment, Safety and Health (EH) at DOE Headquarters in Washington, D.C. We will therefore refer this matter to EH through the DOE Headquarters FOIA Office so that EH may conduct a search of its facilities.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Caron Balkany in Case No. VFA-0684 is hereby granted.

(2) This matter is hereby referred to the Freedom of Information and Privacy Group, Office of the Executive Secretariat. The FOI and Privacy Group should take appropriate action to transmit Ms. Balkany's FOIA request to EH. EH should then contact Ms. Balkany directly with the results of its search.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)During its search for this document, AOO contacted Ms. Balkany and asked if she had a more formal title for the document. Ms Balkany replied that she did not. In its determination, AOO invited Ms. Balkany to file another FOIA request if, at a later time, she found more identifying information concerning this document.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Janel Hensley

Date of Filing: August 7, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0685

On August 7, 2001, Janel Hensley filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on June 19, 2001, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information she filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Ms. Hensley asks that Richland conduct an additional search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Ms. Hensley filed a request for information in which she sought the Hanford site radiation exposure, employment and medical records of her deceased father, Mr. Robert Hensley, who worked at the Hanford site. On April 30, 2001, Richland issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search for the requested document and located a summary of Mr. Hensley's radiation exposure records and a copy of his employment records. These documents were provided to Ms. Hensley. In addition, medical records were forwarded to Ms. Hensley from the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation.

On May 13, 2001, Ms. Hensley provided Richland with additional information pertaining to her father's Hanford Site employment and requested that Richland search again for additional radiation exposure and employment records. On June 19, 2001, Richland issued another determination which stated that it conducted a thorough search for the requested documents and located no additional documents responsive to Ms. Hensley's request.

On August 7, 2001, Ms. Hensley filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Ms. Hensley challenges "the adequacy of the records available to search." She states that she believes Richland was diligent in their searches. However, she asks that OHA direct DOE to locate and search additional locations where other records may be stored. See Appeal Letter at 1.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶

80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Richland to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Hensley's request might exist. While she believes Richland conducted thorough searches, Ms. Hensley also believes that there must be old records located somewhere else. Upon receiving Ms. Hensley's request for additional information, Richland instituted another search for radiation exposure and employment records at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory and in the Richland office. Richland stated that it provided the laboratory with the additional information offered by Ms. Hensley, but the laboratory was unable to locate more responsive documents. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Dorothy Reilly, Richland, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (August 20, 2001). Richland also indicated that all Hanford employee and visitor radiation exposure records are maintained solely by the laboratory and have not been shipped to another location for storage. Id. It further stated that the radiation exposure records may be tracked at the laboratory by using an employee's name and social security number. The employment records are searched using a database and a card catalogue. Id. Based on the foregoing, Richland has convinced us that it has searched all of the areas where Hanford employee radiation exposure and employment records may be found.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Ms. Hensley's request. Accordingly, Ms. Hensley's Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Janel Hensley, OHA Case No. VFA-0685, on August 7, 2001, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Northwest Power Alliance

Date of Filing: August 6, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0686

On August 6, 2001, Northwest Power Alliance (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on June 13, 2001, by the Department of Energy's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). In that determination, BPA responded to a five-part Request for Information filed by the Appellant on May 23, 2001, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. BPA's determination indicated that it had only one document that is responsive to the Appellant's request. BPA released this responsive document to the Appellant. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to conduct a further search for responsive documents .

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

In the present case, the Appellant argues that "BPA's assertions that it has ?no [other] responsive documents' are absurd." Appeal at 1. In support of the contention that additional relevant documents exist, the Appellant makes two claims. The Appellant claims that BPA must have draft copies of an April 26 letter from four Governors to BPA's Acting Administrator. The Appellant further claims that the existence of draft copies of this letter is evidenced by documents that it had previously received from BPA. The appellant has not supported this claim. On at least three occasions, we have requested that the Appellant provide OHA with copies of these documents that purportedly show that BPA has draft copies of the April 26 letter. The Appellant has not complied with these requests. In addition, it is not readily apparent to this office that a recipient of a letter would also have draft copies of that letter. Rather, it would seem to be unlikely. Without access to any evidence upon which this contention is purportedly based, we are unable to give it consideration.

The Appellant also claims that an article that appeared in "the May 4 Seattle Post-Intelligencer" supports its assertion that BPA has failed to locate documents responsive to the FOIA request. We have requested, on at least three occasions, that the Appellant provide us with a copy of this newspaper article. The Appellant never complied with these requests. Once again, we are unable to consider a contention in the absence of the supporting documentation.

Our review of the determination letter does not reveal any inadequacies in BPA's search for responsive documents. Moreover, we are unable to assign any weight to the specific arguments made by the Appellant, since the Appellant has not cooperated with our attempts to obtain the evidence upon which these claims are based. Accordingly, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on August 6, 2001 by Northwest Power Alliance, Case No. VFA-0678, is hereby denied.

(2) This Appeal is not subject to judicial review, since by failing to cooperate with our administrative review process, Northwest Power Alliance has failed to exhaust its administrative remedies.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner: Nevada Desert Experience

Date of Filing: August 6, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0688

On August 6, 2001, Nevada Desert Experience (Appellant) filed a Motion for Reconsideration (Motion) of a Decision and Order issued to it by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that Decision, we denied the Appellant's Appeal regarding its Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request to the DOE's Oakland Operations Office (Oakland). Nevada Desert Experience, 28 DOE ¶ 80,174 (2001). In its current Motion, the Appellant requests reconsideration based on one additional material fact it is presenting to this Office for the first time.

Background

On February 12, 2001, the Appellant filed a request for information in which it sought "information regarding DOE's activities related to the Vision for 2020 program overseen by the U.S. Space Command." On February 26, 2001, Oakland issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search at Oakland and the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) and located a document responsive to the Appellant's request. See February 26, 2001 Determination Letter. In addition, Oakland referred the Appellant to the LLNL Department of Defense Program website and to two books available through the Air Force. On March 9, 2001, the Appellant wrote to Oakland stating that its determination letter was inadequate. Specifically, the Appellant asserted that Oakland did not appear to have searched DOE-wide for documents as originally requested.

On March 23, 2001, Oakland issued a second determination which stated that it conducted another search at Oakland and at DOE Headquarters and located no additional documents responsive to the Appellant's request. See March 23, 2001 Determination Letter. The Appellant responded to this letter on April 14, 2001, again stating its dissatisfaction with Oakland's search for responsive documents. On April 23, 2001, Oakland issued its final determination letter indicating that it conducted two separate and complete searches for documents responsive to the Appellant's request. See April 23, 2001 Determination Letter. It further indicated that the Appellant was provided with all documents responsive to its request that were found at the LLNL and that DOE Headquarters located no documents responsive to the request. Id. Further, Oakland stated that the searches conducted in response to the Appellant's request were reasonably calculated to uncover all responsive documents.

Id.

On May 22, 2001, the Appellant filed an Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In its Appeal, the Appellant challenged the adequacy of the searches conducted by Oakland. Specifically, the Appellant requested that Oakland conduct a more thorough search for DOE-generated documents. See Appeal Letter at 2. We denied the Appeal, stating that Oakland had conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Nevada Desert Experience, 28 DOE at 80,668.

In its Motion, the Appellant asserts that Oakland has stated that the DOE participated in the Commission to Assess U.S. National Security Space Management & Organization, and that it is therefore difficult to believe that not one DOE document was discovered. Motion for Reconsideration Letter from Sally Light, Executive Director, Nevada Desert Experience, to Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, Staff Attorney, OHA.

Analysis

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. Nathaniel Hendricks, 25 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1996). In the past, we have looked to the standards contained in OHA's procedural regulations for guidance as to the appropriate substantive standards for use in this type of case. See Ron Vader, 23 DOE ¶ 80,183 at 80,704 (1993). Those provisions require a showing of "significantly changed circumstances" be made before such motions are considered. 10 C.F.R. § 1003.35. According to this regulation, "significantly changed circumstances" include the discovery of material facts which were not known at the time of the initial proceeding. 10 C.F.R. § 1003.35(a)(1). The Appellant's Motion provides one material fact which, although the Appellant has previously brought to the DOE's attention, has not been specifically addressed by this Office. Therefore, we have decided to consider this material fact noted by the Appellant in his Motion for Reconsideration.

The Appellant asserts that the DOE participated in the Commission to Assess U.S. National Security Space Management & Organization and provided scientific support for two Air Force books on space activities in the 21st century. Motion for Reconsideration Letter. The Appellant maintains that this first fact indicates that there exist other responsive documents that were not provided to the Appellant. We asked Oakland whether anyone who attended the commission might have notes or other material. Oakland contacted all the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory participants and reported to us that they did not. Electronic Mail Message from Jack Hug, Attorney-Advisor, Oakland, to William Schwartz, Staff Attorney, OHA, dated August 27, 2001. We do not believe that the information the Appellant seeks exists at DOE. Therefore, we shall deny the Appellant's Motion for Reconsideration.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Nevada Desert Experience, on August 6, 2001, Case Number VFA-0688, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Clifford, Lyons & Garde

Case Number: VFA-0689

Date of Filing:August 16, 2001

On August 16, 2001, Clifford, Lyons & Garde filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Yucca Mountain Site Characterization Office (YMSCO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on August 3, 2001. That determination concerned a request for documents submitted by Clifford, Lyons & Garde pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, Yucca Mountain would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On July 13, 2001, Billie Pirner Garde, on behalf of Clifford, Lyons & Garde, submitted a FOIA request for "[a]ll documents that form the basis for, lead[] up to or that discuss, refer or relate in any way to the October 24, 2000 amendment to Audit Report SNL-ARC-99-013." Request Letter dated July 13, 2001, from Billie Pirner Garde to Diane Quenell, Freedom of Information/Privacy Act Officer, YMSCO (Request Letter). Ms. Garde was specifically interested in documents discussing the purpose behind the October 24, 2000 amendment. Id.

Pursuant to the Request Letter, on August 3, 2001, YMSCO issued a determination and produced copies of two memoranda. Determination Letter dated August 3, 2001, from Ms. Quenell to Ms. Garde (Determination Letter). One memorandum was dated January 8, 2001, and was from R.W. Clark to Lake Barrett, Deputy Director, Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management. Id. This memorandum provides the names of the participants and other details relating to the October 24, 2000 amendment, and also states the circumstances which formed the basis for the preparation of the amendment. Id. The second memorandum was dated August 1, 2000, and also discusses the amendment. Id.

In response to the Determination Letter from YMSCO, Ms. Garde filed this Appeal, requesting that YMSCO be directed to conduct an additional search, saying the explanation in the memorandum for the creation of the amendment was not credible. Appeal Letter. In support of her Appeal, Ms. Garde contends that YMSCO merely provided copies of documents that had already been produced in response to previous requests, and which Ms. Garde had faxed to YMSCO in connection with the instant request. Id. In addition, Ms. Garde protests YMSCO's charge to Clifford, Lyons & Garde of one half-hour of search time, totaling $17.32.

Analysis

When an agency conducts a search under the FOIA, it must undertake a search that is "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Weisberg v. United States Dep't of Justice, 705 F.2d 1344, 1351 (D.C. Cir. 1983). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

In response to the Appeal, we contacted YMSCO to determine the scope of the search. Telephone Memoranda dated August 21, 2001 and September 5, 2001. YMSCO informed us it searched numerous times, and in all possible locations, for any and all documents related to the October 24, 2000 amendment. Id. YMSCO stated that the most recent search - the search at issue in this Appeal - did not produce any additional responsive documents. Id. YMSCO stated that it provided Ms. Garde the two previously produced memoranda, which explain the events leading up to the amendment. Id. The memorandum dated January 8, 2001, from R.W. Clark to Lake Barrett specifically discusses the amendment, stating it was issued to correct an error in the original Audit Report. Id. The second memorandum, dated August 1, 2000, is referenced in the January 8, 2001 memorandum, and also discusses the October 24, 2000 amendment. Id. These memoranda were found in previous searches YMSCO made in conjunction with a whistleblower case Ms. Garde was litigating. Id.

Since we find the documents provided to Ms. Garde to be responsive to her request, and YMSCO searched all possible locations, we find the search to be "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." We attribute no significance to the fact that the two responsive memoranda bore Clifford, Lyons & Garde's fax legend and other markings. YMSCO had originally provided these documents to Ms. Garde in response to previous requests, and Ms. Garde later faxed them to YMSCO in connection with the instant request. The fact that YMSCO did not produce copies without the fax legend does not mean that the search was inadequate. YMSCO is not obligated to produce multiple copies of the same documents. Moreover, the fact that the appellant does not agree with the memoranda does not mean that the search was inadequate or that other responsive documents exist. Accordingly, as indicated above, we find that YMSCO conducted a reasonable search for all existing responsive material.

As to the final issue raised in the Appeal, the one half-hour of search time charged to Clifford, Lyons & Garde, we remand this aspect of the Appeal to YMSCO to explain its rationale for assessing Ms. Garde fees for the searches it performed.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Clifford, Lyons & Garde on August 16, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0689, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) of this Order and denied in all other respects.

(2) This Appeal is remanded to the Yucca Mountain Site Characterization Office so that it may issue a new determination regarding the fees it assessed Billie Pirner Garde regarding her July 13, 2001 Freedom of Information Act request.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

October 5, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Government Accountability Project

Date of Filing: August 17, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0690

On August 17, 2001, Government Accountability Project (GAP) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Idaho Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE/ID) issued in response to a request for documents that GAP submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. DOE/ID issued the determination on July 9, 2001. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/ID release additional responsive information to GAP or provide a detailed explanation of its reasons for withholding such material.

I. Background

GAP is a non-profit organization that represents whistleblowers in legal matters. The group represents Clinton Jensen, an employee of Bechtel BWXT Idaho, a DOE/ID contractor. Mr. Jensen filed a whistleblower complaint (also called an "employee concern") against his employer. On September 1, 2000, GAP sent a FOIA request to DOE/ID for:

1. Any and all records related to or generated in connection with any and all investigations, inquiries, audits, and/or requests for information regarding allegations made by Mr. Clinton Jensen, an employee of Bechtel BWXT Idaho at the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory (INEEL).
2. Any and all personnel, security, human resources, and/or other records retrievable by reference to Mr. Jensen's name, employee number or other unique identifying characteristic, whether in possession or control of the contractor or the government.

Letter from GAP to DOE/ID (September 1, 2000). On July 15, 2001, DOE/ID sent GAP a partial response in which the agency identified a total of 172 responsive documents: 60 were released in full and 112 were partially or entirely withheld under Exemptions 5 and 6. Letter from DOE/ID to GAP (July 15, 2001) (Determination). DOE/ID also explained that its delay in response was due to the volume and complexity of GAP's request, and that a contractor had additional responsive information that had not yet been sent to DOE for processing. DOE/ID forwarded additional documents to the DOE Headquarters FOIA office for review and a release determination. Id. Finally, DOE/ID informed GAP that it also withheld "handwritten personal notes of a DOE employee" because the agency did not consider those notes to be agency records. Id. at 2. In response, GAP filed this Appeal. Letter from GAP to OHA (August 17, 2001) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). Nonetheless, DOE regulations provide that the agency should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and if disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Accordingly, even if a document can properly be withheld under an exemption, we must also consider whether the public interest demands disclosure pursuant to DOE regulations.

A. Agency Records

Under the FOIA, an agency record is a document that (1) is either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) is under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Tri-Valley CAREs, 27 DOE ¶ 80,260 (2000) (Tri-Valley) (citing Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Clear indications that a document is an "agency record" are when a document of this type is part of an agency file, and the document was used for an agency purpose. Kissinger v. Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 157 (1980); Bureau of National Affairs v. Department of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1489-90 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (BNA). In making the "agency records" determination, we look at the totality of circumstances surrounding the creation, maintenance and use of the documents in question. BNA, 742 F.2d at 1492-93.

GAP contends that DOE/ID improperly withheld the handwritten personal notes of a DOE employee because of an unfounded decision that the records were not agency records and thus not subject to FOIA. Appeal at 5. GAP alleges that the notes should have been released because their description (notes regarding the investigation of the employee concern) reveals that they are responsive to the FOIA request. Id. GAP further states that DOE/ID did not name the author of the notes, where the notes were found, or the agency's criteria for stating that they are not agency records. Id. at 5. We agree that DOE/ID did not reveal the author or location of the notes, but find that the agency did state its criteria for deciding that the notes were not agency records. According to the determination letter, the notes were not distributed to anyone--they were retained by the individual who wrote them, and they did not become part of an official DOE file. Determination at 2. Ethyl Corp. v. U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, 25 F.23d 1241, 1247 n.3 (4th Cir. 1994) sets forth criteria that the Department of Justice suggests an agency use to determine if personal records responsive to a FOIA request can be considered agency records. We find that DOE/ID properly applied several of these factors, such as the purpose, distribution, and location of the personal records. Determination at 2. Thus, we find that the notes are not agency records and are not subject to disclosure under FOIA.

B. Exemption 5

1. Attorney-Client Privilege

GAP appeals the withholding of the following three documents under the attorney-client privilege of FOIA Exemption 5: Document 158 (Draft Scope of Work); Document 163 (SMC Employee Concern); and Document 167 (Senate Gas Diffusion Plant Testimony). Appeal at 5. The attorney- client privilege exists to protect confidential communications between attorneys and their clients made for the purpose of securing or providing legal advice. Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (Mead); California Edison, 28 DOE ¶ 80,173 (2001) (California Edison). The privilege covers facts divulged by a client to his or her attorney, and also covers opinions that the attorney gives the client based upon those facts. Mead, 566 F.2d at 254 n.25. The privilege permits nondisclosure of an attorney's opinion or advice in order to protect the secrecy of the underlying facts. Id. at 254 n.28. Not all communications between an attorney and client are privileged, however. Clark v. American Commerce National Bank, 974 F.2d 127 (9th Cir. 1992). The privilege is limited to those disclosures necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 96 S.Ct. 1569, 1577 (1976). The privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. California Edison, 28 DOE at 80,665. GAP has appealed this withholding because it contends that the electronic mail messages appear to be informational communications between several employees. Appeal at 5.

This office examined the three documents in question. Document 158 is a message from one member of a team of employees created to assess the employee concern to two other team members, including an attorney. The employee sent the recipients a draft of the scope of work for a physician to assist the team. It appears that the sender was soliciting advice and opinions from the recipients about the content of the scope of work. In California Edison, we held that an e-mail from one employee to a group of colleagues (including a company attorney) was protected by the attorney- client privilege because the author was soliciting legal advice from the attorney as well as comments from the others. California Edison, 28 DOE at 80,665. This situation is similar to the facts in California Edison. The language of Document 158 invites additional comments, and it is not unreasonable to assume that the author of the document would seek legal advice on this key phase of the assessment team's activities. Thus, we find that portions of Document 158 are covered by the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5. (1)

Document 163 is an e-mail that one employee sent to several others on the assessment team, including an attorney. The e-mail consists of four sentences, the last three redacted before release. This document is not soliciting legal advice from the attorney, nor was it used to obtain or provide legal advice. It appears to be transmitting and requesting routine information about a prospective meeting. We find that Document 163 is not covered by the attorney-client privilege, and remand this document to DOE/ID for release in its entirety, or for a further explanation of why the material is exempt from disclosure under the FOIA.

Document 167 is an e-mail message that refers to, and contains, an excerpt of the testimony of a physician at a Senate hearing. An assessment team member sent the document to the entire team for their information. However, the attorney on the team replied to the e-mail with an opinion regarding the testimony. Thus, this communication can be considered privileged. We note that DOE/ID properly released the non-exempt portions of the document.

2. The Deliberative Process Privilege

GAP has appealed DOE/ID's use of the deliberative process privilege on two grounds: (1) that DOE has not explained how each document is predecisional and deliberative; and (2) that DOE has failed to explain adequately its inability to segregate non-exempt material in 52 documents labeled "inextricably intertwined." (2) Appeal at 2-3. GAP contends that the agency must correlate the exemptions with passages within each document, rather than make blanket statements that all of the material is inextricably intertwined. Id. GAP argues that DOE/ID has violated the FOIA's intent of public disclosure, made it impossible for GAP to appeal the withholding, and may have withheld non-exempt material. Id. at 1-4. GAP argues that the FOIA requires DOE to link each document withheld under Exemption 5's deliberative process privilege with an agency decision or policy to which the document contributed. Id.

Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974) (Sears). It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (Mink); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

This office has conducted a de novo review of a representative sample of the documents at issue, and we conclude that the records contain material that is clearly pre-decisional and deliberative. However, there is a further inquiry required in this case because the issue currently under appeal is whether DOE/ID has provided the necessary information for GAP to understand DOE/ID's basis for withholding material under Exemption 5. We find that, although DOE/ID has described each document adequately, it has not provided GAP with enough information to properly formulate an appeal.

A document must be described with enough specificity to allow the requester (1) to ascertain whether the claimed exemptions reasonably apply to the documents and (2) to formulate a meaningful appeal. See R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 at 80,543 (2000) (R.E.V. Eng.); Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 at 80,622 (1995), citing James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,164 (1992); Harold Fine, 17 DOE ¶ 80,136 at 80,588 (1988); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,527 (1984). Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE at 80,543; Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527.

We find that DOE/ID has adequately described the withheld documents. The agency created a chart with seven columns, namely: document number, item, date, sender, recipient, subject or description, and exemption number or reason. Following are representative descriptions for the documents:

1) Status Report on Performance Assurance Division Review of Employee Concern (TS-PA000-030) (description of a draft memo). All inextricably intertwined.

2) Executive Summary (description of a draft executive summary). All inextricably intertwined.

3) Attachment 2.1. Beryllium in the Workplace (description of a draft paper, author and recipient unknown). All inextricably intertwined.

4) Draft Paper. IH Program Deficiencies. All inextricably intertwined.

Document Index for Items 1 and 2 of FOIA Request 00-123. Thus, DOE/ID has provided GAP with basic information regarding the document date, a brief description of the document, the author, and recipient.

However, a determination must also adequately justify the withholding of a document by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527; Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE at 80,622. DOE/ID withheld 94 of 172 responsive documents under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. 52 of the 94 documents were labeled "all inextricably intertwined," and thus withheld in their entirety. By way of explanation, DOE/ID stated in the determination:

The information that has been withheld under Exemption 5 falls squarely within the deliberative process privilege, attorney client privilege or attorney work product privilege. Where possible, all factual information was segregated from predecisional and deliberative information and released to you. However, some documents containing interviews with personnel, thoughts, opinions, conjecture and supposition were withheld in their entirety due to the fact that this information was so inextricably intertwined with factual information that it was not reasonable or possible to segregate. Where this is the case, it is noted in the Document Index.

Determination at 2.

The paragraphs quoted above do not explain how Exemption 5 applies to the specific documents withheld from GAP. Rather, DOE/ID has restated the applicable law without explaining how that law applies to the withheld information. See Animal Legal Defense Fund v. Department of Air Force, 44 F. Supp. 2d 295 (D.D.C. 1999) (stating that the need to describe each withheld document under Exemption 5 is particularly acute because the deliberative process privilege depends on the document and its role in the administrative process); Senate of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico v. Department of Justice, 823 F.2d 574, 585-86 (D.C. Cir. 1987). See also R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE ¶ 80,156 (2001). DOE/ID has not explained what role the responsive documents played in the administrative process at issue in GAP's request for information related to its client's whistleblower complaint. For instance, DOE/ID withheld 22 Status Reports in their entirety. However, even though the status reports are adequately described (e.g., "Status Report to DOE/ID Human Resources on Review to Evaluate an Employee Concern," "Status Report to DOE/ID Human Resources on Review to Evaluate Allegations of Unsafe Work Place," "Status Report on Performance Assurance Division Review of Employee Concern"), there is no explanation of the role of each document, or of the role of Status Reports as a category of documents, in the deliberative process surrounding the evaluation of Mr. Jensen's employee concern. Thus, it is difficult for GAP to formulate its appeal. According to Mead, the courts do not favor "broad, sweeping generalized claims" of exemption. Mead, 566 F.2d at 251. Therefore, we find that DOE/ID has not provided the necessary information for GAP to understand the agency's basis for withholding 112 responsive documents under Exemption 5. On remand, the agency should provide this information to the requester.(3)

C. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see also Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, if factual material is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its release would reveal the agency's deliberative process, that material can be withheld. Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE ¶ 80,152 (2001). DOE/ID withheld 52 documents under Exemption 5 in their entirety, and determined that any non-exempt material in those documents was "inextricably intertwined" with exempt material and thus not subject to disclosure. Determination at 2.

This office reviewed a sample of the material that was withheld in its entirety, and based on our review, we find that DOE/ID should reconsider the issue of segregability. For example, we found some segregable factual material in Documents 72, 74-76, 77, 80, and 81. It is likely that other responsive documents may contain similar factual material, or other types of material--e.g., tables of contents, lists of tables or figures, and introductory matter--that may not qualify for protection under Exemption 5. See Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE at 80,621. Mead states that non-exempt material that is "distributed in logically related groupings" and that would not result in a "meaningless set of words and phrases" may be subject to disclosure. Mead, 566 F.2d at 261. Our review concluded that the responsive documents contain non-exempt material distributed in logically related groupings, such as sentences and paragraphs, that could be released to the requester. We do not believe that release of the selected facts would reveal the deliberative process. See Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE at 80,620. Accordingly, this portion of the Appeal is remanded to DOE/ID.

D. Public Interest

DOE regulations direct the agency to release responsive, exempt material if the DOE determines such release to be in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In applying this regulation, we note that the Department of Justice has indicated that it is its policy to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Department and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (October 4, 1993) at 1-2. We note that DOE/ID made eight discretionary releases to GAP in its release under the Determination Letter. There may be additional information that could also be released to the requester on remand.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by GAP, August 17, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0690, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)However, we note that Document 158, although exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5, is a good candidate for discretionary release. In addition, we find that some factual information in the document is reasonably segregable. See segregability discussion infra Section II.C.

(2)See segregability discussion infra Section II.C.

(3)Given the large volume of material, it may be more efficient for DOE/ID (yet still responsive to the requester) to categorize the documents and explain the role of each category of documents in the deliberative process.

Case No. VFA-0691

September 13, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:R.E.V. Engineering Services

Date of Filing:August 23, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0691

This decision addresses the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) appeal filed by R.E.V. Engineering Services (Appellant) pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, the appeal will be granted in part and remanded.

I. Background

This appeal arises from two FOIA requests that the Appellant filed with the DOE FOI/Privacy Act Division (DOE/FOI) in Washington, D.C. In the first request, dated April 7, 2000 (the April 2000 request), Appellant sought the agenda, briefing slides, briefing books, presentation notes and handouts from the briefing(s) given Gen. Eugene Habiger at the Rocky Flats Environmental [Technology] Site [(RFETS)] on or about April 6, 2000 [including] information presented to the Gen. about any changes proposed or implemented in security procedures since [he] last visited [RFETS].

In the second request, dated July 23, 2000 (the July 2000 request), Appellant sought

[d]ocuments pertaining to observations, recommendations, changes, additions or deletions to Safeguards and Security practices at [the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site (RFETS), the Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO)] and/or their contractors or subcontractors generated as a result of visits [to the RFETS by Jack Pope and Rich Levernier].

On July 14, 2000, the DOE/FOI issued a determination regarding the April 2000 request, which stated that the Policy, Standards, and Analysis Division in the Headquarters Office of Safeguards and Security had not located any responsive documents. Appellant filed an appeal from that determination, which challenged the adequacy of the DOE/FOI's search, but in a decision issued on September 1, 2000, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) upheld the DOE/FOI's determination. See R.E.V. Engineering Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,109 (2000).

A document relevant to the April 2000 request surfaced, however, in the course of processing the July 2000 request. As explained in its August 7, 2001 determination issued to Appellant regarding the latter request, the DOE/FOI found only one document responsive to the July 2000 request, which was also responsive to the April 2000 request. As explained in the determination, the document includes a one page cover memorandum (the cover memorandum), dated April 3, 2000, from the Director of the Office of Safeguards and Security to the Leader of the Safeguards and Security Team, that forwards an attached two page memorandum. The attached two page memorandum, dated March 28, 2000, from the Program Manager of Assessment and Integration to the Acting Director of the Field Operations Division, addresses deadly force training at Rocky Flats (the training memorandum). The DOE/FOI released to Appellant the cover memorandum. It withheld the training memorandum based upon Exemptions 2 and 5 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2) and (5), and its finding that release of the document would not be in the public interest.

On August 23, 2001, Appellant filed an appeal from the DOE/FOI's determination. Appellant challenges the adequacy of the DOE/FOI's search for documents and contends that the DOE/FOI improperly invoked Exemptions 2 and 5.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

Unless requested material falls within one of nine statutory exemptions, the FOIA generally requires a federal agency to release its records to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3. Putting aside for a moment the exemptions at issue here, we first address the adequacy of the DOE/FOI's search in responding to Appellant's July 2000 FOIA request.(1) For the reasons set forth below, we find that the DOE/FOI's search is incomplete and are therefore remanding this case for a final determination regarding all located responsive documents.

The FOIA requires an agency to "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). A reasonably calculated search must be thorough and conscientious, but not absolutely exhaustive. Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). "The issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

In responding to the July 2000 request, the DOE/FOI referred it to the DOE Headquarters Office of Safeguards and Security (OSS) Field Operations Division (FOD). OHA telephone conversations with DOE/FOI, Aug. 28, 29, 2001. We find that the FOD was the proper referent division, because at all times relevant to the processing of the July 2000 request, Mr. Levernier worked for the OSS, and Mr. Pope worked with him as a contractor employee. OHA telephone correspondence from DOE/FOI, Aug. 29, 30, 2001.

Appellant asserts that the RFFO should have been searched, as well. Appeal letter at 3. Indeed, upon receipt of the July 2000 request, the DOE/FOI contacted the RFFO, FOIA Division (RFFO/FOI). OHA telephone conversation with DOE/FOI and DOE/RFFO, Aug. 28, 2001. However, as the RFFO/FOI explained to the DOE/FOI in July 2000, and to OHA in the course of reviewing this appeal, all records regarding the results of Messrs. Levernier and Pope's security visit to the RFFO would be located at OSS Headquarters, where the records were generated. OHA telephone conversation with DOE/RFFO, Aug. 28, 2001. Messrs. Levernier and Pope did not write or leave relevant records at the RFFO, nor did they send relevant records to that office. Therefore, documents pertaining to the results of their visit would not be located there. Id.

Although we find that the FOD is the proper referent division, we are unable to ascertain whether it conducted an adequate search for documents, because apparently, the FOD's search is incomplete. While this appeal was pending, the FOD informed us that it located an additional document that may be relevant to the July 2000 request, but which has not yet been reviewed under the FOIA. OHA telephone conversation with FOD, Aug. 31, 2001. We will therefore remand this case to the DOE/FOI to complete its search and issue a revised, final determination regarding all documents responsive to the July 2000 request. Appellant may file a new appeal from that determination, if he deems it necessary at that time.

B. Exemption 2

We now turn to the issue of whether the FOD properly withheld the training memorandum. As stated above, the FOIA sets forth 9 exemptions pursuant to which an agency may withhold responsive documents. The DOE/FOI withheld the training memorandum pursuant to Exemptions 2 and 5. We begin our analysis with Exemption 2.

Exemption 2 permits an agency to withhold from public disclosure material "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2). Following the U.S. Supreme Court's decision United States Dep't of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352 (1976) (Rose), the courts have interpreted Exemption 2 to include two distinct categories of information. The first category, referred to as "low 2," includes information relating to internal matters of an agency in which the public could not reasonably be expected to have an interest, for example, information concerning lunch hours or parking regulations. Rose, 425 U.S. at 369-70. The second category, referred to as "high 2," encompasses information the disclosure of which "may risk circumvention of agency regulation." 425 U.S. at 369. As stated in Crooker v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 670 F.2d 1051, 1074 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (Crooker), high 2 information may be withheld if (i) it is used for predominantly internal purposes, and (ii) disclosure significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes (the Crooker test).

We have reviewed the training memorandum and find that its entire substantive text (the text) constitutes a high 2 record shielded from disclosure. The text addresses perceived training deficiencies at RFFO and is obviously an internal document not intended for dissemination outside the DOE. In addition, because the text discusses training deficiencies with regard to safeguards and security at a radioactive waste facility, its disclosure "might help outsiders to circumvent regulations or standards." Caplan v. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 587 F.2d 544, 546 (2d Cir. 1978) (Caplan) (finding agency pamphlet that focused on techniques for apprehending those engaged in illegal behavior protected by Exemption 2). Release of the text might increase the risk of physical harm to agency officials or the public and significantly assist those engaged in nefarious activity by acquainting them with intimate details of the security strategies employed by the DOE. This raises the possibility of circumvention of those strategies. See Caplan, 586 F.2d at 547. As such, the text falls within the protective purview of Exemption 2.

However, we find that the heading of the training memorandum, including the issuing DOE facility, date, names of the author and addressee, and subject line (collectively, "the heading information") are not protected as low 2 or high 2 information. Indeed, the DOE/FOI appears to agree; although it withheld the entire training memorandum, it revealed the heading information to Appellant in its determination letter. Unless the heading information is protected under Exemption 5, that portion of the training memorandum, which is segregable from the text, must be released to Appellant.

C. Exemption 5

We therefore proceed to examine whether the withheld information is protected under Exemption 5. We find that it is not.

Exemption 5 of the FOIA shields from disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). Exemption 5 incorporates the executive "deliberative process" privilege, which permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 150 (1975); Coastal States Gas Corp. v. United States Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The purpose of the deliberative process privilege is to promote high-quality agency decisions by fostering frank and independent discussion among individuals involved in the decision-making process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

Information within the purview of the deliberative process privilege must be both predecisional and deliberative. Information is predecisional if it is prepared or gathered in order to assist an agency decisionmaker in arriving at a decision. Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Eng. Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Predecisional information is also deliberative if it reflects the give-and- take of the consultative process, Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866, so that disclosure would reveal the mental processes of the decision-maker, National Wildlife Federation v. United States Forest Service, 861 F.2d 1114, 1119 (9th Cir. 1988).

Information protected by the deliberative process privilege may include "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency," Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 854, but does not include factual information, unless the factual material is "inextricably intertwined" with exempt material, Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971). In some circumstances, "disclosure of even purely factual material may so expose the deliberative process within an agency that it must be deemed exempted under [Exemption 5]." Mead Data Cent., Inc. v. United States Dep't of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 256 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (Mead Data).

As an initial matter, we agree with the DOE/FOI that the text of the training memorandum is protected under Exemption 5, as well as Exemption 2.(2) The text is predecisional, because it was prepared and gathered by an OSS manager in order to assist the Acting Director of the FOD in arriving at a decision regarding security training procedures. The text is also deliberative, as it represents the opinion of the OSS manager regarding security at the RFFO and sets forth a recommendation regarding security training.

On the other hand, the heading information is purely factual information that is not inextricably intertwined with exempt material, i.e., the text. The heading information does not hint at a predecisional or deliberative process and sits distinctly apart from the text. Thus, we find that it is not protected under the FOIA and must be released to Appellant on remand.

D. Public Interest

DOE regulations, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1, provide that "the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under [a FOIA exemption] whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." Therefore, although we have determined that the text of the training memorandum is protected under Exemptions 2 and 5, we must finally address whether disclosure of the text is in the public interest. We find that it is not.

As discussed above, the text directly relates to security issues and training deficiencies at RFFO, a radioactive waste facility. We agree with the DOE/FOI that disclosure of the text would "reveal certain vulnerabilities" at RFFO, which "could be exploited by those who might seek to harm the facility." DOE/FOI determination letter at 3. An administrative manual that sets forth or clarifies an agency's substantive or procedural regulations might be subject to the disclosure requirements, since there may be a "legitimate public interest in having those affected guide their conduct in conformance with the agency's understanding." Caplan, 587 F.2d at 548. On the other hand, revelation of the text, "which does not purport to set forth [the agency's] interpretation of substantive or procedural law, but rather focuses on the techniques for apprehending those who engaged in breaking the law, would not promote lawful behavior; it would only facilitate law evasion." Id. Clearly, such a result is not in the public interest.

III. Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing, we are unable to make a determination as to whether the DOE/FOI conducted an adequate search in response to the July 2000 request. We are therefore remanding this matter to the DOE/FOI so that it may complete its search for documents and issue a new determination. With respect to the document that the DOE/FOI has located, the training memorandum, we find that the text is protected under the FOIA and DOE regulations. We further find, however, that the heading information in the training memorandum must be released.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The appeal filed by R.E.V. Engineering Services on August 23, 2001, OHA Case No. VFA- 0691 is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOI/Privacy Act Division of the Department of Energy Headquarters in Washington, D.C. for further action in accordance with the directions set forth in this decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)As discussed above, we have previously determined that the DOE/FOI's search for documents in response to Appellant's April 2000 request was adequate, so we will not revisit that issue here.

(2)Our analysis of the text with regard to the FOIA could end with the finding that it is protected under Exemption 2, but we analyze it also under Exemption 5 for the purpose of distinguishing it from the heading information.

Case No. VFA-0694

October 22, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Chinese for Affirmative Action

Date of Filing: September 7, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0694

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by Chinese for Affirmative Action (CAA) from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Albuquerque Operations Office (AOO). In this determination, AOO denied in part CAA's request for a waiver of fees with regard to a request that it filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its Appeal, CAA asks that we grant its request for a fee waiver in full.

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. The Act also provides for the assessment of fees for the processing of requests for documents. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the DOE will grant a full or partial waiver of applicable fees if disclosure of the information sought in a FOIA request (i) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the activities of the government, and (ii) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

I. Background

In its FOIA request, CAA sought access to records from the Los Alamos and Sandia National Laboratories relating to alleged civil rights abuses and the possible use of racial profiling in monitoring and investigating American scientists and other national laboratory employees. CAA requested that all fees associated with the processing of the request be waived. Because CAA's request did not adequately address the DOE's criteria for granting fee waivers, in a letter dated June 26, 2001, AOO informed the requester of those criteria, and asked CAA for further information in support of its request.

After reviewing CAA's response to its June 26 letter, AOO granted CAA a partial fee waiver. While finding that CAA had no commercial interest in the requested records and that its justification satisfied the DOE waiver criteria in part, AOO concluded that CAA had not shown "present public interest [or its] ability to disseminate the requested records . . . ." AOO determination at 1. The ability to disseminate the requested material to the public is a critical factor in determining whether a requester should be granted a waiver of fees. Larson v. CIA, 843 F. 2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988). See also Ruth Towle Murphy, 27 DOE ¶ 80, 173.

On September 7, 2001, CAA appealed AOO's determination. In its Appeal, CAA included additional information about the public interest in disclosure and about its ability to disseminate the material sought. This information appears to satisfy the deficiencies set forth in AOO's initial determination, and that Office has requested that we remand this matter to it for the issuance of new fee waiver determination. Because AOO has not yet had an opportunity to consider CAA's request in light of this new information, we will remand this matter to it. Upon remand, AOO should review CAA's Appeal and promptly issue a revised fee waiver determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Chinese for Affirmative Action on September 7, 2001, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is remanded to AOO for the issuance of a new fee waiver determination.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: IBEW Local 125

Date of Filing: September 10, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0695

On September 10, 2001, IBEW Local 125 (IBEW) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on August 23, 2001, by the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, BPA denied in part IBEW's request for information filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release portions of the requested information which it initially withheld.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On August 2, 2001, IBEW filed a FOIA request with BPA seeking the following documents relating to the Shelton-Kitsap Project, Contract 5279:

1. Copies of bids received in response to the Shelton-Kitsap Project, including the names of the bidders, and amounts of the bids.
2. Copies of the labor classifications and pay rates of employees that will be working on the project.

On August 23, 2001, BPA issued a determination letter releasing responsive information to the Appellant. BPA, however, withheld the amounts of the bids proposed by the unsuccessful offerors to the Shelton-Kitsap Project under the FOIA Exemption 4. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b) (4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Exemption 4 protects "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person [that are] privileged or confidential." Id. Relying upon Exemption 4, BPA stated that disclosure of the above information would "provide competitors with a picture of competitors' future pricing strategies." See August 23, 2001 Determination Letter at 1. BPA also stated that the public interest in disclosing pricing information concerning unawarded contracts is slight.

On September 10, 2001, IBEW filed the present Appeal challenging BPA's determination. Specifically, IBEW challenges the withholding of the "final dollar amount of bids that unsuccessful contractors bid on projects at BPA." See Appeal Letter. IBEW requests that the withheld information be released.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 permits an agency to withhold from public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, a document supplied to the DOE on a non-voluntary basis must meet the following criteria: the document must contain either (A) "trade secrets" or (B) information which is (1) "commercial or financial," (2) "obtained from a person," and (3) "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Association v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). Cf. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (information voluntarily provided to the Government is confidential under Exemption 4 if it is the kind of information that the provider would not customarily make available to the public). Commercial or financial information is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770.

We will analyze this case under the National Parks test described above because the contractors submitted the information in the proposals on a non-voluntary basis, as this information is required by the Department of Energy Acquisition Regulations. See 48 C.F.R. § 970.5204-22 (1992).

Under Exemption 4, BPA withheld the amounts of the bids proposed by the unsuccessful offerors. Clearly, this information is "commercial" within the meaning of Exemption 4 since the material was developed and submitted specifically for the purpose of acquiring a contract. See Tri-City Herald, 16 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1987). In addition, the information was obtained from a "person," as required by Exemption 4, since corporations are deemed "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4. See Ronson Management Corp., 19 DOE ¶ 80,117 (1989). In the context of this case, a claim of privilege is highly unlikely; however, this material may possibly be "confidential," as defined in National Parks.

As stated above, for information to be found to be "confidential," it must meet one of two tests: its release would either impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the submitter. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. Release of this information is not likely to impair the Government's ability to obtain necessary information of this type in the future because, as stated above, it is required to be submitted under the Department of Energy Acquisition Regulations. Consequently, the sole test for establishing confidentiality of the submitted information in this case is whether its release will substantially harm the submitter's competitive position.

We note that BPA had already awarded the contract at the time that IBEW made its FOIA request. As a result, this case is in a posture different from those where a FOIA request is filed prior to the award of the contract or grant. John T. O'Rourke & Associates, 12 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,704 (1985). After an award has been made, the justification for withholding contract proposal information requires more thorough scrutiny because the information's release can no longer affect the bidder's competitive position with respect to the bidding process of that particular proposal. Id. Nevertheless, after reviewing the withheld material, we find that release of the bids would cause the submitters of the bids a substantial competitive injury. In its determination letter, BPA concluded that "since the bids are based upon fairly simple components, release of the bid amounts may provide competitors with a picture of competitors' future pricing strategies." It further concluded that unsuccessful offerors who bid on government contracts have a higher expectation of confidentiality in this type of information than successful offerors. We agree with these findings. They are consistent with our rulings in other Exemption 4 cases stating that release of material disclosing the terms of an unsuccessful bid can assist competitors to make their offers more attractive in the future by allowing them to predict their competitors' future pricing behavior. See Siebe Norton, 11 DOE ¶ 80,113 (1993);

Storage Technology Corp., 17 DOE ¶ 80,105 (1988). We therefore find that the bid amounts sought by the Appellant are confidential and were properly withheld from the proposals. Accordingly, the Appeal filed by IBEW will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by IBEW Local 125 on September 10, 2001, Case Number VFA-0695, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Roger K. Heusser

Date of Filing: September 18, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0697

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Roger K. Heusser filed from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Nuclear and National Security Information (NNS). In this determination, NNS informed Mr. Heusser that it did not locate any documents that were responsive to a request for information that he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require NNS to conduct a further search for responsive materials.

I. Background

Mr. Heusser filed a request in which he sought information concerning "the well-known memorandum from the Office of Intelligence Officials indicating that I should be prevented 'at all costs' from testifying to Congress on nuclear nonproliferation in the 1991 timeframe."

On August 22, 2001, NNS issued a determination which stated that a search was conducted at the Office of Nuclear and National Security Information, the Office of Safeguards and Security, and the Office of Intelligence, and found no documents responsive to Mr. Heusser's request. See Determination Letter. On September 18, 2001, Mr. Heusser filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In his Appeal, Mr. Heusser challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by NNS.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076

(D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-95 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at NNS to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Heusser's request might exist. We were informed of the following. Upon receiving Mr. Heusser's request for information, the NNS official instituted a search of its file room, contacted individuals on staff in the file room and conducted a search of its data base. This search yielded no responsive documents. NNS also informed us that it contacted the Office of Safeguards and Security, and the Office of Intelligence, which also searched their files and found no responsive documents. See September 27, 2001 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Richard Lyons, NNS, and Toni Brown, Paralegal Specialist, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Based on the description of the search that these offices performed, we are convinced that the search was adequate.

In his Appeal, Mr. Heusser indicated that the Office of Security Affairs should also have been searched. We contacted that office, which conducted a search at our request and located no responsive documents. See October 12, 2001 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Geralyn Praskievicz, Office of Security Affairs, and Toni Brown, OHA. Mr. Heusser also indicated that the document he seeks may have been included among the documents provided to the House Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations under subpoena (April 1991). He contends that these documents have been returned to the Department of Energy and that the document he requests may still be located with these other materials. We have inquired about those subponeaed records with the Office of NNS and the Office of Security Affairs, and neither office has any of those purportedly subpoenaed documents or is even aware of their existence.

Based on the foregoing, we find no reason to believe that additional responsive documents subject to the FOIA exist at the DOE. We conclude that the search of the Headquarters Office of Nuclear and National Security Information, Office of Safeguards and Security, Office of Intelligence and the Office of Security Affairs for responsive documents was adequate. Accordingly, Mr. Heusser's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Roger K. Heusser, Case No. VFA-0697, on September 18, 2001, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Nevada Desert Experience

Date of Filing: September 19, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0698

On September 19, 2001, Nevada Desert Experience (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on August 9, 2001, by the Department of Energy's Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque). In that determination, Albuquerque responded to a Request for Information the Appellant filed on April 14, 2001, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Albuquerque's determination indicated that it had not located any documents responsive to the Appellant's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require Albuquerque to conduct a further search for responsive documents .

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

In the present case, the Appellant filed a FOIA request with Albuquerque seeking:

[Information] concerning the activities of the Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) and Sandia National Lab (SNL) that are related to the U.S. Space Command's 'Vision for 2020' program. Specifically, I am requesting all documents with information dating from January 1, 1990, to the present.

April 14, 2001 FOIA Request. On August 9, 2001, Albuquerque issued a determination letter indicating that its searches had failed to locate any documents that were responsive to the Appellant's April 14, 2001 request. The determination letter indicated that the search had included Los Alamos National Laboratory's (LANL) Nonproliferation and International Security Division, LANL's Structural Inorganic Chemistry Group, LANL's Department of Defense Program Office and Sandia National Laboratory's technical databases. On September 19, 2001, the present Appeal was filed. According to the Appellant:

The 'Vision for 2020' is a program that involves all three of DOE's nuclear weapons labs -this is known by virtue of the program's acknowledgments page contained in the Executive Summary of its 'Long Range

Plan.' Therefore, it is reasonable to expect that DOE documents do exist related to its activities with this program.

Appeal. In support of this contention, the Appellant has submitted a portion of the Vision for 2020 program's Long Range Plan entitled "Acknowledgments." This section of the report states:

USSPACECOM and its components wish to thank all the people and organizations whose invaluable assistance broadened our collective perspective, provided a continual reality check and helped us develop a plan to begin shaping our national space capabilities and forces to meet the challenges of the next century.

The remainder of this section of the Long Range Plan consists solely of a list of over 80 individuals and organizations. Three DOE laboratories were included in this list. However, that inclusion does not indicate that DOE's "involvement" with the program was anything more than peripheral. The fact that the Long Range Plan's authors wished to thank these departmental elements for assistance in broadening its horizons, providing a reality check and helping in the development of the plan does not indicate that these departmental elements' involvement with the Vision for 2020 program was significant or substantial. Moreover, it does not suggest that DOE has kept any records concerning the Vision for 2020 program. (1)

Our review of the record does not reveal any inadequacies in Albuquerque's search for responsive documents. Moreover, we do not assign any weight to the specific argument made by the Appellant. Accordingly, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 19, 2001, by Nevada Desert Experience, Case No. VFA-0698, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)Moreover, even if DOE was substantially involved in this program at one time, the acknowledgment does not suggest that such information was generated subsequent to December 31, 1989. Since the Appellant limited its request to information generated on or after January 1, 1990, any information generated prior to that date would not be responsive to its request.

Case No. VFA-0699

October 31, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Chinese for Affirmative Action

Date of Filing: September 27, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0699

On September 27, 2001, Chinese for Affirmative Action (CAA) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Oakland Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE/OAK) issued in response to a request for documents that CAA submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. DOE/OAK issued the determination on August 27, 2001. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/OAK release additional responsive information to CAA or provide a detailed explanation of its reasons for withholding such material.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In a June 7, 2001 letter to DOE/OAK, CAA requested 19 specific categories of documents related to "possible civil rights abuses and the use of racial profiling in the country's national laboratories." Letter from Monica C. Hayde, Steinhart & Falconer, LLP, to Roseann Pelzner-Goodwin, DOE/OAK (June 7, 2001).

On August 27, 2001, DOE/OAK sent CAA a partial response to the request,(1) along with an unidentified number of documents. In its response, DOE/OAK cited FOIA Exemption 6 in withholding from the requester "names, addresses, e-mails, telephone numbers, birth dates, and identifiers of lab, contractors, DOE employees, complainants, and witnesses." Letter from Martin J. Domagala, Deputy Manager, DOE/OAK, to Monica C. Hyde, Steinhart and Falconer (August 27, 2001).

DOE/OAK also indicated that it was withholding information under FOIA Exemption 5. Id. at 2-3. Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "[i]nter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this section exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." National Labor Relations Bd. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). Among these privileges are the executive or deliberative process privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the attorney-client privilege. DOE/OAK cited all three privileges as a basis for withholding information.

CAA appeals what it calls DOE/OAK's "blanket assertions of FOIA exemptions 5 and 6 and its failure to correlate the proffered exemptions to any particular record or category of requests." Appeal at 1. Therefore, particularly relevant to our analysis below is the fact that DOE/OAK's determination did not (1) identify, with respect to the particular documents or portions of documents withheld from CAA, the FOIA exemption that was the basis for the withholding; or (2) describe the documents that were withheld in their entirety from the requester.

II. Analysis

It is well established that a FOIA determination must have reasonably specific justifications for withholding all or parts of documents responsive to a FOIA request. See, e.g., Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992); Davis Wright & Jones, 19 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,509 (1989) (and cases cited therein). Conclusory and generalized claims by agency officials that material is exempt from disclosure are not acceptable. We strongly adhere to this position so that the requesting party may prepare an adequate appeal, and so that this Office may make an effective review of the initial agency determination. Thus, "when an agency seeks to withhold information it must provide a relatively detailed justification, specifically identifying the reasons why a particular exemption is relevant and correlating those claims with the particular part of a withheld document to which they apply." Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE ¶ 80,108 at 80,528 (1984). A sufficiently detailed explanation should indicate the issues addressed in a document and the functions of the document which render it exempt from mandatory disclosure. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1145 (D.C. Cir. 1975); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,528. These requirements are reflected in the DOE regulations, which require that a response to a properly submitted FOIA request include:

a statement of the reason for the denial, containing a reference to the specific exemption under the Freedom of Information Act authorizing the withholding of the record, and to the extent consistent with the purposes of the exemption, a brief explanation of how the exemption applies to the record withheld, and a statement of why a discretionary release is not appropriate.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1)(i).

In past cases, we have held that a general discussion of the policies underlying the various exemptions that fails to explain why the specific documents withheld fall within the claimed exemption is inadequate. Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,528 (and cases cited therein). Instead, we have required the agency to support its application of an exemption providing the type of justification required by Arnold & Porter.

Moreover, a document withheld in its entirety must be described with enough specificity to allow the requester (1) to ascertain whether the claimed exemptions reasonably apply to the document and (2) to formulate a meaningful appeal. See R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE ¶ 80,116 at 80,543 (2000) (R.E.V. Eng.); Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 at 80,622 (1995), citing James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,164 (1992); Harold Fine, 17 DOE ¶ 80,136 at 80,588 (1988); Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527. Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE at 80,543; Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527.

In this case we find that DOE/OAK's response to CAA's request does not permit either an adequate appeal or an effective review of its basis for withholding documents. Specifically, the response fails to identify which FOIA exemption (Exemption 5 or Exemption 6) applies to each document or portion of document withheld. Nor does the response identify or describe those documents that were withheld from the requester in their entirety.(2)

For these reasons, we will remand this matter to DOE/OAK so that it may issue a new determination to CAA. This new determination should, for each document or portion of document withheld from the requester, identify the FOIA exemption (and with respect to Exemption 5, the particular privilege) that is the basis for the withholding. In addition, any document that is withheld in its entirety should be identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its authors and recipients. The description need not contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the document. R.E.V. Eng., 28 DOE at 80,543; Arnold & Porter, 12 DOE at 80,527.(3)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by CAA on September 27, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0699, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Oakland Operations Office of the Department of Energy for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)DOE/OAK stated that it was also forwarding the request to DOE Headquarters, which would respond directly to CAA.

(2)CAA requests that DOE/OAK "be directed to produce responsive documents from each of the three laboratories under its umbrella, rather than just one or two laboratories." Appeal at 4. However, until DOE/OAK has identified all responsive documents to the Appellant, it would be premature to consider any argument by CAA regarding the adequacy of DOE/OAK's search for documents.

(3)Though CAA complains of DOE/OAK's failure to correlate specific responsive documents to the enumerated categories of its request, we find no basis in the relevant statute or regulations that would require DOE/OAK to do so. Nonetheless, we do agree with CAA that this could facilitate its understanding of the reasons for the withholding of information.

Case No. VFA-0700

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: October 12, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0700

Barbara Schwarz filed this Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Headquarters Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Division (FOI/PA). This determination responded to a request for information that Schwarz filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. As explained below, we will deny this appeal.

I. Background

Schwarz sent a letter to FOI/PA, dated September 8, 2001, requesting certain records. The portion of the request relevant to this Appeal is as follows:

Any records pertaining to Scientology. With records I mean: letters, cards, e-mail, fax transmittal sheets, articles, expertises [sic], notes, phone notes, referrals, invoices, copies of folders, computer printouts, subpoenas, declarations, certificates, FOIA/PA search documents, litigation records, logs, FOIA/PA work sheets, appeal processing records, inquiries, drafts, memoranda, form papers and any other form of records. Search in all offices, all records systems, search from present time as far back as possible.

FOIA/PA responded to Schwarz by asserting that the request was improper because she had not reasonably described the records sought. FOIA/PA stated that

The topic is too broad and could require a search of all the files of the Department. Such a search of all offices would be unreasonably burdensome to the Department. Please narrow your search by providing specific information such as a time period, titles of documents, offices to be searched and any other information that would identify the type of records that you are requesting....

If you need assistance to formulate your request to comply with the FOIA, please contact ... this office.... You should request this assistance by October 8, 2001. If [we] do not hear from you or receive a reformulated request by this date, no further agency action will be taken.

Schwarz declined the request to reformulate her request and instead filed the present Appeal. In the Appeal, she asks "how come that DOE did not consider my request for records on L. Ron Hubbard too broad and burdensome?" She claims that "all I gave you was [Hubbard's] name and you were able to retrieve records on him," and wonders "what is the problem searching under Scientology and to inform me what you found?"

II. Analysis

The FOIA specifies that a request for records must "reasonably describe" the records sought. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(A). A description "would be sufficient if it enabled a professional employee of the agency who was familiar with the subject area of the request to locate the record with a reasonable amount of effort." Marks v. United States Department of Justice, 578 F.2d 261, 263 (9th Cir. 1978), quoting the legislative history of the 1974 FOIA amendments, H.R. Rep. No. 93-876, at 6 (1974), reprinted in 1974 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6267, 6271. In other words, the critical inquiry in determining whether a description is reasonable is "whether the agency is able to determine precisely what records [are] being requested." Yeager v. DEA, 678 F.2d 315, 322, 326 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

The rationale for this rule is that the "FOIA was not intended to reduce government agencies to full-time investigators on behalf of requesters." Assassination Archives & Research Center v. CIA, 720 F. Supp. 217, 219 (D.D.C. 1989). In addition, it prevents requesters from conducting "fishing expeditions" through agency files. Immanuel v. Secretary of the Treasury, No. 94-884, 1995 WL 464141, at *1 (D. Md. Apr. 4, 1995), affirmed, 81 F.3d 150 (4th Cir. 1996) (unpublished table decision).

Thus, a request that would require an agency to search through twenty-three years of unindexed files is unreasonably burdensome, while a search for a dated memorandum in agency files that are indexed chronologically is not. Nation Magazine v. United States Customs Service, 71 F.3d 885, 892 (D.C. Cir. 1995). Similarly, a request for "all records" relating to a particular subject is unreasonably broad and does not enable the agency to find the records within a reasonable amount of time. Massachusetts v. HHS, 727 F. Supp. 35, 36 n.2 (D. Mass. 1989).

Schwarz has clearly stated in her request letter that she seeks all records relating to Scientology, without any limitation. She has defined her request as encompassing all types of documents from all offices of the DOE, and all dates. A search for responsive documents would, therefore, require a review of all records in the possession of the Department of Energy.

Moreover, Schwarz is incorrect in claiming that her present request is essentially similar to her previous request for records pertaining to L. Ron Hubbard. In the previous request, dated June 18, 1999, she asked for records "as to L. Ron Hubbard and proposed energy programs and environmental programs and nuclear counterintelligence programs proposed by him." This request included information that enabled personnel conducting the search to determine precisely what records were being requested. In contrast, Schwarz's present request for all records pertaining to Scientology does not enable employees to locate responsive records with a reasonable amount of effort. FOIA/PA offered to work with Schwarz to formulate the request more precisely. Schwarz, however, declined the offer. Consequently, FOIA/PA cannot complete a search for responsive records with a reasonable amount of effort.

III. Conclusion

The FOIA requires a requester to reasonably describe the records sought. Case law defines a reasonable request as one that enables the agency to locate the requested records with a reasonable amount of effort. We find on appeal that Schwarz's request for all records pertaining to a subject is not a reasonable description, in that the DOE cannot conduct a search for all responsive records with a reasonable amount of effort. We will therefore deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0700, is hereby denied.

of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Schwarz

Date of Filing: October 5, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0701

On October 5, 2001, Ms Schwarz filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Office of Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on September 26, 2001. That determination concerned a request for information Ms Schwarz submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, OIG would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On May 10, 2001, Ms Schwarz submitted a FOIA request to the DOE for a large number of documents, including "[t]he correspondence logs of [OIG] of June 1999 till the present time as well as the subpoena logs, FOIA/PA requests and administrative appeal logs, as well as their offices litigation logs." Determination Letter dated September 26, 2001 from Judith D. Gibson, Assistant Inspector General for Resource Management, OIG, to Barbara Schwarz. In addition, she requested "[c]opies of all requests for waiver of fees that DOE granted to other requesters . . . for the last five years" and "any records pertaining to [her] request for the [OIG] investigation dated July 20, 2000, and the [OIG] records, and the OHA records of the three conversations with OIG to this request." Id. at 2. Finally, Ms Schwarz requested "search records that [OIG] generated to retrieve" the information responsive to this request, and search declarations detailing the search for the requested records. Id. at 2. Responding solely for its own office, OIG released its FOIA log to Ms Schwarz and stated that it did not have any other responsive information. Id.

In her Appeal, Ms Schwarz claimed that OIG released only pages one and three of the FOIA log and withheld all other logs, including correspondence and investigation logs. Appeal Letter dated October 2, 2001, from Barbara Schwarz to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Further, OIG did not release any copies of requests for fee waivers. Id. Additionally, she argues that OIG withheld records pertaining to her request for an investigation dated July 20, 2000. Id. (1) Finally, Ms Schwarz contends that OIG did not include the search records or declarations she had requested relevant to her request. Id. She alleges that these failures, along with OIG's late response to her request, are evidence of bad faith, failure to search or an inadequate search and a cover up of existing records. Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must

"conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

We contacted OIG to determine what type of search was conducted. OIG indicated that it does not keep logs or lists of correspondence, subpoenas, administrative appeals, or litigation. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated October 22, 2001, between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, and Caroline Nielsen, OIG. It did release to Ms Schwarz its list of FOIA and Privacy Act requests that had been filed in during the period June 1999 through early September 2001, as Ms Schwarz had requested. However, she only received page one and three of the list. OIG has indicated that it will resend the entire list. Id. In response to Ms Schwarz' claims that OIG withheld its investigation logs, we note that she did not request investigation logs in her initial request. A requester cannot broaden the request on Appeal. Barbara Schwarz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,140 (2001), citing F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1996); Energy Research Foundation, 22 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1992); Cox Newspapers, 22 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1992); Bernard Hanft, 21 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1991); John M. Seehaus, 21 DOE ¶ 80,135 (1991). Since investigation logs were not included in the original request, we find this part of Ms Schwarz' Appeal to be groundless. If Ms Schwarz wants the investigation logs from OIG, she will need to submit a request under the FOIA asking for that information.

Ms Schwarz claims that OIG did not release any previously granted fee waiver requests to her. The OIG informed us that it does not consider any fee waiver requests and, therefore, does not have copies of any fee waivers granted to other requesters. Any such requests would be handled by the Freedom of Information and Privacy Act office of the DOE. Id. Ms Schwarz next states that OIG withheld records pertaining to her request for investigation dated July 20, 2000. She bases this claim on a letter OHA sent to her stating that OIG considered her request carefully. We have determined that OHA and OIG did not correspond regarding her request but rather communicated by telephone without producing any documentation of the communication. Further, notwithstanding the fact that OIG asserted that it considered Ms Schwarz's request carefully, it provided no documentation of its consideration, and there is nothing to indicate that it generated any records pertaining to her July 20, 2000 request. OIG also searched its files of requests for investigation that have been denied and did not discover anything responsive to Ms Schwarz' request. In our contact with OIG, we determined that OIG has no records responsive to this portion of Ms Schwarz' request. October 22, 2001 Telephone Memorandum.

Finally, Ms Schwarz alleges that OIG withheld its search declaration and records pertaining to this request. In requesting the search records and declaration, Ms Schwarz is asking for information that did not exist at the time of her request, if it exists at all. The FOIA applies to information in existence at the time of the request. It cannot be used to create information or request future information. 5 U.S.C. § 552; 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d)(1), (2). We note that no search records or declaration were created in response to this request, nor are such documents routinely created in response to any request. Further, as we have explained to Ms Schwarz before, neither the FOIA nor the relevant DOE regulations requires the agency to supply a "search certificate" or a detailed description of the search that was conducted. The FOIA simply requires the agency to notify the requester of the determination, the reasons for the determination, and of the requester's right to appeal. Barbara Schwarz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,175 (2001); see Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 at 80,872 (1999). Moreover, we believe that requiring a "search declaration" at the administrative stage of review is unnecessary and unproductive. We will therefore deny this portion of the appeal.

Conclusion

OIG followed procedures reasonably calculated to uncover the information Ms Schwarz requested in her FOIA request. The fact that OIG did not uncover the information requested does not indicate that the search was inadequate. For the foregoing reasons, we will deny Ms Schwarz' appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ms Schwarz on October 5, 2001, Case No. VFA-0701, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0703

January 15, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Caron Balkany

Date of Filing:October 31, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0703

On October 31, 2001, Caron Balkany appealed a determination issued by the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her appeal, Ms. Balkany contends that the OIG had failed to conduct an adequate search for documents responsive to FOIA requests that she had filed. For the reasons detailed below, we find that the OIG conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and deny Ms. Balkany's appeal.(1)

I. BACKGROUND

Ms. Balkany filed FOIA requests with DOE seeking documents concerning a Tiger Team or other DOE investigation of allegations of illegal nighttime burning at the Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant in 1989. Additionally, Ms. Balkany sought a copy of a letter from Michael J. Norton, U.S. Attorney for the District of Colorado, to Deputy Secretary Henson Moore dated December 1, 1989.

On September 20, 2001, the OIG issued a determination in response to Ms. Balkany's FOIA requests. With its determination, the OIG provided documents containing information concerning the OIG's involvement in a joint agency task force investigation of allegations of environmental crimes at Rocky Flats as well as information on illegal burning at Rocky Flats and the Tiger Team investigation.(2) The OIG also indicated that it had been unable to locate a copy of the letter from Mr. Norton to Deputy Secretary Moore. Ms. Balkany then filed an appeal in which she challenged the adequacy of the OIG search based on her belief that the OIG would have located a copy of the DOE Tiger Team report and a copy of the letter from Mr. Norton to Deputy Secretary Moore if its search had been adequate.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999). In these cases we have held that "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted Ruby Isla, an attorney-advisor with the OIG, to obtain information concerning the search that had been conducted for documents responsive to Ms. Balkany's FOIA requests by the OIG's Office of Investigations (Investigations), Office of Inspections (Inspections) and Office of Audit Services (Audit). See Electronic Mail Messages from Ruby Isla to Linda Lazarus, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals (various dates). Ms. Isla informed us that Audit had no involvement with the 1989 investigation and, as a result, did not search for responsive records. Ms. Isla also told us that Investigations found documents that were responsive to Ms. Balkany's FOIA request by conducting a manual search of older files as well as a database search of the investigative records that are contained in the Energy Inspector General Project Tracking system (EIGPT). (3) Ms. Isla also explained that Inspections had been unable to locate responsive records after conducting a manual review of lists of issued reports and other documentation.(4)

Based on these facts, we find that the OIG conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Ms. Balkany's FOIA requests. As detailed above, Investigations and Inspections both conducted a manual search for responsive documents and Investigations also conducted a database search. As a result of these searches, the OIG found and produced responsive documents. We disagree with Ms. Balkany's position that the OIG would have found the Tiger Team report or the letter from Mr. Norton to Deputy Secretary Moore if a reasonable search had been conducted. Ms. Isla informed us that the Tiger Team is not a component of the OIG and the OIG did not conduct or participate in the Tiger Team investigations. Id. Moreover, we have no indication that the OIG ever had a copy of the letter from Mr. Norton to Deputy Secretary Moore.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) As set forth above, the appeal filed by Caron Balkany on October 31, 2001, is dismissed in part and denied in part.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: January 15, 2002

(1)Ms. Balkany also appealed a related determination issued by the FOIA and Privacy Act Division of the Office of the Executive Secretariat (FOIA Office) on the grounds that the FOIA Office had failed to conduct an adequate search because it had only requested that the OIG and the Office of Environment, Safety and Health search for documents responsive to her FOIA request. However, this portion of Ms.

Balkany's appeal has become moot because the FOIA Office issued a new determination in which it indicated that two additional DOE offices had been asked to search for responsive documents.

(2)Although the OIG found documents that mentioned the Tiger Team investigation conducted by DOE, it was unable to locate the DOE Tiger Team report itself.

(3)Ms. Isla informed us that Investigations searched the following fields – case titles, complaint/allegation information, executive briefs, and names (including names of subjects, suspects, witnesses, and sources of information) – in the EIGPT database for the following terms: Tiger Team; Building 771; Incinerator; Night Time Burning; Norton; Michael Norton; Henson Moore; Moore; Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant; Rocky Flats; and RFNW. Id.

(4)Ms. Isla also indicated that Inspections did not search the EIGPT database for responsive documents because Ms. Balkany was seeking information about an investigation that occurred in 1989, and Inspections did not start entering documents into the EIGPT database until 1996 or 1997. Id.

Case No. VFA-0704

December 5, 2001

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Martin Becker

Date of Filing: October 29, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0704

On October 29, 2001, Martin Becker filed an Appeal from a determination that the Savannah River Operations Office (SROO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him on October 18, 2001. In that determination, SROO denied in part a request for information that Mr. Becker filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require SROO to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In his FOIA request, Mr. Becker asked for any documents reflecting any notice of election to extend any Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) or affiliate lease of the premise at Centennial Corporate Center. In response to this request, SROO provided Mr. Becker a document entitled "Third Amendment to Lease." This document relates to the leasing of Centennial Corporate Center by Westinghouse Safety Management Solutions LLC (WSMS), a subcontractor of WSRC. SROO withheld portions of the document pertaining to the amount of space leased and the rent charged pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). In its determination, SROO concluded that the document was voluntarily provided to the DOE by WSMS, and that under the relevant case law, such information is confidential, and can therefore be withheld under this Exemption, if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C.. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass).

In his Appeal, Mr. Becker contests the adequacy of SROO's search for responsive documents. Specifically, he argues that SROO should also have provided copies of the original lease and the first and second amendments thereto. Moreover, Mr. Becker argues that SROO used an improper standard in determining that portions of the document were exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4. He contends that because the lease is the property of the federal government, it was not submitted by WSMS voluntarily, and that the Critical Mass standard is therefore inapplicable. He requests that SROO be instructed to provide all of the lease documents without redaction.

II. Analysis

We have been informed by SROO that it recently received the original lease and the first two amendments from WSRS, and that these documents will be released to Mr. Becker shortly, after any appropriate redactions are made. Therefore, the only remaining issue before us is whether SROO used the proper standard in making its Exemption 4 determination regarding the third amendment to the lease. For the reasons that follow, we find that it did not.

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). In order to qualify under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information which is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n. v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In National Parks, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that commercial or financial information submitted to the federal government is "confidential" for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either (i) to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. Id. at 770; Critical Mass. In Critical Mass, however, the court limited the National Parks test to information that was submitted to the government on an involuntary basis, while holding that information that is provided to an agency voluntarily is considered "confidential" if "it is of a kind that the provider would not customarily make available to the public." Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In a previous Decision issued to Mr. Becker, we found that the lease documents in question here were subject to the Contractor Records provision, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1), of the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. That regulation states that

[w]hen a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under [the FOIA].

We concluded that WSRC's contract with the DOE contained a provision that all documents acquired or generated by the contractor in the performance of its duties, with certain specified exceptions, shall be deemed the property of the DOE, that this provision was applicable to WSMS as a subcontractor, and that the lease documents did not fall under any of the specified exceptions. We therefore found that the documents were the property of the DOE, and we instructed SROO to review them and release any non-exempt material to Mr. Becker. Martin Becker, Case No. VFA- 0666 (September 7, 2001).

In previous cases involving the procurement process, we have consistently found information submitted in conjunction with a government contract to have been supplied on an involuntary basis. See, e.g., City of Federal Way, 27 DOE ¶ 80,191 (1999). In this case, WSMS entered into a contract that provided that certain documents, including the lease and its amendments, are the property of the DOE. Therefore, the contractor could not appropriately refuse a government request to produce these documents, and the lease and its amendments were consequently submitted on an involuntary basis. We will therefore remand this matter to SROO. On remand, SROO should apply the National Parks test in determining whether portions of the lease and its three amendments are exempt from mandatory disclosure.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0704, on October 29, 2001, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Savannah River Operations Office for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the Decision.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Collier Shannon Scott

Date of Filing: November 7, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0705

On November 7, 2002, Ms. Christina B. Parascandola, on behalf of Collier Shannon Scott (Collier), filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on September 25, 2001, by the Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Division (FOIA Division) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information Collier filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Collier challenges the adequacy of the FOIA Division's search for documents responsive to its request.

I. Background

On April 23, 2001, Collier filed a request for information in which it sought "copies of any and all documents and records in the custody or control of the United States Department of Energy ("DOE"), relating to DOE's decision to include facilities in Bayonne, New Jersey, and Huntington, West Virginia, on the covered facility list published in the Federal Register on January 17, 2001." DOE listed both facilities as "atomic weapons employers." On August 6, 2001, the FOIA Division issued a determination which stated that responsive documents were located in the Office of Environment, Safety and Health (EH). It released 60 pages of responsive documents in their entirety. On May 8, 2001, Collier amended its request to include "the names, birth dates, hiring dates, termination dates, job titles, and social security numbers of employees [at the facilities in question] who were issued dosimetry badges or film badges." See Determination Letter. On September 25, 2001, the FOIA Division issued a second determination which stated that EH conducted a search for responsive documents pursuant to Collier's amended request. Id. The determination further stated that EH was determined to be the office most reasonably expected to possess responsive documents. However, the search of EH's files located no responsive documents. Id.

On November 7, 2001, Collier filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In its Appeal, Collier challenges the adequacy of the search initiated by the FOIA Division. Specifically, Collier contends that (1) DOE unlawfully limited its search to only one office within the agency; (2) DOE should have consulted with its historian and DOE employees responsible for carrying out the agency's responsibilities under the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program Act; and (3) DOE's denial was conclusory and did not indicate how DOE's search was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Collier asks the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) to direct the FOIA Division to initiate another search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In its Appeal, Collier asserts that DOE “unlawfully limited its search to only one office within the agency.” See Appeal Letter at 3. More specifically, it argues that DOE did not search any of the appropriate field operations offices where DOE may have handled matters related to either or both of the Bayonne and Huntington facilities. Further, it argues that the Office of Worker Advocacy (OWA) was not searched. In addition to these arguments, Collier contends that DOE should have consulted with a historian and DOE employees “reasonably expected to know the location of the information we requested.” Id. at 5. Finally, Collier asserts that the FOIA Division provided no justification for its denial, but “merely provided a conclusory statement that its search of EH files produced no responsive documents.” Id. In addition, it argues that the FOIA Division did not describe any of the measures it took to ensure that its search was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents.

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in the FOIA Division to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Collier’s request might exist. Upon receiving Collier’s request for information, the FOIA Division referred the request to EH and the office of Environmental Management (EM) which both instituted a search of their files. Specifically, EH searched its records and located responsive documents that were contained in a records collection under EM’s jurisdiction. Those documents were released to Collier in their entirety. When Collier amended its request to include personal information relating to employees at the Bayonne and Huntington facilities, EH stated that it conducted another search and found no responsive documents. Officials at EH have informed us that EH and EM would be the only offices that would possibly contain the information requested by the Appellant. They further informed us that the personal information sought by Collier in its amended request would not be the type of information maintained by the government, but would be kept by the private companies involved. See December 4, 2001 Record of Telephone Conversation between Roger Anders, EH, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA.

While the searches conducted in this case were not exhaustive, they were not required to be. The FOIA Division actively fulfilled its duties by contacting the offices most likely to possess documents responsive to Collier’s request, and was not obligated to consult with a historian and other DOE employees as suggested by the Appellant. Nor was the FOIA Division required to describe its search in detail as part of its determination letter. The fact that the search did not uncover documents that Collier believes may be in the possession of DOE does not mean that the search was inadequate. In addition, the FOIA Division has informed us that contrary to the Appellant’s assertion, OWA was searched for responsive documents. According to officials in EH, OWA is a part of EH. When EH conducted its initial search for responsive documents, the documents that were located belonged to OWA. They further explained that OWA extracted that particular set of files from EM. Finally, EH was correct in stating that the personal information sought by Collier would not be the type of information maintained by the government.

Personnel records of contractor employees, as in this case, are generally not the property of the DOE and therefore are not releasable by DOE.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that the FOIA Division initiated an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Collier's request. Therefore, we must deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Collier Shannon Scott, OHA Case No. VFA-0705, on November 7, 2001, is hereby denied.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: David B. McCoy

Date of Filing: November 21, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0707

On November 21, 2001, David B. McCoy filed an appeal from a determination issued to him in response to five requests for documents that he submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on October 22, 2001, by the DOE Idaho Operations Office (Idaho). This Appeal if granted, would require that Idaho perform an additional search for the information Mr. McCoy requested.

I. Background

This Appeal concerns five FOIA requests that Mr. McCoy submitted to Idaho.(1) Mr. McCoy's first request, Idaho Request No. 01-041 (Request No. 41), concerns the Liquid Effluent Treatment and Disposal Facility (LET&D). The second request, Idaho Request No. 01-043 (Request No. 43), concerns Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory (INEEL). The third request, Idaho Request No. 01-044 (Request No. 44), concerns the Processing Equipment Waste Evaporator (PEWE). The fourth request, Idaho Request No. 01-045 (Request No. 45), concerns the High Level Liquid Waste Evaporator (HLLWE). The fifth and final request, Idaho Request No. 01-048 (Request No. 48), concerns a number of different facilities.

Idaho determined that a number of the items Mr. McCoy was requesting did not exist or could not be located. Idaho indicated that Item No. 41-1a, a letter from the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to the Hanford site, should be requested from the EPA, because it originated with that agency. For two Items, Item Nos. 41-5 and 41-27, Idaho found that each request is too broad, because the number of documents responsive to his request is extensive.

Mr. McCoy challenges the adequacy of Idaho's search for some documents. He bases these challenges on other documents that indicate certain tests were to be conducted and reports generated. He also bases these challenges on other documents that indicate the facilities were being operated under consent order or permits for which an application is needed. Further, he protests the withholding of the letter from EPA to Hanford , claiming that the FOIA requires release of documents held by federal agencies. He is also challenging the requirement to clarify the two Items that Idaho believes are too broad.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must

"conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

In order to determine what type of search was conducted, we contacted Idaho. Idaho indicated that the DOE conducted a computer search of its database and also a hand search of its hard files. The contractor conducted a similar search. Neither the DOE nor the contractor recovered anything responsive to Mr. McCoy's Item Nos. 41-1b, 41-1c, 41-2, 41-19, 41-20, 43-4, 44-3, 44-21, 44-24, 45-1, 45-17, 45-20, 45-25, and 48-7b. We believe that the search of both computer and hard files, which was done in this case, is sufficient to recover the information Mr. McCoy is requesting. In most instances, Mr. McCoy has not provided any additional information or support, beyond his belief that responsive documents exist. We will address each of the specific challenges he has raised.

Mr. McCoy challenges Idaho's failure to find responsive documents for Item Nos. 41-1b, 41-1c, and 41-2, claiming that DOE believes EPA must provide any responsive documents. However, Idaho was unable to locate documents responsive to Item Nos. 41-1b, 41-1c, and 41-2. At no time did Idaho indicate that it expected EPA to provide to Mr. McCoy any responsive document. Idaho was merely stating it was unable to find documents.

For Item Nos. 44-3 and 45-1, in his Appeal Mr. McCoy did not provide any further argument or proof that the document responsive to these requests exist. He merely claims that the search was inadequate. He does not indicate where any responsive documents could be found. Idaho was unable to locate anything responsive, although the search it conducted, of both its computer and paper files, was calculated to uncover the requested information. Mr. McCoy's belief that the information must exist is not a sufficient argument that Idaho must find the information or that the search was somehow inadequate.

In regard to Item No. 41-19, Mr. McCoy requested the screening level risk assessment for the LET&D. Idaho responded that no specific screening level risk assessment was conducted and, therefore, nothing responsive to Mr. McCoy's request exists. Again, Mr. McCoy merely states that the search was inadequate, and that is insufficient to warrant reversal. The reports requested in Item No. 41-20, biannual operation reports from 1990 to present, do not exist. Mr. McCoy has not presented any evidence to the contrary and merely states that Idaho did not conduct an adequate search. Again, without some indication of where to find the documents or proof that they exist, Mr. McCoy's allegations are insufficient. Next, Mr. McCoy requested documents analyzing the cumulative risk from all thermal treatment units at the INEEL in Item No. 43-4. Idaho found nothing responsive to this request. Mr. McCoy challenges that finding, quoting the November 16, 1995 Resource Conservation Recovery Act (RCRA) quarterly meeting minutes, which state that "the cumulative risk from all thermal treatment units on the INEL will be calculated at some point." Appeal Letter at 3 (emphasis added), quoting November 16, 1995 RCRA quarterly meeting minutes at 4. Idaho responded that the anticipated work was never accomplished. Therefore, there are no documents responsive to Mr. McCoy's request.

In addition, Mr. McCoy asked for RCRA Part A and Part B permits issued by the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) for the PEWE and HLLWE in Item Nos. 44-21 and 45-17. Idaho responded that there is no Part A permit under the RCRA, just a Part A application, which has already been provided to Mr. McCoy. Further, no Part B permit has been issued by DEQ, although the Part B application has been submitted and is available in the Idaho public reading room. In Item Nos. 44-24 and 45-20, Mr. McCoy requests "[a]ny documents issued in lieu of a permit by DEQ and/or EPA for operation" of PEWE and HLLWE. Request Letter Nos. 44 and 45. Idaho found nothing responsive. Item No. 45-25 requests "all written or electronic documents identifying all liquid discharges or groundwater discharges, including leaks from the HLLWE." Request Letter No. 45. Idaho indicated that no leaks have occurred at HLLWE, and therefore, there are no documents responsive to this request. Mr. McCoy requests documents that support an analysis that a number of facilities were unpermittable. He is referring to a document which states that a number of the facilities will be operated under interim status and a consent order because the facilities were "unpermittable." Item No. 48-7b. Idaho responded that it had no responsive documents. Mr. McCoy counters that the decision that the facilities were "unpermittable" could not have been made in a vacuum. Idaho has advised this Office that the analysis supporting the document Mr. McCoy has, upon which his request was based, was not memorialized in writing.

In Item No. 41-26, Mr. McCoy requests "any pending applications for LET&D." Request Letter No. 41. Mr. McCoy objects that the Idaho search was not adequate because the information was not recovered. DOE has stated that at the date of Mr. McCoy's request, the Part B application had not been submitted, despite Mr. McCoy's assertion to the contrary. The FOIA does not require that documents not in existence at the time of the request be released. It cannot be used to create information or request future information. 5 U.S.C. § 552; 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d)(1), (2); Barbara Schwarz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,199 (2001).

Repeatedly, Mr. McCoy requests copies of consent orders about the various facilities, Item Nos. 41-14, 41-15, 44-5, 45-8, and 45-9. At the time of the determination, Idaho believed that it had no documents responsive to these requests. Mr. McCoy challenged that response, claiming that EPA issued Consent Orders about the various facilities. Idaho did not locate any Consent Orders responsive to Mr. McCoy's request. However, it now believes that the search it conducted for the Consent Orders may not have been thorough enough. Therefore, we will remand this aspect of the matter for a further search on Item Nos. 41-14, 41-15, 44-5, 45-8, and 45-9.

In addition, Mr. McCoy requested a copy of a letter from EPA to Hanford, Item No. 41-1a. DOE responded that the letter belongs to EPA and should be requested from that agency. We disagree. Once the letter was received by Idaho, it became a DOE document. Therefore, Idaho must either release the letter or issue a new determination that justifies its withholding.

The final two items of Mr. McCoy's requests are Item Nos. 41-5 and 41-27. In Item No. 41-5, Mr. McCoy asked that Idaho "[p]rovide the index for all written or electronic documents that contain documents contained in the administrative record for the LET&D." Request Letter No. 41 at 2. Idaho responded that the request was unclear and needed clarification. In his Appeal, Mr. McCoy did clarify his request. Therefore, we will remand this matter to Idaho for a further determination on Item No. 41-5. In Item No. 41-27, Mr. McCoy asks for "all correspondence between DOE and DEQ and/or EPA respecting the LET&D." Request Letter No. 41. In its determination, Idaho asked that Mr. McCoy narrow the focus of the request. We do not believe this is an adequate determination in response to his request. In this case, Idaho does not claim that the search is burdensome, but rather that a burdensome number of documents will be located. Under these circumstances, Idaho cannot require that Mr. McCoy narrow the focus of his request. Burlin McKinney, 26 DOE ¶ 80,215 at 80,847-48 (1997). Idaho must provide the requested information, though it may recoup all applicable fees from Mr. McCoy.(2) Therefore, we will remand this matter to Idaho for a further determination.

III. Conclusion

Idaho was unable to locate some of the information Mr. McCoy requested, although the search it conducted was calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Idaho searched both its computer database and hard files. Mr. McCoy was unable to provide any additional information, other than his individual belief that the search was inadequate, to direct Idaho to the location of the documents. For those items where Idaho was unable to locate documents responsive to his requests, we will deny Mr. McCoy's Appeal. However, we are remanding the matter for a new determination on a number of items. Idaho must locate and identify copies of any Consent Orders Mr. McCoy requested. Idaho must issue a new determination in regard to Item No. 41-1a, the letter from EPA to the Hanford site. Finally, Idaho must locate the information requested in response to two of the request items, even if there are an immense number of documents responsive to the requests. After locating the above information, Idaho must release it, subject to fees where applicable, or issue a new determination that justifies the withholding of any information. Therefore, we are denying Mr. McCoy's Appeal in part and granting it in part and remanding the matter to Idaho.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by David B. McCoy on November 21, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0707, is hereby denied in part and granted in part.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requestor resides or has a principle place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)Each of Mr. McCoy's five overall requests will be referred to only by the last two digits of the request number assigned by Idaho. Further, each requests contain numerous itemized requests. In order to identify an item within a specific request to which we are referring, without recreating Mr. McCoy's extensive lists, we will refer to the item by the request number assigned to the letter by Idaho and the item number Mr. McCoy utilized in that request. For example, the second item of request number 43 will be referred to as Item No. 43-2.

(2)Mr. McCoy did not request a fee waiver in Request No. 41, as he did in some of the other requests, Nos. 43, 45, and 48.

Case No. VFA-0709

January 23, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Keep Yellowstone Nuclear Free

Case Number: VFA-0709

Date of Filing:December 17, 2001

On December 17, 2001, Keep Yellowstone Nuclear Free (KYNF) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Idaho Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE-ID) issued on November 26, 2001. That determination concerned a request for documents submitted by KYNF pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, DOE-ID would be required to search for and provide further responsive documents.

Background

On August 13, 2001, Erik Ringelberg, on behalf of KYNF, submitted a FOIA request for "All written communications (including but not limited to: emails, memos, faxes, reports, minutes, and personal notes) between DOE-ID, EM-50, and ATG regarding:

1. Legal permit status of the ATG plasma melter/vitrifier.
2. Interpretations of the ATG plasma melter/vitrifier as an incinerator.
3. Any issues with air monitoring and compliance with ATG plasma melter/vitrifier.
4. The efficacy of the ATG plasma melter/vitrifier air pollution control system.
5. The proposed testing and/or use of INEEL waste at the ATG plasma melter/vitrifier.
6. The proposed volumes, and waste types of INEEL waste for testing and/or use at the ATG plasma melter/vitrifier."

Request Letter dated August 13, 2001, from Erik Ringelberg to Nicole Brooks, Freedom of Information Officer, DOE-ID (Request Letter). Mr. Ringelberg was specifically interested in documents to assist the public in understanding the relationship between DOE and its contractor, and to better the public's understanding of what may happen with waste and its treatment in relation to the melter/vitrifier. Id.

On September 18, 2001, DOE-ID e-mailed Mr. Ringelberg and advised him they were working on his requests. E-mail dated September 18, 2001, from Ms. Brooks to Mr. Ringelberg (E-mail Reply to Requests). Ms. Brooks estimated to KYNF that DOE-ID would have a response to their requests on approximately November 9, 2001. Id.

On November 26, 2001, DOE-ID provided KYNF with five responsive documents in response to Requests 1, 3, 4, 5, and 6, but indicated they had found no responsive documents for Request 2. Determination Letter dated November 26, 2001, from Ms. Brooks to Mr. Ringleberg (Determination Letter).

In response to the Determination Letter from DOE-ID, Mr. Ringelberg filed this Appeal, saying he wanted to obtain a precise determination of why DOE-ID denied elements of his original request, and to request a further and in-depth examination of DOE and DOE contractor files. Appeal Letter dated December 12, 2001, from Mr. Ringelberg to the Director of OHA (Appeal Letter). In support of his Appeal, Mr. Ringelberg first questions the validity of DOE-ID's determination because DOE-ID provided its response past the statutory deadline. Id. He also states he believes the response provided to KYNF was incomplete. Id. Mr. Ringelberg argues that the documents provided in response to Request 1 contained only particular pages of what was requested, with no explanation as to why the entire document was not provided. Id. Regarding Request 2, Mr. Ringelberg argues that the DOE's response was deficient because DOE-ID did not specify why responsive documents had not been found. Id. Concerning Request 3, Mr. Ringelberg states that DOE-ID provided a document entitled "Broad Spectrum Contacts Current Status, updated August 2001," but argues that this document contains no information related to this request regarding the testing and use of INEEL waste at the ATG facility. Id. With respect to Request 4, Mr. Ringelberg argues that DOE-ID provided information regarding waste acceptance from Hanford, when KYNF was requesting information regarding waste sent to Hanford or ATG. Id.

Analysis

When an agency conducts a search under the FOIA, it must undertake a search that is "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Weisberg v. United States Dep't of Justice, 705 F.2d 1344, 1351 (D.C. Cir. 1983). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

In response to the Appeal, we contacted DOE-ID to determine the scope of its search. Telephone Memoranda dated January 3, 2002 and January 11, 2002 (Telephone Memoranda), and E-mail Message dated January 11, 2002 (E-mail Message). DOE-ID informed us it conducted a reasonable search in all possible locations, for any documents related to the requests submitted by KYNF. (Telephone Memoranda). As an initial matter, DOE-ID stated that although it did issue its determination approximately three months after it received the request, it informed KYNF via an e- mail message dated September 18, 2001, that it was currently processing other requests filed by KYNF, and would begin the search for the current request as soon as possible. (E-Mail Message).

Although the Determination Letter does not detail DOE-ID's search process, DOE-ID personnel thoroughly explained to us the search process involved with the six separate items in KYNF's current request. (Telephone Memoranda). First, where KYNF asserts that it only received portions of the document "ATG Proposal Number 2000-03-010," DOE-ID stated that it provided only the responsive portions of the document to KYNF. Id. DOE-ID stated it will provide the remaining portions of the document if KYNF so desires. Id. Secondly, DOE-ID stated that it located one document it did not provide to KYNF addressed from the State of Washington to ATG, but since this document was not generated by the DOE, nor addressed to the DOE, it should be released by the State of Washington. Id. DOE-ID stated that Mr. Ringelberg had previously indicated to them that he had filed an information request with the State of Washington for this information. Id. Thirdly, in response to KYNF's assertion that DOE-ID provided a document entitled "Broad Spectrum Contacts Current Status, updated August 2001," which contained no responsive information related to the testing and use of INEEL waste at the ATG facility, DOE-ID maintains the document is responsive. Moreover, it stated that they did locate other responsive documents, but these documents are intra-agency, pre-decisional recommendations and opinions of DOE employees covered under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Id. DOE-ID indicated it would be willing to segregate the pre-decisional information from the factual information and provide the releasable information in these documents to KYNF. Id.

Finally, DOE-ID stated that after the date of KYNF's original request, a letter was written in response to an information request from the State of Washington to DOE-ID. Id. DOE-ID stated that this letter, dated September 5, 2001, discusses information that may be responsive to KYNF's current request. Id. DOE-ID stated that it would now provide this letter to KYNF as a summary of INEEL's plans for having waste treated at the ATG facility. Id. DOE-ID stated that this letter was not provided to KYNF because it came into existence after KYNF's original request. Id.

Accordingly, it appears that DOE-ID provided responsive documents in response to five of KYNF's six requests. The only request where no documentation was provided was Request 2. In relation to this request, DOE-ID searched all of its electronic records and its hand files. We are convinced DOE- ID searched in all possible locations and conducted a reasonable search. In relation to the five other requests, we are also convinced DOE-ID conducted a reasonable search, which produced responsive material to KYNF. However, since the filing of the Appeal, DOE-ID has obtained further documentation responsive to Mr. Ringelberg's request. DOE-ID has agreed to provide this documentation to KYNF. DOE-ID has also indicated it is willing to provide KYNF with the entire document where it had provided only the portion it believed to contain responsive information. DOE- ID has also indicated it will extract protected information from a document found to be responsive to Mr. Ringelberg's request, and provide that document as well. Despite DOE-ID's willingness to provide further documentation to KYNF, we find that DOE-ID previously searched all possible locations, and provided all relevant documentation to KYNF. Thus, we find the entire search to be "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents."

Nevertheless, in addition to the actions to which DOE-ID has committed to perform, it must locate and review the document addressed to ATG from the State of Washington. A document in DOE's possession is an agency record, regardless of how it was created or obtained, and is therefore subject to disclosure under the FOIA. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3); United States Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Keep Yellowstone Nuclear Free on December 17, 2001, OHA Case Number VFA-0709, is hereby denied in part and granted to the extent set forth in Paragraph 2.

(2) This case is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Idaho Operations Office to complete its processing of this request in accordance with the above Decision, and to issue a new Determination Letter.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Martin Becker

Date of Filing: December 18, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0710

On December 18, 2001, Martin Becker (Becker) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In that determination, SR released redacted copies of responsive documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the documents in their entirety.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Only FOIA Exemption 4 is at issue in the instant case.

I. Background

Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) is the management and operating contractor for SR. Westinghouse Safety Management Solutions (WSMS), created in 1997 by WSRC, rents office space in Building 3 of Centennial Corporate Center, located at 1993 S. Centennial Avenue in Aiken, South Carolina. The building, part of an "office park," is owned by Centennial, L.L.C. (Centennial). In September 2000, Becker submitted a FOIA request to SR for "any documents reflecting any notice of election to extend any Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) or affiliate lease of the premise at Centennial Corporate Center." See Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,133 (2001) (Becker I). In response to this request, SR sent Becker a determination stating that the responsive records were the property of the contractor and were not agency records. Letter from SR to Becker (October 26, 2000). Becker filed an appeal on November 13, 2000, the first of five appeals that he has filed in response to this request. Becker I. On December 11, 2000, OHA granted the appeal and determined that the lease may be subject to disclosure under DOE regulations, specifically 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

On December 21, 2000, SR issued a new determination letter to Becker and stated that the responsive documents did not exist. Becker filed another appeal on February 7, 2001, insisting that WSRC must have a copy of the lease. OHA agreed, and ordered DOE to provide a copy of the non-exempt portions of the lease to Becker. Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,153 (2001) (Becker II).

SR issued a third determination letter denying Becker's request and he again appealed on April 16, 2001.

OHA found that the lease was subject to disclosure under DOE's contractor records regulations, and for the third time granted Becker's appeal and remanded the case to SR yet again for disclosure of all responsive, non-exempt material. Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,187 2001) (Becker III).

On October 18, 2001, SR released a redacted copy of the third amendment to the lease, but denied in part Becker's request for information. On October 29, 2001, Becker appealed SR's determination. He argued, and OHA agreed, that SR had applied the wrong standard to its analysis of the issue. Becker argued that the material was submitted involuntarily to WSRC, and that WSRC must prove that disclosure would cause substantial competitive harm to its competitive position. OHA again granted Becker's appeal, and remanded the matter to SR for processing under the appropriate test, found in National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). See Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,201 (2001) (Becker IV).

On December 10, 2001, SR sent Becker a fifth determination along with three additional responsive documents: the lease, the first amendment to the lease, and the second amendment to the lease. Letter from SR to Becker (December 10, 2001) (Determination). However, SR withheld the following portions of the responsive documents under FOIA Exemption 4, this time applying the National Parks test: rate per square foot, rentable square feet (space actually rented by WSMS), lease term, expiration date, lease renewal option period, monthly rent, security deposit, phone service reimbursement, annual minimum rent, total rentable area in building, and utility reimbursement. Id. SR claimed that the withheld information was confidential commercial information and if released would substantially harm the competitive position of both parties to the contract. Id. Becker filed this Appeal on December 18, 2001, and argued that (1) there is no evidence that disclosure of the responsive material will impair the government's ability to obtain future documents, and (2) there is no competitive harm to the provider of the lease because Centennial owns the only office space in Aiken that is suitable for WSMS' offices. Becker asked OHA to remand this Appeal to SR with directions to release the lease documents in their entirety. Letter from Becker to OHA (December 18, 2001) (Appeal). [(1)]

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n. v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks).

Under the National Parks test, the agency must first determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criterion. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997) (appeal pending). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has specifically held that the term "commercial," as used in the FOIA, includes anything "pertaining or relating to or dealing with commerce." American Airlines, Inc. v. National Mediation Bd., 588 F.2d 863, 870 (2d Cir. 1978). Thus, we find that the lease terms, rates and square footage withheld by SR are commercial information. Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). We find that SR obtained this material from a person, WSRC, because the FOIA considers a corporation a person for the purposes of Exemption 4. See William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999).

Finally, the agency must determine whether the withheld information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993) (Critical Mass). In Becker IV, we found that the material at issue in the instant case was submitted involuntarily to SR by WSMS, a subcontractor to WSRC, based on WSRC's contract with DOE. See Becker IV. Under Exemption 4, in order to withhold information that has been involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Using the "competitive harm" prong of the National Parks test, SR withheld the following items from the lease and its amendments: rate per square foot, rentable square feet (space actually rented by WSMS), lease term, expiration date, lease renewal option period, monthly rent, security deposit, phone service reimbursement, annual minimum rent, total rentable area in building, and utility reimbursement. Determination Letter at 1. SR alleges that release of the withheld information is likely to cause substantial competitive harm to WSMS and its landlord Centennial. Id. SR goes on to state that "[a] competitor could use the release of these lease terms to easily determine how to adjust its own lease rates to offer more favorable terms than [Centennial] and/or limit the ability of WSMS to negotiate for space in the future. WSMS and [Centennial] could be limited to rates no more favorable than those found in the current lease." Letter from SR to OHA (December 28, 2001).

B. Becker's Arguments

First, Becker argues that Centennial has no competition in Aiken, South Carolina. Appeal at 1. He contends that even though there is another office building in Aiken with 30,000 to 50,000 square feet of space (a size similar to Becker's estimate of the area of WSMS' current office space), that building should not be considered in a competitive analysis because WSMS is growing and could not keep all of its offices in one location if it leased space in that building. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Becker and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 15, 2001). He insists that Aiken is the only city that should be considered a viable option for the location of WSMS' offices, because the closest cities (North Augusta, South Carolina and Augusta, Georgia) are very different real estate markets that were previously considered and rejected by WSMS in its search for an office site.[(2)] Becker also alleges that WSRC or its predecessor made a commitment to SR to keep its offices in Aiken. Memorandum of telephone conversation with Becker (April 22, 2002).

Second, Becker contends that WSMS has no competition because WSRC, its parent, created WSMS solely to serve its own business purposes, thereby giving WSMS a monopoly on all work involving WSRC. Therefore, he argues, WSMS has no competition for the work it performs for WSRC.[(3)] He states that the disclosure of the redacted information in the lease would not cause any competitive harm to the contract between WSMS and WSRC, nor could a competitor use those figures to determine what WSMS charges WSRC for its services at SR. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Becker and Valerie Vance Adeyeye (April 22, 2002). Third, Becker submits that the information that he is requesting is "stale" because of its age, and thus its disclosure could not cause substantial competitive harm to either of the parties to the lease. Voice mail message from Becker to W. Schwartz, OHA (April 14, 2002). [(4)]

C. Submitters' Comments

As is customary in an Exemption 4 case, OHA extended an opportunity to both WSMS and Centennial to state their views as to whether the responsive information should be released. Both parties submitted responses as follows.

1. WSMS's Response

WSMS submitted a statement claiming that it faces competition "on a daily basis for various commercial and government opportunities. . . ." Electronic mail message from Matt Alan, Esq., WSMS to SR (January 15, 2002). We find this brief sentence conclusory. See Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food and Drug Administration, 185 F.3d 898, 906 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm cannot support withholding responsive material). However, we are familiar with WSMS and its operations, and the WSMS website www.wxsms.com presents information on several contracts that the company was recently awarded in competitions. WSMS also argues that a competitor with access to rental payments, the rentable square footage, and telephone improvement reimbursements could use this information to identify a specific indirect cost. Id. WSMS further responds that the security deposit and broker information could, if disclosed, be copied by a competitor to negate a competitive advantage. Id. According to WSMS, a competitor could use the lease start date, term, and option periods to identify a period of time to which a specific indirect cost applies, and could use the total lease cost to identify an indirect cost and profit margin. Id.

2. Centennial's Response

In response to Becker's arguments, Centennial states that it has "numerous competitors in Aiken, North Augusta, and Augusta." Electronic mail message from Centennial to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 8, 2002). Centennial also says that it owns and manages in Aiken only. Electronic mail message from Centennial to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 5, 2002). One Aiken competitor, Centre South, has a vacant 40,000 square foot building. Electronic mail message from Centennial to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 8, 2002). According to Centennial, the two companies compete "on every occasion for every potential lease." Id. Centennial also lists the BASF building in North Augusta (150,000 square feet) as a potential competitor, and further submits that there is a substantial amount of "class A office space in large blocks that is currently available for lease" in Augusta. Id.

Centennial further informs us that, according to their tenants, the difference in the commute to Aiken, North Augusta and Augusta is "negligible." Id. Some of its clients had considered Augusta but chose Aiken. Id. According to Centennial, they are "at this moment in serious negotiations regarding another lease," and disclosure of the redacted information could seriously harm this negotiation and give its competitor an unfair advantage. Id.; electronic mail message from Centennial to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 5, 2002). Centennial greatly fears the competitive disadvantages that would result from the release of the specifics of its rates and terms to the public or to the tenants in its office campus. Id.

D. Competitive Harm Analysis

This office has conducted a de novo review of this matter. We find that actual competition exists for both parties, and that disclosure of all of the redacted information would cause substantial competitive harm to Centennial. We cannot, however, conclude that WSMS would suffer substantial harm to its competitive position if the withheld data were released.

1. Centennial

First, we find that Centennial has presented sufficient evidence that it faces competition not only in Aiken but in the entire Central Savannah River Area (CSRA) for WSMS' business. Centennial has identified by name one other property in Aiken that is not owned by Centennial and that could house most or all of WSMS' operations. Further, we have no solid evidence that WSMS requires all of its offices to be in Aiken and in the same building, nor has Becker offered any. We also have no real evidence that WSMS has committed to keeping its offices in Aiken. Centennial has also identified competitors in North Augusta and Augusta.[(5)] As additional proof that the CSRA could be considered one metropolitan area, SR informs us that approximately 40% of its employees live in Georgia, and the remainder live in South Carolina. Telephone conversation between Timothy Fischer, SR, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 8, 2002). Thus, we agree with Centennial that the pertinent market area includes the entire CSRA.

In addition, we conclude that Centennial has presented evidence that disclosure of the redacted information could lead to substantial competitive harm. Centennial is currently in negotiations for another sizable lease, and makes a valid argument that releasing its lease terms and rates on the WSMS space to the public, especially at this time and in this limited market area, could derail those negotiations. In a similar case, the State of Utah submitted a FOIA request to the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) of the Department of the Interior seeking disclosure of the terms of a lease allowing a group of electric utility companies to store spent nuclear fuel on land belonging to an Indian tribe. State of Utah v. Department of the Interior, 256 F.3d 967 (10th Cir. 2001) (Utah). As in the instant case, the BIA released a copy of the lease with certain important sections redacted (including provisions governing the termination of the lease, lease payment, and payment of rent and interest). Id. at 968. Utah sued BIA for full disclosure of the lease terms, and lost at trial and on appeal. Id. at 970 (stating that release of redacted lease information could put party in a weaker position at the bargaining table in negotiating future deals because prior business agreements would be in public domain). Centennial, in its statements, presented arguments against disclosure that contained a similar level of detail as the affidavits that the Utah court found legally sufficient. Id. at 970-971.

Thus, we find that Centennial has presented evidence demonstrating the existence of potential economic harm. See Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food and Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (stating that evidence demonstrating the existence of potential economic harm is sufficient); William Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999) (upholding redaction of negotiated payment equations in a lease between Shell Pipeline Corporation and the DOE).

2. WSMS

As an initial matter, we find that WSMS faces actual competition for its services, as shown by the list of contracts awarded to WSMS after successful competition against other firms. See Section C.1., supra. We also find that Becker's attempted focus on competition for services provided under the IWR is too narrow and does not afford WSMS the protection intended by Exemption 4. WSMS faces competition in the larger market for its services. However, even though we conclude that WSMS could suffer an undefined level of competitive harm if the documents were disclosed in their entirety, it is not clear that WSMS would suffer substantial competitive harm if the redacted information were released. Further, we need not address this issue since we have concluded that Centennial would suffer substantial competitive harm if SR released the redacted information to the public.

3. Analysis of Becker's Supplemental Arguments

We reject Becker's supplemental argument that the release of the information he requests could not cause competitive harm to either submitter because the material is "stale." See Sec. II.B., supra. The lease and its amendments were signed between 1997 and 2001. Thus the responsive data are fairly recent, between 1 and 5 years old. In addition, SR does not believe that the information is stale or outdated because it states that the terms have not changed significantly over the period of the lease. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Timothy Fischer, SR and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 22, 2002). See Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation, 28 DOE ¶ 80,105 (2000) (finding that 5 to 8 year old responsive information is not "stale" because the information did not change significantly from year to year). (6)

In conclusion, we find that WSMS and Centennial have presented evidence of actual competition in the relevant markets. In addition, Centennial has presented sufficient evidence that disclosure of the redacted information would cause substantial competitive harm to its operations. See Utah, 256 F.3d at 971 (submitter must present evidence that actual competition exists and that disclosure would lead to substantial competitive injury). The redacted information is clearly proprietary to Centennial and thus exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

E. The Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. However, in cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Chicago Power Group, 23 DOE ¶ 80,125 at 80,560 (1993). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Martin Becker on December 18, 2001, OHA Case No. VFA-0710, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Date: May 2, 2002

1. During the processing of this Appeal, Becker requested that the Appeal be held in abeyance until March 8, 2002. Electronic mail message from Becker to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 25, 2002).

2. Aiken, North Augusta, and Augusta are located in an area called the Central Savannah River Area.

3. WSMS provides support to WSRC via a contractual document referred to as an "Interworks Requisition (IWR)." WSRC pays for the services on a cost-reimbursement basis, and then charges those costs to DOE. Becker III.

4. The arguments described in this paragraph were submitted by Becker after the filing of this Appeal. However, we will address his arguments in the interest of administrative efficiency, given the long history of appeals in this case.

5. The DOE-WSRC contract does not permit WSRC to bind itself in perpetuity to a leasehold. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Timothy Fischer, SR and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (April 22, 2002).

6. Becker also alleged that Centennial did not face competition because a competing landlord, if one existed, would approach WSMS directly, ask WSMS how much it pays Centennial for rent, and then offer WSMS a better price. Voice mail message from Becker (April 17, 2002). We disagree. Even though this scenario is possible, we cannot assume that WSMS would willingly disclose its rental payments under those conditions. In fact, this scenario supports Centennial's premise that public disclosure of its lease terms would enable a competitor to undercut Centennial and thus lure away an important customer.

Case No. VFA-0711

March 1, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Mr. Dallas Register

Date of Filing:January 8, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0711

On January 8, 2002, Mr. Dallas Register filed an appeal of a determination issued on October 30, 2001, by the Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. As detailed below, we shall deny the appeal filed by Mr. Register because the records at issue are not agency records.

Background

Mr. Register filed a FOIA request with DOE seeking documents related to a comparative analysis study. On October 30, 2001, the Albuquerque FOIA Officer issued a determination in response to Mr. Register's request which indicated that the DOE Kansas City Area Office had been unable to locate any documents that were responsive to the FOIA request. The Albuquerque FOIA Officer also indicated that:

It has been determined that the documents you are requesting are records contained in the legal files of Honeywell FM&T at the Kansas City Plant, are in the possession and control of Honeywell FM&T and are, therefore, not ?agency records' subject to the provisions of the FOIA. ?Agency records' are defined as records in a federal agency's possession and control at the time of the FOIA request. However, pursuant to U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) policy, records in the possession and control of a management and operating contractor, such as those mentioned above, will be made available by DOE when the contract specifically provides that such records are the property of the Government. However, the contract between the DOE and Honeywell FM&T clearly defines the records that you have requested as belonging to them and not the DOE. Accordingly, these records are also not subject to release under DOE policy.

Mr. Register appealed this determination on the grounds that the documents he requested should be in the DOE Contracting Officer's file because they are necessary to establish the contractor's compliance with the "substantially equivalent benefits" requirement contained in DOE's Request for Proposal (RFP) for managing the Kansas City Plant. Mr. Register also claimed that Albuquerque should have provided the requested document to him because the contract between the contractor and DOE provides that DOE has the right to inspect and copy all records acquired or generated by Honeywell FM&T (Honeywell) under this contract.(1)

Analysis

For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that the records in question are not "agency records" and are also not subject to release under the DOE regulations. Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the requested documents are "agency records," and thus subject to the FOIA, under the criteria set out by the federal courts. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f) (describing the scope of the term “agency” under the FOIA). The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., BMF Enterprises, 21 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1991); William Albert Hewgley, 19 DOE ¶ 80,120 (1989); Judith M. Gibbs, 16 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1987) (Gibbs). That analysis involves a determination of (I) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Gibbs, 16 DOE at 80,595.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The courts have identified certain factors to consider in determining whether to regard an entity as an agency for purposes of federal law. In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the . . . agency receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day- to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Id. at 815. In other words, an organization will be considered a federal agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham). See also Washington Research Project, Inc. v. HEW, 504 F.2d 238, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 963 (1975) (degree of independent governmental decision-making authority considered); Rocap v. Indiek, 539 F.2d 174 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

Under its contractual relationship with the DOE, Honeywell is the contractor responsible for maintaining and operating the Kansas City Plant. Contract No. DE-AC04-01AL66850. While DOE obtained Honeywell's services and exercises general control over the contract work, it does not supervise the contractor’s day-to-day operations. We therefore conclude that Honeywell is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

Although Honeywell is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, the records requested by Mr. Register could have become "agency records" if they had been obtained by DOE and were within the agency’s control at the time the firm made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989); see Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. In order to determine whether DOE had obtained these records and whether they were in the control of the agency at the time of Mr. Register's FOIA request, we contacted Terry Apodaca, a FOIA Officer at Albuquerque, about the search that had been conducted for responsive documents. Ms. Apodaca informed us that she had asked the Contracting Officer in the Albuquerque Office of Contracts and Procurement to search for documents that were responsive to Mr. Register's FOIA request, and that the Contracting Officer in Albuquerque told her that:

they knew [that the record requested by Mr. Register] was a record belonging to Honeywell . . . and that Honeywell never sent them a copy but in order to be responsive and to show good faith, they searched their administrative files on Honeywell. No responsive documents could be located.

Ms. Apodaca also indicated that the Kansas City Area Office had searched the administrative files of its Office of the Director and Legal Counsel, but could not locate any documents that were responsive to Mr. Register's FOIA request.

We also contacted Patrick Currier, counsel for the Kansas City Area Office, to determine whether Honeywell had submitted the documents sought by Mr. Register to the DOE Contracting Officer. Mr. Currier explained that Honeywell was the only entity that submitted a proposal for the management of the Kansas City Plant, and that DOE had awarded the contract to Honeywell without discussion. Mr. Currier also told us that he had participated in a discussion about "substantially equivalent benefits" between Honeywell and DOE human resources people in Albuquerque and Kansas City. Mr. Currier indicated that this discussion occurred after the contract was awarded and, at the time of this discussion, DOE did not have a copy of the documents sought by Mr. Register. Mr. Currier also indicated that, after he received the FOIA request, he checked with DOE human resources people in Albuquerque and Kansas City and confirmed that they had never had a copy of the requested records. Mr. Currier also informed us that counsel for Honeywell told him that the documents at issue were not paid for by DOE funds but were paid for by Honeywell's main office. Based on the above information, we find that the records sought by Mr. Register had not been obtained by DOE at the time of the FOIA request. As such, the documents sought by Mr. Register never became "agency records."(2)

Even though these records are not agency records, they may still be subject to release under the DOE regulations if "a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). Although the contract between Honeywell and DOE contains such a provision, the provision is inapplicable because the requested records were not acquired or generated by the contractor in the performance of the contract.(3) Accordingly, we find that the records sought by Mr. Register are neither "agency records" within the meaning of the FOIA nor subject to release under the DOE regulations.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal that Dallas Register filed on January 8, 2002, OHA Case No. VFA-0711, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought either in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

(1)Because we hold that the records at issue are not agency records and that the contractual provision on inspection and copying contained in the contract between Honeywell and DOE is inapplicable, it is unnecessary to determine whether the release of the documents sought by Mr. Register would violate the privacy rights of other individuals.

(2)Mr. Register also contends that the records he seeks are agency records because, under the contract with Honeywell, DOE has the right to inspect and copy these records. We disagree. It is clear that DOE's ability to access and copy records that are owned by DOE contractors does not transform such records into agency records under the FOIA. See The Cincinnati Enquirer, 26 DOE ¶ 80,205(1997).

(3)We also note that because these documents were not acquired or generated by the contractor under the contract, DOE is not entitled to inspect and copy these documents under Section 113(d) of the contract between Honeywell and DOE.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Glen Milner

Date of Filing: December 28, 2001

Case Number: VFA-0712

Glen Milner (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of the Navy (the Navy) issued on October 31, 2001. In that determination, the Navy denied in part a request for information that the Appellant submitted on March 25, 1999, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. In this Determination, the Navy released four documents. However, the Navy withheld portions of each document. That information was withheld as the result of reviews of the documents by the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of Declassification and the Navy, after which they determined that the documents contained classified information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the information that the DOE withheld from those documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On March 25, 1999, the Appellant requested "all information regarding the safety of Trident Missiles and Trident nuclear weapons . . . including W76 and W88 nuclear warheads." The Navy responded to the request by identifying four responsive documents to the Appellant and releasing portions of each. However, the Navy withheld from release portions of each document pursuant to (1) the Navy's determination that this information warranted protection from disclosure under Exemptions 1, 3 and 5 of the FOIA and (2) the DOE's determination that some of the withheld information was classified and therefore warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3.

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the withheld information described above. In his Appeal, the Appellant contends that > [I]nformation was improperly withheld under the Freedom of Information Act. I believe that information was withheld or deleted that is neither in the interest of national defense or foreign policy, in the interest of the free and candid exchange of ideas, or exempted under atomic energy defense programs.

Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990).

The Acting Director of the Office of Security (the Director), has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director reviewed those portions of the requested documents for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

According to the Director, the DOE determined on review that the withheld portions of the four documents contain information that has been classified as Restricted Data (RD) or Formerly Restricted Data (FRD) under the DOE's current classification guidance. Under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, RD and FRD are forms of classified information, and are therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3. The material that the DOE continues to withhold under Exemption 3 of the FOIA is identified in the margin of the documents as "DOE (b)(3)." The Director has also informed us that some of the material the DOE withheld from the documents may now be released. The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Marshall Combs, Acting Director, Office of Security, Department of Energy. The Navy has also reviewed the four documents and determined that it will continue to withhold all of the information it previously withheld under Exemptions 1, 3 and 5. The denying official for the Navy's withholdings is Rear Admiral Alan S. Thompson, Director, Supply, Ordinance and Logistics Operations Division, Office of the Chief of Naval Operations. The material that the Navy continues to withhold under Exemptions 1, 3 and 5 is identified in the margin of the documents as "DON b(1)", "DON b(3)" or "DON b(5)."

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires DOE to continue withholding significant portions of the documents under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the documents that the Director has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Director has reduced the extent of the previously deleted portions to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations. Therefore, the DOE will release newly redacted versions of the four documents reviewed in this Appeal to the Appellant under separate cover. Accordingly, the Appellant's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Glen Milner on December 28, 2001, Case No. VFA-0712, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) Newly redacted versions of the documents in which additional information is released will be provided to Glen Milner.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Mark J. Chugg

Date of Filing: January 17, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0714

On January 17, 2002, Mark J. Chugg (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on January 9, 2002, by the Department of Energy's Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In that determination, OHA responded to a Request for Information filed by the Appellant on December 4, 2001, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OHA's determination withheld personally identifiable information from the Appellant. This information was withheld under FOIA Exemption 7(C) and Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5). This Appeal, if granted, would require OHA to release the information it withheld.

The Appellant had filed a complaint with OHA under 10 C.F.R. Part 708 alleging that his employer had retaliated against him for whistleblowing. The complaint was then investigated by an OHA attorney who issued a report of investigation on October 10, 2001. A copy of the report of investigation and the case file on which it was based was provided to the Appellant in accordance with 10 C.F.R. § 708.23(b). However, certain information that identified sources used in the investigation was not provided to the Appellant. (1) The Appellant subsequently filed a request for information seeking the withheld information with the DOE's Freedom of Information and Privacy Division, which referred the Appellant's request for information to OHA on December 4, 2001. On January 9, 2002, OHA issued a determination letter in which it withheld the requested information under FOIA Exemption 7(C) and Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5), citing the "obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation or other personal intrusions." Determination Letter at 1. The Appellant filed the present Appeal on January 17, 2001, seeking the information withheld by the January 9, 2002 determination letter. (2)

The withheld information is personally identifiable information that specifically concerns the Appellant and is contained in a system of records from which records are retrieved. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Therefore, the Privacy Act and the FOIA mandate its release to the Appellant unless the agency can show that it can be withheld under (a) an applicable exemption to the Privacy Act disclosure provisions, and (b) an applicable exemption to the FOIA disclosure provisions. Therefore, we will consider the present appeal under both acts.

The Privacy Act

OHA withheld the information which identifies investigative sources under Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5).

That exemption provides:

Nothing in this section shall allow an individual access to information compiled in reasonable anticipation of a civil action and proceeding.

5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(5) (Exemption (d)(5)). (3) The D.C. Circuit has previously upheld an agency's withholding, under Exemption (d)(5), of witness notes and statements collected by a government attorney during an investigation of allegations of retaliation against a whistleblower. In Martin v. Office of Special Counsel, 819 F.2d 1181(D.C. Cir. 1987) (Martin), the D.C. Circuit found that such information is properly withheld under Exemption (d)(5) when it is collected in reasonable anticipation of a "quasi-judicialadministrative hearing." Id. at 1187-88. The D.C. Circuit defined a quasi-judicial administrative hearing as an administrative proceeding with three specific attributes: the proceeding must (1) be adversarial in nature, (2) be subject to the rules of evidence, and (3) include discovery proceedings. Id. at 1188. The DOE's Whistleblower Protection Regulations provide for a hearing that is adversarial in nature, includes discovery, and is subject to some evidentiary rules. 10 C.F.R. Part 708. Accordingly, we find that the DOE Whistleblower hearings are quasi-judicial in nature.

Since the withheld information was compiled in reasonable anticipation of a quasi-judicial administrative hearing, it is properly withheld under Exemption (d)(5).

The FOIA

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. See Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 7(C) is at issue in the instant case.

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

The threshold test for withholding information under Exemption 7(C) is whether such information is compiled as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. FBI v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982). The scope of Exemption 7 encompasses enforcement of both civil and criminal statutes. Rural Housing Alliance v. Department of Agriculture, 498 F.2d 73, 81 & n.46 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In the instant case, OHA is charged with investigating allegations of retaliation against whistleblowers. 10 C.F.R. Part 708. OHA is therefore a classic example of an organization with a clear law enforcement mandate. In the present case, the OHA documents were created during an investigation of a whistleblower complaint filed by the Appellant. Consequently, the OHA documents at issue were clearly created for a law enforcement purpose.

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. See Ripskis v. Department of Housing and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3; Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-64 (D.D.C. 1990).

We find that there is a privacy interest here. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals whose names are contained in investigative files. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991); Cucarro v. Secretary of Labor, 770 F.2d 355, 359 (3d Cir. 1985). We have followed the courts' lead. James L. Schwab, 21 DOE 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE 80,129 (1990). Therefore, we find that release of the individuals' identities or information that could identify these individuals would result in significant invasions of privacy.

In Reporters Committee, the Supreme Court narrowed the scope of the public interest in the context of the FOIA. The Court found that only information which contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the Government is within the public interest as that term is used in the FOIA. Id. We fail to see how release of the identities of individuals in the present case would inform the public about the operations and activities of Government. Accordingly, we find that there is little or no public interest in disclosure of the individuals' identities or information that could identify these individuals.

After weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against an insubstantial or non- existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing the individuals' identities would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Accordingly, we find that information that would reveal the identities of the individuals was properly withheld under Exemption 7(C).

Conclusion

Since the withheld information was properly withheld by OHA under FOIA Exemption 7(C) and Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5), we find that the present appeal should be denied.

While we are strongly committed to keeping the public fully informed about DOE actions, we are also mindful of the need to preserve the privacy rights of individuals as well as the integrity of the whistleblower investigation process. By releasing the responsive documents with only those redactions necessary to prevent identification of specific individuals, which is what has been done here, the agency can provide as much information as possible while safeguarding individual privacy rights.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal under the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act filed by Mark J. Chugg on January 17, 2002 (Case Number VFA-0714) is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Anjan Majumder

Date of Filing: February 11, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0715

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Anjan Majunder from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Idaho Operations Office. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In the determination, the Idaho Operations Office released some responsive information. The Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release a specific document to Mr. Majumder.

I. Background

Mr. Majumder filed a request in which he sought information concerning the criteria that Bechtel BWXT Idaho LLC at Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory (BWXT) used to make the determination as to which employees to layoff under BWXT's involuntary separation plan.

On December 10, 2001, the Idaho Operations Office issued a determination which provided Mr. Majumder with a copy of a document entitled "Process for Making Selection Decisions." He was informed that BWXT used the analysis criteria contained in that document in the layoff determination process. He was further informed that a copy of the completed evaluation analysis for each of the employees was never provided to DOE and as such is not an "agency record" subject to the FOIA. See February 12, 2002 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Nicole Brooks, Idaho Operations Office, and Toni Brown, OHA. On appeal Mr. Majumder seeks a copy of the evaluation analysis BWXT used in its decision to lay him off.

II. Analysis

The FOIA applies to "records" that are maintained by "agencies" within the executive branch of government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). Consequently, the FOIA is applicable only where the requested document may be considered an "agency record."

The language of the FOIA does not define the term "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting the phrase "agency records," we have applied a two-step analysis for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as BWXT, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). BWXT is an entity that does not fit into any of these categories. However, the courts have found that some outside entities should still be considered agencies for FOIA purposes. The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 190 & N. 11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, although BWXT was a contractor for DOE, the DOE did not conduct extensive, detailed, and day-to-day supervision of BWXT's operations. We therefore conclude that BWXT is not an "agency" within the meaning of the FOIA.

Although BWXT is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, its records relevant to Mr. Majumder's request could become "agency records" if the DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time Mr. Majumder made his FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In this case, the completed evaluation analysis regarding Mr. Majumder was not in the DOE's control or possession at the time of the request. See February 14, 2002 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dale Claflin, BWXT's FOIA Representative, and Toni Brown, OHA. Rather, it was found in BWXT's files. Based on these facts, the document does not qualify as an "agency record" under the test set forth in Tax Analysts.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the document in question is the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

We therefore next look to the contract between the DOE and BWXT to determine the status of the requested record.

Contract No. DE-AC07-99ID13727, Section I.61, Paragraph (b) of the contract states that the "following records are considered the property of the contractor . . . (1) Employment-related records, . . . except for those records described by the contract as being maintained in Privacy Act System of records." The record sought here is not contained in any Privacy Act system of records described in the contract. See Contract No. DE-AC07-99ID13727, Section H.9. Consequently, it is a contractor-owned record, if it exists, and not "the property of the Government." We therefore find that the record sought by Mr. Majumder is neither an "agency record" within the meaning of the FOIA nor subject to release under the DOE regulations.

III. Conclusion

As stated above, Idaho stated in its determination letter that it did not have the document sought by Mr. Majumder. Nothing raised in Mr. Majumder's Appeal causes us to question Idaho's determination. Based on our findings above, we conclude that this document, if it does exist, would not be an agency record within the meaning of the FOIA, and would not be deemed DOE property by the contract. Consequently, we conclude that the document is not subject to release pursuant to the FOIA or DOE regulations. We will accordingly deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mr. Anjan Majumder, Case No, VFA-0715, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Dianne Taylor

Date of Filing: February 1, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0716

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by Dianne Taylor from a determination issued to her by the Freedom of Information Officer of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge). In this determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information that Ms. Taylor filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If we were to grant the Appeal, this matter would be remanded to Oak Ridge for a new search for documents responsive to her request.

Ms. Taylor's FOIA request, in which she seeks access to her deceased father's medical and personnel records, was originally filed with the DOE's Savannah River Operations Office. (1) After a search produced no responsive documents, Savannah River forwarded the request to Oak Ridge. It is Oak Ridge's response to the request that is the subject of this Appeal. Oak Ridge's search produced one responsive document, an index card which was sent to Ms. Taylor, containing the decedent's name, the letters DEC, the date "4-30-48," and a five digit number. In her Appeal, Ms Taylor challenges the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search for responsive documents.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to ascertain the scope of the search that was performed, we contacted Oak Ridge. See memorandum of March 7, 2002 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, Office of Hearings and Appeals, and Leah Ann Schmidlin, Oak Ridge. We were informed that the search was performed both manually and by computer, using the decedent's social security number. The search encompassed Oak Ridge's Records Holding Area, the Y-12, X-10 and K-25 facilities, and the East Tennessee Technology Park. Ms Schmidlin stated that she was unaware of any facility in which responsive documents were likely to be located that had not already been searched. Based on the information before us, we find that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the materials sought, and was therefore adequate. We will therefore deny Ms. Taylor's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Dianne Taylor in Case No. VFA-0716 is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0717

March 26, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: VerdaBelle C. Jones

Date of Filing: February 5, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0717

On February 5, 2002, VerdaBelle C. Jones, filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on January 8, 2002, by the Department of Energy's Richland's Operation Office (Richland). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mrs. Jones submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her Appeal, Mrs. Jones asserts that Richland did not provide her with responsive documents in its possession regarding her request for information.

I. Background

On September 24, 2001, Mrs. Jones filed a request for information in which she sought the medical and radiation exposure records of her deceased husband, Richard G. Jones. See October 19, 2001 Determination Letter at 1. On October 19, 2001, Richland issued a determination which stated it conducted a search of its files and located a summary of Mr. Jones' radiation exposure record. The summary included all of his Hanford Site dosimetry data and was generated from the site's comprehensive database for radiation exposure records, known as the Hanford Radiological Exposure Reporting System (REX). Id. In this determination letter Richland indicated that it did not include the supporting documents related to Mr. Jones' radiation exposure record (i.e., handwritten calculations, training rosters, yearly dose sheets, copies of punch cards, and personal radiation exposure history forms) all of which were previously entered in REX. Id. On January 8, 2002, Richland issued a second determination releasing the supporting material referred to in its October 19, 2001 determination letter.

On February 26, 2002, Mrs. Jones filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Mrs. Jones challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Richland Specifically, Mrs. Jones argues that Richland failed to provide her with "everything" it possesses regarding her husband. Mrs. Jones further contends that there are unexplained gaps in her husband's medical records. She believes Richland possesses additional information. Mrs. Jones asks that the OHA direct Richland to conduct a new search for additional responsive documents.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Richland to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed. As stated above, upon receiving Mrs. Jones' request for information, Richland conducted a search of the site's comprehensive database for radiation exposure records. Based on this search, Richland released a summary of Mrs. Jones' husband's radiation exposure record. In addition, Richland informed Mrs. Jones that a copy of her husband's medical record, maintained for the DOE by the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation (HEHF) would be forwarded to her from HEHF. Consequently, HEHF provided 702 pages of occupational health records to Mrs. Jones. According to Richland, HEHF conducted its search by name and social security number. We have ascertained that the records that the DOE and HEHF provided to Mrs. Jones are all the responsive records they located. Richland has informed us that HEHF would not possess private physician medical records as Mrs. Jones' Appeal suggests. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Sarah Prein, Richland, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (March 13, 2002). Given the facts presented to us, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Mrs. Jones' Request. Therefore, we must deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by VerdaBelle C. Jones, OHA Case No. VFA-0717, on February 26, 2002, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

March 7, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Shirley E. Kates

Date of Filing: February 6, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0718

Shirley E. Kates filed this Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination responded to a request for information she filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her Appeal, Kates challenges the adequacy of ORO's search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Kates submitted a request for:

any electronically-distributed or any hard copy list developed by any level of ORO's senior management between January 1, 2001 and the current time and which contains the names of DOE employees, including mine, that are or were targeted for elimination from the Federal government.

On September 24, 2001, ORO issued a determination stating that it had found no records responsive to Kates' request. Kates then filed the present Appeal.

In her Appeal, Kates contends that ORO's search was inadequate. She supports this claim by stating that during the week of March 26, 2001, she saw an e-mail version of a document within the scope of the request. She also stated that she saw, at or near the top of the e-mail, the name of a senior manager at ORO.

In addition, Kates states that she spoke with an employee of the Information Resource Management Division at ORO, who has access to tape backups of e-mail messages. The employee told Kates that he had not been asked to search the tape backups in connection with a search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. A FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and, in the event of an appeal, we will remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980).

In a case involving the adequacy of the agency's search, however, "the issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we therefore examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

We reviewed the search conducted by ORO in order to assess its adequacy. ORO identified three senior managers who would potentially know about the requested documents. Each of the three stated that, to the best of his or her knowledge, no responsive documents existed. ORO also contacted an administrative officer in the Human Resources Division at the Oak Ridge facility. The Human Resources Division reported that no responsive documents were found in its files. On the basis of these responses, ORO concluded that no responsive documents existed.

In addition, we contacted the senior manager, whose name Kates said she saw on the e-mail. We asked her about the e-mail message that Kates claimed to have seen. While the senior manager did recall receiving from the Human Resources Division a hard-copy list of employees who were expected to retire within three years, she stated that she had never seen a list like the one described by Kates.

We also contacted the FOIA office at ORO and were informed that, at the time the request was filed, ORO policy provided for retaining tape backups of e-mail for two weeks.(1) We find no reasonable basis, therefore, to remand this matter for a further search of the backup tapes.

III. Conclusion

Given the facts presented to us, we find that ORO conducted an adequate search that was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Kates' request. The senior manager whom Kates believed to have had a responsive document denied any knowledge of it. In addition, it is unlikely that a copy of the e-mail exists in the backup tapes, since the policy in effect at the time provided for the tapes to be retained for only two weeks. Therefore, we will deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Shirley E. Kates, Case No. VFA-0718, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. ENG. Services

Date of Filing: February 6, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0719

On February 6, 2002, R.E.V. ENG. Services filed an Appeal from a determination that the Freedom of Information Act/Privacy Act Division (FOIA/PA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on December 14, 2001.(1) In its determination, FOIA/PA categorized the Appellant as a commercial use requester. For the reasons set forth below, the Appeal will be denied.

I. Background

On August 29, 2001, the Appellant filed a FOIA request with FOIA/PA asking for "information pertaining to the Motion to Dismiss [Civil Action No. 97-WM-2191, USA ex rel Ridenour, et al. v. Kaiser-Hill, et al.] in the US District Court for the District of Colorado." Request Letter dated August 29, 2001, from R.E.V. ENG Services to Abel Lopez, Director, FOIA/PA (Request Letter). On October 4, 2001, FOIA/PA notified the Appellant that it was classified as a "commercial use" requester. Letter dated October 4, 2001, from Abel Lopez to David E. Ridenour, P.E. (October 4, 2001 Letter). FOIA/PA also indicated that the Appellant would be charged search, review, and duplication costs associated with its request. Id. In its December 14, 2001 Determination Letter, FOIA/PA outlined its finding that the Appellant was a "commercial use" requester relying on the fact that the information the Appellant is requesting is related to its qui tam action.(2) Determination Letter dated December 14, 2001 from Abel Lopez to David E. Ridenour, P.E. (Determination Letter). The Appellant argues, in its Appeal, that (1) FOIA/PA did not respond in a timely fashion to its request because it did not make a determination on the merits of the request and (2) FOIA/PA's categorization of the Appellant as a commercial use requester is erroneous. Appeal Letter dated December 20, 2001, from David E. Ridenour, P.E., to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (Appeal Letter). The Appellant also argues that OHA previously remanded the commercial classification issue to the Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO) and RFFO subsequently granted a waiver.(3) Id. Further, the Appellant asserts that release of the requested information is in the public interest and that it will disseminate the information to the public. Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA delineates three types of costs--"search costs," "duplication costs," and "review costs"--and places requesters into three categories that determine which of these costs a given requester must pay. If a requester wants the information for a "commercial use," it must pay for all three types of costs incurred. In contrast, educational institutions and the news media are required to pay only duplication costs, and all other requesters are required to pay search and duplication costs but not review costs. 5 U.S.C. §

552(a)(4)(A)(ii); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b).

The Appellant asserts that the FOIA/PA erroneously categorized it as a "commercial use requester." We disagree with the Appellant. The DOE Regulations state that a "?[c]ommercial use' request refers to a request from . . . one who seeks information for a use or purpose that furthers the commercial, trade, or profit interests of the requester." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.2(c). The Supreme Court has stated that qui tam plaintiffs are "motivated primarily by prospects of monetary reward rather than the public good." Hughes Aircraft Co. v. U.S. ex rel. Schumer, 520 U.S. 939, 949 (1997). The requested information concerns the Appellant's qui tam action. The purpose for this request cannot be separated from the qui tam action's monetary motive. Therefore, we agree with FOIA/PA that the Appellant is a commercial use requester.

III. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, we conclude that FOIA/PA correctly categorized the Appellant as a commercial use requester. Therefore, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by R.E.V. ENG Services, Case No. VFA-0719, on February 6, 2002, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

(1)In light of the anthrax that was found in October 2001 in federal mail, in November 2001, the United States Postal Service began sending for irradiation all first class mail addressed to the DOE. The Appeal letter received on February 6, 2002, was mailed on December 20, 2001, and therefore is deemed a timely filing.

(2)Qui Tam is a provision of the Federal Civil False Claims Act that allows a private citizen to file a suit in the name of the federal government charging fraud by government contractors and other entities who receive or use government funds, and to share in any money recovered.

(3)Fee waiver determinations depend on the substance of the information requested as well as the nature of the requester. Although the requester in the case cited by the Appellant is the same, the information requested is different. Therefore, although RFFO may have granted the fee waiver in a previous case, this does not mandate that a fee waiver is appropriate in this case, which deals with different information. Moreover, no fee waiver has been requested in this instance.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Mavis L. Larson

Date of Filing: February 13, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0720

On February 13, 2002, Mavis L. Larson filed an Appeal from a determination the DOE's Richland Operations Office (DOE/RL) issued on February 15, 2001. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Ms. Larson requested from DOE/RL "the employment and radiation exposure records of my deceased husband, Ahlert G. (Red) Larson. He worked at the Hanford site for Battelle from 1960-1975 as a sheep shearer." Letter from Mavis L. Larson to DOE/RL (November 27, 2001). Mr. Larson died from leukemia in 1992. Appeal at 1. On December 12, 2001, DOE/RL sent a letter to Ms. Larson, informing her that it had "conducted a thorough search by name and Social Security Number (SSN) for records related to your husband and we were unable to locate any employment records, nor is there any indication he was monitored for radiation exposure at Hanford." Letter from DOE/RL to Mavis Larson (December 12, 2001). Ms. Larson's Appeal was filed on her behalf by her son, Darold Larson, who states, "I do not understand why you do not have any records of his employment as I personally know that he worked there numerous years." Appeal at 1.(1)

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, we contacted DOE/RL and found out the following regarding its search. Because Ms. Larson's request stated that her husband worked for Battelle, DOE/RL referred the request to Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL). Battelle, a DOE contractor, has operated PNNL and performed research and development for the DOE's Hanford site since 1965. Battelle searched both its employment records and radiation exposure records for any records pertaining to Mr. Larson. Both sets of records were searched by name and Social Security Number. Battelle located no records for Mr. Larson. DOE/RL also searched, by Social Security Number, the files of the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation, which maintains occupational health and medical records for the Hanford site. That search also revealed no responsive records. Finally, DOE/RL searched, by name, records that it maintains for trade employees (i.e., welders, pipefitters, construction, etc.) and its general employment records for former employees of Hanford prime contractors and major sub-contractors. Again, no records regarding Mr. Larson were found.(2)

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that DOE/RL performed a diligent search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Ms. Larson sought. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Mavis L. Larson, Case Number VFA- 0720, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: March 22, 2002

(1)The DOE regulations require that a FOIA Appeal be filed within 30 days of the receipt of a determination in response to a FOIA request. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). DOE/RL's determination was dated December 12, 2001, and the present Appeal was postmarked December 31, 2001. However, the U.S. Postal Service is currently sanitizing mail addressed to federal agencies, resulting in a significant delay in delivery. Thus, Ms. Larson's Appeal did not reach the OHA until six weeks after it was mailed. Given these unusual circumstances, we will consider the present Appeal to be timely filed.

(2)Mr. Larson also submitted a copy of a letter he received from the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL), which is responsible for administering the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program. Mr. Larson filed a claim with the program related to his father's leukemia and his employment at Hanford. The letter from DOL states, "We have confirmation of employment from the Department of Energy." Letter from Johnna Funk, DOL, to Mr. Larson (December 28, 2001). We contacted Ms. Funk and she explained that the letter was in error. The confirmation received from DOE was essentially confirmation that the DOE had completed a search of records and located no records on Mr. Larson. This search apparently duplicated the search of PNNL employment and radiation exposure records performed by DOE/RL in response to Ms. Larson's FOIA request. Memorandum to file (March 12, 2002). To assist the DOL in processing Mr. Larson's compensation claim, DOE (separate from the processing of the FOIA request at issue in this case) is currently in the process of obtaining historical records that may verify his father's employment at the Hanford site. Electronic mail from Lorna Zaback, DOE/RL, to Steven Goering, OHA (February 28, 2002) ("Pacific Northwest National Laboratory did have people employed as sheep shearers on the Hanford Reservation in the past. Although we are not required to produce this information, we are awaiting some historical documentation about these people, the jobs that they performed, and the time frame in which they worked.")

Case No. VFA-0721

April 12, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Sempra Energy Solutions

Date of Filing: February 11, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0721

On February 11, 2002, Sempra Energy Solutions (Sempra) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to the company in response to a request for documents that Sempra submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on November 19, 2001, by the Corporate Services Division of the DOE Headquarters Procurement Services (DOE/HQ). This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ perform an additional search.

I. Background

This Appeal concerns a FOIA request that William Westcott, Esq. (Westcott), then an attorney with Greenberg Peden, P.C., submitted to DOE/HQ. See Letter from Westcott to DOE FOIA/Privacy Act Division (August 2, 2001). In the request, Westcott asked for "any and all documentation relating to the Energy Savings Performance Contract between Sempra Energy Solutions, Inc. and Hill Air Force Base, Utah 84056, Task Order No. 5 specifically related to the Fusion Lighting installation and Hanger 225 from 1994 to the present." Id. However, when DOE/HQ then called Westcott to determine whether he had additional information that would help in the search, Westcott was no longer employed at Greenberg Peden. Memorandum from James Webber, DOE/HQ, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (March 6, 2002). Nonetheless, Greenberg Peden instructed DOE/HQ to send it the reply. Id. Consequently, on November 19, 2001, DOE/HQ issued a determination letter to Greenberg Peden stating that a search for responsive material was unsuccessful, and that no responsive records exist. Letter from DOE/HQ to Westcott (November 19, 2001) (Determination).

On December 27, 2001, Westcott, now employed by another law firm, contacted DOE/HQ via electronic mail asking for an update of the status of his request. See electronic mail message from Westcott to DOE/HQ (December 27, 2001). DOE/HQ then sent Westcott a copy of the Determination at his new address. See electronic mail message from DOE/HQ to Westcott (January 4, 2002). On February 11, 2002, Westcott appealed the determination on behalf of Sempra, attaching a 1997 letter from Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL) that discussed a project between PNNL and Sempra at Hill Air Force Base. (1) Sempra asks that OHA order DOE/HQ to conduct another search for responsive records. Letter from Sempra to Director, OHA (February 11, 2002) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988). We have analyzed the search conducted by DOE/HQ and find that the search was adequate.

DOE/HQ maintains a database of all open contracts, the Procurement and Assistance Data System (PADS). Memorandum of Meeting between James Webber, DOE/HQ and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (March 14, 2002). Using the information provided in Westcott's request, DOE/HQ searched this database but found no responsive records. Id. DOE/HQ then requested that the contractor who maintains files of closed and archived contracts perform an additional search for responsive material. Id. That search was also unsuccessful. Id.

Sempra argues that it has evidence of a project that was conducted at Hill Air Force Base with the participation of PNNL, Sempra, and DOE, and that therefore DOE/HQ must have responsive records in its files. Appeal at 1. Westcott submitted a FOIA request to PNNL, and received some documents relating to PNNL's work on the project. See electronic mail message from Westcott to OHA (March 12, 2002). He also received responsive documents from Hill Air Force Base. Id. According to Westcott, the purpose of the current request is to determine if DOE Headquarters also had any involvement in the project. Id. As proof of DOE Headquarters involvement, Sempra offers a letter from PNNL addressed to Sempra's predecessor company (CES) that discusses a project at Hill Air Force Base. See Letter from PNNL to CES (February 3, 1997). The project involved PNNL "in its support role to DOE, facilitat[ing] in areas where the state-of-the-art technology posed additional work for CES." Id.

We find that the PNNL letter, standing alone, is insufficient to prove that responsive records exist at DOE Headquarters. DOE/HQ maintains that PNNL's acknowledged participation in a project with Sempra (1) does not confirm that the project was conducted via a contract; and (2) does not confirm that DOE was a party to any contract relating to that project, if one existed. See Memorandum of Meeting between James Webber, DOE/HQ and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (March 14, 2002). The DOE entity that actually participated in the project, PNNL, has released responsive material to Sempra. (2) Thus, Sempra has not provided any evidence that DOE Headquarters was a party to any contract relating to the Hill Air Force Base project.

In addition, DOE/HQ was unaware that Sempra did business under the name of "CES/Way" until Westcott submitted this Appeal in February 2002. See electronic mail message from James Webber, DOE/HQ to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA. (March 20, 2002). When DOE/HQ called Westcott at Greenberg Peden in December 2001 to solicit additional information about his request, Westcott was no longer employed there. Thus, DOE/HQ conducted its search based on information in the original request, a letter that never mentioned the name "CES." Therefore, we find that DOE/HQ conducted an adequate search reasonably calculated to uncover the material requested by Sempra.

Nonetheless, after we contacted DOE/HQ with information about the company's old name, DOE/HQ conducted another search of its database of contracts and found a contract related to CES. See electronic mail message from James Webber, DOE/HQ to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (March 20, 2002). Accordingly, this Appeal is granted in part, and this matter is remanded to DOE/HQ to release any additional responsive material to Westcott or to issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of any information it redacts from any responsive material it provides to Westcott.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Sempra Energy Solutions on February 11, 2002, OHA Case Number VFA-0721, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) of this Order, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to DOE Headquarters Procurement Services for processing in accordance with the guidance in the Decision above.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)PNNL is a research laboratory that is managed and operated by Battelle for DOE.

(2)Westcott stated that the documents that PNNL released to him were non-responsive and "wholly irrelevant" to his request. See electronic mail from Westcott to OHA (March 20, 2002). We cannot comment on that matter since that particular request is beyond the scope of this Appeal.

Case No. VFA-0722

March 21, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Southern California Edison

Date of Filing: February 13, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0722

The present Appeal is one of several that have arisen out of a contract dispute between the Appellant and BPA. On March 21, 2001, the Appellant filed a twelve-part request for information with BPA. On May 14, 2001, BPA issued a determination letter in response to the March 21, 2001 request. On June 13, 2001, the Appellant appealed BPA's determination. On July 3, 2001, we issued a Decision and Order granting the Appeal in part and remanding portions of it to BPA for further processing. Southern California Edison, 28 DOE ¶ 80,176 (2001) (VFA-0677). (1)

On January 11, 2002, BPA issued a second determination letter in response to the instructions set forth in VFA-0677. In its January 11, 2002 determination letter, BPA adequately described the results of its searches, clearly indicated which information it was withholding and appropriately specified the exemptions under which each item of withheld information was withheld. BPA also produced two additional long term contracts in their entirety and portions of additional short term and long term contracts. However, the January 11, 2002 determination letter continued to withhold portions of a number of documents under Exemptions 4 and 5 of the Freedom of Information Act. 5 U.S.C. § 552. On February 13, 2002, the present appeal was filed contending that BPA has improperly withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 5.

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). “An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption.” Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency’s burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

The information that BPA continues to withhold falls under two categories. The first category consists of information contained in contracts made directly between BPA and outside entities to which it sold, from which it purchased or with which it exchanged electrical power (bi-lateral agreements). The second category consists of information contained in bids submitted by BPA to either the California Independent System Operator (CISO) or the California Power Exchange (CPX).

Bilateral Agreements

BPA, citing Exemption 4, redacted information which consisted of “amounts of energy, total energy amounts, price and total revenue, . . . advance reservation fees, . . . quantity, demand limits, total megawatt hour (MWh), . . . and monthly revenue” from bilateral agreements it released to the Appellant. (2)

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). “Like all FOIA exemptions, Exemption 4 is to be read narrowly in light of the dominant disclosure motif expressed in the statute.” Washington Post Co. v. United States HHS, 865 F.2d 320, 324 (D.C. Cir. 1989). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks).

Where, as in this case, the agency determines that the information at issue is not a trade secret, but is instead “commercial or financial” and “obtained from a person,” it must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." If the information is subject to a valid claim of legal privilege on the part of its submitter or is confidential, it may properly be withheld under Exemption 4. In order to determine whether the information is "confidential" the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm’n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (Critical Mass), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Information is considered to have been submitted involuntarily if, as in this case, any legal authority compels its submission, including informal mandates that call for the submission of the information as a cost of doing business with the government. Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 460 n.3 (D.D.C. 1997), aff’d in part, rev’d in part and remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir.1999). Since such information is involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that its disclosure is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained before withholding it under Exemption 4. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d 871 at 879.

Once the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department’s implementing regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to understand the basis for claiming the exemption and to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("Conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

In the January 11, 2002 determination letter, BPA invoked Exemption 4 claiming that release of the redacted information which consisted of “amounts of energy, total energy amounts, price and total revenue, . . . advance reservation fees, . . . quantity, demand limits, total megawatt hour (MWh), . . . and monthly revenue” would cause substantial competitive harm to those entities that had entered into the contracts at issue if released. The only rationale provided by BPA for its conclusion is that one of those entities that had entered into the contracts at issue requested that BPA keep this information confidential. Although, pursuant to Executive Order No. 12,600, consultation with a submitter of financial or business information is a required step in the FOIA evaluation process, an agency is required to determine for itself whether the information in question should be disclosed. Lee v. FDIC, 923 F.Supp. 451, 455 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); accord Exec. Order No. 12,600 § 5 (notification procedures specifically contemplate that agency makes ultimate determination concerning release). There is no evidence in the record that BPA made the requisite determination.

Moreover, BPA's justification consists of conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm. As the cases set forth above clearly indicate, such conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents under the FOIA.

Accordingly, we are remanding those portions of the Appeal concerning the bilateral agreements to BPA. On remand, BPA shall either promptly release the information it has withheld under Exemption 4 to the Appellant (after complying with the mandate set forth by Executive Order No. 12,600), or issue a new determination letter withholding the information with an appropriate justification.

Bids Submitted to Either the California Independent System Operator (CISO) or the California Power Exchange (CPX)

BPA also redacted information from many of the bids it submitted to either the CISO or CPX that it released to the Appellant. This information indicates the prices at which electrical power was purchased or sold, the quantities of electric power that was purchased or sold and the descriptions of any options in current or recent historical trading. In support , BPA contended that release of this information would cause harm to the BPA's own commercial interests, and it invoked Exemption 5's confidential commercial information privilege. (3)

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). To qualify for withholding under Exemption 5, information must meet two conditions: it must be an inter- agency or intra-agency document, i.e. its source and its recipient must each be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it. Department. of Interior v. Klamath Water Users, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath). The Appellant, citing Klamath, however, contends that this information is not intra-agency or inter-agency in character. Specifically, the Appellant contends that the information at issue is contained in "negotiated contracts . . . which are the product of interaction with outside parties." Appeal at 4.

In Klamath, the Court noted that in some cases courts have found that communications between the government and outside consultants hired by them are, in effect, inter-agency or intra-agency documents and therefore protected by Exemption 5. Noting further that "in such cases, the records submitted by outside consultants played essentially the same part in an agency's process of deliberation as documents prepared by agency personnel might have done," the Court found:

[T]he fact about the consultant in the typical cases is that the consultant does not represent an interest of its own, or the interest of any other client, when it advises the agency that hires it. Its only obligations are to truth and its sense of what good judgment calls for, and in those respects the consultant functions just as an employee would be expected to do.

Id., 121 S. Ct. at 1066-67. In contrast, the Court in Klamath found that communications between an agency and an outside entity that was not acting as an objective outside consultant are clearly not inter-agency or intra-agency documents. Id., 121 S. Ct. at 1067-69. Turning to the present case, it appears that bids submitted to the CISO or CPX can be considered to constitute "inter-agency or intra-agency" communications pursuant to Exemption 5.

The California Independent System Operator (CISO) and Power Exchange (CPX) are both nonprofit public benefit corporations organized under the laws of California. The CISO was created to ensure efficient use and reliable operation of the electric transmission grid. The CPX was created to provide an efficient, competitive energy auction open on a non-discriminatory basis to all suppliers and purchasers. In order to accomplish these objectives, the CISO and CPX provided a neutral clearinghouse for energy and ancillary service transactions.

All non-governmental utilities in California were required by law to sell all their power into, and purchase all their power out of, the CPX, until it was dissolved on January 31, 2001. The CPX established a "market clearing price" equal to the last, highest bid received. All successful sale bidders received the market-clearing price, regardless of the amount of their bid. In this manner, the CPX acted objectively to facilitate the trade, matching up energy sale bids with purchaser requests. When the energy sale was accomplished, the sellers did not know who the buyers were on the other side of the transaction, and vice versa. There was no negotiation between the bidders and the CPX, simply the submission of the bid, and then a response indicating whether the bidder was successful, and if so, what the market-clearing price will be. The CPX also collected money owed for CPX transactions from buyers, and disbursed money for CPX sales to the sellers.

Similarly, the CISO operates the supplemental energy market in California for reliability purposes. CISO market participants can submit bids into the CISO supplemental energy markets. The CISO is the ultimate purchaser of the energy, which is used to satisfy ancillary services and other reliability requirements for CISO transmission system operation. However, just as in the case of the CPX, the price of this transaction is not determined pursuant to a bilateral negotiation between buyer and seller, but is set as a “market clearing price” similar to that described above. The CPX and CISO therefore acted as objective agents, performing marketing functions on behalf of BPA. Moreover, the CPX and CISO, in facilitating the marketing of BPA’s electrical power, acted to further BPA’s interest and did not act on their own behalf at the expense of other outside parties’ interests.

Even if the information that BPA withheld under Exemption 5 is part of the agency’s inter-agency or intra-agency communications, it still cannot be properly withheld under Exemption 5, unless it falls within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it. The Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The Supreme Court has recognized that Exemption 5 incorporates those “privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context.” Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Accordingly, “[t]he test under Exemption 5 is whether the documents would be ?routinely’ or ? normally’ disclosed upon a showing of relevance.” F.T.C. v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 19, 26 (1983) (citing Sears, 421 U.S. at 148-49)

Among the privileges incorporated by the courts under Exemption 5 is the “confidential commercial information privilege.” See, e.g., Federal Open Market Comm. v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340 (1979) (Merrill) (holding that since disclosure of Domestic Policy Directives would significantly harm the government’s monetary functions or commercial interests, they could properly be withheld under Exemption 5); Government Land Bank v. General Services Administration, 671 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1982) (Land Bank) (withholding a government-generated real estate appraisal). The courts have applied this privilege in the FOIA context to prevent the government from being placed at a competitive disadvantage and to facilitate the consummation of contracts. Merrill, 443 U.S. at 356. Exemption 5 therefore “protects the government when it enters the marketplace as an ordinary commercial buyer or seller.” Land Bank, 671 F.2d at 665 (footnote omitted). It is this privilege upon which BPA bases its Exemption 5 claim on in this case.

It is important to note that the protection afforded by this particular privilege is limited in scope and lasts only as long as necessary to protect the government's commercial interests. Id. In Merrill, the Court stated that the confidential commercial information privilege protects information generated in the process of awarding a contract. Merrill, 443 U.S. at 360. However, the Court also indicated that the privilege expires upon the awarding of the contract. Id. Nevertheless, it is conceivable that the release of some information generated during the awarding of a contract might potentially continue to place the government at a competitive disadvantage if released even after the contract in question has been executed. Accordingly, we will remand this portion of the Appeal to BPA to afford it an opportunity to show (1) that the release of the information it is withholding under Exemption 5's confidential commercial information privilege would place the government at a competitive disadvantage, and (2) that this information could be withheld without departing from the holdings set forth in Merrill.

Conclusion

We are remanding the present Appeal to BPA with instructions either to promptly release the information it withheld from the Appellant in its January 11, 2002, determination letter or to issue a new determination letter which adequately justifies continued withholding of the information.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Southern California Edison, Case No. VFA-0722, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)The Appeal in, VFA-0677 was originally based upon two separate determinations regarding two different FOIA requests. Accordingly, we split the Appeal into two separate cases. Those issues arising from the determination letter issued on May 14, 2001, which responded to a request filed on March 21, 2001, were adjudicated under Case Number VFA-0677. Those issues arising from the determination letter issued on June 4, 2001, which responded to a request filed on April 21, 2001, were adjudicated under Case Number VFA-0678.

(2)The May 14, 2001, determination letter also withheld this information under Exemption 5's confidential commercial information privilege. However, BPA has withdrawn its claim that the information it withheld from the bilateral agreements is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5.

(3)BPA also invoked Exemption 4 to withhold this information. We have determined that BPA was the source of this information. That fact is a necessary prerequisite for reliance on Exemption 5, as discussed below. At the same time, however, it also rules out the application of Exemption 4 to the same information, as Exemption 4 requires that the information to be protected must be "obtained from a person," that is, created outside BPA and submitted to BPA. Allnet Communication Svcs. v. FCC, 800 F.

Supp. 984, 988 (D.D.C. 1992) ("person" under Exemption 4 "refers to a wide range of entities invluding corporations, associations and public or private organizations other than agencies"), aff'd, No. 92-5351 (D.C. Cir. May 27, 1994).

Case No. VFA-0723

March 25, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Southern California Edison

Date of Filing: February 14, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0723

This Appeal arises out of a contract dispute between Southern California Edison (the Appellant) and the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). On April 2, 2001, the Appellant filed a seven-part request for information with BPA under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). On June 4, 2001, BPA issued a determination letter to the Appellant. The Appellant appealed the June 4, 2001 determination letter to the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) on June 12, 2001. (1) On July 11, 2001, OHA issued a decision and order remanding the June 12, 2001 Appeal to BPA for further processing. On January 14, 2002, BPA issued a new determination letter in which it released additional information to the Appellant. However, BPA continued to withhold information under Exemptions 4 and 5 of the FOIA. The present appeal was filed on February 14, 2002 contending that the information that BPA continues to withhold under Exemptions 4 and 5 cannot properly be withheld under those exemptions and therefore should be released. (2)

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. See Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemptions 4 and 5 are at issue in the instant case.

Exemption 4

BPA withheld price and quantity information from contracts which it has executed for the purchase or sale of electrical power under Exemption 4 contending that its release could cause competitive harm to the parties that contracted with BPA. (3) Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen

Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criteria. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997), aff'd inpart, rev'd in part & remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir.1999). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has specifically held that the term "commercial," as used in the FOIA, includes anything "pertaining or relating to or dealing with commerce." American Airlines, Inc. v. National Mediation Bd., 588 F.2d 863, 870 (2d Cir. 1978). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Once the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA"). In the present case, BPA claims that release of price and quantity information from contracts which it has executed for the purchase or sale of electrical power could cause substantial competitive harm to the parties that it has contracted with. The only rationales provided by BPA for this conclusion are (1) that BPA's customers view pricing information as commercially sensitive, and (2) that BPA's customers competitors could use pricing and quantity information to "undercut prices being offered to penetrate their customer base." January 14, 2002 Determination Letter at 5.

Although, pursuant to Executive Order No. 12,600, consultation with a submitter of financial or business information is a required step in the FOIA evaluation process, an agency is required to determine for itself whether the information in question should be disclosed. Lee v. FDIC, 923 F.Supp. 451, 455 (S.D.N.Y. 1996); accord Exec. Order No. 12,600 § 5 (notification procedures specifically contemplate that agency makes ultimate determination concerning release). Accordingly, BPA's customers' objections to release of the information do not alone establish that its release could cause substantial competitive harm.

More importantly, BPA's conclusory contention that its customers' competitors could use information about the price and quantity of electric power that they have purchased from BPA in the past to underbid BPA's customers in future sales of electric power is without merit. Courts have traditionally viewed with great skepticism the claim that the release of past pricing and quantity data would allow competitors to predict an entity's future pricing strategy, since past pricing determinations involve a number of fluctuating variables. GC Micro Corp. v. Defense Logistics Agency, 33 F.3d 1109, 1114 (9th Cir. 1994); Acumenics Research & Tech. v. Department of Justice, 843 F.2d 800, 805-8 (4th Cir. 1988). BPA has not shown how its customers' competitors could use past pricing and quantity information to predict BPA's customers' future offering prices for resales of electric power or for sales of goods and services produced with the electric power purchased from BPA. Accordingly, we are remanding that portion of the present Appeal concerning withholdings under Exemption 4 to BPA. On remand, BPA must promptly either release the withheld information or issue a new determination letter withholding the information under a different FOIA exemption or providing a much more detailed and convincing explanation of how its release could cause substantial competitive harm to its customers. (4)

BPA has also invoked Exemption 5 to withhold price and quantity information, as well as the descriptions of any options in current or recent historical trading floor contracts, from bids it made to the California Independent System Operator (CISO) or to the California Power Exchange (CPX). Specifically, BPA contends that release of this information would cause harm to the BPA's own commercial interests.

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). To qualify for withholding under Exemption 5, information must meet two conditions: it must be an inter-agency or intra-agency document, i.e. its source and its recipient must each be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it. Department of Interior v. Klamath Water Users, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath). The Appellant, citing Klamath, however, contends that this information is not intra-agency or inter-agency in character. Specifically, the Appellant contends that the information at issue is contained in "negotiated contracts . . . which are the product of interaction with outside parties." Appeal at 4.

In Klamath, the Court noted that in some cases courts have found that communications between the government and outside consultants hired by them are, in effect, inter-agency or intra-agency documents and therefore protected by Exemption 5. Noting further that "in such cases, the records submitted by outside consultants played essentially the same part in an agency's process of deliberation as documents prepared by agency personnel might have done," the Court found:

[T]he fact about the consultant in the typical cases is that the consultant does not represent an interest of its own, or the interest of any other client, when it advises the agency that hires it. Its only obligations are to truth and its sense of what good judgment calls for, and in those respects the consultant functions just as an employee would be expected to do.

Id., 121 S. Ct. at 1066-67. In contrast, the Court in Klamath found that communications between an agency and an outside entity that was not acting as an objective outside consultant are clearly not inter-agency or intra-agency documents. Id., 121 S. Ct. at 1067-69. Turning to the present case, it appears that bids submitted to the CISO or CPX can be considered to constitute "inter-agency or intra- agency" communications pursuant to Exemption 5.

The CISO and CPX are both nonprofit public benefit corporations organized under the laws of California. The CISO was created to ensure efficient use and reliable operation of the electric transmission grid. The CPX was created to provide an efficient, competitive energy auction open on a non-discriminatory basis to all suppliers and purchasers. In order to accomplish these objectives, the CISO and CPX provided a neutral clearinghouse for energy and ancillary service transactions.

All non-governmental utilities in California were required by law to sell all their power into, and purchase all their power out of, the CPX, until it was dissolved on January 31, 2001. The CPX established a "market clearing price" equal to the last, highest bid received. All successful sale bidders received the market-clearing price, regardless of the amount of their bid. In this manner, the CPX acted objectively to facilitate the trade, matching up energy sale bids with purchaser requests. When an energy sale was accomplished, the seller did not know who the buyer was, and vice versa. There was no negotiation between the bidders and the CPX, simply the submission of the bid, and then a response indicating whether the bidder was successful, and if so, what the market-clearing price will be. The CPX also collected money owed for CPX transactions from buyers, and disbursed money for CPX sales to the sellers.

Similarly, the CISO operates the supplemental energy market in California for reliability purposes. CISO market participants can submit bids into the CISO supplemental energy markets. The CISO is the ultimate purchaser of the energy, which is used to satisfy ancillary services and other reliability requirements for CISO transmission system operation. However, just as in the case of the CPX, the price of this transaction is not determined pursuant to a bilateral negotiation between buyer and seller, but is set as a “market clearing price” similar to that described above. The CPX and CISO therefore acted as objective agents, performing marketing functions on behalf of BPA. Moreover, the CPX and CISO, in facilitating the marketing of BPA’s electrical power, acted to further BPA’s interest and did not act on their own behalf at the expense of other outside parties’ interests.

Even though we find the information that BPA withheld under Exemption 5 is part of the agency’s inter-agency or intra-agency communications, it still cannot be properly withheld under Exemption 5, unless it falls within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it. The Supreme Court has held that Exemption 5 exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The Supreme Court has recognized that Exemption 5 incorporates those “privileges which the Government enjoys under the relevant statutory and case law in the pre-trial discovery context.” Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Accordingly, “[t]he test under Exemption 5 is whether the documents would be ?routinely’ or ? normally’ disclosed upon a showing of relevance.” F.T.C. v. Grolier, 462 U.S. 19, 26 (1983) (citing Sears, 421 U.S. at 148-49)

Among the privileges incorporated by the courts under Exemption 5 is the “confidential commercial information privilege.” See, e.g., Federal Open Market Comm. v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340 (1979) (Merrill) (holding that since disclosure of Domestic Policy Directives would significantly harm the government’s monetary functions or commercial interests, they could properly be withheld under Exemption 5); Government Land Bank v. General Services Administration, 671 F.2d 663 (1st Cir. 1982) (Land Bank) (withholding a government-generated real estate appraisal). The courts have applied this privilege in the FOIA context to prevent the government from being placed at a competitive disadvantage and to facilitate the consummation of contracts. Merrill, 443 U.S. at 356. Exemption 5 therefore “protects the government when it enters the marketplace as an ordinary commercial buyer or seller.” Land Bank, 671 F.2d at 665 (footnote omitted). It is this privilege upon which BPA bases its Exemption 5 claim in this case.

It is important to note that the protection afforded by this particular privilege is limited in scope and lasts only as long as necessary to protect the government’s commercial interests. Id. In Merrill, the Court stated that the confidential commercial information privilege protects information generated in the process of awarding a contract. Merrill, 443 U.S. at 360. However, the Court also indicated that the privilege expires upon the awarding of the contract. Id. Nevertheless, it is conceivable that the release of some information generated during the awarding of a contract might potentially continue to place the government at a competitive disadvantage if released even after the contract in question has been executed. Accordingly, we will remand this portion of the Appeal to BPA to afford it an opportunity to show (1) that the release of the information it is withholding under Exemption 5's confidential commercial information privilege would place the government at a competitive disadvantage, and (2) that this information could be withheld without departing from the holdings set forth in Merrill.

The January 14, 2002 Determination Letter cites a previous opinion issued by this office in support of BPA's contentions that (1) "release of contract pricing information would harm BPA's commercial interests by interfering with its ability to negotiate future contracts," and (2) "power sale pricing information in executed contracts with BPA are [sic] properly exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5." January 14, 2002 Determination Letter at 5, citing Wenatchee World, 28 DOE ¶ 80, 129 (2001) (Wenatchee). BPA's reliance upon Wenatchee is, however, misplaced for several reasons. First, the Wenatchee opinion clearly indicated that its holding was limited to a unique and specific fact pattern. Wenatchee, 28 DOE at 80,639-40. Second, the Wenatchee opinion was based upon an overly broad reading of Merrill that failed to take note of Merrill's holding that the confidential commercial information privilege expires upon the execution of a contract. Third, the Wenatchee opinion did not consider the issues raised by the Supreme Court's clarification, in Klamath, of when data can be considered as intra-agency or inter-agency information. Had it done so, it clearly would have concluded that the contracts in question were not intra-agency or inter-agency documents and therefore would not have found them to be protected by Exemption 5.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we are remanding this Appeal to BPA. BPA must either release the information it has withheld to the Appellant or issue a new determination letter which contains a sufficient justification for its withholdings.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Southern California Edison, Case No. VFA-0723, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)The Appeal originally filed by the Appellant on June 12, 2001, was based upon two separate determinations regarding two different FOIA requests. Those issues arising from the determination letter issued on May 14, 2001, which responded to a request filed on March 21, 2001, were adjudicated under Case Number VFA-0677. Those issues arising from the determination letter issued on June 4, 2001, which responded to a request filed on April 21, 2001, were adjudicated under Case Number VFA-0678. The present proceeding concerns the documents at issue in Case Number VFA-0678.

(2)BPA has withdrawn its Exemption 5 claim for any information it redacted from bilateral agreements with purchasers of BPA's electrical power. BPA continues to withhold information redacted from bids it submitted to the California Independent System Operator (CISO) and the California Power Exchange (CPX) under Exemption 5.

(3)BPA also notes that the other parties to these contracts wish that the contracts be treated as exempt from disclosure.

(4)BPA also withheld information from bids submitted to the CISO and CPX under Exemption 4. We have determined that BPA was the source of this information. That fact is a necessary prerequisite for reliance on Exemption 5, as discussed below. At the same time, however, it also rules out the application of Exemption 4 to this information, as Exemption 4 requires that the information to be protected must be "obtained from a person," that is, created outside BPA and submitted to BPA. Allnet Communication Svcs. v. FCC, 800 F. Supp. 984, 988 (D.D.C. 1992) ("person" under Exemption 4 "refers to a wide range of entities including corporations, associations and public or private organizations other than agencies"), aff'd, No. 92-5351 (D.C. Cir. May 27, 1994).

Case No. VFA-0724

August 15, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:John C. Fredriksen

Date of Filing: February 12, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0724

John C. Fredriksen filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of the Air Force issued to him on November 5, 2001. In that determination, the Air Force denied in part a request for information that Dr. Fredriksen submitted on August 31, 1999, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Of the three documents requested, the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Classified Controlled Information Review reviewed two of them, and determined that one contained classified information. Both the DOE and the Air Force withheld the classified information from the requester under the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the information that it withheld from the version of the document supplied to Dr. Fredriksen. Other portions of the three requested documents were withheld by the Air Force alone; those withholdings are not a part of this Appeal.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On August 31, 1999, Dr. Fredriksen requested specific pages of three Tactical Air Command histories under the FOIA from the Air Force. The Air Force responded to the request by providing the requested pages. Some information on some of the pages, however, was deleted. In its November 5, 2001 determination letter, the Air Force explained that it had withheld some information as exempt from release under Exemption 1 of the FOIA, and the DOE had withheld some information as exempt under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. The DOE withheld information from only one of the requested documents, "History of Tactical Air Command, July- December 1951."

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the portions of the document that the DOE withheld. In his Appeal, Dr. Fredriksen contends that the withholdings concern "both the B-45 jet and the Mark 5 atomic device [which] are no longer extant," and questions how the withheld information could "possibly compromise national security."

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12958 is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification, declassification and safeguarding of national security information. When properly classified under this Executive Order, national security information is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1. See Greenpeace, 28 DOE ¶ 80,191 (2001); National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Keith E. Loomis, 25 DOE ¶ 80,183 (1996); A. Victorian, 25 DOE ¶ 80,166 (1996).

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute of the type to which Exemption 3 refers. See, e.g., Greenpeace, 28 DOE ¶ 80,191 (2001); National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990).

The Director of Security Affairs has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of Security Affairs (now the Director of Security) (Director) reviewed those portions of the document for which the DOE had claimed exemptions from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA.

According to the Director, the DOE determined on review that the document contains information concerning the design of nuclear weapons and nuclear weapon yields and weapon effects. These types of information have been classified as Restricted Data (RD) and Formerly Restricted Data (FRD), respectively, under the DOE's current classification guidance. Under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, RD and FRD are forms of classified information, and are therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3. The Director has marked all deletions the DOE has made as "DOE b3" in the margin of the document. The denying officer for these withholdings is Joseph S. Mahaley, Director, Office of Security, Department of Energy.

In performing his review the Director requested that the Air Force also review the validity of the deletions it originally made from the portions of the document in which the DOE had withheld information. The Air Force has completed its review. The Director has marked all deletions made at the direction of the Air Force, under Exemption 1 of the FOIA, as "ACC/DON b1" in the margin of the document. The Air Force has withheld the same information under Exemption 1 as the DOE has withheld under Exemption 3. In addition, a small amount of information has been withheld solely by the Air Force, also under Exemption 1. This information consists of the last four deleted phrases on page 60 of the document. The denying official for these withholdings is Colonel Gerald F. Alexander, Jr., Deputy Director, Communications and Information Systems, Department of the Air Force.

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that Executive Order 12958 and the Atomic Energy Act require the continued withholding of significant portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemptions 1 and 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the documents that the Director has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Air Force and the Director have reduced the extent of the previously deleted portions to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations. Because some previously deleted information may now be released, newly redacted versions of the portions of the document reviewed in this Appeal will be provided to Dr. Fredriksen under separate cover. Accordingly, his Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by John C. Fredriksen on February 12, 2002, Case No. VFA-0724, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) Newly redacted versions of the document entitled "History of Tactical Air Command, July-December 1951," in which additional information is released, will be provided to Dr. Fredriksen.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: R.E.V. Eng. Services

Date of Filing: February 25, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0725

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that was filed by David Ridenour d/b/a/ R.E.V. Eng. Services from a determination issued to him by the Freedom of Information Officer of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats). In this determination, Rocky Flats responded to a request for information that Mr. Ridenour filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (FOIA), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If we were to grant the Appeal, this matter would be remanded to Rocky Flats for a new search for documents responsive to his request.

In his request, Mr. Ridenour seeks access to copies of "acknowledgement" letters pertaining to three FOIA requests that he filed. These letters are often sent out by program offices to FOIA requesters when the time required for processing their request exceeds the statutory limit. The letters usually indicate the reason for the delay and provide a general time frame in which the requester can expect a response. In its response, Rocky Flats states that the files generated in response to these requests were searched, and no responsive documents were located. Mr. Ridenour contends in his Appeal that these letters should be done as a matter of course, and asks that a more comprehensive search be performed.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to determine whether Rocky Flats' search was adequate, we contacted the FOIA Officer for that Office, and were informed that no such letters were written with regard to the requests specified by Mr. Ridenour. See memorandum of March 18, 2002 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Mary Hammack, Rocky Flats. Any further search would therefore prove fruitless. Consequently, we will deny Mr. Ridenour's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by R.E.V. Eng. Services in Case No. VFA-0725 is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Southwest Research and Information Center

Date of Filing: February 26, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0726

On February 26, 2002, Southwest Research and Information Center (Southwest) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it in response to a request for documents that it submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on January 29, 2002, by the Carlsbad Field Office of the Department of Energy (Carlsbad). This Appeal, if granted, would require that Carlsbad grant Southwest a fee waiver.

The FOIA requires that federal agencies generally release documents to the public upon request. The Act also provides for the assessment of fees for the processing of requests for documents. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the DOE will grant a full or partial waiver of applicable fees if disclosure of the information sought in a FOIA request (i) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the activities of the government, and (ii) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii).

I. Background

In its FOIA request, Southwest sought information and documents related to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant. Southwest requested that all fees associated with the processing of the request be waived. Because Southwest's request did not adequately address the DOE's criteria for granting fee waivers, in a letter dated January 29, 2002, Carlsbad informed Southwest that its request for a fee waiver was denied. See Determination Letter at 2.

In its Determination Letter, Carlsbad concluded that Southwest did not adequately explain its ability and intention to disseminate the requested information to the public. Id. The ability to disseminate the requested material to the public is a critical factor in determining whether a requester should be granted a waiver of fees. Larson v. CIA, 843 F. 2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988). In addition, Carlsbad concluded that Southwest failed to demonstrate that disclosure of the requested records would contribute significantly to the public understanding of the issues identified. Determination Letter at 2.

On February 26, 2002, Southwest appealed Carlsbad's determination. In its Appeal, Southwest included additional information about the public interest in disclosure and about its ability to disseminate the material sought. This information may satisfy the deficiencies set forth in Carlsbad's initial determination, and Carlsbad has agreed to reconsider this matter on remand. Therefore, in light of this new information, we will remand this matter to Carlsbad. Upon remand, Carlsbad should review Southwest's Appeal and promptly issue a revised fee waiver determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Southwest Research and Information Center on February 26, 2002, OHA Case Number VFA-0726, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Carlsbad Field Office of the Department of Energy for the issuance of a new fee waiver determination.

Case No. VFA-0727

March 27, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Mitchell G. Brodsky

Date of Filing:February 27, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0727

Mitchell G. Brodsky filed this Appeal in response to a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's Yucca Mountain Site Characterization Office (YMSCO). The determination deals with a request that Brodsky submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Brodsky requests the release of material responsive to the request. As explained below, we will grant the Appeal and remand Brodsky's request for further processing.

I. Background

Brodsky's FOIA request sought the release of a report prepared for the DOE by John Nicoletti (the Nicoletti report). The Nicoletti report concerns an investigation into allegations by Brodsky that he was subjected to a hostile work environment.

YMSCO located a copy of the Nicoletti report. However, YMSCO withheld the Nicoletti report in its entirety, claiming it was exempt from mandatory release pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) (Exemption 6). Brodsky then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that all federal agency records be made available to the public, while providing for nine categories of records that are exempt from mandatory disclosure. YMSCO withheld the draft report under Exemption 6 of the FOIA, which exempts "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770.

The fact that some material in a record meets the criteria for withholding discussed above does not necessarily mean that the record may be withheld in its entirety. The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). However, material need not be segregated and released when the exempt and nonexempt material are so "inextricably intertwined" that release of the nonexempt material would compromise the exempt material, or where nonexempt material is so small and interspersed with exempt material that it would pose "an inordinate burden" to segregate it. Lead Industries Assoc. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2d Cir. 1979).

YMSCO states in the Determination Letter that it is withholding the report pursuant to Exemption 6 because "release of this document, in its entirety, would compromise substantial privacy interests and would clearly be an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." The basis for this claim appears to be the fact that the Nicoletti report contains the names of Brodsky's fellow employees that were interviewed by Nicoletti, and a summary of their statements regarding Brodsky's allegation. YMSCO also states that "the release of the names and identifying information in this case could chill employees from providing candid information in the future."

We obtained a copy of the Nicoletti report and reviewed it in light of the Exemption 6 criteria. It consists of summaries of interviews Nicoletti conducted with Brodsky and other employees, and Nicoletti's assessment of Brodsky's claim. In our review, we found that YMSCO is correct in withholding some material under Exemption 6. We also found, however, segregable passages that do not appear to qualify for withholding under Exemption 6. For example, the report contains an "Assessment Summary," a summary of Nicoletti's interview with Brodsky, and a summary of documents that Brodsky submitted to Nicoletti. It appears to us that each of these sections consists primarily of material does not disclose personal information about any person other than Brodsky. Such material could therefore be released, either unredacted or with minor redactions, without compromising the privacy interests of other persons interviewed by Nicoletti.

III. Conclusion

On remand, YMSCO must review the withheld document, segregate and release all nonexempt portions of the document, and issue a new determination that justifies the withholding of any material from Brodsky.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mitchell G. Brodsky (Case No. VFA-0727) is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Yucca Mountain Site Characterization Office for further proceedings consistent with the guidelines set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are located, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Graeme Sephton

Date of Filing: March 20, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0728

On March 20, 2002, Graeme Sephton (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Brookhaven Area Office (Brookhaven) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on January 30, 2002. That determination concerned a request for information the Appellant submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination indicated that no responsive documents were identified as a result of the search conducted in response to the Appellant's request. In his Appeal, the Appellant asserts that Brookhaven's search for records was inadequate. If granted, this Appeal would require Brookhaven to conduct a further search.

Background

On December 16, 2001, the Appellant requested information related to a report he says originated at Brookhaven National Laboratory (BNL). The Appellant had obtained a copy of the report through the FOIA from the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). The request for information submitted to the FBI pertained to the FBI investigation of the accident of TWA Flight 800. Request Letter dated December 16, 2001, from Graeme Sephton to Brookhaven (Request Letter). The BNL report referred to an item number 1B28 in a list of items recovered from the accident site. That item had been recovered during an autopsy of one of the victims of the TWA Flight 800 accident. The FBI had asked BNL to perform an analysis of the item. The Appellant requested the results of the analysis. Request Letter.

On December 30, 2001, Brookhaven issued a determination stating that a thorough search was conducted, including contractor-owned records. Determination Letter dated December 30, 2001, from Michael D. Holland, Area Manager, Brookhaven, to Graeme Sephton. Brookhaven found no documents responsive to the request. Id. On March 20, 2002, the Appellant filed this Appeal, challenging Brookhaven's search as inadequate. Appeal Letter finalized March 20, 2002, from Graeme Sephton to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter). The Appellant suggested that contacting the person or persons who "signed off on, or transmitted the analysis and conclusions to the FBI" would be the best way to find copies of the results. Id.

Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985) (Miller); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

We contacted Brookhaven to determine what type of search was conducted for documents responsive to the request. Brookhaven informed us that it did contact the scientists responsible for conducting the analysis requested by the FBI. Brookhaven reported that they do not have any responsive records. Apparently, the FBI sent a special agent with the item and it remained in his possession at all times. In addition, any results were immediately delivered to him. At no time did Brookhaven or BNL keep copies of the analysis.

We are convinced that Brookhaven followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material the Appellant sought in her request. See Miller, 779 F.2d at 1384-85. The fact that the search did not uncover documents that the Appellant believes may be in the possession of DOE does not mean that the search was inadequate. Brookhaven searched both its records and those of BNL. The persons who analyzed the item were contacted, and they informed Brookhaven and BNL that no records were retained. Nor were any responsive records located. Therefore, we will deny the Appellant’s Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on March 20, 2002, by Graeme Sephton, Case No. VFA-0728, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner: Dallas D. Register

Date of Filing: March 11, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0729

On March 11, 2002, Dallas D. Register filed a Motion for Reconsideration of a Decision and Order that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on March 1, 2002. Mr. Dallas Register, Case No. VFA-0711 (March 1, 2002). The Decision and Order considered Mr. Register's Appeal of a final determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office (DOE/AL) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on October 30, 2001.

I. Background

Mr. Register filed a FOIA request with DOE seeking documents related to a comparative analysis study. On October 30, 2001, the DOE/AL FOIA Officer issued a determination in response to Mr. Register's request which indicated that DOE's Office of Kansas City Site Operations (DOE/KC) had been unable to locate any documents that were responsive to the FOIA request. The DOE/AL FOIA Officer also indicated that:

It has been determined that the documents you are requesting are records contained in the legal files of Honeywell FM&T at the Kansas City Plant, are in the possession and control of Honeywell FM&T and are, therefore, not ?agency records' subject to the provisions of the FOIA. ?Agency records' are defined as records in a federal agency's possession and control at the time of the FOIA request. However, pursuant to U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) policy, records in the possession and control of a management and operating contractor, such as those mentioned above, will be made available by DOE when the contract specifically provides that such records are the property of the Government. However, the contract between the DOE and Honeywell FM&T clearly defines the records that you have requested as belonging to them and not the DOE. Accordingly, these records are also not subject to release under DOE policy.

Mr. Register appealed this determination on the grounds that the documents he requested should be in the DOE Contracting Officer's file because they are necessary to establish the contractor's compliance with the "substantially equivalent benefits" requirement contained in DOE's Request for Proposal (RFP) for managing the Kansas City Plant. Mr. Register also claimed that DOE/AL should have provided the requested document to him because the contract between the contractor and DOE provides that DOE has the right to inspect and copy all records acquired or generated by Honeywell FM&T (Honeywell) under this contract. We denied Mr. Register's Appeal, finding that the documents in question are not "agency records" subject to the FOIA, nor are they subject to release under DOE regulations. In seeking reconsideration of our decision, Mr. Register does not contend that the documents he seeks are "agency records," but rather argues that they are records that were "acquired or generated" by Honeywell FM&T "in the performance" of its contract with the DOE, and therefore are subject to release under DOE regulations.

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Nathaniel Hendricks, 25 DOE & 80,173 (1996). We will exercise that discretion here to consider the issues the Appellant raised. .

II. Analysis

As we discussed in our decision on Mr. Register's Appeal, even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between DOE and that contractor provides that the records in question are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under" the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

The contract between DOE and Honeywell FM&T does have the provision described in the DOE regulations. That clause in the contract provides, in relevant part, as follows:

113. DEAR 970.5204 79 ACCESS TO AND OWNERSHIP OF RECORDS (JUN 1997) (MODIFIED)

(a) Government owned records. Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the contractor either as the contracting officer may from time to time direct during the process of the work or, in any event, as the contracting officer shall direct upon completion or termination of the contract.

(b) Contractor owned records. The following records are considered the property of the contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) of this clause. . . .

(1) Employment related records (such as workers' compensation files; employee relations records, records on salary and employee benefits; drug testing records, labor negotiation records; records on ethics, employee concerns, and other employee related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality; employee assistance program records; and personnel and medical/ health related records and similar files), and non-employee patient medical/health related records, except for those records described by the contract as being maintained in Privacy Act systems of records.

. . . .

(3) Records relating to any procurement action by the contractor, except for records that under 48 CFR 970.5204-9, Accounts, Records, and Inspection, are described as the property of the Government; and

. . . .

(d) Inspection, copying, and audit of records. All records acquired or generated by the contractor under this contract in the possession of the contractor, including those described at paragraph (b) of this clause, shall be subject to inspection, copying, and audit by the Government or its designees at all reasonable times, and the contractor shall afford the Government or its designees reasonable facilities for such inspection, copying, and audit; provided, however, that upon request by the contracting officer, the contractor shall deliver such records to a location specified by the contracting officer for inspection, copying, and audit. The Government or its designees shall use such records in accordance with applicable federal laws (including the Privacy Act), as appropriate.

(e) Applicability. Paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of this clause apply to all records without regard to the date or origination of such records.

. . . .

(g) Subcontracts. The contractor shall include the requirements of this clause in all subcontracts that are of a cost reimbursement type if any of the following factors is present:

(1) The value of the subcontract is greater than $2 million (unless specifically waived by the Contracting Officer);

(2) The contracting officer determines that the subcontract is, or involves, a critical task related to the contract; or

(3) The subcontract includes 48 CFR 970.5204-2, Integration of Environment, Safety, and Health into Work Planning and Execution, or similar clause.

Contract No. DE-AC04-01AL66850 at H-173 to -75.

In our Appeal decision, we found that the above clause would not apply to the records sought by Mr. Register because those records were not acquired or generated by the contractor in the performance of the contract. This finding was based on information from counsel for DOE/KC "that the documents at issue were not paid for by DOE funds but were paid for by Honeywell's main office." In his Motion for Reconsideration, Mr. Register states,

It is my position that the OHA failed to adequately pursue my claim that there were two total compensation studies prepared under the direction of Honeywell FM&T/KC and that no documents were provided by Honeywell to the DOE to substantiate their verbal claim that the requested documents had been prepared and funded by Honeywell Corporate funds.

Motion at 1.

For purposes of ruling on Mr. Register's Motion, we need not decide whether there were in fact "two total compensation studies," though DOE/KC states that it is aware of only one. And while we have no reason to question DOE/KC or Honeywell FM&T's statements regarding the funding of the study (or studies), proving the truth of those statements is not necessary to our decision. As we explain below, even assuming there are two studies as described by Mr. Register, and regardless of who prepared or funded the studies, those studies would, because of their subject matter, be defined as property of Honeywell FM&T under the contract clause quoted above.

Mr. Register's Motion describes one study "prepared to verify the value of the Honeywell total compensation of members [of] the Facility and Utility Engineering Department . . . identified to be outsourced through a service subcontract to a local Architect and Engineering firm," and a second study "prepared to verify that the total compensation provided to the former Honeywell employees outsourced by subcontract met the ?substantially equivalent' requirements of" the contract between DOE and Honeywell FM&T. Motion at 1.

As described by Mr. Register, both studies are the property of the contactor. The documents fall under subparagraph (b)(1) and (b)(3) of the clause quoted above, because they are "[e]mployment related records (such as . . . records on salary and employee benefits; . . ." and "[r]ecords relating to any procurement action by the contractor.(1) Mr. Register states that both studies were prepared to "verify . . . the total compensation" of employees, and in that respect both would be "employment related" and concern "salary and employee benefits." And because Mr. Register describes both studies as related to "outsourc[ing] through a service subcontract to a" local firm, both studies would have related to the procurement action through which this outsourcing was accomplished.

Paragraph (b) of the clause states that documents described under any of its subparagraphs "are considered the property of the contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) of this clause. . . .(2) Thus, the contract explicitly provides that documents such as those Mr. Register is seeking are not government-owned records, and therefore would not be subject to release under DOE regulations.(3)

For the above-stated reasons, Mr. Register's Motion for Reconsideration will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Dallas D. Register on March 11, 2002, Case No. VFA-0729, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

George B. Breznay

Director

Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: April 8, 2002

(1) Subparagraph (b)(3) states that it does not apply to records that under 48 CFR 970.5204-9, Accounts, Records, and Inspection, are described as the property of the Government. Under 48 C.F.R. 970.5204-9, "all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents, system files, data bases, and other data evidencing costs allowable, collections accruing to the contractor in connection with the work under this contract, other applicable credits, and fee accruals under this contract, shall be the property of the Government, . . ." Contract No. DE-AC04-01AL66850 at I-94. However, as this contract clause pertains to the requirement that the contractor "maintain a separate and distinct set of" records for accounting purposes, we do not agree with Mr. Register that the studies he seeks would fall within the scope of the clause. Id.

(2) Mr. Register further contends that paragraphs (d) and (e) of the ownership of records clause apply to the records at issue. While these paragraphs may apply to the records sought by Mr. Register, they are nonetheless not helpful in determining whether those records fall within the scope of paragraph (a).

(3)Mr. Register also argues that the studies he seeks may have been provided to the subcontractor to whom work was outsourced. It is possible that this subcontract contains the ownership of records clause since paragraph (g) of the clause, as quoted above, requires that the ownership of records clause be included in certain subcontracts. However, even if this were the case, the provisions of paragraph (b) of the clause would still apply to exclude the studies from the scope of paragraph (a).

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: David A. Hannum

Date of Filing: April 4, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0734

On April 4, 2002, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received an Appeal that David A. Hannum filed from a determination issued to him by the Director of the Office of Intergovernmental, Public and Institutional Affairs at the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (hereinafter referred to as "the Director"). The Director issued his determination in response to a request for information under the Privacy Act of 1974 (PA), 5 U.S.C § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. For purposes of administrative efficiency, the Director also processed Mr. Hannum's requests under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would result in the release of a specified document to Mr. Hannum.

The Privacy Act permits individuals to gain access to their records or to information pertaining to them that is contained in systems of records maintained by the agencies. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(1). The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552.

I. Background

In his requests, Mr. Hannum sought access to all of his files that contain any derogatory information and all personnel files pertaining to his employment with Master Lee Hanford Corporation, a DOE subcontractor. In his response, the Director released three documents to Mr. Hannum and withheld a fourth. This document was located in the office of the legal counsel for Fluor Hanford, Inc., a DOE contractor. In justifying its withholding, the Director stated that according to Fluor Hanford, Inc.'s contract with the DOE, "legal records, including legal opinions, litigation files, and documents covered by attorney-client and attorney work product privileges are not government records and as such, are not subject to the provisions of the FOIA or the PA." Director's response at 1. In his Appeal, Mr. Hannum contests the withholding of this document.

II. Analysis

As previously stated, the PA allows individuals access to information contained in systems of records maintained by agencies. The FOIA generally requires the federal government to release agency records upon request. Therefore, our threshold inquiry is whether Fluor Hanford is an "agency" for purposes of the PA and the FOIA. We conclude that it is not.

An agency is defined as any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch..., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). Fluor Hanford is a privately owned and operated entity that has contracted with the DOE to manage the DOE's Hanford facility. Because its day-to- day operations are not controlled by the DOE, it is not an "agency" within the meaning of the PA and the FOIA. Therefore, the document in question is not located in a system of records maintained by an agency and is thus not subject to the PA. Moreover, we have been informed that the document has never been in the possession and control of the DOE. See memorandum of April 21, 2002 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Dorothy Riehle, Richland Operations Office. Consequently, the document is not an "agency record" for purposes of the FOIA. See Department of Justice vs. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request).

A finding that the document is not an agency record, however, does not preclude the DOE from releasing it. "When a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor," unless those records are otherwise exempt from public disclosure. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). Accordingly, we have examined the relevant portions of the contract between Fluor Hanford and the DOE, and we conclude that under that agreement, Fluor Hanford's legal files are the property of Fluor Hanford, and are not subject to release under the agency records regulation. Accord, William H. Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,161 at 80,700 (1997).

The Director correctly determined that the document at issue is not an agency record, and is not subject to disclosure under the PA, the FOIA, or under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). We will therefore deny Mr. Hannum's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by David A. Hannum on April 4, 2002 is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are located, or in the District of Columbia.

July 2, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Steven Wallace

Date of Filing: May 6, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0735

On May 6, 2002, Steven Wallace (Wallace) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on February 21, 2002, by the Office of Inspector General (IG) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In 2001, Wallace wrote to the FOIA/Privacy Act Group at DOE headquarters and requested all documents pertaining to Former Deputy Secretary T.J. Glauthier's denial of redress for Wallace under the DOE Contractor Employee Protection Program. The FOIA/Privacy Act Group forwarded the request to the IG. The IG conducted a search of its files and located 103 responsive documents. On February 21, 2002, the IG notified Wallace in a determination letter that it was releasing 27 documents in their entirety and making partial disclosure of 30 documents. The remaining documents were either forwarded to the appropriate offices for determinations concerning their release or were documents created by the Appellant, and therefore not sent back to him in response to his FOIA request. Material in the partially disclosed documents was withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C). In this Appeal, Wallace challenges the IG's withholding of the 30 partially disclosed documents. As explained below, we will uphold the IG's determination regarding these documents.

II. Analysis

A. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). We find that the withheld documents meet the threshold test of Exemption 6 as they are "similar files," the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). The threshold requirement in any Exemption 7 inquiry is whether the documents are compiled for law enforcement purposes, that is, as part of or in connection with an agency law enforcement proceeding. See William Payne, 26 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1996); F.B.I. v. Abramson, 456 U.S. 615, 622 (1982) (Abramson). The IG is a law enforcement body charged with investigating and correcting waste, fraud or abuse in programs administered or financed by the DOE. See Inspector General Act of 1978, codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. app. §§ 2(1)-(2), 4(a)(1), (3)-(4), 6(a)(1)-(4), 7(a), 9(a)(1)(E). As a result of its duties, we find that the IG compiles reports involving official misconduct for "law enforcement purposes" within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1995).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3 (Exemption 6); Stone v. FBI, 727 F. Supp. 662, 663-663 (D.D.C. 1990) (Exemption 7(C)).

We have previously considered cases in which both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) were invoked, and we stated that in such cases, providing the Exemption 7 threshold requiring a valid law enforcementpurpose is met, we would analyze the withholding only under Exemption 7(C), the broader of the two exemptions. See, e.g., David Ridenour, 27 DOE ¶ 80,143 (1998); Richard Levernier, 26 DOE ¶ 80,182 (1997); K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1992). Since, as discussed below, the responsive documents that were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7 (C) were also compiled for law enforcement purposes, any document that satisfies Exemption 7(C)'s "reasonableness" standard will be protected. Conversely, documents not protected by Exemption 7(C) will be unable to satisfy Exemption 6's more restrictive requirement for withholding that release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

1. Privacy Interest

In its determination, the IG stated that the partially disclosed documents contain names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals involved in the IG's investigation of Wallace's complaint, which in this case include subjects, witnesses, sources of information and other individuals. According to the IG, these individuals are "entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions." Determination Letter at 1.

This office has contacted the IG to ascertain the specific type of information that was withheld from Wallace. The pertinent documents contain names of individuals who had some relation to the investigation. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals providing information to government investigators. See Department of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 154, 176 (1991) ("[t]he invasion of privacy becomes significant when personal information is linked to particular interviewees"); Safecard Services, Inc., v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Safecard); Blumberg, Seng, Ikeda & Albers, 25 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,563 (1995); James Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991). Therefore, we find that the individuals whose identities are being withheld in this case have significant privacy interests in maintaining their confidentiality.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). It is well settled that disclosure of the identity of individuals who have provided information to government investigators is not "affected with the public interest." See, e.g., Safecard, 926 F.2d at 1205. In his Appeal, Wallace did not offer any explanation of why he believes release of the material would be in the public interest. In fact, he did not address this issue at all. Therefore, we find that there is no public interest in the disclosure of the documents at issue.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether the disclosure of law enforcement records could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989); Safecard, 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991).

We have concluded above that there is a cognizable privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that Wallace has not provided any information about the existence of a public interest in the disclosure of the withheld information. After a thorough examination, we found no public interest in the withheld material. In the absence of any public interest to weigh against the real and identifiable privacy interest, the privacy interest must prevail.

B. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt. . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (1982). Our review of the documents found that the IG properly withheld information in the documents pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Therefore, we find that the IG properly disclosed only the non-exempt, reasonably segregable portions of the responsive material to Wallace.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Steven Wallace on May 6, 2002, OHA Case No. VFA-0735, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Jeffrey T. Richelson

Date of Filing: April 16, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0736

On April 16, 2002, Jeffrey Richelson appealed three determinations issued by the Albuquerque Operations Office (Albuquerque) of the Department of Energy (DOE) which denied his requests to be considered as a member of the news media and for fee waivers under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. For the reasons set forth below, we find that Mr. Richelson is a representative of the news media and remand these matters to Albuquerque to issue new determinations in response to Mr. Richelson's requests for a fee waiver.

BACKGROUND

On January 9, 2002, Mr. Richelson sent a FOIA request to Albuquerque in which he asked for copies of Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory (LASL) and Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) studies of the French nuclear weapons program produced between January 1, 1970 and December 31, 1985 (Control No. FOIA 02-008-A). On January 26, 2002, Mr. Richelson sent a FOIA request to Albuquerque in which he asked for a copy of a document entitled "D.B. Stillman and H.T. Hawkins, ?October 1990 Visit to China,' IT-DO-92-052, August 1992" (Control No. FOIA 02-012- A). On March 18, 2002, Mr. Richelson sent a FOIA request to Albuquerque in which he asked for copies of certain LASL and LANL studies of Indian nuclear tests (Control No. FOIA 02-032-A). In all three requests, Mr. Richelson asked Albuquerque to categorize him as a member of the news media and for a waiver of copying fees.

On March 27, 2002, Albuquerque issued three determinations that denied Mr. Richelson's requests to be categorized as a member of the news media and for waivers of copying charges. In all three determinations, Albuquerque concluded that Mr. Richelson was not a representative of the news media because he (1) is a free-lance writer who lacks the ability to deliver news directly to the public, (2) has failed to express a firm intention to publish documents related to information sought in the FOIA request, and (3) has failed to indicate that the planned publication pertains to a particular topic of current interest.

Albuquerque denied Mr. Richelson's requests for a waiver of copying fees on the grounds that he (1) failed to show how disclosure of the requested information would likely contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, (2) failed to demonstrate how the requested information would be disseminated, and (3) failed to demonstrate that disclosure of the requested information would contribute significantly to the public's understanding of the issues involved. In addition, Albuquerque denied Mr. Richelson's requests for a waiver of copying fees in Control No. FOIA 02-008-A and Control No. FOIA 02-032-A because he failed to show that the requested records have informative value with respect to any specifically identifiable operation or activity of the U.S. government.

By letter dated April 9, 2002, Mr. Richelson appealed these determinations to OHA. In his appeal, Mr. Richelson asserts that Albuquerque should have categorized him as a representative of the news media because he has an established history of publishing books and articles, intends to use the documents requested under the FOIA to write a book entitled “Spying on the Bomb, U.S. Intelligence and Foreign Nuclear Weapons Programs,” which is under contract to be published by W.W. Norton in the spring of 2005, and has been categorized as a representative of the news media by DOE on at least two occasions.(1) Appeal Letter.

In this appeal, Mr. Richelson also maintained that Albuquerque erroneously denied his requests for a waiver of copying fees. In support of this position, Mr. Richelson asserts that the production of studies on a foreign nuclear weapons program by a United States government organization is a specifically identifiable operation of the government and that nuclear intelligence activities are a very significant component of government operations and are a matter of public interest and importance. Mr. Richelson further maintains that publication of his book will disseminate the information to a broad audience and that Albuquerque has used the wrong standard to assess his arguments. Id.

ANALYSIS

The FOIA delineates three types of costs--"search costs," "duplication costs," and "review costs"-- and places requesters into three categories that determine which of these costs a given requester must pay. If a requester wants the information for a "commercial use," it must pay for all three types of costs incurred. In contrast, educational institutions and representatives of the news media are required to pay only duplication costs, and all other requesters are required to pay search and duplication costs but not review costs. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b). For the reasons detailed below, we find that, for the purposes of these FOIA requests, Mr. Richelson is a representative of the news media and should not be required to pay search and review costs. We also remand these matters to Albuquerque to issue new determinations in response to Mr. Richelson’s requests for a fee waiver.

A. Representative of the News Media

Under the DOE FOIA regulations, the term “representative of the news media" refers to:

any person actively gathering news for an entity that is organized and operated to publish or broadcast news to the public. The term "news" means information that is about current events or that would be of current interest to the public. Examples of news media entities include television or radio stations broadcasting to the public at large, and publishers of periodicals (but only in those instances when they can qualify as disseminators of "news") who make their products available for purchase or subscription by the general public. These examples are not intended to be all- inclusive. . . . In the case of "freelance" journalists, they may be regarded as working for a news organization if they can demonstrate a solid basis for expecting publication through that organization, even though not actually employed by it. A publication contract would be the clearest proof, but agencies may also look to the past publication record of a requester in making this determination.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.2 (m).

We find that Mr. Richelson is a representative of the news media. As set forth above, Mr. Richelson has an established history of publishing books and articles and intends to use the documents requested under the FOIA to write a book which is under contract to be published by W.W. Norton. Publication is projected to be in the spring of 2005. Under Section 1004.2(m), a freelance journalist with a publication contract may be regarded as a representative of the news media. See National Security Archive v. U.S. Department of Defense, 880 F.2d 1381 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (defines the term “representative of the news media” to include a person who gathers information of potential interest to a portion of the public, uses editorial skills to turn this information into a distinct work, and then distributes the work to an audience).

Moreover, our cases hold that a freelance journalist who intends to use documents requested under the FOIA to write a book is a representative of the news media. See John H. Carter, 21 DOE ¶ 80,122 (1991); David DeKok, 20 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1990). Finally, Mr. Richelson's proposed book about U.S. intelligence operations is "news" because the topic is of current interest to the public and will continue to be of interest when Mr. Richelson's book is published, which is projected to be in 2005. Accordingly, we conclude that Mr. Richelson is a representative of the news media.

B. Waiver of Copying Fees

Under the DOE FOIA regulations, the agency will furnish documents without charge if disclosure of the requested information is in the public interest "because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the Government and disclosure is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8).

In determining whether disclosure of the information is in the public interest, Section 1004.9 indicates that the FOIA Officer should consider the following four factors:

(1) Whether the subject of the request concerns "the operations or activities of the government;"

(2) Whether the disclosure of this information is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(3) Whether disclosure of this information will contribute to an understanding by the general public of the subject; and

(4) Whether disclosure of this information is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities.

Here we are unable to determine whether disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations and activities of government because all of the documents that have been located which are responsive to Mr. Richelson's FOIA requests are classified. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Terry Martin Apodaca, FOIA Officer, Albuquerque and Linda Lazarus, Staff Attorney, OHA (June 14, 2002). Until the classification reviews are complete, we cannot know what type of information, if any, will be released. As such, we cannot assess the significance of the information at issue and whether Mr. Richelson would be entitled to a waiver of copying fees. Accordingly, we will remand this matter to Albuquerque to issue new determinations on the waiver of copying fees that contain specific findings about the type of information that will be released in response to Mr. Richelson's FOIA requests.

We are, however, able to conclude that disclosure of the information would not be "primarily in the commercial interest of the requester." In determining whether disclosure of information is "primarily in the commercial interest of the requester," Section 1004.9 indicates that the FOIA Officer should consider the existence and magnitude of a commercial interest and the primary interest in disclosure. Section 1004.9(b)(3) also provides that "a request for records supporting the news dissemination function of the requester will not be considered to be a request for commercial use." Thus, as Mr. Richelson has made these requests as a representative of the news media, we find that disclosure of the requested information would not be primarily in his commercial interest. See also National Security Archive v. U.S. Department of Defense, 880 F.2d at 1388 (requests from news media entities in furtherance of their news gathering function are not for commercial use).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Jeffrey T. Richelson on April 16, 2002, OHA Case

No. VFA-0736, is hereby granted. This matter is hereby remanded to the Albuquerque Operations Office to issue new determinations consistent with this Decision and Order.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)We note that it is irrelevant that DOE has previously categorized Mr. Richelson as a representative of the news media because a determination of whether an individual or an entity is a representative of the news media must be made on a case-by-case basis in light of the totality of the circumstances in existence at the time of the request.

Case No. VFA-0739

May 8, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Qwest/GSD

Date of Filing: April 19, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0739

On April 19, 2002, the Government Systems Division of Qwest Communications International Inc. (Qwest) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Albuquerque Operations Office (DOE/AL) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on March 26, 2002. The determination was in response to a request for information submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, DOE/AL informed Qwest that it located no agency records responsive to its request, and that the documents requested were procurement records of a DOE contractor that are not subject to release under the FOIA or DOE regulations.

I. Background

On March 14, 2002, Qwest requested from DOE/AL a copy of "Contract AU06975," a document containing "terms and conditions for Verizon Corporation's performance of Sandia National Laboratories Operation and Maintenance (O&M) requirements." Letter from William McAndrew, Qwest, to DOE/AL (March 14, 2002); Appeal at 1. In its March 26, 2002 response to the request, DOE/AL informed Qwest that the Office of Kirtland Site Operations (OKSO) (formerly the Kirtland Area Office), [which has] oversight responsibility for the Sandia National Laboratories (SNL), searched for responsive documents but could not locate any. The OKSO further stated that . . . the records you are requesting are procurement records of the Sandia Corporation, and are, therefore, not "agency records" subject to the provisions of the FOIA.

Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, DOE/AL, to William McAndrew, Qwest (March 26, 2002) at 1. DOE/AL also found that "the contract between the DOE and the Sandia Corporation, clearly defines the records that you have requested as belonging to [Sandia] and not the DOE." Id. In its Appeal, Qwest states, Although Sandia is performing an inherent Government/DOE contracting function wherein copies of contracts are routinely releasable, they have refused our request since they are a privately owned contractor. We do not believe that the intent of the FOIA, as well as U.S. Government policy of full disclosure, should allow this administrative manipulation.

Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis the courts have fashioned for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as Sandia Corporation, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997) (LASG). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See LASG, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 & n.11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, the entity in possession of the requested contract is Sandia Corporation. Although Sandia Corporation is contracted by the DOE to operate the Sandia National Laboratories, the DOE does not supervise the contractor's day-to-day operations. We therefore conclude that Sandia Corporation is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA.

Although Sandia Corporation is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, their records responsive to the present request could become "agency records" if DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time Qwest made its FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). However, as discussed above, the DOE office responsible for oversight of Sandia National Laboratories searched for the contract at issue at the time of the request, and it did not have a copy. Based on these facts, the document does not qualify as an "agency record" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the records in question are the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under" the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

The relevant provisions in the contract between DOE and Sandia are as follows:

126. DEAR 970.5204-79 ACCESS TO AND OWNERSHIP OF RECORDS (JUN 1997) (See Clause H-18)

(a) Government-owned records. Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of this Contract shall be the property of the Government and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the contractor either as the Contracting Officer may from time to time direct during the process of the work or, in any event, as the Contracting Officer shall direct upon completion or termination of the contract.

(b) Contractor-owned records. The following records are considered the property of the contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) of this clause.

(3) Records relating to any procurement action by the contractor, except for records that under 48 CFR (DEAR) 970.5204-9, Accounts, Records, and Inspection, are described as the property of the Government; . . .

Contract No. DE-AC04-94AL85000, Clause I-126.

DOE/AL describes the contract sought by Qwest as a "procurement record." Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, DOE/AL, to William McAndrew, Qwest (March 26, 2002) at 1. We agree with this characterization, which is not disputed by the Appellant. As such, because the contract between DOE and Sandia Corporation provides that records "relating to any procurement action by the contractor" are not property of the Government, such records are not subject to release under DOE regulations.(1)

In sum, because we find that the document sought by Qwest is neither an agency record subject to the FOIA, nor a government-owned record subject to release under DOE regulations, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Qwest/GSD on April 19, 2002, Case No. VFA-0739, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S. C. §552 (a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1) The exception to the contractor's ownership of procurement records, found in 48 CFR (DEAR) 970.5204-9, Accounts, Records, and Inspection (Contract Clause I-74), encompasses "all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents, system files, data bases, and other data evidencing costs allowable, collections accruing to the contractor in connection with the work under this contract, other applicable credits, and fee accruals under this contract, . . ." We do not find that the contract requested by the Appellant would fall within this exception.

Case No. VFA-0742

October 2, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Jeffrey T. Richelson

Date of Filing: April 30, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0742

Jeffrey T. Richelson filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration's Nevada Operations Office issued to him on April 9, 2002. In that determination, the Nevada Operations Office denied a request for information that Mr. Richelson submitted on January 19, 2002, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. In that request, Mr. Richelson sought a copy of "the 1995 report of the Sewell review group on NEST," the Nuclear Emergency Search Team. The Nevada Operations Office reviewed the requested document, which has been identified as the "Nuclear Emergency Search Team Assessment Team Report," dated July 12, 1995. It determined that the document contained Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information (UCNI) and withheld the document in its entirety from Mr. Richelson pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA. Mr. Richelson has appealed this total withholding, contending that much of the document is not UCNI and should be released.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute of the type to which Exemption 3 refers. See, e.g., Greenpeace, 28 DOE ¶ 80,191 (2001); National Security Archive, 26 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1996); Barton J. Bernstein, 22 DOE ¶ 80,165 (1992); William R. Bolling, II, 20 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1990). Section 148 of the Atomic Energy Act directs the Department of Energy to issue regulations or orders to protect from unauthorized dissemination information that has been determined to contain UCNI. 42 U.S.C. § 2153(a). These regulations appear at 10 C.F.R. Part 1017.

The Director of Security Affairs has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 0204-139, Section 1.l (December 20, 1991). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Director of Security Affairs (now the Director of Security) (Director) reviewed the document that Mr. Richelson requested.

The Director determined on review that the document contains UCNI. He also determined, however, that the majority of the document's contents is not UCNI. The Director has provided this office with a copy of the document from which the UCNI has been withheld. Beside each deletion, "b3" has been written in the margin of the document. The denying officer for these withholdings is Joseph S. Mahaley, Director, Office of Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Director's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the continued withholding of certain portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the documents that the Director has now determined to be UCNI must be withheld from disclosure.

At this time, however, we will not provide a copy of the redacted version of the document to Mr. Richelson. At the Director's suggestion, we will remand this document to the Nevada Operations Office for a new review, in which it must consider whether any other provisions of the FOIA dictate that other portions of the document should not be released to Mr. Richelson. After completing its review, the Nevada Operations Office should either release the currently redacted version of the requested document or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for any additional information that it withholds from the document it provides to Mr. Richelson. Mr. Richelson will have the opportunity to appeal that determination, if he so desires. Accordingly, Mr. Richelson's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Jeffrey T. Richelson on April 30, 2002, Case No. VFA-0742, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A redacted version of the document entitled "Nuclear Emergency Search Team Assessment Team Report," dated July 12, 1995, bearing markings indicating where all Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information has been properly deleted, will be remanded to the Nevada Operations Office of the National Nuclear Security Administration. The Nevada Operations Office shall promptly review the document and either release it in its entirety or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for any additional information that it withholds from the copy it provides to Mr. Richelson.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner: Martin Becker

Date of Filing: May 6, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0743

On May 6, 2002, Martin Becker (Becker) filed a Motion for Reconsideration of a Decision and Order that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on May 2, 2002. Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0710 (May 2, 2002). The Decision and Order considered Becker's Appeal of a determination issued by the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) of the DOE on December 10, 2001.

I. Background

Becker filed a FOIA request with SR seeking a copy of a lease between Westinghouse Safety Management Solutions (WSMS) and the lessor Centennial, L.L.C. for office space in Building 3 of the Centennial Corporate Center in Aiken, South Carolina. Becker's request was the subject of three previous FOIA appeals. On December 10, 2001, SR issued a determination letter in which it released a copy of the Centennial lease to Becker. However, SR redacted portions of the Lease under FOIA Exemption 4. Specifically, SR redacted those portions of the lease which would reveal the following types of information: rate per square foot, rentable square feet (space actually rented by WSMS), lease term, expiration date, lease renewal option period, monthly rent, security deposit, phone service reimbursement, annual minimum rent, total rentable area in building, and utility reimbursement. SR claimed that the withheld information was confidential commercial information that would substantially harm the competitive position of both parties to the contract if released. Becker appealed SR's withholdings under Exemption 4 to this office. On May 2, 2002, OHA issued a decision and order upholding SR's withholdings under Exemption 4 and denying Becker's Appeal. Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0710 (May 2, 2002). On May 6, 2002, Becker filed the present motion for reconsideration contending that "OHA ignored specific law requiring the release of the information [he] requested." Motion for Reconsideration at 1.

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Nathaniel Hendricks, 25 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1996). We will exercise that discretion here to consider the issue raised by Becker's present motion.

II. Analysis

Becker's Motion for Reconsideration is based solely upon his contention that the Federal Acquisition Regulations (FAR) mandate that DOE must release the information SR has withheld under Exemption 4. Specifically, Becker argues that 48 C.F.R. § 15.503(b)(iv) of the FAR requires that "the items, quantities and any stated unit prices"of the lease be made publically available. Motion for Reconsideration at 1. Becker's reliance on the FAR is misplaced, however. The lease between Centennial and WSMS was not entered into or awarded under a FAR-based competitive procurement. May 22, 2002 Letter from Tim Fischer, Attorney-Advisor, Office of Chief Counsel, Savannah River Operations Office to George B. Breznay, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals, at 2. Accordingly, the provisions of the FAR cited by Becker are inapplicable to the circumstances of the present case.

For the above stated reason, Becker's Motion for Reconsideration will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Martin Becker on May 6, 2002, Case No. VFA- 0743, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S. C. §552 (a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner: Dorismae M. Meers

Date of Filing: June 3, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0748

On June 3, 2002, Dorismae Meers appealed a determination issued by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her appeal, Ms. Meers contends that Richland had failed to conduct an adequate search for documents that were responsive to a FOIA request that she had filed. For the reasons detailed below, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and will deny Ms. Meers' appeal.

BACKGROUND

By letter dated April 2, 2002, Ms. Meers filed a FOIA request with Richland in which she asked for the complete employment and radiation dose exposure records of her deceased father, George A. Schliep, Senior. In this letter, Ms. Meers indicated that Mr. Schliep had worked at the Hanford Atomic Site (Hanford Site) with the firm of Morrison, Bechtel and McCone from about 1943 to 1946.

On May 3, 2002, Richland issued a determination letter in response to Ms. Meers' FOIA request which contained the following information:

We have conducted a thorough search by name and Social Security Number and were unable to locate any employment records for your father, nor is there any indication that he was ever monitored for radiation exposure at Hanford. Therefore, your request must be denied.

Ms. Meers appealed this determination to OHA on the grounds that Richland had failed to conduct an adequate search for her father's records. In support of this appeal, Ms. Meers submitted evidence that her father had worked at the Hanford Site and argued that if an adequate search had been performed, Richland would have located her father's employment records.

ADEQUACY OF THE SEARCH

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. E.g. Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted Sarah Prein, a member of the Richland FOIA and Privacy Act staff, to obtain information about the search for Mr. Schliep's employment and radiation exposure records.(1) Ms. Prein told us that between 1943 and 1946, the Army Corps of Engineers managed the Hanford Site and that Richland does not have access to the personnel records for the Army Corps of Engineers.(2) See Electronic Mail Messages from Sarah Prein to Linda Lazarus, Staff Attorney, OHA (various dates).

Ms. Prein also told us that between 1943 and September of 1946, E. I. duPont de Nemours (Dupont) was the prime contractor at the Hanford Site. Ms. Prein indicated that the employment, medical and radiation exposure records of individuals whose employment terminated during the period when Dupont was the prime contractor were archived with Dupont and have subsequently been destroyed.(3) Ms. Prein also indicated that Richland has a list of the people who worked for Dupont. Id.

Ms. Prein further told us that General Electric became the prime contractor at the Hanford Site in September of 1946, and that Richland has custody of General Electric's (G.E.) personnel records from the contracting period.(4) Ms. Prein also indicated that although Richland does not have any employment records or a listing of the personnel who were employed by Morrison, Bechtel and McCone, it does have some personnel records for "craft" employees from a variety of small construction and trade contractors. Id.

Ms. Prein explained that Rhonda Renz has listings of employment records for craft employees and that Linda Maday has listings of employment records for former Hanford prime contractor employees and major sub-contractors, including the list of people who worked for Dupont.(5) Ms. Prein indicated that on April 9, 2002, she provided Ms. Maday and Ms. Renz with Mr. Schliep's name and social security number and asked them to search for Mr. Schliep's employment records. On April 10, 2002, after searching the records for craft employees, Ms. Renz indicated that she had no records for Mr. Schliep. On April 17, 2002, after searching the contractor and sub-contractor files and the list of Dupont employees, Ms. Maday informed Ms. Prein that she had been unable to locate any records that were responsive to the FOIA request that had been filed by Ms. Meers. Id.

Ms. Prein also told us that she faxed the FOIA request that she had received from Ms. Meers to Pacific Northwest National Laboratory's (PNNL) legal department and radiation exposure records group. She explained that PNNL's radiation records department maintains the Hanford Radiological Exposure Reporting System (REX), which is the site's comprehensive database for radiation exposure records. Moreover, Ms. Prein indicated that the records in this database are identifiable by name and social security number and contain information about the individuals who were monitored for radiation exposure while at Hanford. Ms. Prein further informed us that PNNL's legal department also communicates with the Human Resources department to verify employment with PNNL (also known as Battelle-Northwest). Battelle's contract with the government at the Hanford Site did not begin until 1965. Id.

Ms. Prein indicated that she was subsequently informed that PNNL's radiation records department had found no indication that Mr. Schliep was ever monitored for radiation exposure at the Hanford Site and that PNNL Legal could not locate any records about Mr. Schliep. Id.

Ms. Prein also informed us that on April 29, 2002, Mr. Schliep 's name, social security number, and date of birth were e-mailed to Cheryl Holland at the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation (HEHF). Ms. Prein explained that HEHF maintains all the occupational health and medical records for Richland. The records are cataloged by name and social security number and are not limited to employees of direct government contractors. On April 29, 2002, Ms. Holland informed Ms. Prein that she had been unable to locate any records about Mr. Schliep.(6) Id.

Based on this information, we conclude that Richland conducted a thorough and conscientious search for responsive records and followed procedures that were reasonably calculated to uncover the materials sought by Ms. Meers in her FOIA request. As detailed above, Richland contacted people who would have knowledge of whether relevant documents exist, and these individuals searched for records following appropriate procedures. As such, I find that the search for responsive documents was therefore adequate.(7)

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Dorismae M. Meers on June 3, 2002, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)During a telephone conversation, Ms. Prein told us that Richland has never disputed that Mr. Schliep worked at the Hanford site, but was only indicating that it had been unable to locate any records that reflected Mr. Schliep's employment. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sarah L. Prein and Linda Lazarus, OHA Staff Attorney (June 11, 2002).

(2)Ms. Prein indicated that, if such records exist, they would be in the possession of the Department of Defense, and would probably be located in the Military Personnel Records Center (MPRC). Ms. Meers may wish to contact the MPRC at the following address: National Personnel Records Center, Military Personnel Records, 9700 Page Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri 63132-5100.

(3)Ms. Prein also suggested, however, that it might be possible to obtain more information about the Dupont records from the Hagley Museum and Library, Business Archives, Attention Michael Nash, P.O. Box 3690, Wilmington, Delaware 19807-0630.

(4)The files are indexed on 3x5 cards in the Records Holding Area (RHA). The cards show the employee's name, payroll number, and the box number into which the employment record was retired.

(5)The listings that were searched refer to records that are stored, amongst other places, in the Federal Records Center in Seattle.

(6)Ms. Holland searched indices that identify records that are stored in the Federal Records Center in Seattle.

(7)During the pendency of the FOIA appeal, Ms. Meers located pay stubs that had been issued to her father by Morrison, Bechtel and McCone. We note that Richland has already conducted an adequate search for records that would indicate that Mr. Schliep worked for Morrison, Bechtel and McCone, and is not required to take further action based on the existence of these pay stubs.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: William D. Hooker, Sr.

Date of Filing: June 5, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0749

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that William D. Hooker, Sr. filed from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Savannah River Operations Office (SR). The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S. C § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In this determination, the Savannah River Operations Office released some responsive information. The Appeal, if granted, would require the SR to conduct a further search for a specific document.

I. Background

Mr. Hooker filed a request in which he sought information concerning seven various documents. On May 9, 2002, the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) issued a determination which provided Mr. Hooker with copies of the documents he requested, with the exception of item no. 2 - "SU-75- 41R; Radiocesium Levels in Black Vultures and Turkey Vultures" ("Vargo SREL"). Mr. Hooker was informed that the SR site found no documents responsive to his request for a copy of Vargo SREL. In his appeal, Mr. Hooker challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by SR.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-95 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at SR to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any documents existed that were responsive to Mr. Hooker's request for a copy of Vargo SREL. We were informed of the following. Upon receiving Mr. Hooker's request for information, the Savannah River Ecology Laboratory (SREL) searched its files and provided a copy of all the documents requested by Mr. Hooker with the exception of the Vargo SREL, which it could not locate. The SR then requested that Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) search its files. WSRC searched files in each of its departments, including its document control office, and found no responsive documents. The SR searched the DOE Public Reading Room database. This search yielded no responsive documents. See June 17, 2002 E-mail Message from Pauline Conner, SR, to Toni Brown, Office of Hearings and Appeals.

Based on the foregoing, we find no reason to believe that additional responsive documents subject to the FOIA exist at the DOE. SR conducted a search of the Savannah River Ecology Laboratory, various departments within the Westinghouse Savannah River Company, and the SR's Reading Room Database for responsive documents. These are the locations most likely to possess a copy of Vargo SREL, and they were searched. Given the facts, we believe SR's search was adequate. Accordingly, Mr. Hooker's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by William D. Hooker, Sr., Case No. VFA-0749, on June 5, 2002, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: International Union of Operating Engineers Fringe Benefit Fund

Date of Filing: July 3, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0750

On July 3, 2002, Mr. Richard Rodriguez on behalf of International Union of Operating Engineers Fringe Benefit Fund (International) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on May 17, 2002, by the Brookhaven Area Office (BAO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Rodriguez challenges the adequacy of BAO's search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

On March 25, 2002, Mr. Rodriguez filed a request for information in which he sought procurement information and copies of any labor and material payment bonds regarding work done at Brookhaven National Laboratory (BNL) by LaFramboise Well Drilling, Inc., covering the period August 2001 through October 2001. On May 17, 2002, BAO issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search for the requested information and did not locate any documents responsive to the request. According to BAO, due to the nature of the work, no bonds were required or obtained. See Determination Letter.

On July 3, 2002, Mr. Rodriguez filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Rodriguez challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by BAO and disputes the assertion by BAO that no bonds exist. Mr. Rodriguez asks that the OHA direct BAO to conduct a new search for the requested information. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca

Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076

(D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at BAO to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any documents responsive to Mr. Rodriguez' request might exist. Upon receiving Mr. Rodriguez' request for information, BAO conducted a search of its Business Management Divison records. In addition, the BNL contractor at BNL, the Brookhaven Science Associates, LLC (BSA), was contacted to conduct a search for responsive documents. Based on these searches, neither BAO nor BSA located any records responsive to Rodriguez' request. BAO stated that due to the nature of the work, no bonds were required or obtained.(1) However, BAO did provide the requester with some contractor-held information, which was not required to be released under the FOIA. In a telephone conversation with officials of BAO, BAO reiterated that its search did not locate documents responsive to the Appellant's request. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Louis Sadler, BAO, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (July 31, 2002).

Given the facts presented to us, we find that BAO conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Rodriguez' request. Accordingly, Mr. Rodriguez' Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by International Union of Operating Engineers Fringe Benefit Fund, OHA Case No. VFA-0750, on July 3, 2002 is hereby denied.

(1) In his Appeal Letter, Rodriguez asserts that "pursuant to the Miller Act § 270(a) contractors are required to furnish payment and performance bonds before any contract is awarded." See Appeal Letter. This argument is incorrect. BAO has informed us that the work in question involved "drilling wells for testing purposes in the site precharacterization phase of that particular remediation system." The statutory cite the Appellant refers to relates to construction projects. According to BAO, "the wells were not a part of a remediation system (e.g. pump and treat system) that would be considered a construction project requiring Miller Act performance or payment bonds." See Electronic Message from Louis Sadler, BAO to Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (August 6, 2002).

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Iva D. Moore

Date of Filing: June 14, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0752

On June 14, 2002, Iva D. Moore filed an Appeal from a determination the DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office (DOE/OR) issued on May 16, 2002. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Ms. Moore requested from DOE/OR a copy of any and all of the following records of her husband, DOE contractor employee Elbert Ray Moore, . . .

Medical Records Industrial Hygiene Records

Chest X-Rays Personnel Records

Radiation Exposure RecordsPersonnel Security File

OPM background investigation

[Mr. Moore] was employed at the Bendix/Allied Signal/Honeywell plant in Kansas City, Missouri from 1949 through 1983. Mr. Moore is now deceased.

Letter from Mark A. Kille, Boyd & Kenter, P.C., to Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR (October 25, 2001). In a May 16, 2002 determination letter, DOE/OR informed Ms. Moore that a "search of the files of [DOE/OR] was conducted. However, no records could be found." Letter from Amy Rothrock to Mark A. Kille (May 16, 2002).

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, we contacted DOE/OR and found out the following regarding its search. DOE/OR holds certain records containing information on employees of contractors of the DOE and its predecessor agencies "from the 40's through the late 50's." These records are kept in boxes in a classified warehouse. Electronic mail from Amy Rothrock to Steven Goering, OHA (June 14, 2002). The records are not indexed, and so the boxes have to be searched manually - folders contain documents such as rosters of multiple names and data which have to be searched line by line. This data was never organized so that the data could be retrievable by identifier.

For this request, we searched the Records Holding Area where these boxes are for Privacy Act records (retrievable by his identifier), and the Oak Ridge Associated Universities epidemiology records by identifier. Since he never worked at Oak Ridge and his employers (Bendix, Allied Signal and Honeywell) at Kansas City had no contracts with Oak Ridge, those two locations in Oak Ridge were the only reasonable repositories to search at Oak Ridge. Since his employers had DOE contracts with the Kansas City Plant through DOE Albuquerque, it is reasonable that Albuquerque should send it to their Kansas City Plant for a search of former contractor employee files [at] that site.

Electronic mail from Amy Rothrock to Steven Goering, OHA (June 18, 2002). DOE/OR has forwarded a copy of Ms. Moore's request to the DOE's Albuquerque Operations Office, which will issue a separate response to Ms. Moore.

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that DOE/OR performed a diligent search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records Ms. Moore sought. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Iva D. Moore, Case Number VFA-0752, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner: Martin Becker

Date of Filing: July 3, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0753

Martin Becker files this Motion for Reconsideration of a Decision and Order issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. §§ 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0710, 28 DOE ¶ 80,222 (2002). As explained below, we will deny this Motion.

I. Background

The present case has a long and complex background. In September 2000, Becker requested a copy of a lease executed by Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) or its affiliates for office space at the Centennial Corporate Center in Aiken, South Carolina. In the course of a series of appeals, we found that the lease in question was executed by Westinghouse Safety Management Solutions (WSMS), a firm that contracts with WSRC to provide support for WSRC's role as the management and operating contractor at the Savannah River Site. WSMS was a subsidiary of WSRC at the time it first executed the lease, but is now an independent firm. In addition, we found that the lease was not subject to release under the Freedom of Information Act, but was subject to release under the DOE's Contractor Records regulation, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). See Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0627, 28 DOE ¶ 80,133 (2000); Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0649, 28 DOE ¶ 80,153 (2001); Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0666, 28 DOE ¶ 80,187 (2001); Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0704, 28 DOE ¶ 80,201 (2001).

On December 10, 2001, the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) released a copy of the lease to Becker, but withheld certain data pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Exemption 4 protects from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). The data withheld were: rate per square foot, rentable square feet (space actually rented by WSMS), lease term, expiration date, lease renewal option period, monthly rent, security deposit, phone service reimbursement, annual minimum rent, total rentable area in building, and utility reimbursement. SR asserted, pursuant to Exemption 4 case law, that the withheld data were confidential information, and were protected because release would impair the government's ability to obtain similar data in the future, and would cause competitive harm to the person from whom the information was obtained.

The present case marks the third time that Becker has appealed SR's withholding of data. In his initial Appeal of the determination, Becker argued that there was no evidence that disclosure of the responsive material would impair the government's ability to obtain future documents, and that there was no competitive harm to the lessor. We denied Becker's Appeal and upheld SR's withholding. Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0710, 28 DOE ¶ 80,222 (2002).

In his second Appeal, Becker asserted that release of the withheld data was required under the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR). He claimed that the withheld data fell within the provisions of the FAR at 48 C.F.R. § 15.503(b)(iv), which requires the disclosure of "items, quantities and any stated unit prices" of successful competitive offers. We rejected Becker's assertion, finding that the lease between WSMS and Centennial Partners was not entered into or awarded under a FAR-based competitive procurement.

The basis for our finding was a letter we received from Timothy Fisher, a DOE attorney at the Savannah River site, who was familiar with the contract and who stated that WSMS's lease was not subject to the FAR. We therefore concluded that the provisions of the FAR cited by Becker were inapplicable to the lease and that release of the withheld data was not mandated by the FAR. Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0743 (June 4, 2002).

In his present Motion, Becker renews his claim that the FAR mandates disclosure of the withheld data. He now argues that "since it has been repeatedly admitted that appropriated funds are being used for the lease, the WSMS lease by definition is governed by the FAR - see 48 C.F.R. § 2.101 (?Acquisition' and ? Contract').(1) He later amended his Motion, first to include a claim that a contractual provision mandates release of the withheld data, and later to claim that some of the data he sought had been published in a DOE report, and that DOE had therefore waived its right to withhold it under a FOIA exemption.

II. Analysis

Applicability of the FAR

We find that Becker has misread the FAR in claiming that it applies to the information he seeks. According to the terms of the FAR, its provisions apply only to acquisitions made by the federal government, not to acquisitions made by a private entity such as WSMS. For example, the section titled "Purpose" states that "the Federal Acquisition Regulations System is established for the codification and publication of uniform policies and procedures for acquisition by all executive agencies." 48 C.F.R. § 101.1 (emphasis added).

Furthermore, the provisions cited by Becker not only fail to support his argument, but confirm that the FAR does not apply to transactions between private entities. For example, the FAR definition of "acquisition" cited by Becker states that an acquisition is "the acquiring by contract with appropriated funds of supplies or services (including construction) by and for the use of the Federal Government through purchase or lease...." 48 C.F.R. § 2.101 (definition of "Acquisition") (emphasis added).

Similarly, the FAR definition of "contract" cited by Becker states that a contract is "a mutually binding legal relationship obligating the seller to furnish the supplies or services ... and the buyer to pay for them. It includes all types of commitments that obligate the Government to an expenditure of appropriated funds...." 48 C.F.R. § 2.101 (definition of "Contract") (emphasis added).

Based on the definitions cited above, we find that the lease at issue is not subject to the provisions of the FAR. The lease provides a private company with office space, but it does not effect the acquisition of any supplies or services by the DOE or any other federal agency. It obligates WSMS to pay rent, but does not obligate the federal government to any expenditure of funds. The lease is an agreement between two private parties, and the provisions of the FAR have no applicability to it.(2) We therefore reject Becker's claim that the disclosure provisions of the FAR require the release of the withheld data.

Release under Contractual Provisions

Becker amended his present Motion to include a claim that the data withheld by SR in must be disclosed under the terms of the contract between the DOE and WSRC. In support of his claim, Becker cites Paragraph H.40 of the contract, headed "Release of Subcontractor Information." The paragraph states:

The purchasing system ... must provide for notification to bidders/offerors that an abstract of bids/offers/proposals containing the names of bidders/offerors and the lump sum or unit prices submitted will be released after award to any interested party.... In no event will the Contractor release other information regarding a bid/offer/proposal without the written permission of the submitting firm.

The applicability of this paragraph depends on whether the data withheld by SR in this case - rate per square foot, rentable square feet (space actually rented by WSMS), lease term, expiration date, lease renewal option period, monthly rent, security deposit, phone service reimbursement, annual minimum rent, total rentable area in building, and utility reimbursement - fall within the definition of unit prices. We find they do not.

In the letter cited above, Fisher, the attorney at SR, stated that "the lease terms sought by Mr. Becker are not ?unit prices' as contemplated by the FAR and routinely contained in a bid for a government contract.... The cases in which courts have released contract prices or costs have relied on the fact that unit prices are made up of so many variables that it would make it extremely difficult or impossible to derive specific information that could cause competitive harm."

We agree with Fisher's position. As we have stated previously,

... courts have held that the release of "unit prices" would not provide information that would competitively harm the submitter of the information because the unit prices are themselves composed of many components which would still remain hidden or are highly variable. See, e.g., Pacific Architects & Engineers v. Department of State, 906 F. 2d 1345 (9th Cir. 1990); Acumenics Research & Tech., Inc. v. Department of Justice, 843 F. 2d 800 (4th Cir. 1988). Unlike those cases, the rental fees ... would constitute a single price element of [the submitter's] cost....

B.P. Exploration, Inc., Case No. VFA-0503, 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 (1999).

The data requested by Becker are not composed of many components, but are individual cost elements. They are therefore not unit prices, and not subject to release under the contractual provision cited by Becker. See also Burns Concrete, Inc., Case No. VFA-0284, 26 DOE ¶ 80,185 (1997).

Waiver

In his second amendment to his Motion, Becker claimed that the DOE had waived its right to withhold the data under Exemption 4 because it had previously disclosed the data. Becker's claim is based on the principle that if an agency has previously disclosed certain data, it may have waived its ability to later withhold the data under a FOIA exemption. Carson v. United States Department of Justice, 631 F.2d 1008, 1016 n.30 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Carson). Determining whether such a waiver has been made requires a careful analysis of the specific nature of, and circumstances surrounding, the prior disclosure involved. Carson, 631 F.2d at 1016 n.30.

The threshold consideration is whether the prior disclosure matches the exempt information in question. If the requested information differs in some material respect from that which the requester claimed had been released previously, then no waiver has occurred. The burden is on the requester to establish that the requested information is duplicative of the disclosed information. Ashfar v. Department of State, 702 F.2d 1125, 1132 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Ashfar).

In claiming the withheld information was previously disclosed, Becker cites a report issued by the DOE's Office of the Inspector General, titled "Privatization of Safety Management Practices at the Savannah River Site," report number DOE/IG-0559, issued June 18, 2002. Appendix 2 of the report includes a table headed "Comparison of Actual Cost to Recommended Cost." The table shows actual costs billed by WSMS from 1998 to 2001, divided among four categories: "Direct Labor," "Indirect Labor," "WSRC Support," and "Subcontract Cost." These categories are not broken down further. A second table shows estimated costs for WSRC if equivalent work had been performed in-house, rather than subcontracted to WSMS. A footnote to the second table states that "other indirect costs include items such as computer hardware and software, indirect support subcontracts, rent/leases, travel, division overhead, and facilities and utilities costs." Referring to this section, Becker asks whether "the public disclosure of category costs that reference the inclusion of rent/leases and facilities costs for WSMS provides a basis for the release of the WSMS leases that I have requested?"(3)

We find that Becker's claim of waiver is unfounded. The category of "Indirect Costs" includes "rent/leases" among a number of other unrelated costs. There is no ascertainable method for calculating the lease data that Becker is requesting. Thus, the table is not duplicative of the withheld data, and, under the Ashfar decision, no waiver has occurred.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that the lease between WSMS and Centennial Partners is not subject to the FAR, and that the disclosure provisions of the FAR are therefore inapplicable to it. In addition, we find that the withheld data are not subject to mandatory release under the terms of the contract between the DOE and WSRC. Finally, we find that the publication of the data in the Inspector General's report cited by Becker does not waive the DOE's right to invoke a FOIA exemption for the material withheld from the lease. We will therefore deny Becker's Motion for Reconsideration.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Martin Becker, Case No. VFA-0753, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)” Whether WSMS received "appropriated funds" is an open question. We have made no finding on the issue, but found rather that "WSMS pays rent on the lease while performing its contract with WSRC, and receives reimbursement for at least part of the rent under the terms of that contract.... WSRC then charges the costs that it pays to WSMS to DOE, under the terms of its contract with the agency..." Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,187 (2001).

(2) As explained in the previous footnote, WSMS is compensated by the DOE, through WSRC, for some portion of the rent it pays to Centennial Partners. However, WSMS is obligated to pay rent whether it receives federal funding or not.

Case No. VFA-0754

December 19, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Cynthia Frey Nordstrom

Date of Filing: July 9, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0754

On July 9, 2002, Cynthia Frey Nordstrom (Nordstrom) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's Office of the Inspector General (IG). In that determination, the IG released some documents in their entirety, released some documents with redactions, and withheld some documents in their entirety. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On February 15, 2002, Nordstrom filed a FOIA request for copies of documents related to an IG investigation conducted into alleged drug use and leave abuse in the Office of Pipeline Certificates at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC). Letter from Nordstrom to IG (February 15, 2002). The IG released three documents in their entirety, released 32 documents with material withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C), and released two documents with material withheld under Exemptions 5, 6, and 7(C). Letter from IG to Nordstrom at 1 (May 9, 2002) (Determination Letter). On July 9, 2002, Nordstrom filed this Appeal with OHA protesting the failure of the IG to release to her the interviews of Maynard Ugol (a FERC official who retired in 1997) and Deborah Grayson, a secretary at FERC. Letter from Nordstrom to Director, OHA (July 9, 2002). Nordstrom argues that the IG released a "heavily redacted, partial response that gave the impression that the investigation had ended months before Maynard Ugol testified to IG investigator, Yvette Milam." Appellant's Comments on FOIA Exemption 6 and Public Interest (December 6, 2002).

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard). Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

B. Exemption 7(C)

Exemption 7(C) applies to a much narrower class of cases than Exemption 6, but it has a less exacting standard that provides more expansive coverage. Pursuant to Exemption 7(C), agencies may withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that the production of such law enforcement records or information . . . (C) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of a personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii). Both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) require a balance of the interest in personal privacy in the withheld information against the public interest in the same information. There are, however, two significant differences between Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Pursuant to Exemption 7(C), the information must have been compiled for law enforcement purposes. Furthermore, since Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold information where there is only a reasonable expectation of an "unwarranted invasion of personal privacy," Exemption 7(C) has a lower threshold of privacy interest than Exemption 6 where the balancing test calls for a "clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy." Pursuant to the provisions of Exemption 7(C), we have examined investigations conducted by the IG in response to complaints by individuals, as in this case, and found that they are law enforcement activities. See, e.g., Stoel Rives, LLP, 25 DOE ¶ 80,189 at 80,723 (1996); Robert Burns, 19 DOE ¶ 80,134 at 80,596-97 (1989). Since the documents at issue in this case meet Exemption 7(C)'s threshold test, we need only examine the IG's actions pursuant to the standard of Exemption 7(C), i.e., whether release of the withheld material would result in a reasonable expectation of an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See, e.g., J. G. Truher, 26 DOE ¶ 80,154 (1997); Burlin McKinney, 25 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,620 (1995); K.D. Moseley, 22 DOE ¶ 80,124 at 80,550 (1992).

C. Privacy Interest of the Interviewees

This office has reviewed unredacted copies of the material that the IG withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) and found that it contains the names, titles and addresses of those individuals who were interviewed during the course of the IG's investigation. All of the individuals whose names and identifying information were withheld are either actual sources or possible sources in the investigation into alleged drug and leave abuse at FERC. We have previously found that there is a strong privacy interest in the names and related identifying information of sources and witnesses to an investigation. Sources and witnesses have an obvious privacy interest in remaining anonymous. See James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,524 (1990). Furthermore, the public interest favors protecting the identities of sources and witnesses, rather than disclosing them, to ensure that witnesses continue to provide information voluntarily for law enforcement investigations, without fear of retribution. See generally King v. Department of Justice, 830 F.2d 210, 232-36 (D.C. Cir 1987). Since there are strong privacy and public interests in protecting these identities, we find that the IG properly withheld the names and other identifying information of the interviewees.

D. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest in the identity of a witness in an investigation, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996) (Flor). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Id. (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)).

Ms. Nordstrom argues that the public has an interest in the alleged misconduct of a high ranking government official. She further contends that withholding testimony under Exemption 6 will "conceal waste, fraud and abuse, and other inappropriate and unlawful behavior in government, and expose the inappropriate and retaliatory conduct of FERC management and the IG." Appellant's Comments at 2. According to Nordstrom, the testimony of Ugol and Grayson is critical to proving her complaint. Id.

We conclude that Ms. Nordstrom has not demonstrated, and we do not find, any public interest in the disclosure of the requested information. She merely speculates that agency misconduct exists, and can only speculate that Ugol and Grayson might provide supportive testimony for her complaint. The D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals found that "when . . . Governmental misconduct is alleged as the justification for disclosure, the public interest is "insubstantial" unless the requester puts forward ?compelling evidence that the agency denying the FOIA request is engaged in illegal activity' and shows that the information sought ?is necessary in order to confirm or refute that evidence.' " Davis v. Department of Justice, 968 F.2d 1276, 1282 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (quoting Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197, 1205-1206 (D.C. Cir. 1991). See also Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,123 (2000). Moreover, we find that release of the names (and other identifiers) of the interviewees in this investigation would not aid the public in understanding how FERC performs its statutory duties.(1) Therefore, in view of the fact that there is no apparent public interest to balance against the significant potential invasion of personal privacy, we find that the IG properly withheld the names and identifying information of the interviewees. (2).

E. Segregable Information

The FOIA also requires the agency to provide to the requester any reasonably segregable portion of a record after deletion of the portions that are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). See also FAS Engineering Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,131 (1998), quoting Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971) (factual material must be disclosed unless inextricably intertwined with exempt material).

This office performed a simultaneous page-by-page comparison of the unredacted IG file and the redacted information that was released to the requester. There was sufficient information in each document of the redacted package to make sense of the documents and to determine the subject of each interview. Dates were not redacted, interviews were clearly identified as such, and the IG did not redact sections that described the subject matter of the investigation or the purpose of the interview. Therefore, we find that the IG properly released all segregable, non-exempt factual material in this case.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Cynthia Frey Nordstrom, on July 9, 2002, OHA Case No. VFA-0754, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1) Ms. Nordstrom continues a friendly correspondence with Ugol in his retirement, and submitted copies of their email messages for the record in this case. There is no evidence in the messages that Ms. Nordstrom has ever asked Ugol to examine the material that the IG sent to her in order to confirm or deny her allegation that his testimony, if it exists, was withheld.

(2)Consequently, if the testimony of Ugol and Grayson is in the IG file, FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C) prevent us from releasing their identities to Ms. Nordstrom.

Case No. VFA-0755

August 20, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Elaine M. Blakely

Date of Filing: July 15, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0755

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Elaine M. Blakely filed from a determination issued to her by the Acting Assistant Inspector General for Inspections, Office of Inspector General (OIG). In this determination, OIG responded to Ms. Blakely's request for information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her Appeal, Ms. Blakely challenges the adequacy of the search for responsive documents.

In her FOIA request, Ms. Blakely sought access to information pertaining to allegations, made in communications with the OIG, about the handling of hazardous wastes at the Fluor Fernald Waste Pits Remedial Action Project. Specifically, she requested a copy of the findings of any investigation of her allegations, and for the documentation supporting those findings. In its response, OIG identified 50 documents as being responsive to Ms. Blakely's request. Of these 50 documents, 11 were released in their entirety, seven were released with portions withheld pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) and (b)(7)(C) (Exemptions 6 and 7(C)) of the FOIA, 15 originated in other DOE Offices and were referred to those Offices for the issuance of separate determinations, and the remaining 17 documents were not provided since they either originated from Ms. Blakely or had previously been provided to her. In her Appeal, Ms. Blakely states that there was nothing in the information provided that would indicate that a formal investigation had been performed.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted OIG. We were informed that when Ms. Blakely's allegations were received by OIG, a case file was established. The contents of this file were identified as responsive to Ms. Blakely's request. See memorandum of July 25, 2002 telephone conversation between Caroline Nielsen, OIG, and Robert Palmer, OHA staff attorney. Also, we were informed that the allegations were referred to the DOE's Assistant Secretary for Environmental Management and the Ohio Field Office for an investigation into the merits of the allegations. See memorandum of August 12, 2002 telephone conversation between Ruby Isla, OIG, and Mr. Palmer. As previously indicated, documents located in the OIG file which were generated by these Offices were referred to the Offices for the issuance of separate determinations to Ms. Blakely. It is quite possible that the information that she seeks is included in those documents. In any event, there is no reason to believe that responsive documents existed outside of the OIG file. Based on the information before us, we find that the search for responsive documents was reasonably calculated to uncover the information sought, and was therefore adequate.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Elaine M. Blakely in Case No. VFA-0755 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Lon L. Peters

Date of Filing: June 24, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0756

On June 24, 2002, Lon L. Peters (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on May 22, 2002, by the Department of Energy's Bonneville Power Administration (BPA). In that determination, BPA responded to a Request for Information filed on February 18, 2002, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. BPA's determination released several responsive documents to the Appellant. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release additional information to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On March 21, 2001, the Appellant filed a request for information with BPA seeking

. . . copies of all executed contracts entered into by [BPA] that have been, are or will be included in the calculation of ?Augmentation Pre-Purchase Costs' (as exemplified on line 1 of Table 4 in the LB-CRAC workshop handout distributed by BPA on February 14, 2002, attached), for the period from October 1, 2001 through September 30, 2006.

Determination Letter at 1 (quoting Appellant's March 21, 2001 request for information). On May 22, 2001, BPA issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) indicating that it was releasing several responsive documents to the Appellant. However, six of the documents released by the Determination Letter were released in redacted form. These six documents were described in the Determination letter as "agreements between BPA and Direct Service Industry customers." The information that was redacted from these six documents was described in the Determination Letter as "tables . . . that display the customer's unique financial information," "price and revenue information," "transaction details (months, demand limit, hours price etc.)," "proprietary financial information," "a diurnal power amount table," and "power amounts and rates." BPA provided the following justification for these withholdings:

These Direct Service Industry customers consider this information to be business sensitive. BPA has withheld this information pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) (Exemption 4 of the FOIA). This commercial information is confidential. All Direct Service Industry customers have requested BPA to redact and withhold from public disclosure such information. The release of this information would provide the competitors of each Direct Service Industry customer with information not otherwise publicly available concerning each customer's operating plans. This information is commercially sensitive and if released, could cause significant competitive harm to the customer. In addition this information has been traditionally protected from disclosure under the FOIA by BPA.

Determination Letter at 2. On June 24, 2002, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal in which it challenges the adequacy of BPA's withholding determinations. Specifically, the Appellant contends:

BPA has redacted the price charged for power under certain contracts where BPA sells power to direct service industry customers, the amount of power provided under certain contracts, and when it will sell power under certain contracts. While this may be information arrived at through negotiations with a person outside the government, the information was not ?obtained' from a person outside the government but was in fact developed by the government. It is not private confidential information but government information. Therefore it is not exempt from disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4).

Appeal at 2.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen).

If, as in the present case, the material does not constitute a trade secret, a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criterion. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997) (appeal pending). The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has specifically held that the term "commercial," as used in the FOIA, includes anything "pertaining or relating to or dealing with commerce." American Airlines, Inc. v. National Mediation Bd., 588 F.2d 863, 870 (2d Cir. 1978). The information at issue in the present case is clearly commercial and financial in nature.

Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). The term "person" in the context of Exemption 4 applies to a wide range of entities, including corporations, associations and public or private organizations. See, e.g., Allnet Communication Services, Inc. v. Federal Communications Commission, 800 F. Supp. 984, 988 (D.D.C.1992), aff'd, No. 92-5351 (D.C. Cir. May 27, 1994). The only type of entity that is not a considered a "person" under Exemption 4 is an agency of the federal government. See Federal Open Market Committee v. Merrill, 443 U.S. 340, 360, 99 S. Ct. 2800 (1979).

In the present case, the Appellant contends that some of the information withheld by BPA was not "obtained from a person" since it was created as a result of negotiations between BPA and direct service industry customers. The Appellant is correct in concluding that the withheld information was created as a result of negotiations between BPA and its direct service industry customers. However, the fact that the information was created in such a fashion does not preclude a conclusion that it was "obtained from a person." Under the FOIA, information contained within an agency record is either "inter- or intra-agency" or "obtained from a person." In some circumstances, it is not readily apparent which of these two categories a particular item of information belongs in. This difficulty arises because some information, such as the information at issue in the present case, is obtained or created through collaboration or interaction between the government and outside entities. Accordingly, in order to determine whether information was "obtained from a person" in the context of an Exemption 4 analysis it is useful to consider whether such information meets Exemption 5's inter- or intra- agency threshold.

In a recent Exemption 5 case, the United States Supreme Court articulated a new test for determining whether communications between an outside entity and a government agency could be considered inter- or intra-agency in nature. In Department of Interior v. Klamath Water Users, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath), the Court found that some records created or obtained by outside consultants played essentially the same part in an agency's process of deliberation as documents prepared by agency personnel. In such instances, the Court found that the information was intra- or inter- agency in nature. The Court explained:

[T]he fact about the consultant in the typical cases is that the consultant does not represent an interest of its own, or the interest of any other client, when it advises the agency that hires it. Its only obligations are to truth and its sense of what good judgment calls for, and in those respects the consultant functions just as an employee would be expected to do.

Id., 121 S. Ct. at 1066-67. Conversely, the Court in Klamath found that communications between an agency and an outside entity that was not acting as an objective outside consultant are clearly not inter-agency or intra-agency documents. Id., 121 S. Ct. at 1067-69. Application of the Klamath test to the present case, reveals that the information at issue cannot be considered "inter-agency or intra- agency" communications pursuant to Exemption 5. It is the product of communications that occurred between BPA and outside parties (the direct service industries) that were clearly not acting as objective outside consultants, since at the time they were negotiating with BPA in efforts to obtain the most favorable business arrangements possible. Since the withheld information cannot be considered to be intra- or inter-agency in nature, we find that it was, for the purposes of the FOIA, "obtained from a person." Such a determination is in accord with our previous determinations in which we have concluded that information created or obtained as a result of negotiations between an agency and an outside entity is "obtained from a person" for Exemption 4 purposes. See, e.g., B.P. Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 at 80,797 (1999); William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999).

Finally, in order to determine whether information of this type can be withheld under Exemption 4, an agency must consider whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must determine that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Once an agency decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (Kleppe); Digital City Communications, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,149 at 80,657 (1997); Data Technology Industries, 4 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1979). This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., 26 DOE ¶ 80,202 at 80,816 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Thus, if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,204 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA"). In the present case, BPA's conclusory Exemption 4 determinations do not meet the requirements set forth above. In order to meet the requirements set forth above, BPA needs to provide both a more through description of the information it is withholding as well as an explanation of the reasoning underlying its conclusion that release of this information could reasonably be expected to cause its direct service industry customers substantial competitive harm.

Accordingly, we shall remand this Appeal to BPA for a more thorough justification of its withholdings. On remand, BPA must then either release the information it has withheld or issue a new determination letter providing a detailed justification showing that it has applied the Exemption 4 analysis set forth above and the results of this analysis.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Lon L. Peters, Case No. VFA-0756, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

APPEAL

Name of Petitioner: Hazel S. Jones

Date of Filing: July 9, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0757

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Hazel S. Jones filed from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office. In that determination the Oak Ridge Operations Office informed Mrs. Jones that no documents were located that were responsive to a request for information that she filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct a further search for responsive materials.

BACKGROUND

In her request, Mrs. Jones sought copies of all documentation pertaining to Mr. Harvey R. Frye, her deceased father. The records requested were medical records, personnel records, radiation exposure records, industrial hygiene records, the personnel security file and the OPM Background Investigation of Mr. Frye. On June 10, 2002, Oak Ridge issued a determination letter regarding Mrs. Jones's request. Oak Ridge's determination letter stated that a search had been conducted and no documents responsive to Mrs. Jones's request could be found. See Determination Letter. On July 9, 2002, Mrs. Jones filed her Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In the Appeal, Mrs. Jones challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge, since her father died on the premises of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in 1945.

ANALYSIS

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a standard of reasonableness. McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at the Oak Ridge Operations Office to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mrs. Jones's request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Mrs. Jones's request for information, Oak Ridge instituted a search of the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge, Paducah and Portsmouth sites. The records searched were located at the Records Holding Offices, the Oak Ridge Associated Universities, and the Y-12, X-10, and Bechtel Jacobs (formerly K-25) Plants. The searches were done electronically and manually, by using Mr. Harvey Frye's name and Social Security Number. The Y-12 National Security Complex was unsuccessful in locating any personnel, medical, industrial hygiene, and occupational radiation exposure records pertaining to Mr. Frye. The ORNL (Oak Ridge National Laboratory) instituted a search of its personnel monitoring databases (both current and old) and also searched its health and safety record management systems for any personal monitoring data records of former employees; the ORAU (Oak Ridge Associated Universities) searched their files, Bechtel Jacobs searched the Portsmouth Historical Database and its BJC Personnel Dosimetry Files; and the Health Physics Office and the Safety & Ecology Corporation located at the Paducah Site searched their Radiation Exposure and Personal Dosimetry Records. The search of these offices yielded no responsive documents. See Memorandum of July 16, 2002 Telephone Conversation between Leah Ann Schmidlin, Legal Assistant, Oak Ridge, and Toni Brown, Paralegal Specialist, Office of Hearings and Appeals.

Based on the foregoing, we find no reason to believe that any responsive documents exist. Also, the DOE has reviewed similar searches and determined them to be legally adequate. American Friends Service Committee, 28 DOE ¶ 80,183 (2001); Mary L. Michel, 27 DOE ¶ 80,269 (2000). We conclude that the Oak Ridge Operations Office's search for responsive documents was adequate, and that Mrs. Jones' Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Hazel S. Jones, on July 9, 2002, Case No. VFA-0757, is hereby denied.

Case No. VFA-0758

September 4, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Newhouse News Service

Date of Filing: July 9, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0758

On July 9, 2002, Newhouse News Service (Newhouse) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 19, 2002 by the FOIA and Privacy Act Division (FOIA Division) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination concerned a request for information that Newhouse submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, DOE would be ordered to release the information withheld and to search for additional responsive documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information which may be withheld at the discretion of an agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that a document exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public, whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On March 2, 2001, Newhouse filed a FOIA request seeking the names of aluminum industry representatives who met with Secretary of Energy Spencer Abraham on or about February 13, 2001. In addition, Newhouse asked for correspondence or briefing papers that were distributed at the meeting. See Appeal Letter at 1. On June 19, 2002, the FOIA Division issued a determination which stated that two responsive documents were located. The FOIA Division provided Newhouse with one of these documents in its entirety. The other document was provided to Newhouse with certain deletions made pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. The FOIA Division stated the withheld material is “pre-decisional” and “deliberative.” See Determination Letter at 1.

On July 9, 2002, Newhouse filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In its Appeal, Newhouse challenges the FOIA Division’s determination and asserts that material was improperly withheld under Exemption 5. In addition, Newhouse contends that the FOIA Division’s determination was incomplete and that more responsive materials must exist. See Appeal Letter at 2. For these reasons, Newhouse requests that the OHA direct the FOIA Division to release the requested information.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). In withholding portions of a memorandum written to Secretary Abraham, the FOIA Division relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)) (Mink). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

After reviewing the requested document at issue, we have concluded that the determination made by the FOIA Division in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from Newhouse consists of comments and opinions prepared by a DOE employee and intended only for internal DOE use. The information requested in this case properly falls within the definition of "intra-agency memoranda" in the FOIA. In addition, the comments and opinions contained in the memorandum are clearly predecisional and deliberative. They were created by a subordinate of the Secretary of Energy for consideration and do not represent a final agency position. Furthermore, we note that the release of these opinions could inhibit employees from expressing their candid views if they believed that those views could become public knowledge. As such, the document at issue is precisely the sort of document which the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5 is designed to protect. Sears, 421 U.S. at 153 (quoting Davis, The Information Act: A Preliminary Analysis, 34 U. Chi. L. Rev. 761, 797 (1967)). Accordingly, we hold that the comments and opinions withheld from the memorandum meet all the requirements for withholding material under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege.

Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the comments and opinions contained in the memorandum at issue, which consist solely of advisory opinions and recommendations provided to DOE in the consultative process. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987).

Adequacy of Search

When an agency conducts a search under the FOIA, it must undertake a search that is "reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Weisberg v. United States Dep't of Justice, 705 F.2d 1344, 1351 (D.C. Circ. 1983). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., David G. Swanson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,178 (1999); Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995).

In the present case, Newhouse asserts that a search for responsive documents should have included "any communication with or between the Department and Bonneville Power Administration officials." See Appeal Letter at 2. It further argues that "it is apparent from the public record that such material must exist, but you did not provide them as requested." Id. In response to Newhouse's Appeal, we contacted the FOIA Division to determine the scope of the search. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Brenda Washington, FOIA Division and Kimberly Jenkins- Chapman, OHA (August 8, 2002). The FOIA Division informed us that it searched the Office of Executive Secretariat and the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Congressional and Intergovermental Affairs for any documents related to Newhouse's request. These two offices were the ones determined to be most likely to contain responsive material. The FOIA Division stated that it provided Newhouse with two responsive documents. According to the FOIA Division no other responsive documents exist. Specifically, with respect to the meeting Secretary Abraham had on or about February 13, 2001 with aluminum industry representatives, the FOIA Division informed us that no handouts or other correspondence were provided at this meeting and that the representatives only exchanged business cards. Id.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that the FOIA Division conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Newhouse's request. Accordingly, Newhouse's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Newhouse News Service, OHA Case No. VFA-0758, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Rocky Mountain Peace & Justice Center

Date of Filing: July 12, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0759

On July 12, 2002, Rocky Mountain Peace & Justice Center (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Rocky Flats Field Office (Rocky Flats) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on June, 24, 2002. That determination concerned a request for information the Appellant submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Six documents were located and released to the Appellant in response to its request. In its Appeal, the Appellant asserts that Rocky Flats' search for records was inadequate because it failed to uncover additional responsive documents. If granted, this Appeal would require Rocky Flats to conduct a further search.

Background

On June 15, 2001, the Appellant requested information related to "the decision to use the wildlife refuge worker scenario to calculate the radio nuclide soil action levels" for Rocky Flats. The Appellant wanted to know who initially proposed the scenario, who commented on it prior to its approval, and who approved the scenario. Request Letter dated June 15, 2001, from LeRoy Moore, Appellant, to Mary Hammack, FOIA Officer, Rocky Flats (Request Letter). On February 14, 2002, Rocky Flats released six documents to the Appellant. Letter dated February 14, 2002, from Mary Hammack to LeRoy Moore.(1) On June 24, 2002, Rocky Flats issued a determination finding no additional responsive documents, except one which originated with the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment (CDPHE). Determination Letter dated June 24, 2002, from Mary Hammack to LeRoy Moore. In the June 24, 2002 Determination Letter, Rocky Flats attempted to provide the Appellant with sufficient information about the document so that he could determine whether it had received the document from CDPHE or not. Memorandum of July 29, 2002 Telephone Conversation between Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, and Mary Hammack (July 29, 2002 Memorandum). In its Appeal, the Appellant asks that another search be completed. Appeal Letter at 2. The Appellant does not suggest where Rocky Flats could look further that might uncover the information but merely requests an additional search.

Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985) (Miller); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

We contacted Rocky Flats to determine what type of search was conducted for documents responsive to the request. Rocky Flats informed us that it searched both the Rocky Flats Field Office administrative records and Kaiser Hill Company, L.L.C. (Kaiser-Hill) records. Included in the Rocky Flats administrative records are those of Mr. Legare, the person from whom the Appellant learned that the wildlife refuge worker scenario would be used; the Environment and Stewardship department; the Records and Management department; and Alpha Trac, the support service contractor. Rocky Flats conducted an initial computerized search. July 29, 2002 Telephone Memorandum. Some documents were identified by the computerized search as possibly responsive to the Appellant's request. Id. These documents were then examined to determine if they were in fact responsive. Id. Only the six documents released in February 2002 and one possibly responsive document were located. The one document originated with CDPHE. June 24, 2002 Determination Letter. Likewise, the Kaiser-Hill Records Management and Environmental Media Management Departments files were searched by computer, and all identified documents were determined not to be responsive to the request. Electronic Mail Message from Mary Hammack to Janet Fishman July 31, 2002.

With regard to the document which originated at CDPHE, Rocky Flats believes either that the Appellant has already received it from CDPHE or that CDPHE has the responsibility for releasing the document to the Appellant. We disagree. If CDPHE was a federal agency and subject to the FOIA, Rocky Flats could send the document to it for a determination whether it should be released or not. However, CDPHE is not a federal agency, but a state agency and therefore not subject to the FOIA. The document is in the possession and control of Rocky Flats and therefore subject to the FOIA. David B. McCoy, Case No. VFA-0707, 28 DOE ¶ 80,204 (2002). Therefore, we are going to remand the matter to Rocky Flats for a new determination either releasing the CDPHE document or justifying its withholding.

Notwithstanding the remand, we are convinced that Rocky Flats followed procedures which were reasonably calculated to uncover the material the Appellant sought in its request. See Miller, 779 F.2d at 1384-85. The search did uncover seven total documents. The fact that the search did not uncover the documents that the Appellant believes may be in the possession of the DOE does not mean that the search was inadequate. Rocky Flats searched both its records and those of Kaiser-Hill Company, L.L.C. Documents identified as possibly responsive were reviewed by responsible officials. Only seven responsive records were located. Therefore, we will deny the Appellant's Appeal in part and grant the Appeal in part. We will remand the matter to Rocky Flats for a new determination on the document which originated with CDPHE.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 12, 2002, by Rocky Mountain Peace & Justice Center, Case No. VFA-0759, is hereby is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Rocky Flats Field Office of the Department of Energy which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0760

August 26, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Todd J. Lemire

Date of Filing: July 16, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0760

On July 16, 2002, Todd J. Lemire filed an Appeal from a determination the DOE's FOIA/Privacy Act Division (DOE/FOIA) issued on April 22, 2002. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Mr. Lemire requested from DOE "an undeleted copy of the Atomic Energy Commission document entitled ?Conversation with Senator Humphrey and Mr. Doyle Northup on Unidentified Signals, Note by the Secretary,' dated April 15, 1958," and "documents that relate to Meeting 1347 on March 28, 1958, . . ." Letter from Abel Lopez, Director, DOE/FOIA, to Todd Lemire (April 22, 2002). In response, DOE/FOIA informed Mr. Lemire that a "search for responsive documents was conducted of the files of the History Division in the Office of the Executive Secretariat. The search, however, did not locate any documents that are responsive to the request." Id. DOE/FOIA also stated that the "History Division informed us that any documents that may be responsive to your request have been transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA)." Id. DOE/FOIA provided Mr. Lemire with a contact and address for requesting records from NARA. Id.

II. Analysis

Since Mr. Lemire filed his appeal, we have learned that the History Division does in fact have a document responsive to Mr. Lemire's request, specifically, a "bound copy of the minutes [of Meeting 1347] that have not had a classification review. Because NARA has the same collection in an unbound, reviewed copy, they can respond to FOIA's much faster." Electronic Mail from Cliff Scroger, History Division, to Steven Goering, OHA (July 24, 2002). Nonetheless, the DOE must identify all documents in its possession that are responsive to a FOIA request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(b). We will therefore remand this matter to DOE/FOIA so that it may conduct a new search, identify all documents responsive to all items of Mr. Lemire's request in the possession of DOE, and release to Mr. Lemire information in those documents that is not exempt from the FOIA.(1)

In conducting its new search, DOE/FOIA should consider expanding the scope of its search for responsive documents to include the DOE Nevada Operations Office (DOE/NV). Mr. Lemire points out in his appeal that he was able, via a search of the DOE OpenNet web site, to identify documents located at DOE/NV that appear to be responsive to his request. Appeal at 1. Based on this information, we believe a "search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials" should include DOE/NV. Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Todd J. Lemire on July 16, 2002, OHA Case Number VFA-0760, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOIA/Privacy Act Division of the Department of Energy for the issuance of a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1) DOE/FOIA may wish to consult with Mr. Lemire to determine if he wants to file a request with NARA, instead of with DOE, for a copy of the minutes of Meeting 1347 or any other documents that he may be able to obtain more quickly from NARA.

Case No. VFA-0761

September 13, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Muriel F. Sorensen

Date of Filing: August 12, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0761

On August 12, 2002, Muriel F. Sorensen (Sorensen) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her in response to a request for documents concerning her father, Acle Parke, that Sorensen submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on June 24, 2002, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland). This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search.

I. Background

On May 21, 2002, Muriel Sorensen requested information regarding the " . . . employment and/or medical records [Richland] might have pertaining to her father, Acle Parke." Electronic mail message from Sarah Prein, Richland, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (September 5, 2002). Ms. Sorensen stated that she "believed that [her] father was employed at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation site sometime in the 1940's." Letter from Sorensen to Director, OHA (July 23, 2002). Richland conducted a search by name and Social Security number for responsive material, but was unable to locate any employment or medical records for Acle Parke. As a result, Richland denied the request, and Sorensen filed this Appeal.

II. Analysis

A. ADEQUACY OF SEARCH

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted Richland to ascertain the scope of the search. Richland received the request on May 29, 2002, and faxed the request, along with Mr. Parke's death certificate, to the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation (HEHF), which maintains all occupational health records for the Hanford Site, including pre-employment physicals, exit exams, and first aid treatments. Electronic mail message from Sarah Prein, Richland, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 26, 2002). HEHF searched but found no responsive material. (1) Id. Richland also forwarded the request to two Richland employees who maintain record listings for employment records–one for trade employees and another for former Hanford prime contractor and subcontractor employees. Id. Both individuals searched the data in their possession and found no responsive records. Id. Richland then contacted its Human Resources Department to determine if Mr. Parke had ever been employed by the Atomic Energy Commission. Id. That department found no responsive material. Id. Finally, Richland asked the Radiation Exposure Records group to search for any information suggesting that Mr. Parke had been monitored for radiation exposure at Hanford. Id. That group found no responsive material. Id.

Based on the information above, we find that Richland has conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover any records relating to Acle Parke. We also note that the language in Ms. Sorensen's request and Appeal suggests that she was not certain that her father had ever worked at the Hanford Nuclear Site. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Muriel Sorensen on August 12, 2002, OHA Case Number VFA-0761, is hereby denied.

requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Case No. VFA-0763

November 27, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Carla Mink

Date of Filing:July 26, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0763

Carla Mink filed this Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Rocky Flats Field Office (RFFO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination responded to a request for information she filed under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, the DOE would be required to conduct a further search for the requested information.

Mink submitted a request to RFFO for copies of medical, radiation, and employment records relating to her father, Charles Donaldson. Mink said that Donaldson was a former employee of Swinerton and Walberg, a contractor at the RFFO site. She added that Donaldson worked as a plumber at the site during the 1960's.

RFFO responded with a Determination Letter, stating that it had conducted an extensive search and found no records responsive to Mink's request. Mink appealed this determination. In her Appeal, Mink states;

I know for a fact that my father worked at Rocky Flats during the 1960's.... I know that over 30 years have passed since my father worked at Rocky Flats, but I also know that the United States Government keeps records of employees, and that his records must be on file.

(Emphasis in the original.)

II. Analysis

The Privacy Act (PA) requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). A PA request requires only that the agency search systems of records, in contrast with the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records. Nevertheless, we require a search for relevant records under the PA to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. Stephen A. Jarvis, Case No. VFA-0764, 29 DOE ¶ _____ (2002). We will therefore analyze the adequacy of the search conducted by RFFO in light of the principles we have applied in cases under the FOIA.

A FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive records, and we will remand a case where it is evident that the search was inadequate. Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). A search must be reasonably calculated to find the requested records, but it need not be exhaustive. Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476 (D.C.Cir. 1984). Thus, in analyzing the adequacy of a search, "the issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C.Cir. 1982).

In our review of Mink's Appeal, we contacted Mary Hammack of the Freedom of Information and Privacy Act Office at RFFO.(1) Hammack stated that Mink's request was given to employees in the Records and Information Management office at the RFFO site. These employees searched three computerized data bases - employment records, medical records, and radiological records. The searches uncovered no records relating to Charles Donaldson.

Hammack also said it was not surprising that no records relating to Donaldson were found. She explained that Donaldson, as a plumber working for Swinerton and Walberg, was categorized for record- keeping purposes as a construction worker. Until the early 1980's, Hammack said, construction workers' records were held by their employer, and not by RFFO. Since Donaldson left his employment at the RFFO site before the 1980's, it is unlikely that his records were transferred from Swinerton and Walberg to RFFO.

III. Conclusion

We believe that RFFO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to find the materials requested by Mink. Moreover, based on the information provided by Hammack, we find no reason to believe that a further search would uncover records responsive to the request. We will therefore deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Carla Mink, Case No. VFA-0763, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)Although Mink's request was for records pertaining to her father, and not to herself, her request was processed by RFFO as a PA request and not a FOIA request. Hammack told the OHA that this was done because the PA would give Mink broader access to records than the FOIA would, and that she performed the same full search for responsive records that she would have performed for a FOIA request.

Case No. VFA-0764

October 23, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Stephen A. Jarvis

Date of Filing: September 17, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0764

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Stephen A. Jarvis filed from a determination issued to him by the Privacy Act Officer, Office of Communications, Richland Operations Office (Richland). In this determination, Richland responded to Mr. Jarvis' request for information under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. The PA requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information about himself that is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The Appeal, if granted, would require Richland to conduct another search for responsive documents.

In his request, Mr. Jarvis sought a copy of his Hanford site radiation exposure record and a copy of his personnel security file. In its response, Richland provided a copy of the exposure record, but stated that the personnel security file had been destroyed in April 1990 in accordance with a Records Inventory and Disposition Schedule (RIDS). The response further stated that these schedules are approved by the Archivist of the United States and mandate how long specific records are to be maintained. In his Appeal, Mr. Jarvis challenges the adequacy of Richland's search for the file.

DOE regulations define a system of records as "a group of any records under DOE control from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particulars assigned to the individual." 10 C.F.R. § 1008.2(m). Under the PA, an office that issues a determination to a requester must insure that it has searched for records that are retrieved by name or other personal identifier of the requester in every relevant system of records under its control. Diane C. Larson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,110 (1998).

We have often reviewed the adequacy of a search conducted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. A PA request requires only a search of systems of records, rather than a search of all agency records, as is required under the FOIA. Nevertheless, the standard of sufficiency that we demand of a PA search is no less rigorous than that of a FOIA search. Therefore, we will analyze the adequacy of the search conducted by Richland in the case at hand using principles that we have developed under the FOIA.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted Richland. We were informed that the applicable RIDS schedule called for the destruction of Mr. Jarvis' file 10 years after it became inactive in 1980. When Richland's security division searched its database for the file, an entry for Mr. Jarvis was discovered, with the notation "Destroyed." Richland security personnel also searched the national database for DOE personnel security files without success. This database is purged of files that have been inactive for 10 months. See memorandum of October 9, 2002 telephone conversations between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Sarah Prein, Richland.

Based on the foregoing, we conclude that Richland's search was adequate, and that Mr. Jarvis' file has in fact been destroyed. We will therefore deny his Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Stephen A. Jarvis in Case No. VFA-0764 is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

September 3, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:Michael P. Cawley

Date of Filing:August 6, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0765

On August 6, 2002, Michael P. Cawley filed an appeal from a determination issued on July 23, 2002, by the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In this appeal, Mr. Cawley contends that Idaho erroneously denied his request for the names of individuals who had worked at the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory (INEEL) during a certain time period and filed a claim for radiation illness.(1) For the reasons detailed below, we find that Idaho correctly withheld the names of these individuals under Exemption 6 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6), and deny the appeal.

Background

On July 18, 2001, Mr. Cawley submitted a FOIA request to Idaho seeking the names of individuals who had worked at INEEL from 1955 to 1974 and had filed a claim for radiation illness. On July 23, 2002, Idaho issued a determination letter to Mr. Cawley that denied this FOIA request on the grounds that such information is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 6 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6).(2)

On August 6, 2002, Mr. Cawley appealed this determination to the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In this appeal, Mr. Cawley indicated that he had worked at INEEL from 1955 to 1974 and was making a claim for radiation illness. Mr. Cawley also explained that he was seeking the names of employees who were similarly situated because he believed that they could help each other.

Analysis

It is well settled that the purpose of Exemption 6 is to protect individuals from clearly unwarranted invasions of their personal privacy. Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of such information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Committee); Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991). In determining whether release of the document would further the public interest, the Supreme Court has held that the personal interest of the requester is irrelevant. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 772-773. Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee; see also Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999).

Applying these standards to the facts of this case, we conclude that Idaho properly withheld this information under Exemption 6. First, we find that individuals have a significant privacy interest in the fact that they have filed a claim for radiation illness. We have long held that a federal employee has a privacy interest in his or her name when it is linked to personally sensitive information. See The Cincinnati Enquirer, 25 DOE ¶ 80,206 at 80,768-69 (1996); William H. Payne, 25 DOE ¶ 80,190 at 80,726-27 (1996); The News Tribune, 25 DOE ¶ 80,181 at 80,699-700 (1996). The fact that an individual has filed a claim for radiation illness is sensitive information, and it is obvious that disclosure of this information may cause the individual to suffer embarrassment or unwarranted attention. Moreover, an individual might suffer financial harm if this information were disclosed because of the bias against people with disabilities. An individual thus has a privacy interest which will be invaded by the disclosure of such information. See Ripskis.

Second, we also find that release of the names of individuals who filed a claim for radiation illness would not further the public interest because such information would not shed light on the operations and activities of the government. We recognize that the public has a significant interest in knowing about the number of individuals who worked at INEEL and filed a claim for radiation illness.(3) Amongst other things, disclosure of this information would conceivably shed light on the hazards of radiation exposure, working conditions at INEEL, and the workings of a government compensation program. However, we also find that disclosure of the names of the affected individuals would reveal little or nothing about the operation and activities of government. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See also Michael A. Grosche, 26 DOE ¶ 80,146 at 80,644 (1996) (release of names not in the public interest because names would not advance the public's understanding of government). Moreover, in determining the public interest, we may not consider the fact that Mr. Cawley would like to obtain the names of other individuals who worked at INEEL and filed a claim for radiation illness because he is similarly situated. Reporters Committee at 771- 772. As such, we must conclude that release of the requested information would not further the public interest.

As we have found that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case and that release of the requested information would not further the public interest, we conclude that Idaho properly withheld the names of individuals who worked at INEEL and filed a claim for radiation illness under Exemption 6 of the FOIA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The portion of the Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Michael P. Cawley on August 6, 2002, that seeks information concerning the number of individuals who worked at INEEL and filed a claim for radiation illness is dismissed as moot, and the remainder of Mr. Cawley's appeal is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

(1)In his appeal, Mr. Cawley also indicated that Idaho had failed to respond to his request for information concerning the number of people who had worked at INEEL and had filed a claim for radiation illness. As Idaho provided this information to Mr. Cawley in a letter dated July 30, 2002, we will dismiss this portion of the appeal as moot.

(2)The determination letter also indicated that the names of such individuals would also be protected from disclosure under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a. As stated in that letter, absent the express written consent of the individuals, Mr. Cawley has no right to access under the Privacy Act to records concerning other individuals. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(b).

(3)Idaho has already provided Mr. Cauley with information concerning the number of individuals who had been employed by INEEL and filed a claim for radiation illness.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: David H. Murphy

Date of Filing: October 1, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0766

On October 1, 2002, David H. Murphy filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 5, 2002, by the Nevada Operations Office (Nevada) of the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA). That determination responded to a request for information he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Murphy asks that Nevada conduct an additional search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Mr. Murphy filed a request for information in which he sought records regarding possible radiation exposure in 1956 and records which may connect him with the 93rd Fighter Squadron of Kirtland Air Force Base in Albuquerque, New Mexico. On August 5, 2002, Nevada issued a determination which stated that it conducted a search for responsive documents, but located no records pertaining to the Appellant.

In addition, with respect to records regarding the 93rd Fighter Squadron, Nevada stated that it conducted a search for records at its Coordination and Information Center in North Las Vegas, Nevada, but was unable to locate any responsive documents. Nevada informed the Appellant that records regarding the 93rd Fighter Squadron are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Defense, U.S. Air Force. It further informed the Appellant that it would transfer his request to the Department of Defense which would then respond directly to the Appellant.

On October 1, 2002, Mr. Murphy filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Murphy challenges the adequacy of search conducted by Nevada and asks that the OHA direct Nevada to conduct another search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies are required to search their records for responsive documents. We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Hideca Petroleum Corp., 9 DOE ¶ 80,108 (1981); Charles Varon, 6 DOE ¶ 80,118 (1980). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we must examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Nevada to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any documents responsive to Mr. Murphy's request might exist. Upon receiving Mr. Murphy's request for information, Nevada conducted a Master File search of its dosimetry records but located no nuclear weapons testing dosimetry records pertaining to Mr. Murphy. See Determination Letter at 1. This search was conducted by using Mr. Murphy's last name and his social security number. Id. Nevada further advised Mr. Murphy that records may exist with the Air Force Medical Operations Agency and/or the Defense Threat Reduction Agency and that Mr. Murphy must contact those agencies himself. Id. With respect to Mr. Murphy's request for information regarding the 93rd Fighter Squadron, Nevada indicated that it conducted a search for records at its Coordination and Information Center (CIC) in North Las Vegas, Nevada. An official at Nevada informed us that the CIC is a repository for historical data on the United States' nuclear weapons testing program and that it maintains more that 370,000 historical records. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Michael Brown, NNSA/Nevada, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (October 8, 2002). In conducting this search, an official at Nevada stated that information is listed on an open-net database. Upon entering relevant words on this database such as "93rd" or "Squadron," various documents surfaced, but none were responsive to Mr. Murphy's request. Nevada provided Mr. Murphy with a copy of its search results in its Determination Letter. In addition, Nevada determined that records regarding the 93rd Fighter Squadron are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Defense, U.S. Air Force, and therefore transferred Mr. Murphy's request to that office to respond directly to him.

Given the facts presented to us, we find that Nevada conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Mr. Murphy's request. Accordingly, Mr. Murphy's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by David H. Murphy, OHA Case No. VFA-0766, on October 1, 2002, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

November 6, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Marlene Kangas

Date of Filing: August 16, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0768

On August 16, 2002, Marlene Kangas appealed a determination issued by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In her appeal, Ms. Kangas contends that Richland had failed to conduct an adequate search for documents that were responsive to a FOIA request that she had filed. For the reasons detailed below, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and will deny the appeal filed by Ms. Kangas.

I. Background

Ms. Kangas filed a FOIA request with Richland in which she requested the Hanford Site employment record for her deceased father, Reuben Kangas. In this letter, Ms. Kangas indicated that her father had been a member of Local Union 598, Plumbers & Steamfitters, and worked for Standard Plumbing & Heating Company, a sub-contractor to J.A. Jones Construction Company. On January 28, 2002, Richland issued a determination letter in response to Ms. Kangas' FOIA request which indicated that it was denying the FOIA request because it had been unable to locate any employment records.

On March 13, 2002, Ms. Kangas appealed this determination to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) on the grounds that Mr. Kangas had worked at Hanford, Minnesota, and New Mexico and that Richland has failed to conduct an adequate search for her father's records. When an official at Richland became aware of the appeal, she contacted Ms. Kangas and informed her that the DOE sometimes had other types of records on members of union halls and subcontractor employees even when no employment records could be located, and asked whether she would like to amend her original FOIA request to include her father's medical and radiation exposure records. Ms. Kangas amended the request and soon thereafter Richland provided 58 pages of radiation exposure records. Ms. Kangas also received 125 pages of medical records, provided directly from the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation. Ms. Kangas appealed this determination because she believes that there should be more records which indicate that her father was exposed to radiation. She bases this belief on the fact that she and her brothers remember that her father worked in "hot spots" and he would often tell his children that he had only worked for a short time before his badge indicated that he had too much radiation exposure. Her father also related that he would also be scrubbed down and not permitted to work until his radiation exposure level had decreased. Ms. Kangas indicated that she and her brothers had reviewed the records that had been provided and the records do not reflect the events that they remember. Ms. Kangas thus concludes that if an adequate search has been performed, Richland would have located additional radiation exposure records.

II. Analysis

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. E.g. Eugene Maples, 23 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1993); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials at Richland to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed. Upon receiving Ms. Kangas' amended Request for Information, Richland conducted a search of its radiation exposure and medical records in two separate record groups. According to Richland, all of its radiation exposure records are centrally located at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory and all of its medical records are held at the Hanford Environmental Health Foundation. Both of these databases were searched by inputting Mr. Kangas' name and Social Security number. Richland provided Ms. Kangas with all materials identified by this information and has indicated that there are no other locations that are reasonably likely to possess responsive documents. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Sarah Prein, Richland and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (October 23, 2002).

Given the facts presented to us, we are convinced that Richland conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Ms. Kangas' request. Accordingly, Ms. Kangas' Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Marlene Kangas, OHA Case No. VFA-0768, on August 16, 2002, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Joseph H. Blair

Date of Filing: September 9, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0769

This Decision and Order concerns an Appeal that Joseph H. Blair filed from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Savannah River Operations Office (SR). The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would require the SR to release a specific document to Mr. Blair.

I. Background

Mr. Blair, an employee of Bechtel Savannah River Site, filed a request in which he sought copies of all information in files concerning him that are in the possession of "Nurse Nancy [Bolin]," the Bechtel Savannah River Company's Safety nurse. The one document that forms the basis for his appeal pertains to a workman's compensation claim.

On August 1, 2002, the Savannah River Operations Office (SR) issued a determination letter regarding Mr. Blair's request. Savannah River's determination letter stated that a search had been conducted and no documents responsive to Mr. Blair's request could be found. See Determination Letter. On September 9, 2002, Mr. Blair filed his Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals. In the Appeal, Mr. Blair challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by SR. He alleges that Ms. Bolin allowed him to see the workman's compensation document, but did not allow him to make a copy. Mr. Blair was informed that the document was an Intra-Office Memorandum addressed to Ms. Bolin. See September 19, 2002 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Nancy Bolin, Nurse for Bechtel, and Toni Brown, OHA. On Appeal Mr. Blair seeks a copy of the document. We have determined that the document he seeks does exist. However, the issue before us is whether the document should be released to Mr. Blair pursuant to the FOIA.

II. Analysis

The FOIA applies to "records" that are maintained by "agencies" within the executive branch of government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). Consequently, the FOIA is applicable only where the requested document may be considered an "agency record."

The language of the FOIA does not define the term "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting the phrase "agency records," we have applied a two-step analysis for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as Bechtel, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE ¶ 80,212 (1997). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." Los Alamos Study Group, 26 DOE at 80,841.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). Bechtel, as a public corporation, does not fit into any of the Section 552(f) categories. However, the courts have found that some outside entities should still be considered agencies for FOIA purposes. The Supreme Court has held that an entity will not be considered a federal agency for purposes of the FOIA unless its operations are subject to "extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 190 & n.11 (1980) (citing United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976)). In the present case, although Bechtel was a contractor for DOE, the DOE did not conduct extensive, detailed, and day-to-day supervision of Bechtel's operations. We therefore conclude that Bechtel is not an "agency" within the meaning of the FOIA.

Although Bechtel is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, records relevant to Mr. Blair's request could become "agency records" if the DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time Mr. Blair made his FOIA request. Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In this case, the document at issue was not in the DOE's control or possession at the time of the request. See September 5, 2002 Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Pauline Conner, SR's FOIA Representative, and Toni Brown, OHA. Rather, it was found in Bechtel's files. Based on these facts, the document does not qualify as an "agency record" under the test set forth in Tax Analysts.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to mandatory release if the contract between the DOE and that contractor provides that the document in question is the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

We therefore next look to the contract between the DOE and Westinghouse Savannah River Company, LLC,(1) to determine the status of the requested record.

Contract No. DE-AC09-96SR18500 (republished as Modification No. M068), Section I.88, Paragraph (b) of the contract states that the "following records are considered the property of the contractor . . .

(1) Employment-related records (such as workers' compensation files; employee relations records, records on salary and employee benefits; drug testing records, labor negotiation records; records on ethics, employee concerns, and other employee related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality; employee assistance program records; and personnel and medical/health-related records and similar files), and non-employee patient medical/health related records, except for those records described by the contract as being maintained in Privacy Act systems of records.

The document at issue is an employment-related record. It is not contained in any Privacy Act system of records. See Contract No. DE-AC09-96SR18500. Consequently, it is a contractor-owned record, and not "the property of the Government." We therefore find that the record sought by Mr. Blair is neither an "agency record" within the meaning of the FOIA nor subject to release under the DOE regulations.

III. Conclusion

As stated above, SR stated in its determination letter that it did not have the document sought by Mr. Blair. Nothing raised in Mr. Blair's Appeal causes us to question SR's determination. Based on our findings above, we conclude that this document is not an agency record within the meaning of the FOIA, and is not considered DOE property by the relevant contract. Consequently, we conclude that the document is not subject to release pursuant to the FOIA or DOE regulations. We will accordingly deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Joseph H. Blair, Case No, VFA-0769, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provision of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Howard R. Larson
Date of Filing:	August 19, 2002
Case Number:	VFA-0770

On August 19, 2002, Howard R. Larson (Larson) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Richland Operations Office in response to a request for documents that Larson submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. 1/ The determination was issued on July 1, 2002, by the Office of Intergovernmental, Public and Institutional Affairs of the Richland Operations Office (Richland). This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search.

I. Background

This Appeal concerns a FOIA request that Congressman Brian Baird submitted to Richland on May 23, 2002, on behalf of Larson. Congressman Baird requested medical, radiation exposure and employment records relating to Larson's employment at the Hanford site while serving in the armed forces. Letter from Richland to Congressman Brian Baird (July 1, 2002) (Determination Letter). He also requested well reports from the 1950s for the 200 and 300 areas on the Hanford Site. Id. Richland searched by name and Social Security number for employment and medical records related to Larson, but found none. In addition, there was no indication that Larson was ever monitored for radiation exposure at Hanford. Id. Richland informed Congressman Baird that records pertaining to military personnel stationed at Hanford are not archived with the DOE, and suggested that he contact the National Archives and Records Administration for service records. Id.

Richland also conducted a search of its archive databases using the key word "well," and released a list with the results of those searches. In the Determination Letter, Richland informed Congressman Baird that he or Larson could request copies of any of the documents on the listings. Determination Letter at 2.

1/ The Appeal was not filed properly, but the deficiency was corrected in December 2002.

However, neither the congressman nor Larson asked for any of the well reports. In his Appeal, Larson stated that "the information regarding a well report relating to the 200 and 300 areas was classified secret." Letter from Larson to Director, OHA (August 19, 2002). He explained that the Veterans Administration requires information about the wells in order to correctly assign a dose assessment in his claim for radiation exposure, and asks OHA to order Richland to release the well information to him. Letter from Larson to Director, OHA (August 19, 2002).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

Larson informed this office that he was unable to use the list of well reports released by Richland because the list contained an excessive amount of information. He had requested information on the years 1951 and 1952 only. In addition, some of the material was identified as classified or marked "not available under the FOIA." Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Larson and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 15, 2003).

This office has analyzed the search conducted by Richland and we find that the search was adequate. Richland used Larson's name and Social Security number to search for personal information, even though his service records were not likely to be found at Hanford since he was a member of the military and not a DOE employee. Richland also searched for information about the wells in Area 200 and Area 300, and found responsive material in its database. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sarah Prein, Richland and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (December 13, 2002). However, Larson has not availed himself of Richland's offer to send him any of the non-exempt material on the list. Id. As for Larson's remark that the list was not user-friendly due to its length, Richland admitted searching for a broader time period than Larson requested. However, it did so in order to identify all responsive material. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sarah Prein, Richland, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 22, 2003). The reports are dated, and those dates appear on the list so that Larson should be able to identify the reports pertaining to 1951 and 1952. 2/ According to Richland, only one document 2/ Some of the reports could not be dated because they fell within a time range that Richland could not narrow. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sarah Prein, Richland, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (January 22, 2003).

was classified and, as stated in the determination, Larson can request the documents he wants through the FOIA or through Richland's reading room. 3/ Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Howard Larson on August 19, 2002, OHA Case Number VFA-0770, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

3/ The classified report was not actually a well report. It was a report about plutonium, but it matched the search criteria because the title contained the phrase "as well as." Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Sarah Prein, Richland, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (Jaunary 22, 2003).

Case No. VFA-0771

November 29, 2002

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:Andrew T. Stahr

Date of Filing:August 19, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0771

Andrew T. Stahr (Stahr) filed this Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (OROO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). The determination responded to a request for information Stahr filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) at 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Stahr challenges the adequacy of OROO's search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Stahr submitted a request to OROO for copies of x-rays taken of his father, David Stahr. David Stahr formerly worked at a Paducah, Kentucky, site that is under the jurisdiction of OROO. In his request, Stahr specified the date of each x-ray and the body area included in the x-ray.

OROO responded with a Determination Letter stating that it had conducted a search of the files at the Paducah Site Office and found no records responsive to Stahr's request. Stahr appealed this determination.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires federal agencies to release material to the public upon request. Following an appropriate request, agencies must search their records for responsive documents. We have often stated that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where we believe the search conducted was inadequate. E.g., Ashok K. Kaushal, 27 DOE ¶ 80,189 (1999); Hobart T. Bolin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1998).

In a case involving the adequacy of the agency's search, "the issue is not whether any further responsive documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was inadequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original). To determine whether an agency's search was adequate, we therefore examine its actions under a "standard of reasonableness." McGehee v. CIA, 697 F.2d 1095, 1100-01, modified in part on rehearing, 711 F.2d 1076 (D.C. Cir. 1983). This standard "does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985). Furthermore, the determination of whether a search was reasonable is "dependent upon the circumstances of the case." Founding Church of Scientology v. National Security Agency, 610 F.2d 824, 834 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

In our review of Stahr's Appeal, we contacted personnel in the medical department of the Paducah Site Office, and spoke with a long-time employee of the medical records department who had been involved in the search for the x-rays. He recalled that a similar request for David Stahr's x-rays had been filed about twenty-five years earlier. The x-rays had not been found at that time, and the employee remembers being told that a member of David Stahr's family had checked out the x-rays in the early 1970's, and the x-rays were never returned.

III. Conclusion

We believe that OROO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to find the x-rays requested by Stahr. Moreover, based on the information provided by the employee in the medical records department, we have no reason to believe that a further search would locate responsive records. We will therefore deny this Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Andrew T. Stahr, Case No. VFA-0763, is hereby denied.

Name of Petitioner: Martin Salazar

Date of Filing: September 5, 2002

Case Number: VFA-0773

On September 5, 2002, Martin Salazar (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Savannah River Operations Office (Savannah River) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on August 21, 2002. That determination concerned a request for information the Appellant submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, and the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. Documents were located, redacted, and released to the Appellant in response to his request. In his Appeal, the Appellant asserts that Savannah River misinterpreted the standards under which it can withhold information. If granted, this Appeal would require Savannah River to release the documents in full.

Background

On April 8, 2002, the Appellant requested complete copies of all his "EEO files and any other disciplinary records in possession of [Savannah River]." Privacy Act Request dated April 8, 2002. On May 7, 2002, Savannah River released a number of redacted documents to the Appellant. He appealed to this Office on June 12, 2002. After discussions with Savannah River, it withdrew its May 7, 2002 determination letter, intending to issue a corrected letter. We dismissed the Appeal. Dismissal Letter dated September 4, 2002, from Thomas O. Mann, Deputy Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), to Martin Salazar. On August 21, 2002, Savannah River issued the corrected determination letter, releasing redacted copies of the documents the Appellant requested. On September 5, 2002, the Appellant appealed a second time, claiming that Savannah River "misinterpreted the standards for which they seek exemption or has not established relevancy to the standards which they have cited." Appeal Letter dated August 27, 2002, from Martin Salazar to Thomas O. Mann, Deputy Director, OHA.

Analysis

The withheld information is personally identifiable information that specifically concerns the Appellant and is contained in a system of records from which records are retrieved. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5). The Privacy Act and the FOIA mandate its release to the Appellant unless the agency can show that it can be withheld under (a) an applicable exemption to the Privacy Act disclosure provisions, and (b) an applicable exemption to the FOIA disclosure provisions. Therefore, we will consider the present appeal under both acts.

The Privacy Act

Savannah River withheld the information which identifies investigative sources under Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5), which provides that "[n]othing in this section shall allow an individual access to information compiled in reasonable anticipation of a civil action and proceeding." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(5)

(Exemption (d)(5)). We agree with the Appellant that Savannah River did not "establish relevancy to the standards which they cited." However, in our discussion with Savannah River, we determined that the documents released to the Appellant by the August 21, 2002 Determination Letter are part of a Privacy Act system of records, called DOE-41. DOE-41 contains legal records. In this particular case, these legal records were compiled during the past ten years in response to complaints filed by the Appellant. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Janet Fishman, Attorney- Examiner, OHA, and Pauline Conner, Savannah River. In addition, the Appellant currently has a law suit pending in federal district court against Savannah River. Electronic Mail Message dated September 9, 2002, from Lucy Knowles to Janet Fishman.

Rather than remand the matter to Savannah River again, we will review the application of Exemption (d)(5). In Smeirtka v. Department of Treasury, 447 F. Supp. 221, 227-28 (D.D.C. 1978), the court found that Exemption (d)(5) covers documents prepared by and at the direction of lay agency staff personnel during a period prior to the plaintiff's firing. Further, the court in Government Accountability Project v. Office of Special Counsel, 1988 WL 21394, at *5 (D.D.C. Feb. 22, 1988), found that the exemption applies to any records compiled in anticipation of civil proceedings whether prepared by attorneys or not. We believe that Exemption (d)(5) applies to the documentary information at issue in this case. The relevant records were compiled by Savannah River personnel in response to complaints filed by the Appellant. Since the withheld information is part of DOE-41, a Privacy Act system of records, and was compiled in response to complaints filed by the Appellant, it may properly be withheld under Exemption(d)(5).

The FOIA

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. See Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Exemptions 5 and 6 are at issue in this case.

Exemption 5 exempts from mandatory disclosure documents that are "inter-agency memoranda or letters, which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts documents normally privileged in the civil discovery context. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132 (1975). Redacted portions of one document released to the Appellant contained the handwritten notes of an attorney, which were redacted prior to its release to the Appellant. Attorney work-product is a privilege commonly cited in the civil discovery context. We agree that the handwritten portions of this document were properly withheld.

Exemption 6 exempts from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. 1004.10(b)(6). This includes legal files. In order to apply this exemption, an agency must weigh the privacy interests involved against the public interest in disclosure. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989). In this case, Savannah River properly found that withholding the names of witnesses and complainants would eliminate the possibility of harassment, and release of that information would not shed any light on the operations and activities of the government. August 21, 2002 Determination Letter at 3. Therefore, we find that Savannah River properly applied Exemption 6 in withholding the names of complainants and witnesses in these documents.

Conclusion

The information withheld is the handwritten notes of an attorney and the names of the complainants and the witnesses. Since we find the information was properly withheld by Savannah River under FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6 and Privacy Act Exemption (d)(5), the present Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 5, 2002, by Martin Salazar, Case No. VFA-0773, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B) and 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district where the requester resides or has a principal place of business or in which the agency records are situated or in the District of Columbia.
