> procedures 9 and 10 for Sandia National Laboratories and the [DOE].

Request dated February 2, 2007.

On February 21, 2007, NNSASC sent a letter to the Appellant. Letter dated February 21, 2007, from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSASC, to William H. Payne (February 21, 2007 Letter). NNSASC first stated that it was > unable to identify what specific records you are requesting from the information that you have supplied. As to your request for a copy of the procedures relating to what you have referenced as "(9) and (10)", [DOE] regulations, . . . , provide rules and procedures that are followed in responding to FOIA and Privacy Act requests.

February 21, 2007 Letter at 1. NNSASC then informed the Appellant that it had reviewed its records and found no pending request that he had filed. Id. It continued that it would take no further action at this time. Id.

On March 23, 2007, the Appellant appealed NNSASC's February 21, 2007 letter, contending that the documents he is seeking are clearly identified in "Mr. Gilbert of the FBI recently declassified letter [that] has identified the documents sent to the FBI by Sandia National [L]aboratories and Mr. Goslar's AFFIDAVIT." March 23, 2007 Appeal Letter. The Appellant continued that he explained "this in my Wednesday February 28, 2007 10:43 email to Bucknell." Id.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of The Appellant's Description of Documents Requested

The Appellant asks that NNSASC comply with his original FOIA / PA request and send documents alluded to in another letter, which was not included with his February 2, 2007 request. Secondly, he asks that NNSA send him a copy of procedures (9) and (10), and appears to quote them, but he does not give a citation for them or indicate what they refer to.

We understand the position NNSASC expressed in its February 21, 2007 response to be that it was unable to identify what specific records the Appellant is requesting from the information that he supplied. For example, NNSASC had no idea what the Appellant meant by "original FOIA / PA request." The Appellant has made numerous FOIA requests to NNSASC over many years. None of them is currently pending, so the Appellant could have been referring to any of his earlier requests, or none of them. In addition, it is not clear what the Appellant is requesting by asking for a copy of "(9) and (10)." Even a request for a broad scope of documents must be clear enough for the agency to determine what documents are being requested. Yeager v. DEA, 678 F.2d 315, 322, 326 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (holding valid request encompassing over 1,000,000 computerized records: "The linchpin inquiry is whether the agency is able to determine 'precisely what records [are] being requested.'" (quoting S. Rep. No. 854, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 12 (1974)).

Nevertheless, DOE regulations require that the > [r]equest must be in writing and for reasonably described records. A request for access to records must be submitted in writing and must reasonably describe the records requested to enable DOE personnel to locate them with a reasonable amount of effort. Where possible, specific information regarding dates, titles, file designations, and other information which may help identify the records should be supplied by the requester.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(b). As it is currently stated, the Appellant's request does not reasonably describe the records he is requesting. He did not provide specific information regarding dates, titles, and other information so that NNSASC might identify the information he was requesting. He provided nothing but the statement that he was requesting what was in his original request or "copies of (9) and (10)." NNSASC cannot be expected to know what the Appellant wanted or to search through past requests to try to determine which, if any, he intended by referring to his "original request." Further, it should not be required to do the research necessary to determine the identify of the document named at "docket entry #3 at CIV-92-1452-JC." The Appellant must also clearly identify "(9) and (10)."

B. NNSASC's Response

DOE Regulations require an office assist a requester in restating a request that it does not understand.

> Assistance in reformulating a non-conforming request. If a request does not reasonably describe the records sought, as specified in paragraph (c)(1) of this section, the DOE response will specify the reasons why the request failed to meet the requirements of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, and will invite the requester to confer with knowledgeable DOE personnel in an attempt to restate the request or reduce the request to manageable proportions by > reformulation or by agreeing on an orderly procedure for the production of the records.

10 C.F.R. §1004.4(c)(2). NNSASC did not contact the Appellant to have him explain his request. Thus, on remand, NNSASC should offer the Appellant the opportunity to clarify what documents he is requesting. We have reached this conclusion previously in a similar situation. Barbara Schwarz, 27 DOE ¶ 80,245 (December 2, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0536) (http://www.oha.doe.gov/cases/foia/vfa0536.htm).

III. Conclusion

For the reasons explained above, we will remand this matter to NNSASC to contact the Appellant for a further explanation of what he is requesting. Therefore, we will grant the Appellant's Appeal in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by William H. Payne, Case No. TFA-0198, is granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision and Order.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: MGT Technical Consulting

Date of Filing: April 4, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0199

On April 4, 2007, MGT Technical Consulting (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Idaho responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Idaho released responsive documents but withheld one name from one of the documents under FOIA Exemption 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to release that name.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In an electronic mail message dated November 1, 2006, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to Idaho for "copies of the abstracts accompanying the proposals [Funding Opportunity DE-PS07-05ID14711,] and for any other non-privileged information that summarizes the subjects, nature and scope of the winning grant proposals." Electronic Mail Message Request dated November 1, 2006, from Luca Gratton, General Manager, MGT Technical Consulting to Nicole Brooks, Idaho. On February 6, 2007, Idaho released an abstract submitted by H-Z Technology, Inc., and stated that it would release other abstracts by Teledyne Energy Systems and Pratt and Whitney Rocketdyne (PWR) by February 26, 2007. On February 22, 2007, Idaho released the abstracts by Teledyne and PWR. Determination Letter dated February 22, 2007, from Nicole Brooks, FOIA Officer, Idaho, to Luca Gratton (Determination Letter). In releasing the abstracts, Idaho withheld the name of only one individual in all the documents it released. That name was withheld pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) (Exemption 6) at the request of PWR. Id.

In its Appeal, the Appellant disputes the withholding of information under Exemption 6. The Appellant argues that "any application submission to the cooperative agreement is a de facto authorization by the submitter for the government to collect the information and subject that information to routine uses that are clearly identified in the abbreviated grants notice announcement." Appeal Letter dated March 24, 2007, from Luca Gratton to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. The Appellant continues that the forms "clearly advise against the submission of privileged or proprietary information." Id.

II. Analysis

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (1999); Sowell, Todd, Lafitte and Watson LLC, 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (1999).

A. The Privacy Interest

Idaho determined that there was a privacy interest in the identify of the contractor employee. We agree that a substantial privacy interest exists in the identity of private citizens due to the great potential that a commercial entity could misappropriate a name for commercial purposes. The courts have also reached this conclusion. See Sheet Metal Workers v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3d Cir. 1998) (the disclosure of names, social security numbers, or addresses of government contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. HUD, 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees' names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identity of this contractor employee.

B. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773; See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80, 511 (1996). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Dep't of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). We find that there is a minimal public interest in release of the withheld information. The Appellant has not demonstrated how the disclosure of the name of the non-federal employee will reveal anything of importance regarding the DOE or how it would serve the public interest. Also, revealing the names of private citizens will not contribute significantly to the public's understanding of government activities. Accordingly, we agree with Idaho and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the name withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.[*/]

C. The Balancing Test

In determining whether information may be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762; SafeCard Service v. SEC, 426 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991). We have concluded that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of name of the contractor employee. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the name withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interest of the named individual.

III. Conclusion

Idaho properly withheld the name of the contractor employee from the PWR abstract under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied.

[*/] In its Appeal, the Appellant states that release of the withheld information is required by statute. We were unable to determine what statute he was referring to. The statute he cited did not stand for this proposition.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by MGT Technical Consulting on April 4, 2007, Case No. TFA-0199, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Center for Investigative Reporting

Case Number: TFA-0200

On April 20, 2007, Mr. Will Evans on behalf of the Center for Investigative Reporting (CIR) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to CIR by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) on April 6, 2007, in response to a request for documents that CIR submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. ' 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE expedite the processing of Mr. Evans' FOIA request.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

Mr. Evans filed a request for records related to all requests for earmarks between December 1, 2006 and the present. Mr. Evans described himself as a professional reporter and requested expedited processing because CIR is "primarily engaged in disseminating information and can demonstrate that there is an urgency to inform the public concerning actual or alleged Federal Government activity." Appeal at 1.

On April 6, 2007, the Director of DOE/HQ denied Mr. Evans' request for expedited processing because the Director found that he did not adequately address the requirements for expedited processing. He found that Mr. Evans did not establish any threat to the life or safety of an individual that would justify expedited processing. Further, the Director concluded that Mr.

Evans did not identify any particular urgency that requires the provision of the requested information in an expedited manner.

On April 20, 2007, Mr. Evans submitted this appeal of DOE/HQ's denial of expedited processing. Mr. Evans asks that OHA order DOE/HQ to expedite the processing of his FOIA request.

II. Analysis

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up the line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v).

Courts have found sufficient exigency to grant expedited processing in situations of an "ongoing public controversy associated with a specific time frame." Long v. Department of Homeland Security, 436 F. Supp. 2d 38 (D.D.C. 2006). Requesters have demonstrated urgency in several ways. See e.g., Washington Post v. Department of Homeland Security, 459 F. Supp. 2d 61 (D.D.C. 2006) (granting expedited processing based on public need for requested material to inform voters prior to upcoming election); Gerstein v. CIA, No. C-06-4643, 2006 WL 3462658 (N.D. Cal. November 29, 2006) (granting expedited processing because of significant interest in quickly disseminating news regarding a subject currently under debate by Congress). See also Edward A. Slavin, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,279 n.2 (2000) (discussing request to expedite documents for upcoming administrative hearing). Courts have denied requests for expedited processing if the requester fails to demonstrate urgency. See, e.g., Long, 436 F. Supp. 2d at 43-44 (denying request due to generalized need for information and requester's failure to identify an imminent action); Electronic Privacy Info. Ctr. v. Department of Justice, 322 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2003) (concluding that plaintiff failed to demonstrate urgency because its proffer of 31 newspaper articles concerning the general subject of FOIA request did not make a story a matter of "current exigency").

In his appeal, Mr. Evans explains his request for records concerning earmark requests for the budget of FY 2007. He states that on February 15, 2007, President Bush signed a resolution providing funding for the Department of Energy's programs through the remainder of FY 2007. Appeal at 2. Mr. Evans further states that the Department's process for allocating funding is already underway and that the process to evaluate continued earmarks is a federal government activity, which meets one of the criteria for expedited FOIA processing. Mr. Evans also contends that there "has been extensive coverage of earmarks by the press and widespread concern about earmarks from members of the public and citizen advocacy group." Id. In addition, Mr. Evans states that "informed members of the public might voice opinions on earmark reform and earmark requests potentially affecting the 2007 budget if they had additional information on requests for earmarks." Id. Mr. Evans concludes that the decision-making on this matter is occurring "right now" and that "any delay in processing this request would deprive the public of its ability to make known its views in a timely manner." Finally, Mr. Evans asserts that there is an urgency to inform the public since the value of the information will be lost if not disseminated quickly. Id.

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Mr. Evans has not established a compelling need for expedited processing of his request. Although he states that there is a debate occurring now on earmark requests and reform, he has still not established an urgency for the release of the material requested. A generalized public interest in the information is simply not enough to grant expedited processing of a FOIA request. Long, 436 F. Supp. 2d at 43-44. Accordingly, his Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Center for Investigative Reporting on April 20, 2007, OHA Case Number TFA-0200, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Citizen Action New Mexico
Date of Filing:	May 2, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0203

On May 2, 2007, Citizen Action New Mexico (CANM) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 4, 2007, by the National Nuclear Security Administration of the Department of Energy in Albuquerque, New Mexico (DOE/AL) in response to a request for documents that CANM submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. ' 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/AL perform an additional search for responsive material and provide further identification of two released documents.

I. Background

On October 2, 2006, CANM filed a FOIA request with DOE/AL for the following information: (1) the site-wide ground water surveillance monitoring plan prepared by Sandia National Laboratories (SNL), New Mexico; (2) a copy of the status report submitted to comply with a DOE Executive Order, DOE O 450.1; (3) all other documents used in conjunction with the monitoring plan and the status report; (4) any document that was provided to the New Mexico Environment Department for compliance with requirements of DOE O 450.1; and (5) documents which show the funding mechanisms for the surveillance monitoring plan on an annual basis as specific budgetary items. Letter from DOE/AL to CANM (April 4, 2007) (Determination Letter).[1] In its response to the request, DOE/AL asserted that there was no requirement in DOE O 450.1 for a "site-wide groundwater monitoring plan" or a written status report, and thus none was prepared. Nonetheless, DOE/AL released in their entirety two documents that dealt with similar subject matter, namely: (1) the SNL Environmental Monitoring and Surveillance Plan, undated, and (2) the SNL Groundwater Protection Program Plan for FY 2007, dated September 2006. DOE/AL explained that because the status report and groundwater monitoring plan were not required, there were no responsive records in its possession in response to Items 2, 3, 4, and 5. Id. In the Appeal, CANM challenged the adequacy of the search, the agency's failure to respond within time limits, insufficient identification of documents and the alleged withholding of a "controlled document." Letter from CANM to Director, OHA (May 2, 2007) (Appeal).

[1] DOE Order 450.1 was created " to implement sound stewardship practices that are protective of the . . . natural and cultural resources impacted by DOE operations. . . ." DOE O 450.1. This objective is accomplished by implementing Environmental Management Systems (EMSs), activities to achieve environmental goals, at DOE sites. EMSs must be part of Integrated Safety Management systems (ISMSs). Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must Aconduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents.@ Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). AThe standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials.@ Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE & 80,282 (January 7, 2003) (Case No.TFA-0015).

We contacted DOE/AL for information regarding its search for responsive information. DOE/AL told us that it searched all records in its possession and released all responsive material to CANM along with the determination letter. DOE/AL also provided replies to the four issues raised in this appeal.

A. Adequacy of Search for Status Report

CANM argues in its Appeal that DOE O 450.1 requires SNL to submit a status report by December 31, 2005. As authority, it cites DOE O 450.1 chg 2, dated December 7, 2005. DOE/AL refutes that argument and contends that SNL's Environmental Programs and Assurance Department reviewed the order, but was unable to identify the requirement CANM stated in its request. According to SNL, it has never prepared a "site-wide ground water surveillance monitoring plan." Letter from Juanita Evans, Corporate Contract & Policy Management, SNL, to Andrea Leal, DOE/NNSA (May 9, 2007). Nonetheless, SNL did release two internal monitoring planning documents that deal with the same subject area, "SNL Environmental Monitoring and Surveillance Plan" and "SNL Groundwater Protection Program Plan for Fiscal Year 2007." Id.

We reviewed the order, and found that it contains several references to December 31, 2005, as a deadline by which all sites should have implemented the management system requirements of the order. Section 5(d)(1) states that operations, field or site office managers must report to the Cognizant Secretarial Officer the status regarding whether the EMS requirements of the order have been integrated into the ISMSs by site contractors. However, the order does not specify that field managers must submit a written report confirming the status of their environmental activities. Therefore, we find that SNL's response was reasonable.

B. Failure to Respond Within Time Limits

CANM challenges the timeliness of DOE/AL's response to his FOIA request. However, this office does not have jurisdiction to consider appeals concerning the timeliness of the agency's response to FOIA requests. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8; see also Arlie Bryan Siebert, 29 DOE ¶ 80,258 (April 20, 2006) (Case No. TFA-0157); R.E.V. Engineering Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,136 (January 10, 2001) (Case No.

VFA-0636). Accordingly, we will dismiss the portion of the appeal concerning the timeliness of DOE's response. [2]

C. Insufficient Identification

CANM contends that the Environmental Monitoring and Surveillance Plan was not signed, dated, or identified as a status report created to comply with DOE O 450.1. In response to our inquiry, SNL explained that according to its interpretation of the order, there are no "compliance directives" in DOE O 450.1. Memorandum from Andrea Leal, DOE/NNSA, to Carolyn Becknell, NNSA FOIA Officer, DOE/AL (May 17, 2007). Nonetheless, the program plan that was submitted to comply with CANM's request for a "site-wide groundwater monitoring plan" sets forth the implementation of a site-wide approach for groundwater protection, and thus is responsive to CANM's request. As stated previously, there is no explicit requirement for a written status report. Because the responsive document was not created as a status report to comply with DOE O 450.1, it cannot be identified as such.

D. Controlled Document

The NNSA FOIA Officer released to CANM a copy of the program plan with the following statement at the bottom of each page: "Printed copies of this document are uncontrolled. The controlled copy is at http://www-irn.sandia.gov/esh/c docs/prg.htm."

SNL explains that "controlled document" is synonymous with version control. The web version is the latest revision. Employees may print the web document, but their printed copies are not tracked (or controlled). Employees must refer to the web to verify that they have the latest version. The NNSA FOIA Officer sent CANM the latest revision. Letter from Juanita Evans, SNL, to Andrea Leal, DOE/NNSA (May 15, 2007).

CANM also contends that there were empty pages in the document. We contacted DOE/AL, and they informed us that there were no redactions made to the information released to CANM. Electronic mail message from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA FOIA Officer, DOE/AL, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (June 8, 2007). Any blank spaces in the documents are due to format, and all new sections begin on a new page. Id.

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that DOE/AL conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. DOE/AL has reasonably explained why the status report that CANM requested does not exist, and released other responsive material to the requester. DOE/AL also explained that the document referred to by CANM as a "controlled document" was released to CANM in its latest version. Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

[2] SNL explained that the delay in responding was due to a backlog of FOIA requests and the requirement that all FOIA materials that are not available in the public domain must first be reviewed by the SNL Classifications Department. Memorandum from Andrea Leal, NNSA, to Carolyn Becknell, NNSA FOIA Officer (May 17, 2007).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Citizen Action New Mexico on May 2, 2007, OHA Case Number TFA-0203, is hereby denied except as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) The portion of the appeal concerning the timeliness of DOE's response to CANM's FOIA request is hereby dismissed.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. ' 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Terry M. Apodaca

Date of Filing: May 7, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0204

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Terry M. Apodaca in response to a determination that was issued to her by the Director of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Headquarters Policy and Internal Controls Management office (hereinafter referred to as "the Director"). In that determination, the Director replied to a request for documents that Ms. Apodaca submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Director released certain documents to Ms. Apodaca in their entirety, but withheld other documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the Director release the withheld information, and respond to portions of Ms. Apodaca's request that she claims were not addressed in the determination.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

I. BACKGROUND

In her FOIA request, Ms. Apodaca sought access to Position Descriptions, lists of job duties, training records, Performance Appraisal performance objectives and performance award amounts pertaining to certain specified DOE employees, all documents pertaining to Ms. Apodaca's work performance during FY 2006, and all documents pertaining to "the Six Sigma review of the FOIA/PA programs" and to the "Violence-in-Workplace incident that occurred in OPA last May 2006." See Ms Apodaca's February 12, 2007 request at 2.

In his response, the Director released the position descriptions, eight of the nine requested Performance Appraisal performance objectives with social security numbers and ratings deleted, training records, e-mails concerning the "Six Sigma Review of the FOIA and Privacy Act programs," and a copy of a Threat Incident Form pertaining to the "Violence-In-Workplace" incident. The Director withheld the performance award amounts and social security numbers under FOIA Exemption 6.

In her Appeal, Ms. Apodaca challenges the Director's application of Exemption 6 and claims that the determination did not address her request for lists of job duties or for performance award amounts granted to Office of Public Affairs employees during the last five years. She also contends that the Threat Incident Form provided to her had been improperly altered, that she was not provided a "copy of [Person #1]'s (the aggressor) nor [Person #2]'s (the witness) statements" concerning the Violence-In-Workplace incident, and that she was not given any documents describing any disciplinary action taken against [Person #1]. Appeal at 2.

II. ANALYSIS

Exemption 6 of the FOIA protects from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982) (Washington Post).

In her Appeal, Ms. Apodaca argues that the salaries of federal employees are not exempt from mandatory release under the FOIA, and that the amounts of performance awards should similarly be released. As support for this position, she cites 5 C.F.R. § 293.311, which provides that "Present and past annual salary rates (including performance awards or bonuses, incentive awards, merit pay amount, . . . ," are to be made available to the public. 5 U.S.C. § 293.311(a)(4). In his determination, the Director found that the employees' performance ratings were protected from mandatory disclosure pursuant to Exemption 6 because their release would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of the employees' personal privacy, and that releasing the amounts of their performance awards would, in effect, release the employees' performance ratings. In order to determine whether the Director properly applied Exemption 6, we must first consider the validity of these findings.

In determining whether the performance ratings may be withheld under Exemption 6, we must undertake a three-step analysis. First, we must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the ratings may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, we must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Third, we must balance the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

We find that substantial privacy interests would be implicated by the release of the employees' performance ratings. The humiliation of an employee that could result from the release of mediocre or poor ratings is apparent. However, the release of even favorable ratings can cause embarrassment, as well as jealousy and possible harassment from employees who receive lesser ratings. On the other hand, release of the ratings would further the public interest to some extent by shedding light on the way in which the government evaluates its employees. We believe that this interest is outweighed, though, by the deleterious effects that disclosure could have on employee morale and workplace efficiency. As the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals stated in Ripskis, "Disclosure will be likely to spur unhealthy comparisons among . . . employees and thus breed discord in the workplace," and "chill candor in the evaluation process as well." 746 F.2d at 3. In that case, the Court upheld the decision of a lower court that the names of employees were properly redacted under Exemption 6 from personnel evaluation forms provided to a requester. We find that the Director properly determined that the personnel ratings are exempt from mandatory disclosure pursuant to Exemption 6.

Next, we must determine whether the Director correctly found that release of the performance bonuses would, in effect, release the ratings. In making this determination, we contacted the NNSA Service Center at which the employees in question work. We were informed that the performance appraisal system used ties the amount of awards directly to performance appraisals. For example, if an employee was given an award equal to 6 percent of that employee's salary, it would indicate a rating of "Significantly Exceeds Expectations."If the employee received a 3 percent award, that would mean that a rating of "Fully Meets Expectations" had been given. According to the Service Center, it had no discretion as to the amount of the award, given a particular employee's rating. See June 4, 2007 e-mail from Ron O'Dowd, NNSA Albuquerque Service Center, to Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney. Given these facts, and the general availability of federal salary information, it is apparent that release of the award amounts would be tantamount to releasing the performance ratings.

Contrary to Ms. Apodaca's position, 5 C.F.R. § 293.311 does not mandate the release of the award amounts. That regulation provides, in pertinent part, that the DOE "will generally not disclose" salary, performance award or other similar information when that information

> Is selected in such a way that would reveal more about the employee on whom information is sought than [that employee's name and present and past position titles and descriptions, performance standards, grades, salaries and duty stations], the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

5 C.F.R. § 293.311(b)(1). In this case, the disclosure of the performance award amounts would also reveal the employees' performance ratings, which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of their personal privacy. The Director properly concluded that the performance award amounts should be withheld under Exemption 6. See, e.g., Robert J. Ylimaki, 28 DOE ¶ 80,154 (March 23, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0651). (All OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp) [1]

As previously stated, Ms. Apodaca also challenged the adequacy of the Director's response to her FOIA request. Specifically, she alleges that the determination letter did not address her requests for performance award amounts for Office of Public Affairs employees for the last five years and for lists of job duties, that a document provided to her had been "falsified," and that three documents that she should have received were not provided to her.

Contrary to her allegations, the Director's response did address Ms. Apodaca's requests for "all performance award amounts granted to any Office of Public Affairs employee for the last five years" (Item 7 of the FOIA request), and for lists of job duties. On page two of the determination letter, the Director stated that "In reference to Item 7, the requested amounts are withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA as described above." The job duties "are detailed in the specific Position Descriptions [Ms. Apodaca] requested and received. Since the job duties were provided, they were not mentioned in the determination letter since she was given what she requested without redaction." June 4, 2007 e-mail from Mr. O'Dowd to Mr. Palmer.

Ms. Apodaca's claim that she was provided a "falsified" document is based upon the fact that the document differs from one that she provided to NNSA personnel. This document pertains to an incident that occurred involving Ms. Apodaca and [Person #1], which was witnessed by a third NNSA employee. As part of an investigation of this incident, the three employees were asked to submit written statements setting forth their versions of the events that transpired. Ms. Apodaca's statement, which was submitted as a "Threat Incident Form," is apparently one of the documents that she was expecting to receive in response to her request for "all documentation concerning" the incident in question. FOIA Request at 2. However, upon receiving statements from Ms. Apodaca, [Person #1] and the witness, the Manager of the Office of Public Affairs reviewed them and combined them into a single form for submission to Employee Relations. It is this combined form that was provided to Ms. Apodaca. Id. We were further informed that the individual statements, which included two documents requested by Ms. Apodaca, were then destroyed, and that the Threat Incident Form was not falsified, but is a true copy of the Form currently on file with the NNSA.

Finally, Ms. Apodaca contends that she was not provided with certain documents responsive to her request. As stated above, two of the documents Ms. Apodaca contends she should have been provided were the statements made by [Person #1] and [Person #2] concerning the incident between Ms. Apodaca and [Person #1]. In addition, Ms. Apodaca requested, but did not receive, any documents describing any disciplinary action taken against [Person #1]. In effect, she is challenging the adequacy of the search that was conducted.

1/ Ms. Apodaca requests, in the alternative, that she be provided with a listing of the performance awards granted by a named individual for the last three years, without the names of the employees to whom the awards were granted. However, there is no indication that such a document currently exists, and the FOIA does not require that documents be created to satisfy a request. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d)(1). Moreover, we have been informed that, given the limited number of employees in question and the fact that each has a publicly available salary that differs from the others in the group, it would not be difficult to attribute a particular award amount to a particular employee. See June 29, 2007 e-mail from Mr. O'Dowd to Mr. Palmer.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (December 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Information Focus On Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,240 (December 19, 1997) (Case No. VFA-0353).

During our communications with the NNSA Service Center, we were informed that Ms. Apodaca's request was referred to the Manager of the Office of Public Affairs and to the human resources office, where the relevant files were searched. As explained above, [Person #1]'s and [Person #2]'s statements do not exist because they were destroyed, along with Ms. Apodaca's, after the Office of Public Affairs combined their contents into a single document for submission to Employee Relations. Regarding any evidence of disciplinary action taken against [Person #1], the Office of Public Affairs has stated that no documentation exists other than a notation on the Threat Incident Form already provided to Ms. Apodaca. Based on this information, we find that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials, and was therefore adequate. [2]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Terry Apodaca, OHA Case Number TFA-0204, is hereby denied.

2/ Although it is not relevant to our evaluation of the search that was performed, we note that had any documents pertaining to any disciplinary action taken against [Person #1] been located, it is possible, if not likely, that such documents would have been withheld in whole or in part under Exemption 6.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	William J. Lueckel, Jr.
Date of Filing:	May 8, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0205

On May 8, 2007, William J. Lueckel, Jr. (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (Golden) in Golden, Colorado. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the Appeal were granted, Golden would be required to release the information it withheld in 11 documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On October 26, 2006, the Appellant filed a request with Golden for "a copy of the non-proprietary Summary / Abstract of each of the proposals submitted to DOE in response to topics 2, 3, and 4" of a Financial Assistance Funding Opportunity Announcements (FOA) issued on January 24, 2006. Electronic Mail Message from William J. Lueckel, Jr., to Golden (October 26, 2006). On November 2, 2006, Golden denied the Appellant's request under Exemptions 4 and 5 of the FOIA regarding all the summaries. On December 7, 2006, the Appellant filed an appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), stating that the FOA informs the applicants that the Summary / Abstract may be made available to the public. Appeal Letter dated November 28, 2006, from Appellant to Director, OHA, DOE, at 1-2. [1/] On January 30, 2007, OHA remanded the matter to Golden. OHA found that Exemption 5 did not apply under these circumstances, because the documents were submitted by "interested part[ies] seeking a [g]overnment benefit at the expense of other applicants." Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 12 n.4 (2001). On remand, Golden sent letters to the submitters requesting review of the summary each had submitted. Upon receiving responses from the submitters, Golden recognized that some of the information submitted in the summaries was proprietary information and believed that under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.11 it had a duty to withhold that information. Golden then issued a second determination, in which it released 67 of the summary / abstracts in full and 11 with redactions. The redactions were made under Exemptions 4 and 6. Letter dated April 9, 2007, from Christine A. Phoebe, Assistant Manager, Office of Management and Administration, Golden, to Appellant.

On May 8, 2007, the Appellant appealed, contending that the documents he is seeking are clearly public documents. He states that the submitters are notified that the summaries may be released to the public and should not contain any proprietary or sensitive business information. Letter dated April 26, 2007, from Appellant, to Director, OHA.

II. Analysis

Golden relied on Exemptions 4 and 6 to withhold those portions of the 11 documents which were redacted.

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a

[1/] In its original determination, Golden relied on Exemptions 4 and 5 to withhold all the summaries. Prior to OHA's January 30, 2007 Decision, Golden withdrew its reliance on Exemption 4. In withdrawing that reliance, it did state that "[i]n the event Golden is required to provide any of these documents in response to [the Appellant's] FOIA request, however, DOE's FOIA regulations still require that they be provided to the submitters for review and input regarding the applicability of Exemption 4 protected information and potential redaction." Response Letter dated January 9, 2007, from Kimberly J. Graber, Attorney, Golden, to Steven J. Goering, OHA.

significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See Sowell, Todd, Lafitte and Watson LLC, 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (August 31, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0510); Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (July 7, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0499.[2/]

1. The Privacy Interest

Golden determined that there was a privacy interest in the identity of the submitters' employees. We agree that a substantial privacy interest exists in the identity of private citizens due to the great potential that a commercial entity could tempt away an integral employee. The courts have also reached this conclusion. See Sheet Metal Workers v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3d Cir. 1998) (the disclosure of names, social security numbers, or addresses of government contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. HUD, 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees' names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identity of the submitters' employees.

Golden also determined that there was a privacy interest in the identity of the submitters' corporate business partners. We disagree. We do not believe that a "business entity" has a privacy interest in its name or location. For that reason, we have determined that the names of business entities may not be withheld under Exemption 6.

2. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest in the names of submitters' employees, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773; see Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80, 511 (August 5,

[2/] All OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

1996) (Case No. VFA-0184). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Dep't of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). The Appellant has not demonstrated how the disclosure of the names of non-federal employees will reveal anything of importance regarding the DOE or how it would serve the public interest. Also, revealing the names of private citizens will not contribute significantly to the public's understanding of government activities. Accordingly, we agree with Golden and find that there is a no public interest in the disclosure of the names withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether information may be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762; SafeCard Service v. SEC, 426 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991). We have concluded that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is no public interest in the release of names of the submitters' employees. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the names withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interest of the named individuals.

B. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must engage in a more complex analysis, as set forth in National Parks.

Under the National Parks test, the first requirement for Exemption 4 protection is that the withheld information must be "commercial or financial." Courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1290 (citing Washington Post Co. v. HHS, 690 F.2d 252, 266 (D.C. Cir. 1982)). Second, the information must be "obtained from a person." "Person" refers to a wide range of entities, including corporate entities. Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979). The information Golden withheld is both commercial and obtained from a person.

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. In this case, the submitters presented the requested information to the DOE on an involuntary basis, because it was required by the grant program. Where the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993).

Golden alleges that release of the withheld information is likely to cause substantial competitive harm to the submitter. April 19, 2007 Determination at 3. We agree. We have reviewed the submitter's comments and the information Golden redacted in response to those comments. The information concerns either technical information regarding the project or names of business partners of the submitters. In addition, the names of some individuals have been withheld under Exemption 6. The technical information is of a confidential nature that appears to be unique to the submitter in the way it was proposed and presented in the FOA. The disclosure of names of the business entities would allow competitors to attempt to negotiate those partners away from the submitter. Release of the information that Golden withheld would result in competitive harm to the submitter.

C. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. However, in cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,222 (May 2, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0710). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4.[3/]

D. Appellant's Argument

As the Appellant points out, the FOA cautions submitters that the summary may be made available to the public. Submitters are further warned not to include any proprietary or sensitive business information. Financial Assistance Funding Opportunity Announcement, [3/] Nor is such inquiry necessary with respect to information withheld under Exemption 6, because our analysis has already determined that there is no public interest in it.

Research and Development of Fuel Cell Technology for the Hydrogen Economy Funding Opportunity Number: DE-PS36-06GO96017 (issued January 24, 2006). For this reason, we are hesitant to allow withholding of the information under Exemptions 4 and 6. However, because Golden requested submitters' comments and because we have found that the deleted information satisfies the standards for withholding under Exemptions 4 and 6, we find, in this case, that Golden had a duty to withhold the information.

III. Conclusion

Golden requested and reviewed submitters' comments regarding information submitted with knowledge that it may be made public. Under these circumstances, we find it properly withheld the redacted business information, including the identities of corporate business partners, under Exemption 4. In addition, Golden properly withheld the names of submitters' employees under Exemption 6. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by William J. Lueckel, Jr., Case No. TFA-0205, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Terry M. Apodaca

Date of Filing: May 9, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0206

On April 23, 2007, Terry M. Apodaca (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) on April 11, 2007, in regard to a request for documents that Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE expedite the processing of the Appellant's FOIA request.[1]

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On April 10, 2007, the Appellant filed a request for documents relating to incidents involving the unauthorized release of personally identifiable information (PII) at the NNSA/SC. Also included was a request for documents detailing information related to personnel disciplinary actions taken against NNSA/SC employees for the unauthorized release of PII. April 10, 2007 FOIA Request from Appellant to Carolyn A. Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA/SC (FOIA Request) at 1. The Appellant

[1] On May 8, 2007, the Office of Hearings and Appeals received a second FOIA appeal from the Appellant. In that submission, the Appellant challenges the withholding of certain information from documents she received from the NNSA Service Center (Case No. TFA-0204). On the basis of her May 8 submission, we mistakenly assumed she had received the determination for which she had sought expedited processing, rendering moot her appeal regarding expedited processing. Consequently, in a letter dated May 8, 2007, we dismissed her appeal of NNSA/SC's denial of expedited processing for her FOIA request (Case No. TFA-0202). We have since been informed that the determination the Appellant is appealing in Case No. TFA-0204 is distinct from the request for which she had sought expedited processing. Consequently, her appeal of NNSA/SC's denial of her request for expedited processing is not in fact moot. Accordingly, we will rescind the dismissal of Case No. TFA-0202 and address the merits of her appeal concerning the denial of her request for expedited processing in this Decision (Case No. TFA-0206).

requested expedited processing of this FOIA request so that she could use the information to assist her in making a decision regarding "whether or not to accept a disciplinary action concerning violation of PII." FOIA Request at 1.[2] The Appellant also stated that the disciplinary action could include loss of pay and that her inability to make an informed decision regarding the disciplinary action could pose an imminent threat to the health and safety of her daughter given the fact that the Appellant is the sole means of support for their family. FOIA Request at 1-2.

In a April 11, 2007 letter the FOIA Officer denied the Appellant's request for expedited processing because she found that the information provided in the Appellant's FOIA request did not demonstrate the "compelling need" required for NNSA/SC to grant her request for expedited processing.

On April 23, 2007, the Appellant submitted this appeal of NNSA/SC's denial of expedited processing. The Appellant asks that OHA order NNSA/SC to expedite the processing of her FOIA request. In her Appeal letter, the Appellant argues that the possible loss of pay that a disciplinary action may entail would impact her ability to care for her daughter. She also argues that NNSA/SC has, in the past, granted expedited processing to requesters citing the same justification. Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up the line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(6)(E)(v).[3]

The Appellant believes her request merits expedited processing under the "imminent threat to life or physical safety" criterion of the FOIA's expedited processing provision. We must reluctantly reject her argument. We have recently contacted the Appellant and she has not formally been given disciplinary action. See April 26, 2007 Memorandum of Telephone conversation between the

[2] The Appellant states that she had been involved in an "inadvertent release of PII" and had been told that she would be "served a disciplinary action." Appeal at 1.

[3] As noted above, the FOIA also provides that agencies may provide expedited processing "in other cases determined by the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(6)(E)(i)(II). As of the date of this decision DOE has not promulgated regulations providing for other grounds justifying expedited processing of FOIA requests.

Appellant and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (April 26 Memorandum) at 1. Based on the information provided to us, it is not at all certain at this time that the Appellant will indeed face disciplinary action involving loss of income. Further, even if we assume this is the case, the harm that would be presented to her family from a reduction of income would not be "imminent." The Appellant's child does not have any special needs other than general support. See April 26 Memorandum at 1. While we recognize the potential impact from a reduction of any family's income, we cannot find that the harm would immediately endanger the life or physical safety of an individual. Thus we conclude that the Appellant has not established sufficient grounds to justify expedited processing of her request under the FOIA.

We must also reject the Appellant's other argument that NNSA/SC must provide expedited processing because it has previously provided such processing to other requesters. The sole standard by which an agency must provide expedited processing is given by the requirements of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). As discussed above, the Appellant's current situation does not mandate expedited processing under the FOIA. Accordingly, the Appellant's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Office of Hearings and Appeals May 8, 2007 determination dismissing the Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Terry M. Apodaca on April 23, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0202, is rescinded.

(2) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Terry M. Apodaca, OHA Case Number TFA-0206, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Bernice G. Moore

Date of Filing: June 5, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0209

This Decision concerns an Appeal filed by Bernice G. Moore from determinations issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) and the DOE's National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque (NNSA). In those determinations, ORO and NNSA responded to a request for documents that Ms. Moore submitted under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. Neither ORO nor NNSA located any documents responsive to Ms. Moore's request. This appeal, if granted, would require ORO and NNSA to perform additional searches and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

Ms. Moore filed a request under the Privacy Act with ORO for "copies of [her] personnel records, radiation exposure records, payroll records, personnel security file, OPM Background Investigation and employment verification with Basic Construction Concepts, a former contracting company owned by [her late husband] Charles E. Moore." See Letter from ORO to Bernice G. Moore (March 19, 2007). In its final response, ORO determined that it could not locate any records responsive to Ms. Moore's request. Id. ORO also stated that it forwarded Ms. Moore's Privacy Act request to NNSA because NNSA now has jurisdiction over records located at one of the DOE's facilities at Oak Ridge, the Y-12 site. Id. In its response, NNSA stated that it contacted the Y-12 Site Office to request a search for records. See Letter from NNSA to Bernice G. Moore (October 13, 2006). NNSA stated that the search yielded no records responsive to Ms. Moore's request. Id.

Ms. Moore filed the present appeal challenging the adequacy of the searches performed by ORO and NNSA. Appeal Letter (June 5, 2007); see also Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Bernice G. Moore and Diane DeMoura, OHA (June 6, 2007).

II. Analysis

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act requires only that the agency search systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, 28 DOE ¶ 80,251 (November 27, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0763).[*] Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the searches conducted by ORO and NNSA in this case, we are guided by the principles we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (April 8, 2003) (Case No. TFA-0015).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted both ORO and NNSA to discuss the searches conducted in response to Ms. Moore's request.

ORO informed us that in conducting Privacy Act searches, "computer database searches are done by name, social security number, date of birth and badge number." E-mail from Leah Ann Schmidlin, ORO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (June 8, 2007). ORO stated,

> An action was sent on July 27, 2006, to the East Tennessee Technology Park [(ETTP)] (former K-25 Plant) and the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL) to request the payroll, personnel and radiation exposure records on Ms. Bernice G. Moore. [ETTP] found no payroll, personnel or radiation exposure records. ORNL found no personnel or radiation exposure records. An action was also sent on July 27, 2006, to our DOE Access Authorization Branch to request the personnel security file on Ms. Moore. No documents were located by her name or social security number.

Id. Additional searches were done both at ETTP and Oak Ridge Associated Universities for a work history report on Ms. Moore and any information available for the company, Basic Construction Concepts. Finally, ORO also "manually looked at [its] index card files on contracts and subcontracts for any information on Basic Construction Concepts under Charles E. Moore Contracts. No information was found on this company." Id. ORO informed us that Basic Construction Concepts "did subcontracting work for the [main contractors at the Oak Ridge site] Rust Engineering Company and Martin Marietta Energy Systems (MMES) at the Oak Ridge

Plants in the 1980s." Id. Consequently, it is likely that the records pertaining to the company are located with those contractors.

NNSA informed us that, in responding to Ms. Moore's request, it searched for records in several databases using Ms. Moore's name, social security number and date of birth. E-mail from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (June 22, 2007). According to NNSA, the databases searched include Plant Records, Personnel, and Radcon (radiation contamination). No responsive records were located. Id. NNSA stated that its Personnel Security Department also performed a search for records pertaining to Ms. Moore, but did not locate any responsive records. According to NNSA, when ORO turned over jurisdiction of its Y-12 records, the NNSA Personnel Security Department "received files related to current [Y-12] employees but … did not receive files related to employees that are retired or are no longer employed at Oak Ridge." Id.

Based on this information, it is clear that both ORO and NNSA searched the available databases using Ms. Moore's personal information in an attempt to locate any responsive documents. We find that ORO and NNSA performed extensive searches reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Moore's request. Therefore, despite yielding no records responsive to Ms. Moore's request, the searches were adequate. Accordingly, Ms. Moore's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on June 5, 2007, by Bernice G. Moore, OHA Case No. TFA-0209, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Citizen Action New Mexico
Date of Filing:	June 21, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0211

On June 21, 2007, Citizen Action New Mexico (CANM) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 5, 2007, by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy in Albuquerque, New Mexico (DOE/AL) in response to a request for documents that CANM submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/AL perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

On May 3, 2007, CANM filed a FOIA request with DOE/AL for "full and complete copies of documents in any form, whether from correspondence, memoranda, tape recordings, electronic or hand written communications, notes or handouts . . . attachments, maps, graphs and references to those documents . . ." regarding the Interim Status Storage Unit (ISSU) that operated at the Sandia National Laboratories (SNL) Mixed Waste Landfill. Letter from NNSA to CANM, June 5, 2007 (Determination). CANM listed 12 items in its request. DOE/AL did not release any responsive documents, stating that some of the information did not exist and that the rest was publicly available from the New Mexico Environment Department (NMED). CANM appealed the determination and asked OHA to order NNSA to release the responsive documents. Electronic mail message from CANM to OHA (June 19, 2007) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

CANM contends that the Agency's final response does not comply with 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(3)(A). This section of the FOIA requires that in response to a proper request, the agency "shall make the records promptly available to any person." According to CANM, "[i]f the responsive documents are in the possession and control of NNSA/DOE/SNL and are determined to be releasable, the FOIA duty is to provide them. . . . No documents have been supplied for any of the items of the FOIA request although the documents are in the possession of NNSA/DOE/SNL." Appeal.

We contacted DOE/AL for further information regarding its Determination. DOE/AL told us that all of the responsive documents are available at the DOE FOIA Reading Room, located at the Zimmerman Library, a University of New Mexico Government Information Reading Room. According to its website, the Zimmerman Library is ". . . a Regional Federal Depository Library coordinated by the U.S. Government Printing Office. Collections in the reading room have been developed outside the Depository program with the cooperation of federal agencies to enhance the library's collection in local areas of interest." See http://library.unm.edu/doe. Both CANM and the library are located in Albuquerque, New Mexico. The DOE/AL FOIA office also informed us that the documents that are the subject of CANM's current request were the subject of an earlier request by the former executive director of CANM. Electronic mail message from DOE/AL FOIA officer to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 8, 2007). After the records were released to the former executive director, DOE placed the boxes of records in the Reading Room in anticipation of subsequent requests for the same records. Id.

It is true that section (a)(3) requires an agency to release records promptly to a requester. However, subsection (a)(2)(D) provides an exception and states that the agency shall make available for public inspection and copying:

> "copies of all records, regardless of form or format, which have been released to any person under paragraph (3) and which, because of the nature of their subject matter, the agency determines have become or are likely to become the subject of subsequent requests for substantially the same records . . . ."

5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(2)(D).

Thus, the responsive material in this case falls within the purview of subsection (a)(2)(D). The records were released in an earlier request and then placed in the Reading Room for the convenience of future requesters. DOE/AL had no duty to release to CANM any material that was already disclosed under subsection (a)(3) and that was accessible in the public reading room. See United States Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 152 (1999) (stating that under FOIA subsection (a)(3), an agency need not make available materials that have already been disclosed under subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2)).

We note that the Determination informed the requester that ". . . all the requested documentation is publicly available from the New Mexico Environment Department (NMED) unless otherwise stated." Determination at 2. DOE/AL did not tell the requester that the responsive material was available for public access at the Zimmerman Library, its local public reading room. We have informed the requester that the records are in the DOE FOIA public reading room, and recommend that DOE/AL do the same in the future. Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Citizen Action New Mexico on May 2, 2007, OHA Case Number TFA-0211, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Eugenie Reich
Date of Filing:	July 11, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0213

On July 11, 2007, Eugenie Reich (Reich) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on June 6, 2007, by the FOIA and Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) in response to a request for documents that Reich submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ release responsive material.

I. Background

In December 2006, Reich filed a FOIA request with DOE/HQ for (1) any records that identify the members of a panel convened by James Roberto of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL) to investigate fraud and research misconduct allegations made through the journal Nature against researchers in the Stephen Pennycook research group of ORNL during the summer of 2006, and (2) the final investigation report from the panel. Electronic mail message from Reich to OHA, December 9, 2006.[1] DOE/HQ informed Reich that the DOE Office of Science (DOE/OS) determined that the records in question are records owned by a contactor, in this case the management and operating contractor of Oak Ridge, UT-Battelle. Letter from DOE/HQ to Reich, June 6, 2007 (Determination Letter). According to DOE/HQ, the contract between DOE and UT-Battelle has designated all records that concern employee-related investigations as the property of the contractor and not subject to the provisions of the FOIA. DOE/HQ went on to state that the creator of the record, UT-Battelle, provided the document to the Office of Science "in accordance with the contract in which [UT-Battelle] retained control of the document." Determination Letter at 1. Reich appealed the determination and asked OHA to order DOE/HQ to release the responsive documents. Letter from Reich to OHA (July 11, 2007) (Appeal). [2]

[1] These are the same documents that were the subject of the request that led to an appeal in OHA Case No. TFA-0187, Eugenie Reich, 29 DOE ¶ 80,289 (2007).

[2] Reich informed this office that she would supplement her Appeal at a later date, and OHA received the additional material, dated October 10, 2007, on October 16, 2007. In the supplemental submission, the appellant raises a number of issues concerning both the matters under consideration in this proceeding and those examined in Case No. TFA-0187, a decision regarding an earlier appeal she filed. In that earlier proceeding, Reich appealed a denial of her request for expedited processing of her request for the information under consideration here. Among her arguments with respect to Case No. TFA-0187, the appellant asserts that OHA failed to consider the justifications for expedited processing she

DOE/OS argues that the final report of the ORNL investigation is a contractor-owned record and not subject to FOIA. DOE/OS bases its argument on the following clause from the contract between UT-Battelle and DOE:

> (b) Contractor-owned records. The following records are considered the property of the Contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) of this clause.
> > (1) Employment-related records (such as worker's compensation files; employee relations records, records of salary and employee benefits; drug testing records, labor negotiation records; records on ethics, employee concerns, and other employee-related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality ; . . .

Contract DE-AC05-00OR22725, Clause I-141. 970.5204-79 Access to and Ownership of Records. (emphasis added).

The report of investigation, an employee-related investigation conducted under an expectation of confidentiality, was not considered an agency record under the UT-Battelle contract. Reich argues that notwithstanding the contract clause cited above, the report is an agency record because it was provided to the agency and then used by DOE to fulfill its responsibilities under the research misconduct policy.

A. Whether the Report is an Agency Record

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the documents in question are agency records and thus subject to the FOIA under the criteria set out by the federal courts. The statutory language of the FOIA does not define an agency record, but merely lists examples of the types of information that agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the court for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations such as UT-Battelle are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g. Dallas Register, 28 DOE ¶ 80,207 (March 1, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0711); Dr. Nicolas Dominguez, 27 DOE ¶ 80,117 (March 10, 1998) (Case Nos. VFA-0377, VFA-0378, VFA-0379).[3] That analysis involves a provided and reworded them in such a manner that their import was diminished. I have considered those contentions as well as the others she raised regarding that decision, and find that none of them dictates that modification of the decision in Case No. TFA-0187 is necessary. Regarding the current proceeding, the appellant requests that, if OHA overturns the initial determination, her request for expedited processing now be granted or her right to judicial review be reaffirmed. Because I have determined that the decision in Case No. TFA-0187 should stand, the appellant may seek judicial review as set forth in the ordering paragraphs of that decision.

determination of (1) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (2) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Dallas Register, 28 DOE ¶ 80,207 (March 1, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0711). A private organization must be considered a federal agency if its daily operations are supervised by the federal government. Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980). DOE does not supervise the daily operations of UT-Battelle, and we therefore conclude that UT-Battelle is not an agency subject to the FOIA. Nonetheless, after completing the second step of the analysis, we find that the report of investigation is an agency record and thus subject to the FOIA.

In Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989), the Court stated that documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. See also Qwest/GSD, 28 DOE ¶ 80,224 (May 8, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0739). The report of investigation meets the first test because, according to the Determination Letter and our conversation with DOE/OS, UT-Battelle provided a copy of the report to DOE/OS. Determination Letter at 1. As explained below, we also find that the report was under agency control at the time of Reich's request.

B. Whether the Report was Within DOE Control at the Time of the Request

Courts have identified four relevant factors for an agency to consider when determining whether the agency has control over a document: (1) the intent of the record's creator to retain or relinquish control over the record; (2) the ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit; (3) the extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and (4) the extent to which the record was integrated into the agency's recordkeeping system or files. Consumer Federation of America v. USDA, 455 F.3d 283, 288 n.7 (D.C. Cir. 2006). We contacted DOE/HQ for further information regarding its determination, and that office directed us to the Office of General Counsel (DOE/OGC). DOE/OGC concluded that three of the four factors in the Consumer Federation test weighed against a finding of agency control over the report of investigation. Electronic mail message from Jocelyn Richards, DOE Office of General Counsel, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (September 5, 2007). According to DOE/OGC, UT-Battelle created and intended to retain control over the responsive document, as indicated in the contract between DOE and the contractor. DOE/OGC also stated that DOE/OS contends that it was not able to use or dispose of the record at will, and that the record was not integrated into DOE recordkeeping systems or files. Id.

Reich argues that the report was under agency control because DOE/OS required the report in order to establish UT-Battelle's compliance with the federal agency research misconduct policy. She states that "[t]hese policies require that Dr. Dehmer or the responsible DOE official receive the investigation report, and that she or DOE provide oversight of the misconduct investigation as part of fulfilling a responsibility to provide oversight of federally funded research." Appeal at 3.

We contacted the Office of Science to determine the extent to which that office read or relied on the investigative report, the third factor in the Consumer Federation analysis. DOE/OS contends that they had access to the report "only to provide oversight on the investigation." Electronic Mail Message from Veronica Angulo, DOE/OS to Valerie Vance Adeyeye (September 10, 2007). According to DOE/OS, ORNL followed the steps outlined in the research misconduct procedure: inquiry, investigation and finally adjudication. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Helen Kerch, Harriet Kung and Veronica Angulo, DOE/OS, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (October 12, 2007). ORNL informed DOE when the inquiry became an investigation. In order to begin the investigation, ORNL established a panel of scientists, none of whom are employed by ORNL. The panel made a finding of "no misconduct." At the conclusion of the investigation, ORNL did show DOE/OS copies of the report, all contained in binders marked "Do Not Duplicate." Id. The research institution met with DOE and presented those copies in order to show DOE/OS that it had conducted a sound investigation, following the procedure outlined in the research misconduct policy. This meeting allowed DOE/OS to review the process that the panel used to arrive at its findings.[4] It was very important to DOE/OS to confirm, as it did, that the panel was objective and composed of experts who did not work at ORNL. At the conclusion of the review, ORNL then took all of the copies back. Id. However, someone at ORNL sent a copy of the report via electronic mail to Dr. Patricia Dehmer of DOE/OS. Id. There is no indication that DOE used this report for any other purpose.

DOE/OS alleges that the report was not used for any purpose other than to confirm the procedural accuracy of the investigation and to present the conclusion of the panel. Nonetheless, we find that the report of investigation is an agency record because it was obtained by DOE and was under the control of DOE at the time of the request. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 144-145. As directed by Consumer Federation, we considered the four relevant factors that determine if an agency has control over a document. First, we find that UT-Battelle, through its ownership of records clause, clearly intended to retain control over the report of investigation. As regards the second factor, UT-Battelle stamped copies of the report with "Do Not Duplicate" and retrieved those copies immediately after the meeting between DOE/OS and ORNL, thereby restricting the ability of the agency to use and dispose of the report as it sees fit. The front page of the emailed copy of the report also contains a statement that the document is not to be copied or disclosed without written authorization from UT-Battelle. However, in considering the third factor, we conclude that DOE personnel relied upon the report to determine that the investigation was conducted appropriately. With respect to the fourth factor, DOE/OS stated that a copy had been provided to its office via electronic mail and that copy has been retained in the office archives. Thus, an analysis of the four factors supports a decision that the report of investigation is an agency record.

Moreover, according to Tax Analysts, a record is within the control of an agency when "the materials have come into the agency's possession in the legitimate conduct of its official duties." Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 146. The use of the record described above meets the Tax Analysts requirement for agency control of the record because the report was obtained by DOE and was an element of DOE's official oversight of the investigation. Therefore, for the reasons set forth above, we find that the report of investigation is an agency record and subject to release under the FOIA.[5]

[4] The panel did not participate in the adjudication.

[5] DOE/OS has not stated that it ever obtained any other record that identifies the members of the investigation panel, the second record requested by Reich. DOE/OS did not have such a record in its possession and control at the time of the Accordingly, this Appeal is granted. The Office of Science shall either release the report of investigation or issue a new determination to justify its withholding of any portion of the report.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Eugenie Reich on July 11, 2007, OHA Case Number TFA-0213, is hereby granted.

(2) The Office of Science shall either release the final report of investigation of the panel convened by James Roberto of ORNL to investigate fraud and research misconduct allegations made through the journal Nature against researchers in the Stephen Pennycook research group of ORNL during the summer of 2006 or issue a new determination to justify its withholding of any portion of the report.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Marie Panzarella

Case Number: TFA-0214

This Decision concerns an Appeal filed by Marie Panzarella from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (EMCBC). In that determination, EMCBC responded to a request for documents that Ms. Panzarella submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. EMCBC was unable to locate any documents responsive to Ms. Panzarella's request. This appeal, if granted, would require EMCBC to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

Ms. Panzarella filed a FOIA request with EMCBC for "all records, contracts, and any other information that the West Valley Demonstration Project [(WVDP)] has on Occidental Chemical Corporation, including any information under Occidental's 'subnames, titles and associations' in regards to the former town of Amherst dump site on Hopkins Rd[.], Amherst, New York; the waste disposal at the Dann Lake, Williamsville, New York; as well as the waste disposal in Ellicot Creek, Amherst, New York between 1950 and 2000." See Letter from EMCBC to Marie Panzarella (June 5, 2007) (Determination Letter). In its final response, EMCBC stated that a thorough search was performed for documents responsive to Ms. Panzarella's request. Id. EMCBC described the search as follows:

> [The] search included an extensive computer search of the WVDP files. The following search terms were used in conducting a keyword search of the files: Occidental; Erie County; Amherst; Williamsville; Dann Lake; Millersport Highway; Ellicott Creek; Hopkins Road; Dump; 2801 Long Road; Grand Island; and the zip code: 14072. Furthermore, the West Valley Nuclear Service Company conducted searches of the WVDP's purchase order, credit card, and > document/archive electronic systems for Occidental Chemical or Hooker Chemical.

Id. EMCBC stated that the search yielded no records responsive to Ms. Panzarella's request. Id.

Ms. Panzarella filed the present appeal challenging the adequacy of the search performed by EMCBC. Letter from Marie Panzarella to OHA (dated July 4, 2007) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (2003).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted EMCBC to ascertain the scope of the search. EMCBC stated, > [T]he records checked were the Correspondence Tracking and Records Management electronic system. All correspondence ingoing or outgoing is given a tracking number and entered into the electronic system. Records existing prior to the institution of the electronic system were entered into the system when the system was instituted…the system [was] searched based on the keywords as identified in the original FOIA…all records contained in [the Contracting Officer's] official contract files [were searched]. These records comprise five [four-drawer] file cabinets, again by keyword.

Electronic Mail Message from Scott Lucarelli, EMCBC, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (July 23, 2007). EMCBC also stated that WVDP was established in 1982. Prior to 1982, the West Valley site was maintained by New York State. Therefore, according to EMCBC, pre-1982 records need to be sought through New York State's Freedom of Information process because the DOE is not in possession of those records. Id.

EMCBC searched the electronic database which contains a record of all correspondence since 1982 for the West Valley Demonstration Project by several relevant keywords derived from Ms. Panzarella's request. In addition, all of the Contracting Officer's official contract files were searched, again by keyword. According to the Determination Letter, additional searches of the West Valley Demonstration Project's purchase order, credit card, and document/archive electronic systems for Occidental Chemical and Hooker Chemical were also performed. Based on this information, we find that EMCBC performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Panzarella's request. Therefore, despite the fact that it yielded no responsive records, the search was adequate. Accordingly, Ms. Panzarella's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 13, 2007, by Marie Panzarella, OHA Case No. TFA-0214, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Date of Filing: July 16, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0215

This Decision concerns a Motion for Reconsideration that was filed by Citizen Action New Mexico (hereinafter referred to as "CANM" or "the Movant"). In its Motion, CANM requests that we modify a Decision and Order that we issued in response to a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Appeal filed by CANM. See Citizen Action New Mexico, Case No. TFA-0203 (July 6, 2007) (Citizen Action).

I. BACKGROUND

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In its FOIA request, CANM sought access to: the "site-wide ground water surveillance monitoring plan prepared by Sandia National Laboratories, New Mexico (SNL)," the status report concerning this plan that was required by DOE Order 450.1, "all attachments, maps, graphs and references used in conjunction with both the monitoring plan and the status report," any document that was provided to the New Mexico Environment Department pursuant to the DOE Order, and documents showing the funding mechanisms for the surveillance monitoring plan. CANM Appeal at 1.

Upon receipt of this request, the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Albuquerque Service Center (NNSA) referred it to SNL, which conducted a search and identified two responsive documents. The first was identified as SNL "Environmental Monitoring and Surveillance Plan (PG470247), Undated, 29 pages," and the second as SNL "Groundwater Protection Program Plan for Fiscal Year 2007 (PG470234), dated September 2006, 32 pages." Both of these documents were determined to be responsive to that part of the request concerning the "site-wide ground water surveillance monitoring plan," and both were released to CANM in their entirety. NNSA inquired of SNL as to why no documents responsive to the other portions of CANM's request could be located. See April 4, 2007, letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA FOIA Officer, to David McCoy, Director, CANM (Determination Letter) at 1. SNL replied that the other documents requested by CANM do not exist because DOE Order 450.1 does not require them. Specifically, SNL draws a distinction between the "site-wide ground water surveillance monitoring plan" that the Movant contends is required by the Order, and the terms of the "Contractor Requirements Document (CRD)," which sets forth the requirements of the Order that apply to contractors. The CRD states, in pertinent part, that contractors must "[c]onsider . . . for inclusion as applicable" into their Integrated Safety Management Systems "implementation of a site-wide approach for groundwater protection." DOE Order 450.1, Appendix 2 at 1-2. SNL contends that the Order does not require the creation of the "site-wide groundwater surveillance monitoring plan" requested by CANM, and that the "Groundwater Protection Program Plan for Fiscal Year 2007" that was provided to the Movant details the implementation of a site-wide approach for groundwater protection, and therefore satisfies the requirements of the CRD. See November 21, 2007, e-mail from Shirley Peterson, NNSA, to Robert Palmer and William Schwartz, Office of Hearings and Appeals. With regard to the remainder of CANM's request, SNL replied that the only "status report" referred to in DOE Order 450.1 would be an internal DOE document, that there were no documents provided to the New Mexico Environmental Department pursuant to the provisions of the Order, and that since there was no "site-wide groundwater surveillance monitoring plan," and no status report in its possession, it also had no "attachments, maps, graphs and references" to or in these documents, and no funding mechanisms for such a plan. Determination Letter at 2.

CANM appealed this Determination. In its Appeal, the Movant contended that NNSA's search for responsive documents was inadequate, that the Determination Letter was untimely, and that the documents that CANM received "were insufficiently identified as to demonstrate the necessary compliance with DOE Order 450.1." Appeal at 1. In our Decision, we concluded that NNSA's search for responsive documents was adequate and that we did not have jurisdiction to address CANM's contention that NNSA did not issue its Determination in a timely fashion. We further rejected the Movant's contention that the documents received were insufficiently identified. See Citizen Action.

In its Motion for Reconsideration, CANM states that "[u]pon information and belief," a written status report was filed concerning the environmental protection program at Los Alamos National Laboratories (LANL) "to comply with DOE O 450.1 by December 31, 2005 as part of implementing DOE 450.1." Motion for Reconsideration at 1. Accordingly, CANM argues that a similar report should exist concerning SNL, and requests that we inquire of SNL as to whether a written status report exists or whether a written memorialization of an oral status report exists. Motion at 1-2, 4. CANM further contends that it should have been provided with two communications cited in our Decision, a May 9, 2007, letter from Juanita Evans, SNL, to Andrea Leal, DOE Sandia Site Office and a May 17, 2007, memorandum from Ms. Leal to Carolyn Becknell, NNSA FOIA Officer, and should have been given an opportunity to comment on those documents before the issuance of our Decision in Citizen Action. The Movant requests access to these communications. [*] */ CANM also points out that our Decision did not address NNSA's failure to provide "documents which show the funding mechanisms for the surveillance monitoring plan on an annual basis as specific budgetary items." Motion at 4. As set forth above, NNSA stated in its Determination that "since there is no 'site-wide monitoring plan,' there is no funding mechanism for the plan." Determination Letter at 2. In previous cases, we have applied a standard of reasonableness in evaluating FOIA searches, and have not required that those searches result in absolute exhaustion of the files. See, e.g., Stephen A. Jarvis, Case No. VFA-0764, October 23, 2002. Given NNSA's statement that there is no "site-wide monitoring plan," it was reasonable for it to conclude that there are no documents concerning a funding mechanism for such a plan.

II. ANALYSIS

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have exercised our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. Nathaniel Hendricks, 25 DOE ¶ 80,173 (1996). In the past, we have looked to the standards contained in OHA's procedural regulations for guidance as to the appropriate substantive standards for use in this type of case. See, e.g., Nevada Desert Experience, 28 DOE ¶ 80,184 (August 28, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0688). Those regulations indicate that a Motion for Reconsideration should be granted only upon a showing of "significantly changed circumstances." 10 C.F.R. § 1003.55. "Significantly changed circumstances" include the discovery of material facts that were not known at the time of the initial proceeding. 10 C.F.R. § 1003.55(b)(2)(i). In this case, CANM states that a status report was prepared concerning DOE facilities operated by a similarly-situated DOE contractor, LANL. When coupled with the requirement in DOE Order 450.1 that DOE Site Office Managers file a status report concerning the compliance of site contractors with the Order by December 31, 2005, DOE Order 450.1(5)(d)(1), this led us to believe that such a report may exist, and justifies reconsideration of our Decision in Citizen Action.

Accordingly, we contacted NNSA and inquired as to whether an oral status report had been given by the Sandia Office Site Manager to the "Cognizant Secretarial Officer," as that term is used in the Order, and if so, whether a written memorialization of that report existed. Our inquiry apparently triggered another search, and a document that appears to be the status report requested by CANM was identified. The document is a December 22, 2005, memorandum from Patty Wagner, Sandia Site Office Manager, to Thomas D'Agostino, Deputy Administrator for Defense Programs. See November 21, 2007, e-mail from Shirley Peterson, NNSA, to Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and William Schwartz, OHA Senior FOIA Official, forwarding the November 19, 2007, e-mail from Ms. Leal to Ms. Becknell. We will direct that NNSA review this document as expeditiously as possible for potential release to CANM.

In the November 19th e-mail, Ms. Leal also states that SNL "provided a disk that had the backup information as mentioned in" the Wagner memorandum. This information would appear to be responsive to CANM's request for "maps, graphs and references used in conjunction with . . . the status report," and we will also instruct NNSA to review this material for potential release to the Movant.

The Movant's final contentions concern the May 9, 2007, Evans letter and the May 17, 2007, Leal memorandum that were referenced in our Decision in Citizen Action. Specifically, CANM argues that it should have been provided with these communications and with an opportunity to comment on them prior to the issuance of our Decision. CANM also requests copies of these documents. As an initial matter, we note that unlike other areas of our jurisdiction (i.e., personnel security and "whistleblower" proceedings, which are quasi-judicial in nature), there are no provisions in the FOIA regulations prohibiting ex parte contacts. See, e.g., City of Federal Way, 27 DOE ¶ 80,191 (March 10, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0472). Moreover, allowing FOIA appellants to comment on every communication that we receive would make it exceedingly difficult in many cases to process FOIA appeals within 20 working days, as required by Section 1004.8(d) of the FOIA regulations. We therefore reject the Movant's argument that it should have been provided with copies of these documents and an opportunity to respond to them prior to our Decision in Citizen Action. In addition, in previous cases we have not permitted FOIA appellants to broaden their document requests in the context of an appeal. See, e.g., Cox Newspapers, 22 DOE ¶ 80,106 (February 10, 1992) (Case No. LFA-0180) ; Bernard Hanft, 21 DOE ¶ 80,134 (June 20, 1991) (Case No. LFA-0126). CANM has not persuaded us to depart from this policy. Accordingly, the Movant should file another FOIA request if it wishes to have the DOE review and consider releasing these documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Citizen Action New Mexico, OHA Case Number TFA-0215, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration's Albuquerque Service Center. On remand, NNSA should review the December 22, 2005, memorandum from Patty Wagner, Sandia Site Office Manager, to Thomas D'Agostino, Deputy Administrator for Defense Programs, and the supporting documentation provided by SNL as expeditiously as possible and issue a new determination releasing the documents or justifying the withholding of any portions of them.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Deborah L. Huettel

Date of Filing: July 18, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0216

This Decision concerns an Appeal filed by Deborah L. Huettel from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO). In that determination, ORO responded to a request for documents that Ms. Huettel submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORO located, and released, some documents responsive to Ms. Huettel's request. This appeal, if granted, would require ORO to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

Ms. Huettel filed a FOIA request with ORO for records pertaining to her father. Specifically, Ms. Huettel requested her father's medical records, personnel records, radiation exposure records, chest x-rays, Oak Ridge Institute for Nuclear Studies (ORINS) Hospital file, beryllium records, industrial hygiene records, personnel security file, Office of Personnel Management (OPM) background investigation, payroll records, and training records. See Letter from Deborah L. Huettel to Privacy Act Officer, ORO (March 15, 2007). In its determination letter, ORO provided Ms. Huettel with "copies of [her father's] payroll, personnel, and radiation exposure records from the [DOE's] Oak Ridge Office facilities." See Letter from Amy Rothrock, ORO, to Deborah Huettel (June 5, 2007) (Determination Letter). The Determination Letter also stated that ORO could not locate any "medical records, chest x-rays, ORINS hospital file, beryllium records, industrial hygiene records, or training records." Id. The Determination Letter further indicated that the requested personnel security file and OPM background investigation were unavailable because they were "destroyed in accordance with the National Archives and Records Administration [NARA] General Records Schedules." Id. Finally, the Determination Letter stated that ORO also forwarded Ms. Huettel's request to the DOE's National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) because NNSA now has jurisdiction over records located at one of the DOE's facilities at Oak Ridge, the Y-12 site.[1] Id.

Ms. Huettel filed the present appeal challenging the adequacy of the search performed by ORO. Letter from Deborah L. Huettel to OHA (dated June 12, 2007) (Appeal Letter). In her appeal, Ms. Huettel stated that she had documentation indicating that some records pertaining to former employees of Rust Engineering, her father's former employer, were located at the Federal Records Center in Atlanta, Georgia, maintained by NARA. Ms. Heuttel questioned whether ORO's search for records included records stored at the Federal Records Center. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[2]

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted ORO to ascertain the scope of the search. ORO informed us that it performed a search for records and located some, but not all, documents responsive to Ms. Huettel's request. E-mail from Amy Rothrock, ORO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (August 1, 2007). ORO provided Ms. Huettel with a work history report located at Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU), personnel security clearance assurance index card file data located at "the DOE Records Holding Area where legacy records on some employees, including Rust [Engineering] employees, go back to 1943, and some radiation exposure records located at the K-25 site and Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL)." Id.

ORO also discussed the remaining requested records which could not be located. Regarding the requested ORINS hospital file, ORO stated that "only cancer patients undergoing treatments at … the ORINS Hospital would have medical and radiation exposure records from ORAU … Very few employees were treated at the ORINS Hospital. ORAU did not find any ORINS hospital records on [Ms. Huettel's father] because he was not a cancer patient at their facility." Id. ORO also stated that ORAU "has beryllium records on many employees since [ORAU] conducted a beryllium worker study…and administered a program for … testing for chronic berylliosis desease (CBD)." Id. According to ORO, ORAU searched for, but could not locate, any records responsive to Ms. Huettel's request. Additionally, ORO stated that "some plants keep separate [industrial hygiene] records from [industrial hygiene] information collected in medical files. Any [industrial hygiene] data on [Ms. Huettel's father] would be contained in his medical file and/or [industrial hygiene] file if one was created." Id. According to ORO, these records are under the purview of the Y-12 site and, therefore, under the jurisdiction of [1] Ms. Huettel filed this appeal before receiving a final response from NNSA regarding its search. Consequently, the NNSA search is not within the scope of this appeal.

[2] All OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

NNSA. Id. Finally, regarding Ms. Huettel's inquiry about records maintained at the Federal Records Center in Atlanta, Georgia, ORO stated that some Rust Engineering records are located at that facility, but that those records are under the jurisdiction of NNSA and the Y-12 site. According to ORO, Y-12 site personnel generally search the records held in the records centers in response to FOIA and Privacy Act requests. Id.

Although Ms. Huettel did not include the NNSA determination in her appeal, we contacted NNSA to determine which, if any, records were provided to Ms. Heuttel and to determine whether the DOE Federal Records Center in Atlanta, Georgia, was included in the scope of the search for documents. According to NNSA, the Y-12 site and all of the DOE records centers, including NARA sites, were searched for responsive documents. The search was performed using Ms. Huettel's father's name and social security number. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (August 8, 2007). NNSA informed us that it located and provided to Ms. Huettel two medical files, a personnel file, radiation exposure records, industrial hygiene records, and x-rays. E-mail from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (September 5, 2007).

Based on this information, we find that ORO performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Huettel's request. Therefore, the search was adequate. Accordingly, Ms. Huettel's appeal should be denied. Because NNSA's response was not included in the scope of this appeal, Ms. Huettel may appeal that determination separately if she was not satisfied with NNSA's response regarding the Y-12 site records.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 18, 2007, by Deborah L. Huettel, OHA Case No. TFA-0216, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Rogelio Gloria

Case Number: TFA-0217

On July 23, 2007, Rogelio Gloria (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the Freedom of Information Act / Privacy Act Group (FOI / PA) issued on June 29, 2007, on behalf of the Energy Information Administration (EIA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). That determination concerned a request for information submitted by the Appellant pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, EIA would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

On May 23, 2007, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request for a "record of sale of oil from property in Long Beach, [California], and chemical composition." Electronic mail message dated May 23, 2007, from Appellant to FOI / PA. On June 29, 2007, FOI / PA responded that EIA "conducted a search of its files and found no documents responsive to the request." Determination Letter dated June 29, 2007, from Abel Lopez, Director, FOI / PA, to Appellant. On July 23, 2007, the Appellant appealed that determination to our Office. Appeal Letter dated July 23, 2007, from Rogelio Gloria, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. In the Appeal, the Appellant states that he is surprised that the information is not readily available. He continues that "[m]ost of the information is spread out over several databases." Id. He claims that the information he is requesting is needed "to run the country." Id. The Appellant suggests that DOE ask various federal and state agencies and other entities for information that would allow DOE to formulate the information he is requesting. Id.

Analysis

of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g.,Glen Bowers, 29 DOE ¶ 80,240 (January 9, 2006) (Case No. TFA-0138); Doris M. Harthun, 28 DOE ¶ 80,282 (April 8, 2003) (Case No. TFA-0015).[1/]

We contacted EIA in response to the Appellant's request to determine what type of search was conducted. EIA responded that it contacted its only office that deals with crude oil sales data, the Dallas Field Office. The Dallas Field Office indicated that it does not collect or have detailed oil or natural gas sales information by person or property, such as was requested by the Appellant. EIA only monitors oil and natural gas fields that produce at least 400,000 barrels of crude oil or 2 billion cubic feet of gas annually. EIA asked the lead analyst, the most knowledgeable person in the Dallas Field Office, if the information the Appellant was requesting was available. After full consideration of the request, the lead analyst stated that the office does not collect or have detailed records of oil or natural gas sales by person or property, as the Appellant requested. EIA's search of the Dallas Field Office was reasonably calculated to uncover any information relevant to the Appellant's request. EIA asked the person with the most knowledge whether it maintains the information the Appellant was requesting. He stated that EIA does not maintain that information. Electronic Mail Messages sent August 1 and 3, 2007, from Jay Casselberry, Executive Assistant to the Administrator and Deputy Administrator, EIA, to Janet Fishman, OHA.

In his Appeal, the Appellant suggests that DOE search other agencies and entities for the information he seeks. The FOIA does not mandate that an agency conduct such a search.[2/] Moreover, the FOIA does not require that documents be created in response to a request. 5 U.S.C. § 552; 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d)(1), (2).

In evaluating the search EIA conducted, the only applicable standard is whether the agency conducted "a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt. We find that the search EIA conducted met that standard. EIA searched the only DOE office that might possess the requested information. Consequently, we find that EIA's search was adequate under the FOIA. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Citizen Action New Mexico

Date of Filing: July 25, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0218

On July 25, 2007, Citizen Action New Mexico (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on June 25, 2007. In that determination, NNSA responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. ' 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA=s determination identified one document as responsive to this request and withheld portions of it under Exemptions 2 and 5 of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release the information withheld under Exemptions 2 and 5 to the Appellant.

I. Background

In a letter dated September 27, 2006, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to NNSA for a copy of the Ten-Year Comprehensive Site Plan FY 2007-2016 prepared by Sandia National Laboratories, New Mexico (Ten-Year Plan). On June 25, 2007, NNSA issued a determination on the matter. NNSA searched and located the requested document, redacted portions of the document under Exemptions 2 and 5 of the FOIA, and released the redacted version to the Appellant.

On July 25, 2007, the Appellant filed an Appeal of the June 25, 2007 determination with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) of the DOE. In its Appeal, the Appellant challenges the withholding of information under Exemptions 2 and 5. Specifically, the Appellant asserts that the redactions made under both exemptions were not adequately explained in the determination letter. The Appellant also asserts that factual material in the responsive document was not reasonably segregated and released. See Appeal Letter. For these reasons, the Appellant requests that OHA direct NNSA to release the requested information.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. ' 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). AAn agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption.@ Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency=s burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

Exemption 2

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are Arelated solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency.@ 5 U.S.C. ' 552 (b)(2); 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.10(b)(2). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature (Alow two@ information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement (Ahigh two@ information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, Ahigh two@ information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the Ahigh two@ category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under Ahigh two@ must be able to show that (1) the requested information is Apredominantly internal,@ and (2) its disclosure Asignificantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes.@ Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

NNSA=s Determination Letter indicates that it withheld portions of the Ten-Year Plan because it Apertains to the scale and scope of work to be accomplished in support of, as well as the identification and location of, critical operations of SNL.@ Determination Letter at 2. NNSA=s determination letter also stated that charts were withheld in their entirety Aas they detailed NNSA Mission-Essential Facilities and Infrastructure information which included the identification, as well as condition, of these buildings/facilities where operations are performed.@ Id. Therefore, the release of this information could Abenefit adversaries by helping them identify possible program impacts and vulnerabilities, as well as provide them the opportunity to target these facilities.@ Id.

The information withheld is clearly predominantly internal in nature. The D.C. Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which Adoes not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public.@ Cox v. Dep=t of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information in this case neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. Accordingly, it is predominantly internal.

In addition, the information meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statue to properly invoke the Ahigh two@ exemption. Kaganove v. EPA, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d 530-31.

Release of the information at issue in the present case would allow adversaries to identify program vulnerabilities and enable them to understand how to thwart protective measures currently in place. Accordingly, disclosure of the information at issue risks allowing adversaries to circumvent DOE=s efforts to comply with its regulatory mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of its nuclear weapons complex. Although it is obvious that this Appellant has no such intentions, if DOE were to release this document to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public who requested it. Therefore, because of the hazards involved in public release, we find that the information was properly withheld under the Ahigh two@ prong of Exemption 2.

The Appellant also contends that the FOIA mandates that any reasonably segregable portion of a record must be disclosed and released to a requester after the redaction of the parts which are exempt. Appeal Letter. We agree and have reviewed both the redacted and the unredacted versions of the Ten-Year Plan. We find that NNSA reasonably segregated factual material with respect to Exemption 2, including the headings, titles and page numbers, and it is clear that other factual material that was not disclosed was Ainextricably intertwined@ with the exempt material. Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1077 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. ' 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862. In withholding portions of documents from the Appellant, NNSA relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations composing part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. The privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

After reviewing the responsive document at issue, we have concluded that NNSA=s application of Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from the Appellant consists of recommendations and proposed policies prepared by DOE employees and intended only for internal DOE use only. The information withheld in this case properly falls within the definition of "intra-agency memoranda" in the FOIA in that the recommendations, proposed policies, and preliminary budget cost estimates contained in the material are clearly predecisional and deliberative. This planning information is subject to further agency review and does not represent final agency position. Accordingly, we hold that the recommendations, proposed policies and preliminary budget cost estimates withheld from the responsive material were properly withheld under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege.

Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude its release to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. ' 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. ' 1004.1. Regarding the information withheld under Exemption 2, disclosing the information deleted from the responsive document is not in the public interest as this information could render DOE facilities vulnerable to attack. With respect to the information withheld under Exemption 5, no public interest would be served by release of that material, which consists solely of recommendations, proposed policies and preliminary budget cost estimates provided to DOE in the consultative process and the release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing recommendations and proposed policies, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE & 80,122 at 80,560 (1987).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Citizen Action New Mexico, OHA Case No. TFA-0218, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Moran

Date of Filing: August 13, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0220

On August 13, 2007, Barbara Moran filed an Appeal from a final determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 24, 2007. That determination concerned a request for information that Ms. Moran filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If the present Appeal were granted, NNSA would be required to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

Background

Ms. Moran submitted a FOIA request for "twelve DOE documents concerning the radiological monitoring of Palomares, Spain." Letter from Ms. Moran to NNSA, October 26, 2006. NNSA responded that they could find "no records responsive to [Ms. Moran's] request." Determination Letter, July 24, 2007.[1] Ms. Moran appealed that determination to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Appeal Letter, received August 13, 2007. In her Appeal, Ms. Moran states that, "I do not believe that [NNSA] conducted a thorough search [for the documents I requested], and would like to appeal their inability to locate the records." Id.

Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well-established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002) (Case No. VFA-0760) (remanding for a renewed search where DOE's initial search missed responsive documents that were later found);[2] Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).

In response to Ms. Moran's Appeal, we contacted NNSA to evaluate its search. NNSA stated that it determined that Sandia National Laboratories (Sandia) was the only location likely to have the information that Ms. Moran requested. NNSA informed us that Sandia searched the electronic databases for four data collections that might reasonably contain responsive information: 1) Corporate Archives, 2) Technology Library, 3) Inactive Records, and 4) Nuclear Safety Information Center. Sandia searched using the documents' titles, dates, and major subject words (such as "Palomares"). See E-mail from Shirley Peterson, NNSA, to David M. Petrush, OHA, September 10, 2007, and Memorandum of Telephone Conversation among Shirley Peterson, David M. Petrush, and others, September 10, 2007.

NNSA's search meets Truitt and Miller's "reasonableness" standard because in searching its electronic databases, Sandia performed a thorough search at the only location likely to have the documents Ms. Moran sought. Therefore, we find that NNSA's search was adequate under the FOIA. Accordingly, Ms. Moran's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Moran, on August 13, 2007, Case No. TFA-0220, is hereby denied.

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Federation of American Scientists

Case Number: TFA-0221

The Federation of American Scientists (FAS) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Policy & Internal Controls Management (OPICM) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 11, 2007. In that determination, OPICM denied in part a request for information that the Appellant submitted to the DOE pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. OPICM released a redacted version of a document to FAS after determining that the original document contained classified information that should be protected from disclosure under the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to review the withheld portions of the document again for possible release. [*]

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On July 6, 2005, FAS requested a copy of the National Hydro Test Plan and a chronology of all hydro tests, including date, location, weapon system, and event name from the DOE's National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA). NNSA identified a draft of the FY 2006 National Hydro Test Plan as responsive to the request, and forwarded this document to DOE Headquarters for a declassification review. On July 11, 2007, OPICM provided FAS with a redacted draft of the FY 2006 National Hydro Test Plan. In its determination letter, OPICM explained that the withheld portions of the Plan contained information properly classified as Restricted Data or Formerly Restricted Data pursuant to the Atomic Energy Act, 42 U.S.C.

The present Appeal seeks a re-evaluation of the withheld material. Specifically, FAS contends that some sections of the document have been "block-deleted to an extent that suggest[s] some unclassified information may have been inadvertently withheld," and that other deletions indicate that information has been withheld simply because it pertains to nuclear weapons, without any finding that the information is currently and properly classified. Appeal at 1. FAS also contends that item 2 of its request, in which it sought a chronology of all hydro tests, was not addressed by OPICM. Consequently, FAS also asks us to instruct NNSA to conduct a search for the requested chronology.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, Case No. TFA-0115 (2006).

The Director of the Office of Security, has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). As the result of a reorganization within the Department, this function is now the responsibility of the Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed the responsive document from which the DOE had withheld information.

According to the Deputy Chief, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the material the DOE withheld from the document may now be released. The information that the DOE continues to withhold consists of Restricted Data (RD) and Formerly Restricted Data (FRD) that concerns the design or utilization of nuclear weapons. RD and FRD are forms of classified information the withholding of which is required under Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and are therefore exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 3.

The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security, Department of Energy. Based on the Deputy Chief's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires DOE to continue withholding portions of the draft FY 2006 National Hydro Test Plan.

Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Deputy Chief has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Deputy Chief has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations. We will provide a copy of the newly redacted document to FAS.

With regard to FAS' other contention, the determination letter does not appear to address FAS' request for a chronology of all hydro tests. However, we have contacted NNSA, and have been informed that such a chronology does not exist. See December 30, 2008 e-mail from Helmut Filacchione, Stockpile Research and Development Branch, NNSA, to Robert B. Palmer, Senior Staff Attorney, OHA. The FOIA does not require an agency to create a document in response to a FOIA request, see, e.g., Samuel D. Johnson, Case Nos. TFA-0152, TFA-0160 (2006), and to instruct NNSA to search for a document that we have been reliably informed does not exist would be fruitless. Consequently, we will deny this portion of FAS' Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Federation of American Scientists on August 15, 2007, Case No. TFA-0221, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A newly redacted version of the FY 2006 National Hydro Test Plan will be provided to the Federation of American Scientists.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Glen Bowers

Dates of Filing: August 21, 2007
September 7, 2007

Case Numbers: TFA-0222
TFA-0223

On August 21, 2007, Glen Bowers filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on May 29, 2007 and July 18, 2007 by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) Service Center and the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Health, Safety and Security (HSS), respectively. In addition, on September 7, 2007, Mr. Bowers filed an appeal from a determination that DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office (ORO) issued on July 25, 2007.[1] In those determinations, NNSA, HSS and ORO responded to a request for documents Mr. Bowers submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Both NNSA and HSS determined that they did not locate any documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. ORO located and released some documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. These appeals, if granted, would require NNSA, HSS and ORO to perform additional searches and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue new determinations justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

Mr. Bowers filed a FOIA request for the employment records of his deceased father, Mr. John Wyley Bowers, who was employed with the Atomic Energy Commission from 1951 until 1970. See Letter from Glen Bowers to Freedom of Information Act Officer, DOE (April 12, 2007).[2] Mr. Bowers requested that the information include his father's "Q"

[1] Mr. Bowers' appeals have been consolidated for the purpose of this decision.

[2] In his request, Mr. Bowers also states that his father was employed during the same time period by Department of Defense union contractors throughout the United States of America. See Letter from Glen Bowers to Freedom of Information Act Officer, DOE (April 12, 2007). Since Mr. Bowers identified the clearance number, location of job sites where he worked, names of the top secret and non-secret projects in which he was involved, job titles and duties, awards, written documents, photographs, news letters and all information pertaining to his father that he could receive under the Freedom of Information Act. Id. In a telephone conversation with the DOE Freedom of Information/Privacy Act Group (DOE/FOI), Mr. Bowers indicated that his father had worked at the Paducah, Kentucky and Portsmouth, Ohio sites and at the Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL). See Facsimile of original request received from DOE/FOI. DOE/FOI forwarded the request to the following three offices it believed might have responsive documents: HSS, NNSA, and ORO.

In its determination letter, DOE/FOI determined HSS conducted a reasonable search and did not locate any records responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. See Letter from Abel Lopez, DOE/FOI, to Glen Bowers (July 18, 2007) (HQ Determination Letter). Additionally, NNSA determined it did not locate any records responsive to his request. See Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Glen Bowers (May 29, 2007) (NNSA Determination Letter). However, ORO was able to locate responsive documents. ORO provided Mr. Bowers with index cards that show that his father held security clearances for those time frames in which he was employed by subcontractors at DOE's Portsmouth, Ohio facility. See Letter from Amy Rothrock, ORO, to Glen Bowers (July 25, 2007) (ORO Determination Letter).

In his appeals, Mr. Bowers stated that he had documentation indicating that his father worked at the Portsmouth Gaseous Diffusion Plant in 1954, 1955 and 1963 as an employee of Grinnell Corporation, located in Portsmouth, OH, and C & I Girdler Construction Co., located in Cincinnati, OH. See Letter from Glen Bowers to OHA (received September 7, 2007) (ORO Appeal Letter). Mr. Bowers further stated that his father worked for the Atomic Energy Commission from 1951 until 1970. Id. Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of the search for responsive documents, performed by HSS, NNSA and ORO. See Letter from Glen Bowers to OHA (received August 21, 2007) (HSS/NNSA Appeal Letter). See also ORO Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). Department of Defense (DOD) as a potential employer for his father, NNSA referred him to the FOIA officer at DOD. See NNSA Determination Letter. a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[3]

In reviewing these appeals, we contacted HSS to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. HSS informed us that it performed a search and identified no records responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. HSS conducted an electronic search of indices for access authorizations using Mr. Bowers' father's name and social security number. See Memorandum of Privacy Act Request from Stephanie Scott Grimes, HSS to Abel Lopez, DOE/FOI (June 28, 2007). According to HSS, the absence of a record for Mr. Bowers' father may mean that he worked for the DOE or a DOE predecessor or contractor in a position that did not required an access authorization. Id.

We next contacted NNSA to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. According to NNSA, the employment records database and medical records at LANL were searched for responsive documents and no records responsive to Mr. Bowers' request were identified. See Memorandum of Freedom of Information Act Request from Office of Counsel to Carolyn Becknell, NNSA (May 22, 2007). The electronic, microfiche and paper searches were performed using Mr. Bowers' father's name and social security number. Id.

Finally, we contacted ORO to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. ORO performed a search for records and located some documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. See ORO Determination Letter. ORO informed us that it performed both electronic and paper searches of finding aids, databases and document collections at each of its sites in Portsmouth, K-25, Oak Ridge Associated Universities, and the DOE Records Holding Area (RHA). Id. The search was performed using Mr. Bowers' father's name, social security number and date of birth. Using this information, no records could be located at any site except the RHA. Id.

ORO provided Mr. Bowers with copies of index cards from the RHA that show that his father held security clearances at Portsmouth for subcontractors Grinnell, FH McGraw, Kellogg and Peter Kiewet, which were confirmed subcontractors at Portsmouth. However, because subcontractors took their records with them when they left Portsmouth, no additional personnel, medical and similar files could be located where the searches were conducted. Finally, ORO did not search Oak Ridge National Laboratory, since his father did not work there and it is thus not likely that his employment records would exist there.

Based on the foregoing information, we find that HSS, NNSA and ORO performed searches reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. Accordingly, the searches were adequate and, therefore, Mr. Bowers' appeals should be denied.

[3] All OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

In the course of processing these appeals, Mr. Bowers sent us additional information regarding his father's employment record. It appears that Mr. Bowers' father may have been employed by contractors at various DOE sites. We are forwarding this new information to DOE/FOI to determine if a new search should be conducted.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on August 21, 2007 by Glen Bowers, OHA Case No. TFA-0222, is hereby denied.

(2) The Appeal filed on September 7, 2007 by Glen Bowers, OHA Case No. TFA-0223, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Citizen Action New Mexico
Date of Filing:	September 11, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0224

On September 11, 2007, Citizen Action New Mexico (CANM) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 5, 2007, by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) Service Center of the Department of Energy in Albuquerque, New Mexico (NNSA/SC) in response to a request for documents that CANM submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that NNSA/SC release additional information to CANM and perform an additional search for documents responsive to its request.

I. Background

On May 3, 2007, CANM filed a FOIA request with NNSA/SC for, among other things, "all documents, electronic or written, that furnish information as to the inspections, reviews, visits performed by the New Mexico Environment Department, the Department of Energy and/or Sandia National Laboratories during the period of construction activities at the Mixed Waste Landfill (MWL) from July 2006 to the present," and "all documents, electronic or written, generated by any Quality Control Engineer for the MWL." Appeal at 1; Letter from NNSA/SC to CANM, August 16, 2007 (Determination). NNSA/SC responded by releasing documents responsive to CANM's request, but withheld portions of the documents pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) (Exemption 6). In its Appeal, CANM challenges NNSA/SC's withholdings as well as the adequacy of its search for responsive documents. Appeal at 1 -4.

II. Analysis

A. Withholding under FOIA Exemption 6

NNSA/SC withheld names, titles, and initials of contractor employees from the documents it released to CANM. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (July 7, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0499); Sowell, Todd, Lafitte and Watson LLC, 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (August 31, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0510).[1]

1. The Privacy Interest

NNSA/SC determined that there was a privacy interest in the identity of contractor employees whose names, titles, and initials it withheld, stating that its release "will cause inevitable harassment and unwarranted solicitation." Determination at 3. CANM argues in its Appeal that the information withheld does "not reveal personal information or records about the individuals" and "there is no evidence that the redacted initials and signatures would not be those of federal SNL [Sandia National Laboratories] employees, not private contractors."

First, SNL is a government-owned/contractor operated (GOCO) facility. Sandia Corporation, a Lockheed Martin company, manages Sandia for the NNSA. Thus, employees of SNL are contractor employees, not federal employees; the latter have no expectation of privacy concerning their names, titles and similar information. See 5 C.F.R. § 293.311.

We agree with NNSA/SC that a substantial privacy interest exists in the identity of private contractor employees due to the great potential that a commercial entity could misappropriate a name for commercial purposes. The courts have also reached this conclusion. See Sheet Metal Workers v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3d Cir. 1998) (the disclosure of names, social security numbers, or addresses of government contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. HUD, 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees' names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identity of these contractor employees.

2. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773; see Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (August 5, 1996) (Case No. VFA-0184). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Dep't of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). We find that there is no public interest in release of the withheld information. The Appellant has not demonstrated how the disclosure of the names, titles or initials of non-federal employees will reveal anything of importance regarding the DOE nor how it would serve the public interest. Revealing the names of private citizens will not contribute significantly to the public's understanding of government activities. Accordingly, we agree with NNSA/SC, and find that there is no public interest in the disclosure of the names, titles, and initials withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether information may be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762; SafeCard Service v. SEC, 426 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991). We have concluded that there is a substantial privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is no public interest in the release of identifying information of private contractor employees. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interest of the individuals whose identities were protected.[2]

B. Adequacy of NNSA/SC's Search for Responsive Documents

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 22, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).

We contacted NNSA/SC for information regarding its search for responsive documents. We were informed that construction activities at the Mixed Waste Landfill are being performed by subcontractors of the prime DOE contractor Sandia Corporation. As a result, NNSA/SC referred the request to Sandia. The individual responsible for responding to FOIA requests at Sandia identified two organizations within the company where documents responsive to the request would most likely be found, Transportation and Environmental Safety, and Environmental Programs and Assurance. These two organizations conducted searches and located the documents that were released to the Appellant. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Shirley Peterson, NNSA/SC, and Steve Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (October 15, 2007) (conference call included official from Sandia) .

In its Appeal, CANM notes that an attachment to one of the documents provided in NNSA/SC's determination, the "MWL Cover Construction Quality Assurance Plan," contains blank Inspection Checklist and Construction Inspection forms and other documents. CANM asserts that the completed versions of these forms should have been provided in response to its request. After the filing of the present Appeal, Sandia informed us that certain of these documents were not available from the subcontractor at the time of CANM's request but are now available to Sandia. Letter from Sandia official to Andrea Leal, NNSA/SC (October 10, 2007). These documents, which include "Testing Inspection Forms, Construction Inspection Forms, Soil/Aggregate Forms, Field Density Forms & Lift Maps 1 through 12," have been provided to NNSA/SC, which will issue a new determination regarding their release. Electronic mail from Shirley Peterson, NNSA/SC, to Steve Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (October 15, 2007).

[2] CANM claims in its Appeal that NNSA/SC inconsistently applied Exemption 6 to the documents in question, noting that one of the documents released revealed the author's name. However, the release of this name appears to have been inadvertent. Letter from Sandia attorney (September 17, 2007). Such an inadvertent release clearly does not provide a basis for the intentional release of further information subject to Exemption 6.

Based upon the information above, we find that NNSA/SC's search was reasonably calculated to locate the documents sought by CANM, in that it extended to the DOE prime contractor responsible for the MWL and in particular to those organizations within the contractor where documents responsive to the particular request at issue were most likely to be located.[3] We therefore find NNSA/SC's search met the adequacy requirements of the FOIA.

Having found that NNSA/SC properly withheld identifying information regarding contractor employees from the documents it released to CANM, and that its search for documents responsive to CANM's request was adequate, we will deny the present Appeal.

Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Citizen Action New Mexico on September 11, 2007, OHA Case Number TFA-0224, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Geneva Jones

Date of Filing: September 26, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0225

This Decision concerns Geneva Jones' Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) issued to her on August 24, 2007. In that determination, ORO responded to Ms. Jones' document request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORO did not locate the documents Ms. Jones requested. This Appeal, if granted, would require ORO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

Ms. Jones filed a FOIA request with ORO for records pertaining to her father. Specifically, Ms. Jones requested her father's "personnel and medical records." Determination Letter. In response, ORO simply stated that it could not find those records. ORO also forwarded Ms. Jones' request to the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA). ORO believed that NNSA might have responsive documents because it maintains documents from the Y-12 facility, where Ms. Jones' father worked. Id.; Appeal Letter dated September 17, 2007. Ms. Jones filed the present Appeal, challenging the adequacy of ORO's search.[1] Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt,

[1] Ms. Jones filed this Appeal before receiving a determination letter from NNSA. Therefore, this decision does not address NNSA's search. Ms. Jones may separately appeal NNSA's determination.

897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002) (Case No. VFA-0760) (remanding for a renewed search where DOE's initial search missed responsive documents that were later found);[2] Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).

In response to Ms. Jones' Appeal, we contacted ORO to evaluate its search. ORO stated that it searched ORO's personnel and medical files (both paper and electronic), the only ORO files likely to have the documents Ms. Jones requested. ORO searched its records by various combinations of Ms. Jones' father's name, social security number, and date of birth. E-mails between Elizabeth Dillon, ORO, and David M. Petrush, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (October 1 and 3, 2007).

ORO's search meets Truitt and Miller's "reasonableness" standard because ORO performed a thorough search in the only ORO files likely to have the documents Ms. Jones requested. Therefore, we find that ORO's search was adequate. Accordingly, Ms. Jones' Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Geneva Jones filed on September 26, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0225, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Glen Bowers

Case Numbers: TFA-0226

On October 10, 2007, Glen Bowers filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on September 7, 2007 by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (OLM). This determination responded to a request for information Mr. Bowers submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OLM was unable to locate documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. This appeal, if granted, would require OLM to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

Mr. Bowers filed a FOIA request for a copy of the Atomic Energy Commission Newsletter entitled "Rocky Flats Plant Crossroad: The Paper," dated September 12, 1959, Volumes 18 and 19. See Letter from Glen Bowers to DOE Office of Freedom of Information Act (April 12, 2007). Mr. Bowers indicated that this newsletter contained articles and photographs of his father, John Wyley Bowers, during the time that he performed work for the Atomic Energy Commission. See Letter from Glen Bowers to OHA (received August 10, 2007) (Appeal Letter). By a letter dated April 26, 2007, the Director of DOE's Headquarters FOIA Office (DOE/FOI) informed Mr. Bowers that his request was being forwarded to OLM because any document responsive to his request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office. OLM then forwarded the request to the Rocky Flats Project Office (Rocky Flats) to conduct the search. Rocky Flats searched its records for newsletters from that time period but was unable to locate the requested document. In a September 7, 2007 determination letter sent to Mr. Bowers, the Director of OLM informed Mr. Bowers that the only September 1959 editions of any newsletter that Rocky Flats located in its microfilm records were those entitled Dow

Corral and dated September 4, 1959 and September 18, 1959.[1] See Letter from Michael W. Owen, OLM, to Glen Bowers (September 7, 2007) (Determination Letter). The Director further stated that the editions that Rocky Flats located were incomplete and contained no mention of Mr. Bowers' father. Id. In his Appeal, Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of the search, primarily on the grounds that it was not the Dow Corral that he requested, but the Atomic Energy Commission Newsletter. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[2]

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted Rocky Flats to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents and were informed that the Dow Corral was the only agency newsletter published or disseminated at Rocky Flats during September 1959. See Email from Pamela Watson, OLM to Avery Webster, OHA (Received October 24, 2007) (Email). A search of the historical records of the Rocky Flats facility yielded the following information concerning the Dow Corral. The Dow Corral was an employee newsletter that was published on a biweekly basis and microfilm records included editions published on September 4, 1959 and September 18, 1959. See Determination Letter. The September 4, 1959 issue is "Number 18" and the September 18, 1959 issue is "Number 19," confirming that there was no issue dated September 12, 1959. Id. In addition, a search was conducted for a "September 12" issue of the Dow Corral for any year which yielded no responsive records. See Email. Further, no records were found of any other editions of the Dow Corral published in September 1959. Id.

Rocky Flats informed us that it performed a search of the microfilm records and all available electronic resources using Mr. Bowers' father's name and identified no records responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Pamela Watson, OLM, Andrea Wilson, Source One at Rocky Flats, and Avery Webster, OHA (October 16, 2007). Further, a search conducted of Rocky Flats Photography Department's photographs and corresponding logs produced no records responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. See Email.

[1] In response to his request, OLM provided Mr. Bowers copies of the September 4, 1959 and September 18, 1959 editions. See Determination Letter.

[2] All OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that OLM performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, Mr. Bowers' appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 10, 2007 by Glen Bowers, OHA Case No. TFA-0226, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Michael Ravnitzky

Case Number: TFA-0227

Michael Ravnitzky filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Office of the Inspector General (IG) of the Department of Energy on September 26, 2007. In that determination, the IG denied in part a request for information that the Appellant had submitted to the DOE pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Mr. Ravnitzky is appealing the determination with respect to one of the documents the IG withheld in part. With respect to that document, the IG determined that the portions that were not released to Mr. Ravnitzky contained classified information. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release that document in its entirety.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On March 14, 2006, Mr. Ravnitzky requested several IG audit reports. The IG released a number of the requested documents to Mr. Ravnitzky, but referred the remainder to the Office of Classification, Office of Health, Safety and Security, to determine whether the remaining documents, or any portions of them, needed to be withheld from disclosure due to their classified nature. After receiving the results of the Office of Classification's review, the IG issued a determination letter on September 26, 2007, in which it explained that it was withholding portions of seven of the requested documents pursuant to Exemptions 1, 2, and 3 of the FOIA. The IG explained in its determination letter that it invoked Exemption 1 to withhold information from public disclosure that is properly classified as National Security Information pursuant to Executive Order 12958, as amended.

On October 17, 2007, Mr. Ravnitzky filed an Appeal of the IG's determination letter with this office, which was deemed perfected on October 18, 2007, when we obtained a copy of the determination letter. Mr. Ravnitzky limited the scope of his Appeal to those portions of a document entitled Audit Report: Control of Classified Matter at Paducah, dated July 2001 (DOE/IG-0515), that the IG had withheld under Exemption 1 of the FOIA.

In his Appeal, Mr. Ravnitzky contends that many of the portions redacted from the version provided to him concerned past events and their disclosure "would not cause serious harm to the national security"; moreover, "their release would inform the public of the activities of government." He concludes, therefore, that "[c]ontinued classification, redaction and withholding on this report is not only wrong but legally improper." Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); accord, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12958, as amended by Executive Order 13292, is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification, declassification and safeguarding of national security information. When properly classified under this Executive Order, national security information is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). As the result of reorganization within the Department, this function is now the responsibility of the Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this Appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed DOE/IG-0515, the subject of this Appeal.

According to the Deputy Chief, the DOE determined on review that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the material the DOE originally withheld from the document may now be released. The Deputy Chief has informed this Office that the information the DOE continues to withhold concerns programs for safeguarding nuclear facilities or materials, and vulnerabilities or capabilities of systems, installations, infrastructures, projects, plans, or protection services relating to the national security, which includes defense against transnational terrorism, which is currently classified as National Security Information (NSI) under sections 1.4(f) and (g) of Executive Order 12958, as amended by Executive Order 13292. That information is identified as "DOE b(1)" in the margin of a redacted version of this document, which will be provided to the Appellant under separate cover. Because NSI is defined as classified information in Executive Order 12958, it is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1 of the FOIA.

The denying official for the DOE's withholdings is Mr. Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Chief's review, we have determined that Executive Order 12958 requires DOE to continue withholding portions of the document under consideration in this Appeal. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 1, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order. Therefore, those portions of the document that the Deputy Chief has now determined to be properly classified must be withheld from disclosure. Accordingly, the Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Michael Ravnitzky on October 18, 2007, Case No. TFA-0227, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) A newly redacted version of the Audit Report: Control of Classified Matter at Paducah, dated July 2001 (DOE/IG-0515), will be provided to Mr. Ravnitzky.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Terry M. Apodaca

Case Number: TFA-0229

This Decision concerns Terry M. Apodaca's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) NNSA Service Center (NNSA) issued to her on August 3, 2007. In that determination, NNSA responded to Ms. Apodaca's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.[1]

I. Background

Ms. Apodaca filed a FOIA request with NNSA for documents regarding unauthorized release of personally identifiable information (PII) at the NNSA Service Center. Apodaca Request. Ms. Apodaca limited the scope of her request to the years between 2000 and the present. The NNSA provided Ms. Apodaca 34 documents. The NNSA stated that in processing Ms. Apodaca's request, it contacted the Office of Human Capital Management Services, the Information Technology Department, the Facility Security Officer, the Inquiry Official, and Program Manager for Incidents of Security Concern. None found responsive documents. Determination Letter.

Ms. Apodaca filed this Appeal, challenging the adequacy of the NNSA's search. Specifically, Ms. Apodaca appealed:

(i) The NNSA's determination that it could not locate documents at the above-referenced NNSA offices;

(ii) The NNSA's failure to process her request at the Cyber Security Site Manager's Office (CSSM), as she had requested after filing her FOIA request;

[1] William M. Schwartz, OHA Senior FOIA Official, recused himself from this case.

(iii) The NNSA's failure to process her request at the Y-12 facility, which Ms. Apodaca claims experienced a March 2007 PII breach; and

(iv) The NNSA's failure to produce documents regarding a PII breach "a few years back" that "affected over 1,500 NNSA employees."

Appeal Letter.

II. Discussion

1. Applicable Authority

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002) (Case No. VFA-0760) (remanding for a renewed search where DOE's initial search missed responsive documents that were later found);[2] Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).

A FOIA appellant must file their appeal within thirty days of receiving the determination. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). OHA reserves the discretion to accept an untimely appeal to promote administrative efficiency, if, upon consulting the determination issuer, review remains practicable, given the determination issuer's possible file relocations, staffing changes, or other circumstances. See, e.g., Nevaire S. Rich, 27 DOE ¶ 89,241 (1999) (Case No. VFA-0523); Int'l Bhd of Elec. Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1998) (Case No. VFA-0421).

2. Analysis

a. Search at Several NNSA Offices and the CSSM

Ms. Apodaca appealed the adequacy of the NNSA's search because it could not locate responsive documents at the NNSA offices listed above.

We contacted the NNSA to evaluate its search. The NNSA issued its determination to Ms. Apodaca on August 3, 2007. Ms. Apodaca filed her Appeal on October 31, 2007 – nearly two months past her 30-day regulatory deadline. As a result, reviewing the NNSA's search is now impracticable; NNSA officials cannot recall the exact searches that they performed for Ms.

[2] OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

Apodaca's request. E-mail from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to David M. Petrush, OHA, December 4, 2007. Therefore, we will deny this portion of Ms. Apodaca's Appeal.

Ms. Apodaca appealed the adequacy of the NNSA's search due to the apparent fact that it did not conduct searches at the CSSM. In fact, the NNSA did contact the CSSM and the search that CSSM conducted produced no responsive documents. E-mail between Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and David M. Petrush, OHA, November 7, 2007. However, just as with the several offices listed above, it is now impracticable to evaluate NNSA's search at the CSSM. Therefore, we will also deny this portion of Ms. Apodaca's Appeal.

b. The NNSA's Failure to Search the Y-12 Facility

Ms. Apodaca appealed the adequacy of the NNSA's search because the NNSA did not search the Y-12 facility.

The NNSA contacted every source in its experience that is likely to have records regarding unauthorized PII releases and broadened its search according to their suggestions. None suggested that the NNSA search the Y-12 facility. E-mail from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to David M. Petrush, OHA, November 7, 2007; Memorandum of telephone conversation between Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and David M. Petrush, OHA, November 28, 2007.

We find that the NNSA's search was adequate. Under Miller, the NNSA need not have exhausted every search possibility. Instead, its search was reasonable because it contacted those individuals and offices that it believed most likely to have the records Ms. Apodaca requested. Therefore, we will deny this portion of Ms. Apodaca's Appeal.

c. Failure to Produce Documents Involving a Breach of PII that Affected Over 1,500 NNSA Employees

Ms. Apodaca appealed the adequacy of the NNSA's search because the NNSA did not produce documents regarding "a breach of PII . . . that affected over 1,500 NNSA employees . . ." that occurred "[a] few years back. . . ." Appeal Letter. The NNSA has agreed to conduct a search for responsive documents regarding this incident. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and David M. Petrush, OHA, December 14, 2007. Therefore, we will remand this portion of Ms. Apodaca's Appeal to the NNSA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Terry M. Apodaca filed on October 31, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0229, is granted in part, as specified in paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the NNSA to conduct a search for documents regarding a breach of PII that affected over 1,500 NNSA employees as described in this Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Terry Martin Apodaca

Date of Filing: December 4, 2007

Case Number: TFA-0231

On December 4, 2007, Terry Martin Apodaca filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on November 20, 2007 by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) Service Center. This determination responded to a request for information that Ms. Apodaca submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA was able to locate some, but not all documents responsive to Ms. Apodaca's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On April 11, 2007, Ms. Apodaca filed a FOIA request asking for the following documents: (1) personnel actions, and associated paperwork, for all Office of Public Affairs (OPA) employees from January 1, 2000 to the present; and (2) the title and grade of eight named OPA employees. See Letter from Terry Martin Apodaca to Carolyn A. Becknell, FOIA Officer, OPA (April 11, 2007) (FOIA Request). NNSA provided a partial response to Ms. Apodaca's FOIA request on September 20, 2007, when it released the Notification of Personnel Actions or Standard Form 50 (hereinafter SF-50) and the title and grade for the eight named employees, including Carolyn Becknell and Tracy Loughead.[1] See Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA to Terry Martin Apodaca (September 20, 2007) (Partial Determination Letter).

[1] Due to the budget imposed by Ms. Apodaca, the NNSA was unable to provide all of the requested documents. Therefore, the NNSA issued a partial response to Ms. Apodaca's April 11, 2007 FOIA request. See FOIA Request.

Ms. Apodaca then filed an Appeal[2] of the partial response (1st FOIA Appeal) with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), challenging the adequacy of the NNSA's search that resulted in its Partial Determination. See Letter from Terry Martin Apodaca to OHA (received October 31, 2007) (1st Appeal Letter). In her 1st FOIA Appeal, Ms. Apodaca asserted that the NNSA did not provide her with the Request for Personnel Action or Standard Form 52 (hereinafter SF-52) and justification for each personnel action. Id. During the pendency of the 1st FOIA Appeal, Ms. Apodaca narrowed the scope of her FOIA request to only the SF-52s and the associated justifications for the following personnel actions: 1) Group Cash Award of $200.00 effective August 10, 2006, for Carolyn Becknell (Becknell Award); 2) "Irregular" Performance Pay Quality Step Increase (QSI) effective March 4, 2007, for Carolyn Becknell (Becknell QSI); 3) Change to Lower Grade effective April 17, 2000, for Tracy Loughead (Loughead Grade Change); and 4) Special Act or Service Award effective August 27, 2000, for Tracy Loughead (Loughead Award). Id.

In response to Ms. Apodaca's 1st FOIA Appeal, the NNSA told OHA that it would send Ms. Apodaca the SF-52s. See Electronic Mail Message from Shirley Peterson, NNSA to David Petrush, OHA (November 10, 2007) (November 2007 Email). The NNSA later informed OHA that it would provide Ms. Apodaca with three of the four SF-52s because the fourth document no longer existed. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Shirley Peterson, NNSA, and David Petrush, OHA (November 28, 2007) (Peterson Telephone Memo).

In a Final Determination Letter sent to Ms. Apodaca, NNSA provided Ms. Apodaca with three documents: 1) the SF-50 for the Becknell Award; 2) the SF-52 for the Becknell QSI; and 3) the SF-52 for the Loughead Grade Change. See Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Terry Martin Apodaca (November 20, 2007) (Final Determination Letter). As regards to the fourth document relating to the Loughead Award, the NNSA stated that the SF-50 had been released to Ms. Apodaca in September 2007 and that the SF-52 relating to the Loughead Award was destroyed when it became two years old, in accordance with the agency's record retention policy. Id.; see Partial Determination Letter.

On December 4, 2007, Ms. Apodaca filed this Appeal (2nd FOIA Appeal) of the Final Determination Letter issued by NNSA. See Letter from Terry Martin Apodaca to OHA (received December 4, 2007) (2nd Appeal Letter). In the 2nd FOIA Appeal, Ms. Apodaca challenges the adequacy of the search that was conducted with regard to her request for the SF-52 and the award justification relating to the Loughead Award. Id. In her pending Appeal, Ms. Apodaca argues that "if all copies of the SF-52 have been destroyed…, [NNSA should've included]…the date of destruction, destruction official's name, as well as a copy of the certificate of destruction." Id. In this Appeal, Ms. Apodaca is requesting that the NNSA provide her with: (1) the SF-52 and the justification for the Loughead Award; (2) the SF-52 for the Becknell Award and (3) the justification for the Becknell QSI. Id.

[2] This Appeal has been designated OHA Case No. TFA-0230.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[3]

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted the NNSA to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and Avery Webster, OHA (December 5, 2007) (Becknell Telephone Memo). In response to Ms. Apodaca's request for the SF-52 with the award justification for the Loughead Award, NNSA contacted its Human Resources Department, which provided the following information. See November 2007 Email. In each employee's Official Personnel File (OPF), the SF-52 is prepared before the SF-50. Id. The SF-52 is placed on the left side of the file and contains the justification for the SF-50. Id. The SF-52 is purged every two years, or when an employee retires or leaves the agency. Id.; see also Becknell Telephone Memo. The SF-50 is the notification to the employee that this action has been taken. See November 2007 Email. SF-50s are placed on the right side of the employee's OPF and are permanent records. Id.

Ms. Apodaca requested the SF-52 created over seven years ago for the Loughead Award. See December 4, 2007 Appeal Letter. After conducting a search, the NNSA could not locate this document because, in accordance with the agency's record retention policy, it had been destroyed. See Becknell Telephone Memo. If the SF-52 was destroyed, Ms. Apodaca requested that the NNSA provide her with the date of destruction, destruction official's name, or a copy of the certificate of destruction relating to this document. See December 4, 2007 Appeal Letter. A search of records of the NNSA's Human Resources Department yielded no records responsive to Ms. Apodaca's request. See Becknell Telephone Memo.

With regard to the SF-52 relating to the Becknell Award, the NNSA informed us that it conducted a search for the document and identified no records responsive to Ms. Apodaca's request. Id. Because this group award was created via nomination form[4], no SF-52 was generated. Id. Thus, the NNSA was unable to provide Ms. Apodaca with the SF-52 because it does not exist. Id.

[4] NNSA provided Ms. Apodaca with a copy of the group nomination form for her review. See Becknell Telephone Memo.

As for the documentation relating to the Becknell QSI, the NNSA advised that it searched its records and found that no justification document exists[5]. Id. According to the NNSA, a further search of the Human Resources official personnel files and Ms. Becknell's supervisor's official personnel files, produced no records responsive to Ms. Apodaca's request. Id.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that NNSA performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to Ms. Apodaca's request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, Ms. Apodaca's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on December 5, 2007 by Terry Martin Apodaca, OHA Case No. TFA-0231, is hereby denied.

[5] Ms. Apodaca asserts that the justification document regarding the Becknell QSI should exist. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Terry Martin Apodaca and Avery Webster, OHA (dated December 12, 2007). However, based on conversations with the NNSA, I am satisfied that this documentation is not located within the agency records.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: David E. Hoffman

Case Number: TFA-0232

On December 11, 2007, David E. Hoffman filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued to him on October 23, 2007. In that determination, the NNSA responded to the request that Mr. Hoffman filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The NNSA identified five documents responsive to Mr. Hoffman's request. However, the NNSA withheld all five in their entirety under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), known as Exemption 5. This Appeal, if granted, would require the NNSA to release the documents that it withheld from Mr. Hoffman.

I. Background

Mr. Hoffman submitted a FOIA request to DOE for documents regarding the Material Protection Control & Accounting program (MPC&A) with Russia and other former Soviet Union republics. DOE submitted the request to the NNSA, which found five responsive documents. They are:

1) MPC&A Talking Points for Ambassador Goodby.

2) NSC Meeting on MPC&A and SSD Delegation Membership dated, March 9, 1994.

3) Nunn-Lugar Budget Estimates for MPC&A Assistance to Russia, dated February 1, 1994.

4) Agreement between the Department of Defense of the United States of America and the Ministry of the Russian Federation for Atomic Energy concerning Control, Accounting and Physical Protection of Nuclear Material to promote the prevention of Nuclear Weapons Proliferation from the Federation, dated December 8, 1992.

5) Analysis of Ukrainian Requirements for U.S. Assistance of Material Control and Accounting and Physical Protection, dated August 11, 1992.

Determination Letter.

The NNSA withheld these documents in their entirety from Mr. Hoffman based on Exemption 5. The NNSA explained that Exemption 5 "protects those documents normally privileged in the civil discovery context, such as pre-decisional, deliberative process documents." Lastly, the NNSA stated that despite Exemption 5, DOE regulations allow the NNSA to release documents to Mr. Hoffman when "disclosure is in the public interest." The NNSA stated that disclosure to Mr. Hoffman is not in the public interest. Id.

Mr. Hoffman appealed the NNSA's withholding of four of the five responsive documents to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Appeal Letter. In particular, Mr. Hoffman did not appeal the withholding of Document #2. Mr. Hoffman stated brief reasons why releasing Documents #1, #3 and #5 is in the public interest. Mr. Hoffman also stated that because Document #3 is thirteen years old and Document #5 describes a "situation" fifteen years old, they cannot today be protected under Exemption 5. Lastly, Mr. Hoffman stated that Document #4 was improperly withheld under Exemption 5 because it "is not an internal document, but a formal agreement between the United States and another country." Id.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 5's Deliberative Process Privilege

Exemption 5 protects "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party . . . in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). The language of Exemption 5 has been construed to "exempt those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears).

Included within the boundaries of Exemption 5 is the "predecisional" privilege, sometimes referred to as the "executive" or "deliberative process" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 866 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The predecisional privilege permits the agency to withhold records that "reflect advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated." Sears, 421 U.S. at 150 (citation omitted). The privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., "reflect[ing] the give-and-take of the consultative process." Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically "reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency." Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Montrose Chem. Corp. of California v. Train, 491 F.2d 63, 71 (D.C. Cir. 1974); Dudman Communications Corp. v. Dep't of the Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565 (D.C. Cir. 1987). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 768, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In addition to providing categories of records exempt from mandatory disclosure, the FOIA requires that, "Any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

We have carefully reviewed the documents and find that the NNSA properly withheld them from Mr. Hoffman under Exemption 5. As a threshold matter, Mr. Hoffman argues that Exemption 5 does not apply to Document #4 because it is not a document addressed between two different agencies or between members of the same agency. We note that Document #4 is labeled "draft." A single office necessarily reviews and considers a "draft" that it produces. Therefore, Document #4 is an "intra-agency" document within Exemption 5's statutory definition.

The documents that the NNSA withheld from Mr. Hoffman are all similar in that they consist of the authors' MPC&A opinions and recommendations, and factual material that the authors relied upon in forming those opinions and recommendations. The material is clearly predecisional, and deliberative in that it reflects the "give and take" of the decision-making process. With one exception, the factual information is either inextricably intertwined with the deliberative material, or was selected from a larger group of facts in an act that constituted the authors' exercise of judgment. In either instance, revealing the factual material would in effect reveal the agency's deliberative process.

That one exception is in Document #3, which appears to contain segregable information. In particular, the document consists of an issue statement, objectives, a summary of the existing MPC&A agreement, a section addressing expanded cooperation, and finally a funding profile for the existing and expanded cooperation. We believe that the issue statement, objectives, and summary of the existing MPC&A agreement may contain factual statements that are not agency deliberations and therefore the NNSA cannot withhold them from Mr. Hoffman under Exemption 5. Accordingly, we will remand for a determination on this issue. (By contrast, the remaining sections addressing expanded cooperation and the funding profile are deliberative – they weigh various methods of achieving the program's objectives at three possible funding levels.)

Lastly, Mr. Hoffman argues that because Document #3 and #5 are more than a decade old, the FOIA cannot exempt them from disclosure. Since the FOIA does not set a timetable for when Exemption 5 expires, OHA declines to read one into it. In fact, one court interpreted Exemption 5 to have a "longer life" than other FOIA exemptions. Africa Fund v. Mosbacher, No. 92 CIV. 289 (JFK) (S.D.N.Y. May 26, 1993) (stating, "Except perhaps for FOIA Exemption 5, the above [FOIA] exemptions do not permanently preclude release of these documents to the public . . ." (emphasis added)).

B. Public Interest Determination

The fact that material falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that, "To the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. 1004.1. To determine if disclosure is in the public interest, OHA balances the benefit from disclosing the records with the "chilling effect" that disclosure "would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters." L. Daniel Glass, 29 DOE ¶ 80,271 (Case No. TFA-0150) (October 16, 2006).

In the present case, we note that Mr. Hoffman claims that the MPC&A is one of the most successful and important non-proliferation programs of the post-Soviet era. Mr. Hoffman quotes Presidents George W. Bush, Bill Clinton, and George H. W. Bush, who all state that preventing the spread of nuclear, chemical, and biological materials is one of our highest national priorities. E-mail between David E. Hoffman and David M. Petrush, OHA, January 16, 2008. Thus, disclosing documents that illuminate the MPC&A may arguably allow the public to discuss and evaluate this historically important program.

Second, Mr. Hoffman shows that he is preparing a serious and comprehensive book to inform the public about the MPC&A, which Doubleday will publish in 2009. Mr. Hoffman's book is based on his work as a reporter for The Washington Post, which has included over 200 interviews with direct MPC&A participants and numerous site visits in Russia and Ukraine, from the 1990's through August 2007. He contends that to date, no book is supported by as much detail and research. Id.

Third, the fact that all of the documents were created a half generation ago may mitigate their potential chilling effect on future NNSA decision-making. The particular situations and decisions described in these documents are long past. Meanwhile, the fact that non-proliferation – and the attendant need for public information evaluating our government's historical efforts – continues to be vital to our national security, may tip our balance in favor of public disclosure.

In light of the above, we believe it is important to gain the NNSA's perspective on this matter. We will therefore remand this case for the NNSA to make a determination whether disclosing Documents #1, #3, #4, and #5 to Mr. Hoffman is in the public interest.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that David E. Hoffman filed on December 11, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0232, is remanded for the NNSA to make a determination whether releasing Documents #1, #3, #4, and #5 to Mr. Hoffman is in the public interest.

(2) If the NNSA determines that releasing Document #3 to Mr. Hoffman is not in the public interest, the NNSA shall issue a determination stating whether Document #3's issue statement, objectives, and summary contain segregable factual information.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Western Resource Advocates

Case Number: TFA-0233

This Decision concerns Western Resource Advocates' (WRA) Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Western Area Power Administration (WAPA) issued to it on November 7, 2007. In that determination, WAPA partially denied WRA's request for a fee waiver in conjunction with a request WRA submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. WAPA partially denied WRA's fee waiver request because certain documents WRA requested exist in the public domain. This Appeal, if granted, would require WAPA to either (i) issue a new determination letter describing where in the public domain the requested documents reside and if the documents have "met a threshold level of public dissemination;" or, in the alternative (ii) issue a new determination letter with a fee waiver decision based upon the DOE's regulatory fee waiver factors that WAPA did not address in its initial determination.

I. Background

The Eastern Plains Transmission Project (EPTP) is a construction project for hundreds of miles of power lines over several Great Plains states. The Tri-State Generation and Transmission Association (Tri-State), a WAPA contractor, is one of the EPTP's builders. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Patricia Land, WAPA, and David M. Petrush, OHA, December 20, 2007. WRA filed a FOIA request for numerous records regarding the EPTP. In particular, WRA sought records regarding Tri-State's EPTP "Integrated Resource Plan," WAPA's annual reports to Congress, and correspondence and memoranda on numerous EPTP-related topics. WRA requested a complete fee waiver. Request Letter, dated June 29, 2007.

In correspondence with WAPA, WRA explained that WAPA is a government agency, and the documents pertain to its EPTP-related energy development activities in the West. WRA explained that the public is generally unfamiliar with the EPTP and the WAPA's role in its planning and development. WRA stated that it will disseminate the requested information through its website, newsletter, public forums, and interaction with government and interested organizations. WRA stated that the information is not publicly available in any agency library or reading room and that as a non-profit organization, disclosure is not in WRA's commercial interest. Letter from WRA to WAPA, dated August 3, 2007.

WAPA partially denied WRA's fee waiver request because "documents and other information [WRA is] requesting already exists in the public domain and therefore[] does not contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations or activities of the government." WAPA estimated that processing WRA's request would cost approximately $80,955.66. Determination Letter, dated November 7, 2007 (italics removed). However, without explanation, WAPA offered to absorb 40% of the $80,955.66 processing costs. Letter from WAPA to WRA, dated August 30, 2007.

WRA filed the present Appeal, challenging WAPA's partial denial of WRA's fee waiver request. Namely, WRA complains that the "determination . . . does not identify which records are in the public domain, nor where they can be found." Also, WRA "appeals WAPA's failure to provide a rationale that makes sense for its estimated $80,000 cost to provide the requested documents and information." Appeal Letter, dated November 28, 2007.

Subsequent to WRA's Appeal, WAPA explained to OHA that 20-30% of the information WRA requests is available on the WAPA website. A WAPA-conducted Google search showed that the Tri-State website and a host of other websites contain additional information. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Patricia Land, WAPA, and David M. Petrush, OHA, December 20, 2007; E-mail from Patricia Land, WAPA, to David M. Petrush, OHA, December 20, 2007.

II. Analysis

"Intended to ensure an informed citizenry, vital to the functioning of a democratic society, needed to check against corruption and to hold the governors accountable to the governed . . . the Freedom of Information Act requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request. . . ." Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Rossotti, 326 F.3d 1309, 1310 (D.C. Cir. 2003) (citation and quotations omitted).

The FOIA generally requires document requesters to pay for search and duplication costs. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i). However, each agency has promulgated regulations explaining when a requester is entitled[1] to receive documents at no charge or reduced charge. DOE regulations set forth "two basic requirements, both of which must be satisfied before fees will be waived or reduced." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8); see also 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii) (providing authorization for the DOE fee waiver regulations). First, a requester must show that "disclosure of the information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i) (internal quotations omitted). This is known as the "public interest" requirement. Second, a requester must show that "disclosure of the information is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii) (internal quotations omitted). This is known as the "commercial interest" requirement.

The public interest requirement and commercial interest requirement each have non-exclusive factors to show when they are met. A FOIA officer should address the following factors to determine if a requester meets the public interest requirement:

(A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;

(B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure; and

(D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i)(A)-(D) (internal quotations omitted).

A FOIA officer should address the following factors to determine if a requester meets the commercial interest requirement:

(A) The existence and magnitude of a commercial interest: Whether the requester has a commercial interest that would be furthered by the requested disclosure; and if so

(B) The primary interest in disclosure: Whether the magnitude of the identified commercial interest of the requester is sufficiently large, in comparison with the public interest in disclosure, that disclosure is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii)(A)-(B) (internal quotations omitted).

"[F]ee waiver requests must be made with 'reasonable specificity' . . . and [be] based on more than 'conclusory allegations.'" Rossotti, 326 F.3d at 1312 (citations omitted). "Congress amended FOIA to ensure that it be liberally construed in favor of waivers for noncommercial requesters." Id. (citation and quotations omitted).

Factor B

OHA has held that, "If the information is already publicly available, release . . . would not contribute to public understanding [i.e., release would not have informative value] and a fee waiver may not be appropriate." James Salsman, 29 DOE ¶ 80,223 (Case No. TFA-0114) (Sept. 7, 2005) (citation omitted).

Courts have adopted a test to show when a fee waiver is inappropriate because the requested documents are already in the public domain. When "material . . . has met a threshold level of public dissemination," disclosure "will not further 'public understanding' within the meaning of the fee waiver provisions." Campbell v. Dep't of Justice, 164 F.3d 20, 36 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (citation omitted). Lastly, to justify a FOIA fee waiver denial because the documents are in the public domain, the agency must "explain[] where in the 'public domain' th[e] materials reside." Id.

In Campbell, a requester sought Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) records about an activist. Campbell, 164 F.3d at 26. The FBI partially denied the requester's fee waiver because a portion of the requested documents existed in the public domain. Id. at 35. However, the FBI never explained to the requester where in the public domain the requested documents resided. Id. at 36.

The court held that the FBI must explain where the documents reside in the public domain.[2] The court reasoned that, "[T]he mere fact that the material resides in the public domain does not justify denying a fee waiver. . . ." "[O]nly material that has met a threshold level of public dissemination will not further 'public understanding' within the meaning of the fee waiver provisions." Id. (citation omitted).

Campbell's analysis assumes that explaining where the documents reside is integral to determining the threshold level of public dissemination at which they further public understanding. Because the FBI did not describe where in the public domain the requested documents resided, the court did not reach the issue of whether the requested documents "met a threshold level of public dissemination."

In this case, WAPA partially denied WRA's fee waiver request, stating that, "[D]ocuments and other information [WRA is] requesting already exists in the public domain and therefore[] does not contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government."[3] Determination Letter, dated November 7, 2007 (italics removed).

[2] See also Carney v. Dep't of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 815-16 (2d Cir. 1994) (explaining that "[the agency] merely stated that the records . . . requested had been released . . . without explaining how these records were already available to the public. Accordingly, [the requester's] requests for fee waivers should not have been rejected for this reason . . ."); Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Washington v. Dep't of Health & Human Serv., 481 F. Supp. 2d 99, 111 (D.D.C. 2006) (citing Campbell, Carney, and others, and stating, "[T]hese cases suggest that an agency asserting that the requested documents are already publicly available must do more than merely make that assertion").

[3] WAPA partially denied WRA's fee waiver based on only one of DOE's four public interest requirement factors. WAPA did not base its partial fee waiver denial on the other three public interest requirement factors or the Under Campbell, this simple statement is an insufficient basis on which to deny WRA's fee waiver request. Just as in Campbell, WAPA partially denied WRA a fee waiver, based on the fact that certain of the documents that WRA requested already exist in the public domain. Campbell required the WAPA to explain to WRA where the documents in the public domain reside. Indeed, the "public domain" rationale for denying a fee waiver request has no meaning if the requester cannot locate the documents. Stating that the documents exist in the public domain without explaining where they are defeats the FOIA's purpose, which is to provide the requester access to the government's files.

Note, however, that as in Campbell, this Decision does not evaluate whether the information that WAPA states is in the public domain reaches a "threshold level of dissemination." That analysis is not yet necessary. The bare fact that WAPA stated that the documents WRA requested are in the public domain (without explaining where) is sufficient grounds to remand the case under Campbell.

This Decision is in accord with OHA cases addressing similar issues. In Gov't Accountability Project, a DOE office denied a requester a fee waiver without reason and without conducting a search for responsive documents. OHA remanded the case to the office for a determination on the fee waiver issue after it identified and reviewed the documents responsive to the request. Gov't Accountability Project, 23 DOE ¶ 80,139 (Case No. LFA-0312) (Aug. 27, 1993); see also James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,154 (Case No. LFA-0152) (Oct. 17, 1991) (remanding a fee waiver denial "to the FOI Officer, who should wait until the search for responsive documents is complete and it has been determined what information can be released to Schwab").

Here, similar to Gov't Accountability Project and Schwab, WAPA can not possibly determine which requested documents (or how many) are in the public domain without conducting a search and reviewing the responsive documents.

III. Conclusion

WAPA partially denied WRA's fee waiver request under "Factor B" because certain of the documents WRA requested exist in the public domain. As the foregoing indicates, WAPA has failed to identify where in the public domain those documents reside, and if they have "met a threshold level of public dissemination," as Campbell requires. Accordingly, WRA's Appeal should be granted.

Because we will remand to WAPA to issue WRA a new determination on its fee waiver request, we do not reach WRA's remaining Appeal argument regarding WAPA's fee estimate.

commercial interest factors. Therefore, although no one factor is dispositive, this Decision does not address those other factors.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Western Resource Advocates filed on December 6, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0233, is granted. Western Resource Advocates' fee waiver request is remanded to the Western Area Power Administration.

(2) The Western Area Power Administration shall issue a new determination. If it wishes to deny WRA's fee waiver request based on "Factor B," then WAPA should determine which documents WRA requests exist in the public domain, if any, and where they are located. WAPA should also decide if those documents have "met a threshold level of public dissemination." It should then issue a new determination based on that information. In the alternative, WAPA may base its new determination on analysis considering the "public interest" and "commercial interest" factors (cited above) that it left unaddressed in its initial determination.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: WTAE-TV

Case Number: TFA-0234

On December 18, 2007, WTAE-TV (WTAE) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Pittsburgh Naval Reactors Office (PNRO). In that determination, PNRO withheld documents in response to a request for information that WTAE filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require PNRO to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On November 2, 2007, WTAE sent a FOIA request to the FOIA Office at DOE Headquarters, for the two most recent annual performance evaluations conducted by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Bechtel-Bettis plant in West Mifflin, Pennsylvania. See Electronic Mail Message from WTAE to DOE (November 2, 2007). On November 6, 2007, the request was forwarded to the Office of Naval Reactors at DOE Headquarters because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office. The Office of Naval Reactors then forwarded the request to PNRO to conduct the search.

PNRO conducted a search and located documents responsive to WTAE's request. In its determination letter dated November 27, 2007, PNRO withheld the documents in their entirety under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5, claiming that the responsive material is interim contractor performance evaluations that are designated as "source selection information"[1] created to support future contract award decisions. See Letter from PNRO to WTAE, November 27, 2007 (Determination Letter). In withholding the documents, PNRO asserts that the subject evaluations are pre-decisional and deliberative, and as such, fall within the deliberative process privilege covered by Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Id. On December 18, 2007, WTAE filed this appeal of PNRO's decision to withhold information under Exemption 5.

[1] "Source Selection Information" means information prepared for use by a Federal agency for the purpose of evaluating a bid or proposal to enter into a Federal agency procurement contract, if that information has not been previously made available to the public or disclosed publicly. 41 U.S.C.A. § 423(f)(2). PNRO claims that pursuant to subpart 42.15 of the Federal Acquisition Requisition (FAR), contractor performance evaluations are designated "Source Selection Information," and only releasable three years after completion of contract performance. See Determination Letter.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). The deliberative process privilege is often invoked under Exemption 5, and is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). The privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

There are, however, exceptions to the general rule that the deliberative process privilege does not protect factual information. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Dudman Communications v. Department of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1564 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

In its determination letter dated November 27, 2007, PNRO withheld the evaluations in their entirety from WTAE, claiming that the documents contain information that is predecisional and part of the deliberative process. We have reviewed these documents and believe that PNRO improperly withheld them under Exemption 5.

PNRO argues that the primary function of these evaluations is "to support future contract award decisions" and as such, these documents are predecisional in nature. See Determination Letter. We disagree. Performance evaluations are systematic determinations of merit, worth or significance. The primary purpose of performance evaluations is to provide the subject with feedback for performance and recommendations for improvement.

Our office conducted a de novo review of the documents PNRO withheld from WTAE in their entirety. Each evaluation expresses the evaluator's opinion of the contractor's performance at the time the evaluation was conducted. PNRO informed us that although the interim evaluations may be eventually used to award future contracts or contract extensions, the evaluations are not drafts. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Clifford Nunn, PNRO, and Avery Webster, OHA (January 11, 2008). They reflect final agency positions that are not subject to review or revision. Id.

We do not believe that Exemption 5 should be applied so broadly as to withhold final agency documents that may ultimately feed into a larger evaluation process. Where interim performance evaluations reflect the agency's final decision, the documents are not predecisional and cannot be shielded by the deliberative process privilege.

Accordingly, we shall remand this matter to PNRO. On remand, PNRO must review the responsive material and issue a new determination that either releases that material or justifies the withholding of any portions of the documents. If PNRO determines that withholding is appropriate, it should memorialize its consideration of segregation of non-exempt material pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b) and the public interest pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by WTAE-TV on December 18, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0234, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Pittsburgh Naval Reactors Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	The Florida Times-Union
Date of Filing:	December 19, 2007
Case Number:	TFA-0235

On December 19, 2007, the Florida Times-Union (Times-Union) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Office of the Executive Secretariat (OES). In that determination, OES responded to a request for information that the Times-Union filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OES to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On October 15, 2007, the Times-Union sent a FOIA request to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), for "any records relating to a presentation by Under Secretary Robert Card on July 24, 2003 to the International Energy Advisory Council." See Letter from Florida Times-Union to FOIA Officer, U.S. Department of Energy (October 15, 2007) (Request Letter). DOE/FOIA forwarded the request to OES because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

OES conducted a search of the electronic Document Online Coordination System (eDOCS) which yielded no documents responsive to the Times-Union's request. See Letter from Carolyn Matthews, OES, to Florida Times-Union (November 1, 2007). On December 18, 2007, the Times-Union filed this Appeal challenging the adequacy of the search conducted for responsive documents. See Letter from Florida Times-Union to OHA (received December 19, 2007). In its Appeal, the Times-Union also provided additional information to assist the Department in locating responsive material. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).*

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted OES to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See Email from Avery Webster, OHA, to Carolyn Matthews, OES (December 20, 2007). OES informed us that it conducted a search of only the eDOCS database. See Email from Carolyn Matthews, OES, to Avery Webster, OHA (December 26, 2007). OES did not conduct a search for responsive documents of any other agency records.

During the pendency of this Appeal, OES recognized that it should have conducted a broader search for responsive documents. OES has indicated to us that it is now conducting a new search of its records. In light of this information, we will remand this matter to DOE/FOIA to oversee OES's new search for the documents that the Times-Union has requested. Any additional responsive documents that are located will be identified and released to the Times-Union, or the basis for their withholding will be explained in a new determination letter, with specific reference to one or more FOIA exemptions.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Florida Times-Union on December 18, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0235, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Case Number: TFA-0237

This Decision concerns a Motion for Reconsideration of a Decision and Order that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) issued to Terry M. Apodaca on Dec. 19, 2007, in case TFA-0229. In that case, Ms. Apodaca filed a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Request with the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA). The NNSA issued her a determination. Ms. Apodaca appealed the determination to OHA, challenging the adequacy of the NNSA's search. OHA denied Ms. Apodaca's appeal in part because she filed her appeal nearly two months past her regulatory filing deadline. If this Motion for Reconsideration were granted, OHA would review the adequacy of the NNSA's search.

I. Background

On April 10, 2007, Ms. Apodaca filed a FOIA request with the NNSA for documents regarding personally identifiable information (PII) breaches. The NNSA provided Ms. Apodaca documents. See Terry M. Apodaca (Case No. TFA-0229) (Dec. 19, 2007).[1] Ms. Apodaca challenged the adequacy of the NNSA's search. In particular, Ms. Apodaca appealed:

(i) The NNSA's determination that it could not locate documents at the Office of Human Capital Management Services, the Information Technology Department, the Facility Security Officer, the Inquiry Official, and Program Manager for Incidents of Security Concern;

(ii) The NNSA's failure to process her request at the Cyber Security Site Manager's Office (CSSM), as she had requested after filing her FOIA request;

(iii) The NNSA's failure to process her request at the Y-12 facility, which Ms. Apodaca claims experienced a March 2007 PII breach; and

[1] The Federal Energy Guidelines reporter has not yet assigned this Decision volume and section numbers.

(iv) The NNSA's failure to produce documents regarding a PII breach "a few years back" that "affected over 1,500 NNSA employees."

OHA denied Ms. Apodaca's appeal regarding (i) and (ii) because she filed her appeal on Oct. 31, 2007, nearly two months past her 30-day regulatory deadline of Sept. 3, 2007.[2] OHA found that the NNSA's search regarding (iii) was adequate: the NNSA had contacted every source in its experience that was likely to have responsive records, and none had suggested searching the Y-12 facility. OHA remanded Ms. Apodaca's appeal regarding (iv) because the NNSA agreed to conduct that search. Id.

Ms. Apodaca filed the present Motion for Reconsideration on Dec. 21, 2007. Ms. Apodaca argues that OHA should reconsider its Decision regarding (i)-(iii) for two reasons. First, her appeal was in fact timely. Shortly after receiving the NNSA's determination dated Aug. 3, 2007, she contacted the NNSA to informally resolve her concerns. Ms. Apodaca's Motion included an e-mail showing that she contacted the NNSA on Aug. 31, 2007 regarding (iii) (the NNSA search at the Y-12 facility) and (iv) (the "hacker incident"). Motion for Reconsideration, received Dec. 21, 2007.

Second, Ms. Apocada asks OHA to reconsider its Decision regarding (iii) because the NNSA employee who processed Ms. Apodaca's FOIA request for information on breaches is a member of the office that resolved the breach described in (iii). Ms. Apodaca knows this because she processed the FOIA request that started the breach. Meanwhile, NNSA employees who processed Ms. Apodaca's FOIA request for information on breaches earlier provided Ms. Apodaca documents regarding the breach described in item (iii). Id.

Ms. Apodaca raises two additional issues in her Motion for Reconsideration. She asks OHA to require the NNSA to conduct "additional processing"[3] regarding (i)-(iii) because she is "being treated with less respect and credibility than the other [FOIA requesters]. . . ." Lastly, she states that OHA "did not address that portion of my appeal pertaining to Mr. Dick Speidel not responding to my request. . . . [The NNSA Service Center] has also not responded to me about this." Id.

[2] OHA reserves the discretion to accept an untimely appeal to promote administrative efficiency, if, upon consulting the determination issuer, review remains practicable, given the determination issuer's possible file relocations, staffing changes, or other circumstances. See, e.g., Nevaire S. Rich, 27 DOE ¶ 89,241 (1999) (Case No. VFA-0523); Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 27 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1998) (Case No. VFA-0421). In case TFA-0229, OHA declined to accept Ms. Apodaca's appeal because NNSA employees who conducted the searches could not recall the search details.

[3] Ms. Apodaca actually asks OHA to "reverse the decision made and remand my appeal in total for additional processing" (emphasis added). Motion for Reconsideration, received Dec. 21, 2007. However, since OHA's Decision already remanded (iv), OHA understands Ms. Apodaca's Motion for Reconsideration to address (i)-(iii).

II. Analysis

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Dallas D. Register, 28 DOE ¶ 80,218 (2002). In reviewing such requests for reconsideration, we may look to Subpart E of 10 C.F.R. Part 1003, OHA's general administrative rules regarding modification or rescission of its orders. See, e.g., Ron Vader, 23 DOE ¶ 80,183 (1994). Those regulations provide that an application for modification or rescission of an order shall be processed only when the application demonstrates that it is based on significantly changed circumstances, defined in pertinent part as "a substantial change in the facts or circumstances upon which an outstanding . . . order of the OHA affecting the applicant was issued, which change has occurred during the interval between issuance of such an order and the date of the application and was caused by forces or circumstances beyond the control of the applicant." 10 C.F.R. §§ 1003.55(b)(1), (b)(2)(iii).

Relevant here, "significantly changed circumstances" includes "the discovery of material facts that were not known or could not have been known at the time of the proceeding and action upon which the application is based. . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 1003.55(b)(2)(i); see also Econ. Regulatory Admin., 14 DOE ¶ 82,502 (Mar. 10, 1986) (ERA) (denying a motion for reconsideration where the appellant provided material information in its motion that it had at the time of appeal).

A FOIA appeal must be in writing, addressed to the OHA director, and OHA must receive the appeal within thirty days after the requester receives the determination. 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.8(a)-(c).

OHA addresses in turn the issues that Ms. Apodaca raises in her Motion. First, OHA appreciates that Ms. Apodaca contacted the NNSA to resolve her concerns informally. However, that does not save her appeal from being untimely. The regulations required her to submit her appeal within thirty days of receiving the determination. The regulations simply do not allow for the flexibility that Ms. Apodaca seeks. Even if they did allow for that flexibility, Ms. Apodaca's Aug. 31, 2007 e-mail speaks to (iii) and (iv). Ms. Apodaca's appeal regarding (i) and (ii) was denied because her appeal was untimely. The NNSA's search regarding (iii) was upheld on appeal, and OHA remanded the case to the NNSA so that it could conduct a search regarding (iv). Therefore, Ms. Apodaca does not present a material fact that shows significantly changed circumstances that can lead us to modify our Decision that her appeal regarding (i) and (ii) was untimely.

Next, Ms. Apodaca asks OHA to modify or rescind its Decision that the NNSA's search regarding (iii) was adequate. Ms. Apodaca states that the NNSA employees who processed Ms. Apodaca's FOIA request for information on breaches earlier provided Ms. Apodaca documents regarding the breach described in (iii). However, following ERA, because Ms. Apodaca knew this fact but did not present it to OHA at the time of her appeal, this fact is not a basis for OHA to reconsider its Decision.

Ms. Apodaca also asks OHA to remand portions of her case "in total for additional processing" because she is "being treated with less respect and credibility than other [FOIA requesters]. . . ." However, this is not a basis upon which OHA may grant Ms. Apodaca's Motion for Reconsideration.

Lastly, Ms. Apodaca states that OHA and the NNSA Service Center failed to address the portion of her appeal pertaining to Mr. Speidel not responding to her FOIA request. 10 C.F.R. Part 1004 does not allow OHA to review the timeliness of the determination issuer's response. If Ms. Apodaca properly submitted a FOIA request to an authorizing official who did not respond within the statutory deadline, she has a right of review in federal court. See 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.5(d)(1)-(4).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration that Ms. Apodaca filed on December 21, 2007, OHA Case No. TFA-0237, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Mary B. Guillory
Date of Filing:	January 3, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0238

On January 3, 2008, Mary B. Guillory (Ms. Guillory) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's Office of Fossil Energy (FE). In that determination, FE withheld documents in response to a request for information that Ms. Guillory filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require FE to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On September 17, 2007, Ms. Guillory filed a FOIA request with DOE's Headquarters FOIA Office (DOE/FOI) seeking documents relating to an Office of Inspector General's (IG) investigation case file. See Electronic Mail Message from Mary Guillory to DOE (September 17, 2007) (FOIA Request). Specifically, Ms. Guillory requested a DOE IG's referral memorandum sent to the program officer and the program officer's response. Id. In a letter dated September 18, 2007, the Director of the DOE/FOI informed Ms. Guillory that her request was being forwarded to IG and FE because any documents responsive to her request, if they existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of those offices.[1]

[1] FE forwarded Ms. Guillory's FOIA request to the National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL) to determine if it had responsive documents within its records. NETL conducted a search of its records and determined that it had no documents responsive to Ms. Guillory's request. In response to this Appeal, however, NETL informed us that it conducted an additional search of its records. See Electronic Mail Message from Thomas Russial, NETL to Avery Webster, OHA (January 25, 2008). NETL discovered a draft report from Penn State University under its purchase order from NETL which relates peripherally to the subject matter of Ms. Guillory's request. Although this document is marked "draft", it was accepted by DOE as the final report. While it may not be responsive to Ms. Guillory's request, NETL has agreed to provide Ms. Guillory with a copy of this document.

FE conducted a search of its records and located one responsive document. In its determination letter dated December 13, 2007, FE withheld the document in its entirety under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5, claiming that the responsive material is predecisional and deliberative because it sets forth opinions and recommendations concerning an IG investigation. See Letter from FE to Mary Guillory, December 13, 2007 (Determination Letter).

On January 3, 2008, Ms. Guillory filed the present Appeal[2] with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). See Letter from Mary Guillory to OHA (January 3, 2008) (Appeal Letter). In her Appeal, Ms. Guillory challenges FE's determination and asserts that material was improperly withheld under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.[3] Id. For this reason, Ms. Guillory requests that OHA direct FE to release the requested information.[4]

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In withholding portions of documents from Ms. Guillory, FE relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising

[2] The determination issued by the Office of Inspector General is not the subject of this Appeal.

[3] On Appeal, Ms. Guillory requests additional information that she did not request in her FOIA request. Specifically, she requests information in DOE's possession "detailing the kind of mercury and [providing] an exact list of the materials, especially the toxins and hazardous materials and ph that was conducted or contracted out by PSU and DOE labs." Under the FOIA, agencies are required only to release non-exempt documents that are responsive to a request for information. If Ms. Guillory seeks additional information, she must file a new FOIA request requesting documents that may provide this information.

[4] Ms. Guillory also argues that the information should be provided to her pursuant to OSHA regulations. However, OHA's jurisdiction is limited to deciding whether DOE properly withheld the documents under the FOIA.

part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

After reviewing the requested documents at issue, we have concluded that the determination made by FE in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from Ms. Guillory is a program office's response to an IG inquiry and consists of comments, recommendations and opinions. The comments, recommendations and opinions contained in the memorandum are clearly predecisional and deliberative. The memorandum was drafted to assist the IG in developing a policy determination regarding the validity of Ms. Guillory's complaint of alleged exposure to toxic material. The memorandum was generated prior to any finding concerning the allegations Ms. Guillory raised in the investigation. In addition, the document reflects the opinions and recommendations of the investigator and other individuals regarding an agency investigation. These comments, recommendations and opinions were subject to further agency review and do not represent the final agency position. Accordingly, we hold that the comments, recommendations and opinions withheld from the responsive material were properly withheld under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege.

B. Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (August 15, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0060). In the case at hand, the majority of the material withheld under Exemption 5 is nonfactual in nature and is composed of the preliminary opinions of the individuals concerned as to the validity of the allegations or to the future course of the investigation. Any factual information contained in this document is so intertwined as to make segregation virtually impossible.

C. Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the withheld material in the documents at issue, which consist of comments, opinions and recommendations provided to the IG during the course of an internal investigation. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (March 18, 1987) (Case No. KFA-0080).

III. Conclusion

Given the facts presented to us, we find that FE properly withheld the responsive document pursuant to the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. Accordingly, Ms. Guillory's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mary B. Guillory, OHA Case No. TFA-0238, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: FOIA Group, Inc.

Case Number: TFA-0239

On December 21, 2007, FOIA Group, Inc. (FG) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on November 29, 2007, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Headquarters Procurement Services (HPS). In that determination, HPS responded to a request for documents that FG submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. HPS identified a number of documents responsive to FG's request. Some of those documents were released in their entirety and, pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA, others were released with some deletions. FG has challenged the withholding of information under Exemption 4. This appeal, if granted, would require HPS to release the withheld information to FG.

I. Background

FG requested copies of various documents relating to Task Order DE-AT01-03IM0002, including the contract, all modifications that changed the statement of work associated with this task order, all of the recent monthly and yearly reports related to this order and the last three award fee letters.[1] See November 29, 2007 Determination Letter from HPS to Jeff Stachewicz, FG.

HPS identified several documents responsive to FG's request. Of those documents, a number were released in their entirety. However, in the remaining documents, award fee scores, award fee amounts, award fee percentages, discount terms, labor rates, discount hours, dollar amounts of individual labor elements, subcontractor names, a key employee name, the ceiling price, the government site discount percentage and all references to a particular RSIS methodology used in the contract were withheld. The documents from which this information was withheld consist of three letters to RSIS from the DOE's Office of the Associate Chief Information Officer, dated

April 5, 2005, December 22, 2006 and December 14, 2005 (Letters), along with a document entitled "U.S. Department of Energy Order for Supplies and Services" (contract).

HPS stated in its November 29, 2007 determination letter that the information was withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. The determination letter explained that the withheld information was commercial or financial information related to RSIS business activities. Further, HPS explained that release of this information would give RSIS' competitors an unfair advantage in future competitions for business by revealing the resources available to RSIS and by revealing RSIS strategy in constructing bids for future solicitations. HPS also asserted in the determination letter that Exemption 4 protects the interests of both the government and the submitters of voluntary information since it encourages submitters to voluntarily furnish useful and reliable commercial information to the government without fear of its disclosure.

FG challenged HPS's withholding of information under Exemption 4. Letter from Jeff Stachewicz, FG, to OHA (December 21, 2007) (Appeal). FG argues that HPS' reasons for denial are "illogical" under the Federal Acquisition Regulations (FAR) and the Competition in Contracting Act (CICA) and would defeat the underlying principles of those enactments. Specifically, FG argues that allowing RSIS to keep the withheld information to itself would in fact disadvantage its competitors in future competitions since RSIS, and not its competitors, would already know a winning combination of financial and other information. FG also challenges HPS's characterization of RSIS' information as being "voluntarily" submitted because, in negotiated procurement, submissions are in fact mandatory.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

As discussed below, we find that almost all of the information withheld by HPS under Exemption 4 was properly withheld. FG's argument concerning the general intent of the FAR and CICA do not supersede the FOIA statute and the associated case law that has developed interpreting the FOIA. The FAR itself expressly prohibits the release of an offeror's "cost breakdown, profit, overhead rates, trade secrets . . . or other confidential business information be disclosed to any other offeror." 48 C.F.R. § 15.503(b)(1)(v). Further, the CICA, 41 U.S.C. § 453, has no explicit provision requiring disclosure of winning offers. With regard to FG's argument as to whether the information was voluntarily submitted, as explained below, the fact that the withheld information was, in fact, required to be supplied to the government does not necessarily defeat Exemption 4 protection for such documents.

A. Information Withheld in the Contract

With regard to the information withheld in the contract, RSIS was required by DOE to submit the information in question. See Memorandum of Conversation between Craig Ashline, Frederick Dann, HPS and Richard Cronin, OHA (January 17, 2008). Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper with regard to the information withheld in the contract, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[2] The information submitted by RSIS in the contract, i.e. award fee percentages, discount terms, labor rates, discount hours, dollar amounts of individual labor elements, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information.

The second requirement under the National Parks test is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power CHPS, 28 DOE ¶ 80,105 (July 31, 2000) (Case No. VFA-0591). All of the information withheld in the contract came from RSIS, a corporation.

Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "privileged" or "confidential." This case concerns "confidential" information. Withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, because the contract for the project required that the information be submitted, it is unlikely that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future.

After reviewing the information in question, we conclude that virtually all of the information is confidential because release of the information could substantially harm RSIS' competitive position. Disclosure of the information could give competitors insight into RSIS' estimating processes, rate development methods, labor pricing, and procurement processes as well as its strategy regarding level of effort in various contract tasks. Disclosure of the key employee's identity could allow competitors to try to hire the person away from RSIS as well as give competitors insight as to the skills RSIS deemed necessary to fulfill the contract. Disclosure of the award fee percentage and the government site discount agreed to by RSIS could enable other competitors to gain an unfair advantage in future government contract solicitations. In sum, almost all of this information could be used by competitors to undercut RSIS' position to obtain future contracts. Nevertheless, the amount of the total ceiling price (in each of the Attachment J-

[2] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

8 tables) does not appear to be withholdable since release of this figure would reveal nothing as to the individual price elements that make up this sum. We will remand this matter to HPS to either release the total ceiling price for each of the Attachment J-8 tables or issue another determination letter to FG justifying the continued withholding of the information under the FOIA.

B. Information Withheld in the Letters

In the Letters, information such as DOE Contract Performance Evaluation Committee scores regarding RSIS' contract performance, numeric statistics related to RSIS' performance of the contract and the name and a description of an RSIS methodology used in the performance of the contract, were withheld under Exemption 4.

As an initial matter, we find that the withheld scores and statistics, such as number of hours worked, percentage change of hours, RSIS' DOE contact performance scores rating Quality, Timeliness and Cost and the amount of RSIS' award fee for a particular period originated with the DOE. Consequently, such information cannot be said to have been obtained from a "person" and thus cannot be protected under Exemption 4. Consequently we will remand this matter back to HPS. On remand, HPS may choose to release the RSIS scores and contract statistics in these letters or issue another determination letter withholding this information under another FOIA exemption.

With regard to the withheld name and description of the RSIS methodology used in its performance of the contract, we find that this information originated with RSIS and thus, the information for Exemption 4 purposes was obtained from a person. Because the contract was completed several years ago, HPS was not able to inform us whether the RSIS methodology was voluntarily submitted or was submitted as a requirement of the contract and thus involuntarily submitted. We need not make a finding on this issue because even under the stricter "involuntary submitted" standard, this information would be properly withheld. Specifically, the description of the methodology is clearly commercial information. Release of the description of the methodology could significantly harm RSIS' competitive position by allowing competitors to obtain a vital tool RSIS used to fulfill the contract. Consequently, this information was properly withheld under Exemption 4.

It is not immediately apparent, however, that release of the name of the methodology could cause competitive harm to RSIS. The name itself only very generally alludes to the technique used in the methodology. On remand, HPS should either release the name of the methodology or, if it seeks to withhold the name under Exemption 4, determine whether the name of the RSIS methodology was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted to HPS. If the name was voluntarily submitted, it may withhold the name under Exemption 4 if the name is such information that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. If the name was involuntarily submitted, and HPS seeks to withhold the name under Exemption 4, it should provide a more detailed explanation of the harm to RSIS that would result from release of the name, as required by National Parks. If HPS determines that Exemption 4 does not apply, it should release the name or justify withholding the name under another exemption in its new determination letter to the requester.

C. Discretionary Public Interest Disclosure of the Withheld Information

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Chicago Power Group, 23 DOE ¶ 80,125 at 80,560 (June 3, 1993) (Case No. LFA-0292). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4. William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (April 9, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0484).

D. Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (August 15, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0060). We find that HPS complied with the FOIA by releasing to FG virtually all portions of the documents not withholdable under Exemption 4, with the possible exception of the small portion of the documents to be reexamined on remand.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on December 21, 2007, by FOIA Group, Inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0239, is hereby granted in part.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Headquarters Procurement Services, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Marc A. Wendling
Date of Filing:	January 8, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0241

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Bruce A. Spanner, on behalf of his client Marc A. Wendling, from a determination issued to him by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, and the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008.

I. Background

In an October 15, 2007 request to Richland, Mr. Spanner sought, "Documents submitted by or on behalf of Eberline Services, and all responses or other documents prepared by or at the request of the Department of Energy or any of its contractors thereto concerning the denial of access to Hanford to Marc Wendling." Electronic FOIA Request Confirmation, Request Number 20071015012803 (October 15, 2007). In a subsequent telephone conversation with Richland, Mr. Spanner requested a copy of Mr. Wendling's DOE Personnel Security File (PSF). Appeal at 1.

On December 3, 2007, Richland issued a determination letter to Mr. Spanner, with which it provided a copy of those documents in Mr. Wendling's PSF that originated within DOE. Letter from Dorothy Riehle, Privacy Act Officer, Richland, to Bruce A. Spanner, Miller, Mertens, Spanner & Comfort, PLLC (December 3, 2007) (Determination Letter) at 1.[1] Richland also stated that "records in the possession of Eberline Services, Inc., a [DOE subcontractor], are not considered agency records and therefore, not subject to FOIA or the [Privacy Act]." Determination Letter at 1.

[1] In its determination, Richland informed Mr. Spanner that it could not release documents in Mr. Wendling's PSF that were created by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM). Determination Letter at 1. Richland therefore forwarded a copy of the request to OPM, so that it could respond to Mr. Spanner directly. Id.

In his appeal, Mr. Spanner states,

> Mr. Wendling was denied access to Hanford under the security protocols administered by the [DOE]. . . . However, and inexplicably, Mr. Wendling's [PSF] contains no reference at all to the denial of access or to the reversal thereof. I have been advised that a denial of access is initiated by correspondence from a contractor to the [DOE]. I would have expected this letter and all other related correspondence to have been produced by the [DOE].

Appeal at 1.

Below, we address the two issues pertinent to the present Appeal. The first issue is whether Richland performed an adequate search for documents responsive to Mr. Spanner's request. The second is whether certain of the documents located by Richland are subject to release under the FOIA statute, the Privacy Act, or DOE regulations.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of Richland's Search for Responsive Documents

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted).[2] "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted Richland to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. Richland informed us that it searched its Security and Emergency Services Division. Electronic Mail from Dorothy C. Riehle, Richland, to Steven Goering, OHA (January 9, 2008). That search located Mr. Wendling's PSF. Id. Richland believed that other responsive documents might be in the possession of Mr. Wendling's former employer, Eberline Services Hanford, Inc. (ESHI), a DOE subcontractor. Electronic Mail from Dorothy C. Riehle, Richland, to Steven Goering, OHA (January 17, 2008). However, Richland determined that the only responsive documents in the possession of ESHI were in Mr. Wendling's personnel file, and therefore were not subject to release under the FOIA, the Privacy Act, or the DOE FOIA regulations. Electronic Mail from Dorothy C. Riehle, Richland, to Steven Goering, OHA (January 9, 2008). We address the determination as to the status of the documents in Mr. Wendling's personnel file separately in section II.B below.

[2] Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act requires only that the agency search systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, 28 DOE ¶ 80,251 (November 27, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0763).

We find that Richland's search for documents responsive to Mr. Wendling's request was reasonably calculated to uncover the documents he was seeking, in that Richland conducted its search in the locations where documents responsive to the request would most likely be found, based on the information available to Richland at the time of the request. We note here that, with the present Appeal, Mr. Spanner provided a document that memorializes the rescission of "the access denial on Marc Wendling." Appeal at 3. When we provided a copy of this document to Richland with the Appeal, Richland identified the document as originating from Fluor Hanford, Inc. (FHI), a DOE contractor that manages activities at the Hanford Site. Based on this document, Richland was able to locate additional responsive documents in the files of FHI. On January 17, 2008, Richland provided a copy of these documents to our office and to Mr. Spanner.

From the initial request submitted by Mr. Spanner, the circumstances of the denial of access to Mr. Wendling were not apparent. Therefore it would be reasonable for Richland to have assumed that Mr. Spanner was seeking personnel security records regarding Mr. Wendling, which would be maintained either by Richland's Security and Emergency Services Division, or by Mr. Wendling's employer, ESHI. Not until Richland received the additional document provided with the appeal did it became apparent that this was an issue involving physical security at the Hanford site, and that such documents would be in the possession of FHI. Thus, we conclude that Richland's search was adequate under the FOIA and Privacy Act.

B. Whether Documents in Mr. Wendling's ESHI Personnel File are Subject to Release Under the FOIA, Privacy Act, or DOE Regulations

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. The Act does not, however, specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record that is subject to FOIA requirements. This issue was addressed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Department of Justice vs. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Id. at 144-45. This is the standard we have adopted in prior cases concerning this issue. See, e.g., Ed Aguilar, 28 DOE ¶ 80,252 (March 16, 2006) (Case No. TFA-0148). Under the FOIA, "agency" means any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . ., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f).

The Privacy Act generally requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The Act defines a "system of records" as "a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5). The Privacy Act adopts the FOIA definition of "agency" set forth in the preceding paragraph. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(1).

In the present case, documents responsive to the request in Mr. Wendling's ESHI personnel file were neither created by the DOE nor are in the possession or control of the DOE. Moreover, Mr. Spanner does not contend, nor do we find, that ESHI, a privately-owned and operated DOE subcontractor, is an "agency." Consequently, these documents would not be an agency record for purposes of the FOIA or part of an agency system of records for purposes of the Privacy Act.

A finding that certain documents are not agency records, however, does not preclude the DOE from releasing them. "When a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor," unless those records are otherwise exempt from public disclosure. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1). The contractual provision governing ownership of records is found in the Department of Energy Acquisition Regulations at 48 C.F.R. § 970.5204-3, "Access to and ownership of records." Paragraph (a) of the contract clause required by this sections states:

> (a) Government-owned records. Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this clause, all records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of this contract shall be the property of the Government and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the contractor either as the contracting officer may from time to time direct during the progress of the work or, in any event, as the contracting officer shall direct upon completion or termination of the contract.

> (1) Employment-related records (such as worker's compensation files; employee relations records, records on salary and employee benefits; drug testing records, labor negotiation records; records on ethics, employee concerns; records generated during the course of responding to allegations of research misconduct; records generated during other employee related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality; employee assistance program records; and personnel and medical/health-related records and similar files), and non-employee patient medical/health-related records, except for those records described by the contract as being maintained in Privacy Act systems of records.

The documents provided to the requester and to our office subsequent to the filing of the present Appeal refer to a dispute between Mr. Wendling and his former employer, ESHI, as the basis for his denial of access to the Hanford site. Based on this information, we agree with Richland that documents in Mr. Wendling's ESHI personnel file related to his denial of access would fall under the purview of the "Employment-related records" paragraph of the ownership of records clause, and therefore such documents would not be the property of the Government. Therefore, these documents would not be subject to release under the FOIA, Privacy Act or the relevant DOE regulations.[3] We will therefore deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Marc A. Wendling, OHA Case Number TFA-0241, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B) (FOIA) and 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1) (Privacy Act). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

[3] Although we find in this decision that the responsive documents in the custody of ESHI are contractor-owned records, we make no finding here as to whether the responsive documents released by FHI, discussed in section II.A above, are government-owned or contractor-owned records under the contract between DOE and FHI. Because the responsive documents in the custody of FHI were released, the issue of their status under the contract between DOE and FHI is not before us.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Marilyn K. Lingle

Case Number: TFA-0242

On January 15, 2008, Marilyn K. Lingle filed an Appeal from a final determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge). In that determination, Oak Ridge withheld documents in response to a request for information that Ms. Lingle filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to release the withheld information.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

By e-mail dated June 29, 2007, Ms. Lingle submitted a FOIA request to Oak Ridge seeking: (1) documents located within a Bechtel Jacobs Company (BJC) dosimetry records book indicating that a request for a bioassay sample was issued to herself and a co-worker (on or about the week ending June 4, 2005) and (2) any documents pertaining to the reason for her co-worker's termination from DOE.[1] See E-mail from Marilyn Lingle to Oak Ridge (June 29, 2007) (FOIA Request).

[1] In her FOIA Request, Ms. Lingle mentions that the Safety and Ecology Corporation (SEC), a sub-contractor of BJC, was given a "Red Letter" from BJC stating that she was not qualified in her new assignment as an Industrial Hygiene Technician in December 2005. See FOIA Request. In her Appeal, Ms. Lingle asserts that she did not receive a copy of the Red Letter, nor did she receive an explanation in the Determination Letter as to why this information was not included. See Appeal Letter.

Oak Ridge conducted a search of its records for responsive documents. Oak Ridge located and released a set of bioassay log sheets and similar files with deletions of the names and badge numbers of other individuals pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6) (Exemption 6). See Letter from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, to Marilyn Lingle (December 18, 2007) (Determination Letter).

On January 15, 2008, Ms. Lingle filed this Appeal[2] challenging Oak Ridge's decision to withhold information pursuant to Exemption 6. See Letter from Marilyn K. Lingle to OHA (received January 15, 2008) (Appeal Letter). In her Appeal, Ms. Lingle disputes the position taken by Oak Ridge that the release of names and identifiers of other employees when connected with their personal exposure data and other vital statistics is a serious invasion of privacy of those individuals and is not in the public interest. Id. Ms. Lingle argues that, "It is general knowledge that employees performing work in any radiologically controlled environment are on a bio-assay program… [and] the fact that an employee is…asked to submit to a sample should not be considered a serious invasion of privacy…" Ms. Lingle asserts that she requested the one-page computer-generated print-out that states the names of individuals who were required to submit to a bioassay in the specified time frame, not the set of bioassay log sheets that were released.[3] Id. Ms. Lingle continues that she "is not requesting the results of the bioassay" and maintains that "the information [she is] requesting is in no way connected with the personal exposure data of the named individuals." Id.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

In reviewing this matter, we contacted Oak Ridge and learned that it did not construe the mere mention of the Red Letter as a request for that document, but rather as information provided in support of her other requests for information. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, and Avery Webster, OHA (dated February 19, 2008). Therefore, Oak Ridge did not perform a search for the Red Letter. Ms. Lingle may consider filing a new FOIA Request with Oak Ridge for the document.

[2] Ms. Lingle is not contesting the adequacy of search as it relates to item two of her FOIA Request. See Appeal Letter.

[3] With regard to the one-page computer-generated document that Ms. Lingle requested, Oak Ridge conducted a search of all agency records pertaining to DOE and BJC contractor oversight of the dosimetry monitoring program for projects under the control of BJC. See Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, to Avery Webster, OHA, dated January 25, 2008 (January 25, 2008 Email). The search produced 79 pages of various types of radiation control operational and health physics department documents, including Ms. Lingle's personnel radiation exposure record file (DOE-33). See Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, to Avery Webster, OHA, dated January 18, 2008. Oak Ridge provided Ms. Lingle with all 79 pages of information it located in its search. See January 25, 2008 Email. Based on the results of the search, Oak Ridge concluded that no one-page computer-generated document from June 2005 containing Ms. Lingle's name and that of her co-workers asked to submit to a bioassay exists. Id.

5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See Sowell, Todd, Lafitte, Beard and Watson LLC, 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (August 31, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0510); Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (July 7, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0499).[4]

1. The Privacy Interest

Oak Ridge determined that the release of names and identifiers of other employees when connected with their personal exposure data and other vital statistics is a serious invasion of privacy. In her Appeal, Ms. Lingle argues that it is general knowledge that employees who perform work in any radiologically-controlled environment are on a bioassay program, and therefore, the fact that an employee is asked to submit to a sample is not considered a serious invasion of privacy.

BJC is the environmental management contractor for the DOE's Oak Ridge Office. Employees of BJC are contractor employees, not federal government employees, whose names, job titles, work stations and salaries must be released under the FOIA (see 5 C.F.R. § 293.311). Thus, BJC employees have a reasonable expectation of privacy concerning their identity.

We agree with Oak Ridge that a substantial privacy interest exists in the identity of the contractor employee. See Citizen Action New Mexico, 29 DOE ¶ 80,311 (October 19, 2007) (Case No. TFA-0224). The courts have also reached this conclusion. See Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. HUD, 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employees' names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Applying these standards to the facts of this case, we believe that the release of the individual's names and other identifiers (i.e. corresponding badge numbers) would reveal personal information or records about the individual. Therefore, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identity of contractor employees.

2. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773; see Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (August 5, 1996) (Case No. VFA-0184). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Dep't of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)).

In determining whether any public interest is served by a requested disclosure, an agency should not consider "the purposes for which the request for information is made." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 771. The Court held that rather than turn on a requester's particular purpose, circumstances, or proposed use, such determinations must turn on the nature of the requested document and the relationship to the basic purpose of the FOIA. Id. at 772. Furthermore, the Court delimited the scope of the public interest to be considered under the FOIA's privacy exemptions to include the "core purpose of the FOIA" or "the kind of public interest for which Congress enacted the FOIA." Id.

We find that there is a minimal public interest, if any, in release of the withheld information. Ms. Lingle has not demonstrated how the disclosure of the names and badge numbers of the non-federal employees will reveal anything of importance regarding the DOE or how it would serve the public interest. At best, Ms. Lingle has articulated a personal interest in obtaining the withheld information. Further, revealing the names of private citizens will not contribute significantly to the public's understanding of government activities. Accordingly, we agree with Oak Ridge and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the names and badge numbers withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

3. The Balancing Test

In determining whether information may be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762; SafeCard Service v. SEC, 426 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991). We have concluded that there is a significant privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of the names and badge numbers of the contractor employees.

It is Ms. Lingle's contention that no privacy interest exists where an employee is asked to submit to a bioassay sample, simply because it is general knowledge that employees who perform work in radiologically-controlled environments participate in bioassay programs. We disagree. The fact that an event or occurrence is not wholly private does not mean that the individual has no interest in limiting disclosure or dissemination of the information. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 770. Further, the fact that certain employees are asked to submit to a bioassay program is not, in itself, the kind of public interest for which Congress enacted the FOIA. Therefore, we find that the public interest in disclosure of the names and badge numbers withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interest of the named individuals.

III. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing information, we find that Oak Ridge properly withheld the names and badge numbers of the individuals pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Marilyn K. Lingle on January 15, 2008, Case No. TFA-0242, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	EverNu Technology, LLC
Date of Filing:	January 18, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0243

On January 18, 2008, EverNu Technology (EverNu) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Office of the General Counsel (OGC). In that determination, OGC withheld information in response to a request for information that EverNu filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OGC to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On October 3, 2007, EverNu sent a FOIA request to the FOIA Office at DOE Headquarters, for a memorandum dated on or about February 17, 2006, regarding EverNu Technology, LLC. E-mail from EverNu Technology to FOIA Officer, Department of Energy (October 3, 2007) (FOIA Request). By letter dated October 5, 2007, the Director of DOE's Headquarters FOIA Office (DOE/FOI) informed EverNu that the request was assigned to the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EERE). EverNu contacted DOE/FOI to inform them that the responsive document was located in the Office of the General Counsel (OGC). DOE/FOI re-assigned the request to OGC, the office most likely to have the responsive document.

OGC conducted a search of its records and located a document responsive to EverNu's request. In its Determination Letter, OGC withheld portions of the document claiming that the responsive material was shielded under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. Letter from OGC to EverNu, December 7, 2007 (Determination Letter). In withholding the information, OGC stated that the information withheld in the responsive document consists of deliberative material reflecting the process of formulating DOE's response to EverNu's September 21, 2005, and September 23, 2005, requests for assistance. Id.

On January 18, 2008, EverNu filed this Appeal of OGC's decision to withhold information under Exemption 5, arguing that the decision is untimely. Appeal Letter at 1-2. EverNu further argues that the DOE 1) failed to reasonably segregate the scientific material contained in the responsive document and 2) waived its right to claim the deliberative process privilege under Exemption 5 of the FOIA because the responsive material has been publicly disseminated. Id. at 2-3. We will address each of these issues in our discussion.

II. Analysis

A. OGC Determination Letter

In its Appeal, EverNu argues that OGC has failed to respond to its October 3, 2007, FOIA request in a timely manner[1] or provide an explanation for the delay. Id. at 1-2. EverNu argues that "[t]he FOIA permits an agency to extend the time limits up to 10 days in unusual circumstances....[and] [t]he agency [must] notify the requester whenever an extension is invoked..." Id. at 2. Further, EverNu maintains that it was never notified that unusual circumstances prevented the DOE from complying with the prescribed time limit. Id. Therefore, EverNu requests the release of all redacted portions of responsive document. Id. at 3.

This portion of EverNu's Appeal must be dismissed because the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) does not have the jurisdiction over matters that relate to whether the agency has responded to a FOIA request in a timely manner. See R.E.V. Engineering Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,180 at 80,678 (July 20, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0680) (dismissing appeal where no jurisdiction exists); see also R.E.V. Engineering Services, 28 DOE ¶ 80,136 at 80,580 (January 10, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0636).[2] Section 1004.8(a) of the DOE regulations grants OHA jurisdiction to consider FOIA appeals when: 1) the Authorizing Officer has denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request or 2) when the Freedom of Information Officer has denied a request for waiver of fees. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a).

Section 1004.8(a) confers jurisdiction on OHA when an Authorizing Official has issued a determination that (1) denies a request for records, (2) states there are no records responsive to the FOIA request, or (3) denies a request for a waiver of fees. See Suffolk County, 17 DOE ¶ 80,111 at 80,524 (April 8, 1988) (Case Nos. KFA-0168 and KFA-0169). OHA has consistently held that Section 1004.8(a) does not confer jurisdiction when an appeal is based on the agency's failure to process a FOIA within the time specified by law. See Tulsa Tribune, 11 DOE ¶ 80,161 at 80,741 (February 29, 1984) (Case No. HFA-0207) (no administrative remedy for agency's non-compliance with a timeliness requirement). Accordingly, this part of EverNu's Appeal is dismissed.

[1] In response to EverNu's October 3, 2007, FOIA Request, OGC issued a Determination Letter on December 7, 2007, 44 days (excluding weekends and holidays) after the request was received.

B. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In withholding portions of documents from EverNu, OGC relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

After reviewing the requested document at issue, we have concluded that OGC's determination in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. The information withheld from EverNu is a memorandum containing comments and opinions drafted by a manager at EERE in response to an inquiry from an OGC attorney. The comments and opinions contained in the memorandum are clearly predecisional and deliberative. The memorandum was drafted to assist OGC in formulating the DOE's response to EverNu's September 21, 2005, and September 23, 2005, requests for assistance. In addition, the document reflects the opinion of a DOE manager regarding a proposed agency position. These comments and opinions were subject to further agency review and do not represent the final agency decision.

EverNu further argues that "[p]rotection for the decision-making process is appropriate only for the period while decisions are being made…[and that] [o]nce a policy is adopted, the public has a greater interest in knowing the basis for the decision." Appeal Letter at 3. We agree. However, in this case, protection under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5 is not lost because the DOE has neither expressly chosen to adopt the memorandum nor incorporated it by reference into a final agency determination. See Ashfar v. Dep't of State, 702 F.2d 1125 at 1140 (finding no protection when recommendation expressly adopted in post-decisional memorandum); see also Niemeier v. Watergate Special Prosecution Force, 565 F.2d 967, 973 (7th Cir. 1977) (ordering disclosure of an "underlying memorandum" that was "expressly relied [up]on in a final agency . . . document").

Accordingly, we hold that the comments and opinions withheld from the responsive material were properly withheld under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege.

C. Waiver

In its Appeal, EverNu suggests that even if the document is shielded by Exemption 5 of the FOIA, the DOE waived its right to withhold the responsive material because it previously disclosed the information to the public. Appeal at 3. EverNu's claim is based on the principle that if an agency has previously disclosed certain data, it may have waived its ability to later withhold the data under a FOIA exemption. Carson v. Dep't of Justice, 631 F.2d 1008, 1015 n.30 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Determining whether such a waiver has been made requires a careful analysis of "the circumstances of prior disclosure and . . . the particular exemptions claimed." Carson, 631 F.2d at 1015 n.30.

In support of its argument, EverNu provided OHA with an unsigned version of the document it is seeking. This document appears to be a final draft of the responsive memorandum. In providing this information, EverNu has established that the responsive information is duplicative of the information that exists in the public domain. Ashfar v. Dep't of State, 702 F.2d 1125, 1130 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (the burden is on the requester to establish that the requested information is duplicative of the disclosed information).

Courts have routinely held that an agency has waived is protection under a FOIA exemption where there has been an official disclosure or direct acknowledgment by authorized government officials. Thus, waiver of the privilege to withhold information under the FOIA depends upon prior official release of the information or disclosure under circumstances in which an authorized government official allowed the information to be made public. See Wolf v. CIA, 473 F. 3d 370, 379-380 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that an agency waived its ability to refuse to confirm or deny the existence of responsive records pertaining to an individual because a top agency official had discussed that individual during congressional testimony); see also Simmons v. Dep't of Justice, 796 F.2d 709, 712 (4th Cir. 1986) (unauthorized disclosure does not constitute waiver).

OGC has informed OHA that the responsive memorandum has never been officially disclosed to the public. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Jocelyn Richards, Attorney-Adviser, OGC, and Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (dated February 21, 2008).

Based on the foregoing, we find that the DOE has not authorized the release of the responsive material to the public and, therefore, no waiver of protection under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5 has occurred.

D. Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (August 15, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0060).

In the Appeal Letter, EverNu argues:

> [C]ourts routinely consider scientific deliberation to be objective interpretations of technical data[] [f]inding that disclosure of scientific deliberations is not equivalent to revealing an agency's deliberative processes regarding policy matters . . . and that purely factual reports and scientific studies cannot be cloaked in secrecy by an exemption designed to protect only "those internal working papers in which opinions are expressed and policies formulated and recommended."

(quoting Ethyl Corp. v. EPA, 478 F.2d 50, 48-50 (D.C. Cir. 1983)).

Exemption 5 covers scientific reports that constitute the interpretation of technical data, to the extent that the "opinion of an expert reflects the deliberative process of decision or policy making." See Parke, Davis & Co. v. Califano, 623 F.2d 1 at 6 (6th Cir. 1980) (protecting opinions and objective evaluations of scientists engaged in interpreting technical and scientific data where the opinion reflects the deliberative process of decision or policy making).

In the case at hand, the majority of the material withheld under Exemption 5 is non-factual in nature and is composed of the preliminary opinions of a DOE manager as to the validity of the allegations EverNu raised in its earlier request for assistance. Further, the scientific information contained in this document is presented by the DOE manager in support of his opinion. Notwithstanding the holding in Ethyl Corp., the factual information, including scientific analysis, contained in the responsive document is so intertwined with the DOE manager's opinion as to make any segregation virtually impossible. See Lead Industries Ass'n. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2d Cir. 1979); see also Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE ¶ 80,152 (March 2, 2001) (VFA-0650).

E. Public Interest Determination

The fact that the requested material falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the withheld material in the document at issue, which consists of comments and opinions provided to the OGC to assist in the process of formulating an agency response. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE employees to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE employees were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (March 18, 1987) (Case No. KFA-0080).

Based on the foregoing, we have determined that OGC properly withheld the document pursuant to the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, EverNu's claim of an untimely response to its FOIA request is hereby dismissed. In addition, we find that OGC properly withheld the responsive material pursuant to the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Finally, we find that the prior unauthorized disclosure of responsive information does not constitute a waiver of OGC's application of Exemption 5 in these circumstances. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by EverNu Technology on January 18, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0243, is hereby dismissed in part and denied in part.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Glen Bowers
Case Number:	TFA-0244

On January 22, 2008, Glen Bowers (Bowers) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him in response to a request for documents concerning his father, John Wyley Bowers, that Bowers submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The determination was issued on December 18, 2007, by the Savannah River Operations Office (SR). This Appeal, if granted, would require that SR perform an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

Bowers requested employment records for his deceased father, John Wyley Bowers. In his request, Bowers indicated that his father worked with the Department of Defense Union Contractors and the Atomic Energy Commission. Upon receiving Bowers' request, SR expanded its search efforts to include medical and radiation exposure records. SR conducted a search for responsive material, but was unable to locate any employment or radiation exposure records for Mr. John Wyley Bowers. However, SR was able to locate a medical record which it released to Bowers. See Determination Letter at 1.

Bowers contends that the search was inadequate. He argues that his father worked for DOE for many years during the 1950s and possibly the 1960s. Bowers provided the name and address of a contractor, Morrison Knudson, that worked at the Savannah River Plant and listed a website "that explains that there was a DOE request for investigation of former workers who were employed at the Savannah River Plant, and could have been exposed to harmful agents." See Appeal Letter at 1. In light of this additional information, Bowers asks OHA to direct SR to search again for responsive information related to his father. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. United States Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. United States Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

We contacted SR to ascertain the scope of the search. Bowers originally submitted his FOIA request to the DOE Headquarters FOIA Office (DOE-HQ). DOE-HQ then transferred his request to the relevant field office for action and a direct response to the requester. Bowers' request was sent to the Washington Savannah River Company (WSRC) for a response. According to SR, WSRC inherited some of the records of its predecessor Management and Operating (M&O) contractor. SR requested that WSRC expand its search efforts to include any medical and radiation exposure records related to Bowers' father. WSRC conducted a search in three of its departments: Personnel Department, Dosimetry Department and Medical Department. See SR Response Letter at 1. WSRC's Personnel Department maintains various databases for personnel records, including the Peoplesoft System. The Dosimetry Department maintains the personnel dosimetry folders, microfiche records, archived microfiche rolls, and visitor cards and visitor database on employees. Finally, the Medical Department maintains databases of all medical files and documents for the Savannah River Site, including a database for the Atomic Energy Commission. Id. WSRC conducted a search using several search aids including Bowers' father's name and social security number, and was unable to locate the requested employment records. However, WSRC was able to locate one medical record for the time period of June 14, 1952, and July 11 and 12, 1952. Id. This document was provided to Bowers. Based on the information above, we find that WSRC has conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover any records relating to Mr. John Wyley Bowers. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Glen Bowers on January 22, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0244, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Western Resource Advocates

Date of Filing: February 12, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0246

This Decision concerns Western Resource Advocates' (WRA) Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Western Area Power Administration (WAPA) issued to it on January 30, 2008. In that determination, WAPA denied WRA's fee waiver request in conjunction with a document request WRA submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. WAPA denied WRA's fee waiver request because it stated that WRA failed to meet its burden in showing that granting the fee waiver is in the public interest. In its Appeal, WRA asks us to grant it a fee waiver.

I. Background

The Eastern Plains Transmission Project (EPTP) is a construction project for hundreds of miles of power lines over several Great Plains states. The Tri-State Generation and Transmission Association (Tri-State), a WAPA contractor, is one of the EPTP's builders. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Patricia Land, Paralegal Specialist, WAPA, and David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), December 20, 2007. WRA filed a FOIA request for numerous records regarding the EPTP. In particular, WRA sought records regarding Tri-State's EPTP "Integrated Resource Plan," WAPA's annual reports to Congress, and correspondence and memoranda on numerous EPTP-related topics. WRA requested that WAPA waive all the fees associated with processing its FOIA request. Request Letter, dated June 29, 2007.

WAPA partially denied WRA's fee waiver request because WRA failed to satisfy Factor B of the public interest fee waiver factors (see factor definitions in the Analysis section, below) because "documents and other information [WRA is] requesting already exists in the public domain. . . ." WAPA estimated that processing WRA's request would cost approximately $80,955.66. Determination Letter, dated November 7, 2007 (italics removed). However, without explanation, WAPA offered to absorb 40% of the processing costs. Letter from WAPA to WRA, dated August 30, 2007.

WRA appealed to OHA, challenging WAPA's partial denial of its fee waiver request. Namely, WRA complained that the "determination . . . [did] not identify which records are in the public domain, nor where they can be found." Also, WRA "appeal[ed] WAPA's failure to provide a rationale that makes sense for its estimated $80,000 cost to provide the requested documents and information." Appeal Letter, dated November 28, 2007.

OHA found that WAPA improperly denied WRA's fee waiver request because it did not explain to WRA where in the public domain its requested documents reside. Western Resource Advocates, 30 DOE ¶ _____ (Jan. 11, 2008) (Case No. TFA-0233).[1] Therefore, we granted WRA's Appeal. We remanded the case to WAPA to issue a new determination letter. We required that on remand, WAPA must explain where in the public domain WRA's requested documents reside and if those documents have "met a threshold level of public dissemination," as required by Campbell v. Dep't of Justice, 164 F.3d 20, 36 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (citation omitted). We said that in the alternative, WAPA may base its new fee waiver determination on analysis considering the DOE's fee waiver factors that it left unaddressed in its initial determination – the commercial interest factors and public interest Factors A, C and D. We did not reach the fee estimation issue.

In response to the remand, WAPA issued a new determination. WAPA did not address the commercial interest fee waiver factors. WAPA conceded that WRA satisfied public interest fee waiver Factor A because the EPTP concerns the government's activities. WAPA stated that WRA did not satisfy public interest fee waiver Factor B because many of the documents it requested are posted on web sites that it listed in its determination and therefore meet a threshold level of public dissemination. Determination Letter, dated January 30, 2008.

WAPA stated WRA is not entitled to a fee waiver for the documents that it requested that are not publicly available because WRA did not satisfy public interest fee waiver Factors C and D. Regarding Factor C, WAPA stated that WRA's intention to "disseminate the requested information through its website, newsletter, public forums, and interaction with government and interested organizations is not significantly different than the efforts WAPA has already accomplished." WAPA also stated that, "[M]aking the information available to anyone who may access it does not demonstrate an increased understanding to the public." WAPA determined that the information WRA requested "is common knowledge among the landowners, residents and the general public affected by the construction of EPTP." Regarding Factor D, WAPA stated, "Information, such as[] routine correspondence, emails, [and] draft documents . . . does not significantly contribute to the public's understanding." Determination Letter, dated January 30, 2008.

WRA filed the present appeal with OHA. Appeal Letter, dated February 11, 2008. WRA narrowed the scope of its request to documents that are not publicly available. WRA also asks us to grant it a fee waiver. Id.

II. Analysis

"Intended to ensure an informed citizenry, vital to the functioning of a democratic society, needed to check against corruption and to hold the governors accountable to the governed . . . the [FOIA] requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request. . . ." Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Rossotti, 326 F.3d 1309, 1310 (D.C. Cir. 2003) (citation and quotations omitted).

The FOIA generally requires document requesters to pay for search and duplication costs. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i). However, each agency has promulgated regulations explaining when a requester is entitled[2] to receive documents at no charge or reduced charge. DOE regulations set forth "two basic requirements, both of which must be satisfied before fees will be waived or reduced." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8); see also 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii) (providing authorization for DOE's fee waiver regulations). First, a requester must show that "disclosure of the information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i) (internal quotations omitted). This is known as the "public interest" requirement. Second, a requester must show that "disclosure of the information is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii) (internal quotations omitted). This is known as the "commercial interest" requirement.

The public interest and commercial interest requirements each have non-exclusive factors to show when they are met. A FOIA officer should address the following factors to determine if a requester meets the public interest requirement:

(A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns the operations or activities of the government;

(B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of government operations or activities;

(C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure; and

(D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i)(A)-(D) (internal quotations omitted).

A FOIA officer should address the following factors to determine if a requester meets the commercial interest requirement:

[2] The regulations state, "When these requirements are satisfied . . . the waiver or reduction of a FOIA fee will be granted." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8) (emphasis added).

(A) The existence and magnitude of a commercial interest: Whether the requester has a commercial interest that would be furthered by the requested disclosure; and if so

(B) The primary interest in disclosure: Whether the magnitude of the identified commercial interest of the requester is sufficiently large, in comparison with the public interest in disclosure, that disclosure is primarily in the commercial interest of the requester.

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii)(A)-(B) (internal quotations omitted).

"[F]ee waiver requests must be made with 'reasonable specificity' . . . and [be] based on more than 'conclusory allegations.'" Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Rossotti, 326 F.3d 1309, 1312 (D.C. Cir. 2003) (citations omitted). "Congress amended FOIA to ensure that it be liberally construed in favor of waivers for noncommercial requesters." Id. (citation and quotations omitted). The requester has the burden of satisfying the fee waiver factors. Larson v. Central Intelligence Agency, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (citation omitted).

Here, we will address WRA's commercial interest in the documents it requested. Regarding the public interest in disclosure, WAPA conceded that WRA has met Factor A. Therefore, we will address public interest fee waiver Factors B, C and D.

Commercial Interest

The first commercial interest factor requires us to determine if, as a threshold matter, the requester has a commercial interest that disclosure of the requested documents would further. DOE's FOIA regulations do not define "commercial interest." However, the D.C. Circuit has "consistently held" that we should give the word "commercial" its "ordinary meaning." Pub. Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (applying an "ordinary meaning[]" of the word "commercial" in a FOIA Exemption 4 case); see also McClellan Ecological Seepage Situation v. Carlucci, 835 F.2d 1282, 1285 (9th Cir. 1987) (citing Pub. Citizen Health Research Group to apply an "ordinary meaning" of the word "commercial" in a FOIA fee waiver case).

Here, WRA has flatly stated that it "will not use the requested information to earn a profit." Letter from WRA to WAPA, dated Aug. 3, 2007. For this reason, WRA does not have a commercial interest in the requested documents, within the ordinary meaning of the word "commercial." Therefore, we find that WRA has carried its burden in showing that it has met the commercial interest requirement.

Public Interest Factor B

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. This factor focuses on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See, e.g., James Salsman, 29 DOE ¶ 80,223 (Sept. 7, 2005) (Case No. TFA-0114) (citation omitted) (stating, "If the information is already publicly available, release . . . would not contribute to public understanding [i.e., release would not have informative value] and a fee waiver may not be appropriate").

Here, WRA has narrowed the scope of its request to documents that are not publicly available. Release of those documents will necessarily contribute to the public understanding of the EPTP. Therefore, we find that WRA has satisfied Factor B.

Public Interest Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding of an individual requester or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (May 16, 1997) (Case No. VFA-0288); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (Oct. 17, 1991) (Case No. LFA-0152).

In this case, WRA contends that > it will share the requested information with its members and members of the public, through regular contact with the public, conservation organizations, and government decision-makers. WRA will also inform the public of the contents of responsive documents through publication of its newsletter and through updates on its website.

Letter from WRA to WAPA, dated Aug. 3, 2007. WAPA says that WRA's dissemination plan "is not significantly different than the efforts WAPA has already accomplished." "Further," WAPA says, "making the information available to anyone who may access it does not demonstrate an increased understanding to the public." WAPA concluded that "the information is available to the public and is common knowledge among the landowners, residents and the general public affected by construction of [the] EPTP." Determination Letter, dated Jan. 30, 2008.

We find that WRA has shown the intention and ability to disseminate the information it requested from WAPA. We have previously found that a requester satisfies Factor C when, as here, it publishes the requested information on its website and works to educate the public through a variety of forums, including public meetings and presentations. Citizen Action, 28 DOE ¶ 80,277 (April 1, 2003) (TFA-0016).

We do not agree with WAPA's contention that the information WRA now seeks is common knowledge in the surrounding community. Since WRA is asking for non-public information, we do not see how it can be common knowledge. Even if it were, whether any particular segment of the public already has the requested information is not part of the test for satisfying Factor C, which focuses on whether WRA has the ability and intent to disseminate the requested information to the public at large. Similarly, whether WRA's methods of dissemination overlap with the methods WAPA has used to disseminate the information is also not part of the test for satisfying Factor C. Accordingly, we find that WRA has satisfied Factor C.

Public Interest Factor D

In order to satisfy the requirements of Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must likely be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (May 16, 1997) (Case No. VFA-0288).

Here, WRA contends that > the public understanding of interactions between Western, Tri-State and various contractors, consultants and government agencies is not generally understood, and the disclosure of the requested information will help raise this level of understanding. . . . This information has not been disclosed to the public, nor has it been the subject of widespread public debate, personal notice, or public comment. The requested information will clarify previously released public information in that it will inform the public of deliberations and communications that underlie decisions of [WAPA] with respect to energy and resource development. . . . [T]he information is not already publicly available. Correspondence and communications between [WAPA], Tri-state and consultants, contractors and others associated with the EPTP are not maintained in an agency or library or reading room. The contribution to the public understanding from disclosure of the requested documents would thus be significant.

Letter from WRA to WAPA, dated Aug. 3, 2007.

In response, WAPA stated that, "Due to WAPA's and Tri-State's extensive efforts to communicate with the public, [WAPA has] determined that the release of the documents requested by WRA would not contribute to the public understanding. . . . WAPA has therefore found that WRA's request does not meet the requirement of Factor D." Determination Letter, dated Jan. 30, 2008. WAPA further stated that the publicly unavailable information that WRA requested, "such as[] routine correspondence, emails, draft documents, as requested by WRA does not significantly contribute to the public's understanding." Id.

We contacted WAPA to evaluate its Factor D reasons for denying WRA's fee waiver request. A WAPA employee stated that WAPA informally polled its employees and estimated that it has roughly 47,000 pages responsive to WRA's request. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Patricia Land, Paralegal Specialist, WAPA, and David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, February 28, 2008. WAPA's general impression from its employee poll is that the non-publicly available documents consist of administrative minutia. WAPA cannot yet justify its impression with specific information because it has not yet reviewed the documents. Id.

Because WAPA cannot yet justify its Factor D reasons for denying WRA's fee waiver request with specific information, we cannot yet evaluate whether WAPA's disclosure of WRA's requested documents will enhance the public understanding of the EPTP. In similar cases we have remanded to the issuing authority so that it can provide more information. For example, in James L. Schwab, the issuing authority denied a requester's fee waiver request because the responsive documents "do not contain anything 'meaningfully informative' that would contribute to public understanding of government operations or activities." James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,154 (Oct. 17, 1991) (Case No. LFA-0152). Yet, the issuing authority had "not yet concluded its search for responsive documents." We said that, "Without knowing what information would be released, [we cannot make] a meaningful determination of the public interest [in releasing the documents]." Therefore, the issuing authority's "determination to deny the request for a fee waiver was premature." Id.; see also Gov't Accountability Project, 23 DOE ¶ 80,139 (Aug. 27, 1993) (Case No. LFA-0312) (remanding a case where OHA could not evaluate the agency's fee waiver denial because the agency had not provided a reason for denying the requester's fee waiver request or determined what information would be released to the requester).

Following James L. Schwab, we will remand to WAPA so that WAPA can review the documents responsive to WRA's request. However, due to the large number of responsive documents in this case, we will not require WAPA to perform a complete document review, as we did in James L. Schwab. Instead, we will require WAPA to review documents responsive to WRA's request to the extent necessary to enable WAPA to issue a new determination justifying its Factor D decision with specific information. We will then be able to compare WRA's stated reasons for its fee waiver request, listed above, with WAPA's specific information, to determine if WRA carried its burden of satisfying fee waiver Factor D.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Western Resource Advocates filed on February 12, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0246, is denied in part and remanded to the Western Area Power Administration. The Western Area Power Administration may review the documents responsive to Western Resource Advocates' request to the extent necessary to issue a new determination justifying its public interest fee waiver Factor D decision with specific information. In the alternative, the Western Area Power Administration may grant the Western Resource Advocates' fee waiver request.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Research Focus, LLC
Date of Filing:	March 10, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0247

On March 10, 2008, Research Focus, LLC (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on February 26, 2008, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Western Area Power Administration (WAPA) in Lakewood, Colorado. In that determination, WAPA responded to a request for information that the Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. WAPA released the requested document to the Appellant with some information withheld under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. The Appellant has challenged the withholding of that information. This Appeal, if granted, would require WAPA to release the information it redacted from the document.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On February 12, 2008, the Appellant filed a request with WAPA for the "Power Purchase Agreement between SunEdison Corporation [SunEdison] . . . for solar electricity supplied to the National Renewable Energy Laboratory." Electronic Mail Message dated February 12, 2008, from Joseph Berwind, Appellant, to WAPA. On February 26, 2008, WAPA released the Power Purchase Agreement (PPA) with redactions. The redactions were made under Exemption 4. Determination Letter dated February 26, 2008, from Liova D. Juárez, General Counsel, WAPA, to Joseph Berwind, Appellant (February 26, 2008 Determination Letter). WAPA relied on Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) to withhold the redacted information. In relying on Critical Mass, WAPA claimed that the information had been voluntarily submitted by SunEdison because it had been part of a negotiation of the PPA. Id. at 1.

On March 10, 2008, the Appellant appealed, contending that the DOE releases similar information in similar contracts. Appeal Letter dated February 26, 2008, from Joseph Berwind, Appellant, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Also, the Appellant challenges the validity of WAPA's claim that the PPA was voluntarily submitted. Id. at 2. Finally, the Appellant states that SunEdison has previously released to private equity firms the information the Appellant is requesting without the protection of a non-disclosure agreement. Id.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 871. Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

As stated above, WAPA indicated in the determination letter that the requested information was submitted by SunEdison on a voluntary basis in connection with the negotiation of the PPA. February 26, 2008 Determination Letter at 1. WAPA relied on Critical Mass to withhold the redacted information under Exemption 4. In previous cases before this office, we have found that information that is submitted in negotiating with the DOE is "involuntarily" submitted. B.P. Exploration, Inc., 27 DOE ¶ 80,216 (1999); William E. Logan, Jr., 27 DOE ¶ 80,198 (1999). Because SunEdison was required to submit the agreement in negotiating the PPA with WAPA, we find that the PPA was "involuntarily" submitted. Thus, for the information to be withheld under Exemption 4, the National Parks test must be met. WAPA did not evaluate the information under National Parks, but rather it evaluated the information under Critical Mass. Therefore, we will remand the matter to WAPA for a new determination utilizing the National Parks test.

The Appellant also has argued that similar information has been made publicly available by the DOE. Appeal Letter dated February 26, 2008. Finally, the Appellant has argued that SunEdison itself has previously released the information. Id. WAPA should address each of these arguments on remand in its analysis of this request under National Parks.

III. Conclusion

WAPA used the Critical Mass test to evaluate whether to withhold the requested information under Exemption 4. Because the information was "involuntarily" submitted, WAPA should have used the test established in National Parks. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to WAPA for a new analysis and determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Research Focus, LLC, Case No. TFA-0247, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Western Area Power Administration of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in this Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Cathy L. Schaufelberger

Case Number: TFA-0248

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Cathy L. Schaufelberger filed in response to a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) issued to her on February 25, 2008. In that determination, the BPA denied a request for personnel records that Ms. Schaufelberger submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the BPA to release the documents that it withheld from Ms. Schaufelberger.

The FOIA generally requires the federal agencies to release documents to the public, upon request. However, Congress has provided nine FOIA exemptions that set forth types of information that agencies may withhold. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

I. Background

In her FOIA request, Ms. Schaufelberger requested

> [I]nformation on individuals in organizations with department codes that begin with PG and for individuals in the organization with the department code of PTK. Information [Ms. Schaufelberger] requested include[s] awards, bonuses, and other monetary payouts such as Retention Allowance, Recruitment/Relocation bonuses, Awards, Tuition Reimbursement, Student Loan Reimbursement, Other Bonuses, Sustained Superior Performance, Quality Step Increases, and Promotions based on Accretion of Duties.

Determination Letter, dated February 25, 2008. The BPA released some responsive information to Ms. Schaufelberger. Id.

However, the BPA withheld the names and ages of Quality Step Increase (QSI) and Performance Award recipients. Id. The BPA found that BPA employees have a "personal privacy interest . . . [in] information that reveals the details of [their] job performance." The BPA also found that disclosing who received those awards would "not significantly contribute to the public's understanding of BPA operations or activities, or shed light on the performance of BPA's statutory duties." Lastly, the BPA found that "the individual privacy interest in protecting the names" of those award recipients "outweighs any public interest in disclosure." Id.

Ms. Schaufelberger appealed the BPA's withholding of the names of QSI and Performance Award recipients to the DOE's Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). She did not appeal the withholding of the individuals' ages. Appeal Letter, dated March 1, 2008.

II. Analysis

FOIA Exemption 6 protects from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy[.]" 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. The Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

Ms. Schaufelberger presents several arguments in her Appeal. First, she questions how knowing who received a QSI or Performance Award is an invasion of personal privacy, but releasing salaries is not. Second, she notes that the BPA is celebrating the "Administrators Excellence Awards." She asks why identifying Administrators Excellence Award recipients is not an invasion of privacy, but releasing QSI or Performance Award recipients is. Third, she states that a federal judge published her name as part of a transcribed telephone conversation at the BPA. Again, she juxtaposes the release of her name with releasing QSI or Performance Award recipients, the latter of which she suggests is far less of an invasion of personal privacy. Lastly, Ms. Schaufelberger states that the BPA should release the names of the QSI and Performance Award recipients because "there is a great public interest on how awards are given and how fair the distribution of awards are." In this regard, she questions whether "the majority of awards go to one race, one sex, or one age bracket." Appeal Letter, dated March 1, 2008.

We must apply a three-step analysis to determine whether the BPA properly withheld the QSI and Performance Award recipients from Ms. Schaufelberger pursuant to Exemption 6. First, we must determine whether disclosing the information compromises a significant privacy interest. If we do not identify a privacy interest, the BPA may not withhold the records. Ripskis v. Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, we must determine whether releasing the information would further the public interest by shedding light on government operations and activities. See Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S.

749, 773 (1989). Third, we must balance the privacy interest against the public interest in order to determine whether releasing the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

Regarding the first step, we have found that government employees have a privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their performance awards because disclosure of performance awards "would allow direct comparison between employee awards and almost certainly incite jealousy in those employees receiving lower awards." John Kasprowicz, 28 DOE ¶ 80,161 (Apr. 12, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0660) (citing Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3). Therefore, the BPA employees have a privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of their Performance Awards and QSI's, which are a type of performance award.

Regarding the second step, we have previously disagreed with an office's determination that there is no public interest in the withheld names of performance award recipients. See John Kasprowicz ("[F]ederal employees are public servants, and . . . the public has a significant interest in knowing how its employees are paid.") (citation omitted).

However, regarding the third step, we have previously found that an employee's privacy interest in withholding the fact that he or she received a performance award overrides the public interest in disclosure. See Terry M. Apodaca, 29 DOE ¶ 80,304 (July 25, 2007) (Case No. TFA-0204); Robert J. Ylimaki, 28 DOE ¶ 80,154 (Mar. 23, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0651). In Terry M. Apodaca, we found that the embarrassment and jealousy caused by disclosing an award recipient's name and the amount of the award may have a "deleterious effect[] . . . on employee morale and workplace efficiency." Similarly, in Robert J. Ylimaki, we found that disclosing an award recipient's name and the amount of the award would give rise to the "substantial possibility" that the recipient would suffer harassment from other employees. Although Ms. Schaufelberger requested only the recipients' names,[*] we find that disclosing that information would still give rise to a "substantial possibility" that the recipients would suffer harassment from other employees. Therefore, we find that the BPA properly withheld the QSI and Performance Award recipients from Ms. Schaufelberger.

In her Appeal, Ms. Schaufelberger raises additional arguments comparing the release of salaries, Administrators Excellence Award recipients and her own name through a federal lawsuit with releasing the recipients of a QSI or Performance Award. There is no evidence that those documents were released under the FOIA, having been subjected to the application of the standards discussed above. Moreover, even if they were released under the FOIA, because they are not relevant to the determination at issue in this case, they have no bearing on this Decision. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a) (stating that a FOIA requester may "appeal the determination to [OHA]") (emphasis added). Exemption 6 analysis is fact-specific; in evaluating whether an office properly invoked Exemption 6, we must independently apply the federal and OHA case law to the facts of each case. Therefore, we applied the appropriate three-step Exemption 6 analysis of the relevant documents to reach our result.

[*] Ms. Schaufelberger states, "[T]here is a great public interest on how awards are given and how fair the distribution of awards are. Do the majority of awards go to one race, one sex, or one age bracket?" Appeal Letter, dated March 1, 2008. We agree that Ms. Schaufelberger raises legitimate issues of public interest, but note that she may address the public interest and avoid privacy issues by requesting the above information without the recipients' names.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Cathy L. Schaufelberger, OHA Case No. TFA-0248, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Faye Vlieger

Case Number: TFA-0250

On March 13, 2008, Faye Vlieger (Appellant) filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on February 4, 2008, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (Richland). In that determination, Richland responded to a request for documents that the Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Richland identified a number of documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Some of those documents were released in their entirety, but some information was withheld from one document pursuant to Exemption 6. Additionally, Richland identified possible responsive documents that were owned by various subcontractors and thus not subject to release under FOIA. With regard to the Appellant's request for other documents, Richland stated that, because of the cost of the search, it would require the Appellant to agree beforehand to pay for the cost of the search. Richland also denied the Appellant's request for a fee waiver with regard to her FOIA request. The Appellant has challenged the withholding of information under Exemption 6, the adequacy of the search that was conducted for responsive documents, and the denial of her request for a fee waiver. This appeal, if granted, would require Richland to release the withheld information in one document, conduct additional searches for documents, and grant the Appellant a fee waiver for all costs associated with her FOIA request.

I. Background

The Appellant requested information related to a 2002 industrial incident in the 272-AW building at the DOE's Richland facility, in which she and several employees may have been exposed to a chemical. The facility was operated for the DOE by CH2M Hill Hanford Group, Inc. (CHG). She first sought information from the Employee Concerns office of DOE's Office of River Protection (EC-ORP) on September 25, 2007. See Appendix A (list of 15 categories of documents requested from the Employee Concerns office). Among the documents the Appellant requested were copies of the Documentation References (Documentation References) listed on page 25 of the report for Employee Concern 2002-0044 which details the specific incident.[1] This request was not made pursuant to the FOIA.[2] EC-ORP subsequently provided a number of the Documentation References in their entirety. Additionally, a number of the Documentation References were not provided.

While this request was still being processed by EC-ORP, the Appellant received a December 7, 2007, E-mail from Dorothy Riehle (Riehle), FOIA Officer at Richland. The E-mail informed the Appellant that her initial request to EC-ORP had been forwarded to her office so that it could be processed pursuant to the FOIA. During the pendency of Richland's processing of her FOIA request, the Appellant requested that she be granted a fee waiver for costs associated with her request.

On February 4, 2008, Richland provided a determination letter regarding the Appellant's FOIA request. Richland's determination regarding the 15 categories of documents is summarized below:

Category No. and Description	Richland Determination
Category 1 – Documentation References listed on page 25 of the Employee Concern 2002-0044 report	EC-ORP previously provided Documentation Reference Nos. 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13-14, 16-21, 33, 34 and 36. Documentation Reference Nos. 3-5, 12, 22-32, 35, 37-40 are CHG-owned records and not subject to FOIA.
Category 2 - Technical review records and documents from Joe Elizaguirre	No responsive records found.
Category 3 – Investigation documents created by Marc Andersch, Rob Dunn, Carter Kirk, and Ron Legg	Investigation documents are CHG records and thus are not subject to FOIA. Several E-mail messages from named individuals were provided.
Category 4 - CHG records created by Gary Smith as part of the DOE directed investigation into chemical exposure on June 13, 2002	Investigation documents are CHG records and thus are not subject to FOIA. Search of DOE offices revealed no responsive documents.
Category 5 - Documents created from 7B100-02-PKA-025 Notification of Industrial Hygiene Monitoring Results Survey Number 02-2147, 11 7-02	One document was previously provided by EC-ORP. A search for responsive documents (because there is no electronic searchable database) would require 25-50 hours of search time at $35.91 per hour. Richland asks for an assurance of payment before undertaking search.

[1] The Documentation References consist of a number of reports and documents relating to the 2002 incident along with a number of witness statements. We note that the names of the witnesses were deleted on page 25 of the report.
[2] Even though the bottom of page 25 was marked "(b6,b7 & k2)," suggesting deletions under the FOIA, EC-ORP did not make any deletions to the copy of the document it provided to the Appellant. This document was not provided to the Appellant under the FOIA or the Privacy Act and we offer no opinion as to the propriety of this withholding. If the Appellant wishes to challenge this withholding, she should make a request for this document to Richland pursuant to the FOIA.

Category 6 - Reports and records from Sample Number W021001747, Rag "L" and blank bag samples	Search Time costs estimated to be one hour at $35.91 per hour. Richland asks for an assurance of payment before undertaking search.
Category 7 - Reports and records generated from the samples collected with the Organic Vapor Monitoring instrument used on June 13, 2002 in building 272 AW.	A copy of one document (Event Report) was provided to the Appellant under Privacy Act at no cost. Because there is no database or system which identifies documents created from the samples, Richland estimates that the search would require 25 to 50 hours at $35.91 per hour. Richland asks for an assurance of payment before undertaking search.
Category 8 - The complete files with all attachments and reports for PER 2002-3252, and PER 2002-4536[3]	PER 2002-3252 and PER 2002-4536 reports were provided to the Appellant by EC-ORP. No additional documents were found.
Category 9 - The OSHA logs and Computerized Accident and Injury Reporting System (CAIRS) reports from June 13, 2002 to the present for the incident.	OSHA logs were provided to the Appellant under Privacy Act at no cost. A two-page report was located and provided to the Appellant. Richland redacted the names of employees in the report pursuant to Exemption 6.
Category 10 - The DOE, HEHF (Hanford Environmental Health Foundation aka Advance Med), and CHG Case Management Records that have been created since the first reporting of the incident on June 13, 2002. (Also may be known as or will include Health Advocate files.)	All responsive documents in possession of Advance MedHanford, Inc. (aka Advance Med) were provided to the Appellant pursuant to Privacy Act. No other responsive documents were found.
Category 11 - DST (Double Shell Tank Farm) Operations Daily Release Sheet for the period June 12-14, 2002, for all and any work in and around building 272 AW and the adjacent tank farms	EC-ORP provided one document, the DST release Sheet for June 13, 2002. To search for other documents would require 8 to 16 hours of search at $35.91 per hour. Richland asks for an assurance of payment before undertaking search.
Category 12 - DOE, HEHF (Hanford Environmental Health Foundation aka Advance Med), and CHG files for Incident File Number 3362	Richland provided the Appellant with a copy of the entire OSHA file. However, other potentially responsive documents were found to be owned by CHG and thus were not subject to release under the FOIA.

[3] PER as an acronym for "Problem Evaluation Request." Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, Richard and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (March 31, 2008).

Category 13 - Air Modeling reports for the HVAC system for building 272 AW for the periods before and after the date of the incident, June 13, 2002.	Richland estimates that the search would require 10 to 20 hours at $35.91 per hour. Richland asks for an assurance of payment before undertaking search.
Category 14 - The HSS-ROV Log and HSS-ROV files, with distribution lists	Richland provided the Appellant with responsive documents pursuant to the Privacy Act at no cost.
Category 15 - The CHG Hill Causation Analysis Report (CAR) for the incident, AKA Root Cause Analysis	Richland provided the Appellant with responsive documents (under the response to Category 8) pursuant to the Privacy Act at no cost.

For the purpose of calculating fees to be charged with the processing of her FOIA Request, Richland determined that she fell in the "other requestor" category as defined in 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b). The Richland February 4 2008, determination letter also addressed the Appellant's request for a fee waiver under the FOIA. After considering the regulatory factors to be considered for a fee waiver (as listed in 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a)(8)), Richland denied the fee waiver request on the grounds that the subject matter of the requested information would not significantly add to the public understanding of the DOE's Richland facility and its operations. Additionally, Richland found that there was no evidence indicating that the Appellant would be able to disseminate the information to the public. See February 4, 2008, Determination Letter from Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, Richland, to Appellant, at 3.

In her appeal, the Appellant challenges Richland's determination on a number of grounds. She takes issue with Richland's classification of her for fee purposes as well as its denial of her request for a fee waiver. She also takes issue with Richland's determination that a number of potentially responsive documents are exempt from the FOIA because they belong to CHG. The Appellant also challenges the extent of the search that was conducted for responsive documents.[4]

II. Analysis

1. Fee Categorization and Waiver

A. Fee Categorization

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA delineates three types of costs – "search costs," "duplication costs," and "review costs" – and outlines four categories of requesters, "commercial use requesters," "educational and non-commercial scientific institution requesters," "requesters who are representatives of the news media," and "all other requesters." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b). The regulations specify the costs each category of requesters must pay. If a requester wants the information for a "commercial use," it must pay for all three types of costs incurred. In contrast, educational institutions and the news media are required to pay only duplication costs, and all other requesters are required to pay search and duplication costs, but not review costs. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(ii); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b).

[4] The Appellant also asserts that a number of the documents should be provided to her at no cost pursuant to two employee safety regulations, 29 C.F.R. § 1910 et seq. and 10 C.F.R. § 851 et seq. We have no jurisdiction under these regulations to mandate release of documents.

For purposes of the calculation of fees, Richland placed the Appellant in the category of "all other requesters." See Electronic Mail from Dorothy Riehle to Appellant (December 6, 2007). Given the nature of the information requested, information regarding an industrial incident she may have been involved with, it does not appear that the Appellant's purpose in requesting the information was commercial. Additionally, there is no evidence before us that indicates that the Appellant's request was made on behalf of a representative of the news media or on behalf of an educational and non-commercial scientific institution. Consequently, we find that Richland properly classified the Appellant in the "all other requester" category for purposes of calculating fees for processing her FOIA request.

B. Fee Waiver

The FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8). In analyzing the public-interest prong of the two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i). As noted above, in Section II.1.A, the information is not primarily in the commercial interest of the Appellant. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii).

i. Factor A

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-1483 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994). In the present case, it is undisputed that the requested information – concerning an industrial incident at a DOE facility in Hanford – concerns activities or operations of the government. Therefore, we find that the Appellant's request satisfies Factor A.

ii. Factor B

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Dep't of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). This factor focuses on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Roderick Ott, 26 DOE ¶ 80,187 (1997); Seehuus Associates, 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) ("If the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate."). In the present case, the vast majority of the requested information does not appear to be publicly available. Therefore, we find that the Appellant has satisfied Factor B.

iii. Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding of the individual requester or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. Dep't of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, 27 DOE ¶ 80,184 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992). In the present case, Richland determined that the Appellant did not establish her ability to disseminate the information.

After examining the E-mail communications between Richland and the Appellant during the processing of the Appellant's request, as well as the Appellant's appeal submission, we find that the Appellant has not submitted any evidence of her ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Consequently, we find that the Appellant has not satisfied Factor C.

iv. Factor D

Under Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, 26 DOE at 80,780 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act at 381 (1995)).

In the present case, it remains unclear to what extent the public's understanding is likely to be enhanced by the disclosure of the information. However, we need not reach the issue because the inability to disseminate the information to the public is, in itself, a sufficient basis for denying a fee waiver request. See Donald R. Patterson, 27 DOE ¶ 80,267 at 80,927 (2000) (citing Larson v. CIA, 843 F.2d 1481, 1483 (D.C. Cir. 1988)). Therefore, we find that Richland properly denied the Appellant a fee waiver.

2. Richland's Agency Record Determination

With regard to a number of categories of documents requested by the Appellant, Richland determined that potentially responsive documents were not agency records but instead were owned by CHG and thus were not subject to the FOIA.

The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents created by non-federal organizations, such as CHG, are subject to the FOIA. See, e.g., BMF Enterprises, 21 DOE ¶ 80,127 (1991); William Albert Hewgley, 19 DOE ¶ 80,120 (1989); Judith M. Gibbs, 16 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1987) (Gibbs). That analysis involves a determination (i) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (ii) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See Gibbs, 16 DOE at 80,595-96.

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). The courts have identified certain factors to consider in determining whether we should regard an entity as an agency for purposes of federal law. In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976) (Orleans), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which a private organization must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the . . . agency receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Orleans 425 U.S. at 815. In other words, an organization will be considered a federal agency only where its structure and daily operations are subject to substantial federal control. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham). See also Washington Research Project, Inc. v. HEW, 504 F.2d 238, 248 (D.C. Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 963 (1975) (degree of independent governmental decision-making authority considered); Rocap v. Indiek, 539 F.2d 174 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

CHG is a privately owned and operated company. While the DOE exercises general control over the contract work performed by CHG, it does not supervise the company's day-to-day operations. See Contract No. DE-AC27-99RL14047, clause C.2. We therefore conclude that CHG is not an "agency" subject to the FOIA. Radian International, 26 DOE ¶ 80,126 (1996).

Although CHG is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, the requested documents could be considered "agency records" if the DOE obtained them and they were within the DOE's control at the time the Appellant made her FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-46 (1989) (Tax Analysts); see Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980); Forsham, 445 U.S. at 182. In this case, we have determined that none of the documents the Appellant sought were in the agency's possession or control at the time of her request. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, Richland, and Richard Cronin, Assistant Director, OHA (April 2, 2008). Based on these facts, these documents clearly do not qualify as "agency records" under the test set forth by the federal courts. See Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. at 145-46; see also Forsham, 445 U.S. at 185-86.

Even if contractor-acquired or contractor-generated records fail to qualify as "agency records," they may still be subject to release if the contract between DOE and that contractor provides that the document in question is the property of the agency. The DOE regulations provide that "[w]hen a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, the DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)." 10 C.F.R. 1004.3(e)(1). We therefore next look to the contract between DOE and CHG to determine the status of the requested records. That contract generally provides that records acquired or generated by CHG in its performance of the contract are deemed property of the government. Contract No. DE-AC27-99RL14047, clause I.109(a). However, the contract also defines documents which are deemed to be contractor-owned:

> (1) Employment-related records (such as worker's compensation files; employee relations records, records on salary and employee benefits; drug testing records, labor negotiation records; records on ethics, employee concerns; records generated during the course of responding to allegations of research misconduct; records generated during other employee related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality; employee assistance program records; and personnel and medical/health-related records and similar files), and non-employee patient medical/health-related records, except for those records described by the contract as being maintained in Privacy Act systems of records.
> (4) Legal records, including legal opinions, litigation files, and documents covered by the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges;

Contract No. DE-AC27-99RL14047, clause I.109(b).

The potentially responsive records at issue in this appeal concern an incident which involved a potential exposure of a chemical to several employees including the Appellant. Richland identified potentially responsive documents that were owned by CHG with regard to request categories 1, 3, 4 and 12. The identified documents in category 1, which Richland found to be CHG-owned, consist of reports by the CHG Employee Concerns concerning the incident and witness statements about the incident. As such they are records relating to an employee concern that was raised about the incident. Many of these potentially responsive documents are located in the CHG's employee concerns files or files at CHG's Office of the Chief Counsel that were collected in anticipation of potential litigation concerning the Appellant's claim for worker's compensation (arising from injuries from the incident). As such, these records are CHG-owned and not subject to the FOIA. With regard to the documents requested in Category 3 and 4, any responsive documents would consist of investigatory reports from various CHG Employee Concerns in regard to the incident. Since these would be records related to an employee concern, they, too, would be CHG property and exempt from disclosure under the FOIA. With regard to Category 12, the requested files also relate to an employee concern investigation regarding the incident and, as such, would be CHG property and not subject to the FOIA.

3. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 11384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

The Appellant challenged the adequacy of the search conducted for documents in a number of categories. A summary of the searches that were conducted for each category of documents in which the adequacy of the search can be challenged is presented below. [5]

This category comprises documents related to technical review records and documents originating from Joe Elizaguirre (Elizaguirre). In its search for documents, Richland discovered that Elizaguirre no longer worked for the Department of Energy. However, Richland conducted a search of the office where he used to work (Richland Operation Office's Office of Safety, Health and Quality) for responsive documents. Richland also had searches performed at Richland's Special Concerns Office, then CHG's Safety and Health Office. Richland searched all of the offices it thought most likely to possess responsive documents and found none.

B. Category 3

Richland provided the Appellant all documents responsive to Category 3 that were in the possession of DOE. Richland discovered that of the four named employees in Category 3, Marc Andersch, Carter Kirk, and Ron Legg were no longer employed at CHG. The office of the remaining employee was searched including an electronic search of his Electronic mail. Richland informed us that any documents these employees might have generated would have been filed in the Appellant's CHG employment, employee concerns or worker's compensation files and, as such, would be property of CHG and not DOE.

[5] As referenced above, Richland did not conduct a search in all requested categories since it did not receive assurance from the Appellant that she was willing to pay the costs associated with a search for documents in those categories.

C. Category 4

Richland searched the Richland Special Concerns office where Gary Smith (Smith) was employed. Richland informed us that any document that Smith might have created would have been filed in the CHG Employee Concerns file and would thus be a CHG-owned document. In addition, Richland also searched the CHG's Office of Chief Counsel for documents but none were found.

D. Category 8

Richland provided the Appellant the files for PER 2002-3252 and PER 2002-4536. Additionally, Richland searched the CHG legal office and the CHG quality assurance office but no additional documents were found.

E. Category 9

Richland informed us that OSHA logs are maintained and filed in an employee's OSHA file by the CHG Safety and Health Office. The entire OSHA file was provided to the Appellant. Richland also sought responsive documents from the Computerized Accident and Injury Reporting System (CAIRS), operated by the DOE's Environmental Safety and Quality office. The administrator of the CAIRS system found one responsive document, a CAIRS database report (CAIRS Report) and the report was provided to the Appellant after redactions were made by Richland pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA.

F. Category 10

Richland conducted a search of the DOE's Environmental Safety and Quality Office, the Richland Special Concerns Office, CHG's Safety and Health Office, and CHG's Legal Office, but no responsive documents were found. Richland then conducted a search of Advanced Med's Medical Records Office and Safety Office and all responsive documents were provided to the Appellant.

G. Category 12

Richland discovered that many of the potentially responsive documents for this category would be located in the Appellant's workers compensation, employee concerns or legal files pertaining to a claim for worker's compensation filed by the Appellant. Consequently, Richland concluded these files are CHG-owned and not subject to the FOIA. Other potentially responsive documents were located in the Appellant's OSHA file maintained by CHG and medical files at Advance Med. These documents were provided to the Appellant.

H. Category 14

Richland believed that the most likely locations for responsive documents were the OSHA file maintained by CHG and the files of Advance Med. Both locations were searched and all responsive documents were provided.

I. Category 15

Richland conducted a search of the offices most likely to possess responsive documents – the CHG legal office, the CHG Quality Assurance office and the CHG Safety and Health office. Other than the documents provided in response to Category 8, no responsive documents were found.

In reviewing the search that was made for document in each of the categories above, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search for responsive documents. In each case, Richland conducted a search of the offices where responsive documents were most likely to be found concerning records related to the incident or the Appellant. As discussed above, to the extent that a number of these potentially responsive documents are located in CHG's employee concerns files or CHG's legal files collected in anticipation of potential litigation concerning a claim for worker's compensation filed by the Appellant, such files are owned by CHG and are not subject to the FOIA. In sum, we believe that Richland conducted searches reasonably calculated to discover responsive documents and thus performed adequate searches pursuant to the FOIA.

One of the documents provided to the Appellant, the CAIRS Report, had information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. The Appellant challenges the propriety of this deletion.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R.§ 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

We have reviewed an unredacted copy of the CAIRS Report. The Report is a database chart listing of accidents. One column of the Report, titled "Name/Description," was withheld in its entirety, except for the entry for the Appellant. This column consists of names of employees who have suffered injury or illness at the Richland facility. Applying the Exemption 6 analysis described above, we find that the employees have a significant privacy interest in not being associated with injuries or illness resulting from on-the-job accidents. The release of such information could be potentially embarrassing to the employees involved.

Having found a significant privacy interest in the redacted material, we now must determine if release of the employee names would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. The release of the actual names of the employees who have suffered on-the-job accidents and have had injuries or illness result tells us little or nothing in itself about the activities at the DOE facility at Richland. Given the significant privacy interest in the names of the withheld employees with the, at best, de minimus public interest in release of the names of the employees, we find that Exemption 6 was properly applied to withhold the names of the employees in the CAIRS Report.

III. Summary

We find that Richland properly classified the Appellant for the purposes of assessing fees for the processing of her FOIA request and that Richland properly determined that she was not eligible for a waiver of fees. We also find that Richland's search for responsive documents was adequate and that Richland properly declined to apply the FOIA to records owned by CHG. Lastly we find that Richland properly applied Exemption 6 to the CAIRS Report. Consequently, the Appellant's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on March 13, 2008, by Faye Vlieger, OHA Case No. TFA-0250, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Dorothy K. Hyde

Case Number: TFA-0252

This Decision concerns Dorothy K. Hyde's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) issued to her on March 12, 2008. In that determination, the ORO responded to Ms. Hyde's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ORO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

Ms. Hyde's attorney filed a FOIA request with the ORO on her behalf for "all personnel, medical[,] industrial hygiene, radiation exposure and similar records on Delmer Dayton Hutchison [Ms. Hyde's father], deceased, SS number . . ., DOB . . ., employed by JA Jones and Stone & Webster[,] 1943-1953[,] K25 and Y12." Electronic FOIA Request, Dec. 12, 2007. Ms. Hyde's attorney faxed the ORO an autopsy protocol "on Delmer Hutchison, dated 1-19-71." Facsimile from Roy P. Neuenschwander, attorney for Ms. Hyde, to Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, ORO, Dec. 12, 2007.

The ORO provided Ms. Hyde a copy of Mr. Hutchison's employment card. Determination Letter, Mar. 17, 2008.

Ms. Hyde then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Appeal Letter. In the appeal letter, Ms. Hyde's attorney recounted the correspondence between Ms. Hyde and the ORO. Next, Ms. Hyde's attorney stated that Mr. Hutchison's autopsy protocol "lists Delmer's name as being spelled as Hutcherson and Hutchenson." However, Ms. Hyde's attorney stated that, "Mr. Hutchison's death certificate is enclosed and his name is spelled correctly." Ms. Hyde's attorney then stated, "I would hope that all records be checked in regard to this matter, to include all three spellings of Delmer's name." Lastly, Ms. Hyde's attorney requested "a prompt Hearing . . . before an Administrative Law Judge." Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (Aug. 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760) (remanding for a renewed search where DOE's initial search missed responsive documents that were later found);[1] Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (Dec. 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).

We contacted the ORO to request additional information so that we could evaluate its search. From our inquiry we learned that since Ms. Hyde's request indicated that Mr. Hutchison worked at the K-25 facility for JA Jones and Stone & Webster, the ORO sent an information request to the Bechtel Jacobs Company and the DOE's Records Holding Area.[2] The Bechtel Jacobs Company is the DOE's prime or operating contractor at the former K-25 facility (now named the East Tennessee Technology Park). If the DOE has records from JA Jones and Stone & Webster, they would be at the Records Holding Area. E-mails from Linda G. Chapman, Legal Assistant, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, April 9, 11, 24 and 25, 2008.

The Bechtel Jacobs Company and the DOE Records Holding Area each searched its medical, personnel, radiation exposure, and industrial hygiene records for Mr. Hutchison's name, birth date, and social security number. The Bechtel Jacobs Company found no responsive files. The DOE Records Holding Area found Mr. Hutchison's employment card, and the ORO provided a copy to Ms. Hyde with its determination letter. Id.

The ORO stated that the files most likely to have information responsive to Ms. Hyde's request were searched. We agree. For this reason, we find that the ORO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Ms. Hyde's Appeal, except as discussed below.[3]

[2] Since the request that Ms. Hyde's attorney submitted also indicated that Mr. Hutchison worked at the Y-12 facility, the ORO forwarded Ms. Hyde's request to the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), which now maintains records from the Y-12 facility. The NNSA will issue Ms. Hyde a separate determination.

[3] In the appeal letter, Ms. Hyde's attorney requests a hearing before an administrative law judge. Because the DOE's FOIA regulations do not contain a provision for a hearing before an administrative law judge, we deny Ms. Hyde's request.

In the appeal letter, Ms. Hyde's attorney stated that the autopsy protocol shows Mr. Hutchison's name spelled as Hutcherson and Hutchenson. Appeal Letter. Although Ms. Hyde's attorney faxed the autopsy protocol to the ORO on the same day that he submitted Ms. Hyde's FOIA request, he did not specifically point out that the autopsy protocol apparently shows two alternate spellings of Mr. Hutchison's name until he filed Ms. Hyde's Appeal. Moreover, because the autopsy protocol's blurry text is extremely difficult to read, it is understandable that the ORO failed to realize that it contains alternate spellings. Therefore, we find that the ORO's failure to identify the two alternate spellings does not affect the adequacy of its search.

However, the ORO stated that, as a courtesy to Ms. Hyde, it is willing to conduct searches for information under the names Delmer Hutcherson and Delmer Hutchenson. E-mail from Amy L. Rothrock, FOIA Officer, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Apr. 23, 2008. Therefore, we will remand this case to the ORO so it may conduct those searches and issue Ms. Hyde a new determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Dorothy K. Hyde filed on April 7, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0252, is granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Oak Ridge Office to search for files under the names Delmer Hutcherson and Delmer Hutchenson.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: William A. Hewgley

Case Number: TFA-0253

On April 18, 2008, William A. Hewgley filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Inspector General (OIG). In that determination, OIG responded to a request for information that Mr. Hewgley filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIG to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On January 30, 2008, Mr. Hewgley submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), for "all records exchanged between the DOE Headquarters Inspector General's Office and the FBI on or relating to the requester covering the period January 1, 1978 and the date of this request." See Letter from William A. Hewgley to FOIA Officer, U.S. Department of Energy (January 30, 2008) (Request Letter). DOE/FOIA forwarded the request to OIG because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

OIG conducted a search of its records which revealed that records responsive to Mr. Hewgley's request were destroyed in accordance with the DOE Records Inventory and Disposition Schedule pursuant to Disposition Authority N1-434-00-1.[1] See Letter from John Hartman, Assistant Inspector General for Investigations, OIG, to William A. Hewgley (March 26, 2008) (Determination Letter). On April 18, 2008, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Mr. Hewgley's Appeal, which challenged the adequacy of the search as it relates to the destruction of responsive documents. See Letter from William A. Hewgley to OHA (Appeal Letter). In his Appeal, Mr. Hewgley requests a copy of the applicable portion of Disposition Authority N1-434-00-1, in addition to a list of records destroyed, including the author of each record, the recipient, and the date of the record itself. Id. at 1.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[2]

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted OIG to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See Email from Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to Adrienne Martin, Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts Officer, OIG (April 22, 2008). OIG informed us that it conducted an electronic search of the OIG database using Mr. Hewgley's name which located two investigative case files[3] responsive to his request.[4] See Email from Ruby Len, Attorney-Adviser, OIG, to Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (April 25, 2008).

According to the DOE's Records Inventory and Disposition Schedule, OIG files containing information or allegations that do not result in a formal investigation must be destroyed after ten years. Given that Mr. Hewgley's responsive case files were over 20 years old at the time of the FOIA request, they had been destroyed pursuant to Disposition Authority N1-434-00-1. As for the documentation relating to the list of records destroyed, including the author of the record, the recipient, and the date of the record itself, OIG advised that no such documentation exists. Id.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that OIG performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to Mr. Hewgley's request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, Mr. Hewgley's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mr. William A. Hewgley on April 18, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0253, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be

[3] OIG advises that the two case files containing Mr. Hewgley's name were created in August 1987 and did not result in formal investigations.

[4] The Offices of Audit Services, Investigations, and Inspections and Special Inquiries also conducted a search for responsive documents and located no documents responsive to Mr. Hewgley's request.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Kimberly J. Excel

Case Number: TFA-0254

This Decision concerns Kimberly J. Excel's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (ROO) issued to her on February 7, 2008. In that determination, the ROO responded to Ms. Excel's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ROO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

Ms. Excel filed a FOIA request with the ROO for the following records regarding her deceased father, E.C. Warren:

(i) "Employment records; including but not limited to job descriptions, transfers, job assignments, training, housing, awards, reprimands, pay records, union records."

(ii) "Exposure records; including but not limited to all films, x-rays, log books, hand written notes, yearly summaries, weekly summaries, lost badge information, incidents during employment period, chemical handling, supervisor's log books, hand written notes, electronic records."

(iii) "Medical records; including but not limited to employment physicals, on the job injury records, first aid records, hospital records."

(iv) "Training records; including but not limited to qualifications for hazardous material handling, safety, radiation training, driver training."

E-mail from Rosemary Hoyt, Personal Assistant to Ms. Excel, to Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) filings, Mar. 5, 2008; E-mail from Rosemary Hoyt, Personal Assistant to Ms. Excel, to William Schwartz, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Apr. 21, 2008.

In the ROO's determination letter, it explained that AdvanceMed Hanford, which maintains Mr. Warren's medical record for the DOE, will forward his medical record directly to Ms. Excel. The ROO enclosed Mr. Warren's radiation exposure record. The ROO was unable to locate Mr. Warren's employment or training records. Determination Letter, Feb. 7, 2008.

Ms. Excel then filed the present Appeal with OHA. Facsimile from Rosemary Hoyt, Personal Assistant to Ms. Excel, to David M. Petrush, Attorney, OHA, received Apr. 30, 2008 (containing the determination letter that the ROO issued to Ms. Excel). Ms. Excel stated that she "received a few transfer documents but nothing else." E-mail from Rosemary Hoyt, Personal Assistant to Ms. Excel, to William Schwartz, Attorney, OHA, Apr. 21, 2008. Regarding the exposure records, Ms. Excel stated that she did not receive "nearly all records." Regarding the medical records, Ms. Excel stated that she "received employment physicals and first aid records, nothing else." Lastly, Ms. Excel stated that she received no training records. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (Aug. 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760) (remanding for a renewed search where DOE's initial search missed responsive documents that were later found);[*] Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (Dec. 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).

We contacted the ROO to request additional information so that we could evaluate its search. We learned that the ROO contacted AdvanceMed Hanford for medical records, Pacific Northwest National Laboratory for radiation exposure records, and the Records Holding Area and Fluor Hanford, Inc. for archived employment and training records. The searches were performed by contractor personnel who maintain the records and who are most familiar with the subjects of Ms. Excel's request. They searched electronic, paper files and microfiche by name and social security number. E-mail from Dorothy C. Riehle, Freedom of Information Specialist, ROO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, May 6, 2008.

The ROO stated that the files most likely to have information responsive to Ms. Excel's request were searched. We agree. For this reason, we find that the ROO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Ms. Excel's Appeal.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Barbara Moran

Case Number: TFA-0255

On April 29, 2008, Barbara Moran (Moran) filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to her. The determination responded to a request for information Moran filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the NNSA to release the responsive information it withheld from Moran.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On July 27, 2007, Moran filed a FOIA request with the NNSA seeking documents relating to the 1966 collision of a B-52 bomber and a KC-135 tanker over Palomares, Spain (also known as the 1966 Broken Arrow). See Determination Letter at 1. In a determination letter, the NNSA stated it contacted the Sandia Site Office, which has oversight for the Sandia National Laboratories (SNL). SNL conducted a search of its records and stated that it identified eight documents responsive to Moran's FOIA request. However, the NNSA withheld portions of three of the documents pursuant Exemptions 2 and 6 of the FOIA. Id.

On April 28, 2008, Moran filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Moran challenges the withholding of information under Exemptions 2 and 6 of the FOIA. See Appeal Letter. Moran asks that the OHA direct the NNSA to release the withheld information.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 2

In its determination letter, NNSA withheld specific assessment information on contamination under Exemption 2. The courts have interpreted Exemption 2 to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). The information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-prong test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978 (en banc).

As an initial matter, it is important to note that the documents at issue are agency records. Although they are located at SNL, they are agency records for purposes of the FOIA because the records were "obtained" by the DOE and were under DOE's control at the time of Moran's request.

We have reviewed the responsive information withheld under the "high two" exemption and find that the information deleted from the document relates to specific assessment information on contamination, including "assumptions, track records, transportation and lessons learned". This information is predominantly internal in nature because it is not intended for dissemination outside the DOE and "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public." See Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979). The NNSA has stated that release of this information "could benefit adversaries by helping them identify possible vulnerabilities, as well as provide them the opportunity to target facilities." In addition, the NNSA has contended that disclosure of this information significantly risks circumvention of statutes and agency regulations created to secure DOE's facilities. We agree. DOE has a legislated duty to protect its facilities and assets. Accordingly, we find that this information in the responsive document can be properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

The DOE regulations, at 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1, provide that "the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under [a FOIA exemption] whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." Therefore, although we have determined that the deleted information is protected under Exemption 2, we must address whether disclosure of this information is in the public interest. We find that it is not.

As discussed above, the information deleted from the responsive document relates to assessment information on contamination. The disclosure of this information would reveal agency determinations on practices taken to protect the safety of DOE and its facilities. Clearly, disclosing such information is not in the public interest as this information could render DOE personnel and facilities vulnerable.

B. Exemption 6

In its determination letter, NNSA withheld the names of contractor employees from a responsive document under Exemption 6. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

The NNSA determined that there was a privacy interest in the identities of contractor employees. We have consistently determined "that there is a real and substantial threat to employees' privacy if personal identifying information . . . were released." Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 15 DOE ¶ 80,115 at 80,537 (1987). See also Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 16 DOE ¶ 80,102 at 80,504 (1987); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80,120 at 80,569 (1985); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,519 (1985). The same type of privacy interest is involved in this case. In fact, because the contractor employees whose names are sought are non-federal employees, but work for a private entity under contract with the government, there is a significant privacy interest in maintaining their confidentiality. If this information were disclosed to the requester, the disclosure could "cause inevitable harassment and unwarranted solicitation." See Determination Letter at 2. We have previously found the potential for harassment of individuals to be sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 6. See, e.g., William Hyde, 18 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988). These considerations govern our determination. We therefore find a real and substantial privacy interest in the names of the contractor employees.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on the operations and activities of the government." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996). According to the NNSA, "release of this information would not shed light on the operations of the federal government, as the Sandia Corporation is not a government agency, but a private [entity] under contract which provides a variety of important, and sometimes vital, goods and services to the federal government." Determination Letter at 2. The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). We fail to see how release of the identities of the contractor employees in the present case would inform the public about the operations and activities of Government. Accordingly, we find that there is little or no public interest in disclosure of the contractor employees' names.

3. Balancing the Interests

As stated earlier, there is a significant privacy interest in this information. In determining whether the disclosure of the identifying information could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989). We agree with NNSA and find that the minimal public interest here is far outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the contractor employees.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barbara Moran on April 29, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0255, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Mitchell L. Rychtanek

Date of Filing: May 14, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0256

This Decision concerns Mitchell L. Rychtanek's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) issued to him on April 22, 2008. In that determination, the ORO responded to Mr. Rychtanek's request under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ORO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

Mr. Rychtanek filed a PA request with the Chicago Office for "records in the possession of Argonne National Laboratory (ANL) that may reflect [his] work for subcontractor, N.H. McLennon at ANL between 1965 – 1975." Letter from Miriam R. Legan, Privacy Act Officer, Chicago Office, to Mitchell L. Rychtanek, Apr. 7, 2008. The ORO responded to Mr. Rychtanek's request and sent him copies of his beryllium records and work history report. The ORO did not locate his personnel records. Determination Letter, Apr. 22, 2008.

Mr. Rychtanek then filed the present Appeal with OHA, to "access records of my employment. . . ." Letter from Mitchell L. Rychtanek to OHA, received May 14, 2008. OHA accepted Mr. Rychtanek's Appeal as challenging the adequacy of the ORO's search.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA),[1] courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

[1] Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act requires only that the agency search systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (Aug. 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760) (remanding for a renewed search where DOE's initial search missed responsive documents that were later found);[2] Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (Dec. 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).

We contacted the Chicago Office and the ORO to request additional information so that we could evaluate their search. The Chicago Office forwarded Mr. Rychtanek's request to the ANL. The ANL searched its gate passes, human resources, medical, industrial hygiene, and radiological dose records and found no records regarding Mr. Rychtanek.[3] E-mail from Kimberly A. Johnson, Manager, Laboratory Records and Publications, ANL, to Miriam R. Legan, Privacy Act Officer, Chicago Office, Apr. 2, 2008.

The Chicago Office then forwarded Mr. Rychtanek's request to the ORO because an ORO contractor, the Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU), maintains beryllium testing and work history records[4] for the DOE. The ORAU searched its electronic and paper files by name, social security number, date of birth, and badge number. E-mails from Leah Ann Schmidlin, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, May 21 and 28, 2008. The ORAU located Mr. Rychtanek's beryllium testing and work history records. The ORO disclosed those records to Mr. Rychtanek with its determination letter.

The ORO stated that the files most likely to have information responsive to Mr. Rychtanek's request were searched. E-mail from Leah Ann Schmidlin, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, May 21, 2008. We agree. For this reason, we find that the ORO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Mr. Rychtanek's Appeal.

[3] The ANL does not maintain personnel or other employee records from N.H. McLennon or any other sub-contractor. E-mail from Leah Ann Schmidlin, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, May 28, 2008.

[4] A work history report is a brief listing of data on an employee that includes the employment site, department, dates of employment, job title, badge number, date of birth, and social security number. A personnel file, by contrast, contains the employee's application, resume, change in employee status, memoranda regarding duty station transfers, performance appraisals, etc. E-mail from Leah Ann Schmidlin, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, May 28, 2008.

(1) The Appeal that Mitchell L. Rychtanek filed on May 14, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0256, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	State of New York
Date of Filing:	May 22, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0257

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by the State of New York from three partial determinations that were issued to it by the Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In these determinations, OE denied in part a request for documents that New York submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its Appeal, New York seeks the release of the requested documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1) - (9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1) - (9).

I. Background

In its December 17, 2007, FOIA request, New York sought access to a copy of a study entitled "Grounded in Reality: Eastern Connection," prepared by Cambridge Energy Research Associates (CERA) in 2004, and to copies of any documents, e-mails or other correspondence between CRA International (CRA) and the DOE, CRA and any transmission developers or stakeholders, and the DOE and the stakeholders involving the DOE's August 8, 2006, Congestion Study and the DOE's October 2007 National Interest Electric Transmission Corridor (NIETC) designation order. Pursuant to Section 216(a) of the Federal Power Act, the DOE was required to issue the congestion study in August 2006 and every three years thereafter. The Congestion Study concerns the percentage of maximum capacity at which existing electricity transmission lines are being utilized. [1] The DOE contracted this task out to Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory (LBNL) which, in turn, retained

1/ The DOE used this information in designating an NIETC in the northeastern United States in October 2007. This designation allows entities that wish to build electricity transmission facilities in these corridors, but have been denied permission to do so by state or local governments, to apply to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for permission.

the services of CRA to produce the Congestion Study. See memorandum of May 30, 2008, telephone conversation between Theresa Brown Shute, OE, and Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney.

In its February 12, 2008, partial determination, OE informed New York that it had searched its files for the CERA study without success, and therefore had no documents responsive to this portion of New York's request. OE further stated that it was continuing to search for responsive documents concerning communications between CRA and the DOE, CRA and transmission developers or stakeholders, and the DOE and the stakeholders involving the Congestion Study. The letter also informed New York that responsive documents could be accessed through the DOE's NIETC website.

As part of its April 18, 2008, partial determination, OE released 33 documents in their entirety and a 34th document in redacted form. This document (hereinafter referred to as "Document 34") consists of hard copies of four pages of a presentation that CRA made to the DOE on July 20, 2006. OE informed New York that the presentation itself could be accessed through the NIETC website, and that the hard copy included handwritten notes, which were withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). OE also informed New York that it had identified over 12,000 communications between the entities named in the request that "may be responsive" to the request, and that they were currently undergoing agency review. April 18, 2008, determination at 2.

In its May 6, 2008, partial determination, OE stated that it could not "respond to [New York's] request for documentation 'between CRA [] and any transmission developers or stakeholders,'" because generally, under the FOIA, agencies can only provide records that were "created by request of the agency or that the agency is in possession of." May 6, 2008, determination at 1. OE added that it would provide any such communications that it has "in [its] possession due to being a recipient or a sender." May 6, 2008, determination at 1.

In its submission, New York appeals these three determinations, and it also seeks to appeal the positions expressed in an April 28, 2008, e-mail from Theresa Brown Shute, OE, to Maureen Leary, Assistant Attorney General, State of New York. Specifically, New York challenges OE's failure to produce the CERA study and communications between "industry stakeholders" and CRA, OE's redaction of the handwritten notes from Document 34, and its failure to process portions of New York's request in a timely fashion.

II. Analysis

A. OHA's FOIA Jurisdiction

Section 1004.8(a) of the DOE's FOIA regulations defines the OHA's jurisdiction in this area. That section provides that the OHA may consider appeals "when the Authorizing Official has denied a request in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request . . ., or when the Freedom of Information Officer has denied a request for waiver of fees . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Applying these guidelines to the case at hand, the OHA lacks jurisdiction to consider an "appeal" of Ms. Brown Shute's April 28 e-mail, or to consider New York's arguments concerning the timeliness of OE's response.

Section 1004.2 of the FOIA regulations defines "Authorizing or Denying Official" as being "that DOE officer . . . , having custody of or responsibility for records requested under 5 U.S.C. 552. In DOE Headquarters, the term refers to . . . officials who report directly to either the Office of the Secretary or a Secretarial Officer . . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.2(b). In OE, the Authorizing or Denying Official is Marshall E. Whitenton, the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Permitting, Siting and Analysis. See February 12, 2008, letter from Mr. Whitenton to Maureen F. Leary, Assistant Attorney General, State of New York at 1; April 18, 2008, letter from Mr. Whitenton to Ms. Leary at 2. Consequently, because Ms. Brown Shute is not an Authorizing or Denying Official, her e-mail does not provide an appropriate basis for an Appeal.

Similarly, the regulations do not provide for an appeal to the OHA of the DOE's failure to respond to a FOIA request in a timely fashion. Such a failure does not constitute a denial of a request in whole or in part, a statement that there are no responsive documents, or a denial of a fee waiver request. Consequently, the OHA does not have jurisdiction over claims of untimeliness. See, e.g., EverNu Technology, LLC, 30 DOE ¶ 80,112 (March 5, 2008) (Case No. TFA-0243); Citizen Action New Mexico, 29 DOE ¶ 80,302 (July 6, 2007) (Case No. TFA-0203); Arlie Bryan Siebert, 29 DOE ¶ 80,258 (April 20, 2006) (Case No. TFA-0157). Instead, the requester's remedy in such cases is to seek redress in a federal District Court. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.5(d)(4); see also 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(C)(i). We will, therefore, not consider New York's arguments concerning the timeliness of the DOE's response or Ms. Shute's e-mail.

B. Agency Records

New York also contests OE's failure in its February 12th response to provide the CERA study, and its finding in its May 6th response that communications between CRA and transmission developers and industry stakeholders are not subject to the provisions of the FOIA. In essence, OE has determined that the CERA study and the communications between CRA and industry entities, that were not in the DOE's possession at the time of New York's request, are not "agency records."

The FOIA does not specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record that is subject to FOIA requirements. This issue was addressed by the United States Supreme Court in Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are agency records for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. The federal courts have identified four relevant factors for determining whether a document was under an agency's control at the time of a request:

1. The intent of the document's creator to retain or relinquish control over the document;

2. The ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit;

3. The extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and

4. The degree to which the record was integrated into the agency's record system or files.

See, e.g., Burka v. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, 87 F.3d 508, 515 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

Applying these standards to the case at hand, we conclude that the CERA study, and communications between CRA and transmission developers and industry stakeholders that were not in the possession of the DOE at the time of the request, are not agency records. With regard to the CERA study, OE informed us that the study was acquired by an OE employee from FERC prior to OE's receipt of New York's request. See memorandum of June 3, 2008 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Mr. Whitenton. This satisfies the first prong of the Tax Analysts test. However, the study was not under the control of the DOE at the time of New York's request. Mr. Whitenton indicated that, although the employee sent the study to CRA prior to the request, a copy of the study was not retained in the DOE's records. Id. Consequently, at that time the DOE did not have "the ability to use and dispose of the record" as it saw fit. Moreover, although the OE employee apparently did read the study, the DOE did not rely on it in making any decisions regarding the Congestion Study or the related NIETC designation order. See memorandum of May 22, 2008 telephone conversation between Mr. Palmer and Ms. Brown Shute. Finally, the record's creator, CERA, has clearly expressed an intention to retain control over the record. According to Ms. Brown Shute, CERA declined to provide a copy of the study to OE in connection with New York's request, stating that it considered it to be "business confidential." See April 28, 2008 e-mail from Ms. Brown Shute to Ms. Leary. Moreover, only CERA clients are permitted to download the study from CERA's website. See http://www.cera.com. OE properly concluded that the CERA study is not an "agency record."

With regard to the communications between CRA and transmission developers and industry stakeholders, the DOE is currently reviewing those documents that are in its possession for possible release to New York. The communications that are not in its possession were neither created nor obtained by the DOE. Under the Tax Analysts standard, these communications are not "agency records."

However, a finding that certain documents are not "agency records" does not end our inquiry. Section 1004.3(e) of the DOE's FOIA regulations states that

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

We have also held that this provision is applicable to DOE subcontractors when the contract between the prime contractor and the subcontractor provides that records generated by the subcontractor are the property of the DOE. See Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,187 (September 7, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0666). We have examined the contract between LBNL and CRA, and have concluded that it does not include any language providing that the documents in question are the property of the DOE.[2] OE properly concluded that these documents are not subject to the FOIA.

C. Exemption 5

OE withheld portions of Document 34 pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). This document, which has the heading "Table 3. Top Constraints, Ranks and Most Affected," is a list of constraints, or areas of "congestion," in the northeastern U.S. [3] The portions of this document that were withheld consist of handwritten notes in the margins that were authored by a DOE employee.

Exemption 5 shields from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context."NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). The deliberative process privilege is the only privilege at issue here.

The deliberative process privilege permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government formulates decisions and policies. Sears, 421 U.S. 132, 150 (1975); Coastal States. The purpose of the deliberative process privilege is to promote high-quality agency decisions by fostering frank and independent discussion among individuals involved in the decision-making process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866.

Information within the purview of the deliberative process privilege must be both predecisional and deliberative. Information is predecisional if it is prepared or gathered in order to assist an agency decisionmaker in arriving at a decision. Renegotiation Board v. Grumman Aircraft Eng. Corp., 421 U.S. 168, 184 (1975). Predecisional information is also deliberative if it reflects the give-and-take of the consultative process, Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866, so that disclosure would reveal the mental processes of the decision-maker. National Wildlife Federation v. United States Forest Service, 861 F.2d 1114, 1119 (9th Cir. 1988).

2/ Since CERA was neither a DOE contractor nor a subcontractor, this regulatory provision is inapplicable to the CERA study.

3/ In this context, "congestion" refers to areas where consumers are not able to obtain cheap electricity because transmission wires and facilities are running at or near capacity. See memorandum of May 22, 2008, telephone conversation between Mr. Palmer and Mr. Whitenton.

In order to determine whether OE properly applied this Exemption, we obtained a copy of Document 34. At the outset, we note that the very nature of the withheld material, notes written by hand in the margins, suggests that it reflects the opinions of the author about the subject matter of the document, and not a final agency position. Our examination of the material confirmed this. We further find that the notes are predecisional, in that they reflect a part of the decision-making process that led up to the issuance of the Congestion Study. See memorandum of June 16, 2008, telephone conversation between Mr. Palmer, Mr. Whitenton and Ms. Brown Shute. They are also deliberative, in that they reflect the personal opinions of the author, rather than the final position of the DOE. The author's conclusions were subject to further review and analysis before the issuance of the Study. OE properly applied Exemption 5 in withholding these notes.

D. The Public Interest

Our finding that portions of this document are exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 5 does not necessarily preclude release of the material to New York. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, the release of this predecisional, deliberative material could adversely affect the agency's ability to obtain straightforward and frank recommendations and opinions in the future. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (March 18, 1987) (Case No. KFA-0080). We do not believe that discretionary release of the withheld material would be in the public interest.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we find that OE properly determined that the CERA report and communications between CRA, the DOE and industry stakeholders that were not in the DOE's possession at the time of New York's request, are not "agency records." We further conclude that the handwritten notes deleted from Document 34 were properly withheld under Exemption 5. We will therefore deny New York's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of New York, Case Number TFA-0257, is hereby denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Terry M. Apodaca

Date of Filing: May 20, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0258

On May 20, 2008, Terry M. Apodaca (Apodaca) filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on April 23, 2008, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration's Service Center (SC). In that determination, SC responded to a request for documents that Apodaca submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. SC identified a number of documents responsive to Apodaca's request. Some of those documents were released in their entirety and, pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA, others were released with some deletions. Apodaca has challenged the withholding of information under Exemption 6. Apodaca also challenges the extent of the search that was conducted for responsive documents. This appeal, if granted, would require SC to release the withheld information to Apodaca and conduct a more extensive search for documents.

I. Background

On August 29, 2007, Apodaca requested: (1) A copy of all documents relating to an investigation (and corrective actions) concerning an incident referred to in an E-mail message from Tyler Przybylek dated 3/14/07[1] (Przybylek E-mail), including any responsive documents in the offices of five specifically named employees (Category 1); and (2) a copy of the official FOIA file (Request No. 06-181-A) pertaining to the processing of a particular FOIA request (Category 2).

In its April 23, 2008, determination letter (Determination Letter) responding to Apodaca's request, SC provided Apodaca with one Category 1 document. SC also provided Apodaca with 39 Category 2 documents (numbered from 1 to 39).[2] SC withheld from Document Nos. 1-4, 10,

[1] The E-mail message references an incident concerning the improper release of information. The message goes on to state "[T]here [have] been multiple points of failure . . . . They will be investigated." Apodaca Appeal submission (August 29, 2007 FOIA Request from Terry Apodaca to Carolyn Becknell).

[2] The text of the letter indicated that there were 40 Category 2 documents while the list of Category 2 documents included in the letter described only 39 documents. Apodaca was only provided 39 Category 2 documents. Apodaca raised this difference as one of her grounds for appeal believing that SC had not provided her with a Category 2

21-25, 27, 29, 31,33, 35 and 36 information relating to the home address, telephone number and E-mail address of the individual who filed the request in Case No. 06-181-A). This information was withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA.

Apodaca challenges SC's determination on a number of grounds. First, Apodaca apparently challenges the withholding of information under Exemption 6 concerning the FOIA requester (the individual who filed the request in Case No. 06-181-A) from the various Category 2 documents, because contractor employee names, telephone and facsimile numbers, E-mail addresses and the name of the organizations they work for were not redacted from a number of Category 2 documents. Second, the Determination Letter did not specify that information was being withheld under Exemption 6 in Document Nos. 37 and 39. Third, Documents Nos. 22 and 35 were letters that indicated that each had an attachment, yet Apodaca was not provided a copy of these attachments. Lastly, she argues that SC failed to conduct a search for responsive documents at the Y-12 plant in Oak Ridge, Tennessee.

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See Sowell, Todd, Lafitte, Beard and Watson LLC, 27 DOE ¶ 80,226 (August 31, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0510); Frank E. Isbill, 27 DOE ¶ 80,215 (July 7, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0499). [3] document. Upon inquiry, SC has informed us that it found only 39 Category 2 documents and that the reference to 40 documents was in error. See E-mail from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, SC, to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (May 30, 2008). Consequently, given SC's explanation as to the discrepancy, we need not address Apodaca's argument concerning a missing Category 2 document.

As an initial matter, we must reject Apodaca's argument that, because SC released information in the Category 2 documents relating to federal contractor employees, SC should have also released the redacted information concerning the individual FOIA requester. The fact that an agency may make differing privacy analyses concerning different individuals named in a document does not mandate that the agency release the names of all individuals. S*ee Neil Mock and Scott Lebow*, 28 DOE ¶ 80,138 at 80,587 (January 19, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0632). The privacy interest for different individuals or employee classes under Exemption 6 will always be dependent on the context in which it has been asserted.[4] Id. In the present case, SC decided to make a discretionary release of the contractor employees' information. See Memorandum of telephone conversation between Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, SC, and Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (June 26, 2008). Even if SC erred in releasing this information concerning contractor employees, it does not change the fact that a private FOIA requester making a request in his or her own name has a privacy interest in remaining anonymous. Cf. Silets v. Dep't of Justice, 945 F.2d 227, 230-31 (7th Cir. 1991) (deciding to affirm the withholding of an individual first-party FOIA requester's name pursuant to Exemption 7(C)). There is little if any public interest in the release of the full name and personal information of the FOIA requester in this case, since release of the information would shed no additional information on the operations and activity of government in the processing of FOIA Request No. 06-181-A . Thus, balancing the privacy interest involved in this cases against the scant public interest, we find that SC properly withheld indentifying information about the requester in the Category 2 documents.

With regard to Document Nos. 37 and 39, SC's Determination Letter does not, in fact, list them as documents from which information has been withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. However, the copies of these two documents themselves indicate that information was withheld under Exemption 6. The information withheld under Exemption 6 in these documents is of the same type as the other Exemption 6 information withheld in the other documents and, as discussed above, was properly withheld.

B. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 11384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,102 (January 22, 1988) (Case No. KFA-0153).

We contacted the FOIA Officer to ascertain the scope of the search that was made for responsive documents. The FOIA Officer informed us that with regard to the Category 1 documents, each of the five named employees was contacted and each made a search of his or her E-mails and other documents to see if responsive documents existed.[5] Only one employee found a responsive document and that document was provided to Apodaca. None of the five named employees knew of any investigation that was conducted pursuant to the Przybylek E-mail. No search at the Y-12 plant was conducted since, based on the information she had obtained, the FOIA Officer had no expectation that responsive documents would be located at that facility. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, SC, and Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (June 26, 2008).

With regard to the search for Category 2 documents, the FOIA Officer went to the Office of Public Affairs where the requested FOIA file (Case No. 06-181-A) was located and provided Apodaca with all documents in that file (after redacting various documents pursuant to Exemption 6). With regard to the attachments referenced in Apodaca's appeal, no copies were found in the file and the FOIA Officer had no knowledge that other copies would exist in any location other than in the file itself. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, SC, and Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (June 26, 2008).

Our review of the search that was conducted for documents responsive to Apodaca's appeal leads us to conclude that SC made an adequate search for documents. In the search for Category 1 documents, SC contacted each of the five named employees and had searches made for responsive documents. Further, none of the employees had any knowledge that any type of investigation had been made related to the Przybylek E-mail. As to the search for Category 2 documents, SC provided Apodaca with all documents in the requested FOIA file and there was no expectation that other documents would exist outside of that file. The adequacy of SC's search for Category 2 documents is not impaired by the fact that attachments to two of the documents could not be located. See Duenas Iturralde v. Comptroller of the Currency, 315 F.3d 311, 315 (D.C. Cir. 2003) ("[I]t is long settled that the failure of an agency to turn up one specific document in its search does not alone render a search inadequate"). In sum, SC conducted an adequate search reasonably calculated to discover responsive documents.

C. Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (August 15, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0060). We find that SC complied with the FOIA's segregability requirement by releasing to Apodaca all portions of the documents not withholdable under Exemption 6.

III. Conclusion

We find that SC conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Apodaca's FOIA Request. Additionally, SC properly withheld information in the documents provided to Apodaca under Exemption 6. Consequently, Apodaca's appeal should be denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Feldesman, Tucker & Leifer
Date of Filing:	May 29, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0259

On May 29, 2008, Feldesman, Tucker & Leifer (Feldesman) appealed a determination issued by the Corporate Services Division of the Office of Headquarters Procurement Services (Procurement) of the Department of Energy (DOE) under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its appeal, Feldesman contends that the Department failed to conduct an adequate search for documents responsive to its request. This Appeal, if granted, would require an additional search for responsive material.

I. Background

Feldesman filed a request in which it sought the following information: (1) a copy of any DOE contracts, agreements, grants, payment-related documents, and memoranda concerning or relating to the provision of small business conference event management services with the Veterans Corporation (TVC) (also known as the National Veterans Business Development Corporation) during calendar years 2006-2008, as well as subcontracts, subcontract approvals, and related material; (2) a copy of the proposal that TVC submitted to DOE to provide small business conference event management services; (3) DOE's contract, grant or other files for small business conference event management services provided by TVC; and (4) correspondence, memoranda, or other written material concerning or relating to TerraCom, Inc., TVC and the DOE Small Business 2007 Conference. See Appeal Letter at Attachment 3. Procurement issued a determination which stated that it found no proposal documents, correspondence, memoranda, or other written material concerning or relating to TerraCom Inc., TVC and the DOE Small Business 2007 Conference responsive to Feldesman's request. In addition, Procurement located and released one responsive document, Purchase Order Number DE-A01-07WO19945. However, it withheld portions of the document pursuant to FOIA Exemption 4. In its Appeal, Feldesman challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Procurement.

II. Analysis

We have held that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. When we have found that a search was inadequate, we have consistently remanded the case and ordered a further search for responsive documents. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (2002); Marlene R. Flor, 23 DOE ¶ 80,130 (1993); Native Americans for a Clean Environment, 23 DOE ¶ 80,149 (1993). However, the FOIA requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "The standard of reasonableness that we apply to the agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of files; instead it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in Procurement to ascertain the scope of the search. Feldesman originally submitted its FOIA request to the DOE Headquarters FOIA Office (DOE-HQ). DOE-HQ then transferred its request to Procurement for a direct response to the requester. Procurement officials informed us that they conducted a search of their database by the relevant contract numbers, names and keywords (i.e., the National Veterans Business Corporation), and were able to locate one responsive document. Procurement provided this document, Purchase order Number DE-A01-07WO19945, to Feldesman, but redacted commercial and financial information under Exemption 4. Procurement informed us that it did not locate any other responsive information. See Record of Conversation between Phyllis Morgan and Craig Ashline, Procurement, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (June 17, 2008). Given the facts presented to us, we are convinced that Procurement conducted an adequate search that was reasonably calculated to uncover documents responsive to Feldesman's request.

During the course of this Appeal, DOE-HQ informed us that it will forward Feldesman's request to DOE's Small Business Office within the Office of Economic Impact and Diversity to search for responsive documents. That office will respond directly to Feldesman. Accordingly, this Appeal is hereby remanded to DOE-HQ to conduct a new search for information responsive to Feldesman's request.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Feldesman, Tucker & Leifer, OHA Case No. TFA-0259, on May 29, 2008, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE Headquarters FOIA Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth in the Decision and Order.

in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: BPA Watch

Case Number: TFA-0260

This Decision concerns the BPA Watch's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) issued to it on May 20, 2008, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In that determination, the BPA disclosed some information and withheld other information under FOIA Exemption 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require the BPA to reconsider its Exemption 6 withholding under the analysis set forth below and either (i) justify its withholding or (ii) not withhold the information pursuant to Exemption 6.

I. Background

The BPA Watch filed a FOIA request with the BPA for "a copy of the manifest for the BPA plane(s) for [the] calendar year 2007 showing the date, destination, passengers and purpose of trip." Request Letter. The BPA issued a determination, disclosing 255 responsive documents that show the date, destination, and purpose of each BPA airplane trip in 2007. Determination Letter.

However, the BPA invoked FOIA Exemption 6 to withhold the names of the crew and passengers, aside from BPA Administrator and Chief Executive Officer Stephen J. Wright. The BPA stated that, "Exemption 6 is intended to protect individuals from the injury and harassment that could result from unnecessary disclosure of personal information." The BPA further stated that disclosing the withheld names "would not further the public interest" because "[t]he identity of the passengers and crew does not . . . shed a light on the agency's performance of its statutory duties." Finally, the BPA stated that the remaining information in the disclosed documents "can all be used to monitor the proper use of the BPA planes." Id.

The BPA Watch then filed the present Appeal. The BPA Watch asks the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) to order the release of all passenger names, but not crew names. Appeal Letter. It argues that, (i) "There is no privacy interest in a BPA employee (or anyone else) riding a BPA plane;" and (ii) "Even if there is a privacy interest, the public interest in verifying that [the] BPA is properly managing federal assets far outweighs a privacy interest." Id.

The BPA Watch argues that, "[T]he name of the passengers is vital to a determination of whether [the] BPA is complying with federal regulations . . . regarding government aircraft." Id. To prove its point, the BPA Watch listed seventeen questions, asking who rode on a BPA plane to a variety of events. Lastly, the BPA Watch notes that the Department of Energy's Inspector General has "indicat[ed] a need for increased DOE management oversight of aviation activities" and that the BPA manifests contain approximately a dozen blank entries for "purpose." Id.

II. Analysis

Congress designed the FOIA "to pierce the veil of administrative secrecy and to open agency action to the light of public scrutiny." U.S. Dep't of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 164, 173 (1991) (citation and quotations omitted). Therefore, the FOIA has a strong presumption in favor of disclosure. Id.

FOIA Exemption 6 protects from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). An agency should construe "similar files" broadly, "[T]o cover detailed Government records on an individual which can be identified as applying to that individual." U.S. Dep't of State v. Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 602 (1982) (citation and quotations omitted). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Id. at 599.

The agency has the burden to show that requested material falls within an exemption. Ray, 502 U.S. at 173 (citation omitted); see also News-Press v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 489 F.3d 1173, 1198 (11th Cir. 2007) (describing the agency's burden as "onerous"). The agency must "narrowly construe[]" Exemption 6. Nat'l Ass'n of Home Builders v. Norton, 309 F.3d 26, 32 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citation and quotations omitted).

We must apply a three-step analysis to determine whether the DOE properly invoked Exemption 6 to withhold the passenger names. First, we must determine whether disclosing the information compromises a substantial privacy interest. If disclosure does not compromise a substantial privacy interest, the DOE may not withhold the information. Second, we must determine whether disclosing the information is in the public interest. Third, we must balance the substantial privacy interest against the public interest in order to determine whether disclosing the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Ripskis v. Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

We contacted the BPA to gather information to evaluate its withholding of the passenger names under Exemption 6. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Christina Brannon, FOIA/ Privacy Act Office, BPA, and David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 2, 2008. The BPA stated that BPA employees are entitled to privacy regarding their official activities. The BPA did not consider whether a privacy threat exists for any passenger, whether a federal employee or non-federal employee. Instead, the BPA focused on whether releasing the names is in the public interest. The BPA concluded that releasing the names will not further the public interest. That is, according to the BPA, the BPA Watch made its FOIA request to determine if the BPA is committing fraud, waste, or abuse. The BPA stated that the BPA Watch will be able to make that determination without the passenger names and that knowing who went on a particular trip will not expose whether the plane was improperly used. Moreover, the BPA stated that it released the purpose of each trip, which it considers to be the piece of information of the greatest interest to the public. Id.

We find that Exemption 6 applies to the BPA plane manifests because, following Wash. Post Co., they may be "identified as applying" to the passengers whose names appear on them.

Regarding the first step of the Ripskis balancing test, "[T]he privacy threat depends on the individual characteristics that the disclosure reveals and the consequences that are likely to ensue." Norton, 309 F.3d at 36. The privacy threat must be "real rather than speculative." Elec. Privacy Info. Ctr. v. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 384 F. Supp. 2d 100, 116 (D.D.C. 2005) (citing Dep't of the Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352, 381 n.19 (1976)); see, e.g., Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Fed. Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 876 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (withholding a list of names and addresses when disclosing the list would have invited a "fusillade" of mailings from businesses and charities because the list indicated whether each individual was retired, disabled, or received a monthly annuity check). Further, releasing a list of names "does not inherently and always constitute a 'clearly unwarranted' invasion of personal privacy." News-Press, 489 F.3d at 1199; see also Baez v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 647 F.2d 1328, 1339 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (stating, Exemption 7(C) "do[es] not . . . imply a blanket exemption for the names of all [government employees] in all documents"); Elec. Privacy Info. Ctr., 384 F. Supp. 2d at 116 (citing Baez in the Exemption 6 context).

We find that the BPA has not met its burden to show that disclosing the passenger names compromises a substantial privacy interest. The BPA did not identify a real privacy threat with likely consequences for the passengers, as Norton and Elec. Privacy Info Ctr. require. Also, following News-Press and Baez, the BPA may not withhold the names of federal employees merely because they are federal employees. Therefore, we will remand this case to the BPA to determine disclosing the passenger names compromises a substantial privacy interest that outweighs the public interest in disclosure.

On remand, if the BPA finds that disclosing the passenger names compromises a substantial privacy interest, the BPA must consider the second step of the Ripskis test – whether disclosing the names is in the public interest. We disagree with the BPA's conclusion that the public does not have an interest in disclosure of the passenger names. Disclosing information is in the public interest if it "shed[s] light on agency's performance of its statutory duties." Norton, 309 F.3d at 35 (citation and quotations omitted); see also Horowitz v. Peace Corps, 428 F.3d 271, 278 (D.C. Cir. 2005) ("The focus of the public interest analysis is the citizens' right to know what their government is up to.") (citation and quotations omitted). Relevant here, the BPA may only use an aircraft for an official purpose. See 31 U.S.C. § 1344(a). An official purpose includes carrying only passengers authorized to travel on government aircraft, according to the requirements of Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular No. A-126. 41 C.F.R.

§§ 102-33.20, 102-33.25(c)-(d). OMB Circular No. A-126 requires the BPA to document the names of all passengers. It also requires passengers to reimburse the government for certain travel, including a wholly personal or political trip. OFFICE OF MGMT. & BUDGET, EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OMB CIR. NO. A-126, IMPROVING THE MANAGEMENT AND USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT (May 22, 1992) (Revised).

We find that releasing the passenger names is in the public interest because it will shed light on whether the BPA operated its planes in accordance with its statutory duties, as specified in OMB Circular No. A-126. In particular, releasing the passenger names will allow the BPA Watch to determine if the BPA documented passenger names on the plane manifests. The BPA may have left the spaces in the manifests for passenger names blank, as it reportedly did under one or more spaces for "purpose," or listed "John Doe" instead of actual passengers. Reviewing the passenger lists may also indicate if the BPA used its planes for wholly personal or political trips. For example, a passenger list consisting of names from a single family may indicate a wholly personal trip. Similarly, a passenger list consisting of the names of public officials and/or registered lobbyists may indicate a wholly political trip. Without reviewing the passenger lists, the BPA Watch would never have the opportunity to find out.

(1) The Appeal that the BPA Watch filed on June 13, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0260, is granted, as set forth below.

(2) The BPA Watch's Appeal is remanded to the BPA. The BPA shall reconsider the BPA Watch's FOIA request for the passenger names under the analysis set forth above and issue a new determination. If it wishes to withhold the passenger names under Exemption 6, the BPA must identify the privacy threat and describe how that interest outweighs the public interest in disclosure. Otherwise, the BPA may not withhold the passenger names under Exemption 6.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	BPA Watch
Date of Filing:	June 25, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0263

On June 25, 2008, BPA Watch filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on May 30, 2008, by the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) in response to a request for documents that BPA Watch submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that BPA release responsive material.

I. Background

BPA Watch is a web site that provides news, analysis and commentary about BPA, a federal power marketing agency headquartered in Portland, Oregon. On March 31, 2008, BPA Watch requested copies of certain records that BPA had provided to a federal district court in Portland, Oregon in response to a federal criminal subpoena. BPA Watch requested the following: "[c]alendars in hard copy or electronic form (i.e., Microsoft Outlook) for three BPA employees for the years 2001-2003: Mark A. Reynolds; Mark Wilczewski; and Chuck Meyer." Letter from BPA Watch to BPA (March 31, 2008). [1] On May 30, 3008, BPA issued a partial response to the request and informed BPA Watch that it had no responsive records for Mark A. Reynolds. Letter from BPA to BPA Watch, May 30, 2008 (Determination). The agency also explained that paper copies of the electronic calendars of Mark Wilczewski (Wilczewski) and Chuck Meyer (Meyer) did exist, but that they were being withheld because BPA considered the documents to be personal records of those individuals, and not agency records, and personal records are not subject to release under the FOIA. BPA Watch appealed this determination and asked OHA to order BPA to release the withheld material. Letter from BPA Watch to OHA (June 26, 2008) (Appeal).

[1] I note that BPA Watch stated in its appeal that it is not requesting the disclosure of any personal items on the calendars. Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

A. The Test for Agency Records

Although the purpose of the FOIA is to provide public access to federal agency records that are not exempt from disclosure, the statutory language of the FOIA does not define an agency record, but merely lists examples of the types of information that agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). Consequently, in order to distinguish agency records from personal records, federal courts have applied a "totality of the circumstances" test. This test "focus [es] on a variety of factors surrounding the creation, possession, control, and use of the document by an agency." Consumer Federation of America v. Dep't of Agriculture, 455 F. 3d 283, 287 (D.C.Cir. 2006) (citing Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc. v. Dept of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484, 1490 (D.C.Cir. 1984)). Courts have identified four relevant factors for an agency to consider when determining whether the agency has control over a document: (1) the intent of the record's creator to retain or relinquish control over the record; (2) the ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit; (3) the extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and (4) the extent to which the record was integrated into the agency's recordkeeping system or files. Consumer Federation of America, 455 F.3d at 288 n.7.

Both parties in this case agree that the "totality of the circumstances test" is the appropriate standard for adjudicating this matter. See Appeal at 3; Determination at 1, 4. In their arguments, the parties refer to three cases that are instructive regarding the issue of whether records created by an agency employee using agency resources are properly classified as agency records or as personal records.

In the first case, Bureau of National Affairs, Inc. v. Dep't of Justice, 742 F.2d 1484 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (BNA), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit was asked to decide whether appointment calendars and daily agendas of a government official were agency records subject to disclosure under FOIA. The daily agendas were prepared by the official's secretary and distributed to his staff so that they would know his schedule. BNA, 742 F.2d at 1487. The appointment calendars were used to organize personal and business activities. Top level assistants occasionally had access to the calendars, paper documents located on the official's desk, in order to determine the availability and location of the official. However, the calendars were not distributed to other employees. BNA, 742 F.2d at 1495. The court concluded that the agendas (created for the purpose of informing others of the daily activities of the official and distributed to other employees) were agency records, but the calendars (created for the personal convenience of the official and not distributed) were not.

The remaining cases are more recent and involve requests for both electronic and paper documents. In 2004, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia considered a request for the appointment calendar of the SEC chairman. Bloomberg v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 357 F. Supp. 2d 156, 163 (D. D.C. 2004). This was a personal calendar maintained on the agency computer system that was created for the personal use of the chairman, not as an official record of his schedule. The chairman's Chief of Staff and Deputy Chief of Staff viewed the calendar on occasion to determine the availability of the chairman, but the calendar did not circulate. The Court found that the appointment calendar was a personal record based on its limited distribution, its creation for personal use, and the fact that the agency allowed its employees limited use of government equipment for personal needs. Id. at 164.

In the third case, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in 2006 considered whether the electronic appointment calendars of six officials of the Department of Agriculture were agency records. Consumer Federation of America, 455 F.3d at 283. Five of the officials distributed their calendars to other employees, including their secretaries, assistants, and colleagues. The sixth official was a lower level employee who distributed his calendar to his secretary only. Id. at 286. Using the totality of the circumstances test, the court determined that the use of the documents was the decisive factor because their creation, possession and control were not dispositive under the facts of the case. Id. at 291. The court found that the calendars of the five higher level officials were similar to the agendas in BNA because they were used to communicate availability of the five officials and because they were distributed to other employees. Id. at 292-3. Thus, the court concluded that these five calendars were agency records. However, because there was no evidence that other employees either relied on the calendar of the sixth official (with the exception of his secretary) or received copies of that calendar, the court found that the calendar of the sixth official was a personal record. Id. at 293.

B. Arguments of the Parties

BPA argues that the records requested are not agency records, but rather the personal records of Meyer, a BPA vice president, and Wilczewski, a BPA economist. Using the "totality of the circumstances" test, BPA highlighted the following significant facts. First, BPA noted that the calendars of both men contained personal as well as business entries, only Meyer and his assistant made entries in Meyer's electronic calendars, and Wilczewski gave access only to his secretary. However, Meyer's subordinates had access to his calendars "to know where he was and when he was available." Determination at 2. Second, although both calendars were maintained on BPA's Microsoft Outlook, neither the BPA computer administrator nor the BPA records custodian took control of the calendars. Third, there was no substantive agency-related information in the calendars. Finally, BPA does not require its employees to keep their calendars as agency records, and there are no BPA records retention schedules that apply to calendars. BPA admits that this fact is not dispositive. Determination at 2.

BPA asserts that the responsive material is similar to the appointment calendars that were requested in BNA-- the Meyer and Wisczlewski calendars were not placed into BPA files, the employees were allowed to dispose of the calendars at their discretion, and a few staff members had access to the calendars to determine the officials' availability. BPA contends that the presence of personal information classifies the calendars as personal records absent a showing of agency control over the documents. In support of its position, BPA also cited Bloomberg, where the court found that the Chairman's calendar was a personal record, even though two staff members also had access. BPA alleges that Consumer Federation of America can be distinguished because the court in that case could not determine if the calendars were part of the agency files, or if the employees were free to dispose of their calendars as they wished. BPA argues that the Meyer and Wilczewski calendars were created for the personal convenience of the owners, who could have deleted them at any time. BPA had no control over the calendars, and only retained them in response to discovery requests. Id.

BPA Watch sets forth several arguments. First, the requester maintains that the calendars are agency records because BPA retained them in response to a subpoena. Second, the requester argues that BPA has released calendars as agency records in the past, and the withholding in this case presents an unjustified change in previous policy. Third, because the BPA Records Manual defines records broadly and requires retention of records concerning certain legal issues, BPA Watch contends that the responsive material should be considered agency records. Appeal at 7. Fourth, BPA Watch argues that the agency erred in emphasizing the very limited number of people who can make entries on the calendars when emphasis is more properly placed on the number of people who have access to the calendars. Finally, BPA Watch contends that BPA has dismissed the importance of the Consumer Federation of America finding that the USDA appointment calendars were agency records because they had "use characteristics" similar to the agendas in BNA, i.e., the calendars were distributed to employees, and those employees relied on the calendars in the performance of their duties. The requester maintains that this case is key to adjudicating the matter at hand.

C. Whether the Calendars Are Agency Records

It is clear that the documents (electronic appointment calendars) were created by agency employees using agency resources. However, it is not clear from the limited information in the Determination whether BPA had control over the calendars. When faced with conflicts in the first three factors, courts have been compelled to determine how the responsive material was used in order to determine whether that material is an agency record. See Consumer Federation of America, 455 F.3d at 290-291 (determining classification of document based on its use when creation, possession and control are not dispositive in determining whether calendars are agency records); BNA, 742 F.2d at 1492 (discussing relevance of use in inquiry into whether record is an agency record). See also Charles Frazier, 27 DOE ¶ 80,106 (January 28, 1998) (Case No. VFA-0261) (determining classification of record based on its use when other factors are in conflict).

1. The Wilczewski Calendars

I find that the Wilczewski calendars are not agency records. Wilczewski, an economist, created his calendars for personal convenience. Only Wilczewski and his secretary (or her replacement) had access to his calendars. Even though he kept both business and personal appointments on his calendars, they are very similar to the appointment calendar of the SEC chairman in Bloomberg (only the owner of the calendar and two staff members had access), the appointment calendar of the Department of Justice official in BNA (calendar was not distributed to other employees, but retained for the convenience of the official), and the calendar of the lower level USDA official in Consumer Federation of America (distributed only to his secretary). In those cases, the court found that the calendars were personal records. Similarly, this office has previously found that an appointment calendar that is not distributed to other employees is a personal record. See Charles Frazier (appointment calendars of agency official found to be personal records where distribution was limited to secretary).

As guided by BNA, I have examined the totality of the circumstances surrounding the creation, maintenance, and use of Wilczewski's calendars to determine whether they are agency records or merely employee records that happen to be located physically within the agency. BNA, 742 F.2d at 1493. It is true that the calendars were created and maintained by an agency employee, and subject to regular computer maintenance by BPA technical personnel. However, the employee did not distribute the calendars to any of his colleagues, maintained the calendars for his own convenience, and also kept personal information on the calendars. Further, Wilczewski was free to dispose of the calendars as he wished. [2] Thus, I find that Wilczewski's calendars are not agency records.

2. The Meyer Calendars

After a review of the case law and the specific facts of this case, I conclude that the Meyer calendars are agency records. Meyer, a high level employee, created the calendars using agency resources and, similar to Wilczewski, was free to dispose of the calendars as he wished. However, Meyer, a BPA vice president, gave his staff members access to the calendars so that they could determine his availability. The Meyer calendars are similar to the calendars of the five higher-level officials in Consumer Federation of America, where the staff members relied on the calendars of the officials for the same reasons that Meyer's subordinates relied on his calendars – to determine the availability of another agency employee and to avoid double booking of work-related appointments. The BPA employees relied on Meyer's calendars in performing their duties, and thus his calendars were a part of BPA daily operations. As stated in Consumer Federation of America, > Allowing others to have routine computer access to a calendar is more like distributing hard copies than it is like permitting occasional glances at a document on a desk. In allowing computer access, the official surrenders personal control over the document and indicates that it will be used by others to plan their own workdays.

The USDA calendars were electronically "distributed" to the listed recipients who used them to schedule agency meetings and prevent conflicts. Id. at 292. Meyer's subordinates used his calendars to plan their workdays, just as the USDA employees used the calendars of their superiors

[2] BPA Watch argues that the calendars are agency records because the agency did not refuse to disclose them in response to a discovery request in a criminal case. BPA Watch suggests that BPA could have asserted that the calendars were personal records and not subject to the criminal subpoena. I am not persuaded that maintaining a record in a government office in response to a criminal subpoena converts that record to an agency record. The mere presence of the document in the agency offices does not create an agency record. See Kissinger v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 157 (1980). "To be agency records, something more than mere possession of the records by an agency official must be shown. Some nexus between the agency's work and the records must be established." BNA, 742 F.2d at 1491 (quoting Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education v. Dep't of Labor, 545 F. Supp. 1229, 1233-34 (N.D. Ill.1982)). Under the facts of this case, a criminal subpoena does not establish this nexus.

in Consumer Federation of America. For the reasons stated above, I find that the Meyer appointment calendars are agency records.

III. Conclusion

I conclude that the Meyer appointment calendars are agency records, and subject to release under FOIA. I further conclude that the Wilczewski appointment calendars are personal records and thus not subject to release under the FOIA.[3] Accordingly, this Appeal is granted in part. BPA shall either release the 2001-2003 appointment calendars of Chuck Meyer, or issue a new determination to justify its withholding of any portion of the calendars.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by BPA Watch on June 25, 2008, OHA Case Number TFA-0263, is hereby granted in part and denied in all other respects.

(2) BPA shall either release the 2001-2003 calendars of Chuck Meyer or issue a new determination to justify its withholding of any portion of the calendars.

[3] I am not persuaded by BPA Watch's argument that BPA should release the Meyer and Wilczewski calendars because the BPA Records Manual defines records broadly. Courts have stated that federal records management statutes "cannot be used as the divining rod for the meaning of 'agency records' under FOIA." Consumer Federation of America, 455 F.3d at 289 (citing BNA, 742 F.2d at 1493).

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Elizabeth Borum

Case Number: TFA-0265

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Elizabeth Borum filed in response to determinations that were issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office (OR) and by the National Nuclear Security Administration's Albuquerque Service Center (NNSA). In these determinations, OR and NNSA replied to a request for documents that Ms. Borum submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. [1] OR released certain documents to Ms. Borum in their entirety, and NNSA stated that it could not locate any documents that are responsive to her request. This Appeal, if granted, would require OR and NNSA to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

In her FOIA request, Ms. Borum sought access to the medical, personnel and radiation exposure records of her deceased father, Roy L. Loudermilk. Mr. Loudermilk was employed at the K-25 plant in Oak Ridge from November 1944 until August 1961. In a partial response dated April 9, 2008, OR provided Ms. Borum with a copy of Mr. Loudermilk's personnel security clearance index card file, a radiation exposure record, and a work history report. In its "final" response, dated May 27, 2008, OR stated that the K-25 search had been completed, and that an additional radiation exposure record had been located. OR provided this record to Ms. Borum in its entirety and informed her that responsive documents might also be located at the Y-12 plant in Oak Ridge. Because the Y-12 plant is under the jurisdiction of NNSA, OR referred Ms. Borum's request to NNSA. In its response to Ms. Borum, NNSA stated that it could not locate any responsive documents.

1/ The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. FOIA Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe/foia1.asp.

In her Appeal, Ms. Borum challenges the adequacy of the searches performed by OR and NNSA. Subsequent to our receipt of this Appeal, OR provided additional documents to Ms. Borum. [2] These documents consisted of approximately 140 pages of yearly X-Ray interpretation reports, EKG readings and interpretations, inoculation records, dispensary notes and dates of visits to the K-25 medical department, laboratory (urine and blood) tests, vision and hearing tests, work restrictions, correspondence to the Social Security Administration, physical examination results, a medical incident report, a disability claim for benefits, and "return to work" notes from private physicians. See July 3, 2008 e-mail from Ms. Rothrock to Mr. Palmer.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Information Focus On Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,240 (1997).

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted OR and NNSA. OR informed us that their search extended to the DOE Records Holding area, where Mr. Loudermilk's personnel security clearance assurance index card was found, and to the K-25 plant and Oak Ridge Associated Universities, where his medical records, employment history, and radiation exposure records were found. OR concluded that no other locations were likely to have records pertaining to Mr. Loudermilk. The searches were done both manually and electronically, depending on the nature of the system of records being searched. All electronic searches were performed using as many personal identifiers as possible, e.g., name, badge number, social security number and date of birth. See July 3 e-mail from Ms. Rothrock to Mr. Palmer.

NNSA stated that the DOE Personnel Security Division and the active and archived personnel, medical and radiation records at the Y-12 plant were searched. As was the case with OR, the searches were either manual, or electronic using multiple identifiers, depending on the nature of the system of records being searched. See NNSA's April 15, 2008 determination letter to Ms. Borum; see also memorandum of July 8, 2008 telephone conversation between Christina Hamblen, NNSA, Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and Mr. Palmer.

2/ Employees at the K-25 plant located these documents after OR's May 27 response and sent them to OR during the first week of July 2008. See July 3, 2008 e-mail from Amy Rothrock, OR, to Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney.

Based on this information, we conclude that the DOE's search for responsive documents was reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials, and was therefore adequate. Ms. Borum's Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Elizabeth Borum on July 1, 2008, OHA Case Number TFA-0265, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Gary Maroney

Case Number: TFA-0267

This Decision concerns Gary Maroney's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (ROO) issued to him on May 19, 2008. In that determination, the ROO responded to Mr. Maroney's request under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ROO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying its withholding.

I. Background

Mr. Maroney filed a request with the ROO for his Hanford Site work history records, which the ROO interpreted as a request for his employment records. Determination Letter. The ROO processed Mr. Maroney's request under the PA because the ROO maintains employment records in a PA system of records.[1] E-mail from Dorothy C. Riehle, PA Officer, ROO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), July 17, 2008. The ROO denied Mr. Maroney's request because it could not locate his employment records. Determination Letter.

Mr. Maroney then filed the present Appeal with OHA, "[R]egarding the lack of records of [his] having worked at Hanford." Letter from Gary Maroney to OHA, received July 16, 2008. Mr. Maroney included his identification cards from Washington Public Power Supply System and WSH/ Boecon/ GERI, a statement from the Plumbers & Pipefitters National Pension Fund, and a J.A. Jones Construction Co. Statement of Earnings and Deductions, as evidence of his employment history. Id. OHA accepted Mr. Maroney's Appeal as challenging the adequacy of the ROO's search.

[1] The PA defines a system of records as "a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA),[2] courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (Aug. 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760) (remanding for a renewed search where DOE's initial search missed responsive documents that were later found);[3] Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (Dec. 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).

The ROO sent us additional information to help us evaluate its search. The ROO stated that it searched its paper file index and electronic database for Mr. Maroney's employment records, using his name and social security number. E-mail from Dorothy C. Riehle, PA Officer, ROO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 17, 2008. The ROO stated that it searched the files most likely to contain Mr. Maroney's employment records. We agree. For this reason, we find that the ROO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Mr. Maroney's Appeal.

The ROO noted that it believes that the Washington Public Power Supply System was never a contractor or subcontractor with the DOE. Even if it were, according to the ROO, the DOE did not require all contractors and subcontractors to transfer their employment records to the DOE. Therefore, the ROO suggested that Mr. Maroney consider contacting the Washington Public Power Supply System and the other companies named in his submissions to search for his employment records. Id.

[2] Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the PA requires only that the agency search its systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA.

[3] OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Gary Maroney filed on July 17, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0267, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: State of New York

Date of Filing: July 23, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0269

On July 23, 2008, the State of New York (Appellant) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on June 19, 2008, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE). In that determination, OE responded to a request for documents that the Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OE identified 17 documents responsive to the Appellant's request. OE provided the Appellant with 13 of the documents in their entirety. The remaining four documents were withheld in part by OE under Exemptions 4 and 5 of the FOIA. The Appellant challenges OE's withholding of information under Exemptions 4 and 5. This appeal, if granted, would require OE to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On December 17, 2007, the Appellant requested from the DOE a copy of a report entitled "Grounded in Reality: Eastern Interconnection" which was prepared by the firm, Cambridge Energy Research Associates, an affiliate of CRA International (CRA). Also requested were copies of all documents, E-mails, or other correspondence between CRA and the DOE. The Appellant also requested similar documents regarding communication between CRA, DOE or any transmission developers or stakeholders concerning the DOE's August 8, 2006, Congestion Study.[1]

[1] The Congestion Study concerns the percentage of maximum capacity at which existing electricity transmission lines are being used. The Congestion Study was used by DOE along with other data to designate the National Interest Electric Transmission Corridor (NIETC). Pursuant to Section 216(a) of the Federal Power Act, the DOE is required periodically to issue a congestion study. Designation of the NIETC allows entities that wish to build electricity transmission facilities within the boundaries of the NIETC to apply to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for permission to build notwithstanding local government disapproval of such construction. See State of New York, 30 DOE ¶ _____ (June 18, 2008) (Case No. TFA-0257).

In its June 19, 2008, determination letter (Determination Letter) which responded to the Appellant's request in part, OE provided the Appellant with 17 responsive documents (Document Nos. 1-11).[2] June 19, 2008, Determination Letter from Marshall E. Whitenton, OE. Of these, two attachments to a September 13, 2005, E-mail, Document Nos. 1a and 1b, had portions redacted pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA, which protects trade secrets and commercial information. OE stated in its determination letter that the withheld portions of these documents contained privileged commercial information. Information in Document No. 4, a printout of a September 7, 2005, CRA presentation to DOE entitled "Defining Transmission Corridors of National Importance," was withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 5. OE also claimed that the withheld information in Document No. 4 contained privileged commercial information which would be protected from release pursuant to Exemption 4. OE also asserted that Document No. 4 contained predecisional information which would not be subject to release in litigation and was thus protected by Exemption 5. Lastly, information in Document No. 5, a July 23, 2006, draft of Chapter Four of the 2006 DOE Congestion Study, was withheld pursuant to Exemption 5, since it consisted of predecisional "deliberations and proposed language that may not be a part of the final document." Determination Letter at 2.

The Appellant challenges OE's determination on a number of grounds. First, the Appellant asserts that OE did not identify any specific reason in its Determination Letter explaining how the withheld information constituted "privileged commercial information" or "pre-decisional discussions." Second, the Appellant maintains that OE's Determination Letter fails to provide an adequate description of the withheld information to enable the appellant to understand the basis of OR's determination. Third, the Appellant also asserts that OE failed to explain how release of the withheld commercial information could be expected to cause commercial harm. Fourth, with regard to Document No. 4, the Appellant argues that the document is in essence a presentation as to the methodologies CRA would use to define the NIETC and therefore cannot be considered an agency deliberation. Fifth, the Appellant contends that OE failed to segregate factual information from the two Exemption 5 documents. Finally, the Appellant argues that if any of the Exemption 5 documents were seen by non-DOE parties, any Exemption 5 protection would be waived.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Determination

According to the FOIA, after conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, an agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

An agency therefore has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,232 at 80,888 (November 27, 1997) (Case No. VFA-0339); Research Information

[2] Some enclosures to documents were numbered using a number and a letter, such as Document Nos. 1a and 1b.

Services, Inc., 26 DOE 80,139 at 80,592 (November 27, 1996) (Case No. VFA-0235) (RIS). Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its author and recipient. An index of documents need not, however, contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the documents. Paul W. Fox, 25 DOE ¶ 80,150 (November 30, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0096). A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. RIS, 26 DOE at 80,592.

Thus, if an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result.[3] Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, 27 DOE ¶ 80,228 (September 1, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0515). Conversely, conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 680 (D.C. Cir. 1976) ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

Our review of the Determination Letter indicates that OE failed to provide any explanation as to how Exemption 4 applied to any of the information withheld in Documents Nos. 1a, 1b and 4. The only explanation offered in the Determination Letter was a statement that the withheld material consisted of "privileged commercial information" referencing CRA business activities and that the documents themselves were submitted to DOE with the "understanding" that the information contained within the documents would remain confidential. Determination Letter at 1-2. While the Determination Letter stated the general Exemption 4 requirements, it did not provide any description of the withheld material or explain how the Exemption applies to the withheld information. Consequently, OE's Determination Letter was inadequate with regard to all Exemption 4 withholdings. Further, with regard to Document No. 4, from which significant portions were withheld, there is no marking as to which portions were withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 and which were withheld pursuant to Exemption 5. Thus, administrative appeal without additional information is virtually impossible with regard to Document No. 4.

As to Document No. 5, the Exemption 5 determination is sufficient. In the Determination Letter's index, OE states that Document 5 was a draft document that contained language that "may not be a part of the final document." Determination Letter Attachment at 1. The Determination Letter specifically describes the withheld material as a draft version of one chapter of the Congestion Study which also contains handwritten notes of DOE employees. The Determination Letter identifies the "deliberative process privilege" as the Exemption 5 privilege justifying the withholding. Consequently, unlike the Exemption 4 determination, the Exemption 5 determination is sufficient to meet the requirements of 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1).

In cases where agencies do not provide an adequate determination with respect to a FOIA request, we usually remand the request to the agency with instruction to issue a new determination letter so that the appellant and our Office can understand the rationale for withholding the information. See Steven C. Vigg, 28 DOE ¶ 20,257 (December 19, 2002) (Case No. TFA-0003). This is especially important in Exemption 4 cases, where it may not be obvious, without expert information, what competitive harm would result from release of the information. In the present case, the amount of Exemption 4 material withheld in Document Nos. 1a and 1b is small and consists of a type of commercial information that OHA has reviewed in a number of Exemption 4 cases. We will therefore consider the propriety of OE's withholding of information in those documents, as well as the propriety of the withholding in Document No. 5, since the determination was adequate with regard to that document. However, with regard to Document No. 4, we will remand the matter to OE so that it can issue another determination regarding the document and inform the Appellant which specific portions of the document are being withheld pursuant to which Exemption and explain how Exemptions 4 and 5 apply to the withheld material in that document.[4]

B. Exemption 4 – Document Nos. 1a and 1b

1. Applicability of Exemption 4

The information redacted in Document 1a consists of proposed hourly rates of CRA officials, invoice submission methodology, proposed interest rates on outstanding balances, hourly rates to be charged for miscellaneous services and supplies along with CRA banking account information for payments. The information withheld in Document No. 1b consists of CRA estimation of the cost for various services for the "Transmission Corridor" study. All of this information was withheld under Exemption 4.

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 only if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

With regard to the information withheld in the contract, CRA was required by DOE to submit the information in question. See E-mail from David Meyer, OE, to Richard Cronin, OHA, (August [4] As discussed infa, the FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (August 15, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0060). On remand, OE should examine the material in Document No. 4 to see if it contains any non-exempt material that may be segregated for release to the Appellant.

12, 2008). Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper with regard to the information withheld in the contract, the National Parks test must be met.

Under National Parks, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[5] The information submitted by CRA, proposed labor rates, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information.

The second requirement under the National Parks test is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power CHPS, 28 DOE ¶ 80,105 (July 31, 2000) (Case No. VFA-0591). All of the information withheld in the contract originated from CRA, a corporation.

Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "privileged" or "confidential." This case concerns "confidential" information. Withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, because the contract for the project required that the information be submitted, it is unlikely that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future.

After reviewing the information in question, we conclude that all of the information is confidential because release of the information could substantially harm CRA's competitive position. Disclosure of the information could give competitors insight into CRA's pricing estimation processes, rate development methods and labor charges. See FOIA Group, Inc., 30 DOE ¶ 80,107 (February 5, 2008) (Case No. TFA-0239). All of this information could be used by competitors to undercut CRA's position in future contract competitions. Consequently, we find that CRA could experience significant commercial harm from release of the material withheld in Document Nos. 1a and 1b and that OE properly withheld the information in these documents pursuant to Exemption 4.

2. Segregability

In the case of Document Nos. 1a and 1b, OE released virtually all of the documents except for the commercial Exemption 4 information. Consequently, we find that OE has satisfied its obligation under the FOIA to release all non-Exemption 4 information in the documents to the Appellant.

[5] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

C. Exemption 5 – Document No. 5

1. Applicability of Exemption 5

Document No. 5 consists of a draft of Chapter 4 of the Congestion Study. Essentially all of the document, including at least two hand-written symbolic markings concerning a portion of the draft, was withheld from the Appellant.

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified several traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion, including but not limited to: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In withholding Document No. 5 information from the Appellant, OE relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

Document No. 5 is a draft of Chapter Four of the Congestion Study. As such it represents the author's recommendation as to what the text should be regarding the Congestion Study's analysis of western U.S. electric transmission patterns and simulation modeling of future electric transmission patterns. Therefore, Document No. 5 is a predecisional, deliberative document. Further, Document No. 5 has not been expressly incorporated or adopted by reference in DOE's 2006 Congestion Study. See E-mail from David Meyer, OE, to Richard Cronin, OHA, (August 12, 2008). Consequently, we find that OE properly withheld Document No. 5 pursuant to Exemption 5.[6]

[6] In its appeal, the Appellant suggests the possibility that OE may have waived its right to assert Exemption 5 documents because it "believes the documents withheld from disclosure may have been made available to a third party." July 22, 2008 Appeal submission from the State of New York at 3. A generalized claim that the withheld information has been made "public" by disclosure to a third party is insufficient to conclude that OE has waived its privilege to assert Exemption 5. See Steinberg v. United States Department of Justice, 179 F.R.D. 357, 361 (D.D.C. 1998) (finding no waiver where requester did not produce evidence that specific withheld material is public, even though general subject matter appeared to be in public domain); Bryan Cave, 28 DOE ¶ 80,286 at 80,893 (April 30,

2.Segregability

In the case at hand, a significant portion of the material withheld under Exemption 5 is non-factual and not deliberative in nature. As mentioned above, Document No. 5 is composed of a draft analysis of current and future Western electric transmission patterns and uses a significant amount of specific factual data and studies concerning electricity transmission capacities and usage. Release of the data used by the author would, in essence, reveal the author's recommendations. We therefore find that the factual information contained in Document No. 5 is thus so intertwined with the author's analysis as to make any segregation virtually impossible. See Lead Industries Ass'n. v. OSHA, 610 F.2d 70, 85 (2d Cir. 1979); see also Radioactive Waste Management Associates, 28 DOE ¶ 80,152 (March 2, 2001) (Case No. VFA-0650).

In sum, OE properly withheld the redacted information in Document No. 5 pursuant to Exemption 5.

D. Discretionary Public Interest Disclosure of the Withheld Information

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Chicago Power Group, 23 DOE ¶ 80,125 at 80,560 (June 3, 1993) (Case No. LFA-0292). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4. FOIA Group, Inc., 30 DOE ¶ 80,198 (February 5, 2008) (Case No. TFA-0239). With regard to the withheld Exemption 5 material, given the strong public policy interest in protecting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions and their advisors, we do not find that the public interest would be served by release of the Exemption 5 material in Document No. 5.

III. Conclusion

We find that OE properly withheld information in Documents Nos. 1a, 1b and 5 pursuant to Exemptions 4 or 5. However, we are remanding this matter to OE so that it may issue a new determination letter with regard to Document No. 4. Consequently, the Appellant's appeal is granted in part, and denied in all other aspects.

2003) (Case No. TFA-0026). Nevertheless, we inquired of an OE official about Document No. 5. This official informed us that to the best of his knowledge, no one had access to Document No. 5 except DOE officials and DOE-contractor personnel assigned to prepare the document. See E-mail from David Meyer, OE, to Richard Cronin, OHA, (August 12, 2008).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 23, 2008, by the State of New York, OHA Case No. TFA-0269, is hereby granted in part, and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: State of New York

Date of Filing: August 8, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0271

This Decision concerns the State of New York's (New York) Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE) issued to it on July 3, 2008. In that determination, the OE responded to New York's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, the OE withheld information from 36 documents, under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 5. If we grant this Appeal, the OE may not withhold the information under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 5.

I. Background

New York filed a request with the OE for correspondence the DOE had with CRA International and transmission developers or stakeholders regarding an August 2006 Congestion Study and an October 2007 National Interest Electric Transmission Corridor [NIETC] Designation Order. Determination Letter. The OE provided 82 responsive documents in a numbered index. The documents consist of e-mails and memoranda among the OE, CRA International, and additional consultants that discuss the August 2006 Congestion Study and an October 2007 NIETC Designation Order. The OE redacted 36 of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 4 and 5, identified as Documents 8, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23(a), 23(b), 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 53, 58, 59, 59(a), 60, 60(a), 62, 63(a), and 64(a). In particular, the OE redacted Document 59(a) pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 5. It redacted the other documents pursuant to Exemption 5. Id.

New York then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Appeal Letter; E-mail from Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 2, 2008. New York advances six arguments to show that the OE improperly withheld information under Exemptions 4 and 5. First, New York contends that the DOE waived its exemption claims regarding certain documents because the DOE already officially disclosed them to the public. In particular, it argues that the DOE disclosed Documents 8, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23(a), 23(b), 47, 53, 58, 59, and 60. Second, New York contends that the OE may not withhold Document 59(a) under Exemption 4 because Document 59(a) does not contain confidential commercial information. Third, New York contends that the OE cannot withhold certain communications under Exemption 5 because CRA International acted in its own interest, rather than the government's interest.[1] In particular, these communications are contained in Documents 25-29, 32-40, 43, 48, 50-51, 53, 58, and 62-64. Fourth, New York contends that the OE may not withhold any of the information under Exemption 5 because it does not contain predecisional, deliberative communications. Fifth, New York contends that the OE applied Exemptions 4 and 5 too broadly; the OE must disclose non-exempt, segregable facts. Finally,[2] New York contends that disclosing all of the withheld information is in the public interest. Id. We address New York's arguments in turn.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request, unless it falls within enumerated exemptions. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a), 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly, to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

A. Waiver

New York argues that the OE has waived its exemption claims regarding Documents 8, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23(a), 23(b), 47, 53, 58, 59, and 60, because it has already officially disclosed those documents to the public. Appeal Letter; E-mail from Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 2, 2008.

[1] New York raised this argument on September 2, after it filed its Appeal with OHA. See E-mail from Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 2, 2008. When an appellant raises a new issue in an ongoing FOIA appeal, OHA's office policy allows an additional twenty working days to address the issue. Because we received New York's e-mail submission on September 3, our deadline for issuing this Decision became October 1. New York subsequently granted OHA an extension until October 6 to issue its Decision. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General and David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Oct. 2, 2008.

[2] New York also appealed "DOE's failure to timely respond to the State's FOIA request." Appeal Letter. The DOE FOIA regulations do not allow OHA to review the timeliness of the determination issuer's response. If New York properly submitted a FOIA request and an authorizing official did not respond within the statutory deadline, it has a right of review in federal court. See 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.5(d)(1)-(4).

New York also states that the OE did not disclose Documents 54(a), 54(b), and 55, despite indicating on its index that it intended to disclose them. See E-mail from Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 2, 2008. New York states that it has contacted the OE to obtain these documents. Id. On remand, we will require the OE to disclose these documents, if it has not already done so.

An agency waives a valid exemption claim when it has "officially acknowledged" a document. An official acknowledgment must meet three criteria. First, the information requested must be as specific as the information previously disclosed. Second, the information requested must match the information previously disclosed. Third, the information requested must already have been made public through an official and documented disclosure. Wolf v. CIA, 473 F.3d 370, 378 (D.C. Cir. 2007). We read "an official and documented disclosure" to mean an authorized disclosure. EverNu Tech., LLC, 30 DOE ¶ 80,112 (TFA-0243) (Mar. 5, 2008).

A requester asserting a claim of prior disclosure has the initial burden of identifying specific information in the public domain that appears to duplicate the information that the agency is withholding pursuant to an exemption. Wolf, 473 F.3d at 378. A requester cannot rely on mere speculation. Id.

New York meets its initial burden of identifying specific information in the public domain that appears to duplicate the information that the OE is withholding by pointing to the withheld documents themselves. That is, New York argues that the withheld documents show that they have been communicated to members of the public: Document 8 is an e-mail to Doug Larson of the Western Governor's Association; Documents 14 and 19 are e-mails to Alison Silverstein, who is a former DOE employee; Document 16 is an e-mail to Brian Parsons of the National Renewable Energy Laboratory; Document 22 is an e-mail to Ken Jurman, an employee of the State of Virginia, and Mitch King of the Old Mill Power Company; Documents 23(a) and 23(b) were e-mailed to an individuals at Cornell University, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Bonneville Power Administration; Document 47 is an e-mail to Jay Loock, ostensibly of the Western Electricity Coordinating Council; Document 53 is an e-mail from Poonum Agrawal of the DOE to Alex Rudkevich of CRA International, that discusses questions raised by the State of Ohio; Document 58 is an e-mail to Alison Silverstein and Joe Eto, ostensibly of JBL; and Documents 59 and 60 are e-mails to Kurt Conger of Energy Expert Services, Inc.

Because New York points to the documents themselves to show that they have already been made public, the documents necessarily satisfy Wolf's first and second requirements, that the information match and be as specific as the information previously disclosed. Wolf's third requirement is at issue here – whether the information has been made public through an official and documented disclosure.

In order to evaluate New York's waiver argument, we contacted the OE to gather more information about the e-mail recipients. The OE informed us that the e-mail recipients of all documents except Document 60 are DOE subcontractors or consultants. See E-mails from Mark Whitenton, Deputy Assistant Secretary, Permitting, Siting and Analysis, DOE, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 9 and 11, 2008; e-mail from Theresa Brown Shute, Admin. Program Specialist, OE, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 11, 2008. Because the e-mail recipients in the documents other than Document 60 did not receive the e-mails as members of the public but as DOE subcontractors or consultants, New York has not shown that the OE has made the information public through an official and documented disclosure. Therefore, the OE has not waived its exemption claims regarding those documents.

The OE has agreed to disclose Document 60 to New York because it has already disclosed it to members of the public. The OE will disclose Documents 59(a) and 60(a) for the same reason.[3] See id.

B. Exemption 5

The OE withheld Documents 8, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23(a), 23(b), 25-30, 32-40, 43, 47-48, 50-51, 53, 58-59, 62, 63(a), and 64(a), under Exemption 5, because the documents contain predecisional, deliberative communications. New York argues that the OE improperly withheld these documents because CRA International, the contractor who participated in the communications in Documents 25-29, 32-40, 43, 48, 50-51, 53, 58, and 62-64, had a conflict of interest. New York also argues that the OE erred in withholding the documents pursuant to Exemption 5 because the documents do not contain predecisional, deliberative communications. Appeal Letter; E-mail from Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 2, 2008.

1. Authority

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, [information] must . . . satisfy two conditions: [1] its source must be a Government agency, and [2] it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8.

Information satisfies Klamath's first condition if it is an inter-agency or intra-agency communication. Id. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)). The statutory definition of "agency" is broad, and includes "any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government . . . or any independent regulatory agency." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(f)). Information prepared outside the government by a government consultant qualifies as an "intra-agency" communication except when the consultant urges the agency to support a position "that is necessarily adverse to the interests of [the consultant's] competitors." Id. at 14.

Information satisfies Klamath's second condition if it falls within "civil discovery privileges," including the deliberative process privilege. Id. at 8 (citations omitted). An agency may withhold information under the deliberative process privilege if it is "predecisional" and "deliberative." Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 866 (D.C. Cir. 1980). "[Information] . . . is 'predecisional' if it precedes, in temporal sequence, the 'decision' to which it relates." Hinckley v. United States, 140 F.3d 277, 284 (D.C. Cir. 1998). We "must be able to pinpoint an agency decision or policy to which the [information] contributed." Id. Conversely, information which explains actions an agency has already taken is not predecisional. Ryan v. Dep't of Justice, 617 F.2d 781, 791 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Information may lose its predecisional status "if it is adopted, formally or informally, as the agency position. . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

Information is deliberative if it "reflects the give-and-take" of the decision or policy-making process or "weigh[s] the pros and cons of agency adoption of one viewpoint or another." Id. The agency must identify the role the information plays in that process. Hinckley, 140 F.3d at 284 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). We "ask . . . whether the information is so candid or personal in nature that public disclosure is likely . . . to stifle honest and frank communication within the agency. . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege does not exempt purely factual information from disclosure. Petroleum Info. Corp. v. United States Dep't of the Interior, 976 F.2d 1429, 1435 (D.C. Cir. 1992). However, "[t]o the extent that predecisional materials, even if 'factual' in form, reflect an agency's preliminary positions or ruminations about how to exercise discretion on some policy matter, they are protected under Exemption 5." Id.

The deliberative process privilege routinely protects certain types of information, including "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege assures that agency employees will provide decision makers with their "uninhibited opinions" without fear that later disclosure may bring criticism. Id. The privilege also "protect[s] against premature disclosure of proposed policies before they have been . . . formulated or adopted" to avoid "misleading the public by dissemination of documents suggesting reasons and rationales . . . which were not in fact the ultimate reasons for the agency's action." Id. (citation omitted).

2. Whether the DOE Contractor's Conflict of Interest Defeats the OE's Claim of Exemption 5

New York argues that the OE improperly withheld information in Documents 25-29, 32-40, 43, 48, 50-51, 53, 58, and 62-64 because CRA International, the DOE contractor who participated in the communications contained in the documents, had a conflict of interest. See E-mail from Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 2, 2008. In particular, New York alleges that on September 26, 2006, CRA International entered into a contractual relationship with a power transmission developer, NYRI. E-mail from Maureen Leary, Attorney, State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Sept. 15, 2008. New York also alleges that CRA International represents "numerous" additional transmission developers and a trade organization for transmission developers. Finally, New York alleges that NYRI and the other transmission developers have an interest in the August 2006 Congestion Report and October 2007 NIETC designation that the DOE consulted CRA International to help prepare. Id.

In Klamath, the United States filed a water rights claim in a state court on behalf of the Klamath Tribe. Klamath, 532 U.S. at 5. The Department of the Interior (DOI) and the Klamath Tribe exchanged written memoranda on the scope of the tribe's claims. Id. A non-profit water users association that neighbors the tribe filed a FOIA request for the written memoranda between the DOI and the tribe. Id. at 7.

The Supreme Court held that the DOI could not rely upon Exemption 5 to withhold the written memoranda between the DOI and the tribe. Id. at 15. The court reasoned that the tribe did not communicate with the DOI as a disinterested agency employee would have; rather, the tribe acted as "self-advocates at the expense of others seeking [water] benefits that were inadequate to satisfy everyone." Id. at 12.

Here, CRA International's alleged conflict of interest does not meet the narrow facts of Klamath that are necessary to defeat the OE's claim of Exemption 5. That is, even if indeed CRA International does have a conflict of interest stemming from its power transmission developer clientele – which has not been shown – New York has not alleged that the conflict of interest disadvantages those seeking benefits inadequate to satisfy everyone. Therefore, we cannot find that CRA International's alleged conflict of interest defeats the OE's withholding of information under Exemption 5.

3. Whether the Information that the OE Withheld Contains Predecisional, Deliberative Communications

New York argues that the OE improperly withheld information in each of the documents pursuant to Exemption 5 because that information does not contain predecisional, deliberative communications. See Appeal Letter.

We find that the OE properly withheld the information in Documents 8, 14, 16, 22, 23(b), 25, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 53, 58, 59, 62, 63(a), and 64(a). We also find that the OE properly withheld the information in Documents 19 and 27, except the information that is segregable, as detailed below. These e-mails and memoranda are all similar in that they consist of the authors' opinions and recommendations regarding power line congestion and transmission issues, and factual material that the authors relied upon in forming those opinions and recommendations. The material is clearly predecisional, and deliberative in that it reflects the "give and take" of the decision-making process.

Document 23(a) is entitled "Defining and Measuring Transmission Corridors: Technical Plan for the DOE Congestion Study." Document 26 is entitled "Analysis of Implications of Transmission Congestion in PJM and NYISO." We will remand the portion of New York's Appeal regarding these documents so that the OE may issue a new determination to explain whether the OE has adopted them, formally or informally. That is, if the OE entirely adopted Document 23(a) or Document 26, the OE would not be able to withhold those documents under Exemption 5.

4. Segregability of Factual Information

Even if the FOIA exempts documents from disclosure, non-exempt information that is "reasonably segregable" from those documents must be disclosed after the exempt information is redacted. Johnson v. Exec. Office for United States Attorneys, 310 F.3d 771, 776 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)).

We carefully reviewed the withheld information and found non-exempt, segregable information in Documents 19 and 27. Regarding Document 19, the OE withheld the entire first page and portions of the third page, which discuss logistical planning details for a meeting. Certain details reflect upon the agency's decision-making process, and are therefore deliberative. These include the specific list of invitees, which could indicate the character of the discussion at the meeting. However, the bare logistical planning details, such as whether the meeting room has been reserved and who issues the invitations, do not reflect upon the agency's decision-making process. Therefore, we find that the OE must disclose this information. In particular, we find that the OE must disclose all information on the first page, including and above the sentence that begins, "[A]ny luck getting the rooms yet?"

Regarding Document 27, the OE withheld information on the bottom of the first page, consisting of an e-mail from Alex Rudkevich to Poonum Agrawal, sent December 18, 2006, at 8:27am. The first sentence describes a memorandum in response to particular comments from either a member of the public or a DOE consultant. This information is deliberative because it associates the e-mail's author with a position that the DOE took in response to particular comments. However, the second and third sentences merely include the e-mail author's meeting availability and his desire to discuss the scope of the project's remaining work, which is a very general topic. Therefore, we find that although the OE properly withheld the first sentence, the OE must disclose the second and third sentences.

C. Discretionary Public Interest Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release information exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if federal law permits disclosure and disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

In this case, the release of the predecisional, deliberative information that the OE withheld could adversely affect the agency's ability to obtain straightforward and frank recommendations and opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. We do not believe that discretionary release of the properly withheld material would be in the public interest. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 (Mar. 18, 1987) (Case No. KFA-0080).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of New York (New York), Case Number TFA-0271, is hereby denied regarding Documents 8, 14, 16, 22, 23(b), 25, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 53, 58, 59, 62, 63(a), 64(a), and portions of Documents 19 and 27, as explained below.

(2) New York's Appeal is granted in part regarding Documents 19 and 27. The Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE) must disclose portions of those documents, as indicated in the discussion above, or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

(3) New York's Appeal is hereby granted regarding Document 59(a), 60, and 60(a). The OE shall disclose these documents to New York.

(4) New York's Appeal regarding Documents 23(a) and 26 is remanded to the OE. The OE shall issue New York a new determination, explaining whether the OE has fully adopted them, either formally or informally.

(5) New York's Appeal regarding Documents 54(a), 54(b), and 55 is remanded to the OE, for the OE to disclose these documents to New York, if it has not done so already.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Lenard Trimmer

Date of Filing: September 9, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0272

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Lenard Trimmer filed in response to determinations that were issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Health, Safety and Security (OHSS) and National Nuclear Security Administration Albuquerque Service Center (NNSA). In those determinations, OHSS and NNSA replied to a request for documents that Mr. Trimmer submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. [1] This Appeal, if granted, would require that we remand this matter to NNSA for another search.

In his request, Mr. Trimmer sought copies of H-Division Monthly Progress Reports for September 21-October 20, 1963; January 21-February 20, 1964; March 21-June 20, 1964; and November 21-December 20, 1964; copies of H-Division Quarterly Progress Reports for July-September 1968, October-December 1970, July-September 1972 and October-December 1972; and copies of H-Division Annual Progress Reports for 1963 and 1964. These documents concern radiological monitoring that was conducted at Los Alamos National Laboratories (LANL) in connection with the Human Radiation Experiments that were performed by predecessor agencies of the DOE. On December 19, 2007, NNSA issued a determination in response to Mr. Trimmer's request. In this determination, NNSA stated that it had been informed by LANL that the documents Mr. Trimmer requested had already been released to the public, and could be accessed through the internet at one or more of four specified web sites. NNSA also referred the request to DOE Headquarters and, ultimately, to OHSS. On August 15, 2008, OHSS issued a determination stating that it had searched its files and had been unable to identify any records that are responsive to Mr. Trimmer's request.

In his Appeal, Mr. Trimmer contests the adequacy of NNSA's search for responsive documents. He argues that, in his original FOIA request and in subsequent communications with NNSA, he provided specific locations in LANL's archives at which he believed the requested records

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Associated Press
Date of Filing:	September 11, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0273

On September 11, 2008, the Associated Press (AP) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Office of the Executive Secretariat and the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) on September 4, 2008, in response to a request for documents that AP submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE expedite the processing of the AP's FOIA request.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On September 2, 2008, the AP filed a request for correspondence between each of the vice presidential candidates, Senator Joe Biden and Governor Sarah Palin, and the U. S. Department of Energy from January 2007 to the present. Letters from AP to DOE/HQ (September 2, 2008) (Request). The AP also requested expedited processing because "this information involves a vice presidential candidate up for election in November and is therefore of extremely timely value and great public interest…." Id.

On September 4, 2008, DOE/HQ denied the AP's request, arguing that the request did not establish any urgency to inform the public that would warrant expedited treatment. Letter from DOE/HQ to AP (September 4, 2008) (Determination) at 1. Further, DOE/HQ concluded that the AP did not identify any particular urgency that requires the provision of the requested information in an expedited manner.

On September 11, 2008, the AP submitted this appeal of HQ's denial of expedited processing. The AP asks that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) order DOE/HQ to expedite the processing of its FOIA request. Letter from AP to Director, OHA (September 11, 2008).

II. Analysis

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up the line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an "urgency to inform" the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a) (6) (E) (v). Our analysis in this case examines the second situation—the "urgency to inform."

In order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform," and hence a "compelling need," courts must consider at least three factors: (1) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (2) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (3) whether the request concerns federal government activity. Al-Fayed v. C.I.A., 254 F.3d.300, 310 (D.C. Cir. 2001).

Courts have found sufficient exigency to grant expedited processing in situations of an "ongoing public controversy associated with a specific time frame." Long v. Department of Homeland Security, 436 F. Supp. 2d 38 (D.D.C. 2006). Requesters have demonstrated urgency in several ways. See, e.g., Washington Post v. Department of Homeland Security, 459 F. Supp. 2d 61, 65 (D.D.C. 2006) (granting expedited processing based on public need for requested material concerning visitors to vice presidential offices and degree to which lobbyists influenced policy discussions during an ongoing investigation prior to upcoming election); Gerstein v. CIA, No. C-06-4643, 2006 WL 3462658 (N.D. Cal. November 29, 2006) (granting expedited processing because of significant interest in quickly disseminating news regarding a subject currently under debate by Congress); American Civil Liberties Union v. Department of Defense, No. C-06-01698 WHA, 2006 WL 1469418, at *6 (N.D. Cal. May 25, 2006) at *6 (holding that expedited processing was warranted for information related to a "breaking news story," i.e. a story that would lose value if it were delayed).

Courts have denied requests for expedited processing if the requester fails to demonstrate urgency. See, e.g., Long, 436 F. Supp. 2d at 43-44 (denying request due to generalized need for information and requester's failure to identify an imminent action); Electronic Privacy Info. Ctr. v. Department of Justice, 322 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2003) (concluding that plaintiff failed to demonstrate urgency because its proffer of 31 newspaper articles concerning the general subject of FOIA request did not make a story a matter of "current exigency"); Al-Fayed v. C.I.A., 254 F.3d. at 310 (finding that there is no evidence of a substantial public interest in plaintiff's allegations and that plaintiff did not demonstrate any significant adverse consequence if expedited processing was denied). See also Eugenie Reich, 29 DOE ¶ 80,289, Case No. TFA-0187 (March 5, 2007) (denying request for expedited processing because journalist did not establish urgency and did not make clear that the requested information would not be useful to her if processed within the timeframe of a normal FOIA request).

The AP argues that the information requested relates to a currently unfolding story regarding the vice presidential candidates, specifically "on whose behalf and in what issues they may have intervened with the Department of Energy." Appeal at 1. The AP also contends that any delay in release of the information will harm the public interest in knowing before the election the extent of the candidates' involvement with the agency and if any intervention has affected any DOE action. [1]

In its determination, DOE states that the AP "ha[s] not demonstrated the urgency that exists that would warrant expedited treatment of the request." Determination at 1. DOE further advised the AP that DOE "cannot conduct a search on Governor Palin's administration without the names of individuals in her administration." Determination at 1. DOE asked the requester to provide the names of individuals for whom the search should be conducted. Id. We contacted DOE/HQ, and they explained that their decision to deny expedited processing was based on the lack of specificity in the AP request. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Chris Morris, FOIA /Privacy Act Officer, DOE/HQ, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Staff Attorney, OHA (September 17, 2008).

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that the AP has not established a compelling need for expedited processing of its request. First, the AP has not demonstrated that the correspondence of the vice presidential candidates, if any exists, is a matter of current exigency to the American public. It is true that the upcoming elections are important and that voters have a right to be informed. However, "[t]he public's right to know, although a significant and important value, would not by itself be sufficient to satisfy [the "urgency to inform"] standard." Al-Fayed, 254 F.3d at 310. Substantial interest on the part of the American public does not amount to exigency. Electronic Privacy Information Center, 322 F. Supp. 2d at 5. Second, the AP has not made clear that the requested information will not be useful if processed within the timeframe of a normal FOIA request (i.e. 20 working days). The fact that the election will take place in approximately 30 days does not demonstrate the requisite urgency. [2] Finally, the requested correspondence between the vice presidential candidates and DOE, if it exists, is not a "breaking news story" in this context. In case law related to expedited processing, a "breaking news story" is one that conveys information the public wants quickly, and that would lose value if it were delayed. American Civil Liberties Union, 2006 WL 1469418 at *6. The AP has not presented any "significant adverse consequence" that would result to a recognized interest if expedited processing of this request were denied. See Al Fayed, 254 F.3d at 311; American Civil Liberties Union, 2006 WL 1469418 at *8. I conclude that the AP argument that the candidates may have intervened in DOE activities is speculative and is not a "breaking news story" requiring expedited processing. Those instances where courts have granted an appellant's request for expedited processing have involved high profile stories such as investigations into the alleged influence of lobbyists on the vice president, and investigations into a controversial Department of Defense database that collected information on political protesters. See

[1] The AP also argues that its request involves federal government activities. We agree with this argument.

[2] Under regular processing, the information would be released to the requester, if permitted by law, in sufficient time prior to the election for dissemination to the public.

Washington Post, 459 F. Supp. 2d at 61 (granting expedited processing of newspaper's request to Secret Service for logs of visitors to Vice President Cheney and members of his staff); American Civil Liberties Union, 2006 WL 1469418 at *1 (granting expedited processing of request for documents collected under controversial DOD program designed to gather information on terrorism and threats to military bases).

For the reasons stated above, we find that the AP has not established any urgency for the release of the requested material. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by The Associated Press on September 11, 2008, OHA Case Number TFA-0273, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: State of New York

Date of Filing: September 11, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0274

This Decision concerns the State of New York's (New York) Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE) issued to it on August 8, 2008. In that determination, the OE responded to New York's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, the OE withheld information in four documents under FOIA Exemption 5. If we grant this Appeal, the OE may not withhold the information under FOIA Exemption 5.

I. Background

New York filed a request with the OE for correspondence the DOE had with CRA International and transmission developers or stakeholders regarding an August 2006 Congestion Study and an October 2007 National Interest Electric Transmission Corridor [NIETC] Designation Order. Determination Letter. The OE provided more than 33 responsive documents in a numbered index. The documents consist of e-mails and memoranda among the OE, CRA International, and additional consultants. The OE redacted four of the documents pursuant to Exemption 5, Documents 1, 2, 2(b), and 3. Id.

New York then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Appeal Letter. New York advances five arguments to show that the OE improperly withheld information under Exemption 5. First, New York contends that the DOE waived its exemption claims to the extent that the DOE already officially disclosed the documents to the public. Second, New York contends that the OE may not withhold any of the information under Exemption 5 because it does not contain predecisional, deliberative communications. Third, New York contends that the OE applied Exemption 5 too broadly; the OE must disclose non-exempt, segregable facts. Fourth, New York contends that if "pre-decisional positions were adopted by DOE as a part of its final action, that information is subject to disclosure." Finally,[1] New York contends that disclosing all of the withheld information is in the public interest. Id. We address New York's arguments in turn.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request, unless it falls within enumerated exemptions. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a), 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly, to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

A. Waiver

New York argues that if the OE has disclosed any of the withheld information to the public, it has waived its claim of exemption. Appeal Letter.

An agency waives a valid exemption claim when it has "officially acknowledged" a document. An official acknowledgment must meet three criteria. First, the information requested must be as specific as the information previously disclosed. Second, the information requested must match the information previously disclosed. Third, the information requested must already have been made public through an official and documented disclosure. Wolf v. CIA, 473 F.3d 370, 378 (D.C. Cir. 2007). We read "an official and documented disclosure" to mean an authorized disclosure. EverNu Tech., LLC, 30 DOE ¶ 80,112 (Case No. TFA-0243) (Mar. 5, 2008).[2]

A requester asserting a claim of prior disclosure has the initial burden of identifying specific information in the public domain that appears to duplicate the information that the agency is withholding pursuant to an exemption. Wolf, 473 F.3d at 378. A requester cannot rely on mere speculation. Id.

New York has not met its initial burden; it has not identified specific information in the public domain that appears to duplicate the information that the OE withheld. Therefore, we may not find that the OE waived its claim of exemption.

[1] New York also appealed "DOE's failure to timely respond to the State's December 2007 FOIA request." Appeal Letter. The DOE FOIA regulations do not allow OHA to review the timeliness of the determination issuer's response. If New York properly submitted a FOIA request and an authorizing official did not respond within the statutory deadline, it has a right of review in federal court. See 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.5(d)(1)-(4).

B. Exemption 5

New York argues that the OE improperly withheld information under Exemption 5 because the withheld information does not contain predecisional, deliberative communications. See Appeal Letter.

1. Authority

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, [information] must . . . satisfy two conditions: [1] its source must be a Government agency, and [2] it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8.

Information satisfies Klamath's first condition if it is an inter-agency or intra-agency communication. Id. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)). The statutory definition of "agency" is broad, and includes "any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government . . . or any independent regulatory agency." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(f)). Information prepared outside the government by a government consultant qualifies as an "intra-agency" communication except when the consultant urges the agency to support a position "that is necessarily adverse to the interests of [the consultant's] competitors." Id. at 14.

Information satisfies Klamath's second condition if it falls within "civil discovery privileges," including the deliberative process privilege. Id. at 8 (citations omitted). An agency may withhold information under the deliberative process privilege if it is "predecisional" and "deliberative." Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 866 (D.C. Cir. 1980). "[Information] . . . is 'predecisional' if it precedes, in temporal sequence, the 'decision' to which it relates." Hinckley v. United States, 140 F.3d 277, 284 (D.C. Cir. 1998). We "must be able to pinpoint an agency decision or policy to which the [information] contributed." Id. Conversely, information which explains actions an agency has already taken is not predecisional. Ryan v. Dep't of Justice, 617 F.2d 781, 791 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Information may lose its predecisional status "if it is adopted, formally or informally, as the agency position. . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

Information is deliberative if it "reflects the give-and-take" of the decision or policy-making process or "weigh[s] the pros and cons of agency adoption of one viewpoint or another." Id. The agency must identify the role the information plays in that process. Hinckley, 140 F.3d at 284 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). We "ask . . . whether the information is so candid or personal in nature that public disclosure is likely . . . to stifle honest and frank communication within the agency. . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege does not exempt purely factual information from disclosure. Petroleum Info. Corp. v. United States Dep't of the Interior, 976 F.2d 1429, 1435 (D.C. Cir. 1992). However, "[t]o the extent that predecisional materials, even if 'factual' in form, reflect an agency's preliminary positions or ruminations about how to exercise discretion on some policy matter, they are protected under Exemption 5." Id.

The deliberative process privilege routinely protects certain types of information, including "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege assures that agency employees will provide decision makers with their "uninhibited opinions" without fear that later disclosure may bring criticism. Id. The privilege also "protect[s] against premature disclosure of proposed policies before they have been . . . formulated or adopted" to avoid "misleading the public by dissemination of documents suggesting reasons and rationales . . . which were not in fact the ultimate reasons for the agency's action." Id. (citation omitted).

2. Whether the Information that the OE Withheld Contains Predecisional, Deliberative Communications

New York argues that the OE improperly withheld information in each of the documents under Exemption 5 because that information does not contain predecisional, deliberative communications. See Appeal Letter.

We find that the OE properly withheld the information in each document, except the information in Document 2(b), as detailed below. The documents are predecisional because they were created in March 2006 – before the DOE issued the August 2006 Congestion Study and October 2007 Designation Order.

The withheld information in Documents 1 and 2 is also deliberative. It consists of the same e-mail, instructing DOE employees and consultants how to assemble a table of commenters' remarks. Although the instructions do not substantively discuss any particular comment, they recommend how DOE employees and consultants should process the information. Therefore, the information is deliberative because it influences substantive choices in the policy-making process.

The withheld information in Document 3 is similarly deliberative. It is an e-mail suggesting that DOE employees and consultants discuss a particular issue at an upcoming meeting. The information is deliberative because the consultant's suggestion is a policy choice to examine that issue.

Lastly, some of the withheld information in Document 2(b) is deliberative and some of it is not. Document 2(b) consists of a table. Each of the ten pages lists commenters. The first and second pages contain deliberative information. They feature column space to briefly summarize commenters' definitions "of a corridor designation," and allow for the categorization of commenters' responses. On both pages, the columns categorizing commenters' responses feature check marks, and on the first page, the column space for summaries of commenters' definitions is filled in. This information is deliberative because the check marks and summaries reflect how DOE employees and consultants evaluated the information. The commenters' names on the first and second pages are not deliberative and therefore consist of segregable factual information, as detailed below.

3. Segregability of Factual Information

Even if the FOIA exempts documents from disclosure, non-exempt information that is "reasonably segregable" from those documents must be disclosed after the exempt information is redacted. Johnson v. Exec. Office for United States Attorneys, 310 F.3d 771, 776 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)).

We carefully reviewed the withheld information and found non-exempt, segregable information in Document 2(b). As discussed above, the OE properly withheld the columns on the first and second pages of Document 2(b) consisting of summaries and categorizations of commenters' responses. Without this information connecting the commenters' names to particular responses, the commenters' names are purely factual and therefore segregable. We find that the commenters' names on pages one and two consist of segregable factual information that the OE may not withhold under Exemption 5.

Similarly, we find that the OE may not withhold pages three through ten of Document 2(b) under Exemption 5. Those pages do not have columns that list DOE employees and consultant's summaries of comments or their categorization of comments. Instead, those eight pages merely include columns for categories labeled "Criteria 1" through "Criteria 8" and "Other." The document does not explain the criteria. Moreover, the columns are blank. As a result, these eight pages do not reflect the policy opinions or reflections of DOE employees and consultants. Therefore, we find that pages three through ten consist of segregable factual information that the OE may not withhold under Exemption 5.

4. Whether the OE Adopted the Withheld Information as an Agency Position

As stated above, information may lose its predecisional status "if it is adopted, formally or informally, as the agency position. . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866. New York asks us to consider whether the information that the OE withheld has lost its predecisional status.

We find that it has not. The information does not consist of an agency position; it consists of a series of instructional e-mails and a table contributing to one or more agency positions. Therefore, we find that the OE cannot have adopted it as an agency position.

C. Discretionary Public Interest Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release information exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if federal law permits disclosure and disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

In this case, the release of the predecisional, deliberative information that the OE withheld could adversely affect the agency's ability to obtain straightforward and frank recommendations and opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. We do not believe that discretionary release of the properly withheld material would be in the public interest. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 (Mar. 18, 1987) (Case No. KFA-0080).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of New York, Case Number TFA-0274, is hereby denied regarding Documents 1, 2, and 3. It is granted in part regarding Document 2(b), as set forth below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) In Document 2(b), the OE must either disclose pages three through ten and the commenters' names on page two, or issue a new determination, justifying their withholding.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Judy A. Meyer
Date of Filing:	September 19, 2008
Case Number:	TFA-0275

On September 19, 2008, Judy A. Meyer filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (OLM). In that determination, OLM responded to a request for information that Ms. Meyer filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OLM to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On July 31, 2008, Ms. Meyer submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), for a "copy of the Radiation Dose Report, Training Records and Employment Records" of her deceased husband, Gary Lee Meyer, who worked at the Fernald Site from January 1993 to August 1993. See Routine Employee Record Request from Judy A. Meyer (August 4, 2008) (FOIA Request). DOE/FOIA forwarded the request to OLM because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office. See Letter from Verlette L. Gatlin, Deputy Director, DOE/FOIA to Judy A. Meyer (July 31, 2008).

OLM conducted a search of its records and located and released copies of Mr. Meyer's medical, radiological, and training records but were unable to locate Mr. Meyer's employment file. See Letter from John V. Montgomery, Freedom of Information Officer, OLM, to Judy A. Meyer (August 18, 2008) (Determination Letter). On September 19, 2008, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Ms. Meyer's Appeal in which she requested an additional search for her husband's employment records. See Letter from Judy Meyer to OHA (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[1]

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted OLM to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See Email from Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to John Montgomery, Freedom of Information Officer, OLM (September 22, 2008). OLM informed us that it conducted a thorough search of the records database[2] using Mr. Meyer's name and social security number and located copies of Mr. Meyer's medical,[3] radiological, and training records, but not his employment records. See September Email.

According to OLM records, Mr. Meyer's files indicated that he worked at the Fernald Site[4] under a subcontract to either Lockheed Martin Environmental or Rust Engineering.[5] Id. At the Fernald Site, subcontractor records which related to site operations such as medical, radiological and training were maintained as Federal records. See October 8, 2008, Email. Records relating to employment such as personnel and benefits were maintained and retained by the subcontractor. Id. In this instance, it is unlikely that subcontractor employee records would have been designated as government-owned records. See October 22, 2008, Email. Thus, the Fernald Site would not have kept a personnel file or employment records for Mr. Meyer. [6] See October 8, 2008, Email. Those records would have been maintained by the company that he worked for, in this case either Lockheed Martin Environmental or Rust Engineering.[7] Id.

[2] The electronic records database contains a listing of all government records which have been archived from the Fernald site, as well as other Legacy Management sites, to Federal Records Centers. See Email from John Montgomery, AIM Team Leader, OLM, to Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (September 23, 2008) (September Email).

[3] OLM did not provide a copy of Mr. Meyer's medical file because it was not requested in Ms. Meyer's July 31, 2008, FOIA request.

[4] In the case of Fernald and many other DOE sites, the Management and Operating contracts were awarded to a large private-sector Prime contractor with Federal Government oversight. In these environments, the Prime contractor employed many smaller subcontractors (e.g. Lockheed Martin Environmental and Rust Engineering) to accomplish specific or routine tasks. The Prime contractor at the Fernald Site during 1993 was Fluor Corporation (the original request states Mr. Meyer worked at Fernald from January 1993 to August 1993). See Email from John Montgomery, AIM Team Leader, OLM, to Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (October 8, 2008) (October 8, 2008, Email).

[5] Generally, in DOE contracts there is an ownership of records clause that defines government-owned and contractor-owned records. See Email from John Montgomery, AIM Team Leader, OLM, to Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (October 22, 2008) (October 22, 2008, Email). OLM conducted a complete and thorough search of relevant documents at the National Archives and could not locate the contracts that would specify ownership of either Lockheed Martin Environmental or Rust Engineering's employment records. Id.

[6] According to OLM, the only location where the subcontractor's employment records would exist is within that company. See October 22, 2008, Email.

[7] Mrs. Meyer may consider contacting Lockheed Martin Environmental or Rust Engineering to request a copy of Mr. Meyer's employment records.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that OLM performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to Ms. Meyer's request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, Ms. Meyer's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ms. Judy A. Meyer on September 19, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0275, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioners:	Mark Steven Ludwig Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr.
Dates of Filing:	September 24, 2008 September 29, 2008
Case Numbers:	TFA-0276 TFA-0278

On September 24 and September 29, 2008, Mark Steven Ludwig and Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr. (Appellants), respectively, filed appeals from determinations issued to them on August 29, 2008, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center in Albuquerque, New Mexico (NNSA/SC). In the two determinations, NNSA/SC responded to a request for documents that each Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. At issue in this case is NNSA/SC's determination withholding in its entirety a report (and the majority of its appendices) authored by Norman Bay and John Kern (Bay Report) from each Appellant under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. NNSA withheld the Bay Report and most of its appendices, claiming it was protected by the attorney work-product and attorney-client privileges. The Appellants challenge NNSA/SC's withholding of the Bay Report and its appendices under Exemptions 5. Specifically, they allege that the New Mexico Court of Appeals in Gingrich v. Sandia Corp, 142 N.M. 359 (2007) (Gingrich), found that these privileges had been waived by Sandia. Consequently, they argue that NNSA/SC may no longer justify withholding the Bay Report and its appendices pursuant to Exemption 5.[1] This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to release the Bay Report and its appendices to the Appellants. [2]

I. Background

The Bay Report was created pursuant to a request of Sandia Corporation (Sandia). Sandia received allegations from two Sandia Ethics Office investigators who claimed their work was being impeded and that they were being retaliated against by Sandia managers as a result of their investigation. Because such allegations would have been investigated by the complaining Ethics

[1] In Gingrich, the New Mexico Court of Appeals, citing Rule 11-511 of the New Mexico Rules Annotated regarding waiver of privileges, upheld a District Court Judge's finding that Sandia had waived the attorney-client privilege with regard to the Bay Report through its disclosure of the Bay Report to the plaintiff in the underlying litigation, as well as its "extrajudicial" disclosure to members of Congress and representatives of the Department of Energy. Id at 363. The Court also held that Sandia had also waived attorney work-product privilege for all such Bay Report-related documents that had been similarly communicated to others. Id. at 368.

[2] We will reference the Bay Report and the withheld appendices henceforth as the "Bay Report."

Office investigators themselves, Sandia retained Norman Bay (Bay), a professor of law at the University of New Mexico, to conduct an investigation.

In requests dated February 19, 2008, the appellants each sought from NNSA/SC various documents including the Bay report and all associated appendices. NNSA/SC sent each of the Appellants a determination letter regarding their requests in which the appellants were supplied a number of requested documents. However, NNSA/SC withheld the Bay Report and almost all of the appendices from both Appellants pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA.[3] Specifically, NNSA/SC asserted that the Bay Report and its appendices were protected by the attorney work-product and attorney-client privileges and thus were appropriately withheld pursuant to Exemption 5, which exempts documents which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency.

The Appellants challenge NNSA/SC's determination on one sole ground. As referenced above, the Appellants direct our attention to the New Mexico Court of Appeals' decision in Gingrich to support their argument that Sandia has waived the two privileges that formed the basis of NNSA/SC's invocation of Exemption 5. Consequently, they contend, the Bay Report may not be withheld under Exemption 5.

II. Analysis

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified several traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion, including but not limited to the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In withholding the Bay Report from the Appellants, NNSA/SC relied upon the attorney-client and attorney work-product privileges of Exemption 5.

Given the facts presented to us, we cannot conclude that the Bay Report may be withheld under Exemption 5 pursuant to the attorney-client or attorney work-product privileges. We have previously held that Sandia can not be considered an agency for purposes of the FOIA. Caroline C. Roberts, 27 DOE ¶ 80,284 (Case No. TFA-0023) (April 25, 2003).[4] The attorney-client privilege "covers facts divulged by a client to his or her attorney, and also covers opinions that the attorney gives the client based upon those facts. The privilege permits nondisclosure of an attorney's opinion or advice in order to protect the secrecy of the underlying facts." Washington

[3] Each of the Appellants were provided three letters contained in the appendices which related to communications from the Appellant's attorney.

[4] There is no evidence before us that would indicate that the Bay Report was created at the behest of NNSA or as part of a decision making process of NNSA. Consequently, we can not find that the Bay Report is an "intra- or inter-agency" document for the purposes of FOIA.

Electric Cooperative/Downs Rachlin Martin PLLC, 29 DOE ¶ 80,264 (Case No. TFA-0141) (August 3, 2006) (citing Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977)) (citation omitted). The attorney work-product privilege protects any document prepared in anticipation of litigation by and for the attorney. In re Special September 1978 Grand Jury, 640 F. 2d 49, 62 (7th Cir. 1980) (1978 Grand Jury). The attorney-client privilege belongs to the client and the attorney work-product privilege belongs to the client or the attorney. 1978 Grand Jury, 640 F. 2d at 62. Because Sandia, and not NNSA/SC, engaged Bay as its attorney to prepare the report, the only relevant attorney-client or attorney work-product privilege as to the Bay Report would belong to Sandia or Bay and not to NNSA/SC. Consequently, we find that NNSA/SC has no standing to assert the two privileges cited in its determination letter to the Appellants. We will therefore remand this matter to NNSA/SC to release the Bay Report to the Appellants or issue another determination to the Appellants justifying withholding the Bay Report. [5]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed by Mark Steven Ludwig, Case No. TFA-0276 (submitted on September 24, 2008) and Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr., Case No. TFA-0278 (submitted on September 29, 2008) are hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center for further proceedings as described in the decision above.

[5] In its reply to the appeal filed by the Appellants, NNSA has raised the possibility that Exemption 6 regarding personal information may apply to the Bay Report. While we will not consider the applicability of Exemption 6 in this decision since NNSA did not invoke Exemption 6 in its determination letters, NNSA on remand may consider whether Exemption 6 is applicable to the Bay Report.

In making its new determination, NNSA may also wish to consider the applicability of Exemption 4 to the Bay Report. See Charles Varnadore, 24 DOE ¶ 80,123 (Case No. LFA-0375) (July 21, 1994) (attorney-client and attorney work-product documents submitted to agency from non-agency counsel found to be protected from disclosure by Exemption 4).

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Eugenie Reich

Date of Filing: September 29, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0279

On September 29, 2008 1/ , Eugenie Reich (Reich) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on January 15, 2008, by the FOIA and Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ) in response to a request for documents that Reich submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ release responsive material.

I. Background

In December 2006, Reich filed a FOIA request with DOE/HQ seeking: (1) records that would identify the members of a panel convened to investigate allegations of fraud and research misconduct at Oak Ridge National Laboratory in 2006; and (2) the final investigation report from the panel. 2/ On January 15, 2008, DOE/HQ issued a determination which stated that the DOE Office of Science (DOE/OS) conducted a search of its files for responsive documents. According to DOE/OS, that search located one document responsive to Reich's request, "the draft document 'Report on Allegations of Research Misconduct'"(hereinafter referred to as "Draft Report"). Letter from DOE/HQ to Reich, January 15, 2008 (Determination Letter). According to DOE/HQ, the responsive document is a "draft copy of a report of an investigation into allegations of research misconduct or fraud in connection with work that was carried out by an Agency contractor, UT-Battelle." DOE/HQ further stated that this document was being withheld in its entirety pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6

[1] Reich submitted a detailed justification for the delay in filing her appeal of the agency's determination beyond the 30-day appeal period provided in DOE's regulations. See C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Before proceeding with this appeal, we also confirmed with DOE/HQ and DOE/OGC that the factual and legal bases for the agency's determination are still applicable; that is, that the determination has not been rendered moot by the passage of time or by events having occurred during the period between the issuance of the determination and the date of the appeal.

[2] These are the same documents that were the subject of the request that led to two prior appeals. See Eugenie Reich, 29 DOE ¶ 80,289 (2007); Eugenie Reich, 29 DOE ¶ 80,315 (2007).

of the FOIA. Id. On September 29, 2008, Reich filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Reich asserts that the responsive document was improperly withheld under Exemptions 5 and 6 and asks OHA to order DOE/HQ to release the responsive document. See Appeal Letter.

Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975). The courts have identified three traditional privileges that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "predecisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corporation v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In withholding the responsive document from Reich, DOE/HQ relied upon the "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5.

The "deliberative process" privilege of Exemption 5 permits the government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. Sears, 421 U.S. at 150. It is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Cl. Ct. 1958)). The ultimate purpose of the exemption is to protect the quality of agency decisions. Sears, 421 U.S. at 151. In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a document must be both predecisional, i.e. generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e. reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The exemption thus covers documents that reflect, among other things, the personal opinion of the reviewers rather than the final policy of the agency. Id.

After reviewing the requested document, we have concluded that the determination made by DOE/OS in applying Exemption 5 was correct and consistent with the principles outlined above. First, the document withheld from Reich consists of comments, preliminary findings and opinions prepared by an independent investigating committee and intended only for internal DOE use. In her Appeal, Reich asserts, inter alia, that the Report does not meet the threshold test of "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandum." We disagree and find that the information requested in this case properly falls within the definition of "intra-agency memoranda" pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Courts have routinely held that documents provided by an agency's contractor employees or by outside consultants may be considered "intra-agency memoranda" for the purposes of Exemption 5. The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit observed in Ryan v. Department of Justice that "Congress apparently did not intend 'inter-agency or intra-agency' to be rigidly exclusive terms, but rather to include [nearly any record] that is part of the deliberative process." Ryan v. Department of Justice, 617 F.2d 781 (D.C. Cir. 1980). The court included in this category recommendations from Members of Congress, recommendations from judges and special prosecutors, recommendations from an agency to a commission established to assist another agency's policymaking, and documents provided by an agency's contractor employees. See Ryan, 617 F.2d at 790; see also Sakamoto v. EPA, 443 F. Supp. 2d 1182, 1191 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (upholding agency's invocation of Exemption 5 to protect documents prepared by private contractor hired to perform audit for agency). Furthermore, courts have applied a common-sense approach to documents generated by consultants outside of an agency and found that these documents generally qualify for Exemption 5 protection because in the exercise of their functions, agencies have "a special need for the opinions and recommendations of temporary consultants." See Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067, 1078 n.44 (D.C. Cir. 1971); cf. CNA Fin. Corp. v. Donovan, 830 F.2d 1132, 1161 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (observing the importance of outside consultants in deliberative process privilege context). The independent investigation committee in this case clearly serves the needs of the agency. 3/

Second, the comments, recommendations and opinions contained in the Draft Report are clearly predecisional and deliberative. DOE/HQ asserts that the responsive document at issue is a draft, and is marked as a draft, and "the evidence suggests that the final version of the Draft Report, on which Agency officials received a briefing, differed from the draft copy, as the draft Report consisted only of the first sixteen pages of text, and did not include Appendices A-I." Determination Letter. In addition, it asserts that Exemption 5 protects against "the premature disclosure of draft documents before they are finally adopted and against public confusion that might result from disclosure of reasons and rationales that were not in fact ultimately the grounds for any agency's decision." Id. We agree. This Draft Report discusses observations and findings that were subject to further agency review and do not represent final agency position. Accordingly, we hold that the Draft Report was properly withheld in its entirety under the Exemption 5 deliberative process privilege.

Public Interest Determination

The fact that material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not necessarily preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In this case, no public interest would be served by release of the withheld material in the documents at issue, which consists solely of advisory opinions, observations and findings provided to DOE in the consultative process. The release of this deliberative material could have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of DOE consultants to make honest and open recommendations concerning similar matters in the future could well be compromised. If DOE consultants were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. Fulbright & Jaworski, 15 DOE ¶ 80,122 at 80,560 (1987).

[3] We note that Reich, in her assertion that the Draft Report does not meet the "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandum" threshold test of Exemption 5, discusses the Klamath case. In a recent case, we interpreted the holding in Klamath narrowly. On the basis of our interpretation of Klamath, its ruling does not apply in this case. See State of New York, 30 DOE ¶____(2008).

Exemption 6 of the FOIA protects from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a document may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the document may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 746 F.2d 1,3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989). Third, the agency must balance the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the document would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

In this case, DOE/HQ found a privacy interest in the identities and personal information of ORNL employees being investigated regarding allegations of research misconduct as well as in the names of the outside investigators tasked with examining the allegations. Because of the obvious possibility of harassment, intimidation, or other personal intrusions, the courts have consistently recognized significant privacy interests in the identities of individuals whose names are contained in investigative documents. Safecard Services, Inc. v. S.E.C., 926 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991); KTVY-TV v. United States, 919 F.2d 1465, 1469 (10th Cir. 1990) (finding that withholding identity necessary to avoid harassment of individual). Accordingly, our office has followed the courts' lead. James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80, 117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1990).

In Reporters Committee, the Supreme Court narrowed the scope of the public interest in the context of the FOIA. The Court found that only information which contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the Government is within "the ambit of the public interest which the FOIA was enacted to serve." Id. The Court therefore found that unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also National Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990). Reich asserts that there is a public interest, specifically in the "sense of public oversight of government operations," in knowing identities in the Draft Report. See Appeal Letter at 7. We disagree. We fail to see how release of the identities of individuals in the present case would inform the public about the operations and activities of Government. Releasing the names and identifying information of ORNL employees being investigated as well as the names and identifying information of the outside investigators would add little to the public's analysis of any allegations of misconduct, but would rather "have a chilling effect on future independent researchers' willingness to participate in the important process of peer-reviewing one another's work." See Determination Letter at 2. Accordingly, we find that there is little or no public interest in disclosure of the individuals' identities.

After weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against a minimal public interest, we find that release of information revealing an individual's identity would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Therefore, we find that the identities of individuals in the Draft Report were properly withheld under Exemption 6.

III. Conclusion

We have reviewed and considered all of Reich's arguments. For the reasons stated above, we have determined that DOE/HQ properly applied Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA in withholding the responsive document at issue from Reich. Therefore, Reich's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Eugenie Reich on September 29, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0279, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

November 10, 2008

Appeal

Petitioner: Susan P. Meacham

Filing Date: October 15, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0280

This Decision concerns Susan P. Meacham's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) issued to her on September 10, 2008. In that determination, the ORO responded to Ms. Meacham's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ORO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

Sterling Meacham, Ms. Meacham's late husband, worked at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL). Appeal Letter. She filed a FOIA request with the ORO for his medical records. Id. The ORO did not find them. Determination Letter. Ms. Meacham then filed the present Appeal with OHA. Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a FOIA request for information, the courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (Dec. 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).[1]

We contacted the ORO to request additional information so that we could evaluate its search. We learned that the ORO searched for medical records at the K-25 site because that was Mr. Meacham's last employment site, which is most likely to have his records. E-mail from Amy L. Rothrock, FOIA Officer, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Oct. 30, 2008. The ORO's search for responsive documents also included the DOE Records Holding Area, the ORNL, the Oak Ridge Associated Universities, and the Energy Employee Occupational Illness Program Act files. Paper files and electronic documents were searched by Mr. Meacham's name, date of birth, and social security number, which were the most useful search terms.[2] See id.

Based on this information, we conclude that the ORO's search for responsive documents was reasonably calculated to uncover the information that Ms. Meacham requested, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Ms. Meacham's Appeal.

(1) The Appeal that Susan P. Meacham filed on October 15, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0280, is denied.

Poli A. Marmolejos
Director
Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: November 10, 2008

[2] After the ORO sent Ms. Meacham its determination letter, employees at the K-25 facility searched again and found responsive medical records that they initially overlooked. E-mail from Amy L. Rothrock, FOIA Officer, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Oct. 30, 2008. The ORO has provided them to Ms. Meacham. Id.

We note that the fact that responsive records were found after the ORO completed its search does not render its otherwise adequate search inadequate. "[A] search need not be perfect, only adequate, and adequacy is measured by the reasonableness of the effort in light of the specific request." Meeropol v. Meese, 790 F.2d 942, 956 (D.C. Cir. 1986). Therefore, "[A] search is not unreasonable simply because it fails to produce all relevant [information]. . . ." Id. at 952-53.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: Charles D. Saunders

Filing Date: December 2, 2008

Case Number: TFA-0282

This Decision concerns Charles D. Saunders' Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (OLM) issued to him on November 20, 2008. In that determination, the OLM responded to Mr. Saunders' request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the OLM to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

Mr. Saunders worked at the DOE's Rocky Flats Site. On April 28, 2008, he filed a FOIA request with the OLM seeking "(1) notes from the Criticality Engineering Department about radiation levels in Building 707, and (2) calculations for any amounts of plutonium recovered from the duct work in Building 881." October 28, 2008, Letter (the Gatlin Letter) from Verlette L. Gatlin, Deputy Director, Office of Information Resources (OIR), to Mr. Saunders at 1. In a letter dated June 12, 2008, the OLM informed Mr. Saunders that he did not reasonably describe the records he was requesting in part (1) and would therefore be required to reformulate that part of his request. That letter also informed Saunders that the OLM's search for documents responsive to part (2) of his request did not locate any responsive documents.

As a result of consultations with OIR, Mr. Saunders' reformulated part (1) of his request to "seek any studies that indicate the amount of radiation or plutonium absorbed by employees from 45 minutes of exposure to ingots of plutonium in building 707 from June 1984 to June 1985." Gatlin Letter at 1. On November 20, 2008, OLM issued a Determination Letter in which it stated that its search under the reformulated request had not located any responsive documents. On December 2, 2008, Mr. Saunders filed the present Appeal with OHA.[1]

II. Analysis

In responding to a FOIA request for information, the courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't

of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., (Case No. VFA-0098) (1995) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).[2]

We contacted the OLM to request additional information so that we could evaluate its search. We learned that the OLM conducted electronic searches in the OLM's Electronic Recordkeeping System (ERKS) for studies that indicate the amount of radiation or plutonium absorbed by employees from 45 minutes of exposure to ingots of plutonium in building 707 from June 1984 to June 1985. OLM informed us that "[s]earch terms utilized were: ingot and plutonium; ingot and pu; ingot and study; ingot and dose; 45 and minute and plutonium; 45 and minute and pu; 45 and minute and study; 45 and minute and ingot; 45 and minute and dose; Forty-five and minute and plutonium; Forty-five and minute and pu; Forty-five and minute and study; Forty-five and minute and ingot; and Forty-five and minute and dose." December 11, 2008, Electronic Mail Message from John V. Montgomery, Freedom of Information Act Officer, Office of Legacy Management to Steven L. Fine, OHA Staff Attorney. As a result of this search, no responsive documents were located.

Based on this information, we conclude that the OLM's search for responsive documents was reasonably calculated to uncover the information described in Mr. Saunders' reformulated request, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Mr. Saunders' Appeal.

(1) The Appeal that Charles D. Saunders filed on December 2, 2008, OHA Case No. TFA-0282, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Donald R. Jackson
Date of Filing:	January 5, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0284

On January 5, 2009, Donald R. Jackson filed an Appeal from a determination issued to Representative Artur Davis of Alabama on Mr. Jackson's behalf. The Oak Ridge Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued the determination on November 25, 2008, in response to a request for documents that Representative Davis submitted under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/ORO perform an additional search for responsive material and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

On October 23, 2008, Representative Davis filed a Privacy Act request with DOE/ORO on behalf of Mr. Jackson for copies of all "work, medical, and exposure records" related to Mr. Jackson, who was previously employed at the DOE Oak Ridge site. Letter from Elizabeth Dillon, Authorizing Official, to The Honorable Artur Davis (November 25, 2008) (Determination Letter). DOE/ORO sent a copy of Mr. Jackson's radiation exposure records to Representative Davis, but stated that it could not find any personnel or medical records. Id. In the Appeal, Mr. Jackson challenged the adequacy of the search. Letter from Mr. Jackson to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (January 5, 2009) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

The Privacy Act (PA) generally requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. 552a (d). The Act defines a "system of records as a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a (a) (5). [1]

This case concerns a request for information filed under the PA. We require a search for relevant records under the PA to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA, where it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990); see also Gary Maroney, Case No. TFA-0267 (2008). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, Case No.TFA-0015 (2003).[2]

We contacted DOE/ORO to request additional information so that we could evaluate the search for Mr. Jackson's records. Electronic Mail Message from Elizabeth Dillon, DOE/ORO to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Staff Attorney, OHA (January 8, 2009). On October 28, 2008, DOE/ORO requested that Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU) perform a search for Mr. Jackson's personnel, medical and radiation exposure records. ORAU searched the Radiation Exposure Information and Reporting System (REIRS) and the DOE Radiation Exposure Monitoring System (REMS), and found responsive radiation exposure records. DOE/ORO released those documents to Representative Davis on Mr. Jackson's behalf. However, ORAU was unable to locate any responsive personnel or medical records. DOE/ORO then requested an additional search, and ORAU expanded its search to include additional databases.[3] ORAU did not find any additional responsive material.

[1] The Privacy Act adopts the FOIA definition of agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a (a)(1). The FOIA defines "agency" as any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . ., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f).

[3] ORAU searched files at ORAU Human Resources and the Comparative Animal Research Laboratory (CARL) for personnel records. ORAU searched the following files for medical records: (1) ORAU Human Resources, Occupational Medicine; (2) Beryllium (BESIS)-Occupational Exposure and Worker Health (OEWH); and (3) Oak Ridge Institute for Nuclear Studies Hospital files from 1947 to 1975. In the expanded search, ORAU searched the following files for radiation exposure records: (1) ORAU Environment, Safety & Health student and employee database; and (2) Accident Registry of the Radiation Emergency Assistance Center/Training Site (REAC/TS). ORAU searched the Training and Technology files and the REAC/TS Course Registry for training records, and also searched the Science, Engineering and Education Historical Database (SEE) for research participant records prior to 1998, and the Science Education Program (SEP) records for research participants after 1998. Finally, ORAU searched OEWH work history records and OEWH National Supplemental Screening Program records. Electronic mail message from Linda Chapman, DOE/ORO, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (January 22, 2009).

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that DOE/ORO conducted a search that was adequate and reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. The search did, in fact, locate some responsive material, and that material has been released to Mr. Jackson. Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Privacy Act Appeal filed by Donald R. Jackson on January 5, 2009, OHA Case Number TFA-0284 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner:	Morsey Constructors
Filing Date:	January 5, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0285

This Decision concerns Morsey Constructors' (Morsey) Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (EM) issued to it on November 18, 2008. In that determination, EM responded to Morsey's request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the EM to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

On September 5, 2008, Morsey filed a FOIA request with the EM seeking three specific documents pertaining to a contract between the DOE and Uranium Disposition Services (UDS) regarding the DUF6 Conversion Project (the Project). On November 19, 2008, EM issued a Determination Letter in which it released one of the requested documents in its entirety and provided the internet address of another of the requested documents. EM indicated that it had performed a search for the third requested document, "a copy of a payment bond between the DOE and UDS regarding the Project," and that this search had not located any responsive documents. Determination Letter at 1. On January 5, 2009, Morsey filed the present Appeal with OHA contending that EM's search for this responsive document was inadequate.

II. Analysis

In responding to a FOIA request for information, the courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., (Case No. VFA-0098) (1995) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).[1]

In support of its assertion that EM's search for responsive documents was inadequate Morsey claims that EM should have located a payment bond for the project because UDP was obligated to post one with EM. In support of this assertion, Morsey cites the Federal Acquisition Regulations, the United States Code, and the language of the contract between DOE and UDS. Appeal at 1-2.

We contacted Brady Jones, a procurement attorney with EM, to evaluate the adequacy of EM's search. Jones stated:

> I contacted the Contracting Officer, Ms. Pamela Thompson, and she advised that there is no payment bond in the contract file because the Contracting Officer, Mr. Mark A. Million, determined on June 28, 2004, that a payment bond was not necessary. Attached is a copy of the June 28, 2004 letter. Prior to this letter, UDS proposed and the Contracting Officer accepted an alternative financial protection to requiring UDS to post performance and payment bonds. The alternative approach included subcontractor bonding and the performance guarantees of UDS's three member companies.

January 7, 2009, Electronic Mail Message from Brady Jones III, Procurement Attorney, Environmental Management, to Steven L. Fine, OHA Staff Attorney. Based upon our communications with Mr. Jones and our own examination of the June 28, 2004, letter, we find that EM conducted a reasonable search for responsive documents and has provided a compelling explanation of why that search did not locate any responsive documents. Accordingly, we conclude that the EM's search for responsive documents was reasonably calculated to uncover the information described in Morsey's request, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Morsey's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Morsey Constructors on January 5, 2009, OHA Case No. TFA-0285, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Linda Dunham

Date of Filing: January 6, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0286

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Linda Dunham in response to a determination that was issued to her by the Freedom of Information Act Officer (the FOIA Officer) of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Southwestern Power Administration. In that determination, the FOIA Officer replied to a request for performance ratings of two specified Southwestern Power Administration employees for the fiscal year 2008, which Ms. Dunham submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Director released portions of each FY 2008 Annual Summary Rating to Ms. Dunham, but withheld other portions of those documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the FOIA Officer release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

I. BACKGROUND

In her response to Ms. Dunham's FOIA request, the FOIA Officer released those portions of the Annual Summary Rating documents that contained the name of the employee being rated, the rating period, the code for the organization in which the employee worked, each element on which the employee was rated, and the name and signature of the rating official, the reviewing official, and the employee. The FOIA Officer withheld the value of the rating given for each element, any comments made regarding any such rating, the summary rating based on an aggregation of the ratings for each element, and any recommendation for an award based on the employee's performance. The FOIA Officer's determination indicates that all information deleted from the Annual Summary Rating documents was withheld under FOIA Exemption 6.

In her Appeal, Ms. Dunham requests that this Office review the withheld portions of the documents that were provided to her and determine whether the FOIA Officer properly withheld them from disclosure to her.

II. ANALYSIS

Exemption 6 of the FOIA protects from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982) (Washington Post).

In determining whether the performance ratings may be withheld under Exemption 6, we must undertake a three-step analysis. First, we must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the ratings may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, we must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Third, we must balance the identified privacy interests against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

We find that substantial privacy interests would be implicated by the release of the employees' performance ratings. The humiliation that could result from the release of mediocre or poor ratings is apparent. However, the release of even favorable ratings can cause embarrassment, as well as jealousy and possible harassment from employees who receive lesser ratings. On the other hand, release of the ratings would further the public interest to some extent by shedding light on the way in which the government evaluates its employees. We believe that this interest is outweighed, though, by the deleterious effects that disclosure could have on employee morale and workplace efficiency. As the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals stated in Ripskis, "Disclosure will be likely to spur unhealthy comparisons among . . . employees and thus breed discord in the workplace," and "chill candor in the evaluation process as well." 746 F.2d at 3. In that case, the Court upheld the decision of a lower court that the names of employees were properly redacted under Exemption 6 from personnel evaluation forms provided to a requester. Under these circumstances, in which the names of the rated employees have been released, we find that the FOIA Officer properly determined that the personnel ratings are exempt from mandatory disclosure pursuant to Exemption 6. In addition, we find that release of any comments or recommendations that appear on the Annual Summary Rating documents should also be withheld, because their disclosure would likely reveal the nature of the employees' performance ratings, if not their actual value.

We have reviewed the information that was withheld from the appellant and have determined that the FOIA Officer segregated and released to Ms. Dunham all information that is not subject to withholding under Exemption 6. Having found that the FOIA Officer properly withheld personal information regarding employees from the documents it released to Ms. Dunham, we will deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Linda Dunham, OHA Case Number TFA-0286, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Ernest D. Steelman

Date of Filing: January 7, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0287

This Decision concerns Ernest D. Steelman's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (ORO) issued to him on December 17, 2008. In that determination, the ORO responded to Mr. Steelman's request under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ORO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered records or issue a new determination justifying its withholding.

I. Background

Mr. Steelman worked at the Oak Ridge Site for Rust Engineering, from approximately 1976 to 1986. Appeal Letter. He filed a Privacy Act request with the ORO for his payroll and personnel records. Determination Letter. The ORO disclosed a copy of his personnel clearance master card and stated that it could not locate any other records. Id.

Mr. Steelman then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), challenging the adequacy of the ORO's search. See Appeal Letter. He repeated his request for his payroll and personnel records and stated that his personnel clearance master card listed his birth date incorrectly. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA),[1] courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

[1] Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the PA requires only that the agency search its systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (Dec. 13, 1995) (Case No. VFA-0098) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).[2]

We contacted the ORO to gain additional information to evaluate its search. The ORO stated that it searched for Mr. Steelman's records at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, the East TN Tech Center (K-25), and the DOE Records Holding Area.[3] E-mail from Elizabeth M. Dillon, Authorizing Official, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Jan. 8, 2009. Those facilities searched their paper files and electronic databases, using Mr. Steelman's name and social security number.[4] The ORO stated that it searched the files most likely to contain Mr. Steelman's employment records. Id. For these reasons, we find that the ORO conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant records, and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny Mr. Steelman's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Ernest D. Steelman filed on January 7, 2009, OHA Case No. TFA-0287, is denied.

[3] The ORO stated that the National Nuclear Security Administration's (NNSA) Y-12 facility maintains records for Rust Engineering, and that on October 7, 2008, it forwarded Mr. Steelman's request to the NNSA. E-mail from Elizabeth M. Dillon, Authorizing Official, ORO, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, Jan. 8, 2009. The NNSA will respond to Mr. Steelman separately; the ORO's Determination Letter and this Appeal do not address the NNSA's search.

[4] Mr. Steelman noted that his personnel clearance master card showed an incorrect birth date. This error did not affect the ORO's search because the ORO did not search using his birth date. Rather, it searched using his correct name and social security number.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Tom Marks
Date of Filing:	January 7, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0288

On January 7, 2009, Tom Marks (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 26, 2008, by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA identified 17 documents responsive to the Appellant's request. NNSA provided the Appellant with seven of the documents in their entirety. The remaining ten documents were withheld in their entirety by NNSA under Exemptions 2 and 4 of the FOIA. The Appellant challenges NNSA's withholding of information under those Exemptions. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On September 10, 2007, the Appellant filed a request with NNSA for

> 1. FY00-FY08 "salary increase authorization" proposals submitted to LANL and/or the University of California on behalf of Las Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) to NNSA/DOE. These are also referred to as "compensation increase" plans or proposals.
> 2. DOE/NNSA "salary increase authorization" responses to LANL/University of California for FY00-FY08.
> 3. All [computer] "hot skills" requests or proposals submitted by LANL and/or the University of California on behalf of LANL to the NNSA/DOE after January 1, 1999.

> 4. All DOE/NNSA responses to the request and/or proposals as described in item 3, above, and all authorization for [computer] hot skills compensation to LANL/UC after January 1, 1999.

Determination Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Appellant, November 26, 2008, at 1.

On November 26, 2008, NNSA released copies of letters from DOE to the contractors approving the Compensation Increase Plans for FY 2000, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2005, 2006, and 2008. In its Determination Letter, NNSA stated that "[t]he remainder of the responsive records are withheld in their entirety pursuant to 5 U.S.C., Section 552(b)(2) (Exemption 2 for the FOIA) and 5 U.S.C. Section 552 (b)(4) (Exemption 4 of the FOIA)." Determination Letter at 2. NNSA then explained that federal courts have interpreted Exemption 2 to encompass "low 2" information and "high 2" information. Id. NNSA stated that the withheld portions constituted "high 2" information. Id. NNSA then explained what type of information is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4 and that, in making its determination, it solicited and received comments from the submitters of the requested documents. NNSA went on to indicate that it attempted to segregate factual, nonexempt information from exempt information. However, NNSA determined that after segregation, the factual, nonexempt information would be so small in quantity as to make its release meaningless. Finally, NNSA determined that release of the information was not in the public interest.

On January 7, 2009, the Appellant appealed, contending that NNSA did not properly support its Exemption 2 and Exemption 4 withholdings. Appeal Letter received January 7, 2008, from Appellant to Director, OHA at 1-2. The Appellant also contends that NNSA did not identify the specific exemption for each redaction in the responsive information. Id. at 2. Finally, the Appellant contends that NNSA conducted a flawed analysis to determine if disclosure of the information was contrary to the public interest. Id.

II. Analysis

According to the FOIA, after conducting a search for responsive documents, an agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

An agency therefore has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (1) adequately describe the results of searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Servs., Inc., Case No.

VFA-0235 (1996) (RIS).[1/] Generally a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its author and recipient. An index of documents need not, however, contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the documents. State of New York, Case No. TFA-0269 (2008). A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. RIS.

A. Adequacy of the Determination

Our review of the Determination Letter indicates that NNSA failed to indicate which portions of the withheld documents were withheld pursuant to Exemption 2 and which portions were withheld pursuant to Exemption 4. Thus, an administrative appeal in this case, without additional information, is virtually impossible to consider. In cases where agencies do not provide an adequate determination with respect to a FOIA request, we usually remand the request to the agency with instruction to issue a new determination letter, so that the Appellant and our Office can understand the rationale for withholding the information. See Steven C. Vigg, Case No. TFA-0003 (2002). We will remand the matter to NNSA so that it can issue another determination and inform the Appellant which specific portions of the documents are being withheld pursuant to which Exemption and explain how Exemptions 2 and 4 apply to the withheld material in that document.

B. Adequacy of the Justification

Although we have already decided to remand the matter to NNSA, for the purposes of administrative efficiency we will address NNSA's application of Exemptions 2 and 4. An agency has a similar obligation to properly justify its withholding of documents under the FOIA. NNSA relied on Exemptions 2 and 4 to withhold the information that was responsive to the Appellant's request. We do not believe NNSA properly justified its application of either of these Exemptions.

Exemption 2 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). In the Determination Letter, NNSA stated that "[t]he Exemption 2 information that was deleted from these documents reveals the method by which [the information] is gathered and the proposals reflect LANL's methods and procedures for determining salary bands and staff compensation." Determination letter at 3. LANL is a DOE contractor, not a government agency. Therefore, NNSA cannot use Exemption 2 to withhold information that would reflect LANL's procedures.

Similarly, NNSA misapplied the Exemption 4 standard to the withheld information. Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. §552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks and Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). There are a number of requirements that must be met for information to be withheld under Exemption 4. NNSA correctly stated the test outlined in National Parks, which includes that the information must be "commercial or financial," "obtained from a person," and "confidential." National Parks stated that withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. NNSA then determined that release of the information would "undermine LANL's ability to continue to obtain this type of proprietary vendor information in the future." Determination Letter at 3. As stated above, LANL is a DOE contractor, not a government agency. Therefore, NNSA improperly considered the impact on LANL's ability to obtain information in the future in its justification for withholding information under Exemption 4.

C. Discretionary Public Interest Disclosure of the Withheld Information

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 104.1. With regard to the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 2, NNSA claimed the release of the information would risk either circumvention of a legal requirement or disruption of a critical operation or activity. If NNSA determines on remand that Exemption 2 still forms a basis for withholding information from responsive documents, it should reconsider whether the public interest nevertheless mandates its discretionary release. In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest is unnecessary. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Chicago Power Group, 23 DOE ¶ 80,125 at 80,560 (June 3, 1993) (Case No. LFA-0292).

III. Conclusion

For all the reasons stated above, we will remand the matter to NNSA for a new analysis and determination. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand it to NNSA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tom Marks, Case No. TFA-0288, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: State of New York

Date of Filing: January 9, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0289

On January 9, 2009, the State of New York (New York) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE). In that determination, OE released some documents in response to a request for information that New York filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require DOE to release certain withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

In December 2007, New York filed a FOIA request with DOE for correspondence between DOE, CRA International, and transmission developers or stakeholders regarding an August 2006 Congestion Study and an October 2007 National Interest Electric Transmission Corridor (NIETC) Designation Order. [1] DOE released some information to New York in a July 2008 determination letter. In the determination, DOE released 82 documents, some redacted, and an index. On August 11, 2008, New York filed an Appeal from the determination. OHA issued a decision on October 6, 2008, that granted the appeal in part. In that decision, OHA ordered that OE disclose certain portions of Document 27, or issue a new determination justifying its withholding. OHA also ordered that OE issue a new determination regarding Documents 23(a) and 26, or issue a new determination, "explaining whether the OE has fully adopted them, either formally or informally." See State of New York, Case No. TFA-0271 (October 6, 2008).

[1] CRA International (CRAI) is a subcontractor to the prime contractor in the August 2006 Congestion Study. CRAI was tasked to collect and analyze transmission data and transmission studies. CRAI submitted its analyses to the prime contractor and to DOE staff, who then drafted the study with graphics assistance from CRAI. See Electronic mail message from Marshall Whitenton, Deputy Assistant Secretary, DOE, to Dave Petrush, OHA Staff Attorney (September 9, 2008).

OE issued a new determination letter to New York on December 5, 2008, in which it released additional documents but continued to withhold portions of Documents 23(a), 26, and 27. Letter from OE to New York (December 5, 2008). On January 9, 2009, New York filed this appeal requesting that OHA order OE to release Documents 23(a), 26, and 27. As an initial matter, New York contends that DOE applied Exemption 5 to the documents in error. New York further argues that OE has "failed to state any legitimate basis in law or fact for continuing to withhold those documents." Appeal at 1. New York also alleges that DOE erred in denying New York access to these documents under Exemption 5 because the documents contained factual statements and had been seen by third parties who are not DOE employees. Appeal at 1. New York therefore asks OHA to order the release of the withheld information.

II. Analysis

A. The Deliberative Process Privilege of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). This deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

1. Document 27

New York contends that OE "continues to withhold a portion of information that the OHA determined should be disclosed (Document 27) . . . ." Appeal at 1. We reviewed the OHA order, and conclude that this portion of the appeal should be denied because OE has followed the directions of the order.

Document 27 is a copy of a three-sentence electronic mail message. The OHA order states, in pertinent part, "although the OE properly withheld the first sentence, the OE must disclose the second and third sentences." TFA-0271, October 6, 2008 (emphasis added). OE stated in its determination that it was "continuing to withhold one sentence that the October 6 Order upheld as 'deliberative because it associates the email's author with a position that the DOE took in response to particular comments.'" Letter from OE to New York (December 5, 2008) (Determination) at 1. OE went on to say that it was "releasing the next two sentences, which were previously withheld."

Id. OE released the last two sentences to New York. Therefore, we find that OE properly withheld the first sentence of Document 27.

2. Applicability of Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects documents that would reveal the decision-making process that results in a final agency decision. Thus, we focus our analysis on the effect that release of the responsive material would have on the process of arriving at an agency final decision. Schell v. HHS, 843 F.2d 933, 940 (6th Cir. 1988) (stating that in an Exemption 5 case, courts now focus less on the material sought and more on the effect of the release of the material). The ultimate issue in evaluating any deliberative process privilege claim is "whether the materials bear on the formulation or exercise of agency policy-oriented judgment." City of Virginia Beach, Va. v. Department of Commerce, 995 F.2d 1247, 1254 (4th Cir. 1993).

This office has conducted a de novo review of the documents at issue, and we conclude that Documents 23(a), 26 and 27 contain material that is pre-decisional and deliberative. Document 23(a), as described by OE, "contains preliminary questions and issues that were part of the deliberative process in defining the scope and direction of the project." Determination at 1. The document was created during the planning stages of the Congestion Study. We agree with OE that the document is pre-decisional and deliberative. Document 26, titled "Analysis of Implications of Transmission Congestion in PJM and NYISO," is a draft that DOE received in December 2006, and was a basis for a document that was finalized in March 2007. This document is also predecisional. Release of the document would reveal the thought process that the DOE employees and their consultants used to arrive at the final document. Further, we have previously concluded that the first sentence of Document 27 is deliberative. See discussion supra Section II.A.1. Thus, release of this information could have a chilling effect on employees who are tasked to create policy in the future.

New York also argued that the documents are not protected under Exemption 5 because they were seen by third parties. OE provided information on all recipients of Documents 23(a), 26, and 27. See Memorandum from Theresa Brown Shute, OE, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (January 26, 2009). The recipients were DOE employees, DOE contractors, and CRAI employees. We have previously found that the CRAI employees are "government consultants" and that their communication with DOE employees and DOE contractors regarding these documents is protected. See State of New York, Case No. TFA-0271 (2008).

In summary, we find that DOE properly applied the protection of Exemption 5 to the responsive material. The documents in question are communications between employees and government consultants who assisted in the agency study. The material documents the discussions and analysis that transpired during the creation of the policy. Therefore, based on the content of the documents, we find that the material is deliberative and exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5.

B. Segregability of Non-Exempt Material

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C.

§ 552(b). However, if factual material is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its release would reveal the agency's deliberative process, that material can be withheld. Radioactive Waste Management Associates, Case No. VFA-0650 (March 2, 2001). OE released the headings of Documents 23(a) and 26, but did not address the issue of segregability in the determination. This office reviewed all of the material that was withheld in its entirety and, based on our review, we find that OE should reconsider the issue of segregability in Document 26. OE has disclosed non-exempt material in Documents 23(a) and 27. However, our review of Document 26 concluded that the document may contain some factual, segregable material that could be released to the requester without revealing the deliberative process. For example, Paragraph 3 of Page 4 in Document 26 contains some information that appears to be factual and segregable. Non-exempt material that is "distributed in logically related groupings" and that would not result in a "meaningless set of words and phrases" may be subject to disclosure. Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 261 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Accordingly, this portion of the Appeal is remanded to OE.

C. Public Interest

The fact that the material requested falls within a statutory exemption does not preclude release of the material to the requester. The DOE regulations implementing the FOIA provide that "[t]o the extent permitted by other laws, the DOE will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. § 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. See also Memorandum for the Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: Freedom of Information Act, President Barack Obama (January 21, 2009) (stating that "[t]he presumption of disclosure should be applied to all decisions involving FOIA").

We find that release of the withheld material would not be in the public interest. Although the public does have a general interest in learning about the manner in which the government operates, we find that interest to be attenuated by the fact that the withheld information is composed mainly of predecisional, non-factual recommendations and opinions, and would therefore be of limited educational value. Any slight benefit that would accrue from the release of the withheld material is outweighed by the chilling effect that such a release would have on the willingness of DOE employees to make open and honest recommendations on policy matters. See L. Daniel Glass, Case No. TFA-0150 (October 16, 2006).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of New York on January 9, 2009, OHA Case No. TFA-0289, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and denied in all other aspects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioners: Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr.
Mark Steven Ludwig

Date of Filing: January 21, 2009

TFA-0292

On January 21, 2009, Mark Steven Ludwig and Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr. (Appellants) filed appeals from determinations issued to them by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center in Albuquerque, New Mexico (NNSA/SC). In the two determinations, NNSA/SC responded to a request for documents that each Appellant had submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. At issue in this case is NNSA/SC's withholding from each Appellant of a report, and most of its appendices, authored by Norman Bay and John Kern (Bay Report). This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release the Bay Report and its appendices to the Appellants.[1]

I. Background

The Bay Report was created pursuant to a request of Sandia Corporation (Sandia). Sandia received allegations from two Sandia Ethics Office investigators who claimed their work was being impeded and that they were being retaliated against by Sandia managers as a result of their investigation. Because such allegations would have been investigated by the complaining Ethics Office investigators themselves, Sandia retained Norman Bay (Bay), a professor of law at the University of New Mexico, to conduct an investigation.

In requests dated February 19, 2008, the Appellants each sought from NNSA/SC various documents including the Bay Report and all associated appendices. On August 29, 2008, NNSA/SC sent each of the Appellants a determination letter regarding his request in which the Appellant was supplied a number of requested documents. However, NNSA/SC withheld the Bay Report pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA. Specifically, NNSA/SC asserted that the Bay Report was protected by the attorney work product and attorney-client privileges and thus was appropriately withheld pursuant to Exemption 5. Exemption 5 exempts documents which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency.

The Appellants filed appeals of NNSA/SC's determinations with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) on September 24 and September 29, 2008. We granted the appeals, finding that NNSA/SC lacked standing to assert the two privileges cited in its determination letter to the Appellants. We found that because Sandia, and not NNSA/SC, engaged Bay as its attorney to prepare the report, the only relevant attorney-client or attorney work product privilege as to the Bay Report would belong to Sandia or Bay and not to NNSA/SC. We therefore remanded the matter to NNSA/SC to release the Bay Report to the Appellants or issue another determination to the Appellants justifying withholding the Bay Report. Mark Steven Ludwig, Case No. TFA-0276 (2008).[2]

On December 17, 2008, NNSA/SC issued a new determination to each Appellant, this time withholding the Bay Report pursuant to FOIA Exemption 4, as well as finding that certain information in the report was protected by Exemption 6. Letter from Carolyn Becknell, Freedom of Information Officer, Office of Public Affairs, NNSA/SC, and Tracy Loughead, Manager, Office of Public Affairs to Mark Stephen Ludwig (December 17, 2008); Letter from Carolyn Becknell, Freedom of Information Officer, Office of Public Affairs, NNSA/SC, and Tracy Loughead, Manager, Office of Public Affairs to Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr. (December 17, 2008).[3] Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In its new determination, NNSA/SC stated that the Bay Report is confidential and also "is privileged in that it is protected by the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product privilege." Determination Letter at 1.

In the present appeal, the Appellants contend that the Bay Report is not exempt from disclosure under the FOIA. Regarding the application of Exemption 4, the Appellants do not claim that the Bay Report does not fall within the scope of either the attorney-client or attorney work product privileges. Rather, they contend that Sandia waived these privileges by taking the following alleged actions: (1) making a "redacted summary" of the report, a copy of which was provided with the appeal, available on its internal web page and releasing it to the media; (2) providing a complete copy of report to the Appellants for their review in June and July 2003; (3) providing a copy of the report in its entirety to one of its employees, Patricia Gingrich, prior to her initiating litigation against Sandia; (4) providing entire copies of the report to other individuals both internal and external to Sandia without accounting for how it was to be shared or copied; (5) providing a copy of the report to the office of Senator Charles Grassley; (6) leaving a company-owned laptop containing the report on a commercial aircraft and forgetting to retrieve it. Letter from Mark Stephen Ludwig to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (January 16, 2009); Letter from Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr. to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (January 16, 2009).

After receiving the present appeal, we provided a copy to NNSA/SC and asked for Sandia's response to the above allegations. Electronic mail from Steven Goering, OHA, to Carolyn Becknell, Freedom of Information Officer, NNSA/SC (January 22, 2009); Electronic mail from Steven Goering, OHA, to Pamela Arias-Ortega, NNSA/SC Office of Chief Counsel (January 29, 2009).

With regard to the Appellants' first allegation, Sandia states that it has never asserted a claim of attorney work product privilege as to the redacted summary of the Bay Report, which it describes as "a releasable copy for use by Sandia Management in both responding to external requests and in informing the Sandia workforce concerning the outcome of the investigation." Attachment to electronic mail from Pamela Arias-Ortega to Steven Goering (February 2, 2009) ("Sandia Response") at 1.[4]

Sandia admits that the Appellants were given access to read the report in July 2003, but that neither was "provided a copy of the Bay Report or any part of it or of the unredacted summary of the Bay Report." Id. Further, Sandia disputes the allegation that it provided Ms. Gingrich with a copy of the entire report, stating that it provided only that portion of the report addressing a specific matter that was being reviewed by a Sandia Disciplinary Review Committee in considering possible disciplinary action against Ms. Gingrich. Id. "Consistent with Sandia policy and practice, Ms. Gingrich was earlier provided that portion of the Bay Report to enable her to provide a written response and position statement regarding those concerns . . . ." Id. During subsequent litigation against Sandia, Ms. Gingrich was provided the report in its entirety, "but only after a Confidentiality Order, to which the Report was subject, was entered by the Court." Id.

Sandia also denies that it released the report to other individuals > without accounting for the release or how it was shared or copied. Sandia kept record of the releases, which were made to a limited number of people both internally who had a business need to know and externally to an even more limited number of people who had both a relationship with Sandia and who either had a right to such copy and/or a business need to know (e.g., various DOE officials/employees, Lockheed Martin Corporation). The copies were properly marked as Privileged and as Unclassified Controlled Information and, when that designation was considered not to be meaningful to or binding upon the recipient, the Report was released only when assurance was given by the recipient that the Report would be kept confidential.

Id. As an example of its treatment of the Bay Report, Sandia cites its release of the report to Senator Grassley, and references documents provided to our office in our consideration of the previous appeal regarding the report. Included in those documents were copies of communications among the Senator, DOE, and Sandia, one of which is a letter from Senator Grassley to the Secretary of Energy stating that the Senator "would agree to maintain the confidentiality of the Bay Report." Letter from Senator Charles E. Grassley to Spencer Abraham, Secretary of Energy (June 17, 2003).

[4] Sandia states that the language found in the redacted summary of the Bay Report is the same as that "found at pages 1 through 4 and 34 through 59 of the Report." Electronic mail from Pamela Arias-Ortega to Steven Goering (February 10, 2009). NNSA/SC has since informed us that Sandia will provide those pages to NNSA/SC for release to the Appellants. Electronic mail from Pamela Arias-Ortega to Steven Goering (February 12, 2009).

Finally, Sandia disputes "that the Bay Report [was] on the laptop lost by a Sandia Vice President." Sandia Response at 1. Sandia states that the company official in question headed a "Special Management Team" that was "specifically charged with addressing concerns that were not addressed in the Bay Report." Id. at 2. The team was provided hard copies of the report, "so that they could understand what the issues were that the Appellants had raised; identify and consider what was not addressed by the Bay Report; . . ." Id. Sandia also notes that the report "was not provided to anyone outside the Legal Division in electronic form, . . ." Id. at 1.

Beyond assertions, the Appellants offer no basis for their allegations that Sandia did not account for the release and further distribution of the report, or for the allegation regarding the lost laptop, and we find none. We are left then with the issue of whether the disclosures of the report which are not in dispute waived protection of the report under the attorney work product privilege.[5] We conclude, for the reasons set forth below, that Sandia actions did not waive the privilege.

II. Analysis

The attorney work product privilege protects from disclosure documents which reveal "the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3); see also Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511 (1947). The privilege is intended to preserve a zone of privacy in which a lawyer or other representative of a party can prepare and develop legal theories and strategy "with an eye toward litigation," free from unnecessary intrusion by their adversaries. Hickman, 329 U.S. at 510-11. "At its core, the work product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case." United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975).

A. Sandia Did Not Waive the Privilege By Release of the Bay Report to Senator Grassley or By Its Public Release of a Redacted Summary of the Report

This office has never ruled on the issue of waiver of the attorney work product privilege under the FOIA.[6] However, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit considered the waiver

[5] We make no finding here as to whether Sandia waived protection of the report under the attorney-client privilege. Though NNSA/SC also cited that privilege and other bases for the withholding of the Bay Report, each of which the Appellants challenge, we need not address them here. Even if we were to find that the report could not be withheld for other reasons, we would reach the same conclusion that no waiver of the attorney work product privilege by Sandia precluded NNSA/SC from withholding the Bay Report under Exemption 4.

[6] The Appellants cite the decision of the New Mexico Court of Appeals in Gingrich v. Sandia Corp., 142 N.M. 359 (2007), in which the court found that Sandia had waived the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges with respect to the Bay Report. We note that the cited decision contains no discussion of the reasons for its finding of waiver as to the attorney work product privilege, but does cite standards for waivers of privileges generally set forth in the New Mexico Rules Annotated. Unlike the New Mexico state courts, our decisions in FOIA cases are not governed by particular state laws, but rather by federal statutory and common law, in this instance the federal common law as to the attorney work product privilege. Thus, the decision cited by the Appellants is not authority that is binding on this office nor helpful to our determination in the present case.

issue in the context of application of the privilege under FOIA Exemption 5. Rockwell Int'l Corp. v. Dep't of Justice, 235 F.3d 598 (D.C. Cir. 2001). At issue in Rockwell was a Justice Department report of investigation of its prosecution of Rockwell International Corporation, the DOE contractor that had been responsible for the operation of the Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant. Rockwell sought copies of attachments to the report that the Justice Department had not made public, and the Department withheld them under the Exemption 5 attorney work product privilege.

In Rockwell, the Appellant argued that the Justice Department waived the work product privilege by taking "'many actions inconsistent with maintaining the confidentiality of its work-product,' such as 'provid[ing] its work-product to Congress . . . , and publish[ing] portions of its work-product in its Report.'" Rockwell, 235 F.3d at 605. Regarding the release of some of the attachments to Congress, the court relied on a previous case where it found that the Army's release of an internal legal memorandum to Congress did not waive the protection of Exemption 5. Id. at 232 (citing Murphy v. Dep't of the Army, 613 F.2d 1151, 1155-59 (D.C. Cir.1979)). As it did in Murphy, the court cited section 552(d) of the FOIA, which states that the Act "is not authority to withhold information from Congress." Id.

> If "disclosure of information to Congress [were] disclosure to the whole world," we observed, it would be "inconsistent with the obvious purpose of the Congress [in 552(d)] to carve out for itself a special right of access to privileged information," and would "effectively transform section [552(d)] into a congressional declassification scheme, a result supported neither by the legislative history of the Act, nor by general legal principles or common sense."

Id. (quoting Murphy, 613 F.2d at 1155-56). Further, because such an interpretation would render every disclosure to Congress "'a waiver of all privileges and exemptions, executive agencies would inevitably become more cautious in furnishing sensitive information to the legislative branch—a development at odds with public policy which encourages broad congressional access to governmental information.'" Id. (quoting Murphy, 613 F.2d at 1156). The court in Rockwell found that the facts before it were even more compelling than in Murphy, because "the Justice Department gave the documents to the Subcommittee only after the Subcommittee expressly agreed not to make them public." Id.

As for the fact that the Justice Department published portions of its work product in its report, the court stated that disclosure of work product privileged materials to a third party can waive the privilege if "such disclosure, under the circumstances, is inconsistent with the maintenance of secrecy from the disclosing party's adversary." Id. (quoting United States v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 642 F.2d 1285, 1299 (D.C. Cir. 1980)). The court did not find the Justice Department's publishing of portions of its work product "inconsistent with a desire to keep the rest secret, particularly in view of the steps the Department took to maintain their confidentiality, . . ." Id. at 233.

Though the court in Rockwell considered waiver of the attorney work product privilege under Exemption 5, we find its holdings to be particularly applicable to the same issue in the present case under Exemption 4. First, the court relied on a standard for waiver of the privilege that it had set forth in a prior case outside of the FOIA context, from which we can safely conclude that the court would apply the same standard under FOIA Exemption 4.[7]

Second, the Rockwell court's holding addresses facts analogous to those cited by the Appellants in this case, including the disclosure of the Bay Report to a member of Congress and the public release of the report's redacted summary. Following the reasoning of the court in Rockwell, we find that Sandia's release of the Bay Report to Senator Grassley, premised as it was on a promise of confidentiality, did not waive protection of the report under the attorney work product privilege, nor do we find that such a waiver was effected by the release of a redacted summary of the report.

B. Sandia Did Not Waive the Privilege By Allowing the Appellants and Patricia Gingrich Access to Review Part or All of the Bay Report

A more difficult issue is raised by the fact that Sandia allowed Patricia Gingrich and the Appellants access to review part or all of the report. In Rockwell and Indian Law,[8] respectively, the courts found that waiver could be triggered by disclosure of privileged information that "is inconsistent with the maintenance of secrecy from the disclosing party's adversary," Rockwell, 235 F.2d. at 233 (citation omitted), or "substantially increase[s] the opportunities for potential adversaries to obtain the information." Indian Law, 477 F. Supp. at 148. Arguably, Gingrich was a potential adversary of Sandia before she sued the company and became a real adversary. Less clear is whether the Appellants could be viewed as potential adversaries, particularly at the time they were given access to the report in 2003.

In any event, even assuming, arguendo, that all three were adversaries of Sandia at time they were allowed to read the report, we would not find that Sandia waived the attorney work product privilege by granting them such access. As did the court in Rockwell, we find support for our conclusion in previous decisions of the D.C. Circuit on the issue of waiver of the attorney work product privilege, outside the context of the FOIA.

For example, the Rockwell court cited its previous decision in In re Sealed Case, quoting its statement that the "purposes of the work product privilege are . . . not inconsistent with selective disclosure—even in some circumstances to an adversary." Rockwell, 235 F.2d. at 233 (quoting In re Sealed Case, 676 F.2d 793, 818 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Framing the issue as one of whether an "'objective consideration' of fairness negates Company's assertion of privilege," the court in Sealed Case found selective disclosure inconsistent with the purposes of the privilege "when a party seeks greater advantage from its control over work product than the law must provide to maintain a healthy adversary system . . . ." Sealed Case, 676 F.2d at 817, 818 (citation omitted).

[7] Indeed, a very similar standard was applied under Exemption 4 by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Indian Law Res. Ctr. v. Dep't of the Interior, 477 F. Supp. 144, 148 (D.D.C. 1979). In Indian Law, the court found that the Hopi Tribe did not waive the attorney work product privilege by disclosing to the Department of Interior, acting as a "confidential agent" of the Tribe, documents prepared for the Tribe by its private counsel. Indian Law, 477 F. Supp. at 148. "Such limited disclosure does not . . . constitute a waiver of the work product privilege, as it will not substantially increase the opportunities for potential adversaries to obtain the information." Id.

[8] See supra note 9.

Thus, the court found the privilege was waived when a company had voluntarily provided a report of internal investigation to the SEC, and thereby could not invoke the privilege in resisting a subsequent grand jury subpoena for documents on the same subject matter. Based on a "substantial likelihood" that the company had "attempted to manipulate its privilege, by withholding vital documents while making a great pretense of full disclosure of their contents," the court concluded that the company did not "deserve the protections enjoyed by those who use the adversary system for its legitimate ends." Id. at 825.

Two years after Sealed Case, the court elaborated on the circumstances under which disclosure to an adversary would be inconsistent with the purposes of the privilege. In re Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 738 F.2d 1367 (D.C. Cir. 1984). At issue again were documents a company had previously disclosed to the SEC, but for which the company later claimed work product privilege protection from discovery in subsequent private litigation. The court noted that, in return for its voluntary disclosure to the SEC, the company "received the quid pro quo of lenient punishment for any wrongdoings exposed in the process. That decision was obviously motivated by self-interest. Appellants now want work product protection for those same disclosures against different adversaries . . . ." Id. at 1372. The court found that it would be "inconsistent and unfair to allow appellants to select according to their own self-interest to which adversaries they will allow access to the materials." Id. The court also considered it important that the "appellants had no reasonable basis for believing that the disclosed materials would be kept confidential by the SEC; . . ." Id.

Applying the same factors of "fairness" to the present case, we cannot find that Sandia waived the attorney work product privilege in the Bay Report by its past disclosures to Ms. Gingrich and the Appellants. This is not a case where, as in Sealed Case, Sandia is attempting to manipulate the privilege, nor is it one in which, as in Subpoenas, Sandia received a quid pro quo benefit by allowing certain of its employees to read part or all of the Bay Report, whether or not the employees were potential adversaries at the time. Further, we have no basis for finding that Sandia seeks, for tactical reasons, to withhold work product now, from a particular adversary, that it had disclosed to a different adversary in the past. Finally, based on its careful handling and limited dissemination of the full report, Sandia had a reasonable basis for believing that the contents of the report would be kept confidential by the limited number of people to whom it has been disclosed.

For all of the reasons set forth above, we find that Sandia has not waived the attorney work product privilege as to the Bay Report, and that therefore NNSA/SC was not precluded from relying on this privilege in withholding the report under FOIA Exemption 4. Accordingly, the present appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed by Mark Steven Ludwig, Case No. TFA-0291, and Patrick Daniel O'Neill, Jr., Case No. TFA-0292, are denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Environmental Defense Institute
Date of Filing:	February 24, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0295

On February 24, 2009, Environmental Defense Institute (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on December 16, 2008, by the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Idaho responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.[1/] In its determination, Idaho identified and released numerous documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Most of the documents Idaho provided the Appellant were released in their entirety. The Appellant challenges Idaho's withholding of information from three documents. This appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On April 10, 2008, the Appellant filed a request with Idaho for documents referring to the Advanced Test Reactor (ATR) that were referenced in DOE/Idaho National Laboratory (INL) "Certification Report No. 29." Request Letter dated April 10, 2008, from Chuck Broscious, President, Board of Directors, Appellant, to Idaho. On December 16, 2008, Idaho released numerous documents in full to the Appellant. Idaho redacted a portion of one document. In its Determination Letter, Idaho stated that the redacted document contains information that is exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemptions 2 and 3.[2/] Determination Letter dated December 16, 2008, from Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, Idaho, to Appellant. In addition to the redacted document, Idaho released two single pages of two documents. Those two single pages were responsive to the Appellant's request.

[1/] The request was submitted on April 10, 2008. Because of the broad scope of the request, Idaho has been sending responsive documents to the Appellant in installments as the documents are reviewed and ready for release.

[2/] Idaho withheld a portion of one other document under Exemption 6. The Appeal Letter did not request this withheld information be released.

On February 24, 2009, the Appellant appealed, contending that the FOIA exemptions that Idaho cited in its Determination Letter do not apply to the document that Idaho has redacted. Appeal Letter at 1 received February 24, 2009, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). The relief requested by the Appellant is unredacted copies of

> 1. ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation, EG&G Facility Change Form, 1988; Reactor Vessel Vent System issued 6/22/93, Doc. No. 7.3.12.3.21;
> 3. Chapter 12, Radiological Protection Upgraded Final Safety Analysis Report for Advanced Test Reactor, SAR-153, 2/05/08.

Appeal Letter at 2. The Appellant argued that Exemptions 2 and 3 do not apply to these three documents.[3/] The Appellant claimed that Idaho's assertion that release of the information could lead to sabotage of the ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation was incorrect because the circumvention element of Exemption 2 "only protects documents such as agency law enforcement manuals and procedures from public disclosure so that individuals may not use them to circumvent the law or law enforcement measures." Id. at 3. In regard to Exemption 3, the Appellant argues that the requested documents "do not relate to 'special nuclear fuel.'" Id. If the Appeal were granted, these three documents would be released to the Appellant without redactions.

II. Analysis

A. Information redacted under Exemptions 2 and 3

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold

---

[3/] In the Appeal, the Appellant also appears to challenge the withholding under Exemption 6. However, no portions of the three documents which the Appellant has requested to receive in full were withheld under Exemption 6. Therefore, this Decision will not consider the withholding under Exemption 6.

information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States).

a. Application of Exemption 2

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). "Exemption 2 is not limited to internal personnel rules and practices; rather, it is construed more generally to encompass documents that are used for predominantly internal purposes." Judicial Watch, Inc., v. Dep't of Transp., No. 02-566, 2005 WL 1606915, at *9 (D.D.C. July 7, 2005). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). Idaho has claimed that the information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

Idaho withheld portions of the "ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation, EG&G Facility Change Form, 1988; Reactor Vessel Vent System issued 6/22/93, Doc. No. 7.3.12.3.21" (ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation) under FOIA Exemption 2. Idaho explained that this document is internal, and its disclosure would "significantly risk installations and projects that safeguard nuclear materials and facilities." Determination Letter at 1. Thus, it is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 2. It further stated that Exemption 2's anti-circumvention protection is applicable in this case because the document identifies "vulnerabilities to sabotage events, system configurations/capabilities that may be exploited and internal procedures for operating the reactor that are inherently internal." Id. Idaho stated that it withheld those portions because disclosure of the information "would significantly risk installations and projects that safeguard nuclear materials and facilities." Id.

We have reviewed an unredacted version of the ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation document that was released to the Appellant. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information that Idaho withheld in this case neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. Accordingly, it is predominantly internal.

The information meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. EPA, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d 530-31.

Release of the information at issue in the present case could allow terrorists or other malefactors to identify vulnerabilities of the ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation and to understand how to sabotage it. Accordingly, disclosure of the information at issue risks circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. Even though this Appellant may have no such intentions, if DOE were to release this document to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public who requested it. The Appellant argued that "[t]he 'circumvention' exemption only protects documents such as agency law enforcement manuals and procedures from public disclosure so that individual may not use them to circumvent the law or law enforcement measures." Appeal Letter at 3. We disagree. Exemption 2 encompasses documents that are used for internal purposes not just for law enforcement purposes. Judicial Watch, Inc., 2005 WL 1606915, at *9. Therefore, because of the hazards involved in public release, we find that the information was properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

b. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both exempt information and non-exempt information that is not otherwise exempt from release, the non-exempt information must generally be segregated and released to the requestor. We have reviewed the information that Idaho redacted from the ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation document. Idaho was very careful with its redactions. We believe that none of the information that was redacted could be reasonably segregated.

c. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Idaho claimed the release of the information would risk circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. We agree. As we stated above, release of the information could allow terrorists or other malefactors to sabotage the ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation. It is therefore obvious that release of the information would not be in the public interest.

2. Exemption 3

Exemption 3 of the FOIA allows agencies to withhold information that is "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute [other than the FOIA itself] provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matters to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). As articulated by the Supreme Court in CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 167 (1985), application of Exemption 3 is a two-step process. First, an agency must determine whether the statutory provision in question satisfies the foregoing requirements of Exemption 3, and if so, the agency must next determine whether the subject information falls within the purview of that statutory provision. Id.; see also Kelly, Anderson & Associates, Inc., Case No. TFA-0638 (2001).

In its determination, Idaho relied upon the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296 (AEA), for redacting information from the ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation document, stating that the AEA "prohibit[s] the disclosure of restricted data to the public specifically related to special nuclear materials." Determination Letter at 1. We have previously determined that the AEA is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., Beveridge & Diamond, P.C., Case No. TFA-0167 (2006). However, in order for information to be withheld under the AEA, it must be properly classified or identified as Unclassified Controlled Nuclear Information (UCNI) under the provisions of the AEA. There is no indication that the information withheld by Idaho in this case has been either properly classified or properly identified as UCNI pursuant to those provisions. Therefore, Idaho improperly invoked Exemption 3 to protect the information requested by the Appellant in this case. We note, however, that the information Idaho withheld pursuant to Exemption 3 was also withheld under Exemption 2 discussed in the above section.

B. Non Responsive Information in Two Documents

The Appellant argues that Idaho improperly redacted information from two other documents, Recommendation for Upgrade of Radiation monitoring at the Idaho National Laboratory Reactor Technology Complex, August 2007, ANN, Inc., et al. (Recommendation) and Chapter 12, Radiological Protection Upgraded Final Safety Analysis Report for Advanced Test Reactor, SAR-153, 2/05/08 (Chapter 12). The Appellant points out that only one page from each of these documents was released. The Appellant argues that since only one page was released, the rest of the document was redacted. We contacted Idaho and ascertained that the one page that was released from each document was the only information found to be responsive to the Appellant's request. The remainder of each document was not responsive to the Appellant's request and therefore not released. We have previously found that non-responsive material is not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Northwest Technical Resources, Inc., Case No. VFA-0611 (2000). Therefore, we shall deny this portion of the Appeal.

III. Conclusion

Idaho improperly relied on the AEA to withhold information under Exemption 3, since there is no indication that the material has been classified or properly identified as UCNI under the AEA. However, the information redacted from the ATR Vessel Vent Valve Installation document was properly withheld under Exemption 2. Further, Idaho is not required to release non-responsive portions of documents that contain responsive information. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal filed by the Environmental Defense Institute.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0295, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Power Wire Constructors

Date of Filing: March 9, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0297

On March 9, 2009, Power Wire Constructors (Power Wire) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's Western Area Power Administration (WAPA). In that determination, WAPA withheld information in response to a request for information that Power Wire filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require WAPA to release the withheld information.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On November 21, 2008, Power Wire submitted an electronic FOIA request to WAPA's Upper Great Plains Regional Office (UGPR), for "[WAPA's] employees' and inspectors' daily reports, logs, notes, letters, e-mails, etc., … [including the] writings of Ron French, Sid Paulson, Jimmy Black, Cory Herman, David Kluth, Pat Doak, Don McCleary and Jim Dickey" beginning August 1, 2008, to the present. (FOIA Request). On November 21, 2008, UGPR forwarded the request to the FOIA Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOI). Upon receipt, DOE/FOI assigned the request to the Office of General Counsel at WAPA, the office most likely to have responsive documents. On December 2, 2008, Power Wire amended its FOIA request to include a search for additional documents.

WAPA conducted a search of its records and located over 2,000 pages of responsive documents. In its initial response, WAPA provided Power Wire with 140 pages of the responsive material. Letter from WAPA to Power Wire, January 13, 2009 (Initial Determination Letter).[1] In its second response, WAPA produced 2,284 pages of responsive material but withheld portions of the documents claiming that those portions were shielded under the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges of Exemption 5. Letter from WAPA to Power Wire, January 26, 2009 (Final Determination Letter). WAPA also withheld employees' personal e-mail addresses and telephone numbers pursuant to Exemption 6. Id.

On March 9, 2009, Power Wire filed this Appeal of WAPA's decision to withhold information under Exemptions 5 and 6, arguing that there is no basis for withholding the information. Appeal Letter at 1. Later in its Appeal, Power Wire requests the redaction of the personal privacy information so that all of the responsive material can be immediately provided to them. Id. That request is inconsistent with Power Wire's challenge of WAPA's application of Exemption 6 to employees' personal information. Nevertheless, I analyze below WAPA's application of both Exemption 5 and Exemption 6 to the information it withheld from the material responsive to Power Wire's November 21, 2008, request for information.

II. Analysis

A. WAPA's Justification of Exemption 5

After conducting a search for records under the FOIA, an agency must provide a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, a "statement of the reason for denial, containing a reference to the specific exemption under the [FOIA] authorizing the withholding of the record, … a brief explanation of how the exemption applies to the record withheld, and a statement of why discretionary release is not appropriate." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b). Thus, an agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches, (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. State of New York, Case No. TFA-0269 (2008); F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Services, Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (1996) (RIS).[2] Generally, a determination is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its author and recipient. A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. This allows both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exception was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., Case No. VFA-0304 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and assists this Office in reviewing that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, Case No. LFA-0176 (1992). Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations.

In its Final Determination Letter, WAPA provided a categorical explanation that information pertaining to the Letcher Substation Historical Site Incident Investigation was withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5, because the draft documents created during the investigation, as well as comments, notes and preliminary opinions reflected in the documents, consists of pre-decisional, deliberative material that does not represent the final position of the agency. Id. WAPA further stated that it withheld documents that contained confidential communications because they revealed the motive of its client in seeking the legal advice of WAPA's General Counsel personnel. Although WAPA provided an explanation for invoking the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges under Exemption 5, our review of the Determination Letter indicates that in documents where portions of information were withheld, WAPA failed to identify which portions were withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege and which were withheld pursuant to the attorney-client privilege. Our Office cannot conduct a meaningful review of the documents without an adequate description of which privilege applies to the information that was withheld. Thus, an administrative appeal without additional information is virtually impossible with regard to all Exemption 5 withholdings.

In cases where agencies do not provide adequate justification for withholding information under an enumerated FOIA exemption, we have remanded the request to the agency with instruction to issue a new determination letter so that the appellant and our Office can understand the rationale for withholding the information. See Steven C. Vigg, Case No. TFA-0003 (2002). Accordingly, we will remand this matter to WAPA to articulate which privileges apply to the specific parts of the documents. The basis for each withholding under Exemption 5 must be explained in a new determination letter, with specific reference to the privileges invoked in each case. In a situation where several portions of a document are withheld for the same reason, WAPA may identify each portion withheld and then provide categorical explanation for the exemption's application to all such portions. WAPA must nevertheless ensure that the explanation of the withholding applies to each document or portion of the document in the category.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters

Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See Sowell, Todd, Lafitte, Beard and Watson LLC, Case No. VFA-0510 (1999); Frank E. Isbill, Case No. VFA-0499 (1999).

In invoking Exemption 6, WAPA determined that the release of employees' personal e-mail addresses and telephone numbers is a serious invasion of privacy. WAPA further determined that such a release would reveal personal information or records about the individuals. We agree with WAPA and find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the personal information of WAPA employees. See L. Daniel Glass, Case No. TFA-0150 (2006) (a DOE employee has a significant expectation of privacy regarding his personal telephone number and e-mail address).

In its Appeal, Power Wire failed to demonstrate how the disclosure of WAPA employees' personal e-mail addresses and telephone numbers will reveal anything of importance regarding the DOE or how it would serve the public interest. We have concluded that release of this type of information would not illuminate the inner workings of the federal government. Id. at 4. Likewise, release of this information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations of the federal government. Id. at 4.

We find that there is a significant privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of the withheld information. Moreover, release of this information would not shed light on the operations of government. On balance, release of the information withheld by WAPA pursuant to Exemption 6 would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Thus, WAPA correctly applied Exemption 6 in withholding this information.

C. Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, Case No. VFA-0060 (1995). We find that WAPA complied with the FOIA's segregability requirement by releasing to Power Wire all portions of the documents not withholdable under Exemption 6.

III. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing information, we find that WAPA's justification for invoking the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges was inadequate with respect to its Exemption 5 withholdings. Accordingly, we remand this matter to WAPA to identify which privileges under Exemption 5 apply to the portions of the documents that are being withheld and explain the basis for all Exemption 5 withholdings in a new determination letter. We find, however, that WAPA properly withheld the personal e-mail addresses and telephone numbers of WAPA employees pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Therefore, the Appeal will be remanded in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Power Wire Constructors on March 9, 2009, Case No. TFA-0297, is hereby remanded to WAPA which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(2) This matter is hereby denied in all other aspects.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Environmental Defense Institute
Date of Filing:	March 10, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0298

On March 10, 2009, Environmental Defense Institute (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on February 25, 2009, by the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Idaho responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.[1/] In its determination, Idaho identified and released numerous documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenges Idaho's withholding of information from nine documents. This appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On April 10, 2008, the Appellant filed a request with Idaho for documents referring to the Advanced Test Reactor (ATR) that were referenced in DOE/Idaho National Laboratory (INL) "Certification Report No. 29." Request Letter dated April 10, 2008, from Chuck Broscious, President, Board of Directors, Appellant, to Idaho. On February 25, 2009, Idaho released numerous documents in full to the Appellant. Idaho redacted a portion of nine documents. In its Determination Letter, Idaho stated that eight of the redacted documents contain information that is exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemptions 2. Determination Letter dated February 25, 2009, from Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, Idaho, to Appellant. The remaining document contained information that was exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemption 4. Id. at 2.

[1/] The request was submitted on April 10, 2008. Because of the broad scope of the request, Idaho has been sending responsive documents to the Appellant in installments as the documents are reviewed and ready for release.

On March 10, 2009, the Appellant appealed, contending that the FOIA exemptions that Idaho cited in its Determination Letter do not apply to the redacted documents. Appeal Letter at 1 received March 10, 2008, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). With regard to the documents where information was withheld under Exemption 2, the Appellant claimed that Idaho's assertion that release of the information could lead to sabotage was an inappropriate reason to invoke the Exemption. According to the Appellant, the circumvention element of Exemption 2 "only protects documents such as agency law enforcement manuals and procedures from public disclosure so that individuals may not use them to circumvent the law or law enforcement measures." Id. at 3. Thus, prevention of sabotage would not be a proper justification to invoke Exemption 2. The Appellant also argued that Idaho inappropriately applied Exemption 4 to redact the remaining document responsive to its request.[2/]

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemptions 2 and 4 are at issue in this case.

[2/] In the Appeal, the Appellant also appears to challenge withholdings under Exemptions 3 and 6. However, no portions of the nine documents which the Appellant has requested to receive in full were withheld under either of these Exemptions.

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). "Exemption 2 is not limited to internal personnel rules and practices; rather, it is construed more generally to encompass documents that are used for predominantly internal purposes." Judicial Watch, Inc., v. Dep't of Transp., No. 02-566, 2005 WL 1606915, at *9 (D.D.C. July 7, 2005). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). Idaho has claimed that the information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 591 F.2d 753, 771 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (en banc).

Idaho withheld portions of eight documents under FOIA Exemption 2. Idaho explained in its Determination Letter that the information redacted from these eight documents is inherently internal. Determination Letter at 1. Thus, it is "high 2" information and exempt from disclosure under Exemption 2. It further stated that Exemption 2's anti-circumvention protection is applicable in this case because the information identifies "vulnerabilities to sabotage events, system configurations/capabilities that may be exploited and internal procedures for operating the reactor that are inherently internal." Id. Idaho stated that it withheld those portions because disclosure of the information "would significantly risk installations and projects that safeguard nuclear materials and facilities." Id.

Idaho claimed in its Determination Letter that the information it withheld from the eight documents was "Official Use Only" information. When used by the DOE, the term "Official Use Only" reflects an agency determination that the information in question is protected from mandatory FOIA disclosure under one or more of eight of the exemptions set forth at 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).[3/] See DOE Order 471.3, Identifying and Protecting Official Use

Only Information. We have previously held that this designation by itself is insufficient as a justification for withholding information under the FOIA because it does not explain how a FOIA exemption is applied, thereby making it impossible for the requestor to formulate a meaningful appeal, and for this Office to evaluate that appeal. Joseph K. Huffman, Case No. TFA-0153 (2006).[4/] Therefore, the designation of a document as "Official Use Only" is only a suggestion that the document must be evaluated to determine whether it should be released under the FOIA.

However, we have reviewed unredacted versions of all eight Exemption 2 documents that were released to the Appellant. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information that Idaho withheld in this case neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. Accordingly, this meets the first prong of the Crooker test and is predominantly internal.

The information meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. EPA, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d 530-31.

Release of the information at issue in the present case could allow terrorists or other malefactors to identify vulnerabilities of the ATR and to understand how to sabotage it. Accordingly, disclosure of the information at issue risks circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its statutory mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 2284 (statute prohibiting sabotage of nuclear facilities). Even though this Appellant may have no such intentions, if DOE were to release these documents to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public who requested it. The Appellant argued that "[t]he 'circumvention' exemption only protects documents such as agency law enforcement manuals and procedures from public disclosure so that individual may not use them to circumvent the law or law enforcement measures." Appeal Letter at 3. The appellant's definition of the limits of Exemption 2 is too narrow. Exemption 2 encompasses documents that are used for internal purposes not just for law enforcement purposes. Judicial Watch, Inc., 2005 WL 1606915, at 9. Therefore, because of the significant danger of circumvention of DOE regulatory security responsibility involved in public release, we find that the information was properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

2. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both exempt information and non-exempt information that is not otherwise exempt from release, the non-exempt information must generally be segregated and released to the requestor. We have reviewed the information that Idaho redacted from the eight documents. Idaho was very careful with its redactions. We believe that none of the information that was redacted could be reasonably segregated.

3. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. Idaho claimed the release of the information would risk circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. We agree. As we stated above, release of the information could allow terrorists or other malefactors to sabotage the ATR. It is therefore obvious that release of the information would not be in the public interest.

B. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Idaho withheld a portion of the document "commercial grade item dedication documentation and receiving inspection documentation" under Exemption 4. Idaho claimed that the redacted information is commercial or proprietary information. The Appellant challenged the appropriateness of Idaho's Exemption 4 application to the redacted information.

An agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Services, Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (1996) (RIS). A determination must adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. RIS.

If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999). Conversely, conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 680 (D.C. Cir. 1976) ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA").

Our review of the Determination Letter indicates that Idaho failed to provide any explanation as to how Exemption 4 applied to any of the information withheld in the document, "Commercial grade item dedication documentation and receiving inspection documentation." The only explanation offered in the Determination Letter was a statement that the document "contains information of a commercial or proprietary nature and as such is redacted pursuant to Exemption 4. Exemption 4 allows a federal agency to withheld 'commercial or financial information obtained from a person [that is] privileged or confidential.' 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4)." Determination Letter at 2. While the Determination Letter stated the general Exemption 4 requirements, it did not provide any description of the withheld material or explain how the Exemption applies to the withheld information. Consequently, Idaho's Determination Letter was inadequate with regard to its Exemption 4 withholding.

In cases where agencies do not provide an adequate determination with respect to a FOIA request, we usually remand the request to the agency with instruction to issue a new determination letter so that the appellant and our Office can understand the rationale for withholding the information. See Steven C. Vigg, Case No. TFA-0003 (2002). This is especially important in Exemption 4 cases, where it may not be obvious, without expert information, what competitive harm would result from release of the information. We will remand the matter to Idaho so that it can issue another determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to the withheld material in that document.

III. Conclusion

The information redacted from the eight documents was properly withheld under Exemption 2. However, Idaho did not provide an adequate determination with respect to Exemption 4. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to Idaho for a further determination on the Exemption 4 withholding.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0298, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Tri-Valley CAREs
Date of Filing:	April 17, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0302

On April 17, 2009, Tri-Valley CAREs (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on March 6, 2009, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA/SC responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, NNSA/SC identified and released ten documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenges NNSA/SC's withholding of information from two of these ten documents. In addition, the Appellant challenged the adequacy of NNSA/SC's search for documents. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to release the withheld information to the Appellant and conduct a further search.

I. Background

On October 24, 2008, the Appellant requested > the preliminary documented safety analysis, the documented safety analysis, the Quality Assurance Program, the safety management system, the technical safety requirements, the safety management program, the safety evaluation report, the safety basis for the facility, any documents relating to the unreviewed safety question process, the June 20, 2006, approval by the Livermore Site Office of the future segmentation of the Tritium Facility into two Category 3 nuclear facilities, and any other relevant documents.

Request Letter dated October 24, 2008, from Robert Schwartz, Appellant, to Carolyn A. Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA/SC. On March 6, 2009, NNSA/SC released seven documents in full to the Appellant. NNSA/SC redacted portions of three documents, contending that the redacted information is exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemption 3.[1/] Portions of two of those documents were also withheld under FOIA Exemption 2. Determination Letter dated March 6, 2009, from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA/SC, to Appellant (Determination Letter).

On April 17, 2009, the Appellant appealed, contending that the NNSA/SC improperly justified its withholding of information under Exemption 2. Appeal Letter at 3 received April 17, 2009, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (Appeal Letter). The Appellant claims that NNSA/SC failed to "provide a sufficient factual or legal basis to support its assertion that the requested records are within the terms of the statutory language as personnel rules or internal practices of the agency." Id. The Appellant also claims that NNSA/SC failed to justify its statement that release of the information "could possibly expose this department, as well as other department/organization, to a 'significant risk of circumvention of agency regulations or statutes.'" Id. at 4. The Appellant claims that the public interest in release of the information outweighs withholding, since the records do not fall under Exemption 2. Id. In addition, the Appellant challenged NNSA/SC's search for documents. Id.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[2/]

We contacted NNSA/SC to determine what type of search was conducted. NNSA/SC indicated that the request was forwarded to both the Livermore Site Office (LSO) and the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL). LSO stated that it conducted both a computerized and hand search to recover the requested information. A senior nuclear safety analyst conducted the hand search, searching "facility records as they relate to the safety basis of nuclear facilities." E-mail dated May 5, 2009, from Shirley Peterson, NNSA/SC, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (May 5, 2009 E-mail). LLNL indicated that it conducted a hand search because the documents are not "indexed electronically, as the project is still active." Id. The search was conducted through "the project records stored on the Plant Engineering server and the project manager's [personal computer]." Id. The electronic project folders were reviewed manually. Id. NNSA/SC searched in the areas most likely to have the requested information. Further, a person with knowledge of the subject matter conducted the search. We believe the searches that were conducted were reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information in those offices.

However, the Appellant challenged the search because the "evaluation by the Chief of Defense Nuclear Safety (CDNS) regarding the decision to approve segmentation of LLNL Building 331" was not provided. Appeal Letter at 3. LSO indicated that no formal evaluation by the CDNS was provided to LSO. May 5, 2009 E-mail. LSO continued "[a]ny evaluation provided by the CDNS to the NNSA Central Technical Authority[3/] (CTA) to recommend approval of the exemption was not provided to LSO and would be maintained at either the CDNS office or the NNSA Headquarters." Id. We believe that NNSA/SC should have also sent the request to the CTA and to the CDNS, which are both at NNSA Headquarters. For that reason, we will remand the matter to NNSA/SC for a further search of NNSA Headquarters.

B. Exemption 2

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemption 2 is at issue in this case.

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). "Exemption 2 is not limited to internal personnel rules and practices; rather, it is construed more generally to encompass documents that are used for predominantly internal purposes." Judicial Watch, Inc., v. Dep't of Transp., No. 02-566, 2005 WL 1606915, at *9 (D.D.C. July 7, 2005). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). NNSA/SC has claimed that the information at issue in the present case involves only the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 670 F.2d 1051, 1073-74 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (en banc).

NNSA/SC withheld portions of two documents under FOIA Exemption 2. NNSA/SC explained in its Determination Letter that the information redacted from these documents is inherently internal. Determination Letter at 2. NNSA/SC further stated that the anti-circumvention protection of Exemption 2 is applicable in this case because the information "contains critical infrastructure information, the release of which could identify vulnerabilities." Id. NNSA/SC stated that "if any of the information was released that it could benefit adversaries by helping them identify possible program impacts and vulnerabilities, as well as provide them the opportunity to target these facilities." Id. Thus, it is "high 2" information and exempt from disclosure under Exemption 2.

We have reviewed unredacted versions of the two documents that were released to the Appellant with information withheld under Exemption 2. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information that NNSA/SC withheld in this case neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. Accordingly, this meets the first prong of the Crooker test and is predominantly internal.

The information meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. EPA, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d at 530-31.

Release of the information at issue in the present case could allow terrorists or other malefactors to identify vulnerabilities of the Tritium facility. Accordingly, disclosure of the information at issue risks circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its statutory mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 2284 (statute prohibiting sabotage of nuclear facilities). Even though this Appellant may have no intention to identify vulnerabilities of the Tritium facility, if DOE were to release these documents to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public who requested it. The Appellant argued that NNSA presented conclusory and generalized allegations about how the withheld information would risk circumvention of agency regulation. Appeal Letter at 4. We disagree. We believe that NNSA/SC explained its withholding properly. Any further information may also lead a malefactor to identify vulnerabilities. Therefore, because of the significant danger of circumvention of DOE regulatory security responsibility involved in public release, we find that the information was properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

2. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both exempt information and non-exempt information that is not otherwise exempt from release, the non-exempt information must generally be segregated and released to the requestor. We have reviewed the information that NNSA/SC redacted from the two documents. NNSA/SC was very careful with its redactions. We believe that none of the information that was redacted could be reasonably segregated.

3. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. NNSA/SC claimed the release of the information would risk circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. We agree. As we stated above, release of the information could allow terrorists or other malefactors to sabotage the Tritium Facility. It is therefore obvious that release of the information would not be in the public interest.

III. Conclusion

The information redacted from the two documents was properly withheld under Exemption 2. The search conducted by NNSA/SC of LSO and LLNL was reasonably calculated to uncover all documents responsive to the Appellant's request. However, we believe that the NNSA Headquarters should have also been searched. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to NNSA/SC for a further search.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CAREs, Case No. TFA-0302, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, which shall conduct a further search for information in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Gabriele Weber

Date of Filing: April 22, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0303

This Decision concerns an Appeal Dr. Gabriele Weber filed from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR). In that determination, OIR, on behalf of several DOE offices, responded to a request for documents that Dr. Weber submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OIR stated that one office, the DOE Office of History and Heritage Resources (OHHR) located eight documents responsive to Dr. Weber's request, which were released to Dr. Weber in their entirety. No other DOE office located records responsive to Dr. Weber's request. This appeal, if granted, would require OIR to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

Dr. Weber filed a FOIA request with OIR for records pertaining to collaboration on nuclear development between Argentina, Israel and Germany in the late 1950s and early 1960s, including any documents related to the efforts of the United States during that time period to monitor the nuclear programs of those countries, as well as any DOE records pertaining to Nazi war criminal, Adolf Eichmann. See Email from Dr. Gabriele Weber to OIR (August 28, 2008) (FOIA Request). In two separate determination letters, OIR stated that a search for records conducted by OHHR yielded a total of eight responsive documents. Those eight documents were released in their entirety. See Letter from Verlette Gatlin, OIR, to Dr. Gabriele Weber (September 29, 2008) (Interim Response Letter); Letter from Alexander Morris, OIR, to Dr. Gabriele Weber (March 20, 2009) (Final Determination Letter).

Dr. Weber filed the present appeal challenging the adequacy of the search performed by OIR. Letter from Gabriele Weber to OHA (received April 22, 2009) (Appeal Letter). Dr. Weber's appeal contends that none of the eight previously released documents specifically address the transfer of a large quantity of uranium from Argentina to Israel in 1963, although they mention two previous transfers of smaller amounts of uranium in 1960 and 1962. Appeal Letter.

According to Dr. Weber, "the main aim of the [DOE] was always to control foreign nuclear programs" and, therefore, the DOE must have known about the third, larger transfer. Id. Consequently, Dr. Weber believes that the absence of any reference to the 1963 shipment in the eight previously released documents suggests that additional responsive documents should exist.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[1]

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted OIR to ascertain the scope of the search. OIR informed us that when it received Dr. Weber's FOIA Request, it forwarded the request to several DOE elements to determine whether they maintained the types of records requested by Dr. Weber.[2] E-mail from Alexander C. Morris, OIR, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, April 28, 2009. With the exception of OHHR, each of the DOE elements contacted responded that it did not maintain the types of records sought by Dr. Weber.[3] Id. OHHR, whose primary responsibility is to preserve the agency's historic records and artifacts and coordinate the transfer of the records to the National Archives and Records Administration, determined that it might have documents of the types Dr. Weber requested and conducted a search for responsive documents. Id.

We contacted OHHR to discuss the search for records. OHHR informed us that it maintains an electronic database containing "a folder title listing of [OHHR] records holdings." Email from Terry Fehner, OHHR, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, April 27, 2009. In addition, OHHR has a card catalog, containing 20,000 or more cards, listing the subjects of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) Secretariat files, which contain materials that went to and from the AEC Commissioners.[4] Id.; Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Terry Fehner and Diane DeMoura, April 27, 2009. According to OHHR, a search was conducted of the electronic database containing folder titles and the card catalog, which subsequently led to a physical search of folders on Germany, Argentina, and Israel. The search yielded the eight previously released documents

[2] The DOE elements contacted in this case were the Office of Policy and International Affairs (PI), the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), the Office of Nuclear Energy (NE), the Office of Intelligence and Counterintelligence (IN), and the Office of History and Heritage Resources (OHHR).
[3] Because the records sought by Dr. Weber appear to be related to intelligence matters, we contacted IN to discuss in greater detail its search for documents. IN responded that "a search of IN holdings did not produce any documents on the requested subject" because "the events described in the request date to 1960-63, significantly predating [the] office." IN further recommended that the request be forwarded to OHHR whose mission includes maintaining the DOE's historic records. Email from Debbie Tijani, IN, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, April 29, 2009.
[4] The AEC, a predecessor agency to the DOE, was in existence during the years relevant to the records Dr. Weber requested.

pertaining to the 1960 and 1962 uranium transfers. Id. Neither the electronic database nor the card catalog contained any references to the 1963 uranium transfer or Adolf Eichmann. Id.

Based on this information, we find that OIR, and subsequently OHHR, performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Dr. Weber's request, despite the absence of references to the 1963 shipment of uranium and Adolf Eichmann in the eight responsive documents. Therefore, the search was adequate. Accordingly, Dr. Weber's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on April 22, 2009, by Gabriele Weber, OHA Case No. TFA-0303, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: State of New York

Filing Date: April 23, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0304

This Decision concerns the State of New York's Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE) issued to it on March 19, 2009. In that determination, the OE withheld information under Exemption 5 of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. If we grant this Appeal, the OE may not withhold the information under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

I. Background

In December 2007, New York filed a FOIA request with DOE for correspondence between DOE, CRA International, and transmission developers or stakeholders regarding an August 2006 Congestion Study and an October 2007 National Interest Electric Transmission Corridor (NIETC) Designation Order. Determination Letter, July 3, 2008. DOE released some information and withheld other information under FOIA Exemption 5, including Document 26, entitled "Analysis of Implications of Transmission Congestion in PJM and NYISO." New York appealed the determination. The Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) ordered the OE to issue a new determination, "explaining whether the OE has fully adopted [Document 26], either formally or informally." State of New York, TFA-0271 (2008).[*]

The OE issued a new determination, withholding Document 26 under FOIA Exemption 5 because the OE has "not adopted" it, "formally or informally." Determination Letter, Dec. 5, 2008. New York appealed the determination. OHA remanded the case to the OE, and stated "that [Document 26] may contain factual, segregable material that could be released to the requester without revealing the deliberative process. For example, Paragraph 3 of Page 4 . . . contains some information that appears to be factual and segregable." State of New York, TFA-0289 (2009).

The OE issued a new determination, withholding Document 26 under FOIA Exemption 5. Determination Letter, Mar. 19, 2009. The OE provided three reasons for withholding Document 26:

1) Document 26 is entirely "deliberative and pre-decisional." Its "very nature and purpose . . . was to assist in discussions and determinations that the Agency was making with regard to corridor transmission congestion";

2) "The final analysis" released on March 2, 2007 "did not include any of the theories or ideas found on Page 4 of [Document 26]"; and

3) "Attempts to separate factual deliberative material would result in meaningless phrases as discussed in Mead Data Central, Inc., 566 F.2d 242, 261 (D.C. Cir. 1977) . . . . The purpose of the document was to begin the discussion and review of corridor transmission discussion. Therefore, it is difficult to segregate the advisory opinions and recommendations from 'facts.'"

Id.

New York then filed the present Appeal with OHA. New York first argues that "Document 26 should be disclosed" if it "was seen by third parties who are not DOE employees"; i.e., if the OE has waived its claim of exemption. New York also provides the following arguments under Exemption 5:

1) "Document 26 should be disclosed to the extent that it contains factual statements";

2) "DOE has made no attempt to separate the factual information in Document 26 from information allegedly of a deliberative nature"; and

3) "The difficulty of the task of separating the factual from the deliberative is irrelevant."

Appeal Letter, Apr. 23, 2009.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request, unless it falls within enumerated exemptions. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a), 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly, to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

A. Waiver

In its Appeal in TFA-0271, New York argued that the OE waived its claim of exemption by disclosing Document 26 to third parties. We rejected that argument. See State of New York, TFA-0271 (2008). We declined to consider the argument when New York raised it again. See State of New York, TFA-0289 (2009). We also decline to consider the argument here.

B. Exemption 5

1. Authority

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, [information] must . . . satisfy two conditions: [1] its source must be a Government agency, and [2] it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8.

Information satisfies Klamath's first condition if it is an inter-agency or intra-agency communication. Id. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)). The statutory definition of "agency" is broad, and includes "any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government . . . or any independent regulatory agency." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(f)). Information prepared outside the government by a government consultant qualifies as an "intra-agency" communication except when the consultant urges the agency to support a position "that is necessarily adverse to the interests of [the consultant's] competitors." Id. at 14.

Information satisfies Klamath's second condition if it falls within "civil discovery privileges," including the deliberative process privilege. Id. at 8 (citations omitted). An agency may withhold information under the deliberative process privilege if it is "predecisional" and "deliberative." Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 866 (D.C. Cir. 1980). "[Information] . . . is 'predecisional' if it precedes, in temporal sequence, the 'decision' to which it relates." Hinckley v. United States, 140 F.3d 277, 284 (D.C. Cir. 1998). We "must be able to pinpoint an agency decision or policy to which the [information] contributed." Id. Conversely, information which explains actions an agency has already taken is not predecisional. Ryan v. Dep't of Justice, 617 F.2d 781, 791 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Information may lose its predecisional status "if it is adopted, formally or informally, as the agency position . . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

Information is deliberative if it "reflects the give-and-take" of the decision or policy-making process or "weigh[s] the pros and cons of agency adoption of one viewpoint or another." Id. The agency must identify the role the information plays in that process.

Hinckley, 140 F.3d at 284 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). We "ask . . . whether the information is so candid or personal in nature that public disclosure is likely . . . to stifle honest and frank communication within the agency . . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege does not exempt purely factual information from disclosure. Petroleum Info. Corp. v. United States Dep't of the Interior, 976 F.2d 1429, 1435 (D.C. Cir. 1992). However, "[t]o the extent that predecisional materials, even if 'factual' in form, reflect an agency's preliminary positions or ruminations about how to exercise discretion on some policy matter, they are protected under Exemption 5." Id.

The deliberative process privilege routinely protects certain types of information, including "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege assures that agency employees will provide decision makers with their "uninhibited opinions" without fear that later disclosure may bring criticism. Id. The privilege also "protect[s] against premature disclosure of proposed policies before they have been . . . formulated or adopted" to avoid "misleading the public by dissemination of documents suggesting reasons and rationales . . . which were not in fact the ultimate reasons for the agency's action." Id. (citation omitted).

Even if the FOIA exempts documents from disclosure, non-exempt information that is "reasonably segregable" from those documents must be disclosed after the exempt information is redacted. Johnson v. Exec. Office for United States Attorneys, 310 F.3d 771, 776 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)).

2. Whether Document 26 Contains Segregable Factual Information

As stated above, the OE presented three arguments to justify its withholding of Document 26 under Exemption 5: (i) the document is pre-decisional and deliberative; (ii) the OE's final analysis did not include information from Document 26; and (iii) because segregating factual information would result in "meaningless phrases," "it is difficult to segregate the advisory opinions and recommendations from 'facts.'" New York responded that (i) the OE should disclose segregable factual information; and (ii) the difficulty of segregating the information is irrelevant. We reviewed Document 26 and address the arguments together.

First, in TFA-0289, we found that the OE properly invoked Exemption 5 to withhold the non-segregable portions of Document 26. Therefore, we need not rule on whether the OE properly withheld the non-segregable portions of Document 26. Second, Exemption 5 does not allow an agency to withhold segregable information merely because the agency did not include that information in its final decision. Third, we reviewed Document 26 and found segregable information. The information we found is factual – it does not represent opinion that reflects the OE's deliberative process. Fourth, segregating that information would not result in "meaningless phrases." Therefore, the OE may not invoke Exemption 5 to withhold the following information in Document 26:

Page	Sentence or Paragraph	Passage
3	Paragraphs 3 and 4	The entire paragraphs. The third paragraph begins "The cost of distribution services . . . ." The fourth paragraph begins "The cost of transmission . . . ."
4	Paragraph 3	The excerpt beginning, "In an LMP structure . . ." and ending "energy is being supplied."
5	Last Sentence	The entire sentence. It begins "Figure 1-PJM . . . ."
6	Paragraph 1	The entire paragraph. It begins "All zones . . . ."
7	Paragraph 3	The entire paragraph. It begins "On-Peak . . . ."
11	Sentence 1	The entire sentence. It begins "Figures 7-PJM . . ." and ends "observed price disparity."
15	Footnote 1	The entire footnote.
18	Paragraph 3	The entire paragraph. It begins "All zones . . . ."
19	Paragraph 3	The entire paragraph. It begins "On-Peak . . . ."
23	Sentence 1	The entire sentence. It begins "Figures 7-NY . . ." and ends "price disparity."

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the State of New York, Case Number TFA-0304, is granted in part. The Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability (OE) may not invoke Exemption 5 of the Freedom of Information Act to withhold the passages of Document 26 cited in the Decision above.

(2) This matter is remanded to the OE to disclose the passages of Document 26 cited in the Decision above.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Lisa Thornburgh
Date of Filing:	May 7, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0306

On May 7, 2009, Lisa Thornburgh filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Office (DOE/OR) issued on March 31, 2009. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from DOE any records concerning "possible illegal human radiation experiments on the general public in eastern Tennessee, specifically between Erwin nuclear reprocessing facility and [Oak Ridge National Laboratory]." E-mail from Lisa Thornburgh to DOE FOIA Officer (March 12, 2009). In response to this request, DOE/OR issued a determination stating that "no documents could be located in the files of the Oak Ridge Office, Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU) or the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL)." Letter from Amy L. Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Lisa Thornburgh (March 31, 2009). Ms. Thornburgh challenges the adequacy of DOE/OR's search for documents responsive to her request.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, upon receiving the present Appeal, we contacted DOE/OR to inquire as to the search it conducted in response to Ms. Thornburgh's request. DOE/OR states that it searched its Environmental Management program office, as well as "Oak Ridge Associated Universities, and Oak Ridge National Laboratory. We searched our document management storage system for any relevant documents. This system stores many documents uploaded from DOE program offices dating back to April 2001." E-Mail from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (May 14, 2009). DOE/OR further informed us that its Environmental Management program office > covers relations [with] and requests for assistance or involvement with State and Local agencies, towns, counties, if relevant . . . ; Oak Ridge Associated Universities coordinates with [the Centers for Disease Control, the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, and the Department of Health and Human Services] to perform epidemiology studies in communities outside the Oak Ridge Reservation (Erwin is about 100 miles north of Oak Ridge) as well as surveys and monitoring of formerly utilized sites; and Oak Ridge National laboratory also performs surveys and monitoring of formerly utilized sites.

Id. Ms. Rothrock notes that she "reviewed prior requests from Ms. Thornburgh and then contacted [points of contact] at the three locations and asked them to identify and copy any relevant documents for the new request." Id. These points of contact responded to Ms. Rothrock "with negative search results for the new request." Id.

Based on the above descriptions, it appears clear to us that DOE/OR performed a search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that DOE/OR's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by the Appellant. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.[*]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Lisa Thornburgh, Case Number TFA-0306, is hereby denied.

[*] Ms. Thornburgh's appeal also referenced a previous determination issued by DOE/OR on October 20, 2008. The DOE FOIA regulations provide that an appeal may be filed "within 30 calendar days of its receipt, . . ." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Thus, to the extent that her submission is an appeal of DOE/OR's October 20, 2008, determination, the appeal is dismissed as untimely.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Mike Malik

Date of Filing: May 15, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0307

On May 15, 2009, Mr. Mike Malik appealed a determination issued by the Office of Scientific and Technical Information (OSTI) of the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Operations Office under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his appeal, Mr. Malik contends that OSTI failed to provide documents responsive to his request. If the present Appeal is granted, OSTI will be ordered to release the requested information.

I. Background

On January 30, 2009, Mr. Malik filed a request in which he sought the following computer software packages: (1) SW AP-9 (nesc0828)- 1-D Stress Analysis for Hydrostatic and Elastic Plastic Materials; (2) THEMP3D (nesc9766) - 3-D Time-Dependent Elastic Plastic Flow; and (3) TOODY -2 (nesc0627) - Lagrangian Nonlinear Wave Propagation in 2-D X-Y or Cylindrical Geometry. On February 18, 2009, OSTI issued a determination in which it stated that the Energy Science and Technology Software Center (ESTSC) conducted a search of its files and located no responsive records. See February 18, 2009 Determination Letter at 1. However, on April 13, 2009, OSTI issued a supplemental response to its February 18, 2009 Determination Letter. In that response, OSTI indicated that it re-examined the parameters of Mr. Malik's request and determined that ESTSC is the office most likely to maintain the requested records. See April 13, 2009 Determination Letter. OSTI further stated that ESTSC conducted a search of its files for the software packages but did not find copies as it does not physically maintain copies of such records. Id. OSTI stated that the packages requested by Mr. Malik are maintained by the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (NEA). 1/ Finally, OSTI stated that 1/ Pursuant to a Cooperative Agreement between the DOE and the NEA, American requests for software programs are handled by DOE centralized software management facilities. The ESTSC is the facility responsible for handling requests for all codes with -NESC prefixes, which include the three packages that Mr. Malik requested. Id.

NEA, through DOE, will be able to provide Mr. Malik with the packages. However, it stated that copies of these packages will cost $1,137.00 each, at a total cost of $3,411.00. 2/ Id. In his Appeal, Mr. Malik contends that ESTSC's fee schedule "is not applicable." See Appeal Letter at 1. He asserts that "only regular FOIA pricing statutes are applicable." Id. Mr. Malik asks OHA to order OSTI to release the requested software packages and that he be charged "pursuant to charges authorized by FOIA statutes," specifically copying costs. Id. at 3. 3/ To further support his Appeal, Mr. Malik notes, inter alia, that the packages that he requests are not included in a "selective list" of ESTSC packages offered for sale and are not part of the ESTSC rate structure that was quoted to him. Id. at 2. He also contends that precedent has already been set by his previous FOIA request in which he requested a similar record, the requested record was provided to him and no copying fees were charged. Id.

II. Analysis

In its Determination Letter, OSTI informed Mr. Malik that NEA, through DOE, would be able to provide the requested records. However, the total cost of the packages would be $3,411.00. As stated above, Mr. Malik asserts in his Appeal that ESTSC's rate structure is not applicable and that he had previously requested a similar record pursuant to a FOIA request and the software package was provided to him at no cost (although he states that he was willing to pay copying costs pursuant to the FOIA). We contacted ESTSC for a response to Mr. Malik's Appeal. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA and Kim Buckner, ESTSC (June 3, 2009). With regard to Mr. Malik's assertion that he had previously requested a similar record and received it, ESTSC explained that when Mr. Malik requested this package, the office searched its database and located an entry for the software package. Id. However, the database record indicated that this software package was inactive and that ESTSC no longer offered it for purchase. Id. However, ESTSC indicated that after searching its CD master file, it located a copy of a CD that had been obtained from NEA in previous years. Id. ESTSC stated that it decided to make the CD to available to Mr. Malik at no charge since it no longer offered the package for sale. In addition, since it did not have an electronic copy of the manual that went with the package, ESTSC asked NEA for a copy of the manual which it acquired in PDF format. ESTSC further stated that this was the only item it obtained from the NEA for this FOIA request. Id.

2/ OSTI also indicated that the requested packages have been discounted by 40% because they are more than eight years old.

3/ In his Appeal, Mr. Malik specifically requests the following: (1) that the requested records be provided along with a signed certification by the General Counsel that the certified copies of the original records are being provided without any tampering; (2) that the requested records be provided expeditiously; (3) that penalties be assessed "pursuant to 10 C.F.R. § 552," as the actions are arbitrary and capricious and (4) that an investigation be conducted to identify a possible third party who may have been involved in "behind the scene deliberations" with OSTI. Mr. Malik has not provided any proof or documentation of these allegations regarding his requested records. Moreover, these requests are beyond the scope of the FOIA.

According to ESTSC, unlike Mr. Malik's previous FOIA request which consisted of a unique set of circumstances, his current FOIA request would be processed according to its normal procedure for obtaining software from NEA. ESTSC stated that once it receives a request from a customer for a software package available from NEA, if the customer ensures that it is interested in purchasing the package, then ESTSC contacts NEA and requests a copy of the package. Id. NEA then ships the package to ESTSC, it is processed, inputted in a database and announced on the Internet via ESTSC's web page. ESTSC stated that the price of the package "is based on the type of customer and the type of computer for which the package is written." Id. After the package is processed, ESTSC sends the customer a price quote and a license agreement. When the customer returns payment for the package along with the license agreement, ESTSC processes the order and ships the package to the customer. Id. According to ESTSC, Mr. Malik's current request would be handled pursuant to this procedure. 4/

We find ESTSC procedure and fee structure to be appropriate. It is generally true that an agency may not withhold documents in its possession solely because the requester can obtain the document from a source outside that agency. An agency need not provide to a requester documents that "have been previously published or made available by the agency itself." Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136 at 152 (1988). Since the DOE has chosen to make the records in question publicly available through ESTSC, OSTI is not required by the FOIA to provide this document to Mr. Malik directly, and may instead refer him to the location where the document is available. See Henry, Lowerre, Johnson, Hess & Frederick, 25 DOE ¶ 80,141 at 80,598 (1995); Daniel Grossman, 22 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,537 (1992). Mr. Malik would then be required to pay the accompanying fees as set forth by ESTSC. Accordingly, Mr. Malik's appeal is denied. 5/

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mike Malik, OHA Case No. TFA-0307, on May 15, 2009, is hereby denied.

4/ In his Appeal, Mr. Malik asserts that ESTSC has a "selective list" of computer programs that it offers for sale and the packages he requested are not part of that "selective list." See Appeal at 2. ESTSC, which serves as the DOE's central repository for scientific and technical software developed at DOE laboratories, has indicated that it is does not know what Mr. Malik means by a "selective list," but that the package codes that are submitted to the ESTSC and which have either a copyrighted or unlimited distribution, are announced through the ESTSC Home Page on the Internet. According to ESTSC, a package may not be announced on the web if it has given a "limited" distribution by the submitting organization. Id.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Tri-Valley CAREs
Date of Filing:	May 15, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0308

On May 15, 2009, Tri-Valley CAREs (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 15, 2009, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA/SC responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, NNSA/SC identified 100 documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenges NNSA/SC's withholding in their entirety 62 of the documents and the withholding of portions of one other document. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On June 26, 2007, the Appellant requested all documents related to programs, projects, reports, schedules, letters, notes and memos concerning the Tritium Facility Modernization Project at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL). June 26, 2007, Request Letter from Appellant to NNSA/SC. On October 11, 2007, the Appellant supplemented its request for information. October 11, 2007, Request Letter from Appellant to NNSA/SC. On March 2, 2009, NNSA/SC responded to the request and informed the Appellant that it had found 100 documents responsive to its request. March 2, 2009 Determination Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA/SC, to Appellant. It withheld 62 of those documents in their entirety and one document in part, all pursuant to Exemption 2 of the FOIA.[1/] Id. On March 30, 2009, the Appellant appealed the March 2, 2009, determination to the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). On April 16, 2009, OHA dismissed the Appeal because NNSA/SC withdrew its March 2, 2009, determination, so that it could include a list of documents with the determination. April 16, 2009, Dismissal Letter from Fred L. Brown, OHA, to Appellant. On April 15, 2009, NNSA/SC issued a new determination. April 15, 2009, Determination Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA/SC, to Appellant. The new determination withheld the same documents under the same rationale. Id. The only difference between the two determinations was the inclusion of a list of the documents in the second determination. On May 15, 2009, the Appellant filed this Appeal, claiming that NNSA/SC improperly withheld the information under Exemption 2 because the information is not "within the terms of the statutory language as personnel rules or internal practices of the agency." May 5, 2009, Appeal Letter at 4 from Robert Schwartz, Attorney, Appellant, to Director, OHA (May 5, 2009, Appeal Letter). In addition, the Appellant claimed that NNSA/SC failed to provide sufficient justification for how the withheld information would allow individuals to engage in criminal activity. Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). In this regard, it is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemption 2 is at issue in this case.

1. Exemption 2

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). "Exemption 2 is not limited to internal personnel rules and practices; rather, it is construed more generally to encompass documents that are used for predominantly internal purposes." Judicial Watch, Inc., v. Dep't of Transp., No. 02-566, 2005 WL 1606915, at *9 (D.D.C. July 7, 2005). The courts have interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). NNSA/SC asserts that the information at issue in the present case falls within the second category, "high two" information. The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "high two" category. Under this test, first articulated by the D.C. Circuit, the agency seeking to withhold information under "high two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) its disclosure "significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes." Crooker v. ATF, 670 F.2d 1051, 1073-74 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (en banc).

As referenced above, NNSA/SC withheld 62 documents in their entirety and a portion of one other document under FOIA Exemption 2. NNSA/SC explained in its Determination Letter that the withheld information is inherently internal. Determination Letter at 2. NNSA/SC further stated that the anti-circumvention protection of Exemption 2 is applicable in this case because the information "could benefit adversaries by helping them identify possible vulnerabilities, as well as provide them the opportunity to target this [Tritium] facility." Id. Thus, it is "high 2" information and exempt from disclosure under Exemption 2.

We have reviewed an unredacted version of the one document that was released in part to the Appellant. We have also reviewed the 62 documents withheld in their entirety. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that information which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam) (withholding information including transportation security procedures under Exemption 2). The information that NNSA/SC withheld in this case neither regulates activities among members of the public nor sets standards to be followed by agency personnel. The 62 documents withheld in their entirety are architectural drawings. The document with portions redacted contains specific plans for modernization of the Tritium facility. Accordingly, these meet the first prong of the Crooker test and are predominantly internal.

The information, with two exceptions, meets the second prong of the Crooker test as well. It is well settled that an agency need not cite a specific regulation or statute to properly invoke the "high two" exemption. Kaganove v. EPA, 856 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1988); Dirksen v. HHS, 803 F.2d 1456, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1986); National Treasury Employees Union v. United States Customs Service, 802 F.2d 525, 530-31 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (NTEU). Instead, the second part of the Crooker test is satisfied by a showing that disclosure would risk circumvention of general requirements. NTEU, 802 F.2d at 530-31.

Release of the information at issue in the present case could allow terrorists or other malefactors to identify vulnerabilities of the Tritium facility. Accordingly, disclosure of the information at issue risks circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its statutory mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials.

See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 2284 (statute prohibiting sabotage of nuclear facilities). Even though this Appellant may have no intention to identify vulnerabilities of the Tritium facility, if DOE were to release these documents to the Appellant under the FOIA, we would also be required to release it to any other members of the public who requested it. The Appellant argues that NNSA presented conclusory and generalized allegations about how the withheld information would risk circumvention of agency regulation. Appeal Letter at 4. We disagree. We believe that NNSA/SC explained its withholding properly. Any further information may also lead a malefactor to identify vulnerabilities. Therefore, because of the significant danger of circumvention of DOE regulatory security responsibility involved in public release, we find that the information, with two exceptions, was properly withheld under the "high two" prong of Exemption 2.

We carefully reviewed the 62 documents which were withheld in their entirety by NNSA/SC. These are architectural drawings. After reviewing the documents, we believe that all the drawings, but three, can be withheld under Exemption 2. NNSA/SC agreed that three documents can be released to the Appellant: document number 13, the topographic survey; document number 14, the site demolition plan; and document number 15, the grading and paving plan. We are remanding the matter to NNSA/SC for release of these three documents.

2. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both exempt information and non-exempt information that is not otherwise exempt from release, the non-exempt information must generally be segregated and released to the requestor. We have reviewed the information that NNSA/SC withheld. NNSA/SC was very careful with its redactions from the one document. We believe that none of the information that was redacted could be reasonably segregated. Consequently, any releasable material is inextricably intertwined with the Exemption 2 protected information.

In regard to the 59 drawings withheld in their entirety, we believe that some of the textual information contained on the drawings could be released. For example, drawing 52 contains only symbols and legends. It is not clear to us why this drawing could not be released. Also, there are certain pages that contain general information that might also be released. For example, drawing 12 contains a map of Livermore, California. We will remand the matter to NNSA/SC for a new determination regarding the 59 drawings.

3. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. In regard to the one document which was redacted in part, NNSA/SC claimed the release of the information would risk circumvention of DOE's efforts to comply with its mandate to provide secure and safe stewardship of nuclear and other dangerous materials. We agree. As we stated above, release of the information could allow terrorists or other malefactors to sabotage the Tritium Facility. It is therefore obvious that release of the information would not be in the public interest.

III. Conclusion

Except as discussed above, the information was properly withheld under Exemption 2. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to NNSA/SC for release of documents 13, 14, and 15 and a new determination on the segregability of information in the other 59 drawings.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CAREs, Case No. TFA-0308, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, which shall release document numbers 13, 14, and 15 and issue a new determination regarding the other 59 drawings in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	A.V. Mehta
Date of Filing:	May 15, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0309

On May 15, 2009, A.V. Mehta filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Office (DOE/OR) issued on March 31, 2009. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008.

I. Background

The Appellant, a DOE/OR employee, requested from DOE/OR his medical, personnel, radiation exposure, chest x-ray, beryllium, industrial hygiene, and training records, as well as his personnel security file and Office of Personnel Management (OPM) background investigation. Record of Privacy Act Information Telephone Request to DOE/OR (February 19, 2009). Letter from Elizabeth M. Dillon, DOE/OR, to A.V. Mehta (April 9, 2009). In response to this request, DOE/OR issued a determination releasing to Mr. Mehta a copy of his medical, personnel, radiation exposure, and training records, and his personnel security file.[1] However, the determination stated that DOE/OR did not locate beryllium or industrial hygiene records and that copies of chest x-rays were not available. Id.[2] Mr. Mehta challenges the adequacy of DOE/OR's search for documents responsive to his request.[3]

II. Analysis

[1] Subsequent to the filing of the present Appeal, DOE/OR informed us that it "plan[s] to send a supplemental response to Mr. Mehta's Privacy Act request to clarify that the classified pages found in his personnel security file were not subject to the Privacy Act pursuant to the k1 exemption of the Privacy Act and thus were not provided, since we failed to cite the k1 exemption in our original response." E-Mail from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (June 2, 2009). Mr. Mehta may, if he chooses, file an appeal of DOE/OR's supplemental response.

[2] In its determination, DOE/OR informed Mr. Mehta that his background investigation "was conducted by the OPM and only that agency can release that information. On February 19, 2009, we sent a copy of your request and driver's license to OPM for a copy of your [background investigation] to be sent directly to you." Id.

[3] Mr. Mehta also states in his Appeal that "[a]mong the copies of the documents received so far, there are many instances of incorrect information and inaccuracies. I am in the process of preparing responses with corrections that I will send to [DOE/OR] after receiving all of the remaining items." Appeal at 1. DOE/OR states that it has not yet received from Mr. Mehta a request for amendment or correction of his records. E-Mail from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (June 2, 2009); see 10 C.F.R. § 1008.6 (procedures for filing a request for correction or amendment).

Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act requires only that the agency search systems of records.[4] However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

Accordingly, upon receiving the present Appeal, we contacted DOE/OR to inquire as to the search it conducted in response to Mr. Mehta's request. DOE/OR provided the following details regarding its search:

> 1. Searches were conducted in all locations we believed responsive Privacy Act records on current DOE employees would be found as follows because these are the repositories where DOE employee personnel, medical and similar files are maintained until the employee retires or takes employment with another agency. Mr. Mehta is a current DOE Oak Ridge Office employee.
> 1) at ORNL and DOE ORO Medical Departments for medical and X-rays that are maintained on current DOE employees
> 2) at DOE ORO Human Resources for personnel records that are maintained on current DOE employees
> 3) at K25, X10, Portsmouth, Paducah and ORAU for any radiation exposure, IH and beryllium monitoring records on all DOE employees
> 4) at DOE ORO's Human Capital training office for training records maintained on DOE current employees

[4] The Privacy Act defines a "system of records" as "a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5). DOE/OR explained to Mr. Mehta, after he filed his Privacy Act request, that he would need to file a FOIA request for any documents that DOE/OR "would consider FOIA records (for example, reports, inspections, or similar documents on activities and operations he was involved with)" i.e., those not contained in a Privacy Act system of records. E-Mail from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (June 2, 2009).

5) at DOE ORO's Personnel Security Branch for personnel security clearance files are maintained on current DOE and contractor employees up to ten years after termination of a clearance (we transferred his request to OPM for the background investigation file search and separate response from OPM directly to him)

2. Searches were conducted by contacting federal and contractor Points-of-Contact for Privacy Act records at each of these possible locations (i.e., record custodians, nurses, health physicists, industrial hygiene specialists, etc. who use paper, electronic and other finding aids to retrieve by identifier and copy records for response to us by a reasonable due date).

E-Mail from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (June 2, 2009).

Based on the above description, it appears clear to us that DOE/OR performed a search of locations where responsive documents were most likely to exist. We therefore conclude that DOE/OR's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by the Appellant. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Privacy Act Appeal filed by A.V. Mehta, Case Number TFA-0309, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Society of Professionals, Scientists and Engineers

Date of Filing: May 21, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0310

This Decision concerns an Appeal the Society of Professionals, Scientists and Engineers ("SPSE") filed from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center ("NNSA") in Albuquerque, New Mexico. In that determination, NNSA denied SPSE's request for a waiver of fees in connection with a request the organization submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would overturn NNSA's determination and waive in full the fees associated with his request.

I. Background

SPSE is a labor union which represents certain employees at the DOE's Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL), in Livermore, California. The union filed a FOIA request for various documents pertaining to Contract DE-AC52-07NA27344, the contract awarded by the DOE to Lawrence Livermore National Security, L. L. C. (LLNS), to manage and operate LLNL. Specifically, SPSE requested documents on individual compensation actions, periodic appraisals, reporting requirements, pension plans, and workforce planning. Letter from Bruce Kelly, SPSE, to Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, March 24, 2009 (Fee Waiver Request) at 1. SPSE also requested a waiver of all fees associated with the processing of its FOIA request. SPSE noted that the requested documents "will, in and of themselves, do little to inform the public." Id. at 2. SPSE added, however, that it will review those requested documents and provide its commentary and analysis, along with the documents themselves, to various organizations, including "other unions; professional organizations; the media; and Tri-Valley CAREs, a local non-profit environmental association." Letter from Bruce Kelly, SPSE, to OHA, May 13, 2009 (Appeal) at 3-4.

In an April 14, 2009, determination letter, NNSA denied the fee waiver request on the grounds that the requested information "is not likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operation and activities of the government." Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Eileen Montano, SPSE, April 14, 2009 (Determination Letter). NNSA added that "although the government provides oversight of the contractor," the requested documents "relate to the workings of the contractor and not to the operations or activities of the government." Id.

SPSE filed the present appeal on May 21, 2009. In its Appeal, SPSE contends that NNSA's determination regarding the fee waiver request is "clearly arbitrary and capricious." Appeal at 3. SPSE maintains that records pertaining to the workforce at one of the DOE's national laboratories, which "performs vital national security functions," concern the activities and operations of the government, "even if such records were not generated by the government." Id. SPSE further added that it has the intention and the ability to disseminate the requested documents widely. Therefore, SPSE argues that the information will contribute to the public's understanding of the activities or operations of the government, namely the management and operation of LLNL. Id. at 4.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees only if a requester satisfies his burden of showing that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and, (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8).

In analyzing the public-interest prong of the two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).

Factor A

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-1483 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994). In the present case, we are not convinced that the requested documents – primarily pertaining to routine personnel matters – concern the "operations or activities of the government." However, given that LLNS manages and operates one of the DOE's national laboratories, it is possible that the contractor's workforce-related documents may concern the operations and activities of government. Therefore, we find that SPSE's request satisfies Factor A.

Factor B

Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994). This factor focuses on whether the information is already in the public domain or otherwise common knowledge among the general public. See Roderick Ott, Case No. VFA-0288 (1997) [*]; Seehuus Associates, 23 DOE ¶ 80,180 (1994) ("If the information is already publicly available, release to the requester would not contribute to public understanding and a fee waiver may not be appropriate.").

In the present case, it is unclear whether the requested information is already publicly available. However, given the nature of the information requested – information relating to a DOE contractor's personnel policies and actions – and because we have no evidence that the information is already publicly available, we will assume that the information is not already in the public domain. Therefore, we find that SPSE has satisfied Factor B.

Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding individually of the requester or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. Department of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Ott, VFA-0288; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, Case No. VFA-0468 (1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992).

In the present case, it appears that SPSE has both the intention and the ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. SPSE indicated in its fee waiver request and on appeal that it has "excellent relations with the media and [SPSE's] press releases … are often used by local and national newspapers as the basis for in-depth reports on government policies." Appeal at 4.

[*] All OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

In addition, SPSE intends to provide the requested documents to other individuals and organizations who have the intent and ability to disseminate the information to the public. Id. Based on this information, we find that SPSE's request satisfies Factor C.

Factor D

Under Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, VFA-0288 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 381 (1995)).

In the present case, it is not readily apparent how the public's understanding of the activities or operations of the government will be enhanced by the disclosure of the requested documents, which relate primarily to contractor LLNS' personnel matters. While it is possible that disclosure of records pertaining to the workings of a DOE contractor may significantly contribute to the public's understanding of the activities or operations of the government, we do not believe that to be true in the case of mundane personnel matters such as compensation actions, performance appraisals, and pension plans that are the subject of SPSE's FOIA request. SPSE, itself, admits that the requested documents "will, in and of themselves, do little to inform the public." Fee Waiver Request at 2. Rather, SPSE asserts that in order to have any informative value, the information must be coupled with commentary and analysis from SPSE. Based on this information, we find that disclosure of the requested documents themselves is unlikely to significantly contribute to the public's understanding of the operations and activities of the government. As a result, SPSE's request for a fee waiver does not satisfy Factor D.

III. Conclusion

As the foregoing indicates, SPSE has failed to adequately demonstrate that disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. After considering each of the above factors, we have determined that the absence of the requested information in the public domain and SPSE's ability to disseminate the information are outweighed by the de minimis effect on the public's understanding of government operations. Therefore, SPSE's request for a fee waiver does not satisfy the requirement set forth in the FOIA and in the DOE regulations concerning fee waivers that release of the requested information be in the public interest. Because the public-interest prong of the test is not met, we need not address the commercial-interest prong of that test. Accordingly, the appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 21, 2009, by the Society of Professionals, Scientists and Engineers, OHA Case No. TFA-0310, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Power Wire Constructors
Date of Filing:	May 27, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0312

On May 27, 2009, Power Wire Constructors (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 15, 2009, by the Western Area Power Administration (WAPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, WAPA responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, WAPA identified over 2,000 pages of documents responsive to the Appellant's request. WAPA withheld some of the responsive information under Exemption 5 of the FOIA. This appeal, if granted, would require WAPA to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On November 21, 2008, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request to WAPA for "daily reports, logs, notes, letters, e-mails, etc.," of specific WAPA employees. FOIA Request dated November 21, 2008, from Appellant to WAPA. On December 2, 2008, the Appellant amended its FOIA request to include similar documents from additional employees. FOIA Request Amendment dated December 2, 2008, from Appellant to WAPA.

WAPA conducted a search of its records and located over 2,000 pages of responsive documents.[1/] In an initial response, WAPA released 140 pages of responsive information to the Appellant. Determination Letter dated January 13, 2009, from WAPA to Appellant. On January 26, 2009, WAPA identified an additional 2,284 pages of responsive material.

[1/] WAPA released 2,424 pages to the Appellant. Some of the documents consisted of one page; some of the documents consisted of numerous pages. WAPA marked the documents with consecutive page numbers for a total of 2,424 pages released to the Appellant. Because WAPA indicated that it redacted information from specific pages, rather than from specific documents, we will refer to page numbers in this Decision.

WAPA withheld portions of the pages claiming that those portions were shielded under Exemptions 5 and 6. Determination Letter dated January 26, 2009, from WAPA to Appellant. On March 9, 2009, the Appellant filed an Appeal, challenging WAPA's withholdings under both Exemptions. On March 30, 2009, this Office upheld the withholdings under Exemption 6, but remanded the matter to WAPA asking that it provide an adequate justification for withholding the information under Exemption 5. Power Wire Constructors, Case No. TFA-0297, (March 30, 2009).[2/] On April 15, 2009, WAPA issued a new determination explaining that certain specified pages contained information subject to the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5 and that other specified pages contained information under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5. Determination Letter dated April 15, 2009, from WAPA to Appellant. On May 27, 2009, the Appellant filed the present Appeal, claiming that the attorney-client privilege does not apply because there is no pending litigation and > [t]he documents withheld by deliberative process should also be released if the investigation involves [Appellant] so we would be aware of any and all information pertaining to that investigation and as previously agreed to by [WAPA]. The information would not be released to general public, but would be used for informational purposes by [Appellant] alone.

Appeal Letter dated May 20, 2009, from Russ Wyant, President, Appellant, to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (May 20, 2009, Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). In this regard, it is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal

[2/] All OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemption 5 is at issue in this case.

1. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges, among others, that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir 1980) (Coastal States). The Appellant is challenging WAPA's withholdings under the attorney-client privilege and the deliberative process privilege.

a. Attorney-Client Privilege

The attorney-client privilege protects from mandatory disclosure "confidential communications between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc., v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (Mead Data). Although it fundamentally applies to facts divulged by a client to his attorney, the privilege also encompasses any opinions given by an attorney to his client based upon, and thus reflecting, those facts. See, e.g., Jernigan v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998). The privilege also encompasses communications between attorneys that reflect client-supplied information. See, e.g., Green v. IRS, 556 F. Supp 79, 85 (N.D. Ind. 1982), aff'd 734 F.2d 18 (7th Cir. 1984) (unpublished table decision). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. Clarke v. American Commerce Nat'l Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992). The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 291, 403-04 (1976). In other words, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. Government Accountability Project, 24 DOE ¶ 80, 129 at 80,570 (1994).

Applying these criteria to the numerous document pages withheld by WAPA, it is apparent that these pages, with a few exceptions, consist almost entirely of communications between an attorney (WAPA General Counsel) and her client, WAPA, in which WAPA asks for, and receives legal advice about a legal matter. It is this type of communication that the privilege was designed to protect. In its Appeal, the Appellant claims that there is no anticipated litigation, and therefore, the attorney-client privilege does not apply. We disagree. Unlike the attorney work-product privilege, the attorney-client privilege is not limited to documents prepared in advance of litigation. See, e.g., Mead Data, 566 F.2d at 252-53. Release of attorney-client communications would stifle frank and full discussions between the attorney and his client. With the exceptions noted below, we conclude that WAPA properly applied the attorney-client privilege in withholding portions of the document pages in question.

Nevertheless, our review of these document pages reveals that there are five pages that contain information that is informational or procedural in nature or is already public information. These portions are not exempt from mandatory disclosure under the attorney-client privilege and must therefore be provided to the Appellant. Specifically, pages 494, 495, 497, and 510 of the sequentially numbered documents provided are procedural in nature. Page 508 contains information that we believe is already public. It is possible that some of the information on page 508 may be withheld under Exemption 6,[3/] however, WAPA did not apply that exemption to this information. Therefore, we will remand the matter to WAPA to release pages 494, 495, 497, and 510 in full and to issue a new determination for page 508.

b. Deliberative Process Privilege

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

Notwithstanding the above, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

There are, however, exceptions to the general rule that factual information should be released. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Dudman Communications. Corp. v. Dep't of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

[3/] Exemption 6 exempts from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6).

WAPA listed numerous pages that had portions withheld because the information contained therein is predecisional and part of the deliberative process.[4/] We have been provided with copies of these pages. We have reviewed these pages and believe that all but one page were properly withheld under Exemption 5. These pages contain deliberative information that reflects the personal opinions of the authors. Release of this deliberative information could stifle honest and direct communication of federal employees' opinions. Further, the factual information contained in these documents is so intertwined as to make segregation virtually impossible. Additionally, withholding under Exemption 5 is appropriate because the factual information contained in these documents was selected from a larger quantity of factual information so that the selection of these facts would reveal some of the deliberative process. These documents were prepared by an advisor who reviewed many facts, but relied on only selected facts for these documents.

However, we believe that the information contained on page 813 is neither predecisional nor deliberative. It is possible that the information contained in this page may be withheld under Exemption 6, but we do not believe that the information can be withheld under Exemption 5. Therefore, we will remand this matter to WAPA for a another determination on page 813.

2. Segregability

The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both exempt information and non-exempt information that is not otherwise exempt from release, the non-exempt information must generally be segregated and released to the requestor. We have reviewed the information that WAPA redacted from the responsive information. WAPA was very careful with its redactions. We believe that none of the information that was redacted could be reasonably segregated.

3. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. WAPA concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the requested information would cause an unreasonable harm to WAPA's ongoing decision-making process. Further, with regard to the attorney-client material, given the strong public policy interest in protecting frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions and their advisors, we do not find that the public interest would be served by release of the attorney-client material. Therefore, release of the withheld information would not be in the public interest.

[4/] In some instances, entire pages were withheld. In other instances, only portions of the pages were withheld.

III. Conclusion

Most of the information withheld by WAPA was properly withheld under Exemption 5. However, we believe that there are five pages that contain information that is not subject to the attorney-client privilege. In addition, we believe that there is one page that contains information that is not subject to the deliberative process privilege. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in regard to those six documents and remand the matter to WAPA to release pages 494, 495, 497, and 510 and to issue another determination regarding pages 508 and 813. We will deny the Appeal in all other respects.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Power Wire Constructors, Case No. TFA-0312, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Western Area Power Administration of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	J. Edward Hollington
Date of Filing:	June 3, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0314

On June 3, 2009, J. Edward Hollington (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on April 30, 2009, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA). In that determination, the NNSA responded to the Appellant's request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the NNSA to release a document withheld in its entirety under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 5.

I. BACKGROUND

On February 11, 2009, the Appellant filed a request for information under the FOIA with NNSA. That request sought "complete copies . . . of settlement, general release, and any other settlement documents showing terms, conditions, and monetary payments for settlement of claims between Nanodetex Corporation and Sandia Corporation." Determination Letter at 1. On April 30, 2009, NNSA issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) indicating that its search had identified one responsive document: the settlement agreement and mutual release between Nanodetex and Sandia (the Settlement Agreement). NNSA withheld the Settlement Agreement in its entirety under Exemptions 4 and 5. On June 3, 2009, the Appellant filed an appeal of that determination with this office.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980). In the present case, NNSA's determination letter relied only on Exemptions 4 and 5. Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). On July 1, 2009, NNSA informed OHA that due to the particular facts in this case, NNSA is no longer relying on Exemptions 4 and 5 as grounds for withholding this Settlement Agreement and that, upon remand to NNSA, NNSA will then make a new determination as to whether any information in the Settlement Agreement is exempt from disclosure on any other basis. See Electronic Mail from Ida Hernandez-Sedillo, Office of Chief Counsel, NNSA Service Center, to Ann Augustyn, Chief, Personnel Security and Appeals Division, OHA (July 1, 2009).

III. CONCLUSION

Based on the statements made by Counsel for the NNSA Service Center on July 1, 2009, we conclude that the present appeal should be remanded to NNSA, with the instructions that NNSA must either release the Settlement Agreement to the Appellant or issue a new determination letter setting forth the appropriate basis for withholding.[1]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by J. Edward Hollington, Case No. TFA-0314, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

[1] The FOIA requires that "[a]ny reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). The Determination Letter does not indicate that NNSA performed a review of the Settlement Agreement in order to determine whether it contains any segregable material. On remand, if NNSA issues a new Determination Letter withholding the Settlement Agreement, NNSA must review the Settlement Agreement in order to determine whether any portions of it could be released without harming the interests protected by any applicable FOIA exemption. The new Determination Letter must describe this review and explain its results.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Paul Linkes
Date of Filing:	June 5, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0315

On June 5, 2009, Paul Linkes (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on April 27, 2009, by the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, Oak Ridge identified and released documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenged the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search for documents. This appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On February 26, 2009, the Appellant requested copies of medical, personnel, radiation exposure, and beryllium records for Ashley Dalton Linkes, deceased. Request dated February 26, 2009, from Appellant to Oak Ridge. On April 27, 2009, Oak Ridge released the documents it located to the Appellant. Oak Ridge also indicated in its determination letter that some documents may be located at the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC), because Mr. Linkes worked at Y-12, now an NNSA facility. Determination Letter dated April 27, 2009, from Elizabeth Dillon, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge, to Appellant. On June 5, 2009, the Appellant appealed, asking for help in locating the documents he is requesting. Appeal Letter received June 5, 2009, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted Oak Ridge to determine what type of search was conducted. Oak Ridge indicated that it requested Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU) to search its files for beryllium, radiation exposure, and medical records, and a work history for Mr. Linkes. E-mail dated June 10, 2009, from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA, DOE (June 10 E-mail). Oak Ridge continued that ORAU maintains centralized personnel, medical, beryllium, and radiation exposure records on thousands of individuals who may have been participants in various epidemiology research projects. Id. The request was also sent to the K-25 site, the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL), and the DOE Records Holding Area. Id. A personnel security clearance assurance index card file located at the DOE Records Holding Area indicated that Mr. Linkes worked as a RUST Engineering construction contractor and also worked for Union Carbide[2/] at the Y-12 facility. Id. A work history report received from ORAU and a printout from a DOE historical employment database maintained in the FOIA office indicated that Mr. Linkes also worked at K-25 as a guard. Id. As a result of this information, the request for any records maintained at Y-12 was sent to the NNSA/SC in Albuquerque, New Mexico, because RUST construction contractor records, Y-12 contractor records, and some records of former K-25 employees are now under NNSA jurisdiction.[3/] Id.

The searches were performed using electronic finding aids and electronic document storage systems for actual records in electronic form. Id. Paper files were searched by hand using paper or electronic indices of the contents of those paper files from ORNL. Id. The search conducted at Oak Ridge resulted in a few pages of medical files, a few pages of inactive payroll records from K-25, a few pages of employment and personnel security records from the DOE Records Holding Area, and a work history report from ORAU. No beryllium or radiation exposure records were located. Oak Ridge indicated that these records may be held at NNSA. Id. After the receipt of a copy of this Appeal, Oak Ridge indicated that additional payroll records from K-25 were located and it will provide those records in a supplemental response to the Appellant. Id.

Oak Ridge searched in the areas most likely to have the requested information. Further, a person with knowledge of the subject matter conducted the search. Oak Ridge forwarded the request to another office, NNSA/SC, because it is possible that it might have possession of responsive information. NNSA/SC will be responding to the Appellant directly with the results of its search. We believe the search that Oak Ridge conducted was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information in those offices.

III. Conclusion

The search conducted by Oak Ridge was reasonably calculated to uncover all documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Paul Linkes, Case No. TFA-0315, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Keeton and Tait
Date of Filing:	June 9, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0316

On June 9, 2009, The Law Offices of Keeton and Tait (Keeton and Tait) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, BPA withheld information in response to a request for information that Keeton and Tait (or "Appellant") filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the withheld information.

I. Background

On February 20, 2009, Keeton and Tait sent a FOIA request to the FOIA Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOI), for "[a]ny and all records pertaining to a fire[1] that commenced on July 10, 2008, on or around Eaton Road in the City of Lewiston, County of Nez Perce, State of Idaho." Letter from Keeton and Tait to FOIA Officer, Department of Energy (February 20, 2009) (FOIA Request). Upon receipt, DOE/FOI assigned the request to BPA, the office most likely to have the responsive documents.

BPA conducted a search of its records and located documents responsive to Keeton and Tait's request. In its response, BPA released most of the responsive records but withheld portions of the documents, claiming that they were shielded under the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5. The remainder of the withheld information, the identities of BPA and non-BPA employees, was withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.[2] Letter from BPA to Keeton and Tait, May 7, 2009 (Determination Letter).

[2] In its Appeal, Keeton and Tait does not challenge BPA's withholding of responsive information pursuant to the attorney-client privilege of Exemption 5 or the withholding of the names of non-BPA employees pursuant to Exemption 6. Appeal at 1.

In withholding the information pursuant to Exemption 6, BPA stated that there is a significant privacy interest in the identities of the BPA employee crew members who were patrolling the area where the Lewiston fire occurred, especially since there are "unfounded accusations of wrongdoing against the crew members." Id. BPA further stated that release of this information could subject those individuals to "unwanted inquiries or harassment." Id.

On June 9, 2009, Keeton and Tait filed this Appeal of BPA's decision to withhold information under Exemption 6, arguing that BPA improperly withheld the identities of its employees.[3] Appeal Letter at 1-4. Keeton and Tait maintains that this information is "very much necessary to shed light on the operations of [the] activities of BPA" and is "well within the basic purpose of the FOIA." Id. at 3.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). Thus, the purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 602 (1982).

To warrant protection under Exemption 6, information must first meet the threshold requirement that it fall within a category of "personnel," "medical" or "similar" files. 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). An agency should construe "similar" files broadly, "[T]o cover detailed Government records on an individual which can be identified as applying to that individual." Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. at 602 (citations and quotations omitted).

In its Appeal, Keeton and Tait argues that portions of certain documents containing the names of BPA crew members cannot be withheld because the information is not similar to a "personnel" or "medical" file, as is required by Exemption 6. Appeal at 2. We disagree. In Wash. Post Co., the Supreme Court reasoned that the protection of an individual's privacy "was not intended to turn upon the label of the file which contains the damaging information." Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. at 599-603. Simply put, information that "applies to a particular individual" will most likely meet the threshold requirement for Exemption 6 protection. Id. at 602. In this case, BPA withheld the names of crew members who were patrolling the Lewiston area at the time of the fire. We find that this information relates to the BPA crew members and therefore falls within the definition of "similar" files articulated by the Court in Wash. Post Co.

[3] Keeton and Tait further argues that BPA failed to release information such as the number of crew patrolling the area, their job titles, responsibilities and their purpose for being in the area. Id. at 2-3. We have reviewed unredacted versions of the responsive documents and confirm that only names and personal information were withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Paul F. Mautner, Attorney, Office of General Counsel, BPA, and Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (July 7, 2009) (Mautner Telephone Memo).

Once it has been established that the information meets the threshold requirement of Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis to determine if the information in question was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest, by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. at 762-770.

A. The Privacy Interest

The agency has the burden to show that the requested material falls within an exception. Dep't of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 164, 173 (1991) (citation and quotations omitted); see also News-Press v. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 489 F.3d 1173, 1198 (11th Cir. 2007) (describing the agency's burden as "onerous"). Thus, the BPA must demonstrate that releasing the names of federal employees will compromise a substantial privacy interest. See BPA Watch, Case No. TFA-0260 (2008).[4]

OPM regulations provide that names, titles, grades, salaries, position descriptions, and duty stations of federal employees are publicly available information. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311. Thus, we have consistently held that the names of federal employees, by themselves, reveal nothing private about a person and, therefore, are not the type of information that creates a protectable privacy interest for the purposes of Exemption 6. See Mary Feild Jarvis, Case No. VFA-0292 (1997); see also BPA Watch, Case No. TFA-0260 (2008) (an agency may not withhold the names of federal employees simply because they are federal employees).

Generally, release of the employees' identities alone would not reveal personal information or records about the individual. However, there are instances where "[n]ames and other identifying information do not always present a significant threat to an individual's privacy interest. Instead, whether disclosure threatens a significant privacy interest depends on the consequences likely to ensue from disclosure." Wood v. FBI, 432 F.3d 78, 88 (2nd Cir. 2005) (emphasis added). Thus, in recognizing the existence of a cognizable privacy interest, we must consider the effect that disclosure would have on the BPA crew members.

[4] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

In considering whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded, BPA determined that disclosure of the crew members' identities could subject them to unwarranted inquiries or harassment. Determination Letter at 2. As a general rule, "[t]he threat to privacy. . . need not be patent or obvious to be relevant." See Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. at 600. In its Appeal, Keeton and Tait in fact argues that "[w]ell founded accusations of wrongdoing require disclosure of the crew names." Appeal at 3. This argument very strongly suggests that should the crew members' names become publicly available, they would be subjected to unwanted contact by Appellant and others, who are skeptical of the BPA's determination in a pending tort claim.

Furthermore, the Lewiston fire has received significant public attention. See FOIA Request at 2-4. Therefore, it is not only likely, but obvious, that the media and others would join Keeton and Tait in its pursuit to solicit information from the BPA crew members. Notably, BPA did not withhold names of employees whose identities had been previously made public, but withheld only the identities of the unidentified crew members who patrolled the area where the Lewiston fire occurred.

Based on the foregoing, we conclude that the BPA crew members have a privacy interest in avoiding unwanted contacts by the Appellant and others. See Forest Service Employees for Environmental Ethics v. U.S. Forest Service, 524 F.3d 1021 (9th Cir. 2008) (avoiding undesired contacts is a protected privacy interest). For these reasons, we find that there is a substantial privacy interest in the identity of the BPA employees.

B. The Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. See Carter v. Dep't of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388, 391 nn.8 & 13 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

In determining whether any public interest is served by a requested disclosure, an agency should not consider "the purposes for which the request for information is made." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 771. The Court held that rather than turn on a requester's particular purpose, circumstances, or proposed use, such determinations must turn on the nature of the requested document and the relationship to the basic purpose of the FOIA. Id. at 772. Furthermore, the Court delimited the scope of the public interest to be considered under the FOIA's privacy exemptions to include the "core purpose of the FOIA" or "the kind of public interest for which Congress enacted the FOIA." Id.

Given the facts in this case, we find that there is a minimal public interest, if any, in release of the withheld information. In its Appeal, Keeton and Tait fails to demonstrate how the disclosure of BPA employees' identities would reveal anything of importance regarding the DOE or how it would serve the public interest.

BPA has released to Keeton and Tait all of the information in its possession regarding the Lewiston Fire, save the names of the BPA crew members and other information that is subject to Exemptions 5 and 6 withholdings. See Mautner Telephone Memo. The names of the BPA crew members alone add no additional information that would contribute significantly to the public's awareness and understanding of BPA activities.

When "the only way the release of the identities" will benefit the public "is if the public uses such information to contact the employees directly," such use cannot justify release of the information. Forest Service Employees, 524 F.3d at 1028 (quoting Painting Indus. of Haw. Mkt. Recovery Fund v. U.S. Dep't of Air Force, 26 F.3d 1479, 1485 (9th Cir. 1994)). Accordingly, we agree with BPA and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the identities of the BPA crew members withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

C. The Balancing Test

In determining whether information may be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762; SafeCard Service v. SEC, 426 F.2d 1197 (D.C. Cir. 1991). We have concluded that there is a significant privacy interest at stake in this case. Moreover, we found that there is only a minimal public interest in the release of the identities of the BPA employees.

Courts have long recognized that certain government personnel may be subjected to harassment or embarrassment if their identities are disclosed. See Wood, 432 F.3d at 88 (citation omitted); see also FLRA v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 958 F.2d 503, 512 (2nd Cir. 1992) (disclosure of employee names is not related to informing the public about an agency's actions). "The interest against possible harassment and embarrassment of investigative personnel raises a measurable privacy concern that must be weighed against the public's interest in disclosure." Leadership Conference on Civil Rights v. Alberto Gonzales, 421 F. Supp. 2d 104 at 109 (quoting Wood v. FBI, 432 F.3d at 88). While the privacy interest of the BPA crew members is not as particularized as that of investigative personnel, due to the public nature of this matter, disclosing their identities would subject them to unwanted privacy intrusions. Thus, disclosing the identities of the BPA crew would compromise a substantial privacy interest that outweighs the public interest in disclosure.

In sum, we find that there is a significant privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of the withheld information. Moreover, release of this information would not shed light on the operations of government. On balance, release of the information withheld by BPA pursuant to Exemption 6 would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Thus, BPA correctly applied Exemption 6 in withholding this information.

III. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing information, we find that BPA properly withheld the names and identities of its employees pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Law Offices of Keeton and Tait on June 9, 2009, Case No. TFA-0316, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Citizen Action New Mexico
Date of Filing:	June 12, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0317

On June 12, 2009, Citizen Action New Mexico (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on May 11, 2009, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA/SC responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, NNSA/SC identified and released documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenged the adequacy of NNSA/SC's search for documents. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On September 8, 2008, the Appellant requested 24 items regarding Building 807 at Sandia National Laboratories (SNL). Request dated September 8, 2008, from David McCoy, Appellant, to NNSA/SC. Relevant to this Appeal, the Appellant requested that NNSA/SC:

> 17. Provide the specific articles from the Sandia Lab News and the Sandia Daily News Bulletin that discuss Buildings 805, 807 and/or 807 in any manner including, but not limited to employee sickness, employee concerns, SNL or Contractor plans, studies, tests and results thereof, and demolition.
> 18. Provide any documents that show how employee sickness absences are accumulated, referenced, complied, summarized, and reported.

19. Provide any aggregate reports of employee sickness absences for Building 807 by year from 1990 to 2008.

20. Provide any aggregate reports of employee sickness absences for all buildings in Technical Area 1.

21. Provide any information or reports where employee deaths are accumulated, referenced, compiled, summarized, and/or reported. Provide the period for which these records exist and have been accumulated and/or maintained. Provide these reports for both active employees and retired employees at SNL for the period 1990-2008. Provide all documentation to show any records that have been archived at any location by SNL. Provide where possible employee age and cause of death.

22. Provide any documents that identify any buildings at SNL, other than Building 807, that have been identified as having "sick-building syndrome" or having a higher incidence of employee sickness absence and or employee death than the average rates for SNL employees.

Id. at 2. On May 11, 2009, NNSA/SC released documents responsive to requests 1-9, 12, 14, 15, 17, and 24 to the Appellant. NNSA/SC redacted portions of some of the documents, contending that the redacted information was exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemption 6.[1/] Determination Letter dated May 11, 2009, at 1-5 from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA/SC, to Appellant (Determination Letter). In addition, NNSA/SC indicated that the information responsive to requests 10, 11, 12, and 16 was publicly available.[2/] Id. at 2-3. Also, NNSA/SC indicated that the documents responsive to requests 18-22 were contractor, i.e., Sandia Corporation (Sandia), records, which are in the possession and control of the contractor. Id. at 4. Finally, NNSA/SC found no documents responsive to requests 13 and 23.[3/] Id. at 3, 4-5.

On June 12, 2009, the Appellant appealed, challenging the adequacy of NNSA/SC's search for responsive documents. With regard to request 17, the Appellant claims that a former Sandia employee stated there was additional information which had not been provided to the Appellant. Appeal Letter at 1 dated June 12, 2009, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA).

[1/] The Appellant is not challenging the withholdings made under Exemption 6.

[2/] The Appellant is not challenging this response by NNSA/SC.

[3/] The Appellant is not challenging this response by NNSA/SC.

Regarding requests 18 to 22, the Appellant claims that the information it is requesting is "directly related to federal [DOE] activities at [SNL] as carried out by the DOE and its contractor. Therefore, [the Appellant's] request indisputably concerns 'the operations or activities of the government.'" Id. at 2. As support for its response to NNSA/SC's claim that the documents it is requesting are contractor records, the Appellant argues: (1) that DOE is dodging the question of whether responsive information is in its possession by asserting contractual reasons for not releasing the information; (2) that NNSA/SC has not stated a recognizable FOIA exemption for withholding the documents and reliance on such exemptions are discretionary, not mandatory; (3) that "[d]ocuments that result from accumulating, referencing, compiling, summarizing, and reporting health and safety data about sickness and absences would be documents in the possession and control of DOE;" (4) that Sandia regularly releases health and safety data in the Sandia Lab News for dissemination to the general public regarding sickness and deaths of Sandia workers; (5) lumping together both the DOE and Sandia as one entity, that the "compilation and reporting of employee absence, sickness and deaths records can[not] reasonably be withheld for contractual reasons given that Sandia is distributing such information to the wide public;" (6) that DOE Orders require DOE to evaluate hazards in the workplace and protect workers. Id. at 2-3.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." *Miller v. We contacted NNSA/SC to determine what type of search was conducted. In response to request 17, NNSA/SC indicated that "the Sandia Lab News and the Sandia News conducted a computer search using search engines and inputting key terms for information noted in [the request] pertaining to Buildings 805, 806, and 807." E-mail dated June 24, 2009, from Karen Laney, NNSA/SC, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA (June 24, 2009, E-mail). NNSA/SC searched in the areas most likely to have the requested information. NNSA/SC is required to conduct a search that is reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. NNSA/SC is not required to conduct an exhaustive search. NNSA/SC enclosed copies of two articles from the Sandia Lab News and sent the results of the search of the Sandia Daily News. We believe the search that NNSA/SC conducted was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information in those offices.

As to the Appellant's claims that NNSA/SC must have documents responsive to requests 18 to 22, NNSA/SC stated that it interpreted the request too narrowly. After reviewing the information provided in the Appeal, NNSA/SC determined that it does have responsive records. June 24, 2009, E-mail. NNSA/SC is rescinding the original determination in regard to requests 18 to 22 and will issue a new response to the Appellant. Therefore, we will dismiss this portion of the Appeal.

III. Conclusion

The search conducted by NNSA/SC in regard to request 17 was reasonably calculated to uncover all documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Accordingly, this aspect of its Appeal will be denied. The NNSA/SC has determined that it interpreted requests 18 to 22 too narrowly and it will issue a new determination regarding those requests. Therefore, we will dismiss the Appeal as it pertains to these requests.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Citizen Action New Mexico, Case No. TFA-0317, is hereby denied in regard to request 17.

(2) The Appeal filed by Citizen Action New Mexico, Case No. TFA-0317, is hereby dismissed in regard to requests 18 to 22, concerning which NNSA/SC will issue a new determination.

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Terry M. Apodaca
Date of Filing:	June 30, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0319

On June 30, 2009, Terry M. Apodaca (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on June 11, 2009, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA/SC partially responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to create a list of the pages which were responsive to the Appellant's request.

On May 19, 2009, the Appellant requested 11 items from various NNSA/SC offices. Request dated May 19, 2009, from Appellant to NNSA/SC. She agreed to pay $25 in fees associated with processing the Request. Id. at 2. Relevant to this Appeal, the Appellant requested that NNSA/SC provide copies of "all documents and files in the possession of the Office of Equal Opportunity at the NNSA/SC pertaining to [the Appellant's] grievance dated December 22, 2008, and my EEO complaints from December 2006 to present." Id. at 1.

NNSA/SC's June 11, 2009, determination letter was a partial response to the Appellant's request. Determination Letter at 1 dated June 11, 2009, from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA/SC, to Appellant. In that determination, NNSA/SC released 100 responsive pages to the Appellant. Id. NNSA/SC also indicated that there were approximately 1,538 additional pages that were responsive to the request. Id. NNSA/SC indicated that the fee associated with release of these additional documents would total $76.90. Id. NNSA/SC also stated that no list of the responsive documents exists which would allow the Appellant to narrow the scope of her request.[1/] Id.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Roger A. Powell
Date of Filing:	July 7, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0321

On July 7, 2009, Roger A. Powell (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on June 10, 2009, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA/SC partially responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to conduct a further search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request.

I. Background

On February 22, 2009, the Appellant requested "copies of internal files and memorandum regarding [DOE] claim AR 131-91." Request Letter dated February 22, 2009, from Appellant to Kevin Hagerty, Director, Office of Information Resources, DOE. On March 25, 2009, the Office of Information Resources transferred the request to NNSA/SC. E-mail dated July 8, 2009, at Attachment 1, from Christina Hamblen, NNSA/SC, to Janet Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. On June 10, 2009, NNSA/SC's responded to the Appellant's request, stating that it had not located any responsive documents, but the request had been transferred to DOE Headquarters for an additional search. Determination Letter dated June 10, 2009, from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA/SC, to Appellant. On July 7, 2009, the Appellant appealed, asking that the search continue. Appeal Letter dated June 27, 2009, from Appellant, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter). On July 13, 2009, the Appellant provided additional information to assist in the search. Supplemental Letter dated July 13, 2009, from Appellant to Janet Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted NNSA/SC to determine what type of search was conducted. NNSA/SC indicated that both the Sandia Site Office (SSO) and the Livermore Site Office (LSO) conducted searches. SSO conducted a search of both SSO and Sandia National Laboratory (SNL). SSO conducted a computer search using the claim number and determined that it had no responsive documents. SNL conducted a search of its corporate archives and inactive records storage, but no responsive documents were located. It also searched its technical library catalogs, both classified and unclassified; again, no responsive documents were located. The legal department at SSO stated, however, that DOE Headquarters "had complete responsibility for both the patent and the handling of the administrative claim." E-mail dated July 14, 2009, at Attachment 1, from Christina Hamblen, NNSA/SC, to Janet Fishman, OHA. LSO indicated that its Patent Office had been transferred to NNSA/SC. Nevertheless, LSO contacted that office and requested that a search be conducted based on both the patent number and the claim number. No responsive documents were found. LSO also contacted Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL). LLNL checked with its Industrial Partnership Office and the Patent Office in the General Counsel's office. LLNL added that the requested patent was not an LLNL patent. LLNL found no responsive documents. We believe the search that NNSA/SC conducted was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information in those offices most likely to have the information.

NNSA/SC did indicate in its determination letter that DOE Headquarters may have responsive information. We have confirmed that the request has been transferred to DOE Headquarters and a search is being conducted. E-mail dated July 8, 2009, from Christina Hamblen to Janet Fishman. DOE Headquarters will issue a determination at the conclusion of its search. Upon receipt of that determination, the Appellant will have the opportunity to appeal DOE Headquarter's determination.

III. Conclusion

[1/] All OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

The search conducted by NNSA/SC was reasonably calculated to uncover all documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: James C. Flynn

Date of Filing: July 8, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0322

On July 8, 2009, James C. Flynn filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on June 24, 2009, by the Department of Energy's Office of Information Resources (DOE/HQ). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Flynn submitted under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. Mr. Flynn asks that DOE/HQ conduct an additional search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Mr. Flynn filed a request for information in which he sought his personnel, medical, employment and radiation exposure records while employed at the Pinellas Plant in Pinellas, Florida from 1959-1963. On June 24, 2009, DOE/HQ issued a determination letter which stated that the Office of Legacy Management (LM) of the DOE conducted a search of the following systems of records established under the Privacy Act: DOE-5 "Personnel Records of Former Contractors Employees," DOE-33 "Personnel Medical Records," and DOE-35 "Personnel Radiation Exposure Records." DOE/HQ further stated that the search of DOE-5 and DOE-35 did not locate any responsive records. However, a search of DOE-33 located three responsive documents. These documents were released to Mr. Flynn in their entirety. On July 8, 2009, Mr. Flynn filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Flynn challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by LM. See Appeal Letter. He asserts that responsive documents may be found in an additional location and asks OHA to direct DOE/HQ to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act requires only that the agency search systems of records.

However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, 28 DOE ¶ 80,251 (2002). */ Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the search conducted by LM, we are guided by the principles we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought material." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Information Focus On Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,240 (1997).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in LM to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Flynn's request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Mr. Flynn's request for information, LM conducted an electronic search of several of its systems of records using personal identifiers such as the requester's name, date of birth, badge number and work location. See Record of Telephone Conversation Between Pamela Watson, LM, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (August 3, 2009). LM stated that this electronic search should have located any responsive documents in federal records centers. As a result of this search, LM located three documents which it classified as "general correspondence documents." These documents were released to Mr. Flynn in their entirety. No other documents regarding Mr. Flynn were located. Given the facts presented to us, we find that LM conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Mr. Flynn's request. Accordingly, Mr. Flynn's Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by James C. Flynn, OHA Case No. TFA-0322, on July 8, 2009, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Ronald D. Hall
Date of Filing:	July 16, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0324

On July 16, 2009, Ronald D. Hall filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Oak Ridge Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). ORO issued the determination on June 25, 2009, in response to a request for documents that Mr. Hall submitted under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require that ORO perform an additional search for responsive material and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

On May 28, 2009, Mr. Hall submitted a Privacy Act telephone request to ORO for copies of his medical, personnel, radiation exposure, and work history records during his employment by Rust Engineering at X-10 and Y-12 in ORO from April 1978, to June 1984. Letter from Mr. Hall to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (July 8, 2009) (Appeal).[1] On June 10, 2009, ORO informed Mr. Hall via letter that it was transferring a portion of his request to the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) which currently has jurisdiction over records from the Y-12 National Security Complex. Letter from Amy Rothrock, Privacy Act Officer, DOE/ORO to Mr. Hall (June 10, 2009). DOE/ORO began a search for the remaining records. Id. On June 25, 2009, DOE/ORO sent Mr. Hall copies of his work history and a "Personnel Clearance Master Card" from DOE/ORO. The search did not locate any medical, personnel, or radiation exposure records. ORO further stated that NNSA would respond to Mr. Hall separately regarding the NNSA search. Letter from Elizabeth Dillon, Authorizing Official, to Ronald D. Hall (June 25, 2009) (Determination Letter). In the Appeal, Mr. Hall challenged the adequacy of the search. Letter from Mr. Hall to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (July 8, 2009) (Appeal).

II. Analysis

1 He indicated that he would send a copy of a document containing his current address and signature or a notarized signature in order to verify his identity for Privacy Act purposes.

The PA generally requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a (d). The Act defines a "system of records as a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a (a) (5). [2]

This case concerns a request for information filed under the PA. We require a search for relevant records under the PA to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the Freedom of Information Act. It is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990); see also Gary Maroney, Case No. TFA-0267 (2008). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, Case No.TFA-0015 (2003).[3]

We contacted ORO to request additional information so that we could evaluate the search for Mr. Hall's records. Electronic Mail Message from Amy Rothrock, DOE/ORO to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Staff Attorney, OHA (July 28, 2009). ORO searched for responsive records at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, the DOE Records Holding Area (RHA) and Oak Ridge Associated Universities. RHA maintains some legacy records of former Rust Engineering employees. ORAU houses a database of work history information from which work history reports are compiled and also has medical and radiation exposure data on some employees. Records custodians conducted a search by hand, electronically, and with the use of finding aids (e.g., indices) to retrieve records by identifiers. Id. ORO located a personnel security clearance assurance index card in the DOE RHA and a work history report at ORAU, and released those documents to Mr. Hall. However, no personnel, medical or radiation exposure records were located.

According to ORO, any existing DOE records related to RUST employees that are not in the DOE RHA are maintained at Y-12. NNSA now has jurisdiction over records stored at Y-12, including records on RUST employees. On June 10, 2009, ORO notified Mr. Hall that his request was forwarded to NNSA for further processing and ORO gave Mr. Hall the contact information of the NNSA Privacy Act Officer so that he may inquire about the status of his request. We contacted the NNSA Privacy Act Officer, who informed us that the search was not yet complete. Electronic mail message from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA Privacy Act Officer, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (August 3, 2009). Upon completion of the search, NNSA will communicate the results to Mr. Hall.

[2] The Privacy Act adopts the FOIA definition of agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a (a)(1). The FOIA defines "agency" as any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . ., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f).

[3] OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that DOE/ORO conducted a search that was adequate and reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. The search did, in fact, locate some responsive material, and that material has been released to Mr. Hall. There may be additional responsive material under the jurisdiction of NNSA, and ORO has already transferred the request to NNSA for processing.[4] Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Privacy Act Appeal filed by Ronald D. Hall on July 16, 2009, OHA Case Number TFA-0324, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: United Block Captains Association Community Trust for Family Life Improvement, Inc.

Date of Filing: August 18, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0325

On August 18, 2009, the United Block Captains Association Community Trust for Family Life Improvement, Inc. (United) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on August 10, 2009, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Idaho Operations Office (Idaho). In that determination, Idaho responded to a request for documents (Request) that United submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its response (Determination Letter), Idaho stated that it did not possess any documents that were responsive to United's request. This appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to conduct a more extensive search for documents.

I. Background

In its July 15, 2009, Request, United requested:

> The RAW [sic] detail on the calculation of stream flow, hydraulic head, and power potential for the Delaware River and Schuylkill River under Philadelphia County, Hydrological Unit [Code] 02040202.[1]

[1] A "Hydrologic Unit Code" (HUC) is a four level descriptor of a water, river and drainage-related geographic areas in the United States. Each level refers to a progressively smaller unit-area of land. The first-level HUC (a two number code) refers to a region consisting of several States. A fourth-level HUC, such as that specified in the Request (an eight number code), would consist of a smaller geographic area representing part or all of a surface drainage basin, a combination of drainage basins, or a distinct hydrologic feature. The areas described by this level are sometimes called "watersheds." See U.S. Geologic Survey website http://water.usgs.gov/GIS/huc.html (visited on August 26, 2009).

Request at 1.[2] In its request, United asserts that the requested information should exist, given that the DOE authored a report entitled "Low Head/Low Power Hydropower Resource Assessment of the North Atlantic and Middle Atlantic Hydrologic Regions (DOE-ID 11077 April 2003)" (Mid-Atlantic Assessment).[3]

The request was transferred to Idaho when the DOE Office of Information Resources, which received the Request, determined that Idaho would be the DOE Office most likely to possess responsive data.[4] In its August 10, 2009, Determination Letter, Idaho asserted that it possessed no responsive documents. It stated that "[t]he data [used by the Virtual Hydropower Prospector[5] (VHP) tool] are not indexed to provide data values at specific locations, so we do not have the information available at the level of detail you are requesting." August 10, 2009, Determination Letter from Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, Idaho, to Jasper Jones, United. Consequently, Idaho asserted that it possessed no documents responsive to United's request.[6] Determination Letter at 1.

United challenges Idaho's conclusion that it has no responsive data with several arguments. First, United asserts that Idaho possesses the requested data because such data, by necessity, must have been obtained when the Mid-Atlantic Assessment was published. In this regard, it asserts that the underlying data is "mentioned" in the Mid-Atlantic Assessment. United also argues that its Request is not for a "sub-set" of the raw data but a request for the entire set of raw data used by the VHP. Lastly, United argues that Idaho has not identified a specific FOIA exemption that would justify withholding the data. Our review of the facts of this case indicates that Idaho did, as a matter of law, perform an adequate search for responsive data under the FOIA.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v.

[2] All parties have interpreted United's request for "raw detail" as a request for "raw" data.

[3] The Mid-Atlantic Assessment was prepared at the DOE's Idaho National Laboratory (INL) for the DOE Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy Office's Wind and Hydropower Program.

[4] Prior to filing the Request, United had contacted Idaho contractor personnel directly in order to obtain the requested information. When the Idaho personnel were unable to supply the requested information, United submitted its formal FOIA request.

[5] The Virtual Hydropower Prospector tool is a computerized geographic information system (GIS) tool designed to assist users in locating and assessing natural stream water energy resources in the United States. See Idaho National Laboratory website http://hydropower.inel.gov/prospector/index.shtml (visited August 26, 2009).

[6] The FOIA itself refers to "records" as the object of a FOIA request. However, given the nature of the United's request, I will refer to such responsive records as "data."

Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 11384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760, (August 26, 2002).[7] With regard to documents stored electronically, the FOIA requires that agencies make "reasonable efforts" to search for documents kept in electronic form or format except when such a search would significantly interfere with the operation of the agency's automated information system. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(c).

We inquired with officials at Idaho to determine the adequacy of the search that was conducted for the requested data. An Idaho official informed this Office that the only possible location that responsive data might exist would be in the data used by the VHP. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Doug Hall, INL Project Manager for Water Energy Programs, and Richard Cronin, OHA Staff Attorney (August 26, 2009) (Hall Memorandum). The hydrologic data that is used by the VHP (which includes data for the land area covered in the specific HUC referenced in the Request) is not indexed or organized by individual fourth-level HUCs. While data might theoretically be extracted for the particular fourth-level HUC, there is no currently existing database tool or easily created database tool that could extract data for an individual fourth-level HUC. Hall Memorandum. Given these facts, we conclude that Idaho properly determined that no reasonable effort of electronic search would produce data responsive to the Request.

None of United's remaining arguments are availing. Because Idaho found no records responsive to the Request, it was not required to identify a FOIA exemption. With regard to United's argument that the requested data was collected to prepare the Mid-Atlantic Assessment, an Idaho official familiar with its preparation informed us that the data used to prepare the Mid-Atlantic assessment were not indexed by individual fourth-level HUCs. Hall Memorandum. Lastly, our examination of United's Request does not indicate that it reasonably could have been understood to request the entire data set for the VHP. On Appeal, United may not now expand the scope of its initial request.[8]

In conclusion, we find that Idaho conducted an adequate search for data responsive to United's FOIA Request. Consequently, United's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on August 18, 2009, by United Block Captains Association Community Trust for Family Life Improvement, Inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0325, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Scott Wenger
Date of Filing:	September 9, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0328

On September 9, 2009, Scott Wenger (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 4, 2009, by the Idaho Operations Office (Idaho) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Idaho responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require Idaho to conduct a further search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request.

I. Background

On June 12, 2009, the Appellant requested "copies of any and all documents related to the use of radionuclides (radioisotopes) in any instrumentation package sent into space." Request Letter dated June 12, 2009, from Appellant to Director, FOIA/PA Division, DOE. On July 1, 2009, the Office of Information Resources transferred the request to the Office of Nuclear Energy (NE). E-mail dated September 16, 2009, at Attachment 1, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, to Janet Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. On August 25, 2009, Idaho, on behalf of NE, responded to the Appellant's request, stating that neither Idaho nor NE had located responsive documents, but that a cursory search of the Office of Scientific and Technical Information website yielded seven public documents that may be responsive to the request. Determination Letter dated August 4, 2009, from Clayton Ogilvie, Idaho, to Appellant. On September 9, 2009, the Appellant appealed, claiming that it stretches "credulity to believe that DOE has no documents under its control or has no documents that would suggest where records may exist that would document its preparation of radioisotopes for space applications." Appeal Letter dated August 28, 2009, from Appellant, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted Idaho to evaluate its search. Idaho indicated that a search had been conducted of the NE and Idaho offices most likely to contain documents responsive to the Appellant's request. E-mail dated September 14, 2009, from Clayton Ogilvie to Janet Fishman. A search was performed of the Idaho's Electronic Document Management System using a variety of key words including "Apollo Mission" and "plutonium." Id. NE also performed a search but was asked to repeat it because someone at Idaho recalled that documents were in an office belonging to a recently retired person. Id. No responsive documents were discovered by either search. We believe the searches that Idaho and NE conducted were reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information in those areas of Idaho and NE most likely to have the information.[2/] Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

[2/] On May 8, 2009, the Appellant filed another request, similar to the one under consideration in this Appeal. The May 8, 2009, request was forwarded to the Office of History and Heritage Resources (HHR) for review. HHR has identified responsive documents but has not issued a determination. Accordingly, the May 8, 2009, request is not ripe for review by the OHA. E-mails dated September 16, 2009, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE, to Janet Fishman.

Also, Idaho did indicate in its determination letter that it searched the Office of Scientific and Technical Information public website at www.osti.gov/bridge, using the key words "Apollo Mission" and "Plutonium." Seven documents responsive to those key words were located. Since those documents are publicly available, Idaho's notification to the Appellant as to how to access the documents is sufficient under the FOIA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Scott Wenger, Case No. TFA-0328, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Greg Muttitt
Date of Filing:	September 29, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0329

On September 29, 2009, Greg Muttitt (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 12, 2009, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIR, on behalf of the Office of Policy and International Affairs (OPIA), responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OPIA to conduct a further search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request.

I. Background

On June 11, 2009, the Appellant requested "documents on the subject of the Iraqi oil and gas (hydrocarbons) sector, relating to Energy Secretary Samuel Bodman's visit to Iraq on 18 July 2006." Request Letter dated June 11, 2009, from Appellant to Freedom of Information Officer, Headquarters, DOE, FOIA/PA Office, DOE. On August 12, 2009, OIR responded to the Appellant's request, releasing 17 responsive documents. Determination Letter dated August 12, 2009, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Appellant. On September 29, 2009, the Appellant appealed, claiming that he was surprised there were no minutes from the meetings included among the 17 documents. Appeal Letter dated September 18, 2009, from Appellant, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

We contacted OIR to evaluate the search. OIR indicated that a search had been conducted of the OPIA, as this office was most likely to contain documents responsive to the Appellant's request. E-mail dated September 30, 2009, from Alexander C. Morris to Janet Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals, DOE. We agree with OIR that OPIA was the appropriate office within DOE to conduct a search for the requested information.

Within OPIA, a knowledgeable person in the Office of African and Middle Eastern Affairs searched the computer drive. E-mail dated October 1, 2009, from Alexander C. Morris to Janet Fishman, forwarding an e-mail dated October 1, 2009, from Mark Melamed, Office of African and Middle Eastern Affairs, OPIA (October 1, 2009, E-mail). He searched all relevant folders related to Iraq and to meetings and briefings for the Secretary and other high-level officials. Id. He did not conduct a key word search, but rather opened each document individually where the file name indicated that it might be related to the subject trip or to meetings with Iraqi officials. Id. Nevertheless, no minutes of the meetings were located. Id.

In addition to the OPIA computer search, a former DOE employee, who was working at the United States Embassy in Baghdad at the time of the meeting and who escorted the Secretary, was asked if minutes were taken of the meetings. Id. She indicated that she did not take any minutes. Id. She does not believe that minutes were taken of the meetings. Id. She stated that it was a fast-paced day filled with many meetings in a short amount of time. Id.

We believe the search that OPIA conducted was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information.[2/] Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

[1/] All OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

[2/]The Office of Policy and International Affairs indicated that it is possible that United States Embassy staff may have taken notes. October 1, 2009, E-mail. However, any notes they may have taken would be within the purview of the State Department and were not shared with the DOE. Id.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Greg Muttitt, Case No. TFA-0329, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Harry Jacobs
Date of Filing:	October 29, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0334

On October 29, 2009, Harry Jacobs filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Human Capital Management (HCM). In that determination, HCM responded to a request for information that Mr. Jacobs filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require HCM to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

In July 2009, Mr. Jacobs submitted a FOIA request to the DOE for "all e-mails (internal/external) sent by Tonica (Toni) Smith from October 2008 [through] July 2009." He later amended his request to include all e-mails she had sent that were "in her deleted items folders, personal folders, and archived folders," but limited the request to include only "those e-mails pertaining to Harry Jacobs." See Appeal Letter.

HCM requested that the Information Technology Operations Office (IT) conduct a search to retrieve the e-mails Ms. Smith sent within the specified period. HCM reviewed the results of IT's search, identified the e-mails that pertained to Mr. Jacobs, and provided those e-mails to Mr. Jacobs, with certain information withheld. See Letter from Sarah J. Bonilla, Director, HCM, to Harry Jacobs (September 29, 2009) (Determination Letter). On October 29, 2009, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Mr. Jacobs's Appeal in which he requested an additional search for Ms. Smith's outgoing e-mails.[1] See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of [1] Certain personal information was deleted from the copies of the e-mails that HCM provided to Mr. Jacobs. HCM withheld that information pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Mr. Jacobs has not appealed the withholding of that information; therefore, we will not address this matter in this Decision.

State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[2]

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted HCM to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. HCM informed us that it requested that IT perform a search of the agency's e-mail records to locate the requested information. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Theresa Heinicke, Human Resources Specialist, HCM, and William Schwartz, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (November 4, 2009). IT informed us that it searched the DOE mail server, as well as all archive folders located on Ms. Smith's local and network drives, for all e-mails that Ms. Smith sent to addressees outside of the DOE during the specified time period. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Kelly King, Information Technology Specialist, IT, and William Schwartz (November 9, 2009). IT located approximately 300 pages of e-mails that Ms. Smith had sent to addressees outside of the DOE from October 2008 through July 2009. That information was provided to HCM in two formats, one of which was an electronic file on which a word search could be performed. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Theresa Heinicke and William Schwartz (November 4, 2009). HCM searched the electronic file for all occurrences of Mr. Jacobs's full name, first name, last name and initials. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Theresa Heinicke and William Schwartz (November 9, 2009). The results of that search were enclosed with the Determination Letter provided to Mr. Jacobs. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Theresa Heinicke and William Schwartz (November 4, 2009).

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that HCM performed a search reasonably calculated to identify all e-mails pertaining to Mr. Jacobs that Ms. Smith sent during the period of October 2008 through July 2009 to addressees outside of the DOE. Mr. Jacobs, however, requested all e-mails regarding him that Ms. Smith sent during that period to addressees both within and without the DOE. Accordingly, the search performed was too narrow in scope to capture all the e-mails Mr. Jacobs sought. On remand, HCM should undertake a new search to identify all e-mails pertaining to Mr. Jacobs that Ms. Smith sent during the described period to addressees within the DOE. Mr. Jacobs's appeal should therefore be granted to the extent that the DOE should perform a new search for the documents described above, and denied to the extent that the search it conducted for e-mails that Ms. Smith sent to addressees outside of the DOE was adequate.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Harry Jacobs on November 29, 2009, OHA Case No. TFA-0334, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

[2] All OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Human Capital Management, which shall conduct a search for all e-mails sent by Tonica Smith from October 2008 through July 2009 to addressees within the Department of Energy that pertain to Harry Jacobs. Upon completing its search, the Office of Human Capital Management shall issue a new determination under the Freedom of Information Act, releasing any responsive documents identified through that search or justifying the withholding of any portions of such documents.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Joseph J. Muncey, Jr.
Date of Filing:	November 9, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0335

On November 9, 2009, Joseph J. Muncey, Jr. filed an Appeal from a determination the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center in Albuquerque, New Mexico (NNSA/SC) issued on October 18, 2009. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from NNSA/SC a copy of his "complete employment file," and provided the names of the following employers: Rocketdyne, North American Aviation, North American Rockwell, Rockwell International Hughes Aircraft, NASA/JPL, Boeing North American, Boeing, Inc., and Dravo Corporation. Letter from Joseph J. Muncey, Jr., to Office of Public Affairs, NNSA/SC (undated). Mr. Muncey included with his request documents indicating that he had worked for Rocketdyne, a former DOE contractor, at the Santa Susana Field Laboratory (SSFL) in Southern California.

On October 16, 2009, NNSA/SC issued a determination to Mr. Muncey stating that it located no documents responsive to the request. Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, Freedom of Information Act Officer, Office of Public Affairs, NNSA/SC (October 16, 2009). In his appeal, Mr. Muncey does not directly challenge the adequacy of NNSA/SC's search for responsive documents, but we treat the appeal as such because there are no other possible grounds under the DOE FOIA regulations for appealing the determination in this case.[1]

II. Analysis

[1] See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(4) ("Although a determination that no such record is known to exist is not a denial, the requester will be informed that a challenge may be made to the adequacy of the search by appealing within 30 calendar days to the Office of Hearings and Appeals."). Mr. Muncey also requested that his appeal "be extended 90 days in order that you can obtain a copy of my complete and large case file from the Department of Labor, DEEOIC, Seattle, Washington, for your review." Appeal at 1. However, the FOIA requires that we "make a determination with respect to any appeal within twenty days (excepting Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays) after the receipt of such appeal." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(ii). Moreover, Mr. Muncey's Department of Labor case file would be unlikely to shed any light on the adequacy of NNSA/SC's search for responsive documents, which is the only issue before us in the present case.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

From the description in NNSA/SC's October 16 determination regarding its search for responsive documents, and from additional information NNSA/SC provided to our office subsequent to the filing of the appeal, we learned the following regarding the NNSA/SC's search. NNSA/SC first contacted the DOE's Livermore Site Office (LSO) in Livermore, California. LSO consulted its Contract Administration and Resource Management Division, which reported that it maintains no such records, and the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, which searched its database of current and former employees, and found no record concerning Mr. Muncey. Email from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA/SC, to Steven Goering, OHA Staff Attorney (November 12, 2009).

LSO also advised NNSA/SC to contact the DOE's Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center in Cincinnati, Ohio, which in turn recommended that NNSA/SC search the Federal Records Center in San Bruno, California. Id. The San Bruno Federal Records Center, operated by the National Archives and Records Administration, houses documents on behalf of the DOE and other federal agencies,[2] including documents related to work done at SSFL.[3] NNSA/SC records management personnel performed searches of databases of records held at Federal Records Centers as well as a DOE database of issued security clearances, using "the name Muncey or possible permutations of the name." Email from Cynthia Dabney, Senior Business Systems Analyst, NNSA/SC, to Steven Goering, OHA (November 23, 2009). These searches yielded no responsive documents.

Based on the above description, it appears clear to us that NNSA/SC performed a search reasonably calculated to locate documents responsive to Mr. Muncey's request. However, Mr. Muncey provided information with the present Appeal that was not available to NNSA/SC, and this information indicates that other DOE offices may have responsive documents.

Specifically, included with the Appeal was a September 28, 2009, decision issued by the Department of Labor (DOL) regarding a claim Mr. Muncey filed under the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program Act of 2000 (EEOICPA). This decision stated, among other things, that a DOE representative had verified Mr. Muncey's employment history, including at SSFL "with Rocketdyne, a DOE contractor, as an Associate-Test Development from September 21, 1964 to February 12, 1965; . . . ." Therefore, it would appear likely that the DOE representative who verified Mr. Muncey's employment information had access to documents that would be responsive to Mr. Muncey's request.

[2] "Services for Federal Agencies," http://www.archives.gov/pacific/frc/san-francisco/agencies.html.

[3] "NIOSH Program Area - OCAS - General Activities on Department of Energy (DOE) Cases," http://www.cdc.gov/niosh/ocas/ocasdoe.html.

While the DOL decision does not identify the DOE representative in question, we note that the DOE's Office of Former Worker Screening Programs, located at DOE Headquarters, "funds and coordinates records retrieval activities at all DOE sites to support the claims adjudication process for individual claims submitted by current and former DOE federal and contractor workers under EEOICPA. Records requests include requests from DOL for employment verification [and] claimants' work history, . . ."[4]

Though NNSA/SC's search for documents responsive to Mr. Muncey's request was clearly adequate, we find that this new information warrants a search for responsive documents at DOE Headquarters. We will therefore remand this matter to the Office of Information Resources to conduct this search and issue a new determination to Mr. Muncey.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Joseph J. Muncey, Jr on November 9, 2009, Case No. TFA-0335, is hereby granted as specified in paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Information Resources, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Terry M. Apodaca
Dates of Filing:	November 10, 2009 November 12, 2009
Case Numbers:	TFA-0336 TFA-0337

On November 10 and 12, 2009, Terry M. Apodaca (Appellant) filed Appeals from two determinations issued to her on October 14, 2009, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In those determinations, NNSA/SC responded to requests for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. These Appeals, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to release information withheld under Exemptions 5 and 6, and also to conduct a further search for information responsive to the Appellant's request.

I. Background

On May 18, 2009, the Appellant requested copies of > 1. All [Office of Public Affairs] OPA personnel actions from May 2007 to present, to include all attached background information and justifications, just as was submitted for consideration.

> 2. Any and all complaints and/or grievances filed against any member of OPA, to include the FOIA/PA team, from May 2007 to present in the possession of OPA, Director's office.

First Request Letter dated May 18, 2009, from Appellant to Carolyn Becknell (First Request Letter). In the second request, the Appellant requested copies of

> 1. All documents involved in the processing of DOE Vacancy No. 09-0019, NNSA SC entitled "Lead Information Program Specialist, HQ-0301-03/03. As well as a copy of the successful candidate's job application with all attachments that were submitted, your response should include, but not be limited to:

> (a) all documents generated by Tracy Loughead and/or Al Stotts in ranking all applicants' qualifications.
> (b) documents created by any and all individuals in attendance during my interview on March 17, 2009, as well as a listing of their names, titles, a copy of their Position Descriptions, why they were present, the questions they asked and their evaluation of my response.

Second Request Letter dated May 18, 2009, from Appellant to Carolyn Becknell (Second Request Letter).

On October 14, 2009, NNSA/SC issued two determination letters responding to the Appellant's requests. Determination Letters dated October 14, 2009, from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA/SC, to Appellant (First and Second Determination Letter). In the first determination, NNSA/SC released information that was responsive to the request, but redacted some information under Exemption 5 or 6. First Determination Letter. In the second determination, NNSA/SC released 53 responsive documents to the Appellant.[1/] Second Determination Letter. Information from these documents was withheld under either Exemptions 5 or 6. Id. In a few documents, information was withheld under more than one of these exemptions.

On November 10, 2009, the Appellant appealed the second determination. In that Appeal, the Appellant challenged the redactions in 14 of the documents. Appeal E-Mail dated November 10, 2009, from Appellant to William Schwartz, Office of Hearings and Appeals, (OHA), DOE (November 10 Appeal). The Appellant also claimed that none of the documents were responsive to her request 1(c). Finally, the Appellant challenged the adequacy of the search because NNSA/SC did not provide one of the documents listed in determination and did not provide any documents in response her request for "any operating instructions for the FOIA/PA Team." November 10 Appeal.

On November 12, 2009, the Appellant appealed the first determination, claiming that much of the information withheld is releasable. Further, she stated that she could not determine what information was redacted. November 12, 2009, E-Mail from Appellant to William Schwartz. She also challenged the withholding in their entirety of two other documents. Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). In this regard, it is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemptions 5 and 6 are at issue in this case.

A. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges, among others, that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir 1980) (Coastal States). The Appellant is challenging NNSA/SC's withholdings under the deliberative process privilege.

In order to be shielded by Exemption 5, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 866. The predecisional privilege of Exemption 5 covers records that typically reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than the final policy of the agency. Id. Consequently, the privilege does not generally protect records containing purely factual matters.

Notwithstanding the above, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both predecisional matter and factual matter that is not otherwise exempt from release, the factual matter must be segregated and released to the requester.

There are, however, exceptions to the general rule that factual information should be released. The first exception is for records in which factual information was selected from a larger collection of facts as part of the agency's deliberative process, and the release of either the collection of facts or the selected facts would reveal that deliberative process. Dudman Communications. Corp. v. Dep't of Air Force, 815 F.2d 1565 (D.C. Cir. 1987); Montrose v. Train, 491 F.2d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1974). The second exception is for factual information that is so inextricably intertwined with deliberative material that its exposure would reveal the agency's deliberative process. Wolfe v. HHS, 839 F.2d 769, 774-76 (D.C. Cir. 1988). Factual matter that does not fall within either of these two categories does not generally qualify for protection under Exemption 5.

The Appellant challenged the withholding of information from a number of documents under Exemption 5. She claims that the information redacted from Document Nos. 26, 42, 43, 47 and 49,[2/] all of which documents regarded the hiring of the Lead Information Program Specialist in OPA, NNSA/SC did not explain how the information qualified for Exemption 5 protection. We disagree. NNSA/SC explained that the information it withheld was predecisional and part of the deliberative process. We have been provided with copies of these pages. We have reviewed these pages and believe that the information redacted was properly withheld under Exemption 5. These pages contain deliberative information that reflects the personal opinions of the authors. Release of this deliberative information could stifle honest and direct communication of federal employees' opinions. Further, there is no factual information contained in these documents.

[2/]The Appellant also claims that NNSA/SC did not explain why Exemption 2 was cited on this document. We disagree. The Determination Letter clearly states that "[d]isclosure of this information could possibly expose this department, as well as other departments/organizations, to a 'significant risk of circumvention of agency regulations or statutes.'" First Determination Letter. We do not need to address its withholding under Exemption 2, because she has not challenged that withholding, but only the justification.

1. Segregability

The Appellant has also challenged the withholding of the document identified as "NNSA Weights and Screenouts for Lead Information Programs Specialist Vacancy." The Appellant claimed that this document was withheld in its entirety, even though it was released to her as Document No. 5. NNSA/SC indicated that the withheld document was a draft version of the above titled document and should have included "DRAFT" in the title. Memorandum dated November 19, 2009, from Karen Laney, NNSA/SC, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA (November 19, 2009, Memorandum.) Drafts may be withheld under Exemption 5 because they may contain information that was not contained in the final version and their release may reveal the give and take of intra-governmental negotiations. However, NNSA/SC did not indicate whether it reviewed the document to determine whether any factual information could be segregated from the draft. We will remand this document to NNSA/SC for a review for segregability.

The Appellant also challenges the withholding of a report by GenQuest, Inc., prepared in response to a grievance she filed. She is claiming that NNSA/SC did not indicate whether or not the document was reviewed for segregability. The FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Thus, if a document contains both exempt information and non-exempt information that is not otherwise exempt from release, the non-exempt information must generally be segregated and released to the requestor. We have reviewed the information that NNSA/SC redacted from the responsive information. Other than the GenQuest, Inc. Report, NNSA/SC was very careful with its redactions. We believe that none of the information that was redacted could be reasonably segregated, with the exception of the GenQuest, Inc., report. Therefore, we will remand the GenQuest, Inc., report to NNSA/SC for a review to determine if any of the information within the report could reasonably be segregated.

2. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. NNSA/SC concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the requested information would cause an unreasonable harm to NNSA/SC's ongoing decision-making process. Therefore, release of the withheld information in Document Nos. 26, 42, 43, 47, and 49 would not be in the public interest.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The second step is that the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (Reporters Comm.); FLRA v. Department of the Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. Denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. at 762-770. See Frank E. Isbill, Case No. VFA-0499 (1999); Sowell, Todd, Lafitte, Beard & Watson, LLC, Case No. VFA-0496 (1999).

1. Federal Employee Salary Information

In her Appeal, the Appellant argues that the salaries of federal employees are not withholdable under the FOIA. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regulations stipulate that present and past annual salary rates are to be made available to the public. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a)(4). In the determination, NNSA/SC found that the "basic pay, locality adjustment, adjusted basic pay, and total salary/award . . . if supplied and combined with other identifying information, could allow one to reasonably deduce the performance rating and award for an individual under the NNSA performance based pay plan." Second Determination Letter. We have previously held that a substantial privacy interest would be implicated by the release of the employees' performance rating. Terry M. Apodaca, Case

No. TFA-0204 (July 25, 2007);[3/] see also 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a)(6) (performance appraisals are excepted from release). We will not revisit that argument here. We agree where release of salary could result in the determination of an employee's performance rating, release of the salary is exempt from mandatory disclosure pursuant to Exemption 6. Cf. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(b)(1) (recognizing that salary and other information enumerated as releasable under § 293.311(a)(1) -(6) will generally be withheld by an agency if its release is a "list" would "reveal more about the employee on whom information is sought than the six enumerated items, the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy"). However, we have reviewed the documents in question and some of the salary information that was withheld is not indicative of a performance rating. For example, one Standard Form 50 (SF-50) that had salary information redacted is dated March 16, 2008, the date that NNSA implemented its performance based pay plan. That SF-50 shows the employee's salary increase based on time in service. It does not indicate a salary increase based upon performance. Another SF-50 shows only one salary, not an increase. All the withheld salary information that was redacted from the various documents must be reviewed by NNSA/SC. We believe there are many instances where salaries could have been released, without releasing an employee's performance rating. Any forms which were dated prior to March 16, 2008, should have salary information released. Any forms which show salary information increases not tied to performance must be released.

2. Grievance Information

In her request, the Appellant asked for "[a]ny and all complaints and/or grievance filed against any member of OPA, to include the FOIA/PA team, from May 2007 to present in the possession of OPA, Director's office." In response, NNSA/SC identified two documents. One document, the GenQuest, Inc., report, was addressed above in the section regarding Exemption 5. The other document was a grievance filed by a third party and was withheld in its entirety pursuant to Exemption 6. The Appellant argues that since the person who filed the grievance is no longer employed by DOE there is no longer any privacy concern. We disagree. First, we note that NNSA/SC never identified the person who filed the grievance. Second, courts have recognized that an individual's privacy interest may be diminished if the individual is deceased. See, e.g., Davis v. Department of Justice, 460 F.3d 92, 97-98 (D.C. Cir. 2007) and cases cited therein. Nevertheless, neither this office nor the courts have considered such diminution of privacy interest merely because the affected individual has left one job for another. However, it is not clear whether NNSA/SC reviewed the document to determine whether any of the withheld information could be segregated and released without invading the individual's personal privacy.

[3/] All OHA FOIA decision issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

Therefore, we will remand this grievance report to NNSA/SC for a determination about whether any information could be segregated and released.

3. Document-Specific Challenges Under Exemption 6

a. Document Nos. 11 and 23

The Appellant asks why the name of the unsuccessful candidate was withheld. Release of the name of the unsuccessful candidate would be embarrassing to that unsuccessful candidate and therefore is a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Exemption 6. Moreover, release of the information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. Where a substantial privacy interest has been identified and no public interest, we find release would be a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy.

b. Document No. 27

The Appellant asks why her scores were released to her, but not the successful candidate's scores. We believe that this information is withholdable under Exemption 6. The Appellant has no privacy interest in her own information. Therefore, for her information the analysis described above stops at this step. But for the successful candidate's scores, the analysis must continue. Release of this information could prove embarrassing to the successful candidate. Moreover, release of the information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. As stated above, where a substantial privacy interest has been identified and no public interest, we find release would be a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy.

c. Document Nos. 14 and 41

The Appellant challenges the withholdings made in these documents. We believe that the redactions are allowed under Exemption 6. The information withheld consists of an applicant's personal information, e.g., social security number, home address, home e-mail address, home telephone number, that should not be released to the public. Like Document No. 27 above, the information is not specifically required to be released under the OPM regulations. We believe that release of this information could prove embarrassing to the successful candidate and should be withheld. Moreover, release of the information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. As stated above, where a substantial privacy interest has been identified and no public interest, we find release would be a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy.

C. Other FOIA Matters Raised by Appellant

The Appellant claimed that none of the documents were responsive to request 1(c) in her first request. NNSA/SC explained that "there was no formal notification announcing who was selected for this position. Notification of selectee was verbal, announced in an Office of Public Affairs weekly staff meeting." November 19, 2009, Memorandum. Therefore, there are no responsive documents to produce. Under these circumstances, no search for responsive documents was required.

The Appellant also appealed NNSA/SC's "inability to locate . . . any operating instructions for the FOIA/PA Team." First Appeal Letter. NNSA/SC responded that "[g]eneral instructions for processing FOIA/PA requests [are] available to [the Appellant] at this website http://scweb.na.gov/scbusinessprocesses/13Communications.shtm. . . . No other written records exist." November 19, 2009, Memorandum.

The Appellant challenged the adequacy of NNSA/SC's ability to locate information regarding why the panel members were present for the selection committee, which she claimed should have been included as a portion of Document 39. In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See., e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003). NNSA/SC could not locate any documents indicating why "panel members were present" for the selection committee. NNSA/SC indicated that it contacted Human Resources (HR), where all hiring files are sent after the position is filled. HR responded that the requested information was not in the file. The HR representative continued that "a verbal discussion took place between myself and Tracy Loughead during a HR consultation visit. I advised that I would be present . . . to ensure consistency of the interviews. Tracy advised me that she would select panel members based on them being subject matter experts. Lastly, EEO Rep is always present." E-Mail from Karen Laney, NNSA/SC, to Janet Fishman. In addition, the selecting official was also contacted to determine if she had retained any documents. She answered negatively. We believe that the search conducted by NNSA/SC in regard to this document was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information.

In her Appeal, the Appellant states that as she "cannot see exactly where information was deleted, the documents need to be processed again to show . . . exactly where the deletion happened." Second Appeal Letter. A title at the top of the page that information was withheld under Exemption 6 and a form that has been "whited-out" is not sufficient under the FOIA. The FOIA states > [t]he amount of information deleted, and the exemption under which the deletion is made, shall be indicated on the released portion of the record, unless including that indication would harm an interest protected by the exemption in this subsection under which the deletion is made. If technically feasible, the amount of the information deleted, and the exemption under which the deletion is made, shall be indicated at the place in the record where such deletion is made.

5 U.S.C. § 552(b). We believe this means that an agency must mark documents in a way that makes it readily apparent to the requester where information has been withheld. This can be accomplished by darkening, or "blacking out" the withheld portions of the documents, or by inserting brackets around the withheld portions. We agree with the Appellant that the SF-50 forms as provided to her do not satisfy this portion of the FOIA. We will remand the SF-50 forms to NNSA/SC for a new redaction. NNSA/SC must specify precisely where information was redacted from the form.

Also, in her Appeal, the Appellant asked specific questions about a number of documents. We will address those questions in this section.

1. Document No. 8.

The Appellant asks why personal information was withheld from her when the information was about her. We reviewed the document and did not find any information about the Appellant withheld from her.

2. Document No. 28

The Appellant claims that a document was provided to her but not listed in the final determination letter. NNSA/SC explained that the document that the Appellant has identified as Document No. 28 was in fact an attachment to Document No. 27.

III. Conclusion

NNSA/SC properly withheld information under Exemption 5. However, the GenQuest, Inc., report and other grievance report must be reviewed for segregation. Most of the information withheld under Exemption 6 was properly withheld. However, the document titled "NNSA Weights and Screenouts for Lead Information Programs Specialist Vacancy," which NNSA/SC stated was a DRAFT, must be reviewed for segregability. Also, NNSA/SC withheld federal salary information. All of the federal salary information that was withheld must be reviewed to determine if it can be released. The only federal salary information that should be withheld is salary information that would indicate the individual's performance rating. For the information withheld from the SF-50 forms that were responsive to the Appellant's second request, NNSA/SC must specify precisely where information was redacted from the forms. We will remand these Appeals to NNSA/SC for further review as specified in this Decision. Therefore, these Appeals will be granted in part and denied in all other respects.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed by Terry M. Apodaca, Case Nos. TFA-0336 and TFA-0337, are hereby granted in part and denied in all other respects.

(2) These matters are hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Glen W. Bowers

Date of Filing: November 16, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0338

On November 16, 2009, Glen W. Bowers filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on October 6, 2009, by the Department of Energy's Savannah River Operations Office (SR). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Bowers submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Mr. Bowers asks that SR conduct an additional search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Mr. Bowers filed a request for information in which he sought the employment and medical records, radiation exposure records, special awards, photographs, news letters, and all other information pertaining to his father, John Wyley Bowers. In his request, Mr. Bowers indicated that his father worked, inter alia, with the Department of Defense Union Contractors and the Atomic Energy Commission. Mr. Bowers submitted his request to DOE's Office of Information Resources (DOE/HQ). That office transferred Mr. Bowers' FOIA request to all relevant offices for action and a direct response to Mr. Bowers. Upon receiving Mr. Bowers' request, SR conducted a search, but found no responsive documents. On November 16, 2009, Mr. Bowers filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by SR. See Appeal Letter. He asserts that responsive documents may be found in a number of additional locations and asks OHA to direct SR to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003). */ The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he

*/ All OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought material." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate.

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in SR to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Mr. Bowers' request for information, SR conducted a search of their dosimetry records in the Radiation Exposure Department and medical records in the Electronic Data Warehouse Storage, which is a system that houses all records of former and current employees. SR indicated that it also searched archived microfiche, disposal records and personnel security records. SR conducted both manual and computer searches using several search aids including Mr. Bowers' father's name and social security number, and was unable to locate responsive material. See E-mail from Pauline Conner, SR, to Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (November 23, 2009). Given the facts presented to us, we find that SR conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. Accordingly, Mr. Bowers' Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Glen W. Bowers, OHA Case No. TFA-0338, on November 16, 2009, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Glen W. Bowers
Date of Filing:	November 24, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0339

On November 24, 2009, Glen W. Bowers filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy Idaho Operations Office (DOE/ID) issued on October 14, 2009. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from DOE a copy of employment records of his father, John Wyley Bowers. Letter from Glen Bowers to Chris Morris, Freedom of Information Act Officer, Office of Information Resources (August 9, 2009). The request provided a list of John Bowers's employers, including C.F. Braun & Company. Id. The request was forwarded to, among other DOE offices, DOE/ID. On November 20, 2009, DOE/ID issued a determination to Mr. Bowers regarding all records within its purview. DOE/ID stated that it searched for documents responsive to his request, but located no documents in addition to those it had previously provided him on December 18, 2007, in response to an earlier request. Letter from Clayton Ogilvie, Freedom of Information Officer, DOE/ID, to Glen Bowers (October 14, 2009). In his Appeal, Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of DOE/ID's search for responsive documents. Appeal at 1-3.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

We therefore asked DOE/ID to provide our office with a description of its search for documents responsive to Mr. Bowers's request. DOE/ID informed us that, upon receiving Mr. Bowers's initial request in December 2007, it searched its Electronic Document Management System (EDMS) and inquired with the human resources department of Battelle Energy Alliance (BEA), the DOE contractor that operates the Department's Idaho National Laboratory (INL), using John Bowers's name and Social Security Number. This search yielded no responsive documents. However, DOE/ID's dosimetry office identified records indicating that John Bowers had been an employee of Braun Construction, a subcontractor at INL (then the National Reactor Testing Station, a facility of the Atomic Energy Commission, predecessor agency to the DOE), from April 9 to April 16, 1962. DOE/ID also contacted BEA's security office to attempt to locate John Bowers's security file, but was advised that such files have a retention period of ten years, after which they are destroyed. Email from Clayton Ogilvie, DOE/ID, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (December 1, 2009).

In its December 18, 2007, response to Mr. Bowers's initial request, DOE/ID explained that subcontractors "are not required to turn over their personnel files to the DOE when they are no longer under contract. Therefore, we do not have a personnel file for Mr. Bowers." Letter from Nicole Brooks, Privacy Act Officer, DOE/ID, to Glen Bowers (December 18, 2007). With its December 2007 response, DOE/ID provided Mr. Bowers with a copy of his father's dosimetry records. Id. After receiving Mr. Bowers's second request on September 4, 2009, DOE/ID conducted a further search of its EDMS system, as well as the Energy Employees Compensation Resource Center in Idaho Falls, Idaho, and located no documents in addition to those previously provided to Mr. Bowers. Email from Clayton Ogilvie to Steven Goering (December 1, 2009).

Based on the above description, it appears clear to us that DOE/ID performed a search of locations where responsive documents were likely to exist. We therefore conclude that DOE/ID's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by the Appellant. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Glen W. Bowers, Case Number TFA-0339, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Glen W. Bowers
Date of Filing:	November 30, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0340

On November 30, 2009, Glen W. Bowers filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on October 27, 2009, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE). Richland issued the determination in response to a request for documents that Mr. Bowers submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland perform an additional search for responsive material and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

On August 9 and September 27, 2009, Mr. Bowers filed a FOIA request in which he sought copies of the Hanford site employment, medical, and radiation exposure records relating to his father John Wyley Bowers, an employee of DuPont at the Hanford facility in 1943 and 1944. He also sought copies of any special awards, photographs, newsletters and any other information relating to his father. Letter from Mr. Bowers to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (July 8, 2009) (Appeal). On October 27, 2009, Richland informed Mr. Bowers that after a thorough search it was unable to find any records, and consequently denied the request. See Letter from Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, Richland (October 27, 2009) (Determination). On November 30, 2009, Mr. Bowers filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In the Appeal, Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Richland and asks OHA to direct Richland to conduct a new search for responsive documents. Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. The FOIA states that an agency must conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990); see also Gary Maroney, Case No. TFA-0267 (2008). [1] The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See e.g. Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).

We contacted Richland to request additional information so that we could evaluate the search conducted for Mr. Bowers' records. Richland informed OHA that it had conducted a thorough search, and provided additional details regarding the search. The individuals most familiar with the subject of the request conducted a search using the name and Social Security number of Mr. Bowers' father in the locations where responsive documents would most likely be found. The employees searched the following locations: (1) databases within the Records Holding Area (which stores historical employment records); (2) files within the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (which holds Hanford Site radiation exposure records); and (3) files in AdvanceMed Hanford Inc., which maintains medical records for the Hanford site. According to Richland, they "searched all known locations at Hanford for any records regarding Mr. Bowers and none were located." Electronic Mail Message from Dorothy Riehle, Richland, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Staff Attorney, OHA (December 9, 2009).

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Richland conducted a search that was adequate and reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The FOIA Appeal filed by Glen W. Bowers on November 30, 2009, OHA Case Number TFA-0340 is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

December 22, 2009

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Glen W. Bowers
Date of Filing:	December 2, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0341

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Glen W. Bowers in response to a determination that was issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Science, Chicago Office (hereinafter referred to as "SC-CH"). In that determination, SC-CH responded to a request for documents that Mr. Bowers submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. [1] This Appeal, if granted, would require that we remand this matter to SC-CH for another search. [2]

In his FOIA request, Mr. Bowers sought access to John W. Bowers' employment records, including his "Q" clearance number, location of job sites, names of projects on which he worked, any advanced training that he received, medical records including all radiation exposure records, special awards, photographs, and newsletters. In its response, SC-CH stated that it had been unable to locate any documents that were responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. In his Appeal, Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of SC-CH's search.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., Case No. VFA-0098 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

1/ The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request.

2/ Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov . The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm .

In order to determine whether the search conducted was adequate, we contacted SC-CH. We were informed that the search included SC-CH, Ames Laboratory, Argonne National laboratory, Brookhaven National Laboratory, Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory, Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, and Princeton Plasma Physics Laboratory. Personnel Security files were searched at SC-CH, and personnel, medical and dosimetry files were searched at SC-CH and all of the Laboratories mentioned above. Both manual and electronic searches were performed. See December 9, 2009 e-mail from Miriam Legan, SC-CH FOIA Officer, to Robert B. Palmer, Senior Staff Attorney, OHA. Mr. Bowers has not suggested, and we have been unable to discover, any other location in which responsive documents could reasonably be expected to be located. Based on the information before us, we conclude that the search for responsive documents was reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials, and was therefore adequate.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Glen W. Bowers, Case Number TFA-0341, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Stephen C. Huddy

Date of Filing: December 14, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0343

On December 14, 2009, Stephen C. Huddy filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 24, 2009, by the Department of Energy's Office of Legacy Management (LM). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Huddy submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In his Appeal, Mr. Huddy asks that LM conduct an additional search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Mr. Huddy filed a request for information in which he sought "a copy of documents, written or photographic records that pertain to all DOE investigations of chemical and radioactive contamination on a 8600-acre parcel of land known from 1942-44 as the Pennsylvania Ordnance Works and subsequently (1944-50) known as the Susquehanna Ordnance Depot." See Determination Letter at 1. In its Determination Letter, LM stated that it conducted a search of all available records but was unable to locate any documents responsive to Mr. Huddy's request. However, LM referred Mr. Huddy to one of its websites for additional information regarding his request. According to LM, the website "states that the Pennsylvania Ordnance Works (PA.32) site was in a group of sites for which almost no information is available." Id. LM further stated that Mr. Huddy may wish to search for additional documents with the Department of Defense, particularly the United States Army Corps of Engineers (USACE). Additionally, LM stated that if any clean-up was conducted at an Ordnance site, it most likely would have been done under the Defense Environmental Restoration Program for Formerly Used Defense Sites, which is administered by USACE. On December 14, 2009, Mr. Huddy filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Huddy challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by LM.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015

(2003). */ The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought material." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate.

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in LM to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Huddy's request might reasonably be located. LM informed us that upon receiving Mr. Huddy's request for information, it directed its FOIA processing personnel to search the DOE-LM Electronic Recordkeeping System for information that could potentially be responsive to Mr. Huddy's request. This database contains information regarding all records in LM's custody. See LM's Response to FOIA Appeal (January 7, 2010). LM informed us that it used a number of search terms in conducting its search including the following: Pennsylvania Ordance Works, Pennsylvania, Ordnance Works, Susequehanna Ordance Depot, Susequahanna, Williamsport PA, Department of Defense, uranium metal turnings, James J. Fiore, James Fiore, Carl Shafer, May 29 1987, July 23, 1982, radiological contamination, ammunition igloos, magazines, War Department, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, historical material, TNT production, mitigation planning, radiological issues, U.S. Bureau of Prisons and FCC Allenwood. Id. In addition, LM informed us that it consulted with a subject matter expert to aid in its processing and search activities for this request. Id. LM stated that its search yielded eight pages of documentation, which it reviewed and determined to be non-responsive to Mr. Huddy's request. Id. Given the facts presented to us, we find that LM conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Mr. Huddy's request. Accordingly, Mr. Huddy's Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Stephen C. Huddy, OHA Case No. TFA-0343, on December 14, 2009, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Lynn S. Berry
Date of Filing:	December 29, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0344

On December 29, 2009, Lynn S. Berry filed an Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Office (DOE/OR) issued on December 8, 2009. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from DOE/OR a copy of records regarding her father, Edgar L. Moore. On December 8, 2009, DOE/OR issued a determination to Ms. Berry regarding all records within its purview, releasing to Ms. Berry copies of Mr. Moore's medical records, personnel records, payroll records, and work history report. Letter from Amy Rothrock, DOE/OR, to Lynn Berry (December 8, 2009). In her Appeal, Ms. Berry challenges the adequacy of DOE/OR's search for responsive documents. Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

We therefore asked DOE/OR to provide our office with a description of its search for documents responsive to Ms. Berry's request. Upon receiving the request, DOE/OR determined that a search for records should be conducted in its Records Holding Area (RHA) and at the Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU). Email from Linda Chapman, DOE/OR to Steven Goering (January 6, 2010). DOE/OR's RHA repository maintains legacy files on historical personnel, medical, radiation exposure, and personnel security clearance data going back to 1943. Id. ORAU maintains a database containing the work histories of hundreds of former DOE contractor employees. Id.

The search of the RHA repository produced seven pages of medical records and six pages of personnel/payroll records regarding Mr. Moore, while the search of ORAU produced a one-page work history showing that Mr. Moore worked for Tennessee Eastman Corporation from April 5, 1944, to May 1, 1944. Id. Searches at DOE/OR's sites are performed manually in paper files, and electronically in the case of digital records and databases, using as search terms date of birth, name(s), social security number, and badge numbers if known. Id.

DOE/OR also informed us that, based on the information provided by Ms. Berry, certain records responsive to her request might be found at the Y-12 National Security Complex, which is located in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, but is under the jurisdiction of the DOE's NNSA Service Center in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Id. Therefore, DOE/OR forwarded a copy of Ms. Berry's request to the NNSA Service Center, which will issue a separate determination to her. Id.

Based on the above description, it appears clear to us that DOE/OR performed a search of locations where responsive documents were likely to exist.* We therefore conclude that DOE/OR's search was reasonably calculated to uncover the records sought by the Appellant. Thus, the present Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Lynn S. Berry, Case Number TFA-0344, is hereby denied.

Poli A. Marmolejos
Director
Office of Hearings and Appeals

Date: January 19, 2010

* In her Appeal, Ms. Berry states that her father may have worked for a DOE subcontractor and that, if the DOE is "serious about locating records for their workers, they would necessarily have to go back to the contractor or subcontractor records." Appeal at 1. However, DOE/OR has stated that it does not have DOE subcontractor (as opposed to contractor) employment records, Email from Linda Chapman, DOE/OR to Steven Goering (January 6, 2010), and the FOIA requires only a search of "agency records" in response to a request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(C)-(D); see also Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request).

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: James R. Cromeenes

Date of Filing: December 31, 2009

Case Number: TFA-0345

On December 31, 2009, James R. Cromeenes filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on December 18, 2009, by the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Mr. Cromeenes submitted under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. Mr. Cromeenes asks that Oak Ridge conduct an additional search for documents responsive to his request.

I. Background

Mr. Cromeenes filed a request for information in which he sought copies of his personnel, medical, employment, radiation exposure records and similar files generated during his employment with Allied Chemical (Allied) in Metropolis, Illinois. On December 18, 2009, Oak Ridge issued a determination letter which stated that it conducted a search of "certain legacy records on former Atomic Weapon Employer workers retained at Oak Ridge that pertain to remote sites and companies not located at Oak Ridge." As a result of this search, Oak Ridge indicated that it located one record, Mr. Cromeenes' personnel security clearance assurance index card file. This record was released to Mr. Cromeenes. On December 31, 2009, Mr. Cromeenes filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Mr. Cromeene challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge. See Appeal Letter. He asks OHA to direct Oak Ridge to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The U.S. Department of Justice has issued guidance stating that an individual's access request for his own record maintained in a system of records should be processed under both the Privacy Act and the FOIA, regardless of the statute(s) cited. U.S. Department of Justice, Privacy

Act Overview, May 2004. DOE requires a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, 28 DOE ¶ 80,251 (2002). */ Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge, we are guided by the principles we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought material." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Information Focus On Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,240 (1997).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in Oak Ridge to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Mr. Cromeenes' request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Mr. Cromeenes' request for information, Oak Ridge determined that the areas most reasonably calculated to contain documents regarding a former subcontractor employee were the Records Holding Area and the Oak Ridge Associated University's Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Education (ORISE) database. Oak Ridge conducted manual and electronic searches of its Records Holding Area, which contains legacy and personnel security data on employees dating back to 1940. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (January 28, 2010). Oak Ridge stated that Mr. Cromeenes' former employer, Allied, was a subcontractor and that its Records Holding Area normally possesses only records for contractor employees. Id. However, Oak Ridge stated that, as a result of its search, it located one document, a personnel security clearance assurance index card file, which it released to Mr. Cromeenes. Oak Ridge indicated that this document was located because Mr. Cromeenes participated in a health study being conducted by DOE at time of his employment. Id. No other documents regarding Mr. Cromeenes were located in the Records Holding Area. Oak Ridge also stated that it conducted a search at the Oak Ridge Associated University's ORISE database for a work history report on Mr. Cromeenes and located no responsive documents. Id. Given the facts presented to us, we find that Oak Ridge conducted an adequate search under both the Privacy Act and the FOIA which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Mr. Cromeenes' request. Accordingly,

Mr. Cromeenes' Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by James R. Cromeenes, OHA Case No. TFA-0345, on December 31, 2009, is hereby denied.

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Joseph Carson
Date of Filing:	December 31, 2009
Case Number:	TFA-0346

On December 31, 2009, Joseph Carson filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Human Capital Management (HCM). In that determination, HCM responded to a request for information that Mr. Carson filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On October 14, 2009, Mr. Carson submitted a FOIA request to the DOE for "any records related to the Secretary's compliance with his positive duty to 'prevent prohibited personnel practices' in the Department, per 5 U.S.C. § 2302(c), . . . and [a]ny records of DOE's self-assessment of its performance in discharging this duty or" similar assessments by other organizations. The Office of Information Resources (IR), which receives all requests for information submitted under the FOIA, determined that the Office of Human Capital Management (HCM) was the office most likely to contain documents responsive to Mr. Carson's request. HCM conducted a search of its records and data and determined that it had no documents responsive to the request. Letter from Sarah J. Bonilla, Director, HCM, to Joseph Carson (December 15, 2009) (Determination Letter). On December 31, 2009, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Mr. Carson's Appeal. In his Appeal, Mr. Carson did not challenge the search undertaken by HCM, but rather stated his belief that the following offices, if searched, might have documents responsive to his request: Office of the Inspector General, Office of Health, Safety and Security, Office of the General Counsel, Office of Economic Impact and Diversity, and the Office of Management. See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).*

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted IR to ascertain the rationale for forwarding the request to HCM for a response. IR informed us that it had in fact identified two offices that it believed might have responsive documents: HCM because the request concerned personnel practices, and ED because that office addresses prohibited personnel practices, such as violations of equal opportunity laws. ED informed IR at that time that administration of the protections set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 2302(c) did not fall within its jurisdiction, and therefore it had no responsive records. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Alexander C. Morris, Chief Freedom of Information Officer, Vera Dunmore, IR, and William Schwartz, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (January 5, 2010).

IR then offered to coordinate a search of the offices Mr. Carson named in his appeal letter and, in addition, the Office of the Executive Secretariat. The results of the new search demonstrated that Mr. Carson's request had been interpreted in various manners. Consequently, this Office spoke with Mr. Carson to determine the intended scope of his request. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between William Schwartz, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals, and Mr. Carson (January 29, 2010). Mr. Carson does not seek statistical data regarding the DOE's enforcement of laws and policies that prevent prohibited personnel practices as defined at 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b), nor does he seek documents that express the Secretary of Energy's intent or direction to prevent prohibited personnel practices. He does, however, seek the following:

> (1) any delegation orders that delegate to another departmental employee the Secretary's responsibility, under 5 U.S.C. § 2302(c), to prevent the prohibited personnel practices defined at 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b), and
> (2) any assessment or evaluation of relevant data in which the Secretary or any such delegee expresses an opinion as to whether employees of the DOE are adequately protected from those prohibited personnel practices.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the divergent interpretations of Mr. Carson's request, we find that the DOE's prior search was not calculated to identify all documents responsive to Mr. Carson's request. Consequently, we are remanding this matter to IR, which shall conduct a new search for documents responsive to the above formulation of Mr. Carson's request. It shall then issue a new determination in which it either releases all documents responsive to the newly formulated request or identifies any responsive information it is withholding and provides adequate justification for such withholding. Accordingly, Mr. Carson's Appeal will be granted.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: International Union of Painters and Allied Trades, District Council #15

Date of Filing: January 25, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0347

On January 25, 2010, Dennis Creese filed an Appeal from a determination issued to the International Union of Painters and Allied Trades, AFL-CIO, District Council 15 of Colorado (IUPAT) on December 18, 2009, by the Golden Field Office (Golden) of the Department of Energy (OR) in response to a request for documents that Mr. Creese submitted on behalf of IUPAT under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Golden release any responsive material to Mr. Creese.

I. Background

The National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL), located in Golden Colorado, is owned by DOE. A private contractor, The Alliance for Sustainable Energy, LLC (The Alliance), manages NREL through a management and operating contract (M&O contract). The Alliance entered into a contract with Haselden Construction Company (Haselden), a subcontractor, for the construction of the Research Support Facilities building on the NREL campus. Pursuant to the terms of the contract between The Alliance and Haselden, The Alliance maintains the documents for the Haselden construction contract, including weekly payroll submissions. Those submissions are required by the terms of the contract between The Alliance and Haselden so that The Alliance can ensure that Haselden is complying with the requirements of the Davis-Bacon Act.[1]

In a FOIA request, IUPAT requested: "(1) a list of glazing, drywall, painting, and floor covering subcontractors used by Haselden Construction Company (Haselden) for the construction of the Research Support Facilities (RSF) building on the National Renewable Energy Lab (NREL) campus; and (2) a copy of all certified payrolls for glazing, drywall, painting and floor covering work done by Haselden for the construction of the RSF." See Letter from Christie A. Phoebe, Deputy Manager, to Dennis Creese, IUPAT (December 18, 2009) (Determination Letter) at 1.

[1] The Davis Bacon Act applies to contractors and subcontractors working on federally funded contracts over $2000 for the construction, alteration, and repair of public buildings or public works. Contractors and subcontractors must submit a weekly certified payroll detailing employees' job classifications, wage rate, fringe benefits and other information to ensure compliance with the Act. See Letter from Kathryn Aleda and Becky Bye, Legal Counsel, Golden, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (February 16, 2010) (Response) at 2, fn 1.

In response to the first part of the request, Golden stated that it was unable to provide a list of the subcontractors used by Haselden because such a list did not exist. See Determination Letter at 1. As for the second part of the request, Golden did locate the certified payrolls for glazing and painting work. [2] Golden released 24 pages in full, but redacted the following information from 31 additional pages: (1) hours per day; (2) total hours worked; (3) gross earnings; and (4) personal identifiers (names and identification numbers). Id. at 3. In the Determination Letter, Golden stated that it had redacted this material because it was exempt under FOIA Exemption 6. IUPAT then appealed the determination, arguing that Exemption 6 applied only to the personal identifiers and that the remainder of the responsive material should be disclosed. If this Appeal were granted, Golden would be required to release the hours per day, total hours worked, and gross earnings information that was redacted from the certified payrolls.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b) (6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Further, the term "similar files" has been interpreted broadly by the Supreme Court to include all information that "applies to a particular individual." Washington Post, 456 U.S. at 602.

Golden stated that in invoking Exemption 6, it considered: 1) whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by disclosure of information, 2) whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations or activities of the government, and 3) whether in balancing the private interest against the public interest, disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy. Determination Letter at 3. See also Power Wire Constructors, OHA Case No. TFA-0297 (2009) (explaining the three-step analysis required to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6).[3]

[2] Golden addressed the request for information regarding drywall and floor covering in a separate FOIA response. Determination Letter at 1.

[3] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

In invoking Exemption 6, Golden determined that the release of an employee's personal identifiers is a serious invasion of privacy and would reveal personal information about that employee. Golden maintains that disclosure of such personal information may subject Haselden workers to unwanted contact, harassment, and other unwarranted invasions of their privacy. See Response at 5. See also Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n, Local No. 9 vs. U.S. Air Force, 63 F.3d 994, 998 (10th Cir. 1995) (stating that employees of private contractors performing federal construction projects have a substantial privacy interest in personal financial information with personal identifiers linking the individual to the financial information). According to Golden, the need to keep the redacted information private outweighs the small public interest gained from its release. Id. [4]

In its appeal, IUPAT conceded that Sheet Metal supported Golden's redaction of the personal identifiers from the responsive payroll material. However, IUPAT argued that Golden had also redacted information that was not personal in nature and would not invade the personal privacy of the workers involved. Appeal at 3. Specifically, IUPAT maintained that the information relating to hours per day, total hours worked, and gross earnings ("hours and earnings") was not exempt under Exemption 6 and its release would not have compromised the privacy concerns of the individual workers. Appeal at 2. As regards the public interest in the requested information, IUPAT claims that its members and contractors are taxpayers and as such have a public interest in this information because taxpayers are funding this construction project. Id. at 3.

We find that Golden properly redacted the subcontractor employee names and personal identifiers under FOIA Exemption 6. As stated above, release of that information would reveal personal information about the subcontractor employees and could subject them to unwarranted invasions of their personal privacy. We further find that release of this information is of minimal public interest and is clearly outweighed by the privacy interest of the workers. Disclosure would not shed light on the operations of the government. See Power Wire Constructors. Thus, we agree with Golden and IUPAT that the employee names and identification numbers were properly withheld under Exemption 6.

B. Applicability of Exemption 4 to Hours and Earnings Information

In its Determination Letter, Golden argued that the "hours and earnings" information redacted from the responsive material was exempt from disclosure under Exemption 6. However, in its Response to the Appeal, Golden sets forth Exemption 4 as its new justification for redaction of the "hours and earnings" material.[5] Golden maintained that it had intended to identify Exemption 4 in the Determination Letter as its rationale for withholding the hours and earnings data but instead had omitted the Exemption 4 language due to an oversight. Response at 2, fn 2. According to Golden, the documents released to Mr. Creese should have been stamped as having hours and earnings information redacted pursuant to Exemption 4. Id. In order to provide IUPAT an opportunity under the FOIA regulations to properly respond to this new justification, we will remand this matter to Golden to either release the redacted material to IUPAT or to issue a new determination adequately supporting the continued withholding of this material. Accordingly, this Appeal should be granted in part and denied in part.

[4] In its response to IUPAT's appeal, Golden also maintained that the records requested were not agency records and thus not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. According to Golden, the contract between DOE and The Alliance specifies that payroll records are contractor-owned records. Response at 3; Ex. E at 2. In addition, Golden stated that, according to the M&O contract, certain types of procurement records (e.g. employment-related records) are not government-owned records and are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Id.

[5] FOIA Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential. 5 USC§ 522(b) (4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b) (4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by International Union of Painters and Allied Trades on January 25, 2010, OHA Case Number TFA-0347, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Golden Field Office of the Department of Energy which shall either release the withheld material or issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. See FOIA Group, Inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0239 (2007). Documents submitted under the contract between Haselden and The Alliance Group are considered to be involuntarily submitted because their submission was a requirement of the contract. Response at 6.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioners:	Pike County Auditor Pike County Commissioners Scioto Valley Local School District
Date of Filing:	January 29, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0348

This Decision concerns an Appeal filed by the Pike County (Ohio) Auditor, the Pike County Commissioners, and the Scioto Valley Local School District (hereinafter "the Appellants") from a determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (EM) in Cincinnati, Ohio. In that determination, EM denied the Appellants' request for a waiver of fees in connection with a request the Appellants had submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The Appeal, if granted, would overturn EM's determination and waive in full the fees associated with the Appellants' FOIA request.

I. Background

The Appellants are local government entities with jurisdiction in the area where the DOE's Portsmouth Gaseous Diffusion Plant (Plant) is located. The Appellants filed a September 22, 2009, FOIA Request (Request) with DOE Headquarters asking for documents which "reflect the ownership" of uranium at the Plant. The Appellants' FOIA Request was referred to EM for a response. Letter to the Director of the Office of Hearings and Appeals from Kevin L. Shoemaker, Esq., January 29, 2010 (Appeal) at Exhibit 2. The Request also asked for a waiver of any processing fees pursuant to the fee waiver provisions of the FOIA. See Appeal Exhibit 1.

In an October 1, 2009, letter to the Appellants, EM asked for clarification as to which documents the Appellants were seeking. Additionally, with regard to the fee waiver request, EM asked the Appellants to address six specific questions EM considers in making a decision to grant a fee waiver.[1] Appeal Exhibit 3.

On October 20, 2009, the Appellants provided a response to the questions posed by EM. In its response, the Appellants stated that the requested information would contribute significantly to the public's understanding of government operations since the information would assist the Appellants in determining whether taxes should have been paid to the Appellants from entities using a federal facility (the Plant). Appeal Exhibit 4 at 2. Additionally, because the sought information would be used to determine if taxes should have been paid to Pike County, any disclosure of documents pursuant to the Request would not be in the commercial interest of the Appellants. Appeal Exhibit 4 at 2.

In its December 30, 2009, response, EM denied the Appellants' fee waiver request. EM stated that the requested documents primarily concerned the commercial interests of the Appellants. Further, EM explained that the requested documents would not significantly contribute to the public's understanding of government activities or operations. Moreover, EM asserted that the Appellants had not demonstrated an ability to disseminate the information to the general public. Appeal Exhibit 1 at 1.

The Appellants filed the present Appeal on January 29, 2010. In their Appeal, the Appellants assert that they are attempting to determine if taxes should have been paid to Pike County and that the information was sought to support the operations of local government. They also assert that any documents obtained as a result of its Request would become a part of a public record. Thus, the requested information would be disseminated to any member of the public who requests the information. Appeal at 2. Additionally, the Appellants note that they would likely take legal action against certain firms based upon the information contained in the requested documents and that these legal proceedings would produce further dissemination of the information contained in the legal documents. Appeal at 2.

In its February 4, 2010, response to the Appeal, EM states that, in making its determination, it found that the requested information pertained to government operations and that the information would contribute to an understanding of government operations. February 4, 2010, Letter from Jay A. Jalovec, Esq., Office of Legal Services, EM to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (Response). However, EM determined that disclosure of the documents would not contribute to the public's understanding of the government's operations because the Appellants' commercial interest in the information was significantly greater than the public interest in the information. Further, EM states that the Appellants had not demonstrated an ability to disseminate the information to the public at large. Response at 1-2. EM notes that the Appellants' only asserted method for dissemination is a passive method of disclosure. Only those citizens who specifically request the documents would obtain the information. Response at 2.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that requesters pay fees associated with processing their requests. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). However, the FOIA provides for a reduction or waiver of fees if a requester can satisfy a two-part test. The requester must show that disclosure of the information (1) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; and, (2) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii); see also 10 C.F.R. §1004.9(a)(8).

In analyzing the public-interest prong of the above two-prong test, the regulations set forth the following four factors the agency must consider in determining whether the disclosure of the information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities:

> (A) The subject of the request: Whether the subject of the requested records concerns "the operations or activities of the government" (Factor A);
> (B) The informative value of the information to be disclosed: Whether disclosure is "likely to contribute" to an understanding of government operations or activities (Factor B);
> (C) The contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure (Factor C); and
> (D) The significance of the contribution to public understanding: Whether the disclosure is likely to contribute "significantly" to public understanding of government operations or activities (Factor D).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(i).[2]

Factor A and Factor B

Factor A requires that the requested documents concern the "operations or activities of the government." See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1481-1483 (1989); U.A. Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 36, 24 DOE ¶ 80,148 at 80,621 (1994). Under Factor B, disclosure of the requested information must be likely to contribute to the public's understanding of specifically identifiable government operations or activities, i.e., the records must be meaningfully informative in relation to the subject matter of the request. See Carney v. Department of Justice, 19 F.3d 807, 814 (2d Cir. 1994).

In the present case, EM and the Appellants agree that the requested material concerns the operations and activities of the government and that the information would likely contribute to the public's understanding of a specific identifiable government operation. However, it is not apparent to us if DOE has any role in the payment of local taxes by firms owning uranium and who utilize the Plant. We contacted a supervisory accountant at EM who informed us that he had no knowledge of any DOE involvement or responsibility for local taxes on such contractors. Memorandum of telephone conversation between Darrell McFarland, Supervisory Account, EMCBC and Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (February 11,

[2] With regard to the commercial interest prong for the determination of the appropriateness of granting a fee waiver, the Part 1004 regulations specify two factors to be considered in determining whether the disclosure of information is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requestor. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(ii) (whether the requestor has a commercial interest that would be furthered by the requested documents and, if so, whether the identified commercial interest is sufficiently large in comparison with the public interest in disclosure, such that any disclosure would be primarily in the commercial interest of the requestor). As discussed infra, because we find that the Appellants have not satisfied the public-interest prong, we need not discuss whether the disclosure of information at issue in this case satisfies the commercial interest prong of the fee waiver test.

2010). Nonetheless, because this is not a disputed issue in this case, we will not disturb EM's determination with regard to these issues. Consequently, we find that the Appellants have satisfied Factors A and B.

Factor C

Factor C requires that the requested documents contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter. Disclosure must contribute to the understanding of the public at large, as opposed to the understanding of the requester individually or of a narrow segment of interested persons. Schrecker v. Department of Justice, 970 F. Supp. 49, 50 (D.D.C. 1997). Thus, the requester must have the intention and ability to disseminate the requested information to the public. Roderick L. Ott, Case No. VFA-0288 (May 16, 1997) (Ott)[3]; see also Tod N. Rockefeller, Case No. VFA-0468 (January 21, 1999); James L. Schwab, 22 DOE ¶ 80,133 (1992).

In its submission, the Appellants assert that all documents obtained will be made part of a public record from which an interested party could obtain access. This type of passive distribution does not enable a sufficiently large segment of the public at large to receive and use such information. Consequently, the Appellants' proposed method of distribution would not enable the information in the requested documents to meaningfully contribute to the general public's understanding of the subject matter of the documents. See e.g., Van Fripp v. Parks, No. 97-0159, slip op. at 12 (D.D.C. Mar. 16, 2000) (placement of requested documents in a library does not establish entitlement to a fee waiver).[4] Based on the information provided to us, we find that the Appellants have not satisfied the requirements of Factor C.

Factor D

Under Factor D, the requested documents must contribute significantly to the public understanding of the operations and activities of the government. "To warrant a fee waiver or reduction of fees, the public's understanding of the subject matter in question, as compared to the level of public understanding existing prior to the disclosure, must be likely to be enhanced by the disclosure to a significant extent." Ott, slip op. at 5 (quoting 1995 Justice Department Guide to the Freedom of Information Act 381 (1995)).

In the present case, it is not readily apparent how the public's understanding of the activities or operations of the government will be significantly enhanced by the disclosure of the requested documents, which concern the identity of firms that have owned uranium at the Plant. The Appellants' explanation for seeking these documents relates to its desire to possibly recoup taxes owed by such firms to local government entities. Based on this information, we find that disclosure of the requested documents is unlikely to significantly contribute to the public's

[3] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

[4] We also find that the Appellants' other suggested means of distribution, distribution via unspecified civil litigation, suffers the same defect as its planned distribution via a public record and, further, is too speculative a method to support a waiver of fees.

understanding of federal government operations and activities. As a result, the Appellants' request for a fee waiver does not satisfy Factor D.

After considering each of the above factors, we have determined that, given the limited amount of information on the government's activities and operations contained in the requested documents, the failure of the Appellants to demonstrate that they would actively disseminate the information in the documents, and the unlikelihood of the documents contributing significantly to the public's understanding of government activities and operations, the public-interest prong of fee waiver test has not been satisfied. Because the public-interest prong of the FOIA fee waiver test is not met, we need not address the commercial-interest prong.

III. Conclusion

As the foregoing indicates, the Appellants have failed to adequately demonstrate that disclosure of the requested information is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 29, 2010, by the Pike County Auditor, the Pike County Commissioners, and the Scioto Valley Local School District, OHA Case No. TFA-0348, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Aurimas Svitojus
Date of Filing:	February 16, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0349

On February 16, 2010, Aurimas Svitojus filed an Appeal from a determination the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center in Albuquerque, New Mexico (NNSA/SC) issued on January 26, 2010. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from NNSA/SC a complete log of all reports still classified top secret that are in the repository of the Sandia National Laboratories (SNL) Technical Library's collection of classified material. Email from Aurimas Svitojus to Benito C. Jaramillo, NNSA/SC (November 16, 2009).[1] SNL is a government-owned facility managed by Sandia Corporation for DOE. Mr. Svitojus further stated in his request that, if SNL accounts for its top secret reports in an electronic database, he "would prefer a printout." Id. On January 26, 2010, NNSA/SC issued a determination to Mr. Svitojus stating that it located no documents responsive to the request. Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, Freedom of Information Act Officer, Office of Public Affairs, NNSA/SC, to Aurimas Svitojus (January 26, 2010). In his appeal, Mr. Svitojus does not directly challenge the adequacy of NNSA/SC's search for responsive documents, but we treat the appeal as such because there are no other possible grounds under the DOE FOIA regulations for appealing the determination in this case.[2]

II. Analysis

[1] Mr. Svitojus's November 18, 2009, request revised a request that he had submitted previously and that was still being processed. See Email from Aurimas Svitojus to NNSA/SC (September 18, 2009).

[2] See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(4) ("Although a determination that no such record is known to exist is not a denial, the requester will be informed that a challenge may be made to the adequacy of the search by appealing within 30 calendar days to the Office of Hearings and Appeals.").

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Natural Resources Defense Council, Case No. TFA-0127 (2005).[3] The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

We therefore contacted the manager of operations for SNL's Technical Library for information regarding the search that was performed in this case. He informed us that he interpreted Mr. Svitojus's request as being for a "bibliography" of all top secret documents within the Technical Library's database. Email from Donald W. Guy, Manager, Technical Library Operations, SNL, to Steve Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (February 24, 2010). He stated that the Technical Library had not taken steps to perform a search because the records in the library's catalog are for top secret > Sigma 14 documents which are not viewable even at the title-level, without being on the Sigma 14 authorization list and having approval from the Sandia Sigma Program Office. So, while a "keyword" search could be conducted against the database, to view and thus create a "log" of titles would need approval that is beyond the Library's scope of responsibility.

Id.

Because it appears that SNL performed no search in order to identify records responsive to Mr. Svitojus's request, we will remand this matter to NNSA/SC. On remand, NNSA/SC, or SNL on behalf of NNSA/SC, must perform a search for responsive records. NNSA/SC must then issue a determination either releasing those records to the Appellant, or explaining the basis for withholding, in whole or part, information under one or more FOIA exemptions.[4]

[4] In the course of our consideration of the present Appeal, SNL raised various issues pertaining to whether responsive records could, in fact, be provided to Mr. Svitojus. Among these issues is whether responsive records would be "readily reproducible" in the form that Mr. Svitojus has requested, and the possibility that the records would contain classified information. Email from Donald W. Guy, Manager, Technical Library Operations, SNL, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 24, 2010) (second email sent same day as email previously cited above); Email from Russell D. Elliot, Senior Attorney, Sandia Corporation, to Steve Goering, OHA (February 25, 2010). We acknowledge that, while Mr. Svitojus stated a preference that information from electronic records be provided to him in paper form, responsive records may not be readily reproducible in that format. If such is the case, and if the information is otherwise not exempt

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Aurimas Svitojus on February 16, 2010, Case No. TFA-0349, is hereby granted as specified in paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

from disclosure, we encourage NNSA/SC and Mr. Svitojus to communicate and work together to explore alternative formats in which NNSA/SC can more readily provide the responsive records. This type of cooperation assists the agency in fulfilling the intent of the FOIA to make agency records accessible to the public, and it increases administrative efficiency in handling these requests. INEEL Research Bureau, Case No. VFA-0373 (1998). As for any classified information contained in records responsive to the request, the FOIA clearly provides an exemption for information "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order; . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1) (FOIA Exemption 1).

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Ray W. Howe
Date of Filing:	February 16, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0350

On February 16, 2010, Ray W. Howe filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge). In that determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information that Mr. Howe filed under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. In his Appeal, Mr. Howe challenges the search that Oak Ridge conducted for documents responsive to his request. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying its withholding.

I. Background

On November 19, 2009, Oak Ridge received a request for information in which Mr. Howe sought copies of his medical, radiation exposure, personnel/employment, industrial hygiene, hearing tests/audiograms, beryllium and work history records. See Privacy Act Request from Ray W. Howe received by Oak Ridge on November 19, 2009 (PA Request). In a letter dated December 2, 2009, Oak Ridge informed Mr. Howe that it had transferred a portion of his request to the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) which currently has jurisdiction over records from the Y-12 National Security Complex. Oak Ridge began a search for the remaining records and located and released copies of Mr. Howe's radiation exposure records, beryllium records, and work history reports from the East Tennessee Technology Park (ETTP) (formerly K-25) and Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU). See Letter from Amy L. Rothrock, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge, to Ray Howe (January 22, 2010) (Determination Letter). However, they were unable to locate Mr. Howe's medical records. Id. Oak Ridge further stated that NNSA would respond separately to Mr. Howe regarding the results of their search. See id. On February 16, 2010, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Mr. Howe's Appeal in which he challenges the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search for his medical records. See Letter from Ray W. Howe to OHA (February 16, 2010) (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

The Privacy Act generally requires that each federal agency permit an individual to gain access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The Act defines a system of records as a "group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5).

The U.S. Department of Justice has issued guidance stating that an individual's access request for his own records maintained in a system of records should be processed under both the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), regardless of the statute(s) cited. U.S. Department of Justice, Privacy Act Overview, May 2004. DOE requires that a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches conducted under the FOIA. See, e.g., James R. Cromeenes, Case No. TFA-0345 (2010); Ronald D. Hall, Case No. TFA-0324 (2009); James C. Flynn, Case No. TFA-0322 (2009); Carla Mink, Case No. VFA-0763 (2002); see also, Steven A. Jarvis, Case No. VFA-0764 (2002).[*] Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge, we are guided by principles that we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). However, we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Cromeenes, Case No. TFA-0345 (2010) (quoting Robert Hale, Case No. VFA-0026 (1995)). Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of the search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. See, e.g., Information Focus on Energy, Case No. VFA- 0353 (1997), see also, Richard J. Levernier, Case No. VFA-0025 (1995).

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted Oak Ridge to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Avery Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to Amy L. Rothrock, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge (February 23, 2010). Oak Ridge informed us that it sent a request for documents to ETTP and ORAU for a search to be conducted for records responsive to Mr. Howe's request, including medical (which would include some hearing records and audiograms), radiation exposure, industrial hygiene, work history and beryllium records. See E-mail from Linda G. Chapman, Legal Assistant, Oak Ridge to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (February 23, 2010) (February E-mail). Both ETTP and ORAU conducted database searches using Mr. Howe's name and social security number. Id. As a result of its search, ETTP located and released Mr. Howe's radiation exposure records[†] and ORAU released his work history report, beryllium records, and radiation exposure records.[‡] Id. However, Mr. Howe argues that some of medical records were not found. Appeal at 1.

According to Oak Ridge records, Mr. Howe's files indicated that he worked at the K-25 worksite from June 12, 1977, until May 13, 1979. See February E-mail. Mr. Howe's records further indicate that he transferred to the Y-12 worksite on May 14, 1979, and remained employed there until March 4, 1991. Id. Oak Ridge has advised us that when employees transfer from one plant to another, their medical and personnel records transfer with them and remain at the last place of employment.[§] See March E-mail. Therefore, since Mr. Howe was last employed at the Y-12 worksite, any remaining records, if they exist, would be located there. Id.

As noted above, the Y-12 National Security Complex is under the jurisdiction of NNSA. There may be additional responsive material under the jurisdiction of NNSA, which is currently processing the request for documents responsive to Mr. Howe's request. See E-Mail from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, dated February 19, 2010. Once its search for responsive documents has been completed, NNSA will issue a new determination letter to Mr. Howe. If Mr. Howe is unsatisfied with the determination that he receives from NNSA, he may appeal that determination to OHA pursuant to the guidelines set forth in 10 C.F.R. § 1008.11.

After reviewing the record in this case, we find that Oak Ridge performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to Mr. Howe's request. Accordingly, Mr. Howe's Appeal should be denied.

[‡] Pursuant to a contract with DOE, ORAU maintains a database of work history data for current and former contractor employees, provides management and operational support for DOE's Radiation Exposure Monitoring System (which is used to collect and analyze radiation exposure information for all DOE employees, contractors and visitors) and operates DOE's beryllium workers medical screening program. See March E-mail. For these reasons, ORAU was able to locate and release copies of Mr. Howe's work history report, beryllium records, and radiation exposure records.

[§] There are numerous types of medical information that is maintained in an employee's medical file, such as hearing records and audiograms, physicals, eye exams, visits to the dispensary, x-ray reports, lab and blood work results, EKG's and incident and accident reports. See March E-mail.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mr. Ray W. Howe on February 16, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0350, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(5).

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: American Small Business League

Date of Filing: March 2, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0352

On March 2, 2010, the American Small Business League (ASBL) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on February 1, 2010, by the Department of Energy (DOE) Naval Reactors Laboratory Field Office in response to a request for documents that ASBL submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the DOE Naval Reactors Laboratory Field Office release any responsive material to ASBL.

I. Background

On January 12, 2010, ASBL submitted a request for information pursuant to the FOIA to the Naval Reactors Laboratory Field Office (Naval Reactors). ASBL requested a copy of the "Individual Subcontracting Report (ISR/SF 294) and the Summary Subcontracting Report (SSR/SF 295) for the contract with PIID DEAC1198PN38206 to Bechtel Bettis Incorporated, DUNS 054319681." See Letter from Naval Reactors to ASBL (February 1, 2010) (Determination Letter). Naval Reactors sent ASBL a copy of the most recent individual and summary subcontracting reports for DOE Contract DE-AC11-98-PN-38206 with Bechtel Bettis, Inc. However, Naval Reactors withheld the identifying information of contractor employees under FOIA Exemption 6. ASBL then appealed the Determination and requested that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) order Naval Reactors to release the redacted information. According to ASBL, "[i]nformation related to government contracts, including information provided in the ISR's and SSR's is part of the public realm, and clearly does not fall within the scope of personal privacy." See Letter from ASBL to Director, OHA (February 18, 2010). If this Appeal were granted, Naval Reactors would be required to release the redacted contractor employee information to ASBL.

II. Analysis

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Further, the term "similar files" has been interpreted broadly by the Supreme Court to include all information that "applies to a particular individual." Id. at 602.

This office has used the following three-step test to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6: 1) whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by disclosure of the information; 2) whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations or activities of the government; and 3) whether in balancing the private interest against the public interest, disclosure would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy. See Power Wire Constructors, OHA Case No. TFA-0297 (2009); MGT Technical Consulting, OHA Case No. TFA-0199 (2007).[1]

Naval Reactors stated that, in invoking Exemption 6, it considered that the privacy interests of individuals, including the contractor employees in this case, must be balanced against the public interest in release of that information. It further concluded that release of this information would shed no light on the operations or activities of DOE. Thus, Naval Reactors determined that under this balancing test, it was proper to redact the identifying information about contractor employees under Exemption 6. See Determination at 2.

A. Privacy Interest

In invoking Exemption 6, Naval Reactors determined that the release of a contractor employee's personal identifiers is a serious invasion of that individual's privacy. We agree that there was a substantial privacy interest in the identity of private citizens due to the potential for harassment or any other unwanted contact. See Sheet Metal Workers v. Dep't. of Veterans Affairs, 135 F.3d 891 (3d Cir. 1998) (stating that the disclosure of names or other identifying information of contractor employees would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy); Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n, Local No. 9 vs. U.S. Air Force, 63 F.3d 994, 998 (10th Cir. 1995) (stating that employees of private contractors performing federal construction projects have a substantial privacy interest in personal information); Painting and Drywall Work Preservation Fund v. HUD, 936 F.2d 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (the release of contractor employee names and addresses would constitute a substantial invasion of privacy). Naval Reactors explained that private citizens have a privacy interest that is protectable even in the context of a business record, such as a contract.

B. Public Interest

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure of the information. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties." Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989). The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. See MGT Technical Consulting, OHA Case No. TFA-0199 (2007). We find that there is a minimal public interest in release of the redacted information. Further, ASBL has not demonstrated how the release of the names and contact information of contractor employees will either shed light on how DOE performs its duties or contribute to the public's understanding of government activities. Therefore, we agree with Naval Reactors and find that there is a minimal public interest in the disclosure of the redacted information.

C. Balancing Test

We have weighed the substantial privacy interest of the contractor employees that would be infringed by disclosure of personal information against the minimal public interest in the release of the personal information. Under the balancing test used by the courts, we conclude that the public interest in the disclosure of the contractor employee information is outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the contractor employees.

We find that Naval Reactors properly redacted the contractor employee personal identifiers under FOIA Exemption 6. As stated above, release of that information would reveal personal information about the contractor employees and could subject them to unwarranted invasions of their personal privacy. We further find that release of this information is of minimal public interest and is clearly outweighed by the privacy interest of the workers. Disclosure would not shed light on the operations of the government. Thus, we agree with Naval Reactors that the contractor employee identification information was properly withheld under Exemption 6. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by American Small Business League on March 2, 1010, OHA Case Number TFA-0352, is hereby denied.

in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Ken Hasten

Date of Filing: February 23, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0353

On February 23, 2010, Ken Hasten (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, OIG released a redacted version of a document to the Appellant. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the document in its entirety.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In his request (Request), the Appellant requested a copy of the OIG report prepared in response to OIG hotline complaint number P09HL079.[1] In its January 20, 2010, response (Response), the OIG stated that it had located one responsive document to the Request, a two-page Executive Brief Report (Report). The Report summarized the findings of an OIG investigation made pursuant to the hotline complaint. The OIG provided the Appellant with a copy of the Report but withheld portions of the Report pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) of the FOIA.[2] The Response stated that the information withheld in the Report consisted of names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of individuals named in the OIG Report. The Response went on to state that such individuals are entitled to privacy protection to prevent them from being subject to harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions.

[1] The hotline complaint was submitted by the Appellant regarding an allegation of misuse of authority involving work performed for a DOE official by subcontractor employees at the DOE's Waste Isolation Pilot Plant outside of Carlsbad, New Mexico.

[2] The provisions of Exemptions 6 and 7(C) allowing an agency to withhold information are discussed in more detail infra.

The Appellant appeals the OIG's withholding of information in the Report. Specifically, he argues that sections of the Report that were withheld must contain information other than the names of individuals and that this type of information may not be withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C).

II. Analysis

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, if release of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

As an initial matter, we find the Appellant's argument unavailing. All information that could identify individuals, not just specific names, may be withheld under Exemption 6 and 7(C). See, e.g., Yelder v. Department of Defense, 577 F. Supp. 2d 342, 346 (D.D.C. 2008) (noting that information such as names, addresses, and other personally identifying information creates a palpable threat to privacy and, as such, may be protected by Exemption 6); Nation Magazine v. U.S. Customs Serv., 71 F.3d 885, 896 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (those portions of records in investigatory files which would identify subjects, witnesses, and informants in law enforcement investigations are categorically exempt under Exemption 7(C)). Nonetheless, we examined an unredacted version of the Report to evaluate the propriety of the claimed withholdings under Exemption 6 and 7(C). The portions of the Report that were withheld consisted of the name and job title of the accused official and the names and titles of those employees who were interviewed about the allegations. Also withheld were specific descriptions of the some of the performed work referenced in the Report.

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to either of the exemptions. Ripskis v. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

Exemption 7(C) applies to a much narrower class of cases than Exemption 6, but it has a less exacting standard that provides more expansive coverage. Both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) require a balancing of the interest in personal privacy in the withheld information against the public interest in the same information. There are, however, two significant differences between Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Pursuant to Exemption 7(C), the information must have been compiled for law enforcement purposes. Furthermore, since Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold information where there is only a reasonable expectation of an "unwarranted invasion of personal privacy," Exemption 7(C) has a lower threshold of privacy interest than Exemption 6 where the balancing test calls for a "clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy." Pursuant to the provisions of Exemption 7(C), we have examined investigations conducted by the OIG in response to complaints by individuals, as in this case, and found that they are law enforcement activities. See, e.g., Cynthia Frey Nordstrom, Case No. VFA-0754 (July 9, 2002).[3] Since the Report at issue in this case meets the Exemption 7(C)'s threshold test, we need only examine the OIG's actions pursuant to the standard of Exemption 7(C), i.e., whether release of the withheld material would result in a reasonable expectation of an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See, e.g., J. G. Truher, Case No. VFA-0245 (January 15, 1997).

To evaluate the propriety of OIG's withholding of information in the Report, we first must determine if the release of the information withheld under Exemption 7 (C) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. It is widely recognized that the mention of an individual's name in a law enforcement file will engender comment and speculation and carries a stigmatizing connotation. See, e.g., Fitzgibbon v. CIA, 911 F.2d 755, 767 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (quoting Branch v. FBI, 658 F. Supp. 204, 209 (D.D.C. 1987)). Thus, there is a very strong privacy interest with regard to the identity of individuals named in the Report. With regard to the withheld description of the performed work, its very nature would identify the individual accused of wrongdoing. Thus, we find there is a strong privacy interest in the withheld description of the performed work.

Against the strong privacy interest in the withheld material we must weigh the public interest. As discussed earlier, the public interest that must be considered is whether information would shed light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. There is little or no public interest in the identity of individual names in a law enforcement file since this information would reveal nothing about the activity of the OIG in performing its law enforcements duties. Likewise, the details of the performed work would reveal little, if anything, concerning the OIG's performance of its duties. Given the strong privacy interests connected with the withheld information and the little, if any, public interest that would be furthered by release of the withheld information, we find that release of the withheld information would reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Therefore, we also find that Exemption 7(C) was properly applied to the withheld information.[4]

III. Conclusion

We find that OIG properly redacted the withheld information in the Report. Consequently, the Appellant's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ken Hasten on February 23, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0353, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Competitive Enterprise Institute
Date of Filing:	February 25, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0354

On February 25, 2010, the Competitive Enterprise Institute (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Golden Field Office (GFO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, GFO released large number of documents to the Appellant. In some of the documents, information was redacted. Other documents were withheld in their entirety. This Appeal, if granted, would require the GFO to release the documents in their entirety and to conduct an additional search for responsive documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

In its request (Request), the Appellant sought, in essence, copies of all documents, analyses, and communications relating to a report issued by the DOE's National Renewable Energy Laboratory's (NREL) entitled "NREL Response to the Report Study of the Effects on Employment of Public Aid to Renewable Energy Sources by King Juan Carlos University (Spain)" (Report). [1]

In its January 25, 2010, response (Response), the GFO stated that it had located 247 electronic mail documents (E-mails) plus 12 other documents. GFO provided the Appellant with copies of

[1] The Report, an NREL White Paper, was authored by Eric Lantz and Suzanne Tegen and was electronically published on August 28, 2009. The Report challenges conclusions made by a King Juan Carlos University study which found, on average, that every renewable energy job in Spain "destroyed" 2.2 jobs in the broader Spanish economy. Report at 1.

the identified E-mails. However, portions of a number of the E-mails were withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 of the FOIA.[2] Of the 12 identified documents, GFO released two. Nine of the documents, all draft versions of the Report, were withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 5. One document was provided to the Appellant with non-responsive material withheld.[3] GFO asserted in its Response that release of the predecisional, deliberative material withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 would have a chilling effect on DOE's ability to address similar matters in the future.

In its Appeal, the Appellant challenges the adequacy of the search that was conducted for responsive documents. Specifically, it cites of number of E-mails which in their text suggest the existence of other responsive documents which were not provided to it. Further, it challenges the application of Exemption 5 to the redacted E-mails and draft documents. The Appellant claims that GFO has failed to identify the deliberative process to which the withheld documents relate. It also asserts in its Appeal that the Report and all of the communications related to the Report are post-deliberative documents. The Appeal asserts that the Report itself is an explanation and defense of an already established policy by the DOE to promote "green" jobs and that these jobs will increase the economy. FOIA Appeal at 13. As such, the Appellant argues, these documents can not be considered predecisional, deliberative documents. Additionally, the Appellant alleges that GFO failed to explain in its Response how decision making would be harmed by release of the withheld information.[4]

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010).[5]

[2] The Response also stated that portions of the E-mails were withheld because they were non-responsive to the Appellant's Request or were protected pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. The Appellant has not challenged the propriety of the material withheld under Exemption 6 or because it was non-responsive.

[3] The Response noted that of the 556 pages of documents found responsive to the Request, 84 pages were withheld in their entirety and 119 pages were partially redacted. The remainder of the 556 pages was provided to the Appellant in their entirety.

[4] GFO filed a response to the Appellant's Appeal (Appeal Response) on March 16, 2010. We will discuss the Appeal response infra at 3.

In its Appeal Response, GFO has informed us that it has uncovered several additional responsive E-mails and draft versions of the Report which were not initially provided to the Appellant or were withheld in their entirety. Specifically, two draft versions of the Report which have been previously provided to the public will be provided in their entirety to the Appellant.[6] Additionally, GFO will also provide, in their entirety, E-mails containing comments on the draft Report from two external reviewers – James Heinz of the Political Economy Research Institute and the American Wind Energy Association (AWEA). GFO will also release the attachments (not previously identified) from a May 19, 2009, E-mail (sent 8:41 PM) from Salerno to Tegen, Subject "RE: Spanish job report." [7]

Additionally, GFO located another set of documents attached to a May 19, 2009, E-mail (sent at 3:17 PM). These attachments, consisting of a GAO Report and other documents, will also be provided to the Appellant. GFO also located two additional undisclosed May 19, 2009, E-mails (sent at 3:39 PM and 11:08 PM) which will also be provided to the Appellant in their entirety.[8] The documents and E-mails that GFO will be providing the Appellant are listed in Appendix A.[9]

Given the additional documents that GFO has discovered, as well as GFO's decision to release two withheld drafts of the Report, we will remand this matter to GFO so that it may issue a new determination regarding these documents. Upon receipt and review of these additional documents, Appellant may then, if it wishes, seek OHA review of the adequacy of GFO's search for responsive documents.

[6] One of these draft versions, "Comments on Spanish Report_DKGMSTEL_AMG.docx" was identified in GFO's Response and was withheld in its entirety. The other draft version of the Report that GFO will release is entitled "Comments on Spanish Report_DKGMSTEL_J1.docx."

[7] These attachments are: (1) Spanish Jobs Study Coverage.doc; (2) 090410 – Spanish Jobs Study – GWEA.doc; (3) 090410 Spanish Jobs Study.doc; (4) Letter to NYT.doc; (5) Spanish jobs study draft letter to ed.doc.

[8] GFO reviewed its search for responsive documents examining the E-mails Appellant cited in its Appeal as those which suggested the existence of additional responsive documents. As indicated above, GFO did find additional documents suggested by the cited E-mails. In a number of cases, however, no additional documents were found. On remand, GFO may wish to consider providing the Appellant with a summary of its findings regarding the E-mails cited by the Appellant in its Appeal.

[9] GFO has also identified additional documents consisting of additional draft versions of the Report which will be discussed infra.

B. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath) (emphasis supplied).

The Exemption 5 privilege cited by GFO, an element of the DOE, in its determination regarding the Memorandum was the deliberative process privilege. Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). This deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id.

1. E-mails

We have listed in Appendix B all of the E-mails that GFO identified in its Response which had information redacted pursuant to Exemption 5. Our review of the unredacted versions of all of the E-mails in Appendix B reveals that the withheld material consisted of comments, suggestions for analysis, and editorial reviews of various draft versions of the Report. As such, this material is both predecisional and deliberative. The withheld text is predecisional since these E-mail comments were created before the publication of the final version of the Report. Further, this information is deliberative since it consists of suggestions and proposed analysis for the final version of the Report. Given this, we find that this material is protected under the deliberative process privilege of Exemption 5.

We reach this conclusion in spite of the Appellant's arguments to the contrary. While GFO's response did not specifically identify the deliberative process the withheld information related to, it is apparent from the released text of the E-mails that the deliberative process at issue relates to what should be the final content and analysis to appear in the final version of the Report. Further, we decline to accept the Appellant's characterization of the Report and all related communications as "post-decisional" documents. The fact that a document may address a settled policy issue does not mean that there are no predecisional, deliberative issues to be considered, such as to the document's tone and analytic content.

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should nonetheless release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. GFO concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the requested information would have a chilling effect on the DOE's ability to consider similar issues in the future. Public revelation of preliminary employee deliberations regarding controversial issues could reduce the willingness of federal employees to make candid assessments and recommendations. Therefore, release of the withheld Exemption 5 information in the text of the E-mail messages listed in Appendix B would not be in the public interest.

2. Draft Versions of the Report

GFO's Response identified 9 responsive draft versions of the Report which were withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 5.[10] However, Appellant was not informed about a number of other draft versions of the Report which were attached to the E-mails identified in GFO's Response. GFO has provided us a list containing all of the unreleased draft versions of the Report and their associated E-mails.[11] We have listed these drafts (and their associated E-mails) in Appendix C. GFO argues that the draft documents listed in Appendix C should be protected in their entirety by Exemption 5. Our usual practice in such cases would be to remand the case to GFO to issue a new determination letter regarding these newly disclosed draft documents. However, because the Appellant has submitted an extensive Appeal addressing the inapplicability of Exemption 5 to similar documents, we will, for purposes of administrative efficiency, review the applicability of Exemption 5 for all of the draft documents listed in Appendix C.

For our review of this case, we have obtained unredacted versions of all of the draft documents listed in Appendix C. While draft documents are typically the kind of documents protected under the deliberative process privilege, the designation of "draft" does not end the inquiry as to whether Exemption 5 is applicable to such documents. Arthur Anderson & Co. v. Internal Revenue Service, 679 F. 2d 254, 257 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (Arthur Anderson).

[10] As mentioned above, one of these identified drafts, a draft version of the Report with comments from a particular reviewer, Comments on Spanish Report_DKGMSTEL_AMG.docx, will be provided in its entirety to the Appellant. See Appendix A. Additionally, another draft version of the Report that was not initially identified in GFO's Response, entitled "Comments on Spanish Report_DKGMSTEL_J1.docx," will also be released to the Appellant.

[11] The E-mails themselves were listed in GFO's Response and have been provided to the Appellant in their entirety or in redacted form.

Each of these drafts was created before the issuance of the final version of the Report. Further, a final version of the Report was published. Consequently, these drafts are predecisional documents.

In reviewing any document, including those marked "draft," for which the protection of the deliberative process privilege and Exemption 5 is sought, we must ascertain "whether the document is deliberative in nature." Arthur Anderson, 679 F. 2d. at 258. The E-mails attached to each of these drafts either ask for reviewer comments on the attached draft or contain a draft version with reviewer comments. As such, this provides significant evidence that the drafts themselves were part of a collaborative, deliberative review process to produce the final version of the Report. Disclosure of any of the drafts themselves would reveal the thoughts and analyses of the reviewers and authors at a particular date of the drafting process. Given the role the drafts played in the process to create the final version of the Report, we find that each of the draft documents in Appendix C is inherently deliberative. See Skull Valley Band of Goshute Indians v. Kempthorne, No. 04-339, 2007 WL 915211, at *14 (D.D.C. Mar. 26, 2007) (Court noting that "the drafting process is itself deliberative in nature").

Because we find that all of the draft documents listed in Appendix C are predecisional and deliberative, each of these documents is properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 5. See Public Employees of Environmental Responsibilities v. Bloch, 532 F. Supp. 2d 19, 22 (D.D.C. 2008) (Court finding that draft "position description" found properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 and deliberative process privilege).[12]

We also find that there is reasonably foreseeable harm that would result from discretionary release of the draft Report documents in Appendix C. Federal employees at NREL and GFO could be inhibited from making candid analysis, assessments and reviews of NREL publications and reports if they knew that their comments could be publically revealed. See Russell v. Department of Air Force, 682 F. 2d. 1045 at 1048 (D.C. Cir 1982) ("failure to apply the protections of [Exemption 5] to the . . . editorial review process would effectively make such discussions impossible"). Given this harm, we do not find that release of the documents listed in Appendix C would be in the public interest.[13]

[12] The Appellant in its Appeal challenged the applicability of Exemption 5 to documents which have been shared with entities outside of the federal government. The Appellant cites a number of the E-mails which indicate that information and perhaps attached documents have been shared with non-governmental groups. However, this argument is now moot since GFO is releasing in their entirety the two withheld documents that were either shared with or originated from non-governmental entities. See Appendix A, Item Nos. 3 and 4.

[13] The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). We find that GFO complied with the FOIA's segregability requirement by releasing to the Appellant all portions of the E-mails not withholdable under Exemptions 5 and 6. With regard to the draft versions of the Report, we find there are no segregable portions that can be released to the Appellant. What factual material contained in the drafts is inextricably intertwined with the predecisonal deliberative material contained in the draft versions of the Report. See generally, Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of Air Force, 566 F. 2d 242, 260 (D.C. Cir 1977).

III. Conclusion

Because GFO has located additional responsive documents as listed in Appendix A, we will remand this mater to GFO so that it may issue a new determination regarding these documents. However, with regard to the E-mails in Appendix B and the draft versions of the Report listed in Appendix C, we find that GFO properly redacted the information withheld in those documents. Consequently, the Appeal should be granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Competitive Enterprise Institute on February 25, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0354, is hereby granted in part as indicated in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Golden Field Office in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Natural Resources Defense Council

Date of Filing: March 2, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0355

On March 2, 2010, Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Loan Programs Office (LPO). In that determination, LPO responded to a request for information that NRDC filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require LPO to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On October 2, 2009, NRDC submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA Officer at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), for "all records in the possession or control of the DOE regarding the following categories of information about the coal-to-liquid facility proposed for Wellsville, Ohio by Baard Energy, also known as Ohio River Clean Fuels, LLC (the "Baard Energy CTL Facility") created, stored, or received after March 17, 2009." See Freedom of Information Act Request Regarding the Proposed Baard Energy/Ohio River Clean Fuels Coal-to-Liquid Facility in Wellsville, Ohio, from NRDC (October 2, 2009) (FOIA Request). In its FOIA Request, NRDC specified the records that it sought should relate to the following four categories of information:

1) Any application by Baard Energy for DOE loan guarantees or other DOE assistance programs;
2) Any evaluation by DOE of the Facility as a possible recipient of DOE loan guarantees or other DOE assistance programs;
3) Any communications between Baard Energy and DOE regarding possible DOE loan guarantees or DOE assistance for the Facility; and
4) Any communication between the Ohio Department of Development, the Ohio Air Quality Development Authority, or the Columbiana County Port Authority and the DOE regarding possible DOE loan guarantees or DOE assistance for the Facility.

FOIA Request at 1-2.

DOE/FOIA forwarded the request to the Office of the Chief Financial Officer (OCFO) because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.[1] See

[1] In November 2009, the Loan Guarantee Program Office was removed from the auspices of the OCFO and reorganized

Letter from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE/FOIA, to Joshua Berman, Attorney, NRDC (October 8, 2009).

LPO conducted a search of its records but was unable to locate documents responsive to NRDC's FOIA Request. See Letter from Jonathan Silver, Executive Director, LPO, to Joshua Berman, Attorney, NRDC (February 5, 2010) (Determination Letter). On March 2, 2010, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received NRDC's Appeal in which it requested an additional search for records responsive to its request. See Letter from Joshua Berman to OHA (Appeal Letter). In its Appeal, NRDC argues that "DOE's February 12, 2009 No Records response letter fails to demonstrate that an adequate search was conducted." Appeal Letter at 4. NRDC further argues that "[t]he final response letter both mischaracterizes the records requested in NRDC's original October 2 FOIA request and omits mention of significant categories of information that NRDC requested." Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[2]

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted LPO to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to Jonathan Silver, Executive Director, LPO (March 4, 2010). LPO informed us that it conducted a thorough search of its electronic records database, eDoc,[3] but was unable to locate documents responsive to NRDC's FOIA Request. See March 8 E-mail; see also E-mail from Wendy Pullium, Senior Consultant, eGlobal Tech, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, (March 26, 2010). LPO further informed us that it sent an e-mail to LPO employees requesting that each employee conduct a search of their paper and electronic records for documents responsive to NRDC's FOIA Request. See March 8 E-mail. This search also failed to produce any responsive documents. Furthermore, according to LPO records, LPO never established contact with the Office of Fossil Energy (FE) as the Loan Programs Office under the Office of the Secretary. On December 9, 2009, the LPO received and began processing the NRDC's October 2009 FOIA Request.

[2] OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

[3] eDoc is LPO's electronic document management system whereby LPO applicants submit their applications. E-mail from Wendy Pulliam, eGlobal Tech, LPO, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (March 8, 2010) (March 8 E-mail). eDoc also contains correspondence submitted within and outside of the LPO and supporting application documents. E-mail from Wendy Pulliam, eGlobal Tech, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (March 25, 2010).

regarding the 2008 Baard Application. See March 8 E-mail. Thus, responsive records are not likely located within FE.

Finally, NRDC argues that the LPO's Determination Letter both mischaracterizes the records requested and omits mention of significant categories of information. Appeal Letter at 4. LPO informed us that, by e-mail dated December 4, 2009, it informed its employees that a second FOIA Request was received from NRDC and specifically addressed the four categories of information that NRDC sought in its FOIA Request. See E-mail from Wendy Pullium, Senior Consultant, eGlobal Tech, to Loan Program Office Group, dated December 4, 2009 (December E-mail). While LPO admits that it misquoted and omitted pertinent language in its Final Determination Letter, a review of LPO's December E-mail revealed that LPO correctly stated each of the four categories that NRDC outlined in its FOIA Request. Id. Thus, in conducting their searches, LPO employees were aware of the specific information that NRDC sought in its FOIA Request and performed appropriate searches. Therefore, we find that the NRDC was not prejudiced by the misquoting of dates and omission of specific categories of information in the LPO's final response to NRDC.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that LPO performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to NRDC's request.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Natural Resources Defense Council on March 2, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0355, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Terry Apodaca
Date of Filing:	March 4, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0356

On March 4, 2010, Terry Apodaca (Appellant) filed an appeal from a determination issued to her by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (SC) regarding her request for documents that she submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the Appellant's FOIA Request, SC provided the Appellant with a number of documents, of which two had information withheld pursuant to the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require that SC release the information withheld in the two documents as well as conduct an additional search for responsive documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under Department of Energy (DOE) regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On September 23, 2009, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request (Request) asking for various categories of documents:

1. Documents in the possession of NNSA Office of Public Affairs (OPA) pertaining to the Appellant's previous FOIA requests for Fiscal Year (FY) 2006 performance award amounts;
2. Documents in the possession of OHA regarding the Appellant's requests for FY 2006 OPA employee performance award amounts and the Appellant's unsuccessful Appeal regarding her FOIA request for those documents;
3. Documents relating to the notification of individuals affected by a release of privacy information by a named employee (Employee 1);
4. Documents relating to any personnel actions taken against Employee 1;
5. Documents in the possession of two named employees (Employee 2 and Employee 3) relating to their notification of Employee 1's release of privacy information;

6. Documents concerning the effect on an OPA employee's performance evaluations resulting from release of personal information by that employee;
7. Documents relating to FY 2007 and FY 2008 performance award amounts for each OPA employee;
8. Documents in the possession of SC's Office of Chief Counsel (OCC) regarding Employee 1's release of privacy information;
9. Documents in the possession of DOE Headquarters' "FOIA Office" regarding Employee 1's release of privacy information;
10. Documents in the possession of NNSA's Office of General Counsel in the District of Columbia regarding Employee 1's release of privacy information;
11. Documents in the possession of the DOE's Office of the Inspector General (in its District of Columbia or Albuquerque, New Mexico offices) regarding SC's improper releases of privacy information from 2004 to the present.

Electronic Mail from Terry Apodaca to William Schwartz, OHA Attorney-Examiner (March 3, 2010) (Appeal).

In its February 2, 2010, final response to the Appellant's Request (Response), SC stated that it could find no documents responsive to Category Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8 and 10. [1] With regard to Category No. 4, SC provided a copy of a November 5, 2009, memorandum (Memorandum) regarding an alleged release of privacy information. Portions of the Memorandum were withheld pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6. The Response stated that the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 consisted of information related to recommendations regarding improvements to internal controls and measures to prevent the release of privacy information. The Response noted that this material was withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege applicable to Exemption 5. SC stated in the Response that release of the Exemption 5 information would compromise the deliberative process by which decisions are made at SC. The information withheld in the Memorandum pursuant to Exemption 6 consisted of the name and position of the author of the Memorandum. In response to Category No. 7, SC provided the Appellant with one redacted document (List) which indicated OPA employee performance award amounts for FY 2007 and FY 2008. The Response stated that this information was withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. The Response also stated that all of the material withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 in the Memorandum and the List was withheld to protect the employees from a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy. SC noted, in the Response, that release of the Exemption 6 withheld information might subject the employees referenced in the material to embarrassment or harassment.

In her Appeal, the Appellant challenges, without providing specific grounds, the adequacy of the search that was conducted for documents responsive to Categories 3, 5, 6, 8, and 10. The Appellant also challenges the withholding of information in the Memorandum since she alleges that the document itself was prepared as a direct result of the Appellant's complaint to the Office of the Inspector General concerning SC's "inability to protect and control personal information." Appeal at 1. The Appellant also challenges the withholding of the information in the List because she asserts that she has already been provided the FY 2006 information by the SC.

II. Analysis

1. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimus Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010).

We contacted an official at SC to determine the extent of the search that was conducted for documents responsive to Category Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8 and 10. We were informed that the search for responsive documents pursuant to Category Nos. 3, 5 and 6 were conducted by the Manager of OPA (Manager). The Manager knew from personal knowledge that there were no responsive documents with regard to Category No. 3 since she knew all notifications had been made verbally. With regard to documents responsive to Category No. 5, the Manager had personal knowledge that all notifications were accomplished verbally. For both Category Nos. 3 and 5, there was no expectation that any written notifications existed. With regard to Category No. 6, the Manager searched the OPA employee performance plan files to see if responsive documents existed regarding the effect of an improper release of privacy information on an employee's performance evaluation. No responsive documents were located. Further, employee performance files at the NNSA Office of Capital Management Services' Performance Management and Employee Relations Department were searched for documents responsive to Category No. 6. No such documents were located. See Electronic mail from Chris Hamblen, Office of Public Affairs, SC, to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner (March 11, 2010).

Documents responsive to Category No. 8 most likely existed at SC's Office of Chief Counsel (OCC). An official at OCC was asked to conduct a search for responsive documents. The OCC official knew that no such documents existed at OCC and that if such documents existed, she would be the official to maintain such documents. Consequently, the official had no reason to expect that such documents relating to Employee 1's release of privacy information existed. With regard to documents responsive to Category No. 10, a search at the NNSA's Office of General Counsel (NNSA/GC) was performed by a NNSA/GC attorney. The attorney sent an electronic mail to all NNSA/GC attorneys and staff asking that each search for documents responsive to Category No. 10. Additionally, the attorney sent the E-mail to all former NNSA/GC attorneys who now worked at the Department of Energy's Office of General Counsel. No responsive documents were found.

Our review of the search for documents responsive to Categories Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8 and 10 indicates that SC made a search for each category of documents that was reasonably calculated to uncover relevant documents. In each case, SC had a search made of the offices most likely to possess responsive documents. Officials who were most likely to possess information as to where relevant documents existed were consulted in the search effort. Given the information provided to us, we find that SC conducted an adequate search for responsive documents for Category Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8 and 10.

2. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Department of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath) (emphasis supplied).

The Exemption 5 privilege cited by SC, an element of a government agency, in its determination regarding the Memorandum was the deliberative process privilege. Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). This deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id.

We have reviewed an unredacted copy of the Memorandum. The Memorandum is a report from an NNSA official to the Acting Director of the NNSA's Office of Internal Controls regarding an alleged inappropriate release by SC of privacy information.[2] The portion of the document that was withheld under Exemption 5 consists of the official's specific recommendations as to how to improve internal controls and prevent the improper release of privacy information. It is apparent from the context of the Exemption 5 withheld material that the material reflects the opinion of the author and is predecisional and deliberative in nature. As such, we find that SC properly withheld the Exemption 5 material in the Memorandum pursuant to the deliberative process privilege.

Appellant's argument that Exemption 5 protection in the Memorandum is lost because her complaint allegedly initiated the creation of the Memorandum is unavailing. As discussed above, the Exemption 5 withheld material meets all of the legal criteria for protection under the deliberative process privilege and Exemption 5. The fact that a document may have been created at the behest of a particular individual is irrelevant to the question of whether Exemption 5 may be properly employed to prevent release of the document.

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should nonetheless release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. SC concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the requested information would cause harm to SC's decision-making process. Public revelation of preliminary employee deliberations regarding issues could reduce the willingness of federal employees to make candid assessments and recommendations. Therefore, release of the withheld Exemption 5 information in the Memorandum would not be in the public interest.

3. Exemption 6

The name and job title of the author of the Memorandum was withheld by SC pursuant to Exemption 6. Additionally, the specific amount of the performance awards paid in FY 2007 and 2008 to each of the employees named in the List were also withheld under Exemption 6. The Appellant challenges the propriety of this deletion.

[2] The release of privacy information occurred during the process of providing a response to another FOIA request made by the Appellant.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. National Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (NARFE). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally NARFE, 879 F.2d at 874.

With regard to the Memorandum, the withheld information under Exemption 6 consists of the name and job title of the author of the memorandum. In addition to his findings as to his investigation of the incident which resulted in the release of privacy information, the Memorandum contains his specific recommendations as to how to improve internal controls and to reduce the chance of a future release of privacy information. We do not find any significant privacy interest exposed by the release of the identity of the Memorandum's author. Because the author was performing his or her official duties, no specific harm or embarrassment would result from release of the author's name and job title in the context of his or her being the originator of the recommendations contained in the Memorandum.[3] Because there is no privacy interest connected with release of the author's name and job title, this information may not be protected pursuant to Exemption 6. See NARFE, 879 F. 2d at 874. Consequently, we find that Exemption 6 was not properly applied to withhold the name and job title of the author of the Memorandum. On remand, SC should either release the name and job title of the author of the Memorandum or issue another determination citing another FOIA exemption upon which the information is to be withheld.

With regard to the amounts of individual OPA employee performance awards that were withheld in the List pursuant to Exemption 6, we find that there is a significant privacy interest. See, e.g., Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0204 (July 25, 2007) (Apodaca); Robert J. Ylimaki, Case No. TFA-0651 (Mar. 23, 2001).[4] In Apodaca, we found that the embarrassment and jealousy caused by disclosing

[3] In this regard, the specific recommendations themselves are protected from disclosure by Exemption 5.

[4] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

an award recipient's name and the amount of the award may have a "deleterious effect [] . . . on employee morale and workplace efficiency." Apodaca, slip op. at 3. On the other hand, release of the performance awards would further the public interest to some extent by shedding light on the way in which the government evaluates its employees. Apodaca, slip op. at 3. We believe that this interest is outweighed, though, by the deleterious effects that disclosure could have on employee morale and workplace efficiency. Consequently, we find that release of the bonus amounts would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy and that SC properly withheld this information under Exemption 6.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that SC conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to the Appellant's Request. We also find that SC properly withheld information pursuant to Exemption 5 in the Memorandum and Exemption 6 in the List. However, we will remand this matter to SC to either release the name and job title of the author of the Memorandum or to issue another determination citing a FOIA exemption other than Exemption 6 to justify the continued withholding of this information.[5]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Terry Apodaca, OHA Case Number TFA-0356, is hereby granted in part as indicated in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

[5] The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). We find that SC complied with the FOIA's segregability requirement by releasing to the Appellant all portions of the Memorandum and List not withholdable under Exemptions 5 and 6, with the possible exception of the name and job title of the author of the Memorandum. As indicated above, we have directed SC to again review the releasibility of that information.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: Ken Olsen

Filing Date: March 12, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0358

This Decision concerns an Appeal from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) issued to Ken Olsen on February 17, 2010, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In that determination, the BPA disclosed some information and withheld other information under FOIA Exemption 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require the BPA to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying its withholding. It would also require the BPA to reconsider its application of Exemption 6 and either (i) adequately justify its withholding or (ii) not withhold the information under Exemption 6.

I. Background

Mr. Olsen filed a FOIA request with the BPA for documents regarding its communications about salmon restoration on the Columbia and Snake rivers and its expenses from related lobbying and public relations. Request Letter at 1-2.

The BPA issued Mr. Olsen a determination letter and in it disclosed responsive documents. Determination Letter at 1. It also invoked FOIA Exemption 6 to withhold "personal telephone numbers, addresses and social security numbers of individuals. . . ." Id. The BPA explained that Exemption 6 allows it to withhold information if doing so "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Id. The BPA concluded "that the public interest in disclosure did not outweigh the privacy interest of the individuals to whom [the information] pertains." Id.

In his Appeal, Mr. Olsen challenged the adequacy of the BPA's search. See Appeal Letter at 1-2. He stated, in his Appeal, that the "BPA sent a fraction of the material requested." Id. at 1. His Appeal also identified certain BPA employees and speculated about the material that he expected the BPA to have disclosed. Id. at 1-2.

Mr. Olsen, in his Appeal, also challenged the BPA's withholding under Exemption 6. Id. at 2. He asserts that the "BPA improperly withheld public information regarding travel reimbursement for employees . . . including the description of the reason for the travel. . . ." Id. He also asserted that the BPA was required to provide a Vaughn index identifying the withheld information and the basis for the exemption. Id. at 1.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of Search

In responding to a FOIA request, the courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search conducted was inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (2010).[1]

We contacted the BPA to gather more information to evaluate its search. It stated that it searched the Office of Public Affairs, including Media, Regional Relations, and Public Engagement; the Office of Environment, Fish and Wildlife; and the Office of the General Counsel. E-mail from Christina Brannon, FOIA/ Privacy Act Office, BPA, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, April 2, 2010. It searched e-mails, paper files for the Federal Caucus (an inter-agency group involving all agencies with a role in the Columbia River Basin), electronic and paper correspondence files, hard copy travel expense records, and a shared electronic network. A partial list of search terms included the names of relevant BPA staff, contractors, and lobbyists; the names of groups identified in the FOIA request; the names of salmon industry groups; the names of government agencies involved in salmon issues; the names of specific documents named in the FOIA request and their common abbreviations; and key search terms such as "editorials," "media," "outreach," "litigation," and the name of the judge in a lawsuit referenced in the FOIA request.[2] Id.

The BPA also stated that it searched all of the files that were reasonably expected to contain the requested documents. Id. Based on its description of the offices that were searched and the search methodologies it used, we agree. Therefore, we find that its search was adequate.

The fact that the BPA did not find responsive documents that Mr. Olsen expected does not render its search inadequate. A requester's "[m]ere speculation that . . . uncovered documents may exist does not undermine the finding that the agency conducted a reasonable search for them." Steinberg v. Dep't of Justice, 23 F.3d 548, 552 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (citation omitted).

[2] The BPA stated that the subject matter of the FOIA request involved a relatively small number of employees. E-mail from Christina Brannon, FOIA/ Privacy Act Office, BPA, to David M. Petrush, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, April 2, 2010. Further, much of the inter-agency communication took place through conference calls, not written records. It provided agendas and notes from the calls, where responsive. Id.

B. Exemption 6

FOIA Exemption 6 protects from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). An agency should construe "similar files" broadly, "[T]o cover detailed Government records on an individual which can be identified as applying to that individual." U.S. Dep't of State v. Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 602 (1982) (citation and quotations omitted). Exemption 6 "protect[s] individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Id. at 599.

The FOIA has a strong presumption in favor of disclosure. U.S. Dep't of State v. Ray, 502 U.S. 164, 173 (1991). The agency has the burden to show that requested information falls within an exemption. Id. (citation omitted); see also News-Press v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 489 F.3d 1173, 1198 (11th Cir. 2007) (describing the agency's burden as "onerous"). The agency must "narrowly construe[]" Exemption 6. Nat'l Ass'n of Home Builders v. Norton, 309 F.3d 26, 32 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citation and quotations omitted).

We must apply a three-step analysis to determine whether the DOE properly invoked Exemption 6. First, we must determine whether disclosing the information compromises a substantial privacy interest. If disclosure does not compromise a substantial privacy interest, the DOE may not withhold the information. Second, we must determine whether disclosing the information is in the public interest. Third, we must balance the substantial privacy interest against the public interest in order to determine whether disclosing the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Ripskis v. Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

We contacted the BPA to gather more information to evaluate its withholding of the travel reimbursement information. The BPA advised that it withheld this information inadvertently. We will remand the case to the BPA for it to issue a new determination releasing the inadvertently withheld information.[3]

Next, we reject Mr. Olsen's argument that the BPA was required to accompany its withholdings with a Vaughn index. A Vaughn index identifies each responsive document, the exemption invoked to withhold it, and why the exemption applies. Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820 (D.C. Cir. 1973). A Vaughn index is required during litigation. Id. However, it is not required at the administrative level. Alliance for Nuclear Accountability, Case No. TFA-0013 (2003). When an agency issues a determination denying the release of information, it need only provide a general description of the withheld information and the reason for withholding. Id.

[3] The BPA explained that it intended to withhold only the individuals' social security numbers, personal phone numbers, and personal addresses. Because Mr. Olsen did not appeal the withholding of this information, we need not determine whether the BPA withheld it appropriately.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Ken Olsen filed on March 12, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0358, is granted in part as indicated in Paragraph (2) and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Bonneville Power Administration in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Joan S. Sherwood

Date of Filing: March 16, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0359

On March 16, 2010, Joan S. Sherwood filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on February 22, 2010, by the Department of Energy's Naval Reactors Laboratory Field Office (NRL). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Ms. Sherwood submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Ms. Sherwood asks that NRL conduct an additional search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Ms. Sherwood filed a request for information on behalf of her father, Mr. Francis H. Sherwood, who worked at the Separations Research Unit in Schenectady, New York from December 1954 through June 1955 and at the Hanford Site from 1956 to 1988. In her request, she sought copies of her father's medical records and exposure records. Upon receiving Ms. Sherwood's request, NRL conducted a search, but found no responsive documents. On March 16, 2010, Ms. Sherwood filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Ms. Sherwood challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by NRL. See Appeal Letter. She asserts that responsive documents may be found in a number of additional locations and asks OHA to direct NRL to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., 25 DOE ¶ 80,152 (1995). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought material." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg

v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Information Focus on Energy, 26 DOE ¶ 80,240 (1997).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in NRL to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Sherwood's request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Mr. Sherwood's request for information, NRL determined that the records sought by Ms. Sherwood would be maintained by the Management and Operating contractor at the Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory, currently Bechtel Marine Propulsion Corporation (BMPC). NRL informed us that BMPC searched for any medical or exposure records or other potentially relevant records in the following departments of the organization: Human Resources, Safety, Medical, Security, and Dosimetry. NRL further informed us that records were searched by name, social security number, date of birth and in multiple spelling variations, and no responsive documents were located. See Response from C.P. Nunn, Chief Counsel, NRL, to Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (April 5, 2010). Given the facts presented to us, we find that NRL conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Ms. Sherwood's request. Accordingly, Ms. Sherwood's Appeal should therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Joan S. Sherwood, OHA Case No. TFA-0359, on March 16, 2010, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Custom Catalogues OnLine, Inc.

Date of Filing: April 5, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0362

On April 5, 2010, Custom Catalogues OnLine, Inc. (Appellant) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it by the Oak Ridge Office (OR) of the Department of Energy regarding its request for documents that it submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the Appellant's FOIA Request, OR provided the Appellant with a number of documents. However, OR also withheld in their entirety various other documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require that OR release the withheld documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under Department of Energy (DOE) regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On September 23, 2009, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request (Request) asking for copies of any documents referring to Mr. Philip Pulver (Pulver), Custom Catalogs OnLine, "CCOL," CCOL-MDM or "Mobile Data Methods" which were in the possession of or originated from a number of named employees of the DOE's Pacific Northwest Site Office and OR. See April 5, 2010, Appeal from Philip Pulver, President, Custom Catalogs OnLine, Inc. at 5.[1]

In its February 19, 2010, response, OR provided the Appellant with a number of documents. However, OR informed the Appellant that "several documents" were being withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemption 5 and the "attorney work product and/or attorney-client privilege." See February 10, 2010, Letter from Gerald G. Boyd, Manager, OR to Philip Pulver (Determination Letter) at 1. OR described the withheld documents as those including correspondence that "reveals the motive of the client in seeking legal advice" or the "advice and thoughts of Office of Chief Counsel personnel" on legal issues. Determination Letter at 1. OR also concluded that discretionary release of the withheld documents would not be in the public interest since disclosure would have a negative effect on the willingness of attorneys to provide the government with honest and open evaluations on issues. Determination Letter at 2.

In its Appeal, the Appellant makes a number of assertions regarding alleged misconduct at Battelle-managed DOE facilities. The Appellant alleged that release of the documents would shed light on this misconduct and that release of the documents would be in the public interest.[2]

II. Analysis

According to the FOIA, after conducting a search for responsive documents under the FOIA, an agency must provide the requester with a written determination notifying the requester of the results of that search and, if applicable, of the agency's intentions to withhold any of the responsive information under one or more of the nine statutory exemptions to the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The statute further requires that the agency provide the requester with an opportunity to appeal any adverse determination. Id.

An agency therefore has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. State of New York, Case No. TFA-0269 (August 19, 2008) slip op. at 2-3.[3] Generally, a description is adequate if each document is identified by a brief description of the subject matter it discusses and, if available, the date upon which the document was produced and its author and recipient. An index of documents need not, however, contain information that would compromise the privileged nature of the documents. Id. at 3. A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

For our review of this Appeal, we obtained the documents that OR withheld. After examining these documents, we conclude that OR's determination letter is clearly inadequate to permit the Appellant to file an informed appeal. We find that, in contrast to the Determination Letter's description of withholding "several" documents, in fact, approximately 90 responsive documents were withheld from the Appellant.[4] While OR's description of the material withheld does apply to a significant number of the documents, there are a number of withheld documents, such as apparently commercial documents and filed court pleadings, to which OR's description seems [2] The Appellant submitted additional submissions on April 8, 21 and 26, 2010, providing additional information regarding his misconduct allegations and his argument that release of the withheld documents would be in the public interest.

[3] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

[4] We counted 92 documents (457 pages) in the submissions OR provided us in response to our request for a copy of the withheld documents. However, it is unclear whether some of the documents are included as attachments to Emails or are stand-alone documents.

inapplicable. Additionally, OR's Determination Letter does not specify which Exemption 5 privilege is being applied to each withheld portion of each document.

Consequently, we will remand this matter to OR so that it may issue a new determination letter either adequately justifying the withholding of these previously withheld documents or releasing these documents to the Appellant.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Custom Catalogues OnLine, Inc., OHA Case Number TFA-0362, is hereby granted.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE's Oak Ridge Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	Donald A. Verrill
Date of Filing:	April 14, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0364

On April 14, 2010, Donald A. Verrill (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued on March 8, 2010, by the Department of Energy's Idaho Operations Office (IOO). In that determination, IOO responded to a Request for Information, filed on March 2, 2010, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its March 8, 2010, Determination Letter, IOO identified and released a number of responsive documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require IOO to release additional responsive material.

I. BACKGROUND

On March 2, 2010, the Appellant submitted a request for "all documents, notes, audio tapes, or any other materials related to circumstances of all investigations, reports, findings and/or decisions regarding [the Appellant's] employment at [the Idaho National Laboratory] INL with [Bechtel Energy Alliance] BEA from a period of time of January 2009 to present." Appellant's Request for Information. The Appellant further indicated that he had been a subject of three investigations by BEA employees.

On March 8, 2010, IOO issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) identifying and releasing a number of documents, in response to the Appellant's request.[1] Specifically, the Determination Letter released copies of the Appellant's IOO Personnel Security file, BEA Personnel file, and BEA Personnel Security file. Determination Letter at 1. The Determination Letter further indicates that two BEA offices, Safeguards and Security, and Diversity and Employee Relations maintained investigative files concerning the Appellant. The Determination Letter indicated that these files, however, were not agency records and therefore are not subject to the FOIA.

On June 22, 2005, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal in which he contends that the investigative files concerning him that are maintained in BEA's Safeguards and Security, and [1] IOO redacted personal information concerning a third-party individual because it determined that release of this information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of their privacy. The Appellant does not contest these redactions.

Diversity and Employee Relations offices should be subject to the FOIA. Specifically, the Appellant asserts that (1) he believes that that IOO was directing the three investigations involving him, (2) the IOO was "deliberately using BEA employees to avoid compliance with the FOIA, and (3) a BEA employee was "obtaining information illegally under the name of [the IOO]." Appeal at 1-2. The Appellant does not explain how these assertions, if true, would result in the characterization of the investigative files he seeks as "agency records" under the applicable statute, regulations, or case law.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA does not specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record that is subject to FOIA requirements. This issue was addressed by the United States Supreme Court in Department of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Tax Analysts). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are agency records for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. The federal courts have identified four relevant factors for determining whether a document was under an agency's control at the time of a request:

1. The intent of the document's creator to retain or relinquish control over the document;

2. The ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit;

3. The extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and

4. The degree to which the record was integrated into the agency's record system or files.

See, e.g., Burka v. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, 87 F.3d 508, 515 (D.C. Cir. 1996). Applying these standards to the case at hand, we conclude that the investigative files maintained by BEA's Safeguards and Security, and Diversity and Employee Relations offices were not created or obtained by the DOE. Nor were these documents under agency control at the time of the request. The investigative files have not been submitted to the agency, subject to its use and disposal, relied upon by the agency, or integrated into the agency's records systems or files. Therefore, we find that they are not "agency records" for purposes of the FOIA.

However, a finding that certain documents are not "agency records" does not end our inquiry. Section 1004.3(e) of the DOE's FOIA regulations states that:

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). The contract between DOE and BEA provides that the investigative files in question are not the property of the Government, but instead are owned by BEA. Section I.15(b)(1) of DOE Contract No. DE-AC07-05ID14517 states in pertinent part:

> The following records are considered the property of the contractor and are not within the scope of paragraph (a) of this clause.
> (1) Employment-related records (such as workers' compensation files; employee relations records, records on salary and employee benefits; drug testing records, labor negotiation records; records on ethics, employee concerns, and other employee related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality; employee assistance program records; and personnel and medical/ health-related records and similar files), and non-employee patient medical/health related records, except for those records described by the contract as being maintained in Privacy Act systems of records.

http://www.id.energy.gov/doeid/INLContract/SEC%20I.doc#_Toc87860986. The investigative files at issue in the present case were created by BEA during its internal investigations of allegations of Equal Employment Opportunity violations and employee theft. These files are "employee relations records" as well as "records on ethics, employee concerns, and other employee related investigations conducted under an expectation of confidentiality." Accordingly, the plain wording of the contract between IOO and BEA indicates that the investigative files are the property of BEA and therefore are not subject to public disclosure.

III. CONCLUSION

The investigative files concerning the Appellant maintained in BEA's Safeguards and Security, and Diversity and Employee Relations offices are not "agency records" and are not subject to public disclosure under 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). We therefore affirm the Idaho Operations Office's determination that they are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA or DOE regulations.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Donald A. Verrill, TFA-0364, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Tarek Farag
Date of Filing:	April 15, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0365

On April 15, 2010, Tarek Farag (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on March 24, 2010, by the Office of Classification (Classification) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Classification responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, Classification identified and released documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenged the adequacy of Classification's search for documents. This appeal, if granted, would require Classification to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On December 2, 2009, the Appellant requested "the information and the reasons upon which the two reviewers from the DOE decided that secrecy is not recommended" in regard to his patent application regarding a method and a process for isotope separation. Request Letter dated December 2, 2009, from Appellant to DOE. On December 9, 2009, the DOE FOIA office sent the request to Classification. On March 24, 2010, Classification released numerous documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Determination Letter dated March 24, 2010, from Andrew P. Weston-Dawkes, Director, Classification, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Determination Letter).

On April 15, 2010, the Appellant appealed the Determination because he did not receive a written explanation regarding the "secrecy not recommended" decision. In his Appeal, he claimed that "two reviewers . . . offered many times to give a written explanation of the [secrecy not recommended] decision." Appeal Letter dated April 8, 2010, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (Appeal Letter). Also in his Appeal, he asked for the qualifications of the reviewers, including general experience; specialized experience in the nuclear field; and specialized experience in isotope separation techniques, as well as their education. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted Classification to determine what type of search was conducted. In response, Classification indicated that an e-mail had been sent to each of the offices within Classification stating that a FOIA request had been received and asking if each office had any responsive information. Everything that was found to be responsive to the Appellant's request was released to him.

The Appellant challenged the Determination claiming that the two reviewers offered a written explanation of the recommendation. Classification indicated that if the written explanation existed, it would have been produced with the responsive documents released to the Appellant. Furthermore, a person knowledgeable about this matter indicated that no written explanation was ever produced, as evidenced by two e-mails released to the Appellant. In an e-mail to the Patent Office, Classification offered to create a written explanation of why Classification determined that "secrecy was not recommended." E-mail dated April 26, 2010, from Fletcher Whitworth, Classification, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA, Attachment at 34. In a return e-mail, the Patent Office indicated that the e-mail explanation from Classification was sufficient and no written explanation was needed. Id. at 35. We believe the search that Classification conducted was reasonably calculated to reveal the records responsive to the Appellant's request, including the written explanation if one existed.

[1/] All OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

The FOIA does not require an agency to create documents in response to a request. 5 U.S.C. § 552; 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d)(1), (2); Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0319 (July 7, 2009); David B. McCoy, Case No. VFA-0707 (January 16, 2002); Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0701 (November 5, 2001). Classification stated that no written explanation exists. Classification cannot be required to produce a document that does not exist.

Also in his Appeal, the Appellant asked for the reviewers' qualifications and education. We note that he did not ask for this information in his initial request. We do not permit requesters to expand the scope of their request on appeal. Cliff Jenkins, Case No. TFA-0122 (November 7, 2005); F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,132 at 80, 578 (1996); Alan J. White, 17 DOE ¶ 80,117, at 80,539 (1988); see also Arthur Scanla, 13 DOE ¶ 80,133 at 80,622 n.2 (1986). If the Appellant wishes to request this additional information, he must file a new FOIA request seeking those documents.

III. Conclusion

The search that Classification conducted was reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Appellant's request, including the written explanation. In regard to the other information the Appellant requested in his Appeal, this is a broadening of his original request. He must file a new request seeking that information. Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tarek Farag, Case No. TFA-0365, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Concerned Citizens for Clean Air
Date of Filing:	April 19, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0366

On April 19, 2010, Mr. John Williams of Concerned Citizens for Clean Air (CCCA) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to the organization on March 25, 2010, by the Corporate Services Division of the Office of Headquarters Procurement Services (Procurement) of the Department of Energy (DOE). Procurement issued the determination in response to a request for documents that CCCA submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Procurement perform an additional search for responsive material and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

On December 27, 2009, CCCA filed a FOIA request for copies of the applications that five companies filed with DOE for grants, loans or other funding for projects in Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas. CCNA also asked DOE to explain whether the projects must pay Davis-Bacon prevailing wages. See Letter from John Williams of CCCA (December 27, 2009). On March 25, 2010, Procurement informed Mr. Williams that it had searched and found no responsive documents. See Letter from Procurement to CCCA (March 25, 2009) (Determination Letter). On April 19, 2010, CCCA filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In the Appeal, CCCA challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Procurement and asks OHA to direct Procurement to search again. Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. The FOIA states that an agency must conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990); see also Gary Maroney, Case No. TFA-0267 (2008). [1] The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See e.g. Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).

We contacted Procurement to request additional information so that we could evaluate the search it conducted for responsive records. Procurement informed us that it had conducted a thorough search, but found no responsive records.[2] Procurement then contacted the DOE Headquarters FOIA office (DOE/HQ) for more information about the request and appeal. DOE/HQ assigned the search to the Loan Guarantee Program Office. See Electronic Mail Message from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney (June 30, 2010). The Loan Guarantee Program Office located some responsive documents, and those documents are currently being processed. See Electronic Mail message from Wendy Pulliam, FOIA Specialist, Loan Guarantee Program Office, to Alexander Morris (June 30, 2010). That office also contacted the requester and gave him an update on the status of the search.

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Procurement conducted a search that was adequate and reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. However, the DOE Loan Guarantee Program Office has located some responsive material and is currently processing that material. The Loan Guarantee Program Office should release any responsive documents, or issue a determination letter justifying the continued withholding of those documents. Accordingly, this Appeal should be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The FOIA Appeal filed by Concerned Citizens of America on April 19, 2010, OHA Case Number TFA-0366, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Loan Guarantee Program Office of the Department of Energy for processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seekjudicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Gary W. Perry
Date of Filing:	April 20, 2010 April 22, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0367 TFA-0370

This Decision concerns an Appeal Gary W. Perry filed from determinations issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque (NNSA), and the DOE's Oak Ridge Office (ORO). In those determinations, NNSA and ORO responded to requests for documents that Mr. Perry submitted under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. NNSA and ORO located some documents responsive to Mr. Perry's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA and ORO to perform additional searches and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

Mr. Perry filed requests under the Privacy Act with NNSA and ORO for copies of his medical records generated during the course of his employment with a contractor at the DOE's Y-12 site, one of the agency's facilities in Oak Ridge, Tennessee. Specifically, Mr. Perry sought records pertaining to his hearing tests, also known as audiograms. See Letter from NNSA to Gary W. Perry (March 4, 2010) (NNSA Determination Letter); Letter from ORO to Gary W. Perry (April 7, 2010) (ORO Determination Letter). In its final response, NNSA indicated that it had jurisdiction over records located at the Y-12 site. A search of Y-12 records yielded some medical records pertaining to Mr. Perry and NNSA enclosed a copy of those records in its final response to Mr. Perry's request. NNSA Determination Letter. ORO also performed a search for responsive documents and provided to Mr. Perry a copy of records located at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL). ORO Determination Letter.

Mr. Perry filed an Appeal challenging the adequacy of the searches performed by NNSA and ORO. Appeal Letter, received April 20, 2010; see also Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Gary W. Perry and Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 20, 2010). The portion of the Appeal pertaining to ORO's search was designated as OHA Case Number TFA-0367, and the portion pertaining to NNSA's search was designated as OHA Case Number TFA-0370. Mr. Perry indicated that he believed the medical records he was provided by NNSA and ORO are incomplete because, given the length of his employment at the Y-12 site, his medical records should have included more records of audiograms. Id.

II. Analysis

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act requires only that the agency search systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, Case No. VFA-0763 (2002).[*] Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the searches ORO and NNSA conducted in this case, we are guided by the principles we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted both NNSA and ORO to discuss the searches conducted in response to Mr. Perry's requests.

NNSA informed us that, in responding to Mr. Perry's request, personnel from the Plant Records and Medical departments of the current Y-12 contractor, Babcock & Wilcox Technical Services Y-12, L.L.C. (B&W Y-12), searched their active records for responsive documents, in their records management database, using Mr. Perry's name, social security number and date of birth. E-mail from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 22, 2010); see also Record of Telephone Conversation between Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (May 7, 2010). In addition, both departments searched their archived records. Id. NNSA located, and provided to Mr. Perry, the contents of two medical files, one containing 222 pages and the other containing seven pages. E-mail from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 22, 2010). NNSA indicated that any existing records of audiograms would be kept in the employee's medical file. Record of Telephone Conversation between Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (May 7, 2010). Finally, NNSA indicated that there were no other databases where responsive records may have been located.

After receiving Mr. Perry's Privacy Act request, ORO sent a request for responsive documents to Bechtel Jacobs Company (BJC), which operates the DOE's former K-25 plant at Oak Ridge, and ORNL, formerly known as the DOE's X-10 facility. E-mail from Linda Chapman, ORO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (April 22, 2010). BJC conducted searches of its four records databases using Mr. Perry's last name and social security number, but found no responsive documents. Id. ORNL conducted searches both of records databases and of paper records using Mr. Perry's last name, social security number, and date of birth. ORNL's search yielded four pages of medical records, none of which were records of audiograms. Id. ORO provided those four pages to Mr. Perry in ORO's final response to Mr. Perry. Id.; see also ORO Determination Letter.

Based on this information, it is clear that both NNSA and ORO searched the available databases and paper records using Mr. Perry's personal information in an attempt to locate any responsive documents. We find that NNSA and ORO performed extensive searches reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Mr. Perry's request. Therefore, despite not yielding all of the records Mr. Perry sought, the searches were adequate. Accordingly, Mr. Perry's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Gary W. Perry on April 20, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0367, is hereby denied.

(2) The Appeal filed by Gary W. Perry on April 22, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0370, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

May 7, 2010

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Reginald A. Harris
Date of Filing:	April 21, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0368

On April 21, 2010, Reginald A. Harris filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy Office of Human Capital Management (DOE/HC) issued on March 15, 2010. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from DOE/HC position descriptions for Criminal Investigators in the DOE's Office of Security Operations and Office of Special Operations, and position evaluation statements for each position description. In its response to Mr. Harris, DOE/HC released copies of the requested position descriptions, but stated that it "does not distribute position evaluation statements to employees nor to anyone in the Program Offices." Letter from Sarah J. Bonilla, Director, DOE/HC, to Mr. Reginald A. Harris (March 15, 2010). In his appeal, Mr. Harris challenges DOE/HC's withholding of the position evaluation statements he requested. Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

The DOE FOIA regulations provide, in pertinent part, that a determination letter denying a FOIA request must state "the reason for denial, containing a reference to the specific exemption under the Freedom of Information Act authorizing the withholding of the record and a brief explanation of how the exemption applies to the record withheld, and a statement of why a discretionary release is not appropriate." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1). In so doing, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

In the present case, the determination letter that DOE/HC issued in response to Mr. Harris's request cited no exemption under the FOIA authorizing the withholding of position evaluation statements. We therefore will remand this matter to DOE/HC for a new determination. In its determination, as required by the FOIA statute and DOE regulations, DOE/HC must either release the requested position evaluation statements to Mr. Harris or specify the exemption(s) under which it is withholding those documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Reginald A. Harris on April 21, 2010, Case No. TFA-0368, is hereby granted as specified in paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Human Capital Management, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: Martha J. McNeely

Filing Date: April 27, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0371

This Decision concerns the Appeal that Martha J. McNeely filed from a determination that a Department of Energy (DOE) Operations Office issued to her on March 16, 2010. In that determination, the Operations Office responded to her request under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require the Operations Office to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered records or issue a new determination justifying its withholding.

I. Background

Ms. McNeely filed a PA request for her records at the Operations Office. Request Letter. She seeks medical and dental records from a number of specified entities historically allied with the DOE and its predecessor agencies. She described her medical treatment and provided copies of her birth certificate, social security card, and identification card. Id. In response, the Operations Office stated that it did not locate any records. Determination Letter. Ms. McNeely then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), challenging the adequacy of the Operations Office's search. Appeal Letter.

Ms. McNeely provided two reasons why she believes that the Operations Office's search was inadequate. Id. First, "the search was conducted only by name and social security number." She argues that the search should have included various spellings of her name, date of birth, age, address, dates of residency, school attended, and "special cohort groups." Second, "only a computerized search was done and only in two local databases." She argues that the search should have included additional entities historically allied with the DOE and its predecessor agencies as well as files regarding a particular case in federal court. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA),[1] courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover

[1] Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act (PA) requires only that the agency search its systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the PA to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA.

all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., Case No. VFA-0098 (1995) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).[2]

We contacted the Operations Office to gain additional information to evaluate its search. It stated that subject matter experts searched by name and social security number because the sought-after files are organized by those categories. It need not have searched under variant spellings of Ms. McNeely's name. Maynard v. CIA, 986 F.2d 547, 560 (1st Cir. 1993). The Operations Office stated that it searched the two databases most likely to have the information that she requested. These databases would have included any records from the specific entities that she named in her request and her Appeal.[3]

Based on the description of the Operations Office's search, we find that it conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant records and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Martha J. McNeely filed on April 27, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0371, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

May 28, 2010

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Matthew W. Jones
Date of Filing:	April 27, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0373

On April 27, 2010, Mr. John R. Osburn of Bullivant, Houser, Bailey, PC, filed an Appeal on behalf of Mr. Matthew W. Jones (Jones) from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) issued to him. The determination responded to a request for information Jones filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require BPA to release the responsive information it withheld from Jones.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On January 22, 2010, Jones filed a FOIA request with BPA seeking the mailing list containing names and addresses of persons to whom BPA sent a copy of "U.S. Department of Energy-Bonneville Power Administration Permission to Enter Property Form Instruction Sheet" on or about January 13, 2010. See Determination Letter at 1. In a determination letter, BPA stated it conducted a search of its records and located documents responsive to Jones' request. BPA, however, withheld information in the responsive documents pursuant Exemption 6 of the FOIA. Id. On April 27, 2010, Jones filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In his Appeal, Jones challenges the withholding of information under Exemption 6 of the FOIA. See Appeal Letter. Jones asks that the OHA direct BPA to release the withheld information.

II. Analysis

Exemption 6

In its determination letter, BPA withheld the names and home addresses of landowners who could be affected by the construction of a new transmission line from a responsive document under Exemption 6. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Department of HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. Department of HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); FLRA v. Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762-770. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

1. Privacy Interest

BPA determined that there was a privacy interest in the names and home addresses of landowners who live nearby a proposed transmission line. We have consistently determined "that there is a real and substantial threat to employees' privacy if personal identifying information . . . were released." Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 15 DOE ¶ 80,115 at 80,537 (1987). See also Painting & Drywall Work Preservation Fund, Inc., 16 DOE ¶ 80,102 at 80,504 (1987); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80,120 at 80,569 (1985); International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 13 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,519 (1985). Federal courts have also considered the privacy interests of individuals outside of the context of federal employees and have held that names and home addresses can be protected under Exemption 6. See Bibles v. Or. Natural Desert Ass'n, 519 U.S. 355, 356 (1997) (protecting mailing list or recipients of Bureau of Land Management publication). They have also held that specific lists may reveal sensitive information beyond the mere names and addresses of the individual found on the list. Minnis v. USDA, 737 F.2d 784, 787 (9th Cir. 1984) ("Disclosure would reveal not only the applicant's names and addresses, but also their personal interests in water sports and the out-of-door."). In this case, we believe that there is a significant privacy interest in the names and addresses of private homeowners who could be affected by a new transmission line. If this information were disclosed to the requester, the disclosure could "cause inevitable harassment and unwarranted solicitation." See Determination Letter at 2. We have previously found the potential for harassment of individuals to be sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 6. See, e.g., William Hyde, 18 DOE ¶ 80,102 (1988).

These considerations govern our determination. We therefore find a real and substantial privacy interest in the names and addresses of the homeowners at issue.

2. Public Interest in Disclosure

Having established the existence of a privacy interest, the next step is to determine whether there is a public interest in disclosure. The Supreme Court has held that there is a public interest in disclosure of information that "sheds light on the operations and activities of the government." Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 773. See Marlene Flor, 26 DOE ¶ 80,104 at 80,511 (1996). According to BPA, disclosure of the information withheld "could subject the individual to whom it pertains to unwanted communications that would intrude into his/her personal life . . . and will not reveal any aspects about the operations or activities of the Government." Determination Letter at 1. The requester has the burden of establishing that disclosure would serve the public interest. Flor, 26 DOE at 80,511 (quoting Carter v. Department of Commerce, 830 F.2d 388 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). We fail to see how release of the names and addresses of private homeowners in the present case would inform the public about the operations and activities of Government. Accordingly, we find that there is little or no public interest in disclosure of the requested names and addresses.

3. Balancing the Interests

As stated earlier, there is a significant privacy interest in this information. In determining whether the disclosure of the identifying information could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, courts have used a balancing test, weighing the privacy interests that would be infringed against the public interest in disclosure. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 762 (1989). We agree with BPA and find that the minimal public interest here is far outweighed by the real and identifiable privacy interests of the private homeowners.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Matthew W. Jones on April 27, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0373, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: Frank J. Trunk

Filing Date: April 30, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0375

This Decision concerns the Appeal that Frank J. Trunk filed from a determination that the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him on March 31, 2010. In that determination, the OIR responded to his request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the OIR to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying its withholding.

I. Background

Mr. Trunk filed a FOIA request with an Operations Office for documents regarding the classification status of his technology and patent applications. Request Letter. He believes that secrecy orders were requested for a number of his patent applications and that the Operations Office was consulted. Id. The Operations Office forwarded Mr. Trunk's request to the OIR.[1] Determination Letter. The OIR assigned the request to the Assistant General Counsel for Technology Transfer and Intellectual Property. No documents were found. Id.

In the present Appeal, Mr. Trunk challenges the adequacy of the OIR's search. Appeal Letter. He attached a document ostensibly showing that the DOE reviewed his patent applications for the United States Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO). He argues that therefore, the DOE must have responsive documents. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542.

[1] The Operations Office issued its own determination letter to Mr. Trunk. He may appeal that determination letter separately.

We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. See, e.g., Butler, Vines and Babb, P.L.L.C., Case No. VFA-0098 (1995) (remanding where there was "a reasonable possibility" that responsive documents existed at an unsearched location).[2]

We contacted the OIR to gain additional information to evaluate the search performed by the Assistant General Counsel for Technology Transfer and Intellectual Property. We learned that the Assistant General Counsel handles all classification issues that the USPTO refers to the DOE.[3] The office searched the intellectual property database because that is the only file reasonably expected to contain the requested documents. It searched by inventor name and serial number, and it found no documents responsive to Mr. Trunk's request.

Based on the description of the search, we find that an adequate search was conducted because the search was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Frank J. Trunk filed on April 30, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0375, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Don Baker
Date of Filing:	May 3, 2010
Case Numbers:	TFA-0376 TFA-0384

On May 3, 2010, Don Baker (Appellant) submitted a letter to the Office of Hearings and Appeals. After reviewing the letter, we determined that he was appealing the disposition of two Freedom of Information Act Requests he submitted to the Department of Energy (DOE) Headquarters. The first request, filed on August 31, 2009, was for "a copy of the applications received for [DE-FOA-0000058], including the Application for Federal Assistance SF-424, from these three companies. 1. Southern Company - $197M for Smart Meters 2. Alliant Energy 3. Portland General Electric." Request dated August 31, 2009, from Appellant to DOE Headquarters (August 31, 2009, Request). The Appeal of the disposition of the August 2009 request has been designated as Case No. TFA-0376. The second request, filed on December 16, 2009, was for "a copy of any requests for payment that have been submitted by Southern Company" for the "$165,000,000 in Smart Grid Investment Grants" that the DOE awarded under solicitation numbers DE-FOA-0000058 and DE-FOA-0000036. Request dated December 16, 2009, from Don Baker to DOE Headquarters (December 16, 2009, Request). The Appeal of the disposition of the December 2009 request has been designated as Case No. TFA-0384. These Appeals, if granted, would require DOE Headquarters to release responsive information to the Appellant and would require ORO to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

After designating the August 31, 2009, request as number FOIA-2009-000729, DOE Headquarters sent the request to the Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability. The request was recently referred to the Office of Procurement. E-mail dated May 24, 2009, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. As of the dated of this Appeal, Procurement has not yet responded to this request. Id.

DOE designated the December 16, 2009, request as number HQ-2010-000632-F. On April 8, 2010, after initially sending the request to the Office of the Chief Financial Officer, DOE forwarded the request to the Oak Ridge Office (ORO) of the DOE. Memorandum dated April 8, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE, to Amy Rothrock, FOIA and Privacy Act Officer, ORO. On April 19, 2010, ORO responded to the request stating that no "requests for payment" were found for Southern Company Services relating to the two solicitation numbers the Appellant referenced in his request. Determination Letter dated April 19, 2010, from Elizabeth Dillon, Authorizing Official, ORO, DOE, to Appellant. ORO continued that no award has been made under solicitation DE-FOA-0000058, at this time, and no award was made to Southern Company Services under solicitation DE-FOA-0000036. Id.

On May 3, 2010, the Appellant challenged the lack of a response to his August 2009 request, claiming that his FOIA request was for "Applications received for American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) funding." Appeal Letter dated April 26, 2010, from Appellant to Director, OHA, DOE. He continued that on August 31, 2009, he requested copies of "Applications received for ARRA funding opportunity DE-FOA-0000058 Smart Grid Investment Grant Program - specifically applications from: Southern Company, Alliant Energy and Portland General Electric." Id. Also in the Appeal, he appealed the determination issued to him on April 19, 2010, by the ORO. In that determination, ORO responded to a request for information the Appellant filed in December 2009 under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ORO stated that it found no documents responsive to the Appellant's request.

II. Analysis

A. Case No. TFA-0376

As we stated in the Background section above, the Appellant's August 31, 2009, request was recently reassigned to the Office of Procurement. E-mail dated May 25, 2010, from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA. Procurement has not yet responded to this request. Id. DOE Regulations allow OHA to consider appeals when the Office to which a FOIA request is made "denied a request for records in whole or in part or has responded that there are no documents responsive to the request." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8(a). Because DOE has not yet responded to the August 31, 2009, request, this matter is not ripe for our review. The Appellant is permitted to proceed with this matter in federal district court. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(C)(i). Therefore, we will dismiss the Appeal, Case No. TFA-0376, regarding the August 2009 request, and we only need to address ORO's search regarding the Appeal, Case No. TFA-0384.

B. Case No. TFA-0384

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1]

We contacted ORO to determine what type of search was conducted for requests for payments submitted by Southern Company. In response, ORO indicated that the Chief of the Payment Services Branch conducted the search. Attachment 1 to E-mail dated May 12, 2010, from Linda Chapman, FOIA/Privacy Act Officer, ORO, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. While the Chief has only been in his position for one year, he has 22 years of experience in the ORO Financial Service Center. He searched the DOE Corporate Accounting System for invoice records. Id. Unfortunately, the request only contained the requisition numbers, not the award numbers. Id. The Chief searched for awards by the vendor's name, Southern Company. Id. He found 11 open awards and three closed awards. Id. There was only one award, "Smart Grid Investment Grant Program," close to the dollar amount listed in the request, $165,000,000, and it was still open. Id. The Chief then searched for invoices received from the vendor on that award and found that no invoices have been received. Id. Therefore, no payments have been awarded. Id. We believe the search that ORO conducted was reasonably calculated to reveal the records responsive to the Appellant's request.

III. Conclusion

In regard to Case No. TFA-0376, DOE has not yet responded to the August 31, 2009, request, therefore, the matter is not ripe for our review. Accordingly, this Appeal will be dismissed. In regard to Case No. TFA-0384, the search that ORO conducted was reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Appellant's December 16, 2009, request. Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: Better Way for BPA

Filing Date: May 11, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0378

This Decision concerns the Appeal that Better Way for BPA (Better Way) filed from a determination that the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to it on April 28, 2010. In that determination, the BPA responded to Better Way's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, the BPA withheld information under FOIA Exemption 5. Better Way challenges the BPA's withholding and argues that it performed an inadequate search. If we grant this Appeal, the BPA (i) may not withhold the information under FOIA Exemption 5; and (ii) must perform an additional search and either release newly discovered records or issue a new determination justifying the withholding.

I. Background

From a previous FOIA request, Better Way had received the Agency Decision Framework (Version 6) of the I-5 Corridor Reinforcement Project. Then Better Way requested the following:

1) All versions and revision dates of this document;

2) Which version was presented to the BPA Administrator and when; and

3) That the BPA not withhold financial data.

Request Letter.

Regarding the first request, the BPA released all versions of the Agency Decision Framework. Determination Letter. But the BPA invoked the deliberative process privilege and the attorney-client privilege to redact all of a separate document entitled "Legal Analysis" except its title. The BPA said, "Release of the material . . . could deter an open and candid exchange" between the BPA and its attorneys. It also said that because the document consists of legal analysis, it contains no segregable factual information. Id.
Regarding the second request, the BPA responded that it is a question, not a FOIA request. Regarding the third request, the BPA indicated that it had not withheld financial information.

On Appeal, Better Way presents two arguments. First, it challenges the adequacy of the BPA's search. It stated that the BPA must have a document revision, tracking, or archiving system that should turn up additional responsive documents. If the documents were distributed by hard copy, recipients "unlikely . . . destroyed each and every copy they received." Second, Better Way argues that the BPA should not have invoked Exemption 5 to withhold any part of the Legal Analysis. It stated, "It is highly unusual for a complete document to be redacted." Id.

On Appeal, Better Way also requested the version numbers of the documents it received, the dates they were created, and when the versions were presented to the BPA Administrator.[1] Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request, unless it falls within enumerated exemptions. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a), 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly, to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

A. Adequacy of Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[2]

We contacted the BPA to gain additional information to evaluate its search. It stated that the project manager for the Agency Decision Framework conducted the search. He searched his paper and electronic files and contacted 134 people, including all project members and others associated with the project. The search uncovered the original template for the Agency Decision Framework and versions 4, 5, and 6. (To his knowledge, versions 1, 2, and 3 no longer exist.)

Based on the description of the search, we find that an adequate search was conducted because the search was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Therefore, we will deny this element of the Appeal.

[1] We do not address these arguments because we do not have jurisdiction to do so. The FOIA requires the agencies to disclose documents; it does not require the disclosure of information about a document, such as its version number, when it was created, or when a particular employee reviewed it.

[2] OHA decisions regarding the FOIA issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

B. Exemption 5

Better Way argues that the BPA improperly invoked Exemption 5 to withhold information. See Appeal Letter.

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, [information] must . . . satisfy two conditions: [1] its source must be a Government agency, and [2] it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8.

Information satisfies Klamath's first condition if it is an inter-agency or intra-agency communication. Id. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)). The statute defines "agency" broadly, including "any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government . . . or any independent regulatory agency." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(f)).

We find that the withheld information satisfies the first condition because the withheld "Legal Analysis" appears in an intra-agency communication – a memorandum from the BPA's Office of General Counsel to another office within the BPA.

Information satisfies Klamath's second condition if it falls within "civil discovery privileges," including the deliberative process privilege and the attorney-client privilege. Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8 (citations omitted).

1. The Deliberative Process Privilege

An agency may withhold information under the deliberative process privilege if it is "predecisional" and "deliberative." Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 866 (D.C. Cir. 1980). "[Information] . . . is 'predecisional' if it precedes, in temporal sequence, the 'decision' to which it relates." Hinckley v. United States, 140 F.3d 277, 284 (D.C. Cir. 1998). We "must be able to pinpoint an agency decision or policy to which the [information] contributed." Id. Conversely, information which explains actions an agency has already taken is not predecisional. Ryan v. Dep't of Justice, 617 F.2d 781, 791 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Information may lose its predecisional status "if it is adopted, formally or informally, as the agency position . . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

Information is deliberative if it "reflects the give-and-take" of the decision or policy-making process or "weigh[s] the pros and cons of agency adoption of one viewpoint or another." Id. The agency must identify the role the information plays in that process. Hinckley, 140 F.3d at 284 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). We "ask . . . whether the information is so candid or personal in nature that public disclosure is likely . . . to stifle honest and frank communication within the agency. . . ." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege does not exempt purely factual information from disclosure. Petroleum Info. Corp. v. United States Dep't of the Interior, 976 F.2d 1429, 1435 (D.C. Cir. 1992). However, "[t]o the extent that predecisional materials, even if 'factual' in form, reflect an agency's preliminary positions or ruminations about how to exercise discretion on some policy matter, they are protected under Exemption 5." Id.

The deliberative process privilege routinely protects certain types of information, including "recommendations, draft documents, proposals, suggestions, and other subjective documents which reflect the personal opinions of the writer rather than the policy of the agency." Coastal States Gas Corp., 617 F.2d at 866.

The deliberative process privilege assures that agency employees will provide decision makers with their "uninhibited opinions" without fear that later disclosure may bring criticism. Id. The privilege also "protect[s] against premature disclosure of proposed policies before they have been . . . formulated or adopted" to avoid "misleading the public by dissemination of documents suggesting reasons and rationales . . . which were not in fact the ultimate reasons for the agency's action." Id. (citation omitted).

We find that the BPA properly invoked the deliberative process privilege to withhold portions of the document entitled "Legal Analysis." It is predecisional – it precedes the issuance of the final version of the Agency Decision Framework. It is also deliberative – it contains the BPA's evaluation of controlling legal authority as well as an application of that authority to a number of alternative courses of action.

2. The Attorney-Client Privilege

An agency may withhold information under the attorney-client privilege if it is a "confidential communication[] between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc., v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Although it fundamentally applies to facts divulged by a client to his attorney, the privilege also encompasses opinions given by an attorney to a client based upon, and thus reflecting, those facts. See, e.g., Jernigan v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998). The privilege also encompasses communications between attorneys that reflect client-supplied information. See, e.g., Green v. IRS, 556 F. Supp 79, 85 (N.D. Ind. 1982). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. Clarke v. American Commerce Nat'l Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992). The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 291, 403-04 (1976). In other words, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. Government Accountability Project, Case No. LFA-0398 (1994).

We find that the BPA properly invoked the attorney-client privilege to withhold portions of the document entitled "Legal Analysis." The document is a confidential communication to the BPA from its attorney in the BPA's Office of General Counsel. Further, the withheld portions contain the attorney's legal opinion regarding a topic upon which the BPA sought professional advice. The redacted portions do not contain social, informational, or procedural communications.

3. Segregability of Factual Information

Even if the FOIA exempts documents from disclosure, non-exempt information that is "reasonably segregable" from those documents must be disclosed after the exempt information is redacted. Johnson v. Exec. Office for United States Attorneys, 310 F.3d 771, 776 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)).

We reviewed the withheld information and did not find any non-exempt, segregable information.

4. Public Interest

If the FOIA exempts information from mandatory disclosure, the DOE should still release it if doing so is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

In this case, the release of the withheld predecisional, deliberative information and the withheld attorney-client information could adversely affect the agency's ability to obtain straightforward and frank recommendations and opinions. This would stifle the free exchange of ideas and opinions that is essential to the sound functioning of DOE programs. We do not believe that discretionary release of the properly withheld material would be in the public interest. State of New York, Case No. TFA-0274 (2008).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Better Way for BPA filed on May 11, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0378, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Tom Marks

Date of Filing: May 11, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0379

On May 11, 2010, Tom Marks (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on April 5, 2010, by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On September 10, 2007, the Appellant filed a request with NNSA for

> 1. FY00-FY08 "salary increase authorization" proposals submitted to LANL and/or the University of California on behalf of Las Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) to NNSA/DOE. These are also referred to as "compensation increase" plans or proposals.
> 2. DOE/NNSA "salary increase authorization" responses to LANL/University of California for FY00-FY08.
> 3. All [computer] "hot skills" requests or proposals submitted by LANL and/or the University of California on behalf of LANL tot he NNSA/DOE after January 1, 1999.
> 4. All DOE/NNSA responses to the request and/or proposals as described in item 3, above, and all authorization for [computer] hot skills compensation to LANL/UC effective after January 1, 1999.

Determination Letter from Carolyn Becknell, NNSA, to Appellant, November 26, 2008 at 1.

On November 26, 2008, NNSA released copies of letters from DOE to contractors approving the Compensation Increase Plans for FY 2000, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2005 2006 and 2008. In its Determination, NNSA stated that the remainder of the responsive records, the Compensation Increase Plans (CIPs) or proposals that would include all authorizations for salary increases and hot skills compensations, were being withheld in their entirety pursuant to Exemptions 2 and 4 of the FOIA. On January 7, 2009, the Appellant appealed, contending that NNSA did not properly support its Exemption 2 and Exemption 4 withholdings. January 7, 2009 Appeal Letter at 1-2. The Appellant also contended that NNSA did not identify the specific exemptions for each redaction in the responsive records. Id. at 2. Finally, the Appellant contended that NNSA conducted a flawed analysis to determine if disclosure of the withheld information was contrary tot he public interest. Id.

On February 5, 2009, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) issued a Decision and Order in which it remanded the matter to NNSA to issue another determination regarding the Appellant's original FOIA request and inform the Appellant which specific portions of the documents at issue are being withheld pursuant to which exemption and explain how Exemptions 2 and 4 apply to the withheld material in that document. On April 5, 2010, NNSA issued a new determination in which it withheld, as previously withheld, the CIPs or proposals. According to NNSA, release of this information will interfere with DOE/NNSA's ability to obtain candid advice in the future. See April 5, 2010 Determination Letter at 1-2. In his Appeal, the Appellant challenges the application of Exemption 4 to the withheld material and asserts that release of this material is in the public interest. April 5, 2010 Appeal Letter at 2.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(4); 10 C.F.R. §1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must engage in a more complex analysis, as set forth in National Parks.

Under the National Parks test, the first requirement for Exemption 4 protection is that the withheld information must be "commercial or financial." Courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1290 (citing Washington Post Co. V. HHS, 690 F.2d 252, 266 (D.C. Cir. 1982)). Second, the information must be "obtained from a person." "Person" refers to a wide range of entities, including corporate entities. Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979). The information NNSA withheld is both commercial and obtained from a person.

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. In this case, the submitters presented the requested information to the DOE on an involuntary basis, because it required the information as part of a contract it holds with DOE/NNSA. Where the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993).

In its Determination Letter, DOE/NNSA alleges that the information concerns sensitive, proprietary survey data and Los Alamos National Security, LLC (LANS) has made agreements with vendors to keep this information confidential. Survey companies could decline to allow LANS to participate in future surveys and would impair DOE/NNSA's "ability to review objective survey data to make an informed decision to approve a CIP." April 5, 2010 Determination Letter at 2. In addition, DOE/NNSA asserts that access to the CIP documents would "provide competitors with a window into the LANS compensation process and, where the survey data revealed below-market salaries, would provide an incentive for competitors to raid LANS talent." Id. We agree. Release of the information that DOE/NNSA withheld would result in substantial competitive harm to the submitter.

B. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. However, in cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency can withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Martin Becker, 28 DOE ¶ 80,222 (May 2, 2002)(Case No. VFA-0710). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information properly withheld under Exemption 4. 1/

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tom Marks, OHA Case No. TFA-0379, on May 11, 2010, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Terry Martin Apodaca
Date of Filing:	May 11, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0380

On May 11, 2010, Terry Martin Apodaca filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA withheld information in response to a request for information that Ms. Apodaca (or "Appellant") filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release the withheld information.

I. Background

In one of the FOIA requests that she filed on May 18, 2009, Ms. Apodaca requested copies of:

1. All OPA [Office of Public Affairs] personnel actions from May 2007 to the present, including all attached background information and justifications; and

2. Any and all complaints or grievances filed against any member of OPA, including the FOIA/PA team, from May 2007 to present in the possession of OPA, Director's office.

First Request Letter from Terry Apodaca to Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA (May 18, 2009) (First Request Letter). On October 14, 2009, NNSA issued two determination letters responding to Ms. Apodaca's requests. Letters from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA, to Terry Apodaca, October 14, 2009. In the first determination, NNSA released a number of documents, but redacted some information under Exemptions 5 and 6. Among these documents were personnel action documents (Personnel Documents) from which employee salary information had been redacted. In the second determination, NNSA released 53 responsive documents to Ms. Apodaca in whole or in part, but withheld in its entirety a fact-finding report under Exemption 5 and an OPA employee's formal grievance document (Grievance Document) under Exemption 6.

On November 10, 2009, Ms. Apodaca appealed both the first and the second determinations. E-mail from Terry Apodaca, Appellant, to William Schwartz, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, dated November 10, 2009; E-mail from Terry Apodaca, Appellant, to William Schwartz, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, dated November 12, 2009. On December 9, 2009, OHA issued a decision addressing Ms. Apodaca's appeals. In pertinent part, OHA remanded the matter to NNSA to: (1) review and segregate responsive information contained in the Grievance Document; and (2) review all redacted federal salary information in the Personnel Documents to determine its releasability. See Terry M. Apodaca, Case Nos. TFA-0336 and TFA-0337 (2009).[1]

On April 13, 2010, NNSA issued a new determination letter to Ms. Apodaca in which it withheld portions of the Grievance Document pursuant to Exemption 6, claiming that the responsive information could not be released or redacted without concerns about invading the grievant's personal privacy. Letter from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA, to Terry Apodaca, April 13, 2010 (April 13 Determination Letter). With regard to the Personnel Documents, NNSA released in their entirety those dated from May 2007 to December 20, 2008, but withheld salary information from the Personnel Documents made effective after December 21, 2008, which concerned salaries determined under the NNSA Demonstration Project.[2] Id. at 1. Because of the nature of this new performance-based compensation program, NNSA determined that the withheld salary information could reveal an employee's performance rating. Id. at 2. Consequently, NNSA withheld this information pursuant to Exemption 6.

On May 11, 2010, Ms. Apodaca filed this Appeal and challenged NNSA's decision to withhold information under Exemption 6. Ms. Apodaca argues that NNSA failed to segregate and release information in the Grievance Document. E-mail from Terry Apodaca, Appellant, to William Schwartz, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, dated May 11, 2010 (May 11 Appeal). Ms. Apodaca further argues that NNSA improperly withheld salaries in the Personnel Documents. E-mail from Terry Apodaca, Appellant to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, dated May 15, 2010 (Apodaca E-mail). Ms. Apodaca maintains that according to a May 13, 2010, NNSACAST entitled "NNSA DNS Alert No. 005-2010," salary and performance award information is not classified as Personally Identifiable Information (PII) and should, therefore, be released. Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under the DOE's regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). Thus, the purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the

[2] The NNSA Demonstration Project was designed by NNSA in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) to modify the General Schedule (GS) classification and pay system by identifying several broad career paths, establishing pay bands which may cover more than one grade in each career path, eliminating longevity-based step progression and providing for annual pay adjustments based on performance. Personnel Demonstration Project; Pay Banding and Performance-Based Pay Adjustments in the National Nuclear Security Administration, 72 Fed. Reg. 72776 (December 21, 2007).

injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 602 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest, by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989); Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 1991); FLRA v. Dep't of Treasury Financial Management Service, 884 F.2d 1446, 1451 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 110 S. Ct. 864 (1990). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. at 762-70.

A. Grievance Document

On remand, NNSA was directed to review the Grievance Document to determine if any of the withheld information could be segregated and released without invading the grievant's personal privacy. See Terry M. Apodaca, Case Nos. TFA-0336 and TFA-0337 (2009). The Grievance Document contains a grievance and corresponding documents that were filed by one employee. Upon review, NNSA segregated and released to Ms. Apodaca portions of pages 2, 9, 10 and 16 of the 19-page Grievance Document. April 13 Determination Letter. Citing Exemption 6, NNSA withheld the name and other personally identifying information of the grievant. Id. NNSA maintained that release of this information would cause "inevitable harassment and unwanted solicitation" and would not shed light on the operations of the federal government. Id.

In her Appeal, Appellant argues that NNSA erred in withholding portions of the Grievance Document that are about her because "there is no basis for withholding information about me from me." Apodaca E-mail. Appellant's argument would have more weight if the only privacy interest to be protected in the withheld material was her own. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Committee for the Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749 (1989) (effectively holding that agencies should not invoke FOIA exemptions where the only interest sought to be protected is that of the requestor). In the present case, however, we find that any information relating to the Appellant can not be reasonably segregated and released without revealing the identity of the grievant. Accordingly, as discussed below, we find that this material was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

In reviewing an unredacted copy of the Grievance Document, we find that the withheld material consists of information that would reveal the identity of the grievant. We agree with NNSA that a substantial privacy interest exists regarding the identity of an employee filing a workplace complaint. See Virginia Johnson, Case No. VFA-0592, at slip. op. at 3 (August 8, 2000) (Johnson), citing Rothman v. USDA, No. 94-8151, slip. op. at 6 (C.D. Cal. June 17, 1996) (significant privacy interest in the names of federal employee parties to employment disputes). As for whether release of the information withheld would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government, we note that the name of the employee who filed the grievance, and other information that could identify him or her, says little if anything additional about the activities of the Government. See Johnson, slip. op. at 4. Given the significant privacy interest in the identity of the employee and the de minimus public interest that would be furthered by release of the employee's identity, we find that release of the withheld information in the Grievance Document would be a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Consequently, we find that Exemption 6 was properly applied to the Grievance Document.

B. Personnel Documents

In its April 13, 2010, determination, NNSA withheld salary information contained in the Personnel Documents dated on or after December 21, 2008, claiming that the withheld salary information is now tied to the employees' performance rating and cannot be released without also releasing performance-related data. In withholding this information, NNSA found that the "basic pay, locality adjustment, adjusted basic pay, and total salary/award . . . if supplied and combined with other identifying information, could allow one to reasonably deduce the performance rating and award for an individual under the NNSA performance based pay plan." Id. at 2. According to NNSA, the unnecessary release of these documents may result in injury and embarrassment to its employees. Id.

Our starting point is the federal regulation requiring that certain federal employee information be made available to the public. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a). That information includes "present and past annual salary rates (including performance awards or bonuses, incentive awards, merit pay amount, Meritorious or Distinguished Executive Ranks, and allowances and differentials). 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a)(4). That regulation provides an exception where disclosure of the enumerated information (i) would reveal other information that would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy or (ii) is otherwise protected from disclosure under a FOIA exemption. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(b).

As the foregoing indicates, under the general rule, NNSA is required to disclose its salaries. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a)(4). The argument that pay band salaries may disclose performance award information is unavailing since the general rule requires the disclosure of performance awards. Moreover, we fail to see the basis for an exception from that general rule. The argument that performance award information may allow one to reasonably deduce a performance rating is not unique to the pay band system. In addition, many factors affect the determination of a specific employee's salary within a pay band. Although disclosure of that salary amount might permit conjecture regarding the employee's personnel rating, it certainly would not "reveal" that information. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(b)(i). For these reasons, the argument is not a basis for an exception from the general rule requiring the disclosure of performance award information.

III. Conclusion

As the foregoing indicates, NNSA properly withheld the redacted information in the Grievance Document pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. As the foregoing also indicates, the salary information in the Personnel Documents must be released pursuant to 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a)(4). Therefore, the Appeal will be granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Terry Martin Apodaca on May 11, 2010, Case No. TFA-0380, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The National Nuclear Security Administration shall release the Personnel Documents without redacting salary information.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Eagle Rock Timber, Inc.

Date of Filing: May 18, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0381

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Eagle Rock Timber, Inc. (ERT) filed from a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Idaho Operations Office (IOO). In that determination, IOO responded to ERT's requests for documents under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. IOO identified several responsive documents, and released some records to ERT, but did not release others because the documents were the property of a DOE contractor, Battelle Energy Alliance, LLC (BEA), and, therefore, not agency records subject to disclosure under the FOIA. This appeal, if granted, would require IOO to release the previously-withheld responsive documents.

I. Background

BEA is the managing and operating contractor at the DOE's Idaho National Laboratory (INL). BEA subcontracted ERT to construct the Materials and Fuels Complex (MFC) Radiochemistry Laboratory at INL. On February 22, 2010, and March 15, 2010, ERT submitted FOIA requests for various documents pertaining to the construction project. See Letter from Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, IOO, to Rick R. Gokey, President, ERT (March 5, 2010) (Determination Letter 1); Letter from Timothy B. Jackson, Acting FOIA Officer, IOO, to Rick R. Gokey, President, ERT (April 20, 2010) (Determination Letter 2).

In response to ERT's requests, IOO issued determination letters identifying various documents and releasing documents to ERT, some in their entirety and some with information withheld pursuant to an exemption under the FOIA. Id. In addition, IOO identified two other types of documents as responsive to ERT's FOIA requests: (1) "MFC RCL GPP (C.R.20.20.11/C.R.30.20.11) monthly reports section of INL IFM Programs Projects Monthly Reports, from MFC Radio Chemistry Laboratory conception through January 2010;" and (2) "Non-conformance reports (NCRs) with final dispositions issued [by] BEA QA to MFC Radiochemistry Laboratory project team." Determination Letter 1. However, IOO did not provide these documents to ERT because they were records which were the property of BEA, not DOE, and therefore, they were not subject to release under the FOIA. Id.

On May 18, 2010, ERT submitted the present Appeal in which it contends that the documents that IOO withheld are subject to disclosure under the FOIA. ERT's principal arguments are that (1) the requested documents are generated by BEA "in accordance with its contract and transmitted to the [DOE] and the requested documents are therefore the property of the government;" and (2) the requested records fall within the definition of government property under the Department of Energy Acquisition Regulations (DEAR), 48 C.F.R. 970.5232-3 ("Accounts, Records, and Inspection"). Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

The FOIA does not specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record that is subject to FOIA requirements. The United States Supreme Court addressed this issue in Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are agency records for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. The federal courts have identified four relevant factors to consider in determining whether a document was under an agency's control at the time of a request:

(1) The intent of the document's creator to retain or relinquish control over the document;

(2) The ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit;

(3) The extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and

(4) The degree to which the record was integrated into the agency's record system or files.

See, e.g., Burka v. Dep't of Health and Human Services, 87 F.3d 508, 515 (D.C.Cir. 1996); see also Donald A. Verrill, Case No. TFA-0364 (2010).[1]

As an initial matter, while processing this Appeal, IOO informed us that BEA intends to release to ERT the documents identified as "MFC RCL GPP (C.R.20.20.11/C.R.30.20.11) monthly reports section of INL IFM Programs Projects Monthly Reports, from MFC Radio Chemistry Laboratory conception through January 2010." Consequently, the portion of this Appeal pertaining to those documents is moot and shall be dismissed.

Regarding the NCRs, we conclude that the records were not created or obtained by the DOE, nor were they under DOE control at the time of the FOIA requests. BEA generates the NCRs to "identify areas of concern regarding the work of its subcontractors." E-mail from Mary McKnight, Attorney-Advisor, IOO, to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (June 2, 2010). BEA has never transmitted the NCRs to DOE or indicated any intent to relinquish control of the records to DOE. Id. Further, because the NCRs have not been submitted to the DOE, DOE employees have not read or relied upon the records, the DOE does not have the ability to use or dispose of the records, and the records have not been integrated into the DOE's record system or files. Id. Therefore, we find that the NCRs are not "agency records" for purposes of the FOIA.

However, a finding that certain documents are not "agency records" does not end our inquiry. The DOE's FOIA regulations state:

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C § 552(b).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). Section I.15(b)(3) of the contract between DOE and BEA, DOE Contract No. DE-AC07-05ID14517 (DEAR § 970.5204-3, "Access To And Ownership of Records"), identifies as property of BEA "records relating to any procurement action by the contractor, except for records that under 48 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3, Accounts, Records, and Inspection, are described as property of the government.[2] See http://www.id.doe.gov/doeid/INLContract/INL-Contract.htm.

Applying the provisions of the contract between the DOE and BEA to the case at hand, it is clear that the NCRs are the property of BEA, not the DOE. BEA maintains these records as part of its subcontractor procurement system, and they are not considered government records under the DEAR § 970.5204-3 ("Access To And Ownership of Records"). Further, the DOE has not specified the NCRs in its contract with BEA as government records under DEAR § 970.5232-3 ("Accounts, Records, and Inspections"). Accordingly, the NCRs are not subject to public disclosure.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on May 18, 2010, by Eagle Rock Timber, Inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0381, is hereby dismissed in part and denied in part, as set forth in paragraphs (2) and (3) below.

(2) The portion of the Appeal pertaining to the withholding of "MFC RCL GPP (C.R.20.20.11/C.R.30.20.11) monthly reports section of INL IFM Programs Projects Monthly Reports, from MFC Radio Chemistry Laboratory conception through January 2010" is hereby dismissed.

[2] Section I. 43(d) of the contract (DEAR § 970.5232-3) states, in pertinent part, that "except as agreed upon by the Government and the contractor, all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents, system files, data bases, and other data evidencing costs allowable, collections accruing to the contractor in connection with the work under this contract, other applicable credits, and fee accruals under this contract, shall be the property of the Government, and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the contractor either as the contracting officer may from time to time direct during the progress of the work or, in any event, as the contracting officer shall direct upon completion or termination under this contract and final audits of account hereunder."

(3) The portion of the Appeal pertaining to "Non-conformance reports (NCRs) with final dispositions issued [by] BEA QA to MFC Radiochemistry Laboratory project team" is hereby denied.

(4) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner: Tarek Farag

Date of Filing: May 25, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0385

This Decision concerns a Motion for Reconsideration of a Decision and Order filed with the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) by Tarek Farag. In this Motion, Mr. Farag requests that OHA modify a Decision and Order that we issued in response to an Appeal Mr. Farag filed under a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. See Tarek Farag, Case No. TFA-0365 (2010).[*]

I. Background

Mr. Farag filed a FOIA request on December 2, 2009, in which he requested "the information and reasons upon which the two reviewers from the DOE decided that secrecy is not recommended" in regard to his patent application pertaining to a method and a process for isotope separation. Tarek Farag, Case No. TFA-0365, at 1 (2010). On March 24, 2010, the DOE Office of Classification (Classification) issued a determination in which it released to Mr. Farag numerous documents responsive to his request. Id. Mr. Farag appealed Classification's determination, challenging the adequacy of Classification's search for responsive records. Specifically, Mr. Farag based his Appeal on the fact that he did not receive a written explanation regarding the "secrecy not recommended" decision, even though two reviewers offered many times to give a written recommendation for the decision. Id. Mr. Farag also requested in his Appeal the qualifications of the reviewers who made the "secrecy not recommended" decision. Id.

OHA denied Mr. Farag's Appeal. In considering the Appeal, OHA assessed the scope of Classification's search for documents responsive to Mr. Farag's request. Classification informed OHA that Mr. Farag's FOIA request was forwarded to each office within Classification and all responsive records that the offices located were released to Mr. Farag. In addition, Classification informed OHA that, although the Classification reviewers were willing to provide a written explanation regarding the decision, a written explanation for the "secrecy not recommended" was deemed unnecessary and, therefore, never created. OHA concluded that Classification's search "was reasonably calculated to reveal the records responsive to [Mr. Farag's] request, including the written explanation if one existed." Id. at 2. OHA further noted that the FOIA does not require an agency to create documents in response to a request. Id. at 3 (internal citations omitted). In addition, OHA stated that requesters are not permitted to expand the scope of a FOIA request on Appeal, but must file a new FOIA request for those documents. Id. Mr. Farag had not requested information pertaining to the reviewers' qualifications in his initial FOIA request and, therefore, must file a new FOIA request for those documents. Id.

In his Motion for Reconsideration, Mr. Farag asserts that "a request pursuant to FOIA is not limited only to information stored in written format and the definition of documents is believed to extend to all possible formats for keeping information." Motion at 1. He continues, "If the ["secrecy not recommended"] reasons existed in a non-written format, like oral or human-brain format, it could be transformed easily into a written format, or should have been stored in written or electronic format." Id. In addition, Mr. Farag maintains that even if he did not request the reviewers' qualifications in his initial FOIA request, "it is more economical for the DOE to provide them or supplement the previous answer to save the time and resources [necessary] to examine a new request." Id. at 2.

II. Analysis

The DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8. However, in prior cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Citizen Action New Mexico, Case No. TFA-0215 (2007). In reviewing such requests for reconsideration, we may look to OHA's procedural regulations regarding modification or rescission of its orders. See 10 C.F.R. Part 1003, Subpart E; see also Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0237 (2007). Those regulations provide that an application for modification or rescission of an order shall be processed only when the application "demonstrates that it is based on significantly changed circumstances." 10 C.F.R. § 1003.55(b)(1).

Significantly changed circumstances includes "the discovery of material facts that were not known or could not have been known" at the time of the original proceeding; "the discovery of a law, rule, regulation … that was in effect" at the time of the original proceeding "and which, if such had been known to the OHA, would have been relevant to the proceeding and would have substantially altered the outcome;" or "a substantial change in the facts or circumstances upon which an outstanding or continuing order of the OHA affecting the applicant was issued, which change has occurred during the interval between the issuance of such order and the date of the application [for modification or rescission] and was caused by forces or circumstances beyond the control of the applicant." 10 C.F.R § 1003.55(b)(2).

Applying these standards to the case at hand, we find that Mr. Farag has not presented any evidence in his Motion warranting modification or rescission of our prior decision in Tarek Farag, Case No. TFA-0365 (2010). Mr. Farag's argument that the reviewers' explanations for the "secrecy not recommended" decision is subject to the FOIA, despite having never been committed to any tangible or searchable format, does not demonstrate "significantly changed circumstances." Specifically, Mr. Farag's argument is not evidence of a discovery of pertinent material facts unknown at the time of the Appeal, the discovery of an applicable law unknown at the time of the Appeal, or a substantial change in facts or circumstances. Rather, this argument is a restatement by Mr. Farag of the arguments he made in his Appeal. Similarly, Mr. Farag's assertions regarding the efficiency of providing him the information he requested in his Appeal pertaining to the reviewers' qualifications, despite the fact that he never made a FOIA request for that information, does not meet the standard of "significantly changed circumstances" as set forth above.

In sum, Mr. Farag's Motion for Reconsideration is an attempt to reargue the merits of his case, rather than a demonstration of "significantly changed circumstances" warranting modification or rescission of our decision in Tarek Farag, Case No. TFA-0365 (2010). Consequently, the Motion should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Tarek Farag on May 18, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0385, is denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	James J. Byron
Date of Filing:	May 26, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0386

On May 26, 2010, James J. Byron filed an appeal from a determination issued to him by the Richland Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE) regarding a request for documents that he submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to Mr. Byron's FOIA Request, Richland provided him with a number of documents, including some from which information was withheld pursuant to the FOIA. Mr. Byron also asserts that Richland produced one page that is not legible, and did not produce all documents that are responsive to his request. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Richland release the information it withheld from five specified pages, provide a more legible copy of a sixth page, and perform a new search for additional responsive documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. At issue in this Appeal is Exemption 6.

I. Background

On April 1, 2010, Mr. Byron submitted a FOIA request for employment records from the Hanford Site for Earl Leo Kirkwood, now deceased, who worked at the Site from 1943 through 1984. On April 22, 2010, Richland issued a determination letter regarding the request, in which it stated that it was releasing to Mr. Byron a copy of Mr. Kirkwood's employment record and a copy of his radiation exposure record. Richland deleted from his radiation exposure record the names, social security numbers and other personal identifiers of other individuals, relying on Exemption 6 of the FOIA. It further explained that AdvanceMed Hanford, which maintains the Hanford Site's medical records, would send Mr. Kirkwood's medical record to Mr. Byron directly.

In his Appeal, the Appellant challenges Richland's determination on three fronts. First, he contends that Richland "erroneously deleted" information from five pages that were provided to him, and he seeks unredacted copies of those pages. Second, he requests a better copy of one page of medical information that he found to be "unreadable." Finally, he requested a new search for documents that were created on or within five working days following specified dates, on which he believed Mr. Kirkwood was affected by radiation exposure incidents.

II. Analysis

1. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. National Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (NARFE). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally NARFE, 879 F.2d at 874.

In the course of this Appeal, we obtained unredacted copies of the five pages of exposure records from which Mr. Byron contends Richland erroneously deleted information. The information that was deleted from those pages consists of the names and other personal identifiers of individuals other than Mr. Kirkwood. Those personal identifiers include their payroll numbers, social security numbers, file numbers, the names and locations of their employers, and the starting and ending dates of their visits to a facility. They do not contain any information that relates to Mr. Kirkwood in any way. Applying the three-step analysis outlined above to the information that was withheld from Mr. Byron, we first determine that the individuals whose information was not disclosed have a significant privacy interest in having their anonymity preserved, particularly because these records link the individuals to exposure to unnamed substances. Next, we consider whether release of the individuals' names and identities would further the public interest by shedding light on government operations. We fail to see how disclosure of the identities of specific individuals would cast more light on government activities than that which is already revealed in the numerical values of exposure readings that were not withheld from Mr. Byron. Balancing the significant privacy interest of the individuals listed on these pages against a public interest that is minimal at best, we conclude that the public interest in the learning the identities of the individuals is outweighed by their privacy interest. Consequently, we find that release of the names and identities of other individuals listed on the same pages as Mr. Kirkwood would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, and that Richland properly withheld this information under Exemption 6.

2. Unreadable Document

After we received Mr. Byron's Appeal, we referred his request for a more legible copy of one document, a medical examination report, to Richland. The Richland FOIA Officer undertook an inspection of the original document and secured a new, fully legible copy, which was sent to Mr. Byron by certified mail on June 7, 2010. E-mail Message from Dorothy Riehle, Richland FOIA Officer, to William M. Schwartz, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals, June 8, 2010. This matter is now fully resolved.

3. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimus Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010).

We contacted Richland to determine the extent of the search that was conducted for documents responsive to Mr. Byron's request. At the Hanford Site records holding area, which stores all archive and historical records on past employees, subject matter experts conducted a search of both index cards and an electronic database. The Office of Radiation and Health Technology of the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory searched for and located Mr. Kirkwood's radiation exposure record. AdvanceMed Hanford, Inc., a contractor that maintains medical records on past and present employees also searched its records and located Mr. Kirkwood's medical records. The searches in all three locations employed both Mr. Kirkwood's name and his social security number, and all responsive documents that were located were then provided to Mr. Byron. E-mail Message from Dorothy Riehle, Richland FOIA Officer, to William M. Schwartz, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals, June 2, 2010.

Our review of the search for documents responsive to Mr. Byron's request indicates that Richland conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover relevant documents. It searched the offices most likely to possess responsive documents. Officials who were most likely to possess information as to where relevant documents existed were consulted in the search effort. Given the information provided to us, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search for responsive documents and produced copies of all those documents for Mr. Byron.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that Richland conducted an adequate search for documents responsive to Mr. Byron's request. We also find that Richland properly withheld information pursuant to Exemption 6 from five pages of exposure reports. Finally, Richland has produced a more legible copy of one page that Mr. Byron identified as unreadable.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by James J. Byron, Case Number TFA-0386, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: American Small Business League

Date of Filing: June 15, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0388

On June 15, 2010, the American Small Business League (ASBL) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 14, 2010, by the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of Economic Impact and Diversity (ED) in response to a request for documents that ASBL submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/ED release any responsive material to ASBL.

I. Background

On March 15, 2010, ASBL requested that ED provide "copies of any, all, each and every video taken from the question and answer portion of the Plenary Session on "Teaming" from Wednesday, June 25, 2008 from 11:15 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., from the Department of Energy's 9th Annual Small Business Conference." Letter from ASBL to Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) (June 1, 2010) (Appeal). ED issued a determination letter explaining that it did not locate any responsive material. Letter from ED to ASBL (April 14, 2010) (Determination Letter).

On April 30, 2010, ASBL sent a letter to OHA appealing the ED response. However, this appeal was deficient because it did not contain a copy of the determination letter being appealed, as required by DOE regulations. See 10 C.F.R. §1004.8(b). On June 8, 2010, ASBL sent another letter to OHA appealing the determination. We advised ASBL that the appeal was deficient under our regulations because it did not contain a copy of the determination letter in question. See Letter from Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA Staff Attorney, to ASBL (June 10, 2010). On June 15, 2010, ASBL cured the deficiency and properly filed this appeal.

In its appeal, ASBL asks OHA to order ED to release a copy of the video of the conference session referenced above. If this appeal were granted, ED would be required to conduct another search for the video of the Teaming session held on June 25, 2008, at the 9th Annual Small Business Conference.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. The FOIA states that an agency must conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990); see also Gary Maroney, Case No. TFA-0267 (2008). [1] The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See e.g. Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).

We contacted the DOE FOIA office and ED for additional information so that we could evaluate the search for responsive records. ED stated that no responsive documents existed because ED did not videotape the question-and-answer session referenced by ASBL in its request. See Electronic Mail Message from Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OAH Staff Attorney (June 30, 2010); Electronic Mail Message from Andy Diaz, ED to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer (April 12, 2010). ED did not provide any further information about the session. Although the requester saw cameras at the conference, there is no evidence that the session in question was actually recorded. Accordingly, this appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by American Small Business League on June 15, 1010, OHA Case Number TFA-0388, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Southeastern Legal Foundation, Inc.
Date of Filing:	June 8, 2010
Case Numbers:	TFA-0389

On June 8, 2010, Southeastern Legal Foundation, Inc., (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 27, 2010, by the FOIA/Privacy Act Group of the Department of Energy (DOE/HQ). In that determination, DOE/HQ denied the Appellant's request for expedited processing of the request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE/HQ expedite the processing of the Appellant's FOIA request.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of request in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On April 12, 2010, the Appellant requested records that relate to federal funding for research on global climate change. Specifically, the Appellant sought applications; awards, grants or funding notifications; accompanying and subsequent correspondence with applicants or recipients; denials or deferrals; and any agreements entered by the funding grantee in furtherance of or in conjunction with such research. Request E-mail dated April 12, 2010, from Shannon L. Goessling, Executive Director, Appellant, to DOE/HQ. The Appellant also requested expedited processing because "research grants are subject to expiration and because agency regulations or statutory provisions that are promulgated as a result of research are subject to change upon further development of research." Id.

On April 27, 2010, DOE/HQ denied the Appellant's request for expedited processing, arguing that the request did not establish any urgency to inform the public that would warrant expedited treatment. Determination Letter dated April 27, 2010, from DOE/HQ to Appellant at 2. Further, DOE/HQ concluded that the Appellant did not identify any imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. Id. at 2.

On June 8, 2010, the Appellant submitted this Appeal of DOE/HQ's denial of expedited processing. The Appellant asks that the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) order DOE/HQ to expedite the processing of its FOIA request. Appeal Letter dated June 3, 2010, from Appellant to Director, OHA.

II. Analysis

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up in line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an "urgency to inform" the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v). It is obvious that the present request does not involve information which could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or safety of an individual. Therefore, our analysis in this case will examine the second situation – the "urgency to inform."

In order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform" and, hence, a "compelling need," courts must consider at least three factors: (1) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (2) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (3) whether the request concerns federal government activity. Al-Fayed v. CIA, 254 F.3d 300, 310 (D.C. Cir. 2001).

Courts have found sufficient urgency to grant expedited processing in situations of an "ongoing public controversy associated with a specific time frame." Long v. Dep't of Homeland Security, 436 F. Supp. 2d 38 (D.D.C. 2006). Requesters have demonstrated urgency in several ways. See, e.g., Washington Post v. Dep't of Homeland Security, 459 F. Supp. 2d 61, 65 (D.D.C. 2006) (granting expedited processing based on public need for requested material concerning visitors to vice presidential offices and degree to which lobbyists influenced policy discussions during ongoing investigation prior to election); Gerstein v. CIA, No. C-06-4643, 2006 WL 3462658 (N.D. Cal. November 29, 2006) (granting expedited processing because of significant interest in quickly disseminating news regarding a subject currently under debate by Congress); American Civil Liberties Union v. Dep't of Defense, No. C-06-01698 WHA, 2006 WL 1469418, at *6 (N.D. Cal. May 25, 2006) (granting expedited processing for information related to a "breaking news story," i.e., a story that would lose value if it were delayed).

Courts have denied requests for expedited processing if the requester fails to demonstrate urgency. See, e.g., Al-Fayed, 254 F.3d at 310 (finding that there is no evidence of a substantial public interest in plaintiff's allegations and that plaintiff did not demonstrate any significant adverse consequences if expedited processing was denied); Long, 436 F. Supp. 2d at 43-44 (denying request due to generalized need for information and requester's failure to identify an imminent action); Electronic Privacy Info. Ctr. v. Dep't of Justice, 322 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2003) (concluding that plaintiff failed to demonstrate urgency because its proffer of 31 newspaper articles concerning the general subject of FOIA request did not make a story a matter of "current exigency"). See also Eugenie Reich, Case No. TFA-0187 (2007) (denying request for expedited processing because journalist did not establish urgency and did not make clear that the requested information would not be useful to her if processed within the time frame of a normal FOIA request).

In its Appeal, the Appellant argues that rather than following the standard set forth by the court in Al-Fayed, we should follow the standard set forth by the court in Edmonds v. FBI, 2002 WL 32539613 (D.D.C. 2002). We must reject the Appellant's argument. The standard set forth in Edmonds is whether the matter (1) is the subject of widespread and exceptional media interest and (2) calls into question the integrity of the government and, therefore, affects public confidence. Id. The Edmonds court was, however, interpreting regulations set forth by the Department of Justice (DOJ), regarding how that agency would evaluate expedited processing requests. See id. at *3. In Edmonds, the court found that the DOJ regulations fell outside and went beyond the FOIA's definition of "compelling need." Id. Edmonds is inapposite in the present case since the DOE does not have similar regulations. Consequently, we must reject the Appellant's argument and will apply the standards for expedited processing set forth in Al-Fayed.

The Appellant also argues that the information requested will shed light on the "anthropogenic global warming or climate change." Appeal Letter at 2. The Appellant argues that if the regulatory scheme contemplated regarding this issue were fully implemented, devastating consequences would follow. Id. at 2-3. The Appellant claims that it will use the requested information to ensure that the grant and research process implemented in producing and supporting the "anthropogenic global warming or climate change" regulations are free from taint. Id. at 3.

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that the Appellant has not established a compelling need for expedited processing of its request. First, the Appellant has not established that the requested information is a matter of current exigency to the American public. It is true that global warming or climate change affects the entire American public. However, "[t]he public's right to know, although a significant and important value, would not by itself be sufficient to satisfy [the "urgency to inform"] standard." Al-Fayed, 254 F.2d at 310. Substantial interest on the part of the American public does not amount to exigency. Electronic Privacy Info. Ctr., 322 F. Supp. 2d at 5. Second, the Appellant has not made clear that the requested information will not be useful if processed within the time frame of a normal FOIA request (i.e., 20 working days). The fact that research grants are subject to expiration and regulations and statutory provision are promulgated as a result of the research does not demonstrate the requisite urgency. The Appellant has not presented any "significant adverse consequence" to a recognized interest if expedited processing of this request were denied. See Al-Fayed, 254 F.3d at 311; American Civil Liberties Union, 2006 WL 1469418 at *8. Accordingly, the Appellant's argument that expedited processing is necessary is speculative.

For the reasons stated above, we find that the Appellant has not demonstrated a compelling need for expedited processing of its FOIA request. Accordingly, this Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Southeastern Legal Foundation, Inc., Case No. TFA-0389, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Nuclear Watch New Mexico

Date of Filing: June 9, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0390

Nuclear Watch New Mexico (NWNM) filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) of the Department of Energy issued on March 8, 2010. In that determination, NNSA withheld documents that NWNM requested under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the documents.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

In its request, NWNM sought access to a copy of the FY 2009 Performance Evaluation Report (PER) for Los Alamos National Security, LLC's management and operation of the Los Alamos National Laboratory under DOE contract no. DE-AC52-06NA25396. In its determination letter, NNSA identified eight documents that it deemed to be responsive to NWNM's request. NNSA withheld all of these documents in their entirety under Exemption 3 of the FOIA. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). Specifically, NNSA determined that Exemption 3 is applicable because the PERs are "source selection information" (that is, information that is used by an agency to evaluate a bid or proposal during the process of awarding a competitively-bid contract), and that the Procurement Integrity Act, 41 U.S.C. § 423 (PIA), forbids the release of source selection information.

In its Appeal, NWNM alleges that similar documents were released in previous years, and questions what it perceives to be a change in that disclosure policy. NWNM also argues that the PIA was intended to protect the integrity of competitive bidding processes, and not to shield for-profit NNSA contractors from public accountability. Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the PIA is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., U.S. Ecology, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,153 (1995); Federal Sources, Inc., 24 DOE ¶ 80, 141 (1994). NWNM has not persuaded us that this determination is erroneous, and for the reasons set forth below, we conclude that the arguments raised in their Appeal are without merit.

As an initial matter, even if NWNM's unsupported allegation that, in prior years, the NNSA released other PERs, is true, that does not preclude NNSA from invoking Exemption 3 in this case. Nothing in the FOIA requires the NNSA to release documents that it is required by other statutes to withhold, simply because similar documents may have erroneously been released in the past. The determinative issue is whether NNSA correctly applied Exemption 3 in this case, and we conclude that it did.

The PIA prohibits knowing disclosure of "contractor bid or proposal information or source selection information before the award of a Federal agency procurement contract to which the information relates." 41 U.S.C. § 423(a)(1). The statute, quoted in pertinent part, defines "source selection information" as "any of the following information prepared for use by a Federal agency for the purpose of evaluating a bid or proposal to enter into a federal agency procurement contract, if that information has not been previously made available to the public or disclosed publicly . . . (J) Other information marked as "source selection information" based on a case-by-case determination by the head of the agency, his designee, or the contracting officer that its disclosure would jeopardize the integrity or successful completion of the federal agency procurement to which the information relates." We have been informed that the DOE Secretary's duly authorized designate, David Boyd, Deputy Director of the Office of Procurement & Assistance Management, determined that release of these particular documents would jeopardize the integrity of the Federal procurement process. See memorandum of July 1, 2010 telephone conversation between Shelly Turner, NNSA, and Robert Palmer, OHA Senior Staff Attorney. NWNM does not dispute that the PERs are source selection information.

NWNM does argue, however, that the PIA was never intended to shield NNSA contractors from public accountability. The appellant's contention appears to be that since it is a public interest group, and not a potential competitor for a Federal contract, it should be granted access to the requested documents.

We do not agree. First, the PIA does not draw a distinction between releases of the specified information to public interest or other groups and releases to potential bidders. Second, the statute's definition of "source selection information" excludes information that has "been previously made available to the public or disclosed publicly." Consequently, release of these documents to NWNM would fatally compromise the DOE's ability to withhold these documents from future competitors for Federal contracts. Finally, nothing would prevent NWNM from publishing these PERs or publicizing them in any way that it saw fit, including ways that could result in competitors for Federal contracts gaining access to the information.

The NNSA properly applied Exemption 3 in withholding the eight PERs. We will therefore deny NWNM's Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Nuclear Watch New Mexico, Case Number TFA-0390, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	American Small Business League
Date of Filing:	June 23, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0394

On June 23, 2010, the American Small Business League (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 2, 2010, by the Golden Field Office (Golden) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Golden responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, Golden identified and released portions of documents responsive to the Appellant's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require Golden to release additional information responsive to the Appellant's request.

I. Background

On March 11, 2010, the Appellant requested copies of "[a]ny, all, each and every contract signed by Contracting Officer Tammie M. Lawler for the last quarter of Fiscal Year 2009. Specifically, the pages that contain the Contractor/Vendor Name, dollar amount obligated, PIID, IDVPIID numbers, Contracting Officer Business Size Determination." Request E-Mail dated March 11, 2010, from Kevin Baron, Appellant, to DOE. On June 2, 2010, Golden released 584 pages of "copies of the database entry forms for all contracts signed by Contracting Officer Tammie M. Lawler for the last quarter of Fiscal Year 2009." Determination Letter dated June 2, 2010, from Derek Passarelli, Acting Deputy Manager and Chief Counsel, Golden, to Appellant. A number of the 584 pages were redacted under Exemptions 5 and 6 of the FOIA.

On June 23, 2010, the Appellant appealed the Determination, claiming that it did not agree to modify its request to seek only the database entry forms relating to the contracts. Appeal Letter received June 23, 2010, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. The Appellant further asked that all the information originally requested be provided in full. Id. In addition, the Appellant challenged the applicability of Exemptions 5 and 6 to some information in the database entry forms.

II. Analysis

The Appellant requested "copies of contracts signed by Tammie M. Lawler." Golden provided "copies of database entry forms for all contracts signed by Tammie M. Lawler," stating that the Appellant had agreed to modify its request in that manner. We contacted the Appellant who told us that he does not remember modifying the request. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated July 12, 2010, between Appellant and Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. The Appellant still wants copies of the contracts. Id. Given the lack of any written approval of a modification of the request, we will remand the matter to Golden for it to address the Appellant's request for copies of the contracts signed by Tammie Lawler.

The Appellant also challenged Golden's withholding of information under Exemptions 5 and 6. As indicated above, the Appellant maintains that he requested the contracts not the database entry forms. Accordingly, we need not address the withholdings from the database entry forms. As also explained above, we are remanding the matter to Golden to process the request for the contracts.

III. Conclusion

We will remand this Appeal to Golden for it to release copies of the contracts requested by the Appellant or to issue a determination letter justifying any withholding. Accordingly, this Appeal will be granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by American Small Business League, Case No. TFA-0394, is hereby granted in part as set forth in the following paragraph.

(2) The Appeal is remanded to the Golden Field Office to address the Appellant's request for copies of the identified contracts.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review. Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Tri-Valley CAREs
Date of Filing:	June 30, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0395

On June 30, 2010, Tri-Valley CAREs perfected an Appeal from a determination the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center in Albuquerque, New Mexico (NNSA/SC) issued on May 6, 2010.[1] The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from NNSA/SC the Mission Need Gap Information Sheet for the Target Fabrication Facility (TFF) and all background and related documents on which the Mission Need Gap Information Sheet relied. Appeal at 1. On May 6, 2010, NNSA/SC issued a determination to the Appellant in which it released 11 documents in their entirety that it had identified as responsive to the request. Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, Freedom of Information Act Officer, Office of Public Affairs, NNSA/SC, to Appellant (May 6, 2010). In its Appeal, Tri-Valley CAREs challenges the adequacy of NNSA/SC's search for responsive documents and seeks better or more recent versions of some of the documents that were produced. Specifically, the Appellant stated that NNSA/SC failed to provide:

- the Mission Need Gap Information Sheet itself, though it did provide a number of supporting documents;
- any documents that reflect a NEPA [National Environmental Protection Act] review of the facility, though documents provided specifically indicate that such a review would be undertaken;
- a final version of a document entitled "Program Requirements for the TFF", though a draft version was provided; and
- a final version of a document entitled "Mission Need Statement for the Target Fabrication Facility.

Appeal at 2. In addition, the Appellant seeks a more legible copy of a document entitled "Document No. 3." Id.

[1] The Office of Hearings and Appeals received a submission from Tri-Valley CAREs on June 28, 2010, that was deemed incomplete because it lacked a copy of the determination letter from which Tri-Valley was taking its appeal. Upon receipt of the determination letter, the submission was considered complete and ready to be addressed.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Natural Resources Defense Council, Case No. TFA-0127 (2005).[2] The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

We therefore contacted the FOIA division of the NNSA/SC's Office of Public Affairs, which obtained information regarding the search that was performed in this case from those responsible for the search. Many knowledgeable personnel searched for documents responsive to this request at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL), where the TFF was a conceptual project that was never funded. E-mail from Kathryn Craft Rogers, LLNL Representative to the NNSA Livermore Site Office's Staff Relations Division, to Christina Hamblen, Office of Public Affairs, NNSA/SC, (July 19, 2010). Ms. Craft Rogers explained that program leaders, facility managers, directors, and a chief scientist searched their respective files for the documents the Appellant now seeks on appeal and found no versions other than those that have already been provided to the Appellant. Id. She also stated that the interim documents provided to the Appellant would not have been put in final form unless the project was funded, which it was not; for the same reason, a NEPA review was never conducted. Id. In addition, none of the cognizant managers or scientists who were consulted believes that a Mission Need Gap Information Sheet was ever created. Id. Finally, after checking with ten people regarding Document No. 3, Ms. Craft Rogers stated that the facility has no version, more legible or not, other than the one that was already provided to the Appellant. Id.

After reviewing the record in this case, we find that NNSA/SC performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal all documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Accordingly, Tri-Valley CAREs's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CAREs on June 30, 2010, Case No. TFA-0395, is hereby

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	American Small Business League
Date of Filing:	July 1, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0397

On July 1, 2010, American Small Business League (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 14, 2010, by the Naval Reactors Laboratory Field Office (NRLFO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NRLFO responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, NRLFO indicated that it had no documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenged the adequacy of NRLFO's search for documents. This appeal, if granted, would require NRLFO to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On May 19, 2010, the Appellant requested "copies of any, all, each and every contract awarded by Anthony J. DeNapoli from January 1, 2008 to April 1, 2008 where the value of each contract was in excess of $1 million." Request E-mail dated May 19, 2010, from Appellant to DOE. On June 14, 2010, NRLFO responded to the Appellant that it had no documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Determination Letter dated June 14, 2010, from C. P. Nunn, Chief Counsel, NRLFO, to Appellant (Determination Letter).

On July 1, 2010, the Appellant appealed the Determination, claiming that he had seen copies of contracts with Mr. DeNapoli's name that were in excess of $1 million. Appeal Letter received July 1, 2010, from Kevin Baron, Director of Government Affairs, Appellant, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted NRLFO to determine what type of search was conducted. In response, NRLFO indicated that Mr. DeNapoli searched NRLFO's contract division's core and contract database for any contract awarded during the requested time period where the value of the contract was in excess of $1 million. Memorandum dated July 16, 2010, from NRLFO to Janet Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. Mr. DeNapoli determined that NRFLO awarded only two contract in excess of $1 million during the requested time period. Id. Both contracts were awarded by Mr. DeNapoli's supervisor, a fact that Mr. DeNapoli confirmed by viewing the signature copies of the contracts and verifying that he did not sign those contracts. Id. To confirm that Mr. DeNapoli was correct, he forwarded copies of the contracts to NRLFO's chief counsel who confirmed that Mr. DeNapoli did not sign the contracts in question. Id.

As noted above, the Appellant claims that he has viewed copies of contracts with Mr. DeNapoli's name on them that were in excess of $1 million. Nonetheless, Mr. DeNapoli is the person most knowledgeable about what contracts he has signed. Further, he searched the database that contained information about all contracts awarded by NRLFO. We cannot explain why the Appellant claims to have seen documents that are responsive to his request, nor need we do so. We believe that NRLFO's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information.

III. Conclusion

The search that NRLFO conducted was reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Appellant's request. Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: Steven R. Schooley

Filing Date: July 9, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0398

This Decision concerns the Appeal that Steven R. Schooley filed from a determination that the Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (EMCBC) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him on June 11, 2010. In that determination, the EMCBC responded to Mr. Schooley's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The EMCBC withheld information under FOIA Exemptions 3, 4, 5, and 6. Mr. Schooley challenges the adequacy of the EMCBC's search, the adequacy of the determination letter, and every withholding. If we grant this Appeal, the EMCBC would be required to (i) conduct a new search and either release any newly discovered information or justify its withholding; (ii) issue a new determination; and (iii) release information that it withheld under FOIA Exemptions 3, 4, 5, and 6.

I. Background

In 1983, the DOE hired a contractor to manage its Uranium Mill Tailing Remedial Action Project (UMTRA). The contractor hired a sub-contractor to work on a certain site. Following termination of the subcontract, litigation began based on claims and counter claims between the contractor and the subcontractor. The trial court entered a multi-million dollar judgment against the contractor. The contractor sought reimbursement from the DOE. The question of reimbursement has been the subject of protracted litigation. See EMCBC-00459.

Mr. Schooley requested information about the UMTRA contract. Determination Letter. (He limited his request to documents created since May 1, 2006. Id.) The EMCBC released some information and withheld other information under FOIA Exemptions 3, 4, 5, and 6. Id. Documents with withheld information generally fall into two broad groups: documents discussing litigation strategy[1] and documents discussing litigation costs.[2] The EMCBC withheld information in the first group under Exemption 5 (with information in one document withheld under Exemption 6) and withheld information in the second group under Exemptions 3, 4, 5, and 6.

On Appeal, Mr. Schooley challenged the adequacy of the EMCBC's search, the adequacy of its determination, and every withholding. Appeal Letter at 1-2.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

In his Appeal, Mr. Schooley complained that "various documents reference attachments but the attachments were not produced nor is their absence explained." Appeal Letter at 2.

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness . . . does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[3]

We contacted the EMCBC to gain additional information to evaluate its search. It stated that the FOIA Officer contacted the Contracting Officers responsible for the UMTRA contract. The Contracting Officers searched and reviewed paper files and electronic databases, including the internal network drive. These included the contract administration file and related e-mails. The EMCBC released information that was responsive and not withheld under an exemption.

Based on the description of the search, we find that the EMCBC conducted an adequate search because its search was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. In these cases, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Therefore, we will deny this element of the Appeal.

EMCBC-00587 – EMCBC-00588; EMCBC-00615 – EMCBC-00616; EMCBC-00618 – EMCBC-00622; EMCBC-00624 – EMCBC-00626; and EMCBC-00639 – EMCBC-00650.

[2] These include documents EMCBC-00009 – EMCBC-00027; EMCBC-00034 – EMCBC-00047; EMCBC-00109 – EMCBC-00147; EMCBC-00155 – EMCBC-00316; EMCBC-00321; EMCBC-00337; EMCBC-00339 – EMCBC-00448; EMCBC-00461 – EMCBC-00466; EMCBC-00486 – EMCBC-00487; and EMCBC-00668 – EMCBC-00673.

[3] OHA decisions regarding the FOIA issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

B. Adequacy of the Determination Letter

In his Appeal, Mr. Schooley complained that the EMCBC's "document withholdings and non-disclosures are insufficiently supported nor factually justified." Appeal Letter at 2.

A determination letter must (1) describe the results of the search; (2) indicate which information was withheld; (3) specify the exemption or exemptions invoked; and (4) explain briefly how the exemption applies. Tom Marks, Case No. TFA-0288 (2009).

The EMCBC issued Mr. Schooley a determination letter that includes a 38-page Vaughn index, which describes the subject matter of all responsive documents; organizes the documents by serial numbers stamped onto the documents; lists the number of pages of each document; identifies the exemption or exemptions invoked; and explains how the exemptions apply. Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820 (D.C. Cir. 1973). Because these features meet the Tom Marks requirements, we find that the EMCBC issued Mr. Schooley an adequate determination letter.

C. The FOIA Exemptions

The FOIA requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request unless it falls within enumerated exemptions. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a), 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly, to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

Mr. Schooley challenged every withholding as "overbroad . . . and improper." Appeal Letter at 1.

1. Exemption 3

The EMCBC invoked Exemption 3 to withhold the taxpayer identification numbers that appear in the documents that the firms submitted to the EMCBC.

Exemption 3 protects information "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3).

Federal law requires employers to protect taxpayer identification numbers. See 26 U.S.C. 6103, et seq. An agency may invoke Exemption 3 to withhold information that is confidential under 26 U.S.C. § 6103(a). Tax Analysts v. Internal Revenue Serv., 410 F.3d 715, 717 (D.C. Cir. 2005). Therefore, the EMCBC properly invoked Exemption 3 to withhold the taxpayer identification numbers.

2. Exemption 4

The EMCBC invoked Exemption 4 to withhold billing rates, rate multipliers, and accounting and routing numbers from one or more firms.

Exemption 4 protects trade secrets from disclosure. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). Exemption 4 also protects information that is commercial or financial, obtained from a person, and privileged or confidential. Id.

Information is "commercial" if "it serves a 'commercial function' or is of a 'commercial nature.'" Nat'l Ass'n of Home Builders v. Norton, 309 F.3d 26, 38 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (citations omitted). "Person" includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, associations, and public or private organizations other than an agency. Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.3d 93, 95 (2d Cir. 1996) (applying the definition of person in 5 U.S.C. § 551(2)).

The definition of "confidential" depends on whether the information was voluntarily or involuntarily submitted to the agency. See Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992). In determining whether a document was submitted voluntarily or involuntarily, the agency must rely upon "legal authority, rather than the parties' beliefs or intentions. . . ." Ctr. for Auto Safety v. Nat'l Highway Traffic Safety Admin., 244 F.3d 144, 149 (D.C. Cir. 2001).

Voluntarily submitted information is confidential if the submitter would not customarily release it to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project, 975 F.2d at 879. The agency invoking Exemption 4 has the burden of proving the submitter's custom. Id. Involuntarily submitted information is confidential if releasing it is likely to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information or cause substantial harm to the submitter's competitive position. Nat'l Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). "Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial harm . . . cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents." Pub. Cit. Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

In reviewing the EMCBC's Vaughn index and the documents themselves, we could not determine whether the information withheld under Exemption 4 was submitted to the EMCBC voluntarily or involuntarily. We will, therefore, remand this matter for the EMCBC to issue a new determination that explains whether the information was submitted voluntarily or involuntarily and the application of Exemption 4 to the documents responsive to Mr. Schooley's request.

3. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, [information] must . . . satisfy two conditions: [1] its source must be a Government agency, and [2] it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8.

Information satisfies Klamath's first condition if it is an inter-agency or intra-agency communication. Id. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5)). The statute defines "agency" broadly, including "any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government . . . or any independent regulatory agency." Klamath, 532 U.S. at 9 (citing 5 U.S.C. § 552(f)).

A communication between an agency and a private party is also an intra-agency communication when the "common interest" doctrine applies. Hunton & Williams v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 590 F.3d 272, 277 (4th Cir. 2010); Hanson v. U.S. Agency for Int'l Dev., 372 F.3d 286 (4th Cir. 2004); accord Klamath, 532 U.S. at 10. The common interest doctrine applies when an agency and a private party share an interest and the two decide to cooperate in pursuit of the public interest. Hunton & Williams, 590 F.3d at 277-283. "[I]n a limited sense," the private party "becomes a part of the enterprise that the agency is carrying out." Id. at 280. Therefore, the communications "can be understood as 'intra-agency' for the purposes of Exemption 5." Id.

In Hunton & Williams, a technology company sued a manufacturer for patent infringement. Id. at 274. A trial court enjoined the manufacturer from making the infringing product. During the appeal, the agency and the manufacturer exchanged litigation-related information. The technology company filed a FOIA request for the communications between the agency and the manufacturer. Id. at 275. Under Exemption 5, the agency invoked a privilege to withhold the communications. On appeal, the technology company argued that the agency improperly withheld the communications because they were not inter-agency or intra-agency communications. Id. at 276-77.

The court held that under the common interest doctrine, the communications between the agency and the manufacturer were considered intra-agency communications. See id. at 282. The agency and the manufacturer shared an interest in the government's continued use of the manufacturer's products and decided to exchange information to further that goal. Therefore, the agency and the manufacturer "could rely on one another's advice, secure in the knowledge that privileged communications would remain just that." Id. at 282-83.

Here, the EMCBC is a federal agency that shares a common interest with a private party (the contractor). As in Hunton & Williams, the EMCBC and the private party share a mutual interest in limiting damage to the EMCBC from a trial decision adverse to the private party. Also, as in Hunton & Williams, the EMCBC and the private party decided to share litigation information to further that goal.[4] Therefore, the litigation-related communications are intra-agency communications for purposes of Exemption 5. For this reason, we find that the litigation-related information satisfies Klamath's first condition.

Information satisfies Klamath's second condition if it falls within "civil discovery privileges," such as the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product privilege, or the deliberative process privilege. Klamath, 532 U.S. at 8 (citations omitted).

a. The Attorney-Client Relationship

An agency has an attorney-client relationship with an attorney for a private party when the common interest doctrine applies to the communications. Hanson, 372 F.3d at 292-93.

[4] This fact is apparent from reviewing the redacted documents that the EMCBC submitted for our review.

We find that the EMCBC has an attorney-client relationship with the contractor's attorneys because, as explained above, the common interest doctrine applies to the litigation-related communications between the EMCBC and the contractor.

b. The Attorney-Client Privilege and the Attorney Work Product Privilege

The EMCBC invoked the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product privilege to withhold information in both groups of documents.[5]

An agency may withhold information under the attorney-client privilege if it is a "confidential communication[] between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc., v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). The privilege protects only those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 291, 403-04 (1976). It applies to facts that a client gives to the attorney and opinions that the attorney gives to the client. See, e.g., Jernigan v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998). The privilege protects the attorney-client relationship – it encourages full disclosure to attorneys so that they can render effective legal assistance. Tornay v. United States, 840 F.2d 1424, 1426 (9th Cir. 1988).

The attorney work product privilege "is distinct from and broader than the attorney-client privilege." In re Columbia/ HCA Health-Care Corp. Billing Practices Lit., 293 F.3d 289, 294 (6th Cir. 2002). It protects "documents or tangible things that are prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial by or for another party or its representative. . . ." FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3). The privilege protects the litigation process itself – it "shelters the mental process of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which [the attorney] can analyze and prepare [the] client's case." United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975).

i. The Litigation Strategy Documents

We find that the EMCBC properly invoked the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product privilege to withhold the litigation strategy information in the first group of documents. Disclosing it would reveal the facts that the agency and the contractor provided to their attorneys and the opinions that they received. It would also reveal the analysis that the attorneys used to advise whether and how to continue the litigation.

[5] An agency may also invoke the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product privilege under Exemption 4. See, e.g., Varnadore & Freels, Case No. LFA-0375 (1994).

The EMCBC stated that certain information "could be protected" under the deliberative process privilege – information in Documents EMCBC-00293 – EMCBC-00295; EMCBC-00349 – EMCBC-00350; EMCBC-00356 – EMCBC-00362; EMCBC-00388; EMCBC-00406; EMCBC-00411 – EMCBC-00413; EMCBC-00418; EMCBC-00422 – EMCBC-00426; EMCBC-00437. We need not address the deliberative process privilege because the EMCBC did not invoke it and because we have found that these documents were properly withheld under other privileges.

ii. The Attorney Invoice Statements

The attorney-client privilege protects "correspondence, bills, ledgers, statements, and time records which . . . reveal the motive of the client in seeking representation, litigation strategy, or the specific nature of the services provided. . . ." Clarke v. Amer. Commerce Nat'l Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992) (citations omitted). But it does not protect the identity of the client, the amount of the fees, the identification of payment by case file name, and the general purpose of the work performed. Id.

Following Clarke, we find that the EMCBC may not invoke the attorney-client privilege to withhold the identity of the client or clients, the identification of payment by case file name, the amount of fees, or the general purpose of the work performed. Similarly, we find that the EMCBC may not invoke the attorney work product to withhold this information because disclosing it would not reveal the mental process that an attorney used to analyze the case.

However, information describing the specific purposes of the work performed may be protected by the attorney-client and the attorney work product privileges. We will, therefore, remand for the EMCBC to issue a new determination stating whether the attorney-client or the attorney work product privileges protect any information describing the specific purposes of the work performed.

4. Exemption 6

The EMCBC invoked Exemption 6 to withhold information in a number of documents. In the first group, it withheld a personal phone number. In the second group, it withheld a personal phone number, a personal e-mail address, employee identification numbers, and phone numbers called during the course of litigation.

FOIA Exemption 6 protects from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy[.]" 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. The Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

We must apply a three-step analysis to determine whether the DOE properly withheld information under Exemption 6. First, we must determine whether disclosing the information compromises a significant privacy interest. If we do not identify a privacy interest, the DOE may not withhold the information. Ripskis v. Dep't of Housing & Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, we must determine whether releasing the information would further the public interest by shedding light on government operations and activities. See Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 773 (1989). Third, we must balance the privacy interest against the public interest to determine whether releasing the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

Releasing the personal e-mail address, personal phone numbers, employee identification numbers, and numbers called during the course of litigation would compromise significant privacy interests. Because it would shed little or no light on government activities, releasing that information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Therefore, we find that the EMCBC properly invoked Exemption 6.

D. Public Interest

If the FOIA exempts information from mandatory disclosure, the DOE should still release it if doing so is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

The release of information withheld under the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product privilege could adversely affect the agency's ability to defend its interests in litigation. Therefore, the release of this information would not further the public interest.[6]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that Steven R. Schooley filed on July 9, 2010, OHA Case No. TFA-0398, is granted in part, as set forth in Paragraph (2), below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is remanded to the Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center, which shall issue a new determination that (i) states whether the information withheld under Exemption 4 was submitted to it voluntarily or involuntarily and how Exemption 4 applies; and (ii) evaluates whether it can release, consistent with this Decision, those portions of the attorney invoice statements that identify the client, the amount of fees, the payment by case file name, and the purpose of the work performed.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound

Date of Filing: July 9, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0399

On July 9, 2010, the Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound ("the Alliance") filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on June 22, 2010, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO). In that determination, LGPO responded to a request for documents that the Alliance filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LGPO identified several documents responsive to the Alliance's request and released those documents with some information withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. The Alliance challenged the withholding of information under Exemption 4. The Alliance further challenged the adequacy of LGPO's search for responsive documents. This appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release the withheld information to Alliance, to perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On December 23, 2009, the Alliance filed a FOIA request for information pertaining to the Cape Wind project. Specifically, the Alliance requested that "DOE release all records relating to any potential grants, loans, loan guarantees, or any other federal funding assistance for the Cape Wind project," including "any correspondence, meeting minutes, memoranda, emails, reports, or other records regardless of form." See Letter from Audra Parker, President and Executive Director, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), July 9, 2010 (Appeal) at 1.

On June 22, 2010, LGPO released three documents: Cape Wind 2006 Pre-Application, Volume I; Cape Wind 2006 Pre-Application, Volume II; and, Cape Wind 2009 Application. See Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Sandy Taylor, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, June 22, 2010 (Determination Letter). Each of the three documents was released with portions withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. Id. LGPO stated that the portions of the documents withheld under Exemption 4 contained commercial or financial information, the release of which "would give competitors an advantage in the future by providing insight on resources available to the applicant." Id. In addition, LGPO stated that the information withheld under Exemption 6 was comprised of "very sensitive personal information," including social security numbers, and the release of the information would be a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Id.

The Alliance filed the instant Appeal on July 9, 2010. In its Appeal, the Alliance challenged the adequacy of LGPO's search for responsive documents. Appeal at 1. As a basis for this challenge, the Alliance noted that, although it requested all records related to any potential federal funding assistance for the Cape Wind Project, LGPO released only the pre-application and application submitted by Cape Wind, L.L.C., but no correspondence or other documents. The Alliance maintains that other documents must exist "because the [DOE] had to communicate both internally and with the applicant about this application." Id. at 2. The Alliance further challenges LGPO's withholding of information under Exemption 4.[1]

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[2]

In processing this Appeal, we contacted LGPO to discuss the scope of the search for responsive records. LGPO informed us that a member of the LGPO FOIA team, with guidance from LGPO employees assigned to the Cape Wind project, searched the internal network drive on which LGPO maintains its records.[3] The LGPO employee individually searched each record in the following file folders on its internal drive: (1) "W:\LGP\Solicitation FY09-Renewables\Application Submissions\Round III\Cape Wind" and (2) "W:\LGP\Solicitation FY09-Renewables\Correspondence." See E-Mail from Wendy Pulliam, FOIA Specialist, LGPO, to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, August 3, 2010. The search yielded only the three documents released to the Alliance. Id.

Based on this information, we find that LGPO performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Alliance's request, despite the absence of correspondence related to the Cape Wind project. Therefore, the search was adequate.

[1] The Alliance did not challenge LGPO's withholding of information under Exemption 6. Therefore, the Exemption 6 withholdings are outside the scope of this Appeal and will not be considered.

[2] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

[3] LGPO's paper records are identical copies of the electronic documents. All incoming documents are submitted to LGPO electronically and in paper form. All outgoing documents are also scanned and stored electronically. See E-Mail from Wendy Pulliam, FOIA Specialist, LGPO, to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, August 3, 2010. LGPO did not perform a separate search of the paper records because it would be a duplication of efforts. Id.

B. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

LGPO withheld portions of the three documents it released to the Alliance pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. LGPO claimed that the redacted information is commercial or proprietary information. The Alliance challenged the appropriateness of LGPO's use of Exemption 4 as justification for withholding the redacted information.

An agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009); see also F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Services, Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (1996). A determination must adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999). Conversely, conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. See Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (citing Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 680 (D.C. Cir. 1976) ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA")).

Our review of the Determination Letter issued to the Alliance indicates that LGPO failed to provide a specific explanation as to how Exemption 4 applied to the information withheld in the three released documents. In the Determination Letter, LGPO, after restating the language of the exemption, states "Portions deleted from the documents enclosed contain 'commerical' or 'financial' information that relates to business activities. In addition, proprietary business strategy, organization information, and confidential client information have also been redacted. The release of such information would give competitors an advantage in the future by providing insight on resources available to the applicant."

We find that the justification given in the Determination Letter was insufficient for two reasons. First, various types of information in the three released documents were withheld under Exemption 4, including names of potential investors, projected costs, and projected timelines. LGPO did not distinguish among the different types on information in providing its justification for the withholdings. Second, LGPO did not explain in any detail the type of competitive harm to which Cape Wind, L.L.C., would be subjected should each type of information be released. Rather, it generally stated that release of the information would give the firm's competitors an unfair advantage. This is a conclusory or generalized statement of the kind which courts have previously found unacceptable. Consequently, LGPO's Determination Letter was inadequate with regard to its Exemption 4 withholding.

In cases where an office does not provide an adequate determination with respect to a FOIA request, we usually remand the request to that office with instruction to issue a new determination letter so that the appellant and our Office can understand the rationale for withholding the information. See Steven C. Vigg, Case No. TFA-0003 (2002). This is especially important in Exemption 4 cases, where it may not be obvious, without expert information, what competitive harm would result from release of the information. Accordingly, we will remand the matter to LGPO so that it can issue another determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to the various types of withheld material in the three released documents.

III. Conclusion

We find that LGPO conducted an extensive search for documents reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Alliance's request. Therefore, the search was adequate. However, LGPO did not provide an adequate determination with respect to its withholdings of information pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter back to LGPO for a further determination on the Exemption 4 withholdings.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 9, 2010, by the Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, OHA Case No. TFA-0399, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Loan Guarantee Program Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Association of Home Builders

Date of Filing: July 14, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0401

On July 14, 2010, the National Association of Home Builders (Appellant) filed an appeal from two determinations issued to it by the Office of Energy Efficiency (EE) and the FOIA/Privacy Act Group (FOIA/PA) of the Department of Energy (DOE) regarding a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In their responses to the Appellant's FOIA Request, EE and FOIA/PA each stated that EE possessed no responsive documents.[1] This Appeal, if granted, would require that EE conduct an additional search for responsive documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under DOE regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.

I. Background

On April 12, 2010, the Appellant submitted the FOIA Request, essentially asking for any document that contains the formulas, equations or methodologies used by DOE to evaluate the projected energy savings to be obtained by incorporating DOE's proposals for changes to 2012 International Energy Conservation Code (IECC).[2]

[1] EE's determination was dated July 7, 2010. The FOIA/PA determination was dated July 25, 2010. Both determinations stated that EE had conducted a search and could not locate any responsive records. The FOIA/PA determination included additional information stating that the Appellant's request had been forwarded to the DOE Operations Office in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, which maintains files under the jurisdiction of the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL) in order that an additional search for documents could be conducted. For the purposes of this Appeal we will consider both of these determinations as one.

[2] As described in the Appellant's Appeal, the International Code Council (ICC) publishes every three years an updated edition of the IECC. The IECC is a model code that local governments and other stakeholders can use in developing local building codes and standards. Appeal at 2. A federal statute mandates that DOE participate in the model national codes development process and that DOE help states adopt and implement progressive energy codes.

In its Appeal, the Appellant cites numerous sources indicating that DOE has determined that its proposed revisions to the 2012 IECC would produce an energy savings of 30.6% when compared to the 2006 version of the IECC. Among the sources cited by the Appellant was a study entitled An Estimate of Residential Energy Savings From IECC Change Proposals Recommended for Approval at the ICC's Fall, 2009, Initial Action Hearings (2012 Energy Study) produced for the DOE by PNLL.[3] Given DOE's assertion of a numeric energy saving value for its 2012 IECC proposals, the Appellant concludes that a specific methodology or formula to calculate this value must exist at DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (Truitt). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010).[4]

To evaluate the search made for documents responsive to the Appellant's request, we contacted the Project Manager for Energy Code Development at DOE's Office of Energy Efficiency. That official informed us that he is the project manager responsible for DOE's participation in the IECC revision process. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Ronald B. Majette, Project Manager and Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner, Office of Hearings and Appeals (July 23, 2010). He also informed us that all of the calculations and computer modeling regarding the determination of energy savings that would result from adoption of the 2012 DOE proposals were performed by PNNL. The results of PNNL's calculations were summarized in the 2012 Energy Study which found that the proposed DOE code changes would result in a calculated savings of 30.6%. This was the basis for DOE's assertions regarding the energy savings of the 2012 DOE proposed code changes. The Manager informed us that while he believes that he had the authority to collect the raw data and modeling tools PNNL used in making its calculations, he never requested or took possession of such data or tools. He conducted a search of his E-mails to see if he had nonetheless requested or obtained such information from PNNL. He found no documents that contained responsive information.

See 42 U.S.C. § 6833(d). DOE is also required to review whether the proposed IECC revisions would improve energy efficiency in residential buildings as compared to the previous IECC edition and publish this determination in the Federal Register. 42 U.S.C. § 6833(a)(5)(A) (the Energy Conservation and Production Act, as amended).

We find that EE conducted a search reasonably calculated to find responsive documents. It contacted the Project Manager, the individual most likely to possess information regarding responsive documents. The Project Manager had personal knowledge that the information requested by the Appellant was not maintained at EE or DOE Headquarters. Further, he made a search of his E-mail files to confirm that he had not requested or obtained the requested documents. Thus, we find that EE made an adequate search for responsive documents and that Appellant's July 14, 2010, FOIA Appeal should be denied.[5]

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the National Association of Home Builders, OHA Case Number TFA-0401, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Tri-Valley CAREs

Date of Filing: July 19, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0402

On July 19, 2010, Tri-Valley CAREs (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) Service Center. In that determination, NNSA responded to a Request for Information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. NNSA released portions of a responsive document, but withheld other portions of this document under FOIA Exemptions 3 and 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release only those portions of the document witheld under Exemption 6 to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

On September 8, 2008, the Appellant filed a request for information with NNSA seeking a copy of the "Defense Program Advisory Group's study of the secondary components of nuclear weapons." Appeal at 1. On June 2, 2010, NNSA issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing a copy of a responsive document entitled "Secondary Lifetime Assessment Study" (the Study) to the Appellant. However, NNSA withheld portions of this document under FOIA Exemptions 3 and 6. On July 19, 2010, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal. Because our consideration of NNSA's withholdings under Exemption 3 in this case requires consultation with the DOE's Office of Classification, we determined that bifurcation of the present Appeal would allow for a more timely consideration of NNSA's withholdings under Exemption 6. NNSA's withholdings under Exemption 6 will therefore be considered in the present decision (OHA Case No. TFA-0402). Our consideration of NNSA's withholdings under Exemption 3 will be considered in a separate decision under OHA Case No. TFC-0004.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Only Exemption 6 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

Turning to the present case, NNSA, invoking FOIA Exemption 6, redacted the names of contractor employees from the copy of the Secondary Lifetime Assessment Study it released to the Appellant. The Appellant contends that the NNSA improperly withheld information under Exemption 6. Specifically, the Appellant contends that one of the individuals whose identity was protected, identified in the redacted copy of the Study as "DP-22," was in fact a federal employee. It also contends that the NNSA withheld some contractor employees' identities while releasing others, and was therefore inconsistent in its application of Exemption 6. Appeal at 2.

One of the individuals whose name was withheld was in fact a federal employee, as contended by the Appellant. July 29, 2010, Electronic Mail message from Karen Laney, Information Programs Specialist, NNSA Service Center Office of Public Affairs to Steven Fine, Senior Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals. It is well settled that, absent special circumstances, civilian federal employees have no expectation of privacy regarding their names. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311 (2009) (specifying that certain information contained in federal employee personnel files is available to public); see also FLRA v. U.S. Dep't of Commerce, 962 F.2d 1055, 1059-61 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (noting that performance awards "have traditionally been subject to disclosure"); Core v. USPS, 730 F.2d 946, 948 (4th Cir. 1984) (finding no substantial invasion of privacy in information identifying successful federal job applicants). Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to the NNSA with instructions to either release the name of the federal employee identified as DP-22, or issue a new determination letter explaining the special circumstances creating a privacy interest in this individual's name.

It is well settled that the release of an individual's name to the public implicates a privacy interest under the FOIA. Associated Press v. DOJ, 549 F.3d 62, 65 (2d Cir. 2008). Therefore, NNSA correctly concluded that the contractor employees whose names appear in the Study have a legitimate expectation of privacy under the FOIA. NNSA did release the names of three contractor employees, the principal authors of the study, as their names may frequently be found in the public domain associated with the reports they have authored. July 29, 2010, Electronic Mail message from Karen Laney, Information Programs Specialist, NNSA Service Center Office of Public Affairs to Steven Fine, Senior Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals.

It is clear that release of the names of contractor employees, who assisted the Study's principal investigators would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. Release of the names of weapons designers, consultants, engineers and proofreaders would contribute little, if any, to public understanding of the issues addressed in the Study or any other matter of public concern. Because we have found a privacy interest in the names of the contractor employees and no public interest in their disclosure, we find that release of the contractor employee's names would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, we are remanding that portion of the Appeal concerning the name of the Federal employee identified as "DP-22" to the NNSA for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CAREs, Case No. TFA-0402, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center for further proceedings in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Southern Alliance for Clean Energy

Date of Filing: July 19, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0403

On July 9, 2010, the Southern Alliance for Clean Energy ("SACE") filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on June 22, 2010, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO). In that determination, LGPO provided a partial response to a request for documents that SACE filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LGPO identified three documents responsive to a portion of SACE's request and released those documents with some information withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. The Alliance challenged the withholding of information under Exemption 4. This appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release the withheld information to SACE.

I. Background

On March 25, 2010, SACE filed a FOIA request for information pertaining to "DOE's issuance of conditional commitments for loan guarantees for the construction and operation of two nuclear reactors at Vogtle Electric Generating Plant in Burke County, Georgia." See Letter from Mindy Goldstein, Turner Environmental Law Clinic, Emory University School of Law, to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals, July 19, 2010 (Appeal) at 1.[1] Among the records SACE requested were "all records pertaining to the issuance to [Southern Nuclear Operating Company, Georgia Power Company, Oglethorpe Power Corporation, Municipal Electric Authority of Georgia, or the City of Dalton [collectively, "SNC"] of a term sheet, or the drafting of any final or proposed term sheet for SNC, that sets forth the general terms and conditions under which DOE may issue a loan guarantee to [Vogtle Electric Generating Plant]." Id.

On July 6, 2010, LGPO released copies of three Loan Guarantee term sheets, one issued to each of the following: Georgia Power Company, Municipal Electric Authority of Georgia, and, Oglethorpe Power Corporation. See Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Mindy Goldstein, Turner Environmental Law Clinic, Emory University School of Law, July 6, 2010 (Determination Letter). Each of the three documents was released with portions withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Id. LGPO stated that the portions of the documents withheld under Exemption 4 contained commercial or financial information, the release of which "would give competitors an advantage in the future by providing insight on resources available to the applicant." Id.

SACE filed the instant Appeal on July 19, 2010. In its Appeal, SACE maintains that LGPO failed to provide an adequate justification for its withholdings under Exemption 4. Appeal at 2-3. SACE further maintains that LGPO improperly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information. Id. at 3-5.

II. Analysis

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

LGPO withheld portions of the three documents it released to the SACE pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. LGPO claimed that the redacted information is commercial or proprietary information. SACE challenged the adequacy of the justification, as well as the appropriateness of LGPO's use of Exemption 4 as justification for withholding the redacted information.

An agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009);[2] see also F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Services, Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (1996). A determination must adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result.

[2] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999). Conversely, conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. See Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (citing Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 680 (D.C. Cir. 1976)).

Our review of the Determination Letter issued to SACE indicates that LGPO failed to provide a specific explanation as to how Exemption 4 applied to the information withheld in the three released documents. In the Determination Letter, LGPO, after restating the language of the exemption, states, > Portions deleted from the documents enclosed contain 'commerical' or 'financial' information that relates to business activities, as well as identities of applicants who have a legitimate argument that publication of unsuccessful participation in this process could cause harm to their competitive position. In addition, proprietary business strategy, organization information, and confidential client information have also been redacted. The release of such information would give competitors an advantage in the future by providing insight on resources available to the applicant.

Determination Letter at 1.

We find that the justification given in the Determination Letter was insufficient for two reasons. First, various types of information in the three released documents were withheld under Exemption 4, including, but not limited to, prepayment provisions, representations and warranties, loan amortization provisions, and loan fees and expenses. LGPO did not distinguish among the different types on information in providing its justification for the withholdings. Second, LGPO did not explain in any detail the type of competitive harm to which the submitters of the withheld information would be subjected should each type of information be released. Rather, it generally stated that release of the information would give the firm's competitors an unfair advantage. This is a conclusory or generalized statement of the kind which courts have previously found unacceptable. Consequently, LGPO's Determination Letter was inadequate with regard to its Exemption 4 withholding.[3]

In cases where an office does not provide an adequate determination with respect to a FOIA request, we usually remand the request to that office with instruction to issue a new determination letter so that the appellant and our Office can understand the rationale for withholding the information. See Steven C. Vigg, Case No. TFA-0003 (2002). This is especially important in Exemption 4 cases, where it may not be obvious, without expert information, what competitive harm would result from release of the information. Accordingly, we will remand the matter to LGPO so that it can issue another determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to the various types of withheld material in the three released documents.

[3] Given our determination regarding the adequacy of LGPO's justification, we need not address at this time the applicability of Exemption 4 to the withheld information.

III. Conclusion

LGPO did not provide an adequate justification for its withholdings of information pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter back to LGPO for a further determination on the Exemption 4 withholdings.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 19, 2010, by the Southern Alliance for Clean Energy, OHA Case No. TFA-0403, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Loan Guarantee Program Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Natural Resources Defense Council

Date of Filing: July 23, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0404

On July 23, 2010, the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on June 24, 2010, by the Department of Energy's Idaho Operations Office (DOE-ID). In that determination, DOE-ID responded to a request for documents that NRDC filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

On January 5, 2010, NRDC filed a FOIA request for all records in the possession or control of the Idaho National Laboratory (INL) pertaining to a proposed coal-to-liquid facility being developed by Ohio River Clean Fuels, LLC (ORCF). Letter from Joshua Berman, NRDC, to Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, DOE-ID (January 5, 2010). In a partial response issued on February 9, 2010, DOE-ID released two documents responsive to NRDC's request. Letter from Timothy B. Jackson, Acting FOIA Officer, DOE-ID, to Joshua Berman (February 9, 2010). On April 29, 2010, DOE-ID released additional responsive documents and also provided NRDC a "list of all the documents that are being released or are currently under review, organized by year." Letter from Clayton Ogilvie to Joshua Berman (April 29, 2010). The list, entitled "Richard Boardman Email For Baard Energy," contains references to several hundred email messages dated from October 16, 2006, to January 5, 2010.

On June 24, 2010, DOE-ID issued a final response to NRDC's request, in which it stated that the "requested information" was exempt from release under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Letter from Clayton Ogilvie to Joshua Berman (June 24, 2010). DOE-ID further stated that some of the documents at issue were "exempt from release" pursuant to the "Access to and Ownership of Records" clause in the contract between the DOE and Battelle Energy Alliance, LLC (BEA), the contractor that operates INL for the DOE. Id.

In its Appeal, NRDC argues that DOE-ID failed to adequately justify its withholding of information under FOIA Exemption 4. Appeal at 4-7. NRDC also contends that, in the list of documents that DOE-ID provided with its April 29, 2010, partial response, DOE-ID erroneously identified certain documents as "[n]ot pertinent to NRDC request." Id. at 7-9. Finally, the Appellant notes that this list of documents states that emails were "not archived for period between 03/02/2007 to 04/17/2008," and that "DOE should provide some explanation for why all records from this critical period were not located and reviewed." Id. at 9.

II. Analysis

A. Emails Not Archived Between March 2, 2007, and April 17, 2008

As noted above, the list of documents that DOE-ID provided with its April 29, 2010, letter to NRDC stated that emails were not archived from between March 2, 2007, and April 17, 2008. In its Appeal, NRDC states that the "DOE has offered no explanation as to why over 13 months of Dr. Boardman's e-mails were not archived." Appeal at 9. Under the FOIA, agencies are required only to release non-exempt, responsive documents; they are not required to answer questions about an agency's operations. DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978).

Nonetheless, in responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Milner, 17 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1988).

We therefore asked DOE-ID for information regarding its search for the emails in question. On May 13, 2010, INL informed DOE-ID that Dr. Boardman had asked computer support personnel to search his hard drive for all archive files, and that while the support personnel found an archive file dated April 18, 2008, "they were not able to recover email from the file." Email from Dorraine C. Burt, INL, to Clayton Ogilvie (May 13, 2010). Dr. Boardman also stated that he had received no indication that the archive file could be "recovered either on my desktop file or from routine system backups." Id. Based on the information provided, we find that INL and Dr. Boardman conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the emails in question.

B. Whether the Documents at Issue are Subject to the FOIA or the DOE FOIA Regulations

DOE-ID's final response to NRDC's request states that at least some of the records identified as responsive to its request are "property of the contractor and therefore not subject to the FOIA." Letter from Clayton Ogilvie to Joshua Berman (June 24, 2010).[1] Whether a document requested under the FOIA is subject to that statute or to the DOE FOIA regulations is a threshold question that DOE-ID should have addressed in its determination prior to its consideration of whether the documents at issue would be exempt from release under a particular FOIA exemption. Moreover, as we explain below, DOE-ID's determination did not sufficiently explain the basis for its conclusion that these documents were "not subject to the FOIA."

The FOIA does not specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record that is subject to FOIA requirements. The United States Supreme Court addressed this issue in Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are agency records for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. See Eagle Rock Timber, Case No. TFA-0381 (2010) (setting forth the factors to consider in determining whether a document was under an agency's control at the time of a request).

[1] Since the filing of the present Appeal, DOE-ID has stated that, in fact, all of the responsive documents identified in the list provided to the requester are the property of BEA. Email from Clayton Ogilvie to Steven Goering, OHA Staff Attorney (July 30, 2010).

In addition, the DOE's FOIA regulations state:

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C § 552(b).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e).

Though DOE-ID's determination letter does not cite this section of the DOE regulations, its statement that the documents at issue are "property of the contractor" appears to address the application of this provision. Nonetheless, DOE-ID's determination letter clearly does not apply the required full analysis set forth above in finding that the documents are "not subject to the FOIA." We will therefore remand this matter to DOE-ID for a new determination on this issue, which will allow the requester to formulate a meaningful argument should it choose to appeal a determination that the documents at issue are not subject to the FOIA or the DOE FOIA regulations. See Joseph M. Santos, Case No. TFA-0113 (2005) ("a reasonably specific justification of a withholding . . . aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and this Office in reviewing that appeal").

C. Whether the Documents at Issue are Exempt from Release Under FOIA Exemption 4

FOIA Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In the present case, DOE-ID withheld several hundred documents from the requester under Exemption 4, stating that "the requested information consists of documents generated under a Cooperative Research and Development Agreement (CRADA) between Battelle Energy Alliance and Baard Energy, and is exempt from release pursuant to Exemption 4 . . . because it consists of privileged and confidential commercial information constituting work done for others/clients, which is held in confidence."

First, the fact that a document was created under a CRADA does not, in itself, exempt a document from disclosure under the FOIA. See John Michael Unfred, P.C., Case No. VFA-0581 (2000) (upholding determination releasing non-exempt portions of CRADA documents). Beyond this, DOE-ID's determination letter merely parroted the language of the FOIA statute by stating, in conclusory fashion, that the documents at issue contain "privileged and confidential commercial information . . . ." We have previously found that such a statement does not provide a sufficient basis for a determination withholding information under Exemption 4. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (remanding matter to DOE-ID for a new determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to withheld material).

For example, if an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999). Conversely, conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. See Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (citing Public Citizen Health Research Group v. F.D.A., 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 680 (D.C. Cir. 1976) ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA")).

In responding to FOIA requests, an agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the documents at issue. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009). We agree with the appellant that DOE-ID's June 24 determination letter did not adequately justify its withholding of information under FOIA Exemption 4.

In cases where an office does not provide an adequate determination with respect to a FOIA request, we usually remand the request to the office with instructions to issue a new determination letter so that the appellant and our Office can understand the rationale for withholding the information. See Steven C. Vigg, Case No. TFA-0003 (2002). This is especially important in Exemption 4 cases, where it may not be obvious, without expert information, what competitive harm would result from release of the information. We have already determined above that this case should be remanded for consideration of whether the documents in question are subject to the FOIA or DOE FOIA regulations. If DOE-ID finds that the documents are subject to either the statute or the regulations, DOE-ID should then set forth an adequate basis for its withholding of any information in the documents under Exemption 4.

D. Documents Identified by DOE-ID as Not Pertinent to NRDC's Request

Finally, regarding documents identified as "[n]ot pertinent to NRDC request" in the list provided with DOE-ID's April 29, 2010, letter to NRDC, DOE-ID's new determination should specify whether it now considers those documents to be responsive to NRDC's request, particularly in light of NRDC's clarification of its request in its May 25, 2010, email to DOE-ID. Email from Josh Berman to Clayton Ogilvie (May 25, 2010).

III. Conclusion

For the reasons explained above, we will remand this matter to DOE-ID for a new determination addressing whether the documents at issue are subject to the FOIA or the DOE FOIA regulations and, if so, either releasing those documents in their entirety or providing a sufficient justification for the withholding of any information that it finds to be exempt from disclosure. In making a determination that information is exempt from disclosure, DOE-ID should be mindful of the requirement of the FOIA that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on July 23, 2010, by the Natural Resources Defense Council, OHA Case No. TFA-0404, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph (2) below, and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Department of Energy's Idaho Operations Office, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Luca Gratton
Date of Filing:	July 26, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0405

On July 26, 2010, Luca Gratton (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on June 17, 2010, by the Savannah River Operations Office (SRO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, SRO responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, SRO did not release any documents, indicating the documents requested were the property of a DOE contractor, Savannah River Nuclear Solutions, LLC (SRNS), and, therefore, not agency records subject to disclosure under the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require SRO to release the requested documents.

I. Background

SRNS is the managing and operating (M&O) contractor at SRO. In 2009, the DOE published an Acquisition Forecast[1/] indicating SRNS intended to solicit a subcontract for program management, project management, and system engineering services. On May 29, 2010, the Appellant requested information regarding a solicitation notice, including:

> 1. A comprehensive List of Records maintained by the DOE and/or SRNS, LLC that are directly and specifically associated with the solicitation notices, solicitations and requests for proposal for the acquisition(s) directly emanating from the Forecast. . . .

[1/]The Acquisition Forecast allowed SRNS to inform small businesses of forthcoming subcontracting opportunities. Email dated June 16, 2010, from Craig Armstrong, SRO, to Pauline Conner, SRO.

2. One complete copy of the final version of the Notice of Solicitation for the acquisition(s) directly associated with the Forecast. . . .

> 3. One complete copy of the final version of the Request for Proposal for the acquisition(s) directly associated with the Forecast. . . .
> 4. A written debrief of the disposition of the acquisition(s) and contract award(s) directly associated with the Forecast. . . .

Request Letter dated May 29, 2010, from Appellant to DOE. In response to the Appellant's request, SRO issued a determination letter indicating that the documents the Appellant was requesting are not agency records, and therefore, not subject to release under the FOIA. Determination Letter dated June 17, 2010, from Lucy M. Knowles, Authorizing Official, SRO, to Appellant. SRO also stated that it neither owns nor possesses responsive documents. Id.

On July 26, 2010, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal in which he contends that the requested documents are subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Appeal Letter received July 26, 2010, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals, DOE. He claims that the documents must be in the possession of DOE because the Contracting Officer (CO) is required to oversee many aspects of the contract between SRO and SRNS. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[2/]

We contacted SRO to determine if it had any documents responsive to the Appellant's request, as the Appellant argues in his Appeal. SRO responded as follows:

> [The Appellant] is under the impression that work authorizations issued to an M&O contractor would include specific instructions on subcontracting requirements. This is not the case since the work authorizations issued under the prime M&O contract contain broad > baseline level descriptions of overall work scope. The contractor has the responsibility of determining the specific elements of the generalized work scope to be performed and which of those elements need to be subcontracted out versus performed with existing prime contractor resources. Therefore, the contracting officer did not issue subcontract-specific work authorizations or instructions under this prime DOE contract and [SRO] does not possess the records in question as they are the property of the commercial contractor performing the prime M&O work scope.

E-mail dated August 2, 2010, from Pauline Conner, SRO, to Janet R. H. Fishman, OHA, forwarding an e-mail from Craig Armstrong, CO, to Pauline Conner. The CO had previously informed SRO that he did not have any documents responsive to the request. E-mail dated June 16, 2010, from Craig Armstrong to Pauline Conner.

The Appellant argues that various provisions of the contract between SRNS and DOE would require SRO to have possession of the information he is requesting. We disagree. For example, the Appellant contends that under Clause H.35(b), the CO must be notified in writing of the subcontractor entity performing any work that is specified in the Statement of Work, if that work in not performed directly by SRNS. Appeal Letter at 3. However, the provision states "[t]he Contractor shall take no action to replace components of the Offeror named in (a) above without the prior written approval of the CO." Section H.35(b) of the contract between DOE and SRNS, DOE Contract No. DE-AC09-08SR2240. See http://www.srs.gov/sro/srnscontracmodm001.pdf. This does not indicate that every subcontract must be approved in writing, only that replacement of the three subcontractors mentioned in the contract must be approved in writing. Further, the Appellant contends that Clause H-46 of the contract indicates that the CO must have documents responsive to his request. Appeal Letter at 3. A clear reading of the clause shows that at no time is the Contractor required to inform the CO in writing about subcontracts. The clause states in pertinent part, "the contractor shall ensure that any required prior notice and description of the subcontract is given to the CO and any required consent is received." Section H-46 of the contract between DOE and SRNS, DOE Contract No. DE-AC09-08SR2240.

As the foregoing indicates, we disagree with the Appellant's argument that the DOE must have possession of the information he is requesting. A thorough reading of the clauses upon which he relies does not support his arguments. SRO's response of August 2, 2010, confirms our position. The CO, who has responded to our questions regarding this Appeal, is the person most knowledgeable about whether responsive documents exist. Therefore, any search that SRO conducted was reasonably calculated to uncover the requested documents.

III. Conclusion

SRO has conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the information requested by the Appellant. Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Luca Gratton, Case No. TFA-0405, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Melvin C. Miller, Jr.
Date of Filing:	July 27, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0406

On July 27, 2010, Melvin C. Miller, Jr., filed an Appeal from a determination that the Oak Ridge Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 13, 2010. The determination responded to a request for information Mr. Miller filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

Mr. Miller requested from ORO all records regarding his mother, Mable D. Miller. On July 13, 2010, ORO issued a determination to Mr. Miller in which it released one document, an employment card that was located in ORO's Records Holding Area. Letter from Amy L. Rothrock, Authorizing Official, to Appellant (July 13, 2010). In his Appeal, Mr. Miller challenges the adequacy of ORO's search for responsive documents, asserting that Ms. Miller worked at the Oak Ridge facility for more than 250 hours. Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Natural Resources Defense Council, Case No. TFA-0127 (2005).[*] The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

We therefore contacted the FOIA/Privacy Act Office of the ORO regarding the search that was performed in this case. Because Mr. Miller had indicated in his request that his mother had worked at ORO's K-25 and X-10 sites, the FOIA/Privacy Act Office requested that those sites search for medical, personnel, payroll, radiation exposure, and industrial hygiene records regarding Ms. Miller.

E-mail from Linda G. Chapman, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, ORO, to William M. Schwartz, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals (August 11, 2010). That office also requested that the Records Holding Area and the Oak Ridge Associated Universities conduct searches of their records, as they maintain files dating back to 1943, including files on former employees. Id. Manual searches were conducted of paper files, and computerized searches were performed on databases, using Ms. Miller's name, date of birth, and Social Security number. Id.

The only document found that contained any information about Ms. Miller indicated that she had worked for JA Jones Construction Company, which ORO believes was a contractor performing services for the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), a predecessor agency of the DOE, during the 1940s. Id. The accepted practice for such contractors was, and is, that they take their records with them when their contract with the AEC or DOE ends. In light of these circumstances, it is reasonable to conclude that the DOE has no additional records on Ms. Miller.

After reviewing the record in this case, we find that ORO performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal all documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Accordingly, Mr. Miller's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Melvin C. Miller, Jr., on July 27, 2010, Case No. TFA-0406, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Custom Catalogues OnLine, Inc.

Date of Filing: July 28, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0407

On July 28, 2010, Custom Catalogues OnLine, Inc. (Appellant) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it by the Oak Ridge Office (OR) of the Department of Energy regarding its request for documents that it submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the Appellant's FOIA Request, OR provided the Appellant with a number of documents. However, OR also withheld in part and in their entirety other documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require that OR release the information withheld in these documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under Department of Energy (DOE) regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On September 23, 2009, the Appellant submitted a FOIA request (Request) asking for copies of any documents referring to Mr. Philip Pulver (Pulver), Custom Catalogs OnLine, "CCOL," CCOL-MDM or "Mobile Data Methods" which were in the possession of or originated from a number of named employees of the DOE's Pacific Northwest Site Office and OR. Custom Catalogues OnLine, Inc., Case No. TFA-0362 (April 28, 2010) slip. op. at 1 (CCOL).[1] In response to this FOIA Request (Response I), OR provided the Appellant with a number of redacted and unredacted documents, and it justified withholding portions of documents or entire documents by citing Exemption 5 and the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges. The Appellant appealed and, in our decision in CCOL, we remanded the case to OR so that it could issue a more detailed determination which adequately justified its withholding of information in the identified responsive documents. CCOL at 3.

[1] During the pendency of its FOIA request, Custom Catalogs OnLine, Inc. was in litigation with Battelle Memorial Institute (Battelle), a non-profit corporation, and the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL), Pulver v. Battelle (Pulver). Battelle currently manages several DOE National Laboratories including PNNL. The Appellant has informed us that this litigation has recently ended. See E-mail from Phillp Pulver, CCOL, to Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (August 11, 2010).

On July 1, 2010, OR issued another determination regarding the Appellant's Request (Response II). In Response II, OR released several documents that were previously withheld pursuant to Response I and released additional portions of other documents that were previously withheld in their entirety. As for the documents and redacted portions of documents still withheld from the Appellant in Response II, OR cited Exemption 5 and the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges to justify its withholding of this material. Response II listed these documents under five "Enclosures."[2] Enclosure 1 consisted of 64 documents that were provided in their entirety to the Appellant. The remaining Enclosures listed documents that were withheld in their entirety or listed the redacted documents which were provided to the Appellant and cited the Exemption 5 privilege that justified the withholdings. These Enclosures are listed below:

Enclosure 1	64 Documents released in entirety
Enclosure 2	11 Documents withheld in their entirety (attorney work product privilege)
Enclosure 3	Two Documents withheld in part (attorney work product privilege)
Enclosure 4	13 Documents withheld in their entirety (attorney-client privilege)
Enclosure 5	Seven Documents withheld in part (attorney-client privilege)

In its Appeal, the Appellant makes a number of assertions regarding alleged misconduct at Battelle-managed DOE facilities. The Appellant alleges that release of the documents would shed light on this misconduct and that release of the documents would be in the public interest.[3] The Appellant also argues that because its litigation with Battelle and PNNL has ended, the two privileges asserted by OR are no longer applicable.[4]

[2] Each enclosure numbers its documents sequentially beginning with the number one.

[3] The Appellant submitted four E-mails on August 11, 17 and 24, 2010, providing additional information regarding his misconduct allegations and his argument that release of the withheld documents would be in the public interest.

[4] The Appellant notes that in CCOL, we referenced that there were 457 pages of responsive material contained in approximately 92 documents. However, the Appellant asserts that in Response II only references 277 pages and 97 documents. In our review of the documents at issue, we now count 430 pages. Our prior total of 457 pages was erroneous based upon a misreading of an E-mail that was provided to us describing the documents at issue and the number of pages to be sent to our office via several E-mails. See E-mail from Linda G. Chapman, Legal Assistant, Privacy Act Office, OR to Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (April 12, 2010); E-mail from Linda G. Chapman, Legal Assistant, Privacy Act Office, OR to Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (August 3, 2010). Further, as we stated in CCOL, it was uncertain exactly how many documents were present because of the format in which we received the documents.

The Appellant also states that, in Response II, it only received 177 pages and was informed that 106 pages were being withheld in their entirety. Consequently, the Appellant alleges that OR failed to account for a significant number of pages from the original total of 430 pages. OR informed us that it provided the Appellant with 183 pages of text and withheld 104 pages in their entirety. The remaining pages, totaling 143 pages, consisted of duplicates of documents already accounted for to the Appellant, OR-created coversheets, or blank pages and thus were not included in Response II. E-mail from Linda G. Chapman, Legal Assistant, Privacy Act Office, OR to Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (August 3, 2010). A comparison of the copies of the documents sent to us by OR for review in the first appeal and the present appeal indicates that there are a large number of duplicate documents initially identified by OR. All documents referenced in OR's first response have been accounted for in OR's most recent response (after subtracting the blank and duplicative documents).

II. Analysis

In the present case, we are asked to review the propriety of OR's use of Exemption 5 and the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges to withhold parts of or entire documents.

1. Exemption 5 and the Attorney-Client and Attorney Work Product Privileges

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, [information] must . . . satisfy two conditions: [1] its source must be a Government agency, and [2] it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001). In the present case OR has cited the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges to justify its withholding of material pursuant to Exemption 5.[5]

a. Attorney-Client Privilege

An agency may withhold information under the attorney-client privilege if it is a "confidential communication . . . between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc., v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Although it fundamentally applies to facts divulged by a client to his attorney, the privilege also encompasses opinions given by an attorney to a client based upon, and thus reflecting, those facts. See, e.g., Jernigan v. United States Dep't of the Air Force, No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998). The privilege also encompasses communications between attorneys that reflect client-supplied information. See, e.g., Green v. IRS, 556 F. Supp 79, 85 (N.D. Ind. 1982). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. Clarke v. American Commerce Nat'l Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992). The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 291, 403-04 (1976). In other words, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. Power Wire Constructors, Case No. TFA-0312 (May 27, 2009).[6]

[5] In its communications with OR during the pendency of this appeal, OR indicated to the Appellant that some of the documents it was considering withholding may contain "trade secret" or "commercial and financial" information. See E-mail from Linda G. Chapman, Legal Assistant, Privacy Act Office, OR, to Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (August 3, 2010). However, upon review, OR determined that release of the documents containing such information would not cause harm if released. Consequently, these documents were released in their entirety to the Appellant.

[6] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

b. Attorney Work Product Privilege

The attorney work product privilege protects from disclosure documents which reveal "the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3); see also Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 511 (1947). The privilege is intended to preserve a zone of privacy in which a lawyer or other representative of a party can prepare and develop legal theories and strategies "with an eye toward litigation," free from unnecessary intrusion by their adversaries. Hickman, 329 U.S. at 510-11. "At its core, the work product doctrine shelters the mental processes of the attorney, providing a privileged area within which he can analyze and prepare his client's case." United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225, 238 (1975).

2. Exemption 5's Intra-Agency Requirement

As noted above, a threshold requirement for the application of Exemption 5 is that a document must be an inter-agency or intra-agency communication. In the present case, many of the documents at issue originated from DOE attorneys and were sent to DOE officials. Consequently, they meet this requirement. Exemption 5 applies to these documents if an applicable privilege (attorney-client or attorney work product) also applies to them.

However, a number of draft pleadings and communications originated from Battelle's outside counsel for the Pulver litigation or PNNL/Battelle legal staff. Nonetheless, a communication between an agency and a private party is also an intra-agency communication when the "common interest" doctrine applies. Hunton & Williams v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 590 F.3d 272, 277 (4th Cir. 2010); Hanson v. U.S. Agency for Int'l Dev., 372 F.3d 286 (4th Cir. 2004); accord Klamath, 532 U.S. at 10. The common interest doctrine applies when an agency and a private party share an interest and the two decide to cooperate in pursuit of the public interest. Hunton & Williams, 590 F.3d at 277-283. "[I]n a limited sense," the private party "becomes a part of the enterprise that the agency is carrying out." Id. at 280. Therefore, the communications "can be understood as 'intra-agency' for the purposes of Exemption 5." Id.

In the present case, Battelle and PNNL shared litigation information with DOE pursuant to DOE's contractual right to monitor Battelle's litigation expenses for which DOE may be liable and its option to take charge of the litigation itself. See Contract No. DE-AC05-76RL01830 Clause I-100 (DEAR 970.5228-1 Insurance-Litigation and Claims) Section (l). Consequently, we find that the communications originating from Battelle and PNNL were conducted pursuant to a "common interest" and thus these communications also satisfy the intra-agency requirement of Exemption 5.

3. Applicability of the Attorney-Client and Attorney Work Product Privileges

a. Enclosure 2

Enclosure 2 consists of 11 documents withheld in their entirety under the attorney work product privilege. The documents are draft pleadings and interrogatories and legal analyses on issues such as the statute of limitations and options for settlement prepared by counsel concerning the litigation in Pulver. From our review of this material, it is apparent that it was prepared in anticipation of the Pulver litigation. As such, this material is properly protected by the attorney work product privilege and Exemption 5. However, a number of these analyses were transmitted via E-mail. The E-mail address headers (i.e., From:, Sent:, To:, Cc:, Subject:) and the signature blocks at the end of the E-mails do not consist of attorney work product material. Additionally, there is a small amount of E-mail text that does not refer to or relate to legal subjects. Specifically, the first complete sentence on page 2 of Document No. 5 (beginning with ("Thanks so much") is not attorney work product material. In Document No. 8, the first two E-mails in the chain do not contain attorney work product material (both e-mail texts beginning with ("Thanks"). In Document No. 9, the sentence beginning with "Hope" is also not attorney work product material. The first two complete sentences in Document No. 10 beginning with "Good morning" and "Thank you" are not attorney work product material. Consequently, we will remand this matter to OR. OR, on remand, should either release the Enclosure 2 material noted above to the Appellant or withhold it using another relevant Exemption.

b. Enclosure 3

Enclosure 3 consists of two documents in which portions were withheld pursuant to the attorney work product privilege.[7] Document No. 1 is a draft memorandum in opposition to plaintiff's motion to strike declaration. Document No. 2 is a draft of a letter to be sent to opposing counsel concerning discovery issues. Both documents contain legal analysis produced by attorneys for Battelle and PNNL. All of this material was prepared in anticipation of the Pulver litigation. Given this, the material is protected under the attorney work product privilege. Consequently, we find that OR properly withheld these documents.

c. Enclosure 4

Enclosure 4 consists of 13 documents withheld in their entirety pursuant to the attorney-client privilege. The vast majority of the material consists of communication to and from counsel to PNNL officials concerning litigation strategy, utilization of outside counsel, litigation status reports and attorney analysis and opinions regarding Pulver. Consequently, we find that the vast majority of the material withheld in Enclosure 4 is protected by the attorney-client privilege. However, there are E-mail headers and signature blocks which are not protected by attorney-client privilege since they do not refer to any type of legal matter. Also, there is a small amount of E-mail text which does not refer or relate to legal matters and is therefore outside the attorney-client privilege. In Document No. 1 the first E-mail message (beginning with "Jim") does not appear to by protectable by the privilege. In Document No. 3 the first three E-mails on page 1 contain only non-legal informational communications and do not contain attorney-client material. The first page of Document Nos. 4 through 6 contains E-mail text related to scheduling a meeting and thus do not seem to be protectable by the attorney-client privilege. In Document Nos. 7 and 8, page 2 (for both documents), the E-mail text sentence beginning "Thank" is not attorney-client material. Likewise, the E-mail text contained in the first E-mail on page 1 of [7] Both documents were attached to separate E-mails. The associated E-mails were provided to the Appellant in their entirety.

Document No. 10 (beginning with the word "Sold,") relates to scheduling a meeting and does not contain any attorney-client materials. In the second E-mail on page 1, document 11, the sentence beginning "The call in number" concerns a telephone conference call meeting and does not appear to contain attorney-client material. See Clarke v. Amer. Commerce Nat'l Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992) (attorney-client privilege protects documents that "reveal the motive of the client in seeking representation, litigation strategy, or the specific nature of the services provided"); National Resources Defense Counsel v. U.S. Dep't of Defense, 388 F. Supp. 2d 1086, 1099 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (attorney-client privilege requires that documents reflect confidential communications between agency and its attorney, not merely that they be exchanges between an agency and its attorneys). OR, on remand, should either release to the Appellant the non-attorney-client privilege Enclosure 5 material noted above or withhold it using another relevant Exemption, if one exists.

d. Enclosure 5

Enclosure 5 consists of 7 documents of which portions of each document were withheld pursuant to the attorney-client privilege. These documents consist of discussion between counsel and PNNL officials regarding litigation status, proposed strategies and a litigation-related FOIA request. As such, this information was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 and the attorney-client privilege. However, as discussed above, the E-mail headers and signature blocks contained in these documents are not protected by the privilege. Additionally, the text in two E-mails, Talbot to Drew, sent January 17, 2007 at 3:03 pm, and Talbot to Cooke, sent January 17, 2007 at 2:04 pm, contained in Document Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are not protected by the attorney-client privilege. The Talbot/Drew E-mail itself only seeks to inform an official at the Office of Science at DOE Headquarters about the sender's request for information regarding the processing of a FOIA request. The Talbot/Cooke E-mail is the request itself. Neither E-mail text contains information of the type that the attorney-client privilege was meant to protect. Consequently, the text of these E-mails is not protectable pursuant to Exemption 5 and the attorney-client privilege. OR, on remand, should either release to the Appellant the Enclosure 5 material noted above that is not protected by the attorney-client privilege or withhold it using another relevant Exemption.

e. Appellant's Arguments Regarding Privileges

The Appellant asserts that, because the Pulver litigation has now concluded, any documents formerly protected by the attorney-client or attorney work product privileges are no longer protected. This argument is unavailing. The protection of the attorney work product privilege is maintained even if the litigation which prompted its creation never materializes. See FTC v. Grolier Inc., 462 U.S. 19, 26-28 (1983) (under Exemption 5 attorney work product privilege is exempt from mandatory disclosure without regard to the status of the litigation for which it was prepared). Likewise, the attorney-client privilege is not limited to the existence of litigation. See Rein v. U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, 553 F. 3d 353, 377 (4th Cir. 2009) (noting that privilege "extends beyond communications in contemplation of particular litigation to communications regarding 'an opinion on the law'"). Consequently, we reject the Appellant's argument regarding the non-applicability of these privileges.

4. Public Interest Determination

Nonetheless, the DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Appellant has presented evidence which he believes exposes impropriety by Battelle and PNNL and alleges that this shows the significant public interest in releasing the withheld material. However, the Appellant's evidence is somewhat speculative. Further, even if established, it would not outweigh the immense public interest protected by the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges. The Supreme Court, in the civil discovery context, has emphasized the public policy underlying the attorney-client privilege – "that sound legal advice or advocacy serves public ends and that such advice or advocacy depends upon the lawyer's being fully informed by the client." Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 389 (1981). The Supreme Court also has recognized the significant public interest in ensuring the effective operation of counsel through the attorney work product privilege. Hickman, 329 U.S. at 510-11 (1947). Given the important public interests protected by the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges, we conclude that discretionary release of the withheld materials would not be in the public interest.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, the vast majority of the material withheld by OR in the present case was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 and the attorney work product and attorney-client privileges. Since there is a small portion of material that was not appropriately classified as attorney-client or attorney work product privileged material, we will remand this matter to OR for release of this information or the issuance of a new determination letter justifying withholding of this material. Consequently, the Appellant's appeal should be granted in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Custom Catalogues OnLine, Inc., OHA Case Number TFA-0407, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph 2 below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the DOE's Oak Ridge Office which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Sandra L. Spencer
Date of Filing:	July 29, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0408

On July 29, 2010, Sandra L. Spencer filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on July 13, 2010. The determination responded to a request for information Ms. Spencer filed under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008.

I. Background

Ms. Spencer requested from the DOE all employment records regarding her husband, Victor R. Spencer, while he was employed at the DOE's Rocky Flats site. On July 13, 2010, OIR issued a determination to Ms, Spencer in which it stated that it was unable to find any documents responsive to her request. Letter from Alexander C. Morris, Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Officer, to Appellant (July 13, 2010). In her Appeal, Ms. Spencer challenges the adequacy of the DOE's search for responsive documents. Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The DOE requires a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, Case No. VFA-0771 (November 29, 2002).[*] Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the search conducted by OIR, we are guided by the principles we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Natural Resources Defense Council, Case No. TFA-0127 (November 16, 2005). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). In cases such as these, "[t]he issue is not whether any further documents might conceivably exist but rather whether the government's search for responsive documents was adequate." Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 128 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (emphasis in original).

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted OIR regarding the search that was performed in this case. Because Ms. Spencer had indicated in her request that her husband had worked at the Rocky Flats site, a DOE facility that has since closed, OIR requested that the Office of Legacy Management (OLM), which is the repository for Rocky Flats records, conduct a search for records responsive to her request. In response to our inquiries, OLM provided the following information. Using the search terms "Spencer," "Victor," and his Social Security number, OLM searched both paper and electronic records contained in the Privacy Act system of records that contained records regarding the following subjects: grievances, personnel records of former contractor employees, worker advocacy, payroll and leave, training, medical files, employee assistance programs, radiation exposure, occupational and industrial accident reports, legal files, personnel security clearance files, FOIA and Privacy Act requests, and physical fitness tests. E-mail from Tamara Wilson, OLM, to William Schwartz, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals (August 17, 2010).

According to OLM, Ms. Spencer had indicated in her request that her husband had worked for two companies while at the Rocky Flats site, Swinerton & Walberg and J.A. Jones Management Services. Id. At Rocky Flats, as at many sites, the DOE contracted with a management and operating (M&O) contractor to operate the site with DOE oversight. That M&O, or prime, contractor in turn entered into contracts with smaller contractors, or subcontractors, to accomplish routine or specific tasks. Id. Although records of employees of prime contractors were often maintained as DOE records, the accepted practice for subcontractors was, and is, that they maintain their own records. Because Mr. Spencer worked for two subcontractors and not for the prime contractor, it is reasonable to conclude that the DOE has no additional records regarding him.

After reviewing the record in this case, we find that OLM performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal all documents responsive to the Appellant's request. Accordingly, Ms. Spencer's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Sandra L. Spencer on July 29, 2010, Case No. TFA-0408, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Frances R. Stokes
Date of Filing:	August 2, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0409

On August 2, 2010, Frances R. Stokes filed an appeal from a determination issued to her by the Savannah River Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE) regarding a request for documents that she submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to Ms. Stokes's FOIA Request, Savannah River provided her with a number of documents, including some from which information was redacted pursuant to the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Savannah River release to Ms. Stokes the information it did not provide in its response to her request.

I. Background

On June 20, 2010, Ms. Stokes submitted a FOIA request for seven categories of records from the Savannah River Plant pertaining to her late husband, James L. Forrest, who worked at the Plant from 1952 through 1968. On July 12, 2010, Savannah River issued a determination letter regarding the request, through which it released to Ms. Stokes copies of Mr. Forrest's exposure records, employee appraisals, vacation and leave records, and transfer records. The letter also informed Ms. Stokes that Savannah River withheld portions of the radiation exposure records and personnel records it released to her pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA, explaining that the information it withheld concerned other individuals. In her Appeal, Ms. Stokes challenges Savannah River's determination to the extent that it withheld information from her. She contends in her Appeal that at least some of the withheld information may be disclosed to her without compromising the identity of others.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). The documents from which Savannah River redacted information responded to the portions of Ms. Stokes's request that concerned Mr. Forrest's exposure records and personnel records. The radiation exposure records from which information was redacted are periodic (usually monthly) reports of exposure garnered from film badges worn by workers. A single page of each report contains unique information about several workers, including their names and employee numbers, as well as numerical values related to each worker's badge readings. The personnel records from which information was redacted consist of two pages: on one, 12 individuals, including Mr. Forrest, were listed as promoted as of March 29, 1965; on the other, dated May 8, 1967, three individuals, including Mr. Forrest, are listed by name and position.

We have reviewed each page of each document from which a portion was redacted from the copies provided to Ms. Stokes. On each page, all the information that related to Mr. Forrest was released to Ms. Stokes, and all the information that was redacted and not released to Ms. Stokes was similar information about other individuals. Because Ms. Stokes's request was for information about Mr. Forrest, we have determined that she received all the information contained on those pages that was responsive to her request. Because the redacted information concerned individuals other than Mr. Forrest, that information was not responsive to Ms. Stokes's request. We have previously found that non-responsive material is not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0295 (2009); Northwest Technical Resources, Inc., Case No. VFA-0611 (2000).*

We note that Savannah River cited Exemption 6 of the FOIA as justification for its withholding information from Ms. Stokes. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). We have determined that Savannah River released to Ms. Stokes all of the information that was responsive to her request, i.e., all of the information pertaining to Mr. Forrest that fell within the seven categories of her request. Because Savannah River did not withhold any responsive information from Ms. Stokes, we need not consider Savannah River's application of Exemption 6 in this matter.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Frances R. Stokes, Case Number TFA-0409, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Reginald A. Harris
Date of Filing:	August 16, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0411

On August 16, 2010, Reginald A. Harris filed an Appeal from a determination the Department of Energy Office of Human Capital Management (DOE/HC) issued on July 14, 2010. The determination responded to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

The Appellant requested from DOE/HC position descriptions for Criminal Investigators in the DOE's Office of Security Operations and Office of Special Operations, and position evaluation statements for each position description. This request was the subject of a prior Appeal that Mr. Harris filed with our office regarding a determination DOE/HC issued on March 15, 2010. In that determination, DOE/HC released copies of the requested position descriptions, but stated that it "does not distribute position evaluation statements to employees nor to anyone in the Program Offices." Letter from Sarah J. Bonilla, Director, DOE/HC, to Reginald A. Harris (March 15, 2010). In ruling on the Appeal, we noted that DOE/HC's determination letter cited no exemption under the FOIA authorizing the withholding of position evaluation statements, and remanded the matter to DOE/HC for a new determination, either releasing the requested position evaluation statements to Mr. Harris or specifying the exemption(s) under which it is withholding those documents. Reginald A. Harris, Case No. TFA-0368 (2010).[1]

On July 14, 2010, DOE/HC issued a new determination, stating that it was withholding the requested position evaluation statements "pursuant to Exemption 2 of the FOIA." Letter from Sarah J. Bonilla to Mr. Reginald A. Harris (July 14, 2010) (Determination Letter) at 1. In his present Appeal, Mr. Harris argues that the position evaluation statements fall outside the scope of Exemption 2, and therefore should be released. Appeal at 2-5.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

As interpreted by the courts, Exemption 2 encompasses two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information); and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). "Low 2," invoked by DOE/HC in the present case, is based upon "the rationale that the very task of processing and releasing certain data would be an administrative burden unjustified by any genuine public benefit." James L. Schwab, Case No. LFA-0316, 23 DOE ¶ 80,144 (1993) (citing Martin v. Lauer, 686 F.2d 24, 34 (D.C. Cir. 1982)); see also Carbe v. ATF, No. 03-1658, 2004 WL 2051359, at *6 (D.D.C. Aug. 12, 2004) ("'Low 2' information refers to internal procedures and practices of an agency where disclosure would constitute an administrative burden unjustified by any genuine and significant public benefit.").

The courts have fashioned a two-part test for determining whether information can be exempted from mandatory disclosure under the "low two" category: The agency seeking to withhold information under "low two" must be able to show that (1) the requested information is "predominantly internal," and (2) "the material relates to trivial administrative matters of no genuine public interest." Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992).

In its determination, DOE/HC states that "low 2" applies to the documents it withheld "since the evaluation statements are not considered to be an official part of the position description and are for use by the Human Resources Office to document the analysis of the position descriptions." Determination Letter at 1. Though not using the words "predominantly internal," DOE/HC's determination appears to apply the first prong of the two-part test described above.

The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has defined predominantly internal information as that which "does not purport to regulate activities among members of the public . . . [and] does [not set] standards to be followed by agency personnel in deciding whether to proceed against or to take action affecting members of the public." Cox v. Department of Justice, 601 F.2d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 1979) (per curiam). We have reviewed the documents in question, which explain the basis for the classification of certain Criminal Investigator positions at particular General Schedule (GS) grade levels. As these documents clearly do not purport to regulate activities or set standards of the type described in Cox, we find that the information contained in the documents is "predominantly internal."

DOE/HC's determination, however, does not address the second requirement for withholding information under "low 2," that the information at issue "relates to trivial administrative matters of no genuine public interest." Moreover, aside from what the federal courts have required to justify withholding under Exemption 2, the DOE FOIA regulations provide that the Department "will make records available which it is authorized to withhold under 5 U.S.C. 552 whenever it determines that such disclosure is in the public interest." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The regulations further require that a determination letter denying a FOIA request must contain "a statement of why a discretionary release [e.g., under Section 1004.1] is not appropriate." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1).

Because DOE/HC's determination does not address the public interest in disclosure of the information requested by the Appellant, either as part of its stated basis for withholding the information under Exemption 2, or in explaining why discretionary release is not appropriate as required by the DOE regulations, we must again remand this matter to DOE/HC for a new determination. In its determination, DOE/HC must either release the requested position evaluation statements to Mr. Harris or provide an adequate justification for withholding the information, along with a statement as to why a discretionary release of the requested information would not be appropriate.

More specifically, if DOE/HC concludes that the information must be withheld under "low 2," its determination must address the public interest in the information at issue, and how the "very task of processing and releasing" the eleven pages of information at issue would impose "an administrative burden unjustified by any genuine public benefit." Schwab, 23 DOE at 80,610-11 ("the administrative burden of reproducing a single sheet of paper is low"); see also Fonda v. CIA, 434 F. Supp. 498, 503 (D.D.C. 1977) (finding that where administrative burden is minimal and it would be easier to release information at issue, policy underlying Exemption 2 does not permit withholding).

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Reginald A. Harris on August 16, 2010, Case No. TFA-0411, is hereby granted as specified in paragraph (2) below, and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Human Capital Management, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Linda S. Bramlett
Date of Filing:	August 17, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0412

On August 17, 2010, Linda S. Bramlett filed an appeal from a determination issued to her by the Savannah River Operations Office of the Department of Energy (DOE) regarding a request for documents that she submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to Ms. Bramlett's request for information, Savannah River provided her with a number of documents, including some from which information was redacted pursuant to the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Savannah River release to Ms. Bramlett the information it did not provide in its response to her request.

I. Background

On May 3, 2010, Ms. Bramlett sent a request by e-mail to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) of the Department of Health and Human Resources (HHR) for records relating to her late husband's claim with that agency. On June 8, 2010, the CDC forwarded records to the DOE that it determined were DOE records and pertained to Ms. Bramlett's request, for the DOE to make a determination regarding the release of those records to Ms. Bramlett. On July 7, 2010, the DOE Headquarters' FOIA Officer referred those documents, all of which were radiation exposure records, to the Savannah River Operations Office for a review and determination of releasability under the FOIA. On July 13, 2010, Savannah River issued a determination letter regarding those documents that the CDC had referred to the DOE, through which it released to Ms. Bramlett copies of her husband's radiation exposure records. The letter also informed Ms. Bramlett that Savannah River withheld portions of the exposure records it released to her pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA, explaining that the information it withheld concerned the name, social security number, and levels of radiation exposure of one or more individuals. In her Appeal, Ms. Bramlett challenges Savannah River's determination to the extent that it withheld information about her husband from her. She also requests copies of her husband's employment records, as she contends that the CDC is relying on incorrect information about his employment history.

II. Analysis

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). The radiation exposure records from which Savannah River redacted information are periodic (quarterly or monthly) reports of exposure garnered from film badges worn by workers. A single page of each report contains unique information about several workers, including their names and social security numbers, as well as numerical values related to each worker's badge readings.

We have reviewed each page of each document from which a portion was redacted from the copies provided to Ms. Bramlett. On each page, all the information that related to Mr. Bramlett was released to Ms. Bramlett, and all the information that was redacted and not released to Ms. Bramlett was similar information about other individuals. Because Ms. Bramlett's request was for information about her husband, we have determined that she received all the information contained on those pages that was responsive to her request. Because the redacted information concerned individuals other than Mr. Bramlett, that information was not responsive to Ms. Bramlett's request. We have previously found that non-responsive material is not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0295 (2009); Northwest Technical Resources, Inc., Case No. VFA-0611 (2000).*

We note that Savannah River cited Exemption 6 of the FOIA as justification for its withholding information from Ms. Bramlett. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). We have determined that Savannah River released to Ms. Bramlett all of the information that was responsive to her request, i.e., all of the information pertaining to her husband, contained on those pages from which information was redacted. Because Savannah River did not withhold any responsive information from Ms. Bramlett, we need not consider Savannah River's application of Exemption 6 in this matter.

In her Appeal, Ms. Bramlett also requests copies of her husband's employment records. Savannah River did not review any employment records when processing its determination, because the documents the CDC referred to the DOE contained no employment records. The scope of this Appeal is limited to the documents about which Savannah River issued its determination, which consisted only of radiation exposure records received from the CDC. If Ms. Bramlett wishes to obtain information from the DOE that has not yet been the subject of a FOIA request, she may request that information—in this case, her husband's employment records—by filing a request for them with the DOE pursuant to the FOIA.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Linda S. Bramlett, Case Number TFA-0412, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: The News-Gazette

Date of Filing: September 9, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0417

On September 9, 2010, Mr. Thomas J. Kacich, on behalf of The News-Gazette in Champaign, Illinois, filed an Appeal from a determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR), in response to a request for documents that Mr. Kacich submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to expedite the processing of Mr. Kacich's FOIA request.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On August 12, 2010, Mr. Kacich filed a FOIA request with OIR for records pertaining to the FutureGen and FutureGen 2.0 Projects, clean energy projects focused on creating near-zero emissions coal-fueled power plants. Specifically, Mr. Kacich requested all reports and correspondence written by and to three senior DOE officials regarding the FutureGen and FutureGen 2.0 projects. Request Email from Thomas J. Kacich, The News-Gazette, to OIR (August 12, 2010). Mr. Kacich identified himself as a representative of the news media and requested expedited processing because "significant questions have been raised about why changes were made to the original FutureGen project that had been approved by the DOE and the FutureGen Alliance." Id. Mr. Kacich added, "the DOE has set a deadline of [September] 30 for applications for FutureGen 2.0 and some Illinois communities are believed to be interested in applying. This reporting could help those communities and their residents understand how and why FutureGen has evolved into a significantly new proposal. It is imperative that these documents be released quickly so applicants and taxpayers are fully aware of the revisions." Id.

On August 18, 2010, OIR denied Mr. Kacich's request for expedited processing on the grounds that the request did not satisfy the requirements for expedited processing. Determination Letter from OIR to Mr. Kacich (August 18, 2010). Specifically, OIR found that Mr. Kacich's request did not set forth material establishing any threat to the life or safety of an individual that would justify expedited processing. Id. at 2. OIR further determined that Mr. Kacich did not identify "any actual or alleged activity that poses any particular urgency that requires the dissemination of information in an expedited manner." Id.

On September 9, 2010, Mr. Kacich submitted this Appeal of OIR's denial of expedited processing. In his Appeal, Mr. Kacich asked that OHA order OIR to expedite the processing of his FOIA request. Appeal Letter from Thomas Kacich to OHA (received September 9, 2010).

II. Analysis

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up in line" and delaying the processing of earlier requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered only when the requester demonstrates a "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when the failure to obtain the requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. The second situation occurs if the requester is primarily engaged in disseminating information and has an "urgency to inform" the public about an activity of the federal government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v). The request at issue in this Appeal clearly does not involve information which could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or safety of an individual. Therefore, our analysis turns to the second situation – the "urgency to inform."

In order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform" and, thus, a "compelling need," we consider at least three factors: (1) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (2) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (3) whether the request concerns federal government activity. Al-Fayed v. CIA, 254 F.3d 300, 310 (D.C.Cir. 2001); see also Southeastern Legal Foundation, Inc., Case No. TFA-0389 (2010);[*] Center for Investigative Reporting, Case No. TFA-0200 (2007).

Courts have found sufficient urgency to grant expedited processing in situations of an "ongoing public controversy associated with a specific time frame." Long v. Department of Homeland Security, 436 F. Supp. 2d 38 (D.D.C. 2006). Requesters have also demonstrated urgency in several other ways. See, e.g., Washington Post v. Dep't of Homeland Security, 459 F. Supp. 2d 61 (D.D.C. 2006) (granting expedited processing based on public need for requested material to inform voters prior to upcoming election); Gerstein v. CIA, No, C-06-4643, 2006 WL 3462658 (N.D. Cal. November 29, 2006) (granting expedited processing because of significant interest in quickly disseminating news regarding a subject currently under debate by Congress); American Civil Liberties Union v. Dep't of Defense, No. C-06-01698 WHA, 2006 WL 1469418, at *6

(N.D. Cal. May 25, 2006) (granting expedited processing for information related to a "breaking news story," i.e., a story that would lose value if it were delayed).

Conversely, courts have denied requests for expedited processing if the requester fails to demonstrate urgency. See, e.g., Al-Fayed v. CIA, 254 F.3d at 310 (finding that there is no evidence of a substantial public interest in plaintiff's allegations and that plaintiff did not demonstrate any significant adverse consequences if expedited processing was denied); Electronic Privacy Info. Ctr. v. Dep't of Justice, 322 F. Supp. 2d 1 (D.D.C. 2003) (concluding that plaintiff failed to demonstrate urgency because its proffer of 31 newspaper articles concerning the general subject of plaintiff's FOIA request did not make a story a matter of "current exigency"). See also Eugenie Reich, Case No. TFA-0187 (2007) (denying request for expedited processing because journalist did not establish urgency and did not make clear that the requested information would not be useful to her if processed within the time frame of a normal FOIA request).

In his Appeal, Mr. Kacich reiterated his belief that there exists a compelling need for expedited processing of his request. He stated that the DOE set a deadline of September 30, 2010, for communities to apply to be a partner in the FutureGen 2.0 project. He added, "those communities – all in downstate Illinois and many within the circulation area of The News-Gazette – need to know how and why FutureGen has evolved into an entirely different project in the last few months … the release of these documents would help shed light on that process and perhaps keep communities from getting involved in a costly and time-consuming process that they may later regret." Appeal at 2. Mr. Kacich further asserted that "no other area media outlet is pursuing this story as aggressively as The News-Gazette" and that if he did not receive the requested records quickly, "no one else will provide the critically important coverage that [The News-Gazette] is providing." Id.

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Mr. Kacich has not established a compelling need for expedited processing of his request. Mr. Kacich maintains that it is possible that some communities within his newspaper's circulation area may wish to apply to be partners in FutureGen 2.0 and, therefore, they need more information about the evolution of the project prior to the September 30, 2010, application deadline. This supposed public interest comprises a very narrow section of the American public and is speculative in nature. Therefore, we cannot find that the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public or that processing the request within the time frame of a normal FOIA request would compromise a significant recognized interest. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed on September 9, 2010, by The News-Gazette, OHA Case No. TFA-0417, is hereby denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Mathieu Brener
Date of Filing:	September 10, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0418

On September 10, 2010, Mathieu Brener (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on August 10, 2010, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA/SC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA/SC responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed for under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, NNSA/SC identified and released nine documents responsive to the Appellant's request. The Appellant challenges NNSA/SC's withholding of 27 computer files. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA/SC to release the withheld files to the Appellant.

I. Background

On June 25, 2009, the Appellant requested "all documents, files and notebooks, including digital and paper, that were in the Los Alamos National Laboratory office of Mathieu Brener, . . . at 5 p.m. on January 14, 2008. This includes files on the computer in the office, the documents that were in the white binders, and the lab notebook." E-Mail Request dated June 25, 2009, from Appellant to FOIA Services. On April 10, 2010, NNSA/SC sent a partial response to the Appellant. E-Mail dated September 21, 2010, from Karen Laney, NNSA/SC, to Janet Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). An April 20, 2010, submission narrowed the scope of the original request. Id. On August 10, 2010, NNSA/SC issued its final determination to the Appellant, releasing nine documents in full. Determination Letter dated August 10, 2010, from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA/SC, to Appellant (Determination Letter). NNSA/SC stated that the remaining computer files include:

> manuals, data files and measurements, bitmaps, spreadsheets, etc., that have the potential to be harmful by revealing advanced nuclear technology. It is believed that if any of the information was released, it could cause significant harm to the Agency's nuclear nonproliferation program; it could benefit adversaries by helping them identify possible program impacts and vulnerabilities, as well as provide them the opportunity to target these facilities. This information is predominantly internal and has not been released to the public. Disclosure of this information could possibly expose this department, as well as other departments/organizations, to a "significant risk of circumvention of agency regulations or statutes."

Id. at 3. Accordingly, NNSA/SC withheld the 27 files in their entirety.

On September 10, 2010, the Appellant appealed, contending that the 27 withheld computer files are not withholdable under Exemption 2. He maintained that the computer files were created for his Ph.D. research in conjunction with the Nuclear Engineering and Radiological Science Department at the University of Michigan. Appeal Letter dated September 10, 2010, from Appellant to Director, OHA. Accordingly, he claims that the computer files are not "predominantly internal," a prerequisite to Exemption 2 applicability. Id. at 2. Further, he claims that the information in the files is very similar to previously published science, and the topics and science have been cleared for unlimited public release. Id. Finally, he singles out two computer files that were withheld, claiming that one, Sudoku.llb, is a Sudoku puzzle solver, and the other, MCNPViewer.llb, is "custom written user interface to a widely available nuclear simulation program." Id.

In response to the Appeal, NNSA/SC advised us that it continued to believe that the files were withholdable under Exemption 2. NNSA/SC stated that the information had not been publicly released. NNSA/SC further stated that, in some cases, the files contained numbers or possibly computer software that could result in the disclosure of exempt information. NNSA/SC also stated that "it would take a great deal of [information technology's (IT)] time and expertise to determine exactly what these files are." E-mail dated September 21, 2010, from Karen Laney, NNSA/SC, to Janet Fishman, OHA.

II. Analysis

It appears to us that NNSA/SC's application of an exemption to some of the documents was premature. A preliminary question is whether a record is an "agency record" and, therefore, subject to the FOIA.

The Supreme Court has articulated a two-part test for determining what constitutes an "agency record." An "agency record" is a record that is (1) either created or obtained by an agency, and (2) under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v.

Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). Whether computer software is an agency record depends on the particular nature and functionality of the software at issue. Compare Gilmore v. Dep't of Energy, 4 F. Supp. 2d 912, 920-21 (N.D. Cal 1998) (holding that video conferencing software developed by privately owned laboratory was not a record under FOIA because it was "not designed to be . . . responsive to any particular database" and "does not illuminate anything about [the agency's] structure or decision making process), with Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton v. HHS, 844 F. Supp. 770, 781-82 (D.D.C. 1993) (concluding that software program was a record because it was "uniquely suited to its underlying database" such that "the software's design and ability to manipulate the data reflect the [agency's study]," thereby "preserving information and 'perpetuating knowledge'") (quoting DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542 (10th Cir. 1978)).

As an initial matter, we question whether the file labeled as "Sudoku.llb" is an agency record. The Appellant claims that the file is a Sudoku puzzle solver. If it is what the Appellant alleges it to be, such a file does not appear to us to illuminate anything about DOE's structure or decision-making process. Rather, it may well be Mr. Brener's own personal file. To the extent that the remaining files are computer software files, they may or may not be agency records. Accordingly, we are remanding the request to NNSA/SC to determine whether the computer files at issue here fit within the definition of an agency record discussed above.

To the extent that NNSA/SC believes it has sufficient information about a computer file to determine that it is an "agency record," NNSA/SC can then determine whether it has sufficient information to apply an exemption.[*/] To the extent that NNSA/SC does not have sufficient information to make those determinations, NNSA/SC will need to perform further review. With respect to the applicability of a FOIA exemption, we note that the Appellant also claims in his Appeal that the withheld information is publicly available. As an example of his claim, he states that he provided some of the information to a university faculty in connection with his dissertation. That statement, however, does not end the inquiry. Courts have established rules for determining whether an agency has waived its right to use one of the FOIA exemptions to withhold requested information. Fitzgibbon v. CIA, 911 F.2d 755, 765 (D.C. Cir. 1990). Generally, the government may not rely on an otherwise valid exemption to justify withholding information that officially has entered the public domain. See, e.g., Students Against Genocide v. Dep't of State, 257 F.3d 828, 836 (D.C. Cir. 2001). To have been "officially" disclosed, information must have been disclosed under circumstances in which an authorizing government official allowed the information to be made public. See, e.g., Wolf v. CIA, 473 F.3d 370, 379-80 (D.C. Cir. 2007). Under the facts in this record, release by the Appellant to university faculty does not appear to be a release by an authorized government official.

[*/] NNSA/SC implied that one of the files is classified and another contains proprietary information. September 21, 2010, E-mail. Yet, it withheld all the information under Exemption 2. We believe NNSA/SC should closely examine the files before making a blanket claim that the information is exempted under Exemption 2. NNSA/SC should consider whether the information is withholdable under a more appropriate exemption.

Finally, the Appellant objects to NNSA/SC's release of the nine documents in paper format, rather than electronic form. Since the implementation of the Electronic Freedom of Information Act Amendments of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-231, 110 Stat. 3048, agencies have been required to provide the record to a requester in "any form or format requested . . . if the record is readily reproducible by the agency in that form or format." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(B). The Appellant's objection herein implies that he wants the files in electronic format. June 25, 2009, Request E-mail. Therefore, on remand, NNSA/SC should release the computer files in electronic form, unless there is uncertainty regarding their content. If NNSA/SC believes that release of the files in electronic form would allow the Appellant to access exempt information that is not readily apparent to the NNSA/SC IT professionals, NNSA/SC can release the documents in paper format. Cf. Sussman v. USMS, No. 03-0610, 2005 WL 3213912, at *5 (D.D.C. Oct. 13, 2005) (allowing an agency to withhold information related to databases because disclosure could allow fugitives to circumvent procedures and avoid detection); Truesdale v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, No. 03-1332, 2005 WL 3273093 *7 (D.D.C. July 22, 2005) (finding that, pursuant to Exemption 2, ATF properly withheld data related to software applications and routing codes because release could allow individuals to circumvent computer system and interfere with law enforcement operations).

III. Conclusion

NNSA/SC should consider what information is contained in the responsive computer files. After reaching a conclusion on that matter, NNSA/SC should determined whether the files are agency records as defined by the case law discussed above. If it determines that the documents are agency records, NNSA/SC should release the computer files or justify the application of an exemption. Despite the Appellant's claim, NNSA/SC has not waived its right to apply a FOIA exemption, because NNSA/SC did not officially release the information. Finally, any information NNSA/SC deems releasable must be released in the format requested by the Appellant, if possible. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to NNSA/SC for a new determination as outlined in the Decision above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mathieu Brener, Case No. TFA-0418, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Terry Apodaca

Date of Filing: September 13, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0419

On September 13, 2010, Terry Apodaca (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on August 19, 2010, by the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIG responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, OIG identified 16 documents, and released 14 documents,[1/] responsive to the Appellant's request. OIG withheld portions of most of the released documents. The Appellant challenges OIG's withholdings. This appeal, if granted, would require OIG to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On June 21, 2010, the Appellant requested "all Inspector General documents involved in their investigation of my complaint in November 2009." Request E-Mail dated June 21, 2010, from Appellant to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer. On August 19, 2010, OIG released 14 documents to the Appellant. OIG redacted portions from most of the 14 documents, contending that the redacted information is exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Determination Letter dated August 19, 2010, from Sandra D. Bruce, Assistant Inspector General for Inspections and Special Inquiries, OIG to Appellant (Determination Letter). OIG also withheld Document 16 in its entirety claiming that since the Appellant provided the document to OIG, OIG would not be returning a copy to the Appellant. Id.

[1/] We will refer to the documents by number. One document was sent to another DOE office for processing as the document originated in that office. The second document was not released to the Appellant because she had provided it to OIG.

On September 13, 2010, the Appellant appealed, first contending that names and titles of federal employees are releasable. Appeal at 1. Second, she claimed that OIG withheld two responsive documents that were mentioned in another document. Id. Third, she claimed that OIG withheld information that she had provided to OIG. Id. Fourth, she stated that it is not clear what information was withheld from some of the documents. Id. Finally, she challenged the withholding of Document 16 in its entirety. Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). In this regard, it is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemptions 6 and 7(C) are at issue in this case.

A. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C.§ 552(b)(6); see also 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes," if release of such law enforcement records or information "could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. National Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C.

Cir. 1989) (NARFE). The second step is that the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 769 (1989). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the information either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally NARFE, 879 F.2d at 874; Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir 1984).

Exemption 7(C) applies to a much narrower class of documents than Exemption 6, but it has a less exacting standard that provides more expansive coverage. Both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) require a balancing of the personal privacy interest in the information proposed for withholding against the public interest in the same information. There are, however, two significant differences between Exemption 6 and 7(C). Pursuant to Exemption 7(C), the information must have been compiled for law enforcement purposes. Furthermore, since Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold information where there is only a reasonable expectation of an "unwarranted invasion of personal privacy," Exemption 7(C) has a lower threshold of privacy interest than Exemption 6 where the balancing test calls for a "clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Pursuant to the provisions of Exemption 7(C), we have examined investigations conducted by OIG in response to complaints by individuals, as in this case, and found that they constitute law enforcement activities. See Ken Hasten, Case No. TFA-0353 (2010).[2/] Since the information at issue in this case meets Exemption 7(C)'s threshold test, we need only examine OIG's actions pursuant to the standard of Exemption 7(C), i.e., whether release of the withheld material could reasonably be expected to result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See, e.g., J.G. Truher, Case No. VFA-0245 (1997).

B. The Appellant's Arguments

First, the Appellant contends that OIG improperly withheld the names and titles of federal employees. OIG asserted a privacy interest in the identities of the individuals. The Determination letter states in pertinent part:

> Names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals have been withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C).

[2/] OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

> Individuals involved in OIG enforcement matters, which in this case includes subjects, witnesses, sources of information, and other individuals, are entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions.

Determination Letter at 1. The courts have routinely found that information identifying law enforcement personnel can be withheld. Concepcion v. FBI, 606 F. Supp. 2d 14, 39 (D.D.C. 2009); Amuso v. Dep't of Justice, 600 F. Supp. 2d 78, 96-97 (D.D.C. 2009) (finding agency's decision to withhold names of agency personnel amply supported by case law). This Office has likewise found a significant privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of OIG employees. Ashok K. Kaushal, Case No. VFA-0529 (1999). Therefore, we will deny the Appeal regarding the federal employee names and job titles.

Secondly, the Appellant claims that she was not provided with two documents that are referred to in Document 2. According to OIG, Document Number 2 contains a typographical error when referring to March 26, 2010, correspondence. Memorandum of September 21, 2010, Conversation between Ruby Len, OIG, and Janet Fishman, OHA. The correct date should be March 25, 2010. Id. A copy of that document is included as Document 3. Id. The other document that the Appellant is claiming she did not receive was released to her as Document 4. Id. Therefore, we will deny this part of the Appeal as the information already has been released to the Appellant.

Thirdly, the Appellant complains that the information that was withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C) from a number of the released documents was provided to OIG by the Appellant. In considering this argument in an earlier case, we held that a requester's status as the author, or in this case the originator, of the requested documents is irrelevant to our review under the FOIA. David E. Ridenour, Case No. VFA-0411 (1998); W.F. Lawless, 13 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,540 (1985). Subsequently to the Lawless case, the Supreme Court held that the "identity of the requesting party" has "no bearing on the merits" of a FOIA request with the exception of certain cases involving a claim of privilege. Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 771. Consequently, the Appellant's argument is without merit. Therefore, we will deny this part of the Appellant's Appeal.

Fourthly, the Appellant contends that OIG did not adequately describe the other withheld information. An agency has an obligation to properly justify its withholding of information under the FOIA. In utilizing Exemptions 6 and 7(C) to withhold the information that was responsive to the Appellant's request, OIG identified the withheld material as "names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals." We reviewed unredacted copies of the 16 documents. Beyond the federal employees' names and titles that were withheld, we identified other information that may not be withholdable. For example, one withholding was the name of another DOE office. There is no apparent privacy interest in that name of a DOE office. As another example, words surrounding names were redacted. Again, we can not see an apparent privacy interest in these words. Further, we do not believe OIG properly identified the material withheld. The FOIA requires that information be identified in a sufficiently descriptive manner to allow the Appellant to make a cogent argument on Appeal. The description of "information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals," is not sufficiently descriptive. We will remand this matter for OIG to better describe the redacted information and to carefully review those redactions to determine whether a significant privacy interest exists in the words that were redacted.

Finally, the Appellant complains that information that she provided to OIG was not released to her. OIG stated that "Document 16 is not being processed back to you because it was addressed to you, written by you or has already been provided to you. The document is the package you submitted to OIG Hotline entitled 'Supporting Documentation,' dated November 6, 2009." Determination Letter at 2. We understand OIG's argument that the Appellant already possesses the document. We recognize that if the Appellant obtained the requested information through the FOIA, OIG is not required to release the information to her again. Diane C. Larson, Case No. TFA-0178 (2006). Unless Document 16 was released to the Appellant through a previous FOIA request, OIG should process that portion of her request concerning Document 16. 5 U.S.C. § 552(d). Therefore, we will remand this to OIG for a new determination concerning the release of Document 16.

III. Conclusion

OIG properly withheld the names and titles of those involved in the instant OIG investigation. Therefore, we will deny that part of her Appeal. Second, we will deny those parts of the Appeal relating to the Appellant's claim that two documents were not released to her, as the documents were included with the determination. Third, we will deny that part of the Appeal in which the Appellant claimed that information was redacted that she provided to OIG. Finally, we will remand this matter for OIG to more precisely describe other information withheld from the documents and for a new determination regarding Document 16. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to OIG for a new determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Terry Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0419, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of the Inspector General, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Natural Resources Defense Council

Date of Filing: September 15, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0421

On September 15, 2010, the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on September 2, 2010, by the Department of Energy's Idaho Operations Office (DOE-ID). In that determination, DOE-ID responded to a request for documents that NRDC filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004.

I. Background

On July 22, 2010, NRDC filed a FOIA request for certain records in the possession or control of the Idaho National Laboratory (INL) pertaining to a proposed coal-to-liquid facility being developed by Ohio River Clean Fuels, LLC (ORCF). Letter from Joshua Berman, NRDC, to Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, DOE-ID (July 22, 2010). In an August 11, 2010, response, DOE-ID released three documents responsive to NRDC's request, but stated that the other records sought by NRDC were not subject to the FOIA. Letter from Clayton Ogilvie to Joshua Berman (August 11, 2010). On September 2, 2010, DOE-ID issued a "revised final response," further explaining that the documents not being released were not agency records subject to release under the FOIA, nor were they property of the government under the "Access to and Ownership of Records" clause in the contract between the DOE and Battelle Energy Alliance, LLC (BEA), the contractor that operates INL for the DOE, such that they would be subject to release under the DOE FOIA regulations. Letter from Clayton Ogilvie to Joshua Berman (September 2, 2010).

In its Appeal, NRDC contends that the records in question "are within the possession of INL, an 'agency' as defined under FOIA, and therefore qualify as agency records subject to FOIA regardless of whether BEA maintains legal ownership or control of the records." Appeal at 4.

II. Analysis

A. Whether the Documents at Issue are Agency Records Subject to the FOIA

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the documents in question are agency records and thus subject to the FOIA under the criteria set out by the federal courts. The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents are "agency records" subject to the FOIA. That analysis involves a determination (1) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (2) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See, e.g., Faye Vlieger, Case No. TFA-0250 (2008); Eugenie Reich, Case No. TFA-0213 (2007). [1]

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . . , or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976) (Orleans), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which an entity must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[T]he question here is not whether the [entity] receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Orleans, 425 U.S. at 815. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provides the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980) (Forsham).

We have routinely applied this analysis in our prior cases addressing whether an entity is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA. See, e.g., Vlieger. Specifically with regard to INL, we have previously found that a contractor responsible for the management and operation of INL "is clearly not an 'agency' as that term is defined in the FOIA." Moore Brower Hennessy & Freeman, P.C., Case No. VFA-0393 (1998) (citing William Kuntz III, Case No. VFA-0105, 25 DOE ¶ 80,157 (1995)).

In its Appeal, NRDC provides us no basis for departing from our established precedent in these cases. Instead, it quotes the statutory definition of "agency" and points to legislative history that supports a broad reading of that term, Appeal at 5, neither of which is helpful in resolving the specific issue presented in this case. NRDC also contends that, "at all times pertinent to NRDC's request INL has held itself out as being subject to FOIA." Id. The appellant states that INL maintains a FOIA reading room and has a FOIA officer, and that its employees have ".gov" email addresses and government identification badges, and "are routinely recognized as government employees for purposes of obtaining government employee rates for travel expenses." Id. Assuming, arguendo, the accuracy of the Appellant's description of INL and its employees, none of this information is relevant to the application of the standard set forth by the Court in Orleans and Forsham. Applying this standard, and consistent with our prior cases, we find that, though INL is owned by the government, it is operated by BEA, a private contractor, and its day-to-day operations are not supervised by the DOE. Therefore, neither INL nor BEA is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA.

Although INL is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, the requested documents could nonetheless be considered "agency records" if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Tax Analysts). However, the documents in question were created by BEA, not DOE, and have not been obtained by DOE. Letter from Clayton Ogilvie to Joshua Berman (September 2, 2010) at 1; Letter from Clayton Ogilvie to Joshua Berman (August 11, 2010) at 1.
Nonetheless, in its Appeal, NRDC contends that DOE has "unlimited rights" in the documents at issue, citing a provision of the Cooperative Research and Development Agreement (CRADA) between BEA and Baard Energy, LLC, one of the documents released by DOE-ID in response to NRDC's request. Appeal at 3 n.1. In response, DOE-ID states that, "although the CRADA provides that DOE has unlimited rights in Generated Information, DOE has not sought to exercise those rights, nor has it taken possession or control of the documents sought." E-mail from Mary McKnight, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE-ID, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeals (September 24, 2010).

DOE-ID notes the similarity of the facts in the present case to those in Forsham, where the agency had a "right of access to the data," but had "not exercised its right either to review or to obtain permanent custody of the data." Forsham, 445 U.S. at 173. Under these circumstances, the Court held that "the FOIA applies to records which have been in fact obtained, and not to records which merely could have been obtained." Id. at 186. We agree with DOE-ID, and find here that any rights DOE may have in the documents at issue do not render those documents agency records for FOIA purposes so long as DOE has chosen not to exercise its rights. We therefore find that these documents are not agency records subject to the FOIA.

B. Whether the Documents at Issue are Subject to Release Under the DOE FOIA Regulations

A finding that certain documents are not "agency records" does not end our inquiry. The DOE's FOIA regulations state:

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C § 552(b).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). Section I.15(b)(3) of the contract between DOE and BEA identifies as property of BEA "records relating to any procurement action by the contractor, except for records that under 48 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3, Accounts, Records, and Inspection, are described as property of the government; . . . ."[2] Management and Operation of the Idaho National Laboratory (INL), Contract No. DE-AC07-05ID14517, http://www.id.doe.gov/doeid/INLContract/INL-Contract.htm.

Applying the provisions of the contract between the DOE and BEA to the case at hand, it is clear that the documents at issue in this case are the property of BEA, not the DOE. The documents, e-mails pertaining to a facility being developed under an agreement between BEA and a subcontractor, clearly relate to a "procurement action" by BEA and are not among those described as property of the government under 48 C.F.R. § 970.5232-3. E-mail from Mary McKnight, Office of Chief Counsel, DOE-ID, to Steven Goering, Office of Hearings and Appeal (September 28, 2010). As such, the documents are not subject to release under the DOE FOIA regulations.

[2] Section I. 43(d) of the contract (DEAR § 970.5232-3) states, in pertinent part, that "except as agreed upon by the Government and the contractor, all financial and cost reports, books of account and supporting documents, system files, data bases, and other data evidencing costs allowable, collections accruing to the contractor in connection with the work under this contract, other applicable credits, and fee accruals under this contract, shall be the property of the Government, and shall be delivered to the Government or otherwise disposed of by the contractor either as the contracting officer may from time to time direct during the progress of the work or, in any event, as the contracting officer shall direct upon completion or termination under this contract and final audits of account hereunder."

In sum, for the reasons set forth above, we find that the e-mails requested by NRDC are neither agency records subject to the FOIA nor are they subject to release under the DOE FOIA regulations. Therefore, we will deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on September 15, 2010, by the Natural Resources Defense Council, OHA Case No. TFA-0421, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Jon E. Lux
Date of Filing:	September 28, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0423

On September 28, 2010, Jon E. Lux (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on September 14, 2010, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (Golden). In that determination, Golden responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This appeal, if granted, would require Golden to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On August 25, 2010, the Appellant filed a request for a subcontract awarded by the Alliance for Sustainable Energy, LLC ("the Alliance"), which is the management and operating (M&O) contractor for DOE's National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL). Specifically, the Appellant stated that NREL "issued a RFP [on] March 2010 for Learning Management System and Online Course Development Capabilities." The Appellant requested "a copy of the contract between DOE NREL and the awardee." See FOIA Request, DOE Exhibit A. Because the request specifically identified the document as a contract resulting from an NREL Request for Proposals (RFP), Golden's FOIA Officer contacted NREL to determine whether such a responsive document existed. Golden Response at 2. On September 14, 2010, Golden issued a determination explaining that the requested subcontract was a contractor-owned, rather than a Government-owned document and was therefore not subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Id. Golden further stated that it has never had a copy of the requested document in its possession. Id.

In his Appeal, the Appellant states that "it is difficult to understand how a contracted (sic) awarded to the Alliance for Sustainable Energy as a result of DOE request for proposal (RFP), in March of 2010 (solicitation 40432PS) be deemed to not be created or obtained by DOE" and "Additionally, it is difficult to understand how the contract was not under the control of DOE at time of FOIA request." See Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

A. Whether the Documents at Issue are Agency Records Subject to the FOIA

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the documents in question are agency records and thus subject to the FOIA under the criteria set out by the federal courts. The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents are "agency records" subject to the FOIA. That analysis involves a determination: (1) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (2) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See, e.g., Faye Vlieger, Case No. TFA-0250 (2008); Eugenie Reich, Case No. TFA-0213 (2007). 1/

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . ., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976) (Orleans), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which an entity must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[t]he question here is not whether the [entity] receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Orleans, 425 U.S. at 815. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme court ruled that the Orleans standard provided the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980).

We have routinely applied this analysis in our prior cases addressing whether an entity is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA. See, e.g., Vlieger. In addition, we have previously found that a contractor responsible for the management and operation of a DOE-owned laboratory "is clearly not an 'agency' as that term is defined in the FOIA." Moore Brower Hennessy & Freeman, P.C., Case No. VFA-0393 (1998) (citing William Kuntz III, Case No. VFA-0105, 25 DOE ¶ 80, 157 (1995)).

In its Appeal, the Appellant provided us no basis for departing from our established precedent in these cases. Instead, the Appellant has not made a distinction between the subcontract he requested, which he describes as being awarded by NREL/the Alliance in June 2010, and the M&O contract between DOE and the Alliance. He has requested a subcontract awarded by the Alliance and not awarded by DOE. Applying the above standard, and consistent with our prior cases, we find that, although NREL is owned by the government, it is operated by Alliance, a private contractor, and its day-to-day operations are not supervised by the DOE. Therefore, neither NREL nor the Alliance is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA.

Although NREL is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, the requested subcontract could nonetheless be considered an "agency record" if it (1) was created or obtained by an agency, and (2) is under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989) (Tax Analysts). However, the document in question was created by the Alliance, not DOE, has not been obtained by DOE and was not under DOE control at the time of the FOIA request. See Golden Response. We therefore find that the subcontract is not an agency record subject to the FOIA.

B. Whether the Subcontract at Issue is Subject to Release Under the DOE FOIA Regulations

A finding that certain documents are not "agency records" does not end our inquiry. The DOE's FOIA regulations state:

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). Clause I.111(b)(3) of the contract between DOE and the Alliance identifies as property of the Alliance "records relating to any procurement action by the Contractor, except for records that under 48 CFR 970.5232-3, Accounts, Records, and Inspection, are described as the property of the Government." See Clause 111(b)(3) in DOE's M&O Contract with the Alliance, http://www.eere.energy.gov/golden/Reading_Room.aspx.

Applying the provisions of the contract between the DOE and the Alliance to the case at hand, it is clear that the subcontract at issue in this case is the property of the Alliance, not the DOE. The subcontract is clearly a procurement record of the Alliance and is not among those described as property of the government under 48 CFR 970.5232-3. See Golden Response. As such, the document is not subject to release under the DOE FOIA regulations. In sum, for the reasons set forth above, we find that the requested subcontract is neither an agency record subject to the FOIA nor is it subject to release under the DOE FOIA regulations. Therefore, we will deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Jon E. Lux, OHA Case No. TFA-0423, on September 28, 2010, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552a (4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound

Date of Filing: October 1, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0424

On October 1, 2010, the Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound ("the Alliance") filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on September 2, 2010, by the Department of Energy (DOE) Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO). In that determination, LGPO responded to a request for documents that the Alliance filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. LGPO identified several documents responsive to the Alliance's request and released those documents with some information withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. The Alliance challenged the withholding of information under Exemption 4 and the justification LGPO provided for withholding the information. The Alliance further challenged the adequacy of LGPO's search for responsive documents. This appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release the withheld information to the Alliance, to perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

On December 23, 2009, the Alliance filed a FOIA request for information pertaining to the Cape Wind Project, a proposed wind-generating facility to be built off the coast of Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Specifically, the Alliance requested that "DOE release all records relating to any potential grants, loans, loan guarantees, or any other federal funding assistance for the Cape Wind project," including "any correspondence, meeting minutes, memoranda, emails, reports, or other records regardless of form." See Letter from Audra Parker, President and Executive Director, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), July 9, 2010 (July Appeal) at 1.

On June 22, 2010, LGPO responded to the Alliance's request. See Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Sandy Taylor, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, June 22, 2010 (June Determination). In the June Determination, LGPO indicated that it located responsive documents, and that those documents were enclosed with the determination letter. The responsive documents were the following: Cape Wind 2006 Pre-Application, Volume I; Cape Wind 2006 Pre-Application, Volume II; and, Cape Wind 2009 Application. Id. Each of the three documents was released with portions withheld pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 6 of the FOIA. Id. LGPO stated that the portions of the documents withheld under Exemption 4 contained commercial or financial information, the release of which "would give competitors an advantage in the future by providing insight on resources available to the applicant." Id. In addition, LGPO stated that the information withheld under Exemption 6 was comprised of "very sensitive personal information," including social security numbers, and the release of the information would be a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Id.

The Alliance filed an Appeal from the June Determination on July 9, 2010. In that Appeal, the Alliance challenged the adequacy of LGPO's search for responsive documents. July Appeal at 1. As a basis for the challenge, the Alliance noted that, although it requested all records related to any potential federal funding assistance for the Cape Wind Project, LGPO released only the pre-application and application submitted by Cape Wind, L.L.C. ("Cape Wind"), but no correspondence or other documents. The Alliance maintained that other documents must exist "because the [DOE] had to communicate both internally and with the applicant about this application." Id. at 2. The Alliance further challenged LGPO's withholding of information under Exemption 4. [1]

On August 11, 2010, OHA issued a decision regarding the July Appeal. See Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, Case No. TFA-0399 (2010).[2] In that case, we determined that LGPO's search for responsive records was reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Alliance's request. Id. at 2. We therefore concluded that, despite the absence of correspondence pertaining to the Cape Wind project, the search for records was adequate. Consequently, we denied that portion of the July Appeal. Id. With regard to LGPO's withholding of information under Exemption 4, we concluded that the June Determination provided an inadequate justification for the withholdings. Id. at 4. We remanded the matter back to the LGPO in order for it to "issue another determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to the various types of withheld material in the three released documents." Id.

In accordance with the instructions in our August 11, 2010, decision, LGPO issued a new determination in which it provided additional detail as to the applicability of Exemption 4 to certain information deleted in the released documents. See Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Sandy Taylor, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, September 2, 2010 (September Determination). Specifically, LGPO identified the types of withheld information as "project cost, financing plans and business strategies, procurement plans, and marketing plans and analysis." Id. at 1-2. LGPO stated that release of such information would cause substantial harm to Cape Wind's competitive interests. Id. at 2. Specifically, LGPO determined that release of cost and financing information would "provide an unfair advantage to competitors by enabling competing power suppliers to estimate supply costs and use this information to bid against [Cape Wind]." Id. Disclosure of procurement plans "would enable the applicant's power vendors to compete unfairly towards providing future goods and services to [Cape Wind], in addition to allowing vendors unlicensed use of Cape Wind's original work product." Id. Finally, LGPO found that releasing project costs, financing information, and market analysis "would enable potential customers to exert undue leverage with regards to purchasing [Cape Wind's] product." Id.

[1] The Alliance did not challenged LGPO's withholding of information under Exemption 6. Therefore, the Exemption 6 withholdings are not relevant to the instant proceeding.

[2] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

The Alliance filed the instant Appeal on October 1, 2010. In its Appeal, the Alliance reiterated its challenge to the adequacy of the LGPO's search for responsive records. See Letter from Audra Parker, President and Executive Director, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), October 1, 2010 (October Appeal) at 1. In addition, the Alliance challenged the adequacy of the September Determination, arguing that LGPO has failed to specifically identify each responsive document that it withheld and the grounds for doing so. Finally, the Alliance challenged LGPO's withholding under Exemption 4 of two specific pieces of information from the released records: (1) the amount of Cape Wind's loan request and (2) the name of Cape Wind's financial backer. Id.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

With respect to the adequacy of LGPO's search for responsive records, we considered this issue in our August 11, 2010, decision, concluding that the search was adequate. See Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, Case No. TFA-0399 (2010) at 2. In this case, the Alliance has merely restated its argument from its July Appeal regarding the adequacy of LGPO's search for responsive documents. The Alliance has not provided any new information that warrants reconsideration of our previous holding on this issue.[3] Accordingly, the issue of the adequacy of the search falls outside the scope of this Appeal.

B. Adequacy of the September Determination

We consider now the Alliance's arguments that LGPO failed to specifically identify each responsive document that it withheld and the factual and legal grounds for doing so. An agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters: (1) adequately describe the results of searches; (2) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (3) specify the exemption or exemptions under which information was withheld. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009); see also F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Services, Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (1996). A determination must adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Id.

[3] Although the DOE FOIA regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order, we have, in prior cases, used our discretion to consider motions for reconsideration where circumstances warrant. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.8; see also Citizen Action New Mexico, Case No. TFA-0215 (2007). In reviewing such requests for reconsideration, we may look to OHA's procedural regulations regarding modification or rescission of its orders. See 10 C.F.R. Part 1003, Subpart E; see also Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0237 (2007). Those regulations provide that an application for modification or rescission of an order shall be processed only when the application "demonstrates that it is based on significantly changed circumstances." 10 C.F.R. §1003.55(b)(1).

In both the June and September Determinations, LGPO indicated that its search yielded responsive documents and that those documents accompanied the Determinations. We find this sufficient to indicate that the documents LGPO released to the Alliance comprised the responsive documents yielded by its search for records. In addition, relevant to this proceeding, the information in the released documents withheld under Exemption 4 is clearly marked and the grounds for the applicability of the exemption were explained in the accompanying determination letter. Our review of the September Determination issued to the Alliance indicates that LGPO provided additional detail regarding the information withheld under Exemption 4, pursuant to the instructions in our August 11, 2010, decision. Therefore, we find that the September Determination is adequate.

C. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In this case, Cape Wind was required to submit the documents in question as part of its participation in the agency's loan application process. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be met.

Under Exemption 4, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[4] The information submitted by Cape Wind, i.e., project cost, financing plans and business strategies, procurement plans, and marketing plans and analysis, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information.

The second requirement is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C.

[4] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., Case No. VFA-0591 (2000). Cape Wind, a limited liability company, satisfies that definition.

Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "confidential." Under National Parks, involuntarily-submitted withheld information is confidential if its release would either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future, or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, because the application process for the project required that the information be submitted, it is questionable that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future. The question, then, turns to whether release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information.

LGPO determined that release of the commercial and financial information contained in Cape Wind's loan applications would likely cause the company substantial competitive harm by granting undue advantage to Cape Wind's competing power suppliers, power vendors and potential customers. Given the competitive aspect of the project and the very specific nature of the commercial and financial information contained in the loan application, we agree with LGPO's assessment that the release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to Cape Wind. Therefore, we find that LGPO properly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information in the released documents.

With regard to the Alliance's challenge to two specific Exemption 4 withholdings – the amount of Cape Wind's loan request and the name of Cape Wind's financial backer, we find the Alliance's arguments to be unpersuasive. Regarding the amount of Cape Wind's loan request, the Alliance maintains that "this type of information has been deemed unprotected from disclosure." October Appeal at 2. In support of its argument, the Alliance cited a recent Second Circuit decision, Bloomberg L.P. v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, 601 F. 3d 143 (2d Cir. 2010), and its companion case, Fox News Network, L.L.C. v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, 601 F. 3d 158 (2d Cir. 2010).[5] Unlike the Second Circuit cases cited above, which involved documents pertaining to loans granted by the Federal Reserve Bank to private banks, the documents at issue in this proceeding pertain not to a granted loan or loan guarantee, but rather to an unsuccessful application. This case is analogous to cases involving unsuccessful bidders for government contracts, in which we have held that an unsuccessful bidder has a greater interest in confidentiality than a successful bidder awarded a government contract. See IBEW Local 125, Case No. VFA-0695 (2001); see also Raytheon Co. v. Dep't of the Navy, 1989 WL 550581 (D. D. C.) (in which the Court determined that there existed a difference in the expectations of confidentiality between successful bidders and unsuccessful bidders for government contracts). We therefore find that the requested loan amount of an unsuccessful applicant is confidential and properly withheld under Exemption 4.

[5] In those cases, the Court found that documents pertaining to loans made by the Federal Reserve Bank to private banks, including the identities of the borrowing banks, loan amounts, loan origination and maturation dates, and collateral securing the loans, were not protected from disclosure. The Court based its rulings on the fact that such information was not "obtained from" the borrowing banks within the meaning of Exemption 4, but rather was generated by the Federal Reserve Bank upon its decision to grant the loans. See Bloomberg L.P., 601 F. 3d at 148. These cases are easily distinguishable from the instant proceeding. In this case, there is no question that the withheld information was generated by and obtained from Cape Wind in the course of its application for a loan guarantee from the DOE, rather than generated by the agency.

Finally, we find no merit in the Alliance's argument that LGPO should release the name of Cape Wind's financial backer. As a basis for its argument, the Alliance maintains that "the Department of the Interior has previously released the identity of what appears to have been the project's financial backer … ." October Appeal at 3. Having carefully reviewed the documents at issue in this case, we find that no document identifies Cape Wind's financial backer. This fact was confirmed by LGPO. See E-mail from Wendy Pulliam, LGPO, to Diane DeMoura, OHA, October 22, 2010. The FOIA does not require an agency to create documents. 5 U.S.C. 552; 10 C.F.R. § 1004.4(d)(1), (2). See also Tarek Farag, Case No. TFA-0365 (2010); Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0319 (2009). Therefore, we find that LGPO cannot be required to produce a document that does not exist.

D. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal case law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. However, in cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency may withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Tom Marks, Case No. TFA-0379 (2010). Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information we have deemed properly withheld under Exemption 4.

III. Conclusion

We find that there are no grounds in the October Appeal supporting reconsideration of our holding in Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, Case No. TFA-0399 (2010), regarding the adequacy of the search that LGPO conducted for documents responsive to the Alliance's request. In addition, we find that the September Determination issued by LGPO properly identified the responsive documents, the withheld information, and the grounds for each withholding, and was, therefore, adequate. Finally, we find that LGPO properly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information. Therefore, the instant Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 1, 2010, by the Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, OHA Case No. TFA-0424, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Security Archive

Date of Filing: October 6, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0426

On October 6, 2010, the National Security Archive (NSA) filed an appeal from determinations issued to it on July 21, 2010, and September 23, 2010, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of the Executive Secretariat (ES) and Office of Policy and International Affairs (PI), respectively. In those determinations, ES and PI responded to requests for documents that NSA filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In their determinations, ES and PI responded that they did not locate any records responsive to NSA's request. NSA filed an Appeal challenging the adequacy of the searches. This appeal, if granted, would require ES and PI to perform additional searches for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue new determination letters justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

NSA filed three FOIA requests with DOE's Office of Information Resources (IR), the office responsible for receiving FOIA requests at DOE Headquarters, for records pertaining to the United States' preparations for participation in the sixth, seventh, eighth, and seventeenth sessions of the Conference of the Parties (COP) to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC). See Letter from Robert A. Wampler, Ph. D., NSA, to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, OHA (October 6, 2010) (Appeal). IR forwarded the requests to ES and PI for searches for documents responsive to NSA's requests. In separate determinations, ES and IR, responding for PI, informed NSA that the searches yielded no responsive documents. See Letter from Alexander C. Morris, IR, to Robert A. Wampler, Ph. D., NSA (September 23, 2010).

NSA filed the instant Appeal challenging the adequacy of the searches performed by ES and PI. See Appeal at 1. In its Appeal, NSA contends that the searches were limited in scope, and questioned whether the offices searched retired records maintained by the DOE at the Federal Records Center. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[1]

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted ES and PI to ascertain the scope of their searches. ES informed us that, because the requested records were generated during a past administration, it forwarded NSA's requests to the Office of History and Heritage Resources (HHR).[2] E-mail from Cindy Luckett, ES, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 8, 2010). HHR conducted a search of its electronic database, which lists most of the records maintained by HHR, including all HHR records held at the Federal Records Center.[3] E-mail from Terry Fehner, HHR, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 13, 2010). In conducting its search, HHR searched the database using search terms such as "global warming," "climate change," "UNFCCC," and "COP." Id. The search yielded records which were "either outside the [designated] timeframe or not relevant to the request." Id.

PI forwarded NSA's requests to the Office of Climate Change Policy and Technology (CCP&T), a division of PI. E-Mail from Edith Horne, PI, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 7, 2010). CCP&T conducted a search of its electronic files, which "are organized according to UNFCCC events." CCP&T searched for records pertaining to the COP sessions identified by NSA in its FOIA requests, as well as relevant meetings of two subsidiary organizations of the COPs, the Subsidiary Body for Implementation (SBI) and the Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice (SBSTA). E-mail from Elmer Holt, PI, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 26, 2010). The search yielded no responsive records. Id. In addition, CCP&T identified former PI employees working in other DOE organizations and inquired as to whether they had any relevant documents and received no positive responses. Id. Finally, PI indicated that while some "very old" PI records are maintained at the Federal Records Center, CCP&T does not have any records there. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Edith Horne, PI, and Diane DeMoura, OHA (October 26, 2010).

Based on this information, we find that ES and PI performed extensive searches reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to NSA's FOIA requests, despite the absence of

[1] All OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

[2] HHR is a division of ES whose primary responsibility is to preserve the agency's historic records and artifacts and coordinate the transfer of the records to the National Archives and Records Administration.

[3] As to any records not included in its electronic database, HHR performs a manual search of the paper records if it believes they are likely to include potentially responsive documents not captured in the electronic database. In this case, HHR determined that any potentially responsive records would be included in its electronic database and, therefore, a manual search was unlikely to uncover any records responsive to the request.

responsive records. Therefore, the search was adequate. Accordingly, NSA's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 6, 2010, by National Security Archive, OHA Case No. TFA-0426, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: National Association of Home Builders

Date of Filing: October 14, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0428

On October 14, 2010, the National Association of Home Builders (the Appellant) filed an appeal from a September 15, 2010, determination issued to it by the Oak Ridge Office (OR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) regarding a request for documents submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its September 14, 2010, determination letter (Determination Letter), OR provided the Appellant with a number of electronic copies of responsive documents. However, the Appellant believes that many more responsive documents exist. This Appeal, if granted, would require that OR conduct an additional search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On April 12, 2010, the Appellant submitted a FOIA Request to DOE Headquarters (DOE/HQ), essentially asking for any document that contains the formulas, equations or methodologies used by DOE to evaluate the projected energy savings to be obtained by incorporating DOE's proposals for changes to the 2012 International Energy Conservation Code (IECC).[1] Included in this request were the formulas, equations and methodologies used to calculate the increase in energy efficiency that the proposed 2012 IECC edition (incorporating DOE's proposals) would produce when compared to the 2006 IECC (2012 versus 2006) and the increase of energy efficiency that the 2009 IECC edition produced versus the 2006 IECC edition.

DOE/HQ subsequently transferred the request to OR so that a search could be made of Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL) records. PNNL had performed the calculations regarding the proposed energy savings projected for the DOE proposals. See NAHB, slip op. at 2.[2] On August 18, 2010, the Appellant received an E-mail from OR. Appeal at 4-5. The E-mail

The IECC is a model code that local governments and other stakeholders can use in developing local building codes and standards. Appeal at 2. A federal statute mandates that DOE participate in the model national codes development process and that DOE help states adopt and implement progressive energy codes. See 42 U.S.C. § 6833(d). DOE is also required to review whether the proposed IECC revisions would improve energy efficiency in residential buildings as compared to the previous IECC edition and publish this determination in the Federal Register. 42 U.S.C. § 6833(a)(5)(A) (the Energy Conservation and Production Act, as amended). See National Association of Home Builders, Case No. TSO-0401 (August 9, 2010) slip op. at 1 n.2 (NAHB).

message indicated that OR had identified six types of documents including several hundred files. The OR message also stated the possibility that E-mails and other documents pertaining to a cursory DOE/PNNL estimate of the energy savings resulting from the 2009 IECC versus the 2006 IECC might also exist. Appeal at 5. The Appellant was later informed via telephone that a search for responsive documents might cost $3,000 and require 80 hours of PNNL employee time. During this conversation, OR asked if the Appellant wished to narrow its request to reduce the time and expense of processing its request. The Appellant narrowed its previous request and asked for the following types of documents:

- "Input" and "output" files used in the calculations for DOE's energy savings analysis (i.e., the "EnergyGauge.enb" files, DOE-2 ".bdl" files, and scripts[3]) and the resulting summary reports for each of the 15 "Climate Zone Representative Cities" referenced in the DOE publication An Estimate of Residential Energy Savings From IECC Change Proposals Recommended for Approval at the ICC's Fall, 2009, Initial Action Hearings (2012 Energy Study)[4] (Item 1).
- Documents and information regarding the assumptions PNNL made for purposes of calculating the energy efficiency improvements from the 2012 IECC and the 2006 IECC with regard to: window area, duct distribution efficiency, lighting, air leakage and mechanical ventilation (Item 2).
- Documents and information that provide the formula or equation that PNNL used to calculate the claim in the 2012 Energy Study that enactment of DOE's proposed revisions for the 2012 IECC would result in an 30.6% savings in energy usage (Item 3).

On September 9, 2010, OR indicated that the reduced scope of the Appellant's request would result in charges of $2,196.11 and require 32 hours of employee review time. Appellant agreed to pay this expense.

In its Determination Letter, OR responded to the newly reduced request by providing the Appellant two Excel spreadsheet files copied onto a compact disk.

In its Appeal, the Appellant challenges the extent of the search that was made for responsive documents. The Appellant points out that OR's August 18 E-mail indicated the existence of hundreds of potentially responsive documents yet OR provided but two. Given this fact, the Appellant believes that OR's search for responsive documents must have been inadequate.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (Truitt). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010). To evaluate the search made for documents responsive to the Appellant's request, we contacted OR officials. OR informed us that its August 18, 2010, E-mail, relying upon an official at the DOE's Richland site office, erroneously stated the number of responsive documents potentially available. Upon contacting PNNL officials who performed the actual 2012 versus 2006 calculations, OR discovered that the number of potentially responsive documents in existence was significantly less.

A. Item 1

OR was informed that with regard to the requested input and output files used to calculate the 2012 IECC versus 2006 IECC calculation (Item 1), these files were erased before the Appellant's request to save storage space. If they were ever needed, such files could be recreated by re-running the calculation. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between, Amy Rothrock, Authorizing Official, OR, and Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (November 1, 2010); E-mail from Steven Cooke, counsel, PNNL (September 8, 2010) (Response). We also spoke to a Senior Development Engineer at PNNL who had personal knowledge of the 2012 versus 2006 calculation. He confirmed that all of the discrete input and output files were destroyed. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Todd Taylor, Senior Development Engineer, Manager of Research and Development in Building Energy Codes, PNNL (November 2, 2010). He informed us that his team used a computer program, EnergyGage, to create an intermediate computer file that his team modified to work within PNNL's template system. This intermediate template computer file is inputted into another computer program, DOE-2, to perform the actual calculations of the energy savings. He also informed us that using a Table of Parameters and Values (reflecting the 2012 IECC and the 2006 IECC) with the intermediate template file might extract input information requested in the Item 1 request. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Todd Taylor, Senior Development Engineer, Manager of Research and Development in Building Energy Codes, PNNL, and Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (November 4, 2010).

While the specific input and output files could be recreated by PNNL rerunning the DOE-2 program using the intermediate template computer file, the FOIA does not require agencies to create documents. See, e.g., Arlie Bryan Siebert, Case No. TFA-0137 (February 24, 2006). However, the intermediate template file has potentially responsive Item 1 input data.

Consequently, we will remand this matter so that OR and PNNL can determine if this data can be extracted from the intermediate template file.[5]

B. Item 2

With regard to Item 2, documents and information regarding the assumptions that PNNL made regarding specified variables (window area, duct efficiency, lighting, air leakage rates, and mechanical ventilation), PNNL informed OR officials that there were no existing responsive documents other than those already publicly published in the DOE's energy code website, which were the figures used in the calculations. With regard to window area, PNNL stated that the 2012 versus 2006 calculation was based upon a window-to-wall ratio of 15 percent as described in the publicly available document "Eliminating Window-Area Restrictions in the IECC."[6] Response at 4. PNNL also reported that it did not use a specific "duct distribution efficiency" value in its calculation but instead used a direct estimate of 12 percent reduction in heating and cooling energy use as a result of using the proposed 2012 IECC. This methodology was described on page 12 of the 2012 Energy Study. A "duct distribution efficiency" value was not used since the 2006 IECC has no duct test requirements. Response at 4. PNNL also stated that it did not include lighting in its 2012 versus 2006 calculation. As to the air leakage rates employed in the calculation, using standard efficiency HVAC equipment, these rates were discussed in the 2012 Energy Study beginning at page 13.[7] Response at 5. The assumption regarding Mechanical Ventilation employed in the 2012 versus 2006 study was also specifically described on page 14 of the 2012 Energy Study. Response at 4-5.

With regard to the search conducted for documents responsive to Item 2, we find that OR conducted an adequate search. OR contacted PNNL officials most directly involved in the preparation of the 2012 versus 2006 study. These officials, who were responsible for the calculations, indicated that PNNL did not possess any responsive documents other than those documents that were posted on the energycodes.gov web site. Thus, because the only responsive Item 2 documents were prospectively posted on the DOE Energy Code web site, OR was not required to provide these documents to the Appellant pursuant to the FOIA. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(A) (excluding from subsection (a)(3) [requirement to provide documents under a FOIA

[5] PNNL has informed us that the intermediate template file may contain proprietary commercial information from the EnergyGage software. However, it may be possible to create software to extract the input data from the file without revealing proprietary information possibly protectable under Exemption 4. The programming necessary to conduct the search for the input data is not the equivalent of creation of a new record. Schladetsch v. HUD, No. 99-0175, 2000 WL 33372125, at *5 (D.D.C. Apr. 4, 2000). Further, the creation of software to retrieve information is required under the FOIA unless the creation of the search software would require "unreasonable efforts" or would "substantially interfere" with agency's computer system. Id.; 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(C). On remand, OR and PNNL should provide the Appellant with the input information retrievable within the intermediate template file or provide a detailed explanation as to why the creation of a program to extract the input data would require unreasonable efforts or would substantially interfere with agency's computer system.

[7] The Response noted that for high efficiency HVAC equipment, the leakage rates were 7 air changes per hour at 50 Pascals (ACH50) for climate zones 1 and 2 and 5 air changes for climate zones 3-8. It is uncertain if this set of assumptions was described in the 2012 Energy Study.

Request] those records which are "made available" under subsections (a)(1) [specified information about an agency] or (a)(2) [documents likely to become the subject of repeated FOIA requests]). In sum, we find that OR's search for responsive Item 2 documents was adequate.

C. Item 3

In response to Item 3, OR disclosed two Excel spreadsheets aggregating the results and summarizing the final calculations that total the 2012 versus 2006 energy savings. OR has informed us that after contacting PNNL officials concerning this request, the only responsive documents found were these two spreadsheets. The actual equations used to calculate the energy savings are embedded in various cells of these spreadsheets but no other responsive documents were found. Given OR's inquiry as to the PNNL officials most likely to have knowledge concerning the 2012 versus 2006 calculation, we find that it conducted an adequate search for items responsive to Item 3 of the Appellant's request.

III. Summary

We find that OR conducted a search reasonably calculated to find responsive documents regarding Items 2 and 3. With regard to Item 1, we find that additional responsive information may exist in the intermediate template file. Consequently, as discussed above, we will remand this matter to OR so that an additional search may be undertaken for Item 1 material. Consequently, the Appellant's appeal should be granted.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the National Association of Home Builders, OHA Case Number TFA-0428, is hereby granted.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Oak Ridge Office in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Russell Carollo
Date of Filing:	October 15, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0430

On October 15, 2010, Russell Carollo (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on October 7, 2010, by the Oak Ridge Office of Scientific and Technical Information (OSTI) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OSTI responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, OSTI identified and released numerous documents responsive to the Appellant's request, some of which had information redacted under Exemption 4. The Appellant challenges OSTI's withholding of information from five documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require OSTI to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On June 9, 2010, the Appellant filed a request with OSTI for various documents, including correspondence, e-mails, memos, FOIA requests, and records of gifts – "related in any way to services . . . counsel or advice provided by Google, its representatives, surrogates or subcontractors and/or discussions about the possibility of providing the same" for 2008 to 2010. Request Letter dated June 9, 2010, from Appellant to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE. On October 7, 2010, OSTI released all the 2010 e-mails to the Appellant. Determination Letter dated October 7, 2010, from Brian Hitson, Associate Director, OSTI, to Appellant. In addition, OSTI released five 2008 e-mails in their entirety and withheld portions of five other 2008 e-mails on the ground that they consisted of proprietary information. Id.

On October 15, 2010, the Appellant appealed, contending first that a number of the e-mails with portions withheld were sent by a DOE employee, not a private company. Appeal Letter received October 15, 2010, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. Secondly, he argued that any "reasonably segregable" portions of the documents should be released, especially since "the process of segregation is not unreasonable for a request involving only a dozen or so responsive documents" and release of segregable information would assist in his Appeal. Id. Finally, he contended that the response refers to non-disclosure agreements that were not provided in the determination. Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemption 4 is at issue in this case.

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

We have reviewed the e-mails withheld by OSTI.[1/] We believe the information was "voluntarily submitted" by Google. Because we find that information was voluntarily submitted by Google, the Critical Mass test is applicable. These documents would be protected from disclosure by Exemption 4 if they contain information which Google would not customarily release to the public. The e-mails contain technical information regarding Google products. We find it highly unlikely that Google would customarily make such potentially sensitive information available to the public. Consequently, we believe that OSTI properly applied Exemption 4 to the e-mails.

In making this determination, we considered the Appellant's argument that e-mails that originated with a DOE employee cannot contain information withholdable under Exemption 4. We disagree. The proper focus is on the content of the withheld information. In this case, the withheld portions of the e-mails restate information sent by Google to DOE. The information is not new information, but rather Exemption 4 information submitted by Google to DOE and reworded by the DOE employee. Therefore, the fact that the e-mails originated with a DOE employee does not affect our conclusion that the withheld information is exempt from disclosure pursuant to Exemption 4.

B. Segregation

The Appellant also argues that OSTI did not attempt to segregate any portion of the information as required under the statute. As support for this argument, he states that given the limited number of documents, segregation should not be difficult.[2/] As we stated above, we did review the information withheld by OSTI. We believe that some segregation may be possible. For example, names and telephone numbers of DOE and Google employees and the statement at the bottom of the e-mails that the information is confidential appear not to be protected by Exemption 4. We will remand the matter to OSTI to determine if segregation of the factual information in the five e-mails is possible.

C. Adequacy of the Justification

[1/] Contrary to the Determination Letter, three of the e-mails were withheld in their entirety by OSTI. The other two were withheld in part.

[2/] In addition, the Appellant states that release of some of the segregable information would assist him in formulating his appeal. If non-exempt information is segregable, it should be released regardless of whether it assists the requestor in formulating an appeal.

The Appellant's last argument is that the information provided to him "appears to refer to non-disclosure agreements" that were not provided to him.[3/] Appeal Letter. Our review of the information withheld shows that in addition to a non-disclosure agreement that was withheld from the Appellant, there are other attachments to e-mails that were not addressed by OSTI. OSTI needs to determine if the attachments are responsive to the Appellant's request. If the attachments are responsive, OSTI needs to properly justify their withholding. Because they are documents separate from the e-mails, they must be addressed individually. We will remand the matter to OSTI for a proper justification for any documents attached to the e-mails that were withheld. On remand, OSTI should identify the documents and issue a new determination either releasing the attachments or justifying their withholding.

III. Conclusion

OSTI properly withheld the redacted information under Exemption 4 of the FOIA. However, OSTI should have more thoroughly segregated factual information from the information it redacted. Further, OSTI should have specifically addressed the attachments to the withheld e-mails, if those attachments are responsive to the Appellant's request. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to OSTI for a further determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Russell Carollo, Case No. TFA-0430, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Scientific and Technical Information of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

[3/] Although the Appellant refers to more than one non-disclosure agreement, we only see evidence of one such agreement. On remand, OSTI should clarify the number of agreements.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	National Security Archive
Date of Filing:	October 20, 2010
Case Numbers:	TFA-0432 TFA-0433 TFA-0435 TFA-0436

On October 20, 2010, the National Security Archive (Appellant) filed four Appeals from determinations issued to it on September 30, 2010, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In those determinations, OIR responded to four requests for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determinations, OIR found documents responsive to the Appellant's requests. In its Appeals, the Appellant challenges the adequacy of OIR's searches for documents. The Appeals, if granted, would require OIR to conduct further searches for responsive documents.

I. Background

On June 9, 2010, the Appellant requested documents related to the 10th Conference of the Parties (COP) to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in December 2004. Request Letter dated June 9, 2010, from Robert A. Wampler, Appellant, to Carolyn Lawson, FOIA/Privacy Act Group, DOE. On June 16, 2010, the Appellant requested documents related to the 11th COP, which was also the first COP serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, held in Montreal, Canada, in November and December 2005.[1/] Request Letter dated June 16, 2010, from Robert A. Wampler, Appellant, to Carolyn Lawson, FOIA/Privacy Act Group, DOE. On July 8, 2010, the Appellant requested documents related to the 13th and 14th COP held in Bali and Pozana, Poland, in December 2007 and

[1/] In his request letter, the Appellant asks for documents related to "the tenth Conference of the Parties (COP-10) to the eleventh Conference of the Parties (COP 11)." We believe this to be a typographical error.

2008, respectively. Request Letters dated July 8, 2010, from Robert A. Wampler, Appellant, to Carolyn Lawson, FOIA/Privacy Act Group, DOE.
On September 30, 2010, OIR responded to these requests in four separate letters. For the 10th COP, OIR found five responsive documents. Determination Letter dated September 30, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, DOE, to Appellant. For the 11th COP, OIR found four responsive documents. Determination Letter dated September 30, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris to Appellant. For the 13th COP, OIR found six responsive documents. Determination Letter dated September 30, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris to Appellant. For the 14th COP, OIR found two responsive documents. Determination Letter dated September 30, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris to Appellant.

On October 20, 2010, the Appellant appealed all four Determinations, claiming that the records he is requesting would be held by the Washington National Records Center. Appeal Letter received October 20, 2010, from Appellant, to Poli A. Marmelejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[2/]

We contacted OIR to determine what type of searches were conducted. In response, OIR indicated that all four requests were sent to the Office of Policy and International Affairs (PI) to conduct a search for responsive documents. PI stated that it conducted a search of its electronic files, which are organized according to UNFCCC events. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated November 15, 2010, between Janet Fishman, OHA, and Elmer Holt, PI. PI searched for records pertaining to the COP sessions identified by the Appellant in its requests. Id. The only documents responsive to the four requests were released to the Appellant. Id. PI also stated that no search of the Washington National Records Center was conducted because PI never forwarded any documents to the Center for storage. E-mail dated November 4, 2010, from Elmer Holt, PI, to Janet Fishman, OHA.

[2/] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

In addition, PI identified former PI employees working in other DOE organizations and inquired as to whether they had any relevant documents and received no positive responses. November 15, 2010, Telephone Memorandum.

OIR also stated that the Office of the Executive Secretariat (ES), the Office of Science (SC) and the Office of Energy Efficiency (EE) were contacted to determine if they would have any responsive documents. None of those offices found responsive documents. ES explained that the records located at the Washington National Records Center were included in this search. E-mail dated November 9, 2010, from Terry Fehner to Janet Fishman. All of these offices stated that PI would be the office most likely to have responsive documents. E-mail dated October 26, 2010, from Joan Ogbazghi to Janet Fishman.

Based on the foregoing, we believe that OIR's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information.

III. Conclusion

As the foregoing indicates, the search that OIR conducted was reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Appellant's requests. Accordingly, these Appeals will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeals filed by National Security Archive, Case Nos. TFA-0432, TFA-0433, TFA-0435, and TFA-0436, are hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Another Way BPA

Date of Filing: October 22, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0437

On October 22, 2010, Another Way BPA (Appellant) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it by the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) regarding the request for documents that it submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the Appellant's FOIA Request, BPA provided the Appellant with a number of documents. However, BPA also withheld portions of other documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require that BPA conduct another search for additional responsive documents and release the information withheld in the previously provided documents.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by the federal government be released to the public upon request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA which set forth the types of information agencies are not required to release. Under DOE regulations, a document exempt from disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is not contrary to federal law and is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1.

I. Background

On August 2, 2010, the Appellant submitted a FOIA Request (Request) asking for all documents that refer to potential environmental issues and plans to mitigate these issues for proposed power line segment numbers 46A, 47, 48, and 50-59 as shown on a specified map illustrating proposed electric transmissions lines for the BPA's "I-5 Corridor Reinforcement" project.[1] The Appellant also requested all documents that reference the "required extensive line rebuilding in and around the Sherwood area" for all segment options that are available to go to the existing Pearl substation in Wilsonville, Oregon.[2]

[1] The I-5 Corridor Reinforcement project is a proposed project to build a new 500-kilovolt transmission line to reinforce the power grid in southwest Washington State. See BPA web site describing project at http://www.bpa.gov/corporate/i-5-eis/. The proposed routes for the transmission line would begin in Castle Rock, Washington, and extend to a new electric substation in Troutdale, Oregon.

[2] The Pearl substation in Wilsonville, Oregon, was initially considered for the terminus for the new line but was rejected in favor of a terminus at a proposed new substation to be located in Troutdale, Oregon. See

On July 1, 2010, BPA issued its determination (Determination) regarding the Appellant's Request. In its Determination, BPA provided the Appellant with a number of documents some of which had portions of text withheld pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6. In its Appeal, the Appellant makes no specific arguments regarding BPA's determination other than to state "BPA has on two occasions ignored my requests to provide the data as requested."[3] Appeal at 1.

II. Analysis

In the present case, we are asked to review the adequacy of BPA's search and the propriety of BPA's use of Exemptions 5 and 6 to withhold parts of documents.

1. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010).[4]

We contacted officials at BPA to ascertain the extent of the search that was conducted for responsive documents. BPA requested that the project manager (Project Manager) for the I-5 Corridor Reinforcement Project conduct a search for responsive documents. E-mail from Paul Mautner, Office of Chief Counsel, BPA, to Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (November 2, 2010) (Mautner E-mail). The Project Manager then sent an e-mail to each of the individuals on the I-5 Corridor Reinforcement Project Team, asking them to search all of their paper and electronic documents for responsive documents. He also spoke to several "key" members of the team and asked them if they had knowledge of any additional locations where responsive documents might be kept. All responsive documents were identified and provided, in whole or in redacted form, to the Appellant. Mautner E-mail at 1.

http://www.bpa.gov/corporate/i-5-eis/documents/Why_all_the_route_options_go_from_Castle_Rock_to_Troutdale_.pdf.

[3] In using the phrase "two occasions," the Appellant is likely referring to a previous FOIA request it filed prior to the request at issue in this case. See E-mail from Laura Atterbury, FOIA/Privacy Act Office, BPA, to Richard Cronin, Staff Attorney, OHA (October 28, 2010).

[4] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) after November 19, 1996, are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

Given the facts presented to us, we conclude that BPA conducted an adequate search for responsive documents. BPA consulted with the Project Manager most familiar with the requested documents. The Project Manager caused a search to be made of the records of all of the I-5 Corridor Reinforcement Project Team members.[5] We find that this search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive documents. Consequently, we find that BPA conducted an adequate search under the FOIA for documents responsive to the Appellant's request.

2. Information Withheld under Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). "To qualify, a document must thus satisfy two conditions: its source must be a Government agency, and it must fall within the ambit of a privilege against discovery under judicial standards that would govern litigation against the agency that holds it." Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass'n, 121 S. Ct. 1060, 1065 (2001) (Klamath) (emphasis supplied). The Exemption 5 privileges cited by BPA in its determination were the deliberative process and attorney-client privileges. BPA cited both privileges in withholding all of the Exemption 5 material. Because, as discussed below, we find that the withheld Exemption 5 material is subject to the attorney-client privilege, and thus protected by Exemption 5, we need not consider whether the deliberative process privilege is also applicable to the withheld information.

An agency may withhold information under the attorney-client privilege if it is a "confidential communication . . . between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc., v. Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Although it fundamentally applies to facts divulged by a client to his attorney, the privilege also encompasses opinions given by an attorney to a client based upon, and thus reflecting, those facts. See, e.g., Jernigan v. Dep't of the Air Force, No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998). The privilege also encompasses communications between attorneys that reflect client-supplied information. See, e.g., Green v. IRS, 556 F. Supp 79, 85 (N.D. Ind. 1982). Not all communications between attorney and client are privileged, however. Clarke v. American Commerce Nat'l Bank, 974 F.2d 127, 129 (9th Cir. 1992). The courts have limited the protection of the privilege to those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 291, 403-04 (1976). In other words, the privilege does not extend to social, informational, or procedural communications between attorney and client. Power Wire Constructors, Case No. TFA-0312 (May 27, 2009).

[5] BPA also informed us that part of the Appellant's FOIA request refers to proposed power line route segments in Oregon identified in a September 14, 2009 map. Because field work identified potential problems with this route, BPA dropped these segments from further consideration. Mautner Response at 1. With regard to the portion of the request asking for documents related to line rebuilding in the Sherwood area, BPA subsequently dropped from consideration proposed line relocation for segments 81-85 and 89. Mautner Response at 1.

The material withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 consists of communications between a BPA attorney and BPA officials concerning possible consequences under the National Environmental Policy Act, 42 U.S.C. § 4321 et. seq., with regard to elimination of further consideration regarding a proposed route for the I-5 Corridor Reinforcement Project. As such, this communication consists of facts and legal opinions arising from those facts shared between BPA and its lawyer. The material withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 is thus properly protected pursuant to the attorney-client privilege and Exemption 5.

3. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. National Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (NARFE). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally NARFE, 879 F.2d at 874.

The material withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 consisted of personal phone numbers and E-mail addresses of BPA employees. As such, we find that there is a significant privacy interest connected with this information. Release of this information could subject these employees to unwanted intrusions at their homes. Further, we find that little, if any, light would be shed on the operations and activities of BPA by revelation of this information. The personal phone numbers and E-mail addresses do not in themselves relate to any description of BPA's activities as a government entity. Because we find that there is a large privacy interest connected to the withheld Exemption 6 material and there is little public interest that would be furthered by the release of this information, we conclude that release of the material withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Consequently, that material was properly withheld pursuant to Exemption 6.

4. Public Interest Determination

Nonetheless, the DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. With regard to the Exemption 5 material, the Supreme Court, in the civil discovery context, has emphasized the public policy underlying the attorney-client privilege – "that sound legal advice or advocacy serves public ends and that such advice or advocacy depends upon the lawyer's being fully informed by the client." Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 389 (1981). Given the important public interests protected by the attorney-client privilege, we conclude that discretionary release of the Exemption 5 withheld materials would not be in the public interest.[6]

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that BPA conducted an adequate search for responsive documents under the FOIA. Further, we find that the material BPA withheld pursuant to Exemption 5 was properly withheld pursuant to the attorney-client privilege. The material withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 was also properly withheld. Consequently, the Appellant's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Another Way BPA, OHA Case Number TFA-0437, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: SACE

Date of Filing: October 26, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0442

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by the Southern Alliance for Clean Energy (SACE) in response to a determination that was issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO). In that determination, the LGPO replied to a request for documents that SACE submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The LGPO released certain documents to SACE with portions of those documents deleted. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the LGPO release some of the withheld information. [1]

I. BACKGROUND

In its FOIA request, SACE sought access to documents pertaining to the LGPO's issuance of conditional commitments for loan guarantees for the construction and operation of two nuclear reactors in Burke County, Georgia. Specifically, SACE requested access to three categories of documents.

1. All fully executed term sheets between the DOE and four utilities and one municipality (collectively referred to in the request as "SNC") setting forth the agreed upon terms of the loan guarantees and the obligations of SNC;

2. All fully executed Definite Agreements (as defined in the term sheets) between the DOE, the Federal Finance Bank and SNC, setting forth the agreed upon terms and conditions of the loan guarantees and the obligations of SNC; and

3. All records pertaining to the issuance of the loan guarantees not otherwise covered by another specified FOIA request.

[1] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

In its response dated September 24, 2010, the LGPO identified three documents as being responsive to SACE's request. The documents are conditional loan commitment letters to three of the specified utilities. The LGPO invoked Exemption 4 of the FOIA in withholding portions of these documents. Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). The LGPO determined that the withheld material was sensitive and proprietary commercial information that was maintained in confidence by the utilities, and that the release of the material would place the utilities at a significant competitive disadvantage.

In its Appeal, SACE contests the adequacy of the LGPO's determination letter and the LGPO's application of Exemption 4. With regard to the determination letter, SACE contends that the LGPO's letter fails to explain in any detail the type of competitive harm to which the submitters of the withheld information would be subjected should each type of information be released. Furthermore, SACE argues that much of the withheld content of the conditional loan commitment letters consists of provisions that were imposed upon the utilities by the DOE, and were therefore not "obtained from a person" within the meaning of the Exemption. Finally, SACE contends that standard contract provisions, such as indemnity and hold harmless clauses, choice of law provisions and affirmative covenants, were also withheld, and that these provisions are not privileged or confidential and do not normally contain commercial or financial information of the type that is protected by Exemption 4.

II. Analysis

As previously stated, Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R.§ 1004.10(b)(4) . Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines that the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Administration, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a "trade secret,"a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criteria. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997), aff'd in part, rev'd in part and remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (Lepelletier). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). The federal courts have held that the term "person" includes a wide range of entities, including corporations, banks, state governments, agencies of foreign governments, and Native American tribes or nations. See, e.g., Stone v. Export-Import Bank, 552 F.2d 132, 137 (5th Cir. 1977); Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.2d 93, 95 (2nd Cir. 1996) (Nadler). See also Myers, Bigel, Sibley & Sajovec, 27 DOE ¶ 80,225 (August 31, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0517). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

The Exemption serves to protect submitters of commercial or financial information to the federal government from the adverse effects of unwarranted public disclosure of that information, and it correspondingly provides the federal government with an assurance that such information will be reliable. However, federal entities themselves are not "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4, and any commercial information of the federal government is not shielded from mandatory disclosure by this exemption. See, e.g., Board of Trade v. Commodity Futures Trading Commission, 627 F.2d 392, 404; Nadler, 92 F.2d at 95 (term "person" includes "an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or public or private organization other than an agency" (quoting definition found in Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551(2) (2000)) (italics added).

A. Adequacy of the Determination

In an earlier decision issued to SACE regarding a previous FOIA request for much of the same information, we concluded that the LGPO's determination letter was deficient because it did not adequately justify that Office's application of Exemption 4. Southern Alliance for Clean Energy, Case No. TFA-0403 (2010). In that decision, we said that a "determination must adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document." Id. at 2. We further stated that if an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Id. at 3. We identified two flaws the LGPO's determination. First, we found that LGPO did not distinguish among the different types of withheld information in providing its justifications, and we concluded that its statement that release of the information would give competitors an unfair advantage was impermissably vague and conclusory. Id.

In contrast to that determination, in this case the LGPO did provide a justification for each category of information that was withheld. Moreover, although the descriptions of the competitive harm that would result from the release of the withheld information were brief, they were adequate to communicate the basis for the LGPO's withholdings and to permit a meaningful appeal. We find that the LGPO's determination letter was adequate.

B. Exemption 4

SACE further contends that because certain provisions of the conditional commitments were included at the insistence of the DOE, they did not originate with the utilities, and were therefore not "obtained from a person" within the meaning of Exemption 4.

The federal courts have held that the fact that particular information was the subject of negotiation with the federal government does not necessarily preclude a finding that it was "obtained from a person" within the meaning of Exemption 4. Rather, the courts have looked to the identity of the party from whom the information originated. See, e.g., Public Citizen Health Research Group v. National Institutes of Health, 209 F. Supp. 2d 37, 44 (D.D.C. 2002) (concluding that although a licensee's final royalty rate was the result of negotiation with the government, that did not alter the fact that the licensee is the ultimate source of the information inasmuch as the licensee had to provide the information in the first instance); In Defense of Animals v. National Institutes of Health, 543 F. Supp. 2d 83, 102-103 (D.D.C. 2008) (concluding that incentive award payments negotiated by the parties were not "obtained from a person," because agency failed to demonstrate that the contractor was the source of the information, and not the agency). Similarly, we have previously held that portions of agreements between the DOE and non-federal entities may be considered to have been "obtained from a person" when the non-federal entity was the source of the information. See, e.g., William E. Logan, Jr. & Associates, Case No. VFA-0484 (1999); Research Focus, L.L.C., Case No. TFA-0247 (2008).

In the present case, we have been informed that although the provisions in question were the subject of negotiations between the DOE and the three utilities, the utilities were the source of the information that was withheld. See memorandum of January 21, 2011 telephone conversation between Wendy Pulliam, LGPO, and Robert Palmer, Senior Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Based on this information, we conclude that the withheld information was obtained from a "person" within the meaning of Exemption 4.

Finally, SACE contends that the LGPO improperly withheld standard contract provisions such as indemnity and hold harmless clauses, choice of law provisions and affirmative covenants. As an initial matter, our examination of the three conditional commitment letters, including the portions withheld, reveals that these provisions are not "standard," in that they differ significantly from letter to letter. This no doubt reflects the differences in the input received from the three utilities during the negotiation process.

Furthermore, since the term "commercial or financial information" has been broadly construed to include any information relating to business or trade, Lepelletier, it is clear that the provisions in question, which set forth terms under which loan guarantees for the construction of nuclear facilities might be granted, are "commercial or financial." The final issue for consideration is whether the withheld information is "privileged or confidential." We must therefore determine whether the LGPO properly concluded that the material withheld is "confidential." Since the utilities' participation was required in order to obtain the conditional loan guarantees, the withheld information was submitted on an involuntary basis. Therefore, the information is "confidential" for Exemption 4 purposes if its release is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. We believe that the withheld information meets the second prong of the National Parks test.

In the wholesale market (e.g., sales of electricity to other utilities and co-ops and to municipalities), and in sales to large commercial and industrial customers, the three utilities face competition. Some of the affirmative covenants contain information from which certain project costs of the facilities to be constructed can be extrapolated. Release of cost information to competitors would provide them with an unfair advantage, and release of such information to potential wholesale customers would provide leverage in negotiations with the three utilities. Moreover, release of the financing terms agreed to by the three utilities would give other potential lenders insight into the terms that they might be willing to agree to in negotiations, thereby compromising the utilities' ability to obtain future financing on favorable terms. This disadvantage would not be shared by the utilities' competitors, and would therefore affect the utilities' ability to compete on an equal footing. Because release of the provisions in question would likely result in substantial competitive harm, we conclude that the LGPO properly applied Exemption 4. SACE's Appeal will therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by SACE on October 26, 2010 (Case No. TFA-0442) is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Glen Bowers

Date of Filing: October 26, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0443

On October 26, 2010, Glen Bowers filed an appeal from a determination issued to him on April 9, 2010, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, Albuquerque (NNSA), in response to a request for documents that Mr. Bowers filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, NNSA responded that it did not locate any records responsive to Mr. Bowers' request. In his appeal, Mr. Bowers challenges the adequacy of NNSA's search. This appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In March 2007, Mr. Bowers filed a FOIA request with NNSA for employment records pertaining to his late father. Letter from Carolyn A. Becknell, NNSA, to Glen Bowers, April 9, 2010 (Determination) at 1. In its May 2007 response, NNSA informed Mr. Bowers that its search for documents yielded no records responsive to his request. Id. Mr. Bowers appealed that determination to OHA. Id. In an October 2007 decision, OHA concluded that NNSA's search for records was adequate and denied Mr. Bowers' Appeal. See Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0222 (2007).[1] In September 2009, Mr. Bowers submitted additional information to the DOE Office of Information Resources (OIR), the office responsible for receiving FOIA requests at DOE Headquarters, and OIR forwarded the new information to NNSA. Determination at 1. Based on the new information, NNSA reopened Mr. Bowers' case and conducted a new search for responsive documents. Id. In its April 2010 determination, NNSA indicated that each of the NNSA Site Offices (Kansas City Site Office, Livermore Site Office, Los Alamos Site Office, Nevada Site Office, Pantex Site Office, Sandia Site Office, and Y-12 Site Office) performed searches for records using the additional information and located no responsive records. Id.

Mr. Bowers filed the instant appeal challenging the adequacy of NNSA's search for documents.[2] See Letter from Glen Bowers to OHA, dated September 2, 2010 (Appeal) at 1. In his Appeal, Mr.

[1] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

[2] OHA received an appeal from Mr. Bowers of NNSA's April 9, 2010, Determination Letter on September 24, 2010. OHA dismissed that appeal on the grounds that it was untimely. Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0422. Upon receipt of Bowers contends that NNSA's search was inadequate because it did not include a search of records pertaining to the DOE's Rocky Flats Site in Golden, Colorado, where he alleges his father worked for a DOE contractor. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted NNSA to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. NNSA informed us that, in performing a search for documents, it contacted the NNSA Site Offices to request a search for records, and the Site Offices conducted searches of their records databases. See Email from Carolyn A. Becknell, NNSA, to Diane DeMoura, OHA (November 2, 2010). NNSA's records management personnel further noted that NNSA does not maintain records pertaining to the DOE's Rocky Flats Site.[3] Based on this information, we find that NNSA performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Mr. Bowers' FOIA request, despite the absence of any responsive records. Therefore, the search was adequate. Accordingly, Mr. Bowers' Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on October 26, 2010, by Glen Bowers, OHA Case No. TFA-0443, is hereby denied.

the dismissal, Mr. Bowers submitted documentation establishing that he did not receive NNSA's April 9, 2010, Determination Letter until August 10, 2010, and maintaining that he timely filed his first appeal. Given those circumstances, OHA accepted jurisdiction over the instant appeal.

[3] Records pertaining to the Rocky Flats Site are maintained by, and fall within the jurisdiction of, the DOE's Office of Legacy Management (OLM). Therefore, those records are not covered by the determination at issue in this appeal. In addition, we contacted OIR to determine whether it forwarded Mr. Bowers' request to OLM. OIR informed us that OLM performed a search for documents and issued a determination letter to Mr. Bowers on September 30, 2009.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Christine Sullivan Foster
Date of Filing:	October 28, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0444

On October 28, 2010, Christine Sullivan Foster filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on September 17, 2010, by the Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE). Oak Ridge issued the determination in response to a request for documents that Ms. Foster submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that Oak Ridge perform an additional search for responsive material and either release newly discovered documents or issue a new determination justifying their withholding.

I. Background

On September 7, 2010, Ms. Foster filed a FOIA request for copies of all employment records related to her father William L. Sullivan, who worked at Oak Ridge between 1943 and 1945. Letter from Amy Rothrock, Authorizing Official, Oak Ridge, to Christine Sullivan Foster (September 17, 2010) (Determination Letter). On September 17, 2010, Oak Ridge informed Ms. Foster that after a thorough search it was unable to find any records, and consequently denied the request. See Determination Letter. On October 28, 2010, Ms. Foster filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Letter from Christine S. Foster to Director, OHA (October 28, 2010) (Appeal). In the Appeal, Ms. Foster states that her father worked at Oak Ridge over 60 years ago during the construction of the facility and that she has been unable to obtain records of his employment. Appeal at 1. She challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge and asks OHA to direct Oak Ridge to conduct a new search for responsive documents. Id.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents. The FOIA states that an agency must conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990); see also Gary Maroney, Case No. TFA-0267 (2008). [1] The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See e.g. Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).

[1] OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

We contacted Oak Ridge to request additional information so that we could evaluate its search for Mr. Sullivan's records. Oak Ridge assured this office that it had conducted a thorough search, and provided additional details regarding the search. Electronic mail message from Amy Rothrock, Oak Ridge, to Valerie Vance Adeyeye, OHA (November 12, 2010). According to Oak Ridge, the employees searched the following locations: (1) the Oak Ridge plants; (2) the Y-12 NNSA plant; (3) the Oak Ridge Associated Universities; (4) the DOE Records Holding Area [2]; (5) a historical database of contractor employees from 1940-1996; and (6) Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program claims filed since 2001. The employees searched electronically using finding aids and full text records on individuals and also performed hand searches of paper files retrieved by identifier. Id. They were unable to find any documents related to Mr. Sullivan.

III. Conclusion

After reviewing the record of this case, we find that Oak Ridge conducted a search that was adequate and reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Accordingly, this Appeal is denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The FOIA Appeal filed by Christine Sullivan Foster on October 28, 2010, OHA Case Number TFA-0444, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: American Small Business League

Date of Filing: October 28, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0445

On October 28, 2010, the American Small Business League (ASBL) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on September 27, 2010, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (GFO). In that determination, GFO responded to a request for documents that ASBL submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to ASBL's FOIA request, GFO identified and released a number of documents as responsive to the request, but withheld portions of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. This appeal, if granted, would require GFO to release the withheld information to ASBL.

I. BACKGROUND

On March 11, 2010, ASBL submitted a FOIA request for "any, all, each and every contract signed by Contracting Officer Tammie M. Lawler for the last quarter of Fiscal Year 2009. Specifically, the pages that contain the Contractor/Vendor Name, dollar amount obligated, PIID and IDVPIID numbers, Contracting Officer Business Size Determination." See Letter from Kevin Baron, ASBL, to OHA Director (June 16, 2010) (June Appeal) at 1. On June 2, 2010, GFO responded to ASBL's request for "copies of the database entry forms for all contracts signed by Contracting Officer Tammie M. Lawler for the last quarter of Fiscal Year 2009." Letter from Derek Passarelli, GFO, to Kevin Baron, ASBL (June 2, 2010) (June Determination) at 1. GFO released 584 pages of responsive documents, 230 pages of which contained redactions pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. Id. at 4. ASBL appealed the June Determination, maintaining that GFO mistakenly believed that ASBL agreed to narrow the scope of its FOIA request and that, therefore, GFO did not provide an adequate response to the request. June Appeal at 1. In a July 2010 Decision, finding no written evidence that ASBL agreed to narrow the scope of its request, we remanded the matter back to GFO in order that ASBL's original, broader FOIA request be processed. See American Small Business League, Case No. TFA-0394 (2010).[1]

[1] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

On September 27, 2010, GFO issued a new determination in response to ASBL's FOIA request. Letter from Derek Passarelli, GFO, to Kevin Baron, ASBL (September 27, 2010) (September Determination). In the September Determination, GFO identified 2,021 pages of documents as responsive to ASBL's request, releasing 1,627 pages in their entirety and 394 pages with portions withheld pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 5 and 6. Id. at 2, 6. The responsive documents "consist of copies of all contracts signed by Contracting Officer Tammie M. Lawler for the last quarter of Fiscal Year 2009, each of which was awarded to acquire Merit Review services for DOE's Golden Field Office." Id. at 2. The withheld information consists of "the identities and other personal identifying information of individuals retained to provide Merit Review services." Id.

On October 28, 2010, ASBL appealed the September Determination. See Letter from Kevin Baron, ASBL, to OHA Director (October 28, 2010) (October Appeal). In the October Appeal, ASBL maintains that "the information contained in the documents is public information; therefore, it does not represent an invasion of privacy of either individuals or of internal agency business" and "should not be redacted." Id. at 1.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). This deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both predecisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id.

A federal district court has previously considered the exact Exemption 5 issue before us in this case – namely, whether information identifying Merit Review Committee members is shielded from release by Exemption 5.[2] In that case, which also involved GFO's withholding of information identifying Merit Review Committee members, the court determined that this type of information is predecisional because it was prepared to assist the GFO official responsible for selecting the committee members and deliberative because it relates to the process used by the official. See Reilly v. Dep't of Energy, 2007 WL 4548300 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 18, 2007) at *5.

[2] We have reviewed unredacted copies of the documents GFO released to ASBL. As indicated above, the withheld portions of the documents include the identities and other personal identifying information of non-federal employees contracted by GFO to provide Merit Review services.

Therefore, the information is exempt from public disclosure pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5. Id. Similarly, we have previously held that information identifying merit review evaluators is properly withheld under Exemption 5 because release of such information would compromise the integrity of the deliberative process. See Minneapolis Star Tribune, Case No. TFA-0091 (2005). In that case, we concluded that "releasing the names of individuals who participate in the deliberative process might discourage them from fully and frankly communicating their opinions and recommendations, exactly the result that the privilege's authors sought to prevent." Id. at 3.

We find no merit in ASBL's assertion that the information withheld in the released documents is public and should not be redacted. As noted above, we find that the release of this information would have a chilling effect upon the agency. The ability and willingness of merit review evaluators to make honest and open recommendations in the future could well be compromised. If evaluators were inhibited in providing information and recommendations, the agency would be deprived of the benefit of their open and candid opinions, the very service that they were retained to provide. Accordingly, we find that the names and other information identifying the Merit Review Committee members were properly withheld under Exemption 5.

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should nonetheless release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. GFO concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the requested information would cause harm to GFO's decision-making process by hampering the agency's selection of appropriate recipients for federal funding. Therefore, release of the withheld Exemption 5 information in the documents released to ASBL would not be in the public interest.

B. Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989); see also Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees, 879 F.2d at 874.

In this case, GFO determined that release of the withheld information would result in the invasion of significant personal privacy interests. Specifically, GFO found that the release of the information would disclose personal information of the Merit Review evaluators, who are DOE contractor employees, and potentially lead to "disappointed financial assistance applicants seeking similar information in order to impose uninvited and unwanted contacts on Merit Review evaluators in the future." September Determination at 4. We agree. We have consistently held the release of personal identifying information constitutes a "real and substantial threat to employees' privacy." See Robert D. Reilly, Case No. TFA-0166 (2006) (internal citations omitted). Moreover, because the Merit Review Committee members whose identities are at issue in this case are non-federal contractor employees, there is a significant privacy interest in maintaining their confidentiality. In addition, we have held in the past that the potential for harassment of individuals is sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 6. Id.

Having identified a privacy interest in the withheld information, it is necessary to determine whether there is a public interest in the disclosure of the information. Information falls within the public interest if it contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the government. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 775. Therefore, unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990).

In the present case, we find that the public interest in the withheld information at issue here is minimal at best. ASBL has not established how release of the identities of the Merit Review Committee members would serve any public interest. We find that release of the personal identifying information of the Committee members would reveal little, if anything, to the public about the workings of the government and could subject the individuals to considerable harassment. Therefore, after weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against a minimal or even non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing the identities and other personal information of the non-federal employees relevant to ASBL's request could reasonably be expected to constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Therefore, GFO properly withheld the information under Exemption 6.

C. Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Greg Long, 25 DOE ¶ 80,129 (1995). We find that GFO complied with the FOIA by releasing to ASBL all factual, non-deliberative portions of the documents that do not compromise the personal privacy interests identified above.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that GFO properly withheld information pursuant to Exemptions 5 and 6 in the documents it released to ASBL. Moreover, GFO complied with the requirements of the FOIA by releasing to ASBL all non-exempt portions of the responsive documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the American Small Business League, OHA Case Number TFA-0445, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Bob Warren, P.A.

Date of Filing: November 12, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0446

On November 12, 2010, Bob Warren, P.A., (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on October 6, 2010, by the Savannah River Operations Office (SRO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, SRO responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, SRO released nine documents responsive to the Appellant's request. In his Appeal, the Appellant challenges the adequacy of SRO's search for documents. The Appeal, if granted, would require SRO to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On September 23, 2010, the Appellant requested documents about Kerry C. Baxley, regarding all incidents during his employment including:

- an October 4, 1997, sludge sounding incident
- a June 14, 1997, Gang Valve incident at F Tank Farm
- the sludge contamination incident, at H Tank Farm, in the mid-1990s
- the slurry pump removal incident, at H Tank Farm, 1992 or 1993
- any glove box contamination incidents in the B Line, F Area
- any special hazmat investigations (1990-2000)
- Radiation Survey Log Sheets (1990-2000)
- Incident Critiques, Records and Reports (1990-2000)

Request Letter dated September 23, 2010, from Bob Warren, to Lucy Knowles, Authorizing Official, SRO. On September 28, 2010, the Appellant narrowed the last three items to "any incident report, and its associated Radiation Survey Log Sheet, Critique and/or special Hazmat Investigation, in which Mr. Baxley was involved, specifically both F and H Tank Farms . . . in the years 1992 through 1997." Letter dated September 28, 2010, from Bob Warren, to Pauline Conner, FOIA Officer, SRO.

On October 6, 2010, SRO responded to this request, releasing to the Appellant nine documents responsive to the first two items of his request. Determination Letter dated October 6, 2010, from Lucy Knowles, SRO, to Appellant. In response to items three through eight, SRO indicated that the SRO's Occurrence Reporting and Processing System (ORPS) contains information concerning incidents, but does not contain the names or any other personally identifiable information of employees involved in any events or incidents. Id. Therefore, SRO had no responsive information for items three through eight. Id.

On November 12, 2010, the Appellant appealed, claiming that he did not receive copies of urine analyses and documents relating to a June 14, 1997, Gang Valve incident at the F Tank Farm. Appeal Letter received November 12, 2010, from Bob Warren, P.A., to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted SRO to determine what type of search was conducted. In response, SRO indicated that the Savannah River Nuclear Solutions (SRNS) Dosimetry Records Program Manager, Health Physics Services, conducted a search to locate any incident documents involving Kerry Baxley. E-mail dated November 16, 2010, from Pauline Conner, SRO, to Janet Fishman, OHA. Based on that search, which used keywords "Kerry Baxley" and his Social Security Number (SSN), SRNS located the responsive incident documents. Id. SRNS Classified Operations Department also conducted a search using Mr. Baxley's name and SSN. Id. It found no responsive documents. Id. ORPS contains all incident reports between 1991 and the present, but it does not contain any personally identifiable information. Id. Therefore, no documents were found that referenced Mr. Baxley. Id. SRO also searched the Electronic Data Warehouse Storage system, which contains documents for all of SRO since 1945. Id. No responsive documents were located. Id.

As we stated above, "the standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller, 779 F.2d at 1384-85. Based on the foregoing, we believe that SRO's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Therefore, the Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Bob Warren, P.A., Case No. TFA-0446, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Walter Tamosaitis
Date of Filing:	November 22, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0448

On November 22, 2010, Dr. Walter Tamosaitis (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on October 25, 2010, by the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIG responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, OIG identified two documents responsive to the Appellant's request. OIG withheld portions of the first document. The Appellant challenges OIG's withholdings. This appeal, if granted, would require OIG to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On October 12, 2010, the Appellant requested "a copy of the report that investigated his termination from the WTP project in Hanford, WA." Request E-Mail dated October 12, 2010, from Appellant to FOIA-Central@hq.doe.gov. On October 25, 2010, OIG released two documents to the Appellant. OIG redacted portions of one of the documents, stating that the redacted information is exempt from disclosure under FOIA Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Determination Letter dated October 25, 2010, from Sandra D. Bruce, Assistant Inspector General for Inspections and Special Inquiries, OIG to Appellant (Determination Letter).

On November 22, 2010, the Appellant appealed, first contending that the OIG failed to support its assertions with any of the required analysis for withholding the requested information. Appeal Letter received November 22, 2010, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). Second, he claimed that the redactions and deletions went beyond the redaction of names and titles, and thus the redactions were outside the scope of the cited exemptions. Id. Finally, he claimed that the OIG failed to provide any rationale for the assertion that release of the names of the persons in the report is "not in the public interest." Id.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). In this regard, it is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemptions 6 and 7(C) are at issue in this case.

A. Exemptions 6 and 7(C)

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); see also 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982). Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes," if release of such law enforcement records or information "could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).[1/]

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under either Exemption 6 or 7(C), an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. National Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (NARFE). The second step is that the agency must determine whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 769 (1989). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the information either (1) would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 6 standard), or (2) could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (the Exemption 7(C) standard). See generally NARFE, 879 F.2d at 874; Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir 1984).

[1/] In its Appeal, the Appellant claims that the document released to him is a "review" not an "investigation" and therefore, not covered by Exemption 7(C). This argument is without merit because the document was "compiled for law enforcement purposes." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C).

Exemption 7(C) applies to a much narrower class of documents than Exemption 6, but it has a less exacting standard that provides more expansive coverage. Both Exemptions 6 and 7(C) require a balancing of the personal privacy interest in the information proposed for withholding against the public interest in the same information. There are, however, two significant differences between Exemptions 6 and 7(C). Pursuant to Exemption 7(C), the information must have been compiled for law enforcement purposes. Furthermore, since Exemption 7(C) allows an agency to withhold information where there is only a reasonable expectation of an "unwarranted invasion of personal privacy," Exemption 7(C) has a lower threshold of privacy interest than Exemption 6 where the balancing test calls for a "clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Pursuant to the provisions of Exemption 7(C), we have examined investigations conducted by OIG in response to complaints by individuals, as in this case, and found that they constitute law enforcement activities. See Ken Hasten, Case No. TFA-0353 (2010).[2/] Since the information at issue in this case meets Exemption 7(C)'s threshold test, we need only examine OIG's actions pursuant to the standard of Exemption 7(C), i.e., whether release of the withheld material could reasonably be expected to result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See, e.g., J.G. Truher, Case No. VFA-0245 (1997).

B. The Appellant's Arguments

First, the Appellant contends that OIG failed to support its assertions with any of the required analysis for withholding the requested information. OIG asserted a privacy interest in the identities of the individuals. The Determination Letter states in pertinent part:

> Names and information that would tend to disclose the identity of certain individuals have been withheld pursuant to Exemptions 6 and 7(C).

[2/] OHA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

> Individuals involved in OIG enforcement matters, which in this case includes subjects, witnesses, sources of information, and other individuals, are entitled to privacy protections so that they will be free from harassment, intimidation and other personal intrusions.

Determination Letter at 1. Contrary to the Appellant's assertion, the foregoing language is sufficient to explain the OIG rationale for the withholdings. See, e.g., Ken Hasten, Case No. TFA-0353 (2010).

Moreover, our review of the documents indicated that the individuals whose names were withheld are actual or prospective sources. OHA has found a significant privacy interest in maintaining the confidentiality of OIG witnesses. J.G. Truher, Case No. VFA-0245 (1997). We have found there is a strong privacy interest in the names and related identifying information of sources and witnesses. Sources and witnesses have an obvious privacy interest in remaining anonymous. See James L. Schwab, 21 DOE ¶ 80,117 at 80,556 (1991); Lloyd R. Makey, 20 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,524 (1990). Furthermore, the public interest favors protecting the identities of sources and witnesses, rather than disclosing them, to insure that witnesses continue to provide information voluntarily for law enforcement investigations, without fear of retribution. See generally King v. Dep't of Justice, 830 F.2d 210, 232-36 (D.C. Cir 1987). Since there are strong privacy and public interests in protecting these identities, we find that the OIG properly withheld the names of its sources.

Second, the Appellant claims that the redactions and deletions went beyond the redaction of names and titles. Appeal Letter at 1. As indicated above, we have reviewed the document to determine what information was redacted. As also indicated above, the Appellant is correct that some additional words were redacted that are not names and titles. There were some verbs withheld, along with a couple of clauses. The OIG stated to us that release of the withheld information could lead to discovery of a person's identity. E-mail dated December 2, 2010, from Ruby Len, OIG, to Janet Fishman, OHA. After reviewing the documents and the OIG's arguments, we agree with OIG that the other withheld information could lead to a determination of the person's identity. Therefore, we will uphold the OIG withholding of the information from the first document.

Finally, the Appellant claims that the OIG failed to provide any rationale for the assertion that release of the names of the persons in the report is "not in the public interest." Appeal Letter at 1. We disagree. In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemptions 6 and 7(C), we do not make the usual inquiry as required by 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1 into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. The second step in an Exemptions 6 and 7(C) analysis considers whether release of the information would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Reporters Comm., 489 U.S. 769. The final step in the analysis weighs the privacy interests against the public interest. Therefore, rationale is already intertwined in the analysis that led to the withholding of the information.

III. Conclusion

First, we have concluded that the OIG properly justified the withholdings of the names and identifying information of those involved in the instant OIG investigation. Second, the redactions of the other information were not outside the scope of the cited exemptions. Finally, although the OIG did not provide a separate statement that release of the names of the persons in the report is "not in the public interest," that rationale is intertwined with the Exemptions 6 and 7(C) analysis. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Dr. Walter Tamosaitis, Case No. TFA-0448, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	National Security Archive
Date of Filing:	November 23, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0449

On November 23, 2010, the National Security Archive (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on October 25, 2010, by the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, OIR responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, OIR located four documents responsive to the Appellant's request. In its Appeal, the Appellant challenges the adequacy of OIR's search for documents. The Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to conduct a further search for responsive documents.

I. Background

On May 20, 2010, the Appellant requested documents related to the 9th Conference of the Parties (COP) to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and the Nineteenth Session of the COP's Subsidiary Body for Implementation and Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice held in Milan, Italy, in December 2003. Request Letter dated May 20, 2010, from Robert A. Wampler, Appellant, to Carolyn Lawson, FOIA/Privacy Act Group, DOE.

On October 25, 2010, OIR responded to this request, releasing three responsive documents.[1/] Determination Letter dated October 25, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, DOE, to Appellant. On November 23, 2010, the Appellant appealed the

[1/] The Determination Letter states that four responsive documents were located. One of the four documents originated at the Department of State and was sent there for a determination on its releasability. Determination Letter dated October 25, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Appellant.

Determination, claiming that the search was insufficient and that the records he is requesting would be held by the Washington National Records Center. Appeal Letter received November 23, 2010, from Appellant, to Poli A. Marmelejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Department of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[2/]

We recently issued a Decision to the Appellant regarding a similar request for information from the 10th, 11th, 13th, and 14th COP. National Security Archive, Case Nos. TFA-0432, et al., (2010). As in those cases, we contacted OIR to determine what type of search was conducted. In response, OIR indicated that similar to Case Nos. TFA-0432, et al., the request was sent to the Office of Policy and International Affairs (PI) to conduct a search for responsive documents. As in the previous cases, PI stated that it conducted a search of its electronic files, which are organized according to UNFCCC events. E-mail dated December 1, 2010, from Elmer Holt, PI, to Janet Fishman, OHA, referencing Memorandum of Telephone Conversation dated November 15, 2010, between Janet Fishman, OHA, and Elmer Holt, PI, filed in Case No. TFA-0432. PI searched for records pertaining to the 9th COP session. Id. The only documents responsive to the request were either released to the Appellant or sent to the Department of State for a determination. Id. PI also stated that no search of the Washington National Records Center was conducted because PI never forwarded any documents to the Center for storage. December 1, 2010, E-mail referencing E-mail dated November 4, 2010, from Elmer Holt, PI, to Janet Fishman, OHA, filed in Case No. TFA-0432. In addition, PI identified former PI employees working in other DOE organizations and inquired as to whether they had any relevant documents and received no positive responses. December 1, 2010, E-mail referencing November 15, 2010, Telephone Memorandum.

[2/] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

Also, as in the previous cases, OIR also stated that the Office of the Executive Secretariat (ES) was contacted to determine if it would have any responsive documents. E-mail dated November 24, 2010, from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, to Janet Fishman, OHA. ES did not find any responsive documents. ES explained that the records located at the Washington National Records Center were included in this search. E-mail dated November 24, 2010, from Terry Fehner, ES, to Janet Fishman, OHA, referencing E-mail dated November 9, 2010, from Terry Fehner, ES, to Janet Fishman, OHA, filed in Case No. TFA-0432.

Based on the foregoing, we believe that the search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Accordingly, this Appeal will be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by National Security Archive, Case No. TFA-0449, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Ruth Gravitt

Date of Filing: November 30, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0451

On November 30, 2010, Ruth Gravitt filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on October 22, 2010, by the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Ms. Gravitt submitted under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. Ms. Gravitt asks that Oak Ridge conduct an additional search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Ms. Gravitt filed a request for information in which she sought the employment, medical, personnel security, and radiation exposure records pertaining to her father, William J. Gravitt. In her request, Ms. Gravitt indicated that her father worked, inter alia, at the Oak Ridge K-25 plant. Upon receiving Ms. Gravitt's request, Oak Ridge conducted a search of its legacy files and the K-25 record repositories. Oak Ridge stated that it located a work history record and employment data in its legacy files, but did not locate any responsive records at K-25. On November 30, 2010, Ms. Gravitt filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Ms. Gravitt challenges the adequacy of the search conducted by Oak Ridge. See Appeal Letter. She asserts that responsive documents may be found in other locations and asks OHA to direct Oak Ridge to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003). [*] The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought material." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord, Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate.

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted FOIA officials in Oak Ridge to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Gravitt's request might reasonably be located. As stated above, upon receiving Ms. Gravitt's request for information, Oak Ridge conducted a search of its legacy files in its Records Holding Area. The Records Holding Area contains historical data on employees. Oak Ridge indicated that it also searched the K-25 record repositories. They conducted both manual and computer searches using several search aids including Ms. Gravitt's father's name, date of birth and social security number, and were unable to locate responsive material other than a work history record and employment data in its legacy files. The work history record indicated that Mr. Gravitt worked as an operator for the K-25 plant from 1944 through 1946. However, the K-25 record repositories only contain records dating back to the early 1950s. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Amy L. Rothrock, Oak Ridge, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (December 21, 2010). Given the facts presented to us, we find that Oak Ridge conducted an adequate search which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Ms. Gravitt's request. Accordingly, Ms. Gravitt's Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ruth Gravitt, OHA Case No. TFA-0451, on November 30, 2010, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Case Number:	TFA-0452

On December 2, 2010, Dr. Walter Tamosaitis (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on November 4, 2010, by the Richland Operations Office (Richland) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Richland responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, Richland identified numerous documents responsive to the Appellant's request.[1/] This Appeal, if granted, would require Richland to conduct a further search for responsive information.

I. Background

On September 27, 2010, the Appellant requested "a copy of any and all records, electronic or otherwise, relating to, generated in connection with or pertaining to [the Appellant]." Request Letter dated September 27, 2010, from Appellant to Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, Office of Communications, Richland. On November 4, 2010, Richland released three packets of documents to the Appellant. Determination Letter dated November 4, 2010, from Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, Richland, to Appellant (Determination Letter).

On December 2, 2010, the Appellant appealed, challenging the adequacy and reasonableness of Richland's search. Appeal Letter received December 2, 2010, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). To support his claim that additional information should have been located, the Appellant states that he wrote a letter to the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board (DNFSB) that resulted in an investigation and a visit to the Hanford Nuclear Site (Hanford) by the DOE Office of Health, Safety, and [1/] Richland withheld from the Appellant's radiation exposure records the names, Social Security Numbers (SSN), and any other personal information of other individuals as non responsive to the request. The Appellant is not challenging those withholdings.

Security (HSS). Id. at 6. As a result of this letter, he also claims there was extensive media interest in his termination and the contents of his letter to the DNFSB. Id. at 4-6.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted Richland to determine what type of search was conducted. In response, Richland indicated that a computerized search was conducted using the Appellant's name, Social Security Number (SSN), and job title and area. E-mail dated December 6, 2010, from Dorothy Riehle, FOIA Officer, Richland, to Janet Fishman, OHA. Richland searched the files of the Office of River Protection (ORP); Bechtel National, Inc. (BNI); the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory; AdvanceMed Hanford, Inc.; DOE's Office of Security and Emergency Services; DOE's Office of Employee Concerns; and Hanford's archive databases. Determination Letter at 2. Within ORP, the public affairs, congressional, and DOE program offices were searched. December 6, 2010, E-mail.

In his Appeal, the Appellant states that HSS visited the Hanford site as a result of a letter he wrote to the DNSFB. He claims that in response to that visit, there should be some responsive information. In the Determination Letter, Richland noted that it forwarded the request to DOE Headquarters for a search of HSS and the Office of Environmental Management.[1/] It is possible that the responsive information the Appellant is seeking is located at DOE Headquarters and not at Richland; any such information would be outside the scope of the Determination Letter and this Appeal.

Further, the Appellant states that there was extensive media coverage of his termination and letter to DNSFB. He claims that the public relations and communications department at DOE keeps a careful record of any media story affecting operations at Hanford. Appeal Letter at 5. As indicated above, Richland stated that the search of ORP included the public affairs, congressional, and DOE program offices, but found no responsive documents. December 6, 2010, E-mail.

Based on the foregoing, we believe that Richland's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Scott A. Hodes, Esq.

Date of Filing: December 7, 2010

Case Number: TFA-0453

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Scott A. Hodes, Esq. in response to a determination that was issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE/HQ) Headquarters and Oak Ridge Operations Office (DOE/OR). In that determination, DOE/HQ replied to a request for documents that Mr. Hodes submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. DOE released certain documents to Mr. Hodes, some in their entirety and some with portions deleted. This Appeal, if granted, would require that DOE release the withheld information. [1]

I. Background

In an October 2009 letter to DOE/HQ and DOE/OR, Mr. Hodes requested copies of: (1) the complete agreement or agreements reached between DOE and the private firms for Oak Ridge to continue production of Cf-252 at Oak Ridge High Flux Isotope Reactor (HFIR)[2]; (2) all correspondence between DOE and the private firms concerning the agreement for DOE to continue production of Cf-252 at the HFIR; and (3) any other records concerning the agreement between DOE and the private firms about the agreement for DOE to continue the production of Cf-252 at the HFIR, including but not limited to the following matters: (a) Cf-252 costs and pricing to agreement customers and other users; (b) terms of agreement for selling Cf-252; (c) conditions of use; and (d) availability. See Letter from Scott Hodes to Director, OHA (December 7, 2010) (Appeal) at 1; Letter from DOE to Scott Hodes, November 19, 2010 (Determination) at 1.

[2] Californium-252 (Cf-252) is a radioactive neutron source with widespread industrial uses. It is produced in high-energy research reactors. Cf-252 has a short decay period, or "half-life," of 2.6 years, and supplies must be replenished regularly. Cf-252 has various commercial uses including oil well exploration, reactor startup and testing during nuclear fuel manufacture, cancer therapy, and thickness gauging. See Californum-252 Fact Sheet Nuclear Energy Institute (July 2009); http://qsa-global.com/sources/industrial-isotopes/californium-252.aspx. DOE sells the Cf-252 to members of a consortium (the "private firms" mentioned in the request), and the members of the consortium then sell the Cf-252 to their customers.

In its response dated October 29, 2009, DOE/HQ replied that DOE/HQ was closing its request because any responsive records would be under the jurisdiction of DOE/OR. See Appeal at 2. On December 1, 2009, DOE/OR stated that it found no responsive records and that any responsive records should be maintained by DOE/HQ. Id. In December 2009, DOE/HQ reopened the request and in August 2010, DOE/HQ released some responsive records to Mr. Hodes. DOE/HQ informed Mr. Hodes that other responsive documents had been sent to submitters for their approval and that additional release would occur after the submitter notice process was complete. Id.

On November 19, 2010, DOE/HQ made a final release of documents. Several documents were redacted under FOIA Exemption 4. According to DOE/HQ, the redacted material consisted of "contract cost agreements, dates of contract agreements and deliveries, amounts of products delivered or received, total costs of products, maintenance or production, and financial costs." See Appeal at 2; Determination at 2.

In this Appeal, Mr. Hodes contests the withholding of responsive material under Exemption 4. He argues that: (1) the withheld material is not trade secret information covered by Exemption 4; (2) the withheld material is not obtained from a person because much of the withheld information came from the government; (3) the withheld information is not privileged or confidential because the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future would not be harmed by the release of the withheld information; and (4) release of the information would not harm the competitive position of any of the companies that are part of the consortium because the consortium members already know what the withheld information contains. See Appeal at 3.

II. Analysis

A. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R.§ 1004.10(b)(4). Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines that the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Administration, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

If the material does not constitute a "trade secret," a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criteria. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997), aff'd in part, rev'd in part and remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (Lepelletier). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). The federal courts have held that the term "person" includes a wide range of entities, including corporations, banks, state governments, agencies of foreign governments, and Native American tribes or nations. See, e.g., Stone v. Export-Import Bank, 552 F.2d 132, 137 (5th Cir. 1977); Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.2d 93, 95

(2nd Cir. 1996) (Nadler). See also Myers, Bigel, Sibley & Sajovec, 27 DOE ¶ 80,225 (August 31, 1999) (Case No. VFA-0517). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

Exemption 4 serves to protect submitters of commercial or financial information to the federal government from the adverse effects of unwarranted public disclosure of that information, and it correspondingly provides the federal government with an assurance that such information will be reliable. However, federal entities themselves are not "persons" for purposes of Exemption 4, and any commercial information of the federal government is not shielded from mandatory disclosure by this exemption. See, e.g., Board of Trade v. Commodity Futures Trading Commission, 627 F.2d 392, 404; Nadler, 92 F.2d at 95 (term "person" includes "an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or public or private organization other than an agency" (quoting definition found in Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551(2) (2000))) (italics added).

1. The withheld material is not trade secret information

Mr. Hodes argues that "despite the assertions of the DOE, the withheld material is not trade secret information covered by FOIA Exemption 4." Our review of the determination letter concludes that DOE has not asserted that the withheld material is trade secret information. In fact, the Determination Letter states that "[t]he exemption covers two broad categories of information in federal agency records: 1) trade secrets, and 2) information that is (a) commercial and financial, and (b) obtained from a person, and (c) privileged and confidential." Determination at 2 (emphasis added). Thus, DOE/HQ made no assertion that the withheld material is trade secret information.[3]

2. The withheld material is obtained from a person

Mr. Hodes further contends that much of the withheld information came from the government and was therefore not "obtained from a person" within the meaning of Exemption 4. See Appeal at 3.

The federal courts have held that the fact that particular information was the subject of negotiation with the federal government does not necessarily preclude a finding that it was "obtained from a person" within the meaning of Exemption 4. Rather, the courts have looked to the identity of the party from whom the information originated. See, e.g., Public Citizen Health Research Group v. National Institutes of Health, 209 F. Supp. 2d 37, 44 (D.D.C. 2002) (concluding that although a licensee's final royalty rate was the result of negotiation with the government, that did not alter the fact that the licensee is the ultimate source of the information inasmuch as the licensee had to provide the information in the first instance); In Defense of Animals v. National Institutes of Health, 543 F. Supp. 2d 83, 102-103 (D.D.C. 2008) (concluding that incentive award payments negotiated by the parties were not "obtained from a person," because agency failed to demonstrate that the contractor was the source of the information, and not the agency). Similarly, we have previously held that portions of agreements between the DOE and non-federal entities may be considered to have been "obtained from a person" when the non-federal entity was the source of the information. See, e.g., William E. Logan, Jr. & Associates, Case No. VFA-0484 (1999); Research Focus, L.L.C., Case No. TFA-0247 (2008); SACE, Case No. TFA-0442 (2011).

[3] The information sought is clearly "commercial" in nature because it relates to agreements between DOE and the consortium regarding costs and pricing.

In the present case, we have been informed that although the material in question was the subject of negotiations between the DOE and the members of the consortium, the consortium members were the source of the information that was withheld. See Memorandum of February 25, 2011, telephone conversation between Lauren Smith, Office of Science, and Valerie Vance Adeyeye, Staff Attorney, Office of Hearings and Appeals. Our review of the correspondence in the file confirms the key role of the consortium members in providing the source information that was withheld from disclosure. Based on this information, we conclude that the withheld material was obtained from a "person" within the meaning of Exemption 4.

3. The withheld information is privileged or confidential and its release would harm the competitive position of the private firms

Mr. Hodes also argues that the withheld information is not "privileged or confidential." We must therefore determine whether DOE/HQ properly concluded that the material withheld is "confidential." Because the consortium members were required to participate in the negotiations in order to purchase the Cf-252, the withheld information was submitted on an involuntary basis. Therefore, the information is "confidential" for Exemption 4 purposes if its release is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. We believe that the withheld information meets the second prong of the National Parks test.

Mr. Hodes argues that the members of the consortium do not face any competition from any entity outside of the consortium and therefore the release of the withheld information would not cause them any competitive harm. Thus, he contends that all prospective competitors already know the contents of the withheld information. He states that "any competitive harm has already occurred by the creation of the consortium itself." See Appeal at 3. DOE argues that the withheld information would reveal information to competitors about the isotope usage, distribution, and/or packaging methods of the consortium members. See Determination at 2. We conclude that release of the withheld information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the members of the consortium. The redacted information contains costs of products, maintenance and production, dates of deliveries, and contract cost agreements. Release of cost information to competitors would provide them with an unfair advantage, and release of such information to potential Cf-252 customers would provide leverage in future negotiations with the consortium members.

Although it is true that the consortium members know the contents of the withheld information, there is no evidence that the current members of the consortium are the only entities interested in purchasing Cf-252 from DOE. Thus, we cannot conclude that the members are themselves their only competition. Further, the private entities that are members of the consortium provide a wide range of other products and services and have competitors for those functions. Release of this proprietary data would give those competitors insight into an important part of the business strategy and financial structure of each consortium member. Finally, release of the terms agreed to by the consortium members could give other competitors insight into the terms that they might be willing to agree to in negotiations, thereby compromising the negotiation strategies of the members in the future. This disadvantage would not be shared by their competitors, and would therefore affect the members' ability to compete on an equal footing. Because release of the material in question would likely result in substantial competitive harm, we conclude that DOE/HQ properly applied Exemption 4. Mr. Hodes' Appeal will therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Scott Hodes on December 7, 2010 (Case No. TFA-0453) is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	FOIA Group, Inc.
Date of Filing:	December 9, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0454

On December 14, 2010, the FOIA Group, Inc. (Appellant) perfected an Appeal from a determination issued to it on December 7, 2010, by the Office of Procurement and Assistance Management (Procurement) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Procurement responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, Procurement withheld the requested information. In its Appeal, the Appellant challenges Procurement's withholding. The Appeal, if granted, would require Procurement to release the requested information.

I. Background

On June 13, 2010, the Appellant requested "[a]ll Final Contractor Performance Rating Reports . . . for the most recently available 3 year period." Request E-mail dated June 13, 2010, from Appellant to DOE. On December 7, 2010, Procurement responded to this request, withholding all responsive information pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA. Determination Letter dated December 7, 2010, from Patrick M. Ferraro, Acting Director, Procurement, DOE, to Appellant.

On December 14, 2010, the Appeal was finalized with our receipt of the Determination Letter. E-Mail from Alexander C. Morris, FOIA Officer, Office of Information Resources, DOE, to Janet Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In the Appeal, the Appellant claimed that first, Procurement erred by not segregating the specific rating scores. Appeal E-Mail dated December 9, 2010, from Appellant to (OHA). Second, the Appellant claimed that President Obama's new FOIA doctrine requires a presumption of openness when administering the FOIA. Id. at 2.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA allows agencies to withhold information if specifically authorized by another federal statute. However, the authorizing statute must satisfy one of two criteria. It must either (i) require that the information be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (ii) establish particular criteria for withholding or refer to particular types of information to be withheld. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3). The Supreme Court has established a two-prong standard of review for Exemption 3 cases. See CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 167 (1985). First, the agency must determine whether the statute in question is a statute of exemption as contemplated by Exemption 3. Id. at 167. Second, the agency must determine whether the withheld material satisfies the criteria of the exemption statute. Id.

We have previously found that the Procurement Integrity Act (PIA), 41 U.S.C. § 423, is a statute of exemption as contemplated by Exemption 3. See U.S. Ecology, Inc., 25 DOE ¶ 80,153 at 80,632 (1995); Energy Research Corp., 21 DOE ¶ 80, 130 at 80,600 (1991). The PIA is a federal statute that contains language specifically prohibiting the authorizing official from releasing protected information. In the PIA, Congress referred to the type of information that must be withheld as "source selection information." 41 U.S.C. § 423(a)(1). However, Congress carefully identified documents that make up source selection information. 41 U.S.C. § 423 (f)(2)(A)-(J).

Our next question is whether the information requested in this case falls under the definition of the PIA of "source selection information." In pertinent part, the Act states

> The term "source selection information" means any of the following information prepared for use by a Federal agency for the purpose of evaluating a bid or proposal to enter into a Federal agency procurement contract, if that information has not been previously made available to the public or disclosed publicly.

41 U.S.C. § 423(f)(2). According to Procurement, the information requested is completed during the performance of a contract, not for the purpose of evaluating a bid or proposal to enter into a contract with the DOE. E-Mail dated January 12, 2011, from Edward Marceau to Janet Fishman, OHA, DOE. Therefore, we do not believe that this requested information falls under the definition of "source selection information," as defined in the PIA.

We note that Procurement also cites a provision in the Federal Acquisition Regulations (FAR) to withhold the requested information under Exemption 3. The FAR is not a statute and we cannot find any judicial support that it can be used under Exemption 3 to withhold information. Therefore, we will remand the matter to Procurement for a new determination either releasing the requested information or issuing a new justification that cites a statutory basis for withholding the information.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, we will grant the Appeal and remand the matter to Procurement for a new determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by FOIA Group, Inc., Case No. TFA-0454, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Procurement and Assistance Management of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Terry Martin Apodaca
Date of Filing:	December 13, 2010
Case Number:	TFA-0455

On December 13, 2010, Terry Martin Apodaca filed an appeal from a determination issued to her by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA withheld some information responsive to a request for information that she submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to Ms. Apodaca's request for information, NNSA provided her with a single document it created which contained some of the information she requested. This Appeal, if granted, would require that NNSA release to Ms. Apodaca the information it did not provide in its response to her request.

I. Background

In her July 1, 2010, request to NNSA, Ms. Apodaca sought the following information regarding employees of NNSA's Office of Public Affairs for the years 2007 through 2010: their names, positions, performance award amounts, and yearly salary amounts. Attached to its December 7, 2010, determination letter in response to that request, NNSA provided a document that listed, by year, the name and position of each employee in its Office of Public Affairs. It did not provide the amount of each employee's performance award amount, but rather invoked Exemption 6 of the FOIA to withhold that information. Nor did it print out each employee's annual salary; instead, it provided a link to a website, http://php.app.com/fed_employees/search.php, on which the requester could obtain that information. In her Appeal, Ms. Apodaca challenges NNSA's application of Exemption 6 to withhold performance award amounts. She also challenges NNSA's determination to the extent that it referred her to a public website to obtain annual salary amounts, which she found to be inaccurate with regard to herself and another employee.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). In this regard, it is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

1. Performance Awards

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of person privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). Thus, the purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Wash. Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 602 (1982).

In order to determine whether information may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether a significant privacy interest would be invaded by the disclosure of the information. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to Exemption 6. Ripskis v. HUD, 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, the agency must determine whether release of the informant would further the public interest, by shedding light on the operations and activities of the government. See Hopkins v. HUD, 929 F.2d 81, 86 n.5, 87 (2d Cir. 1991). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether the release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

In its December 7, 2010, determination, NNSA withheld the amounts of performance awards granted to each employee of the Office of Public Affairs during the years 2007 through 2010, claiming that the "NNSA performance-based pay plan [implemented on March 16, 2008] ties the amount of the awards directly to performance appraisals." It thus contended that "release of the award amounts would be tantamount to releasing the performance ratings" for those employees. Finally, it determined that an employee's personal privacy interest in his or her performance rating outweighed any public interest in that information, and concluded that disclosure of that information would therefore "constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

A federal regulation requires that certain federal employee information be made available to the public. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a). That information includes "present and past annual salary rates (including performance awards or bonuses, incentive awards, merit pay amount, Meritorious or Distinguished Executive Ranks, and allowances and differentials)." 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(a)(4). The regulation provides an exception, however, where disclosure of the enumerated information (i) would reveal other information that would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy or (ii) is otherwise protected from disclosure under a FOIA exemption. 5 C.F.R. § 293.311(b). Under a general application of that regulation, NNSA would be required to disclose the performance award information that Ms. Apodaca has requested. However, NNSA contends that it may not disclose that information because the first clause of the regulation's exception provision applies: disclosing an employee's performance award amount would reveal the employee's performance rating, which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of the employee's personal privacy.

As an initial step in our analysis, we find that disclosure of an employee's performance rating would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. First, an employee has a legitimate expectation of privacy in his or her performance rating. See, e.g., Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0204 (July 25, 2007).* In addition, as NNSA stated in its determination letter, disclosure of favorable ratings may lead to jealousy or harassment just as disclosure of poor ratings may cause embarrassment. In either situation, the employee has a strong privacy interest in his or her rating. Finally, while disclosure of personnel ratings may shed some minimal light on the government's operations, this public interest is clearly outweighed by "the deleterious effects that disclosure could have on employee morale and workplace efficiency." See Tomscha v. General Svcs. Admin., 2005 WL 3406575 (2d Cir. 2005) (release of justification for performance-based award constitutes more than de minimis invasion of privacy, which outweighs public interest in disclosure, particularly in the absence of evidence of improper award).

In this case, NNSA has convinced us that there is in fact a mathematical linkage between the performance award amounts and the performance ratings, such that a person armed with the former data could reasonably calculate the latter. An employee whose performance award amount falls between 4 and 7 percent of his or her salary must have, under the current NNSA pay plan, received a rating of Significantly Exceeds Expectations, while one who was granted an award in the amount of 3 percent or less must have received Fully Meets Expectations as his or her rating. Therefore, the performance rating of those employees who received performance awards can be mathematically derived from the amount they received. As for those who received no performance award, they may have received any of three ratings: Fully Meets Expectations, Needs Improvement, or Fails to Meet Expectations. Their failure to receive a performance award reveals that they did not receive a rating of Significantly Exceeds Expectations. Although a specific rating cannot be derived mathematically from the failure to receive a performance award, there is a strong privacy interest in what can be derived: that those employees performed at a merely acceptable or less successful level. Consequently, an employee's performance award amount, or failure to receive a performance award, reveals information about his or her performance rating. Because we have determined that disclosure of performance ratings would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, we conclude that disclosure of the performance award amounts generated under the NNSA pay plan that applied to the years 2007 through 2010 likewise constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, and were properly withheld from disclosure under Exemption 6.

As stated above, the DOE regulations provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 6, however, we do not make the subsequent inquiry into the public interest as required by 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1, because consideration of the public interest is intertwined in the balancing-test portion of the analysis.

2. Annual Salaries

In response to Ms. Apodaca's July 2010 request for annual salaries of all Office of Public Affairs employees "for 2007 to present," NNSA stated in its determination that the information "for the years 2007-2009 is in the public domain and may be viewed at" the website listed above, which belongs to the Asbury Park (N.J.) Press. Ms. Apodaca objects to NNSA's response, because she asserts that the salaries listed at that website are inaccurate.

When responding to a request for information, an agency is generally required under the FOIA to release responsive documents in its possession. If the agency has already placed the responsive information in the public domain, however, it need not produce that information in response to a FOIA request. Crews v. IRS, No. 99-8388, 2000 WL 900800 at *6 (C.D. Cal. April 26, 2000). In this case, NNSA has not placed the requested annual salary information in the public domain. The website indicates that the source of the annual salary data was the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM). We asked NNSA for clarification on this matter. We have been informed that the DOE updates salary information continually and sends current salary information to OPM for each pay period. In light of that information, the information on the public website, obtained from OPM, reflects NNSA's records only until any salary information is updated in NNSA's records. Absent a showing that OPM provides biweekly updates to the public website, I cannot conclude that the salary information on the website mirrors the salary information in NNSA's records, which is the subject of Ms. Apodaca's request. Consequently, we will remand this aspect of the request to NNSA to demonstrate why OPM's release of its data regarding federal employees' salaries constitutes a release of NNSA information into the public domain. In the event that NNSA cannot so demonstrate, it should identify documents responsive to this portion of the request and release those documents. See Terry Martin Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0380 (June 28, 2010).

Moreover, NNSA has failed in one respect to respond to Ms. Apodaca's request. In the document it provided to Ms. Apodaca with its determination letter, it provided the link to the Asbury Park Press website in lieu of providing actual figures for the 2010 salaries for the listed employees. Although that website contains OPM salary information for the years 2007, 2008, and 2009, it does not provide similar information for 2010. Consequently, NNSA has not responded to that portion of Ms. Apodaca's request. We will remand this aspect of the request for a response.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Terry Martin Apodaca, Case Number TFA-0455, under the Freedom of Information Act, is hereby granted as set forth in Paragraph 2 below and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA), which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Reed M. Benet

Date of Filing: January 12, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0456

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Reed M. Benet filed from a determination issued to him by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Science, Chicago Office (hereinafter referred to as (SC-CH)). In that determination, SC-CH responded to Mr. Benet's requests for documents under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. SC-CH determined that the information requested by Mr. Benet was not in the possession of the DOE and was the property of a DOE contractor, UChicago Argonne, LLC (UCA), and, therefore, not agency records subject to disclosure under the FOIA. This appeal, if granted, would require SC-CH to direct UCA to release the responsive information.

I. Background

UCA is the contractor that operates the DOE's Argonne National Laboratory (ANL). On November 22, 2010, Mr. Benet submitted a FOIA request to the SC-CH seeking information relating to 14,000 registered users of the GREET system[1] maintained by Dr. Michael Wang at ANL. Specifically, Mr. Benet requested a list of these registered users and all associated information available on them from the GREET system registration process. See E-mail from Mr. Benet to Miriam R. Legan, FOIA Officer, SC-CH.

[1] GREET system is an abbreviation for "The Greenhouse Gases, Regulated Emissions, and Energy Use in Transportation Model" system. It is a multidimensional spreadsheet model in Microsoft Excel that allows researchers and analysts to fully evaluate energy and emission impacts of advanced vehicle technologies and new transportation fuels on a full fuel-cycle/vehicle-cycle basis. It was developed by ANL under the sponsorship of the DOE's Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EERE). It is a public domain model and is available free of charge for anyone to use. See http://greet.es.anl.gov.

In response to Mr. Benet's request, SC-CH issued a determination letter stating that it conducted a search of its office and the Argonne Site Office and located no responsive records. SC-CH stated that it also requested that UCA conduct a search for responsive records. UCA responded stating that pursuant to Clause 1.98(b)(5) of its prime contract with DOE, DE-AC02-06CH11357, records related to the technology transfer clause, including executed license agreements, are contractor-owned, not agency-owned records. SC-CH stated that it agreed with UCA's assertion that the responsive records are electronic license agreement records, and therefore, are contractor-owned records not subject to the FOIA. Accordingly, SC-CH stated that the DOE had no records responsive to Mr. Benet's request. See December 6, 2010, SC-CH Response to Mr. Benet.

On January 12, 2011, Mr. Benet submitted the present Appeal in which he contends that the records that SC-CH withheld are subject to disclosure under the FOIA. Mr. Benet's principal arguments are that:

> (1) Dr. Wang's statements on the ANL website that GREET was funded by the DOE EERE, and his statement in a November 21, 2010 e-mail to Mr. Benet that GREET development has been supported by DOE since 1995 are sufficient to indicate that the GREET system may be "work for hire" that should be found to be the property of the DOE.
> (2) The contract Clause I.98(b)(5)(i) cited by UCA is overbroad and detrimental to the prime purposes of the FOIA, which is to allow public oversight of the DOE's oversight of UCA's operation of ANL.[2]
> (3) The license agreement that registered users of the GREET system must agree to accept is not a true license agreement but merely a registration process. This is because there is no consideration given by registered users of the GREET system. There is no valid contract and therefore no license.
> (4) UCA's use of terms, titles, language, capitalization, and structure in its copyright statement, provisions related to an Open Source Software License, and its Privacy Notice are extremely haphazard and flawed, and do not properly invoke Clause I.98(b)(5)(i) of UCA's contract with the DOE.
> (5) DOE and UCA are estopped from claiming that information supplied by registered users of the GREET system cannot be disclosed under the FOIA because the GREET system contains a Privacy Notice indicating that personal information supplied by registrants will not be shared with anyone "except when required by law enforcement investigation." A "law enforcement investigation" includes a FOIA request for information.

[2] Mr. Benet refers to ANL rather than UCA in his appeal filing. Because the SC-CH finds that the GREET system is owned by UCA, ANL's operating contractor, we will refer to UCA rather than ANL in summarizing and discussing Mr. Benet's contentions.

(6) In a December 10, 2010, telephone conversation, Ms. Legan allegedly told Mr. Benet that the provisions of the Privacy Act applied to the information that he was requesting from the GREET system, and was a basis for SC-CH's denial of his request. Mr. Benet asserts that the application of the Privacy Act to the requested information contradicts the SC-CH's position that the requested information is not an agency record, and both rationales should therefore be rejected.

(7) Even if the OHA Director finds that the GREET system is the property of UCA, he should use his discretion to order UCA to release the information because such release would serve the public interest and would advance the mission of ANL.

Appeal at 2-12.

II. Analysis

A. Whether the Documents at Issue are Agency Records Subject to the FOIA

Our threshold inquiry in this case is whether the documents in question are agency records and thus subject to the FOIA under the criteria set out by the federal courts. The statutory language of the FOIA does not define the essential attributes of "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). In interpreting this phrase, we have applied a two-step analysis fashioned by the courts for determining whether documents are "agency records" subject to the FOIA. That analysis involves a determination: (1) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA and, if not, (2) whether the requested material is nonetheless an "agency record." See, e.g., Faye Vlieger, Case No. TFA-0250 (2008); Eugenie Reich, Case No. TFA-0213 (2007).[3]

The FOIA defines the term "agency" to include any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . ., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f). In United States v. Orleans, 425 U.S. 807 (1976) (Orleans), a case that involved a statute other than the FOIA, the Supreme Court defined the conditions under which an entity must be considered a federal agency as follows: "[t]he question here is not whether the [entity] receives federal money and must comply with federal standards and regulations, but whether its day-to-day operations are supervised by the Federal Government." Orleans, 425 U.S. at 815. See Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Matthews, 428 F. Supp. 523, 528 (S.D.N.Y. 1977). Subsequently, the Supreme Court ruled that the Orleans standard provided the appropriate basis for ascertaining whether an organization is an "agency" in the context of a FOIA request for "agency records." Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980).

We have routinely applied this analysis in our prior cases addressing whether an entity is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA. See, e.g., Vlieger. In addition, we have previously found that a contractor responsible for the management and operation of a DOE-owned laboratory "is clearly not an 'agency' as that term is defined in the FOIA." Moore Brower Hennessy & Freeman, P.C., Case No. VFA-0393 (1998) (citing William Kuntz III, Case No. VFA-0105, 25 DOE ¶ 80,157 (1995)). In his Appeal, Mr. Benet provided us no basis for departing from our established precedent in these cases. Applying the above standard, and consistent with our prior cases, we find that, although ANL is owned by the government, it is operated by UCA, a private contractor, and its day-to-day operations are not supervised by the DOE. Therefore, neither ANL nor UCA is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA.

Although ANL is not an agency for the purposes of the FOIA, the requested information could nonetheless be considered an "agency record" if it (1) was created or obtained by an agency, and (2) is under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). UCA, not DOE, created the GREET system and its user registration software, and, as discussed below, the information that UCA has collected from registered users has not been obtained by the DOE. With respect to agency control of requested records, courts have identified four relevant factors for an agency to consider when determining whether the agency has control over a document: (1) the intent of the record's creator to retain or relinquish control over the record; (2) the ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit; (3) the extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and (4) the extent to which the record is integrated into the agency's recordkeeping system or files. Consumer Federation of America v. USDA, 455 F.3d 283, 288 n.7 (D.C. Cir. 2006). We contacted SC-CH for further information regarding its determination. SC-CH confirmed that during its search for responsive records, UCA stated that it had no intention to relinquish its ownership and ongoing control of the GREET system registered user information. The SC-CH further stated that the DOE does not have the ability to use and dispose of the registered user information, because the DOE's access to the GREET system is the same as other registered users, and does not include access to this information. SC-CH also stated that it conducted a diligent inquiry, and could find no instance where DOE personnel read or relied upon the GREET system registered user information, and the information has not been integrated into the DOE's recordkeeping system or files in either hard copy or electronic format. Memorandum of February 4, 2011 telephone conversation between Ms. Legan and Kent S. Woods, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. We therefore find that the requested information contained in the GREET system is not an agency record subject to the FOIA.

B. Whether the GREET System Information at Issue is Subject to Release Under the DOE FOIA Regulations

A finding that certain information is not an "agency record" does not end our inquiry. The DOE's FOIA regulations state:

> When a contract with the DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). Clause 1.98(b)(5) of the contract between DOE and UCA identifies as property of UCA certain records pertaining to the technology transfer provisions of the contract, including > executed license agreements, including exhibits or appendices containing information on royalties, royalty rates, other financial information, or commercialization plans, and all related documents, notes and correspondence.

See Clause 1.98(b)(5) in DOE's Prime Contract with UCA, http://www-db.library.anl.gov/db1/prime/download/DDD/prime_009_098_000_000_000.pdf

Applying the provisions of the contract between the DOE and UCA to the case at hand, it is clear that the information on registered users of the GREET system requested by Mr. Benet is the property of UCA, not the DOE. The information on registered users is electronic license agreement information. As such, it is not subject to release under the DOE FOIA regulations.

With respect to Mr. Benet's contentions in his Appeal, we reject his assertion that Dr. Wang's statements concerning DOE funding and support for UCA's development of the GREET system require that the GREET system be treated as the property of the DOE under the FOIA. As discussed above, the DOE/UCA contract permits UCA to assert ownership and control of certain technology which it develops and maintains to support its functions as a DOE contractor. License agreements such as those executed by the registered users of UCA's GREET system are specifically identified as UCA property in the DOE/UCA contract. The courts have recognized such contract provisions in determining what constitutes an agency record under the FOIA. See Tax Analysts v. Dep't of Justice, 913 F. Supp. 599, 607 (D.D.C. 1996) (finding that electronic legal research database contracted by agency is not an agency record because licensing provisions specifically precluded agency control), aff'd, 107 F.3^{d} 923 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (unpublished table decision).

Nor do we find any merit in Mr. Benet's assertion that Clause 1.98(b)(5) of the DOE/UCA contract is overbroad and detrimental to the FOIA's interest in public oversight of the operation of ANL. The GREET system was developed and copyrighted by UCA, and it is appropriate for license agreements involving UCA's copyrighted software to be the property of UCA. We also reject Mr. Benet's unsupported assertion that because UCA does not charge fees to users of the GREET system, those users are not licensees of the GREET system. The GREET system license agreement places specific restrictions on the use of the GREET system software that the licensed users of the GREET system agree to follow. We also find that the record in this matter clearly indicates that SC-CH invoked UCA's ownership and control of the information requested by Mr. Benet as the sole basis for denying his request. In any event, if Ms. Legan at any time asserted that the Privacy Act was applicable to the information requested by Mr. Benet, it would not prevent the DOE from making a finding that the requested information was not an agency record.

We also reject Mr. Benet's assertion that UCA's use of "terms, titles, language, capitalization, and structure" in its online Software License and its Privacy Notice are extremely haphazard and flawed, and do not properly invoke Clause I.98(b)(5)(i) of UCA's contract with the DOE. We have reviewed the Software License, and find that its language is unambiguous, and that it properly acknowledges the DOE's sponsorship and license rights as required by Clause 1.112(e)(3)(v) of the DOE/UCA contract. The meaning of the Privacy Notice also is clear. Although it states that personal information supplied by registrants will not be shared with anyone "except when required by law enforcement investigation", we find no basis for Mr. Benet's assertion that this exception should be interpreted to make personal information supplied by GREET system registrants subject to release under the FOIA.

In sum, for the reasons set forth above, we find that the requested information on registered users of the GREET system is neither an agency record subject to the FOIA, nor is it subject to mandated or discretionary release under the DOE FOIA regulations. Therefore, we will deny the present Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on January 12, 2011, by Reed M. Benet, OHA Case No. TFA-0456, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Mathieu Brener
Date of Filing:	February 7, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0459

On February 7, 2011, Mathieu Brener (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on January 6, 2011, by the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center (NNSA) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, NNSA responded to a remand from this Office. Underlying the remand was the Appellant's request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, NNSA released one document in electronic format that had previously been released in paper form and withheld the electronic format of the other eight documents that had previously been released to him in paper form. NNSA again withheld 27 computer files. The Appellant challenges NNSA's withholding of 27 computer files and NNSA's failure to release the electronic version of the eight documents previously released in paper form. This Appeal, if granted, would require NNSA to release the withheld files to the Appellant.

I. Background

On June 25, 2009, the Appellant requested "all documents, files and notebooks, including digital and paper, that were in the Los Alamos National Laboratory office of Mathieu Brener, . . . at 5 p.m. on January 14, 2008. This includes files on the computer in the office, the documents that were in the white binders, and the lab notebook." E-Mail Request dated June 25, 2009, from Appellant to FOIA Services. On April 10, 2010, NNSA sent a partial response to the Appellant. E-Mail dated September 21, 2010, from Karen Laney, NNSA, to Janet Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). An April 20, 2010, submission narrowed the scope of the original request. Id. On August 10, 2010, NNSA issued its final determination to the Appellant, releasing nine documents in their entirety. Determination Letter dated August 10, 2010, from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, NNSA, to Appellant (Determination Letter). On September 10, 2010, the Appellant appealed, contending that the 27 withheld computer files were not withholdable under Exemption 2. Appeal Letter dated September 10, 2010, from Appellant to Director, OHA. In response to that Appeal, OHA remanded the matter to NNSA. The remand decision stated that, given NNSA's concern that it did not know what was contained in the 27 computer files, NNSA could not determine whether the files were agency records or not. Mathieu Brener, Case No. TFA-0418 (2010).[1/] OHA reasoned that once NNSA determined whether the computer files were agency records, it could then either release the files or apply an exemption to justify their withholding. Id. OHA also found that, in the absence of special circumstances, the documents released in paper form must also be released to the Appellant in the format that he was requesting, i.e., electronic format. Id.

On January 6, 2011, NNSA issued a new determination to the Appellant. Determination Letter dated January 6, 2011, from Carolyn Becknell, FOIA Officer, and Tracy Loughead, Manager, Office of Public Affairs, to Appellant. In that determination, NNSA stated that of the nine documents released to the Appellant in paper form, NNSA was able to release one document to the Appellant in electronic form. Id. Next, NNSA determined that two of the remaining 27 documents were not agency records. Id. Finally, NNSA withheld the remaining 25 documents under Exemption 2. Id.

On February 7, 2011, the Appellant filed this Appeal. The Appellant argues that NNSA did not explain why it found two documents not to be agency records. Appeal Letter received February 7, 2011, from Appellant, to Director, OHA, at 2 . Next, in regard to the documents released in paper form only, the Appellant argues that "since most of these files are meant to be run on a computer, providing them only in hard format does diminish their value." Id. at 3. Finally, the Appellant argues that Exemption 2 does not apply to the withheld documents because they are neither "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency" nor "predominantly internal." Id. at 1.[2/]

II. Analysis

A. Agency Records

The Appellant's first argument is that NNSA did not explain its determination that two documents were not agency records. In his Appeal, he maintains that the files were work-related. We agree that NNSA must provide an explanation of why it is claiming the documents are not agency records. As we stated in our previous decision, an "agency

[2/] There are also a number of extraneous arguments in the Appeal that we need not address.

record" is a record that is either created or obtained by an agency, and under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). NNSA must explain on remand whether these documents reside in an agency computer or a contractor computer. If they reside in a contractor computer, NNSA must determine whether the files are contractor, agency, or personal records. If they are in an agency computer, then they are either agency records or personal records. An analysis under the Kissinger standard would be appropriate to make that determination. Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. For Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136 (1980). We will remand the matter to NNSA to address the Appellant's arguments that the documents were work-related.

B. Electronic Format Documents

Next, the Appellant objects to NNSA's failure to release the electronic version of eight documents released in paper form. Since the implementation of the Electronic Freedom of Information Act Amendments of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-231, 110 Stat. 3048, agencies have been required to provide the record to a requester in "any form or format requested . . . if the record is readily reproducible by the agency in that form or format." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(B). Therefore, on remand, NNSA should release the computer files in electronic form, unless there is uncertainty regarding their content. If NNSA believes that release of the files in electronic form would allow the Appellant to access exempt information, NNSA must properly justify the withholding of the electronic format documents, as it would justify the withholding of any document.

C. Exemption 2

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). In this regard, it is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemption 2 is at issue in this case.

Exemption 2 exempts from mandatory public disclosure records that are "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). Over the years, the courts interpreted the exemption to encompass two distinct categories of information: (a) internal matters of a relatively trivial nature ("low two" information), and (b) more substantial internal matters, the disclosure of which would risk circumvention of a legal requirement ("high two" information). See, e.g., Schiller v. NLRB, 964 F.2d 1205, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1992). See also Crooker v. ATF, 670 F.2d 1051 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (en banc). NNSA asserted that the information at issue in the present case falls within the second category, "high two" information. The information NNSA withheld included 25 computer files consisting of manuals, data files, and measurements. NNSA argued that release of these files could allow terrorists or other malefactors to identify possible program impacts and vulnerabilities and allow them the opportunity to target facilities involved in the nuclear nonproliferation program. Determination Letter at 2.

On March 7, 2011, the Supreme Court held that agencies can no longer rely on Exemption 2 to withhold information under the "high two" category. Milner v. Dep't of the Navy, 562 U.S. ___ (2011), slip op. at 6-10. The Court reasoned that the plain meaning of Exemption 2 limits its application to "personnel" matters.[3/] Milner, slip op. at 6. Therefore, NNSA can no longer rely on "high two" to withhold the requested information. Accordingly, we will remand the matter to NNSA for a new determination.

III. Conclusion

NNSA must support its claim that two of the documents are not agency records. Second, NNSA must justify withholding the electronic format of the eight documents that it released only in paper format. Finally, NNSA can no longer rely on "high 2" to withhold the requested information. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to NNSA for a new determination as outlined in the Decision above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Mathieu Brener, Case No. TFA-0459, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

[3/] The Court also noted that "the Government has other tools at hand to shield national security information and other sensitive materials." Milner, slip. op. at 18.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Margaret A. Christopherson

Date of Filing: February 23, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0462

On February 23, 2011, Margaret A. Christopherson filed an appeal from a determination issued to her on January 13, 2011, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Richland Operations Office (RO), in Richland, Washington, in response to a request for documents that Ms. Christopherson filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. RO identified several documents responsive to Ms. Christopherson's request and released those documents to her with some information withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. In her appeal, Ms. Christopherson challenges the adequacy of RO's search. This appeal, if granted, would require RO to perform an additional search for responsive records, and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In November 2010, Ms. Christopherson filed a FOIA request with RO for records pertaining to her late father. Letter from Dorothy Riehle, RO, to Margaret A. Christopherson, January 13, 2011 (Determination Letter) at 1. In its January 2011 response, RO informed Ms. Christopherson that its search for documents yielded several documents. Id. RO released to Ms. Christopherson copies of her late father's employment, radiation exposure, and medical records. Id. Ms. Christopherson filed the instant appeal challenging the adequacy of RO's search for documents.[1] See Letter from Margaret A. Christopherson to OHA, dated February 15, 2011 (Appeal) at 1. In her Appeal, Ms. Christopherson contends that RO should have located more extensive medical records pertaining to her late father. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we

[1] RO withheld under Exemption 6 certain portions of Ms. Christopherson's late father's radiation exposure record that identified other individuals. Ms. Christopherson did not challenge RO's withholding of information under Exemption 6. Therefore, the Exemption 6 withholdings are not relevant to the instant proceeding.

apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[2]

In reviewing this appeal, we contacted RO to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. RO informed us that the search for responsive records "was conducted by those within the agency who are most familiar with the subject matter of [the] request, in locations where documents would most likely be found." Email from Dorothy Riehle, RO, to William Schwartz, OHA (February 25, 2011). Specifically, RO conducted "a manual and electronic search (using name and [social security number]) of the files and databases for the Hanford Site archive, Pacific Northwest National Laboratory, and AdvanceMed Hanford." Id. RO did not locate any records pertaining to Ms. Christopherson's late father other than those it has already released to her and knows of "no other locations to search." Id. Based on this information, we find that RO performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to Ms. Christopherson's FOIA request, despite the fact that the search did not yield the records that she seeks. Therefore, the search was adequate. Accordingly, the instant Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on February 23, 2011, by Margaret A. Christopherson, OHA Case No. TFA-0462, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: Tri-Valley CAREs

Filing Date: February 25, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0463

This Decision concerns the Appeal that Tri-Valley CAREs filed from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued to it on January 14, 2011. In that determination, the NNSA responded to Tri-Valley CAREs' request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The NNSA withheld information under FOIA Exemptions 1, 2, and 6. Tri-Valley CAREs challenges the withholdings under Exemptions 1 and 2. In this Decision, we address the withholding under Exemption 2.

I. Background

In May 2008, Tri-Valley CAREs submitted a revised FOIA request with the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) for a document titled "B368 Select Agent Risk and Threat Assessment," dated July 14, 2005. Determination Letter, Jan. 14, 2011. A search was conducted by the Livermore Site Office (which oversees the LLNL), and the document was found. It was disclosed to Tri-Valley CAREs after information was redacted under Exemptions 1, 2, and 6. Id. Tri-Valley CAREs does not appeal the withholding under Exemption 6. It appeals the withholding under Exemption 1, but we address that issue in case TFC-0008. (OHA addresses that issue separately because Exemption 1 concerns classified information, which requires consultation with the DOE's Office of Classification.) Tri-Valley CAREs also appeals the withholding under Exemption 2, which we address here.

The NNSA withheld information under the "High 2" category of Exemption 2. Id. (It did not withhold information under the "Low 2" category.) The disclosed document details the security plan – and its weaknesses – of a sensitive building. The NNSA explained that it withheld the information because releasing it "could assist potential adversaries in targeting and gaining unauthorized access to select agents or toxins. . . ." Id. at 2.

II. Analysis

A. The FOIA Exemptions

The FOIA requires federal agencies to disclose information upon request unless it falls within enumerated exemptions. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a), 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. §§ 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). We must construe the FOIA exemptions narrowly, to maintain the FOIA's goal of broad disclosure. Dep't of the Interior v. Klamath Water Users Prot. Ass'n, 532 U.S. 1, 8 (2001) (citation omitted). The agency has the burden to show that information is exempt from disclosure. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

1. Exemption 2

Under Exemption 2, an agency may withhold information "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(2). In 1981, the D.C. Circuit found that Exemption 2 covers not only information related to "personnel rules and practices," such as pay and duty hours (Low 2), but information of "predominant internality," where "disclosure significantly risks circumvention of agency regulations or statutes" (High 2). Crooker v. ATF, 670 F.2d 1051, 1073-74 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

On March 7, 2011, the Supreme Court held that agencies can no longer rely on Exemption 2 to withhold information under the "high 2" category. Milner v. Dep't of the Navy, 562 U.S. ___ (2011), slip op. at 6-10. The Court reasoned that the plain meaning of Exemption 2 limits its application to "personnel" matters. Milner, slip op. at 6.[1] Therefore, NNSA can no longer rely on "high 2" to withhold the requested information.

Here, the NNSA followed the long-standing Crooker decision to withhold security-related information about a sensitive site by invoking High 2. Then Milner was decided, which rejected the reasoning of Crooker and made clear that the agencies may no longer withhold this information by invoking High 2; indeed, High 2 no longer exists. Therefore, we will remand this matter to the NNSA. It must issue a new determination in which it either releases the requested information or justifies its withholding on a basis other than High 2.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

[1] The Court also noted that "the Government has other tools at hand to shield national security information and other sensitive materials." Milner, slip. op. at 18.

(1) The Appeal that Tri-Valley CAREs filed on February 25, 2011, OHA Case Number TFA-0463, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Nuclear Security Administration Service Center, which shall issue a new determination according to the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY
OFFICE OF HEARINGS AND APPEALS

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Bryan Cave LLP

Date of Filing: February 25, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0464

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by Bryan Cave LLP (Cave) in response to a determination that was issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL). In that determination, the NETL replied to a request for documents that Cave submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The NETL released certain documents to Cave with portions of those documents withheld. This Appeal, if granted, would require that the NETL release the withheld information. In the alternative, Cave requests that this matter be remanded to NETL for the issuance of a new determination letter with a more detailed explanation for the withholdings. [*]

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. However, Congress has provided nine exemptions to the FOIA that set forth the types of information that agencies are not required to release. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9).

I. BACKGROUND

In its FOIA request, Cave sought access to documents not covered by an earlier request pertaining to "the award to Remy International, Inc. in response to the Funding Opportunity Notice: Electric Drive Vehicle Battery and Component Manufacturing Initiative." February 4, 2011, FOIA Request at 1. In its response, the NETL identified several documents as being responsive to this request, including the award document and several progress reports. NETL provided these documents to Cave with portions withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (b)(4). In its Appeal, Cave challenges the adequacy of the NETL's determination. Specifically, Cave argues that the NETL has failed to provide its justifications for withholding material in sufficient detail to allow for a meaningful appeal.

II. Analysis

An agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters (i) adequately describe the results of searches, (ii) clearly indicate which information was withheld, and (iii) specify the exemption or exemptions under which the information was withheld. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009); see also F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Services, Case No. VFA-0235 (1996). A determination must also adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Id. Without an adequately informative determination letter, a requester may not be able to formulate a meaningful appeal. Id.

In this case, the NETL justified its application of Exemption 4 to the withheld material by stating that "certain information has been . . . withheld from release pursuant to [the Exemption], which protects 'trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential,' the disclosure of which would be likely to cause substantial competitive harm to the company involved. A discretionary release of this type of information cannot be made by the Agency. Specifically, the redacted information in the application pertains to the company's technical approach to the project described in the progress reports." We find this justification to be deficient in several respects.

First, the NETL did not specify whether it found the withheld material to consist of "trade secrets" or "commercial or financial information." If an agency determines that the material consists of "trade secrets" for purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Administration, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If, however, the withheld information is not a "trade secret," a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criterion. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456, 459 (D.D.C. 1997), aff'd in part, rev'd in part and remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (Lepelletier). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). The federal courts have held that the term "person" includes a wide range of entities, including corporations, banks, state governments, agencies of foreign governments, and Native American tribes or nations. See, e.g., Stone v. Export-Import Bank, 552 F.2d 132, 137 (5th Cir. 1977); Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.2d 93, 95 (2nd Cir. 1996) (Nadler). See also Myers, Bigel, Sibley & Sajovec, Case No. VFA-0517 (1999). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. Information submitted during the process of competing for government grants is considered to have been involuntarily submitted, since the grants generally would not be awarded in the absence of that information.

Second, NETL's determination is conclusory in that it did not describe the competitive harm that would result from release of the information, or how that harm would come about. If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing that such harm will result. Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No, VFA-0515 (1999). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. See Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (citing Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food and Drug Administration, 704 F.2d 1280, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1983)); National Parks & Conservation Association v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673, 680 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

We will therefore remand this matter to the NETL for the issuance of a new determination letter. In this determination, the NETL should either release the withheld material, withhold material under Exemption 4 using the analysis set forth above, or withhold material under a different exemption. If the NETL determines that release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitter, it should describe that harm in as much detail as possible and set forth its reasons for believing that such harm would likely result.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Bryan Cave LLP on February 25, 2011 (Case No. TFA-0464) is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2).

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the National Energy Technology Laboratory for the issuance of a new determination letter in accordance with the guidelines set forth in this decision.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Environmental Defense Institute

Date of Filing: March 14, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0465

On March 14, 2011, the Environmental Defense Institute (EDI) filed an appeal from a determination issued to it on February 8, 2011, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Idaho Operations Office (IOO). In that determination, IOO responded to a request for documents that EDI submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to EDI's FOIA request, IOO identified and released several documents as responsive to the request, but withheld portions of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemption 3. This appeal, if granted, would require IOO to release additional information to EDI, or to issue a new determination letter providing justification for withholding the information.

I. BACKGROUND

On June 23, 2010, EDI filed a FOIA request with IOO seeking numerous documents pertaining to the DOE's Advanced Test Reactor (ATR) facility, located at the DOE's Idaho National Laboratory. Letter from Chuck Broscious, EDI, to Clayton Ogilvie, IOO (June 23, 2010) (Request Letter). Specifically, EDI requested:

(1) ATR Safety Analysis Reports;

(2) Un-reviewed Safety Questions and Deficiency Reports between 2007 and the present;

(3) Occurrence Reports dated 2007 to the present;

(4) ATR-related Independent Engineering Consultant analysis reports between 2006 and the present;

(5) ATR-related Engineering Design File reports between 2007 and the present; and,

(6) All internal reports "cited/referred to in DOE-Idaho-Bi-Weekly Operations Summary/INL Website Updates."

Request Letter at 2-4. Under each category, EDI specified several individual documents and indicated that its request should be interpreted "to include but not [be] limited to" those specific documents within each category. Id. Because EDI had made prior FOIA requests to IOO for ATR-related documents, the Request Letter also states, "if [IOO] believe[s] that any of the documents requested … have already been released to [EDI], please identify the document in question and we will double-check our files to ensure that we have a copy." Id. at 1.

On February 8, 2011, IOO issued a determination to EDI in which it identified and released some documents responsive to EDI's request. Letter from Clayton Ogilvie, IOO, to Chuck Broscious, EDI (February 8, 2011) (Determination Letter). Specifically, with respect to category (1) above, IOO did not release the updated reports in their entirety. Instead, it released the portions of the documents that had been added or revised since EDI's previous FOIA request. One of the documents contained information withheld under FOIA Exemption 3. Id. at 2. IOO also indicated that it had previously provided to EDI the responsive documents in category (2). Id. With respect to category (3), IOO released one document, "Unplanned Shutdown of the ATR due to Higher than Normal Stock Effluent Radiation," and noted that all other responsive documents had already been provided to EDI. Id. at 2-6. IOO also indicated that it had previously provided all responsive documents falling within category (4). Id. at 6-7. Under category (5), IOO identified and released two documents, "EDF07634 Investigation of ATR Vessel Venting at Temperatures Greater than 200 degrees F" and "TEV-291 Basis for the Removal of Two Electrical Heaters and the Relocation of Two Smoke Detectors Blocking Adjacent Sprinkler Heads in TRA-621." Id. at 7. Finally, with respect to category (6), IOO stated, "DOE-HQ-ORPS office processes these documents on their own schedule and publishes them to the ORPS website when they have completed their work." Id.

EDI appealed the Determination Letter on several grounds. Letter from Chuck Broscious, EDI, to OHA (received March 14, 2011) (Appeal). First, EDI maintains that IOO inappropriately narrowed the scope of its request. Specifically, EDI states, "IOO arbitrarily and incorrectly interpreted our FOIA request as only the updated portions of requested documents, rather than our stated request for the complete updated reports and their respective Table[s] of Contents." Appeal at 2. EDI further challenges IOO's response to its request in category (6) above. EDI notes that the DOE-ORPS website is "demonstrably incomplete and is non-responsive when IOO has the original Occurrence Reports." Id. Finally, EDI specifically challenges IOO's withholding of certain information under Exemption 3. Id.

Because our consideration of IOO's withholdings under Exemption 3 in this case requires consultation with the DOE's Office of Classification, we determined that bifurcation of the present Appeal would allow for a more timely consideration of EDI's remaining arguments. Those arguments will therefore be considered in the present decision (OHA Case No. TFA-0465). We will consider IOO's withholdings under Exemption 3 in a separate decision, issued under OHA Case No. TFC-0009.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). An agency seeking to withhold information pursuant to a FOIA exemption has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. See Tri-Valley CAREs, OHA Case No. TFA-0402 (2010) (citing Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987)).[1] The DOE FOIA regulations provide, in pertinent part, that a determination letter denying a FOIA request must state "the reason for denial, containing a reference to the specific exemption under the [FOIA] authorizing the withholding of the record and a brief explanation of how the exemption applies to the record withheld, and a statement of why a discretionary release is not appropriate." 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1). In so doing, the determination letter allows the requester to decide whether the agency's response to its request was adequate and proper and provides this office with a record upon which to base its consideration of an administrative appeal.

In the instant case, as its initial argument EDI alleges that IOO improperly narrowed the scope of its request. EDI's request spanned numerous documents, including the current or updated versions of several documents which it received in response to previous FOIA requests. With respect to those documents that had changed since being released to EDI, IOO released only the portions representing changes or additions to the documents. EDI maintains that this was an incorrect interpretation of its request. We agree. To the extent that EDI's request comprised the exact same documents previously released to it, IOO was correct in responding that those documents were "already provided." However, where a document responsive to EDI's request is different from those previously released, including any document that has revisions or additions, the entire document must be processed in response to the FOIA request. Accordingly, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to IOO with instructions that it either release the documents in their entirety to EDI or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of the documents or any portion thereof.

With respect to the reports requested in category (6) above, IOO neither released the documents to EDI, nor cited any exemption justifying the withholding of those documents. Therefore, we remand this portion of the Appeal for a new determination. See Reginald A. Harris, OHA Case No. TFA-0368 (2010). In its determination, as required by the FOIA and DOE regulations, IOO must either release the requested reports to EDI or specify the applicable exemption under which it is withholding those documents. Although the FOIA generally requires that an agency release responsive documents in its possession, the agency need not release information that it has already placed in the public domain. See Terry Martin Apodaca, OHA Case No., TFA-0455 (2011) (citing Crews v. IRS, No. 99-8388, 2000 WL 900800 at *6 (C.D. Cal. April 26, 2000)). Therefore, IOO should identify in its determination which, if any, of the documents are already in the public domain.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Environmental Defense Institute, Case Number TFA-0465, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Idaho Operations Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: USA Today

Date of Filing: March 22, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0466

This Decision concerns an Appeal that was filed by USA Today in response to a determination issued to it by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (hereinafter referred to as "OIR"). In that determination, OIR denied USA Today's request for expedited processing of the request for information that the newspaper filed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require that OIR process USA Today's FOIA request on an expedited basis.

In its request, USA Today sought "a complete export of [DOE] data submitted to the Real Property Asset Management Database, as required by Executive Order 13327 of February 4, 2004." Request at 1. The newspaper further requested that its filing be processed in an expedited manner. In its determination, OIR found that USA Today's request did not satisfy the FOIA's criteria for expedited processing. USA Today then filed the Appeal at issue here.

Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. Granting one requester expedited processing gives that person a preference over previous requesters, by moving his or her request "up the line" and delaying the processing of other, earlier, requests. Therefore, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be provided only when the requester demonstrates "compelling need," or when otherwise determined by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i). "Compelling need," as defined in the FOIA, arises in either of two situations. The first is when failure to obtain requested records on an expedited basis could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v)(I). The second situation occurs when the requester, who is primarily engaged in disseminating information, has an urgency to inform the public about an activity of the Federal Government. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v)(II). In this case, USA Today does not claim that failure to expedite the processing of its request will pose an imminent threat to the life or physical safety of an individual. Rather, it argues that, as a disseminator of information about an activity of the federal government, it has an urgency to inform the public about that activity.

In order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform" and, hence, a "compelling need," we must consider at least three factors: (i) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (ii) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (iii) whether the request concerns federal government activity. Al-Fayed v. CIA, 254 F.3d 300, 310 (D.C. Cir. 2001). The federal courts have found sufficient urgency to grant expedited processing in situations of an "ongoing public controversy associated with a specific time frame." Long v. Department of Homeland Security, 436 F. Supp. 2d 38, 43 (D.D.C. 2006); see also Southeastern Legal Foundation, Case No. TFA-0389 (2010). Requesters have demonstrated urgency in several ways. See, e.g., American Civil Liberties Union v. Department of Defense, No. C-06-01698 WHA (slip op.) 2006 WL 1469418 (N.D. Cal. May 25, 2006) (granting expedited processing for information related to a "breaking news story," i.e., a story that would lose value if it were delayed).

Applying these criteria to the case at hand, we conclude that USA Today has not demonstrated an "urgency to inform" within the meaning of the FOIA. In its Appeal, the newspaper points out that in a June 10, 2010, memorandum to federal agencies, President Obama required the agencies to identify government-owned real estate that could be disposed of in order to save money. Appeal at 1. USA Today also states that in a briefing at the White House on Wednesday, March 2, 2011, the Deputy Director of the Office of Management and Budget outlined the administration's plan to establish an independent commission to consider the disposal of unneeded federal property. Id. at 2. Although measures to reduce federal spending could certainly be considered a matter of public interest, that interest does not appear to be associated with a specific time frame. In addition, an initiative that was set forth in a June 10, 2010, memorandum and released to the media on that date can hardly be called a "breaking news story." Therefore, the request does not appear to concern a matter of current exigency as that term has been interpreted by the federal courts. Moreover, the newspaper has failed to show that a significant recognized interest would be compromised in the absence of expedited processing. USA Today's Appeal will therefore be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by USA Today on March 22, 2011, OHA Case Number TFA-0466, is hereby denied.

in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Barry W. Minnfee
Date of Filing:	March 22, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0467

On March 22, 2011, Barry W. Minnfee (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on February 18, 2011, by the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Privacy Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. In its determination, Oak Ridge did not locate any documents responsive to the Appellant's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct another search for responsive information.

I. Background

On January 18, 2011, the Appellant requested DNA in an aggravated robbery case, number 49-678-D, Minnfee v. State of Texas. Request Letter dated January 18, 2011, from Appellant to FOIA Officer, Office of Science and Technical Information, Oak Ridge. On February 18, 2011, Oak Ridge responded to the request, stating that it had no responsive documents. Determination Letter dated February 18, 2011, from Elizabeth Dillon, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge, to Appellant. On March 22, 2011, the Appellant appealed, challenging the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search. Appeal Letter received March 22, 2011, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord

Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

We contacted Oak Ridge to determine what type of search was conducted. In response, Oak Ridge indicated that a computerized search was conducted, using the Appellant's name. E-mail dated March 28, 2011, from Elizabeth Dillon, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge, to Janet Fishman, OHA. Oak Ridge searched the files of the Personnel Security Office. Id. Oak Ridge further advised us that the Appellant has never been employed by Oak Ridge or one of its "contractor organizations, i.e. UT-Battelle, LLC, Oak Ridge National Laboratory nor the Oak Ridge Associated Universities." Id. Further, Oak Ridge confirmed that it has never possessed or retained any DNA records or any records on any criminal cases. E-mail dated March 29, 2011, from Elizabeth Dillon to Janet Fishman.

Based on the foregoing, we believe that Oak Ridge's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Barry W. Minnfee, Case No. TFA-0467, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Snake River Alliance
Date of Filing:	March 23, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0468

On March 23, 2011, the Snake River Alliance (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on February 9, 2011, by the Idaho Operations Office (DOE-ID) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, DOE-ID responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, DOE-ID discretionarily released seven documents responsive to the Appellant's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require DOE-ID to conduct another search for responsive information.

I. Background

On January 10, 2011, the Appellant requested "[a]ll records related to the January 6, 2011, Memorandum of Agreement [Memorandum of Agreement] Concerning Receipt, Storage, and Handling of Research Quantities of Commercial Spent Nuclear Fuel at the Idaho National Laboratory between the [DOE] and the State of Idaho." Request E-mail dated January 10, 2011, from Appellant to Clay Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, DOE-ID. On February 9, 2011, DOE-ID responded to the request discretionarily releasing seven responsive documents relating to the Memorandum of Agreement negotiated by Battelle Energy Alliance, LLC, (BEA), but signed by DOE and the State of Idaho. Determination Letter dated February 9, 2011, from Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, DOE-ID, to Appellant (Determination Letter). On March 23, 2011, the Appellant appealed, challenging the adequacy of DOE-ID's search. Appeal Letter received March 23, 2011, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA).

II. Analysis

A. Scope of the Request

In its Appeal, the Appellant states that the Memorandum of Agreement "related directly to a settlement agreement signed October 13, 1995, by the DOE Assistant Secretary for Environmental Management and the DOE General Counsel." Appeal Letter at 2. The Appellant continues "the [DOE] possesses records subject to FOIA related to the [Agreement]." Id. It appears to us that the Appellant is attempting to broaden the scope of its request on Appeal to include documents supporting the 1995 agreement. A requester cannot broaden the request on Appeal. Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0641 (2001), citing F.A.C.T.S., 26 DOE ¶ 80,132 (1996); Energy Research Foundation, 22 DOE ¶ 80,114 (1992); Cox Newspapers, 22 DOE ¶ 80,106 (1992); Bernard Hanft, 21 DOE ¶ 80,134 (1991); John M. Seehaus, 21 DOE ¶ 80,135 (1991).[1/] Accordingly, if the Appellant seeks documents supporting the 1995 agreement, the Appellant should file a request for those documents.

B. Adequacy of the Search/Agency Records

As mentioned above, DOE-ID discretionarily released records responsive to the request, i.e., the seven documents mentioned above. DOE-ID concluded that any other documents responsive to the request are owned by its contractor, BEA. According to DOE-ID, those documents are contractor records, not "agency records" and, therefore, not subject to the FOIA.

The FOIA does not specifically set forth the attributes that a document must have in order to qualify as an agency record that is subject to FOIA requirements. The United States Supreme Court addressed this issue in Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989). In that decision, the Court stated that documents are "agency records" for FOIA purposes if they (1) were created or obtained by an agency, and (2) are under agency control at the time of the FOIA request. The federal courts have identified four relevant factors to consider in determining whether a document was under an agency's control at the time of a request:

(1) The intent of the document's creator to retain or relinquish control over the document;

(2) The ability of the agency to use and dispose of the record as it sees fit;

(3) The extent to which agency personnel have read or relied upon the record; and

(4) The degree to which the record was integrated into the agency's record system or files.

See, e.g., Burka v. Dep't of Health and Human Services, 87 F.3d 508, 515 (D.C.Cir. 1996); see also Donald A. Verrill, Case No. TFA-0364 (2010). Applying the first factor of the four-factor test, the documents were retained by BEA in a file regarding the Memorandum of Agreement. E-mail dated March 28, 2011, from Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, DOE-ID, to Janet Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. Applying the second factor, in order to respond to this FOIA request, DOE-ID contacted BEA and determined what documents BEA had which may have been responsive to the request. DOE-ID had no ability to use or dispose of the documents without contacting BEA. Id. In applying the third factor, DOE-ID personnel did not rely on the documents in question, to take any action regarding the Memorandum of Agreement, with the possible exception of the seven documents released to the Appellant. Id. Finally, in applying the fourth factor, the documents were completely separate from the agency's record keeping system or files, as the documents were retained solely by BEA. Id.

According to DOE-ID, all records relating to the Memorandum of Agreement, including the seven documents already produced, were in the possession and control of BEA at the time of the request. E-mail dated March 28, 2011, from Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, DOE-ID, to Janet Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA. DOE-ID explained that the Memorandum of Agreement was a contractor initiative that did not involve DOE, other than its signature. Id. BEA reviewed the records it possessed and provided only those documents to DOE-ID that were used by DOE-ID to render a decision on the Agreement. Id. These documents were discretionarily released to the requestor. The remainder of the documents are not agency records, as explained above.

However, a finding that certain documents are not "agency records" does not end our inquiry. The DOE's FOIA regulations state:

> When a contract with DOE provides that any records acquired or generated by the contractor in its performance of the contract shall be the property of the Government, DOE will make available to the public such records that are in the possession of the Government or the contractor, unless the records are exempt from public disclosure under 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(2).

10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e). Section I.15(b)(2) and (b)(4) of the contract between DOE-ID and BEA, DOE Contract No. DE-AC07-05ID14517 (DEAR § 970.5204-3, "Access To And Ownership of Records"), identify "correspondence between the contractor and other segments of the contractor located away from the DOE facility" and "legal opinions, litigation files, and documents covered by attorney-client and attorney work product privileges" as contractor and not agency records. See http://www.id.doe.gov/doeid/INLContract/INL-Contract.htm.

DOE-ID maintains that the responsive documents that were not discretionarily released to the Appellant are drafts of the Agreement that were reviewed by the contractor's attorneys. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Clayton Ogilvie, FOIA Officer, DOE-ID, and Janet Fishman, OHA, April 12, 2011. Applying the above-quoted provisions in § I.15(b)(2) and (b)(4) of the contract between the DOE-ID and BEA to the case at hand, it is clear that these documents are the property of BEA, not the DOE. Accordingly, these documents are not subject to disclosure under the FOIA.

Therefore, for the reasons given above, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Snake River Alliance, Case No. TFA-0468, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Smith & Associates

Date of Filing: March 25, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0469

On March 25, 2011, Smith & Associates (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a March 8, 201 final determination issued by the Department of Energy's National Energy Technology Laboratory (NETL). NETL responded to a November 11, 2010, Request for Information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b), as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. On February 25, 2011, NETL released a number of responsive documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require NETL to conduct an additional search for responsive material.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant is a law firm representing a client that had a grant terminated by the State of Florida's Energy Program (FEP). The grant had utilized funds provided by NETL under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA). The FEP terminated the grant following NETL's determination that it was not an allowable use of ARRA funds. On November 11, 2010, the Appellant filed a request seeking any information concerning NETL's determination that the grant was not an allowable use of ARRA funds.

On February 25, 2011, NETL issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing a number of documents, in response to the Appellant's request. Specifically, the Determination Letter released copies of seventeen responsive documents to the Appellant. The Determination Letter also indicated that additional relevant documents might be maintained by the FEP. The Determination Letter further indicated that documents held by the FEP, however, are not agency records and therefore are not subject to the FOIA.

On March 25, 2011, the Appellant filed the present appeal contending, in essence, that NETL continues to withhold responsive information. Appeal at 2.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v.Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted NETL to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. NETL informed us that the search for responsive records was conducted by contacting those within the agency who are most familiar with the subject matter of the request, and the locations where responsive documents would most likely be found. Specifically, NETL's FOIA Officer contacted the program manager, the contracting specialist, and the contracting officer requesting any responsive records. Email from Ann Dunlap to Steven L. Fine, OHA (April 5, 2011). All of these documents located in response to the request were released to the Appellant in their entirety.[1]

Because the Appellant had asserted that NETL had withheld responsive documents, we asked if it had any specific reason to believe that NETL has any additional response documents. Email from Steven L. Fine, OHA to Appellant (April 6, 2011). The Appellant responded by indicating that it had received documents from other sources that should have appeared in DOE's files as well. Email from Appellant to Steven L. Fine, OHA (April 6, 2011). The Applicant provided us with several samples of documents that it contends should have been located and identified if NETL's search had been adequate. Email from Appellant to Steven L. Fine, OHA (April 7, 2011). We have reviewed these documents and agree with the Appellant's contentions.

Based on this information, we find that NETL has not performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to the Appellant's FOIA request. Therefore, the search was not adequate. Accordingly, the instant Appeal should be granted and remanded to NETL. On remand, a new search for responsive documents should be conducted by NETL and a new determination letter should be issued.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Smith & Associates, TFA-0469, is hereby granted and remanded to the National Energy Technology Laboratory for processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

[1] NETL's FOIA Officer provided us with copies of each document it provided to the Appellant.

(2) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: tw telecom inc.

Filing Date: March 25, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0470

This Decision concerns the Appeal that tw telecom inc.[1] (TW) filed from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office (SPRO) issued to it on February 18, 2011. In that determination, the SPRO responded to TW's request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The SPRO found that the documents are not agency records subject to release under the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the SPRO to review the requested documents as agency records and either release them or justify their withholding under the FOIA.

I. Background

DM Petroleum Operations Company (DM Petroleum) is the management and operations (M&O) contractor for the SPRO. In February 2011, DM Petroleum awarded a subcontract to Integrated Data Systems. Request Letter. Also in February 2011, TW filed a FOIA request with DM Petroleum for the "entire proposal submission and the award document(s)" for the awarded subcontract. Id.

The SPRO responded to TW's request and denied it. Determination Letter. The SPRO explained that the requested documents relate to a "procurement action" and that they "are not agency records" because procurement documents remain "the property of the contractor." Therefore, the SPRO explained, the requested documents are not subject to release under the FOIA. Id.

On appeal, TW provides two reasons why the requested documents are agency records. First, DM Petroleum performs its activities for the benefit of the DOE, which provides oversight. Appeal Letter. Second, under DOE regulations, when the M&O contract expires, contractors and subcontractors must deliver contract records to the DOE. Id.

[1] tw telecom inc. spells its name in lower case.

II. Analysis

A. Whether the Documents at Issue are Agency Records Subject to the FOIA

Our threshold inquiry is whether the documents at issue are agency records and thus subject to the FOIA. The FOIA does not define "agency records," but merely lists examples of the types of information that agencies must make available to the public. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a). To determine whether documents are agency records subject to the FOIA, we ask (1) whether the organization is an "agency" for purposes of the FOIA; and, if not, (2) whether the requested documents are nonetheless "agency records." See, e.g., Faye Vlieger, Case No. TFA-0250 (2008); Eugenie Reich, Case No. TFA-0213 (2007).[2]

1. Whether DM Petroleum is an "Agency" for Purposes of the FOIA

Under the FOIA, agency includes any "executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch . . ., or any independent regulatory agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(f)(1). A private entity is not an agency for purposes of the FOIA "absent extensive, detailed, and virtually day-to-day supervision" by the federal government. Forsham v. Harris, 445 U.S. 169, 180 (1980).

We have found that an M&O contractor of a DOE-owned facility is not an agency for purposes of the FOIA. Moore Brower Hennessy & Freeman, P.C., Case No. VFA-0393 (1998) (citation omitted). Recently, a federal district court reached the same conclusion. Reich v. U.S. Dep't of Energy, No. 09-10883-NMG, 2011 WL 977602 (D. Mass. Mar. 17, 2011).

TW requested documents in the possession of DM Petroleum, the M&O contractor for the SPRO. The SPRO does not supervise DM Petroleum's day-to-day operations. Therefore, it is not an "agency" for FOIA purposes.

2. Whether the Requested Documents are Nonetheless "Agency Records"

Although DM Petroleum is not an agency for FOIA purposes, the requested documents could nonetheless be considered "agency records" if (1) an agency created or obtained them; and (2) an agency controlled them at the time of the FOIA request. U.S. Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144-45 (1989).

The SPRO did not create the requested subcontract and subcontract-related documents, and it has not obtained them. See Memorandum of Telephone Conversation with Deanna Harvey, Records Manager, Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office, Mar. 31, 2011. Therefore, we find that they are not agency records subject to the FOIA.

[2] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

B. Whether the Documents are Subject to Release Under the FOIA Regulations of the DOE

A finding that certain documents are not "agency records" does not end our inquiry. When a contract with the DOE provides that contractor-generated records shall be the property of the government, the DOE will make the records available to the public unless they are exempt from disclosure under the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.3(e)(1).

The documents that TW requested relate to procurement. Under the the M&O contract, records relating to procurement are owned by DM Petroleum – not the DOE.[3] Therefore, the requested documents are not subject to release under the FOIA regulations of the DOE.

For the reasons set forth above, we find that the requested subcontract and its related documents are neither agency records subject to the FOIA nor subject to release under the FOIA regulations of the DOE. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by tw telecom inc., OHA Case No. TFA-0470, on March 25, 2011, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: John Brandau

Filing Date: April 4, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0471

This Decision concerns the Appeal that John Brandau filed from a determination that the Oak Ridge Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him on March 10, 2011. In that determination, the ORO responded to his request under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ORO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered records or issue a new determination justifying its withholding of records.

I. Background

Mr. Brandau filed a PA request for his records at the ORO. Request Letter. He seeks his records from the United States Enrichment Corporation-Portsmouth Gaseous Diffusion Plant (Portsmouth) for the period 1978-1980. Particularly, he seeks records showing that as a truck driver for C.H. Waugh Salvage Co., he signed into Portsmouth as a visitor. In response, the ORO stated that it did not locate any records. Determination Letter. Mr. Brandau then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), challenging the adequacy of the ORO's search. Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA),[*] an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents . . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (2010) (remanding where the site office performed no search).

[*] Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act (PA) requires only that the agency search its systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the PA to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. Martha J. McNeely, Case No. TFA-0371 (2010); Mitchell L. Rychtanek, Case No. TFA-0256 (2008). OHA decisions regarding the FOIA and the PA issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

We contacted the ORO to gain additional information to evaluate the adequacy of its search. It stated that visitor logs at Portsmouth only date back to 1983. E-mail from Linda Chapman, Legal Assistant, FOIA/ Privacy Act Office, ORO, Apr. 18, 2011. To ensure that no other records could be found, the ORO expanded its search. It contacted Portsmouth, which searched the electronic and paper files databases that are most likely to have the information that Mr. Brandau seeks. These include the Portsmouth project sub-contractor database, the P-50 database, the classified database, and the dosimetry-related databases. It searched by Mr. Brandau's name, social security number, and the name of the company that he listed in his request, C.H. Waugh Salvage Co. The ORO concluded that if Portsmouth had any records responsive to Mr. Brandau's PA request, it would have found them with its search methodology. Id.

Based on the description of the ORO's search, we find that it conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant records and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that John Brandau filed on April 4, 2011, OHA Case No. TFA-0471, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Greenwire

Date of Filing: April 14, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0472

On April 14, 2011, Greenwire (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on April 12, 2011, by the Loan Programs Office (LPO) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, LPO responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, LPO released one document as responsive to the Appellant's request, but withheld portions of that document under Exemption 4. The Appellant challenges LPO's withholding of information from the document. This Appeal, if granted, would require LPO to release the withheld information to the Appellant.

I. Background

On November 1, 2010, the Appellant filed a request with the DOE for "copies of all documents pertaining to any application to the Advanced Technology Vehicle Manufacturing program [(ATVMIP)]by Li-Ion Motors, [(Li-Ion)] also known as EV Innovations Inc., also known as Hybrid Technologies Inc." Request dated November 1, 2010, from Mike Soraghan, Appellant, to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE. On April 12, 2011, LPO released one document to the Appellant.[1/] Determination Letter dated April 12, 2011, from David G. Frantz, Director, LPO, to Appellant. LPO redacted information from that one document and withheld that information under Exemption 4. Id.

On April 14, 2011, the Appellant appealed, contending first that the portions withheld were from a government-prepared document, not information submitted by a private company.

[1/] In the Appeal, the Appellant refers to a "file marked 'Rejection Letter.'" Appeal at 1. The Determination Letter from LPO refers to "one responsive document." Determination Letter at 1. This Decision only addresses the letter released with the Determination.

Appeal received April 14, 2011, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE at 2. Secondly, he argued that the information withheld was arguably released in a file titled, "rejection letter," thereby releasing the document's intent without releasing the actual wording. Id. at 2. He continues that withholding the wording is pointless as the theme of the letter is apparent from its title. Id. at 3.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemption 4 is at issue in this case.

A. The Appellant's Arguments

The Appellant makes three arguments in its Appeal. First, the Appellant claims that LPO did not adequately justify its withholding of the information under Exemption 4. The Appellant argues that the redactions made to the letter released by LPO are "unsupported and unjustified." Appeal at 2. Second, the Appellant claims that Exemption 4 was applied to the redacted information incorrectly. The Appellant argues that the FOIA "sets a high bar for demonstrating such 'substantial competitive harm.'" Id. To support this claim, the Appellant relies on the definition of "trade secret" adopted by the Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit. Id. Finally, the Appellant claims that Exemption 4 only applies to information supplied to the government, and therefore, a government-prepared document cannot contain information exempted under Exemption 4. Id.

B. Whether the Determination Letter Contained an Adequate Justification

A determination must adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the document. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009); see also F.A.C.T.S., Case No. VFA-0339 (1997); Research Information Services, Inc., Case No. VFA-0235 (1996).[2/] Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requestor must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determination. Id.

The Appellant argues that the redactions made to the letter released by LPO are "unsupported and unjustified." Appeal at 2. We disagree. The LPO provided a justification for its withholding under Exemption 4, stating "[d]isclosure of the information would also reveal the firm's capabilities, available resources and methods of allocating them." Appeal at 1. Moreover, the descriptions of the competitive harm that would result from the release of the withheld information were sufficient to communicate the basis for the LPO's withholdings and to permit a meaningful appeal. We find that LPO's determination letter provided adequate justification for withholding under Exemption 4.

C. Whether the Information Was Withheld as a Trade Secret

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines that the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a "trade secret,"a different analysis applies. First, the agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial. It is well settled that any information relating to business or trade meets this criteria. See, e.g., Lepelletier v. FDIC, 977 F. Supp. 456 (D.D.C. 1997), aff'd in part, rev'd in part and remanded on other grounds, 164 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (Lepelletier). Next, the agency must determine whether the information is "obtained from a person." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4). The federal courts have held that the term "person" includes a wide range of entities, including corporations, banks, state governments, agencies of foreign governments, and Native American tribes or nations. See, e.g., Nadler v. FDIC, 92 F.2d 93, 95 (2nd Cir. 1996) (Nadler). See also Myers, Bigel, Sibley & Sajovec, Case No. VFA-0517 (1999). Finally, the agency must determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential." In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either involuntarily or voluntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory

Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, before withholding it under Exemption 4 the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

The Appellant makes the argument that the information cannot be withheld as a trade secret under the test applied in Public Citizen. Our review of the determination letter concludes that DOE has not asserted that the withheld material is trade secret information. In fact, the Determination Letter states that "[p]ortions deleted from the document enclosed contain 'commercial' or 'financial' information." Determination Letter at 1. Thus, LPO made no assertion that the withheld material is trade secret information.[3/] Information submitted during the process of competing for government grants and loans is considered to have been involuntarily submitted, since the grants and loans generally would not be awarded in the absence of that information. Bryan Cave LLP, Case No. TFA-0464 (2011); Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, Case No. TFA-0424, (2010).

D. Whether the Information Was Supplied to the DOE

The Appellant contends that "[g]overnment-prepared documents about a person or private firm based primarily on information the government generates itself or gathers from outside sources are not exempt under this provision." Appeal at 2. We disagree. The proper focus is on the source of the withheld information not on who prepared the document. Similarly, the federal courts have looked to the identity of the party from whom the information originated to determine whether it is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4. See, e.g., Public Citizen, 209 F. Supp. 2d at 44 (concluding that although a licensee's final royalty rate was the result of negotiation with the government, that did not alter the fact that the licensee is the ultimate source of the information inasmuch as the licensee had to provide the information in the first instance); In Defense of Animals v. National Institutes of Health, 543 F. Supp. 2d 83, 102-103 (D.D.C. 2008) (concluding that incentive award payments negotiated by the parties were not "obtained from a person," because agency failed to demonstrate that the contractor was the source of the information, and not the agency). Similarly, we have previously held that portions of agreements between the DOE and non-federal entities may be considered to have been "obtained from a person" when the non-federal entity was the source of the information. See, e.g., William E. Logan, Jr. & Associates, Case No. VFA-0484 (1999); Research Focus, L.L.C., Case No. TFA-0247 (2008).

[3/]The information sought is clearly "financial" in nature because it relates to a loan application from Li-Ion to the DOE.

We have reviewed an unredacted copy of the responsive document. The information on page two of the document is not DOE-generated information, but rather information that was submitted by Li-Ion to DOE and reworded by the DOE. Therefore, the fact that the letter originated with DOE does not affect our conclusion that the withheld information is exempt from disclosure pursuant to Exemption 4. See Russell Carollo, Case No. TFA-0430 (2010). This information concerns Li-Ion's financial resources. Release of this information would cause substantial harm to the competitive position of Li-Ion. Consequently, we believe that LPO properly applied Exemption 4 to page two of the letter.

However, our review of the responsive document does show that the information on page one of the released letter may not be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4. It appears that some of this information is a restatement of the regulations regarding the ATVMIP, including a definition from those regulations. Further, it appears that LPO withheld a DOE opinion that does not appear to contain information obtained from Li-Ion. Therefore, we will remand the matter to LPO to reconsider whether the information on page one of the document is exempt from release under the FOIA. On remand, LPO must review the information and issue a new determination in compliance with this Decision. At that same time, LPO should also consider whether any of the information it is withholding contains factual information that should be segregated from the Exemption 4 information and released to the Appellant. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(3).

III. Conclusion

The Determination Letter issued by LPO adequately justified its withholdings under Exemption 4. LPO properly withheld under Exemption 4 of the FOIA the redacted information on page two of the released document, which was supplied to the DOE. However, LPO must consider whether the redacted information on page one of that same document originated with the DOE or LPO or contained portions of the DOE regulations and should be released. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal in part and remand the matter to LPO for a further determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Greenwire, Case No. TFA-0472, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Loan Program Office of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B).

Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Motion for Reconsideration

Name of Petitioner: Barry W. Minnfee

Date of Filing: April 26, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0473

This Decision concerns a Motion for Reconsideration of a Decision and Order filed with the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) by Barry W. Minnfee. In this Motion, Mr. Minnfee requests that OHA modify the Decision and Order that we issued in response to an Appeal Mr. Minnfee filed under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. See Barry W. Minnfee, Case No. TFA-0467 (2011).*

I. Background

Mr. Minnfee filed a Privacy Act request on January 18, 2011, in which he requested DNA in an aggravated robbery case, number 49-678-D, Minnfee v. State of Texas. Barry W. Minnfee, Case No. TFA-0467 at 1 (2011). On February 18, 2011, DOE's Oak Ridge Operations Office (Oak Ridge) responded to the request, stating that it had no responsive documents. Id. Mr. Minnfee appealed, challenging the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search.

OHA denied Mr. Minnfee's Appeal. Id. at 2. In considering the Appeal, OHA assessed the scope of Oak Ridge's search for documents responsive to Mr. Minnfee's request. Id. Oak Ridge informed OHA that it conducted a computerized search using Mr. Minnfee's name for any responsive information. Id. Oak Ridge also confirmed that Mr. Minnfee never worked for Oak Ridge or any of its contractors. Id. Further, Oak Ridge established that it does not possess or maintain DNA records or any records on any criminal cases. Id. OHA concluded that Oak Ridge's search "was reasonably calculated to reveal the responsive information." Id.

* OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

In his Motion for Reconsideration, Mr. Minnfee asserts that "I appeal on the ground(s) that I never told Oak Ridge I was employed by Oak Ridge or one of its 'contractor organizations.'" Motion for Reconsideration received April 26, 2011, from Barry W. Minnfee to Poli A. Marmolejos, at 3. He continues, "[i]t involves a state court criminal case . . . [in] Amarillo, Texas." Id.

II. Analysis

The DOE Privacy Act Regulations do not explicitly provide for reconsideration of a final Decision and Order. See 10 C.F.R. § 1008.11. However, in prior FOIA cases, we have used our discretion to consider Motions for Reconsideration where circumstances warrant. See, e.g., Citizen Action New Mexico, Case No. TFA-0215 (2007). In reviewing such requests for reconsideration, we may look to OHA's procedural regulations regarding modification or rescission of its orders. See 10 C.F.R. Part 1003, Subpart E; see also Terry M. Apodaca, Case No. TFA-0237 (2007). Those regulations provide that an application for modification or rescission of an order shall be processed only when the application "demonstrates that it is based on significantly changed circumstances." 10 C.F.R. § 1003.55(b)(1).

Significantly changed circumstances include "the discovery of material facts that were not known or could not have been known" at the time of the original proceeding; "the discovery of a law, rule, regulation … that was in effect" at the time of the original proceeding "and which, if such had been known to the OHA, would have been relevant to the proceeding and would have substantially altered the outcome;" or "a substantial change in the facts or circumstances upon which an outstanding and continuing order of the OHA affecting the applicant was issued, which change has occurred during the interval between the issuance of such order and the date of the application [for modification or rescission] and was caused by forces or circumstances beyond the control of the applicant." 10 C.F.R § 1003.55(b)(2).

Applying these standards to the case at hand, we find that Mr. Minnfee's Motion does not state any basis warranting modification or rescission of our prior decision in Barry W. Minnfee, Case No. TFA-0467 (2011). Mr. Minnfee's argument that he never told Oak Ridge that he was employed by Oak Ridge or one of its contractors does not demonstrate "significantly changed circumstances." Specifically, Mr. Minnfee's argument is not evidence of a discovery of pertinent material facts unknown at the time of the Appeal, the discovery of an applicable law unknown at the time of the Appeal, or a substantial change in facts or circumstances. Rather, this argument is an attempt to find an error in the Decision, where none exists. As the Decision indicates, Oak Ridge made a thorough search for responsive documents. The fact that the search included a search of its list of former and present employees emphasizes, rather than detracts, from the thoroughness of the search.

III. Conclusion

In sum, Mr. Minnfee's Motion for Reconsideration is an attempt to find error where none exists, rather than a demonstration of "significantly changed circumstances" warranting modification or rescission of our decision in Barry W. Minnfee, Case No. TFA-0467 (2011). Consequently, the Motion should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Motion for Reconsideration filed by Barry W. Minnfee on April 26, 2011, OHA Case No. TFA-0473, is denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Ann T. Precourt
Date of Filing:	May 4, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0475

On May 4, 2011, Ann T. Precourt filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Legacy Management (OLM). In that determination, OLM responded to a request for information that Ms. Precourt filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OLM to perform an additional search and either release any newly discovered responsive documents or issue a new determination justifying the withholding of any portions of those documents.

I. Background

On March 16, 2011, Ms. Precourt submitted a FOIA request to the FOIA and Privacy Act Office at DOE Headquarters (DOE/FOIA), for a copy of "the complete DOE employment file" including any available dosimeter badge information for her deceased mother, Madeline Lemieux, who worked at Metal and Controls (M&C) Corporation in Attleboro, Massachusetts, from 1946 to 1963. See Letter from Ann T. Precourt (March 16, 2011) (FOIA Request). DOE/FOIA forwarded the request to OLM because any document responsive to the request, if it existed, would fall under the jurisdiction of that office.

OLM conducted a search of its records but did not locate documents responsive to Ms. Precourt's request. See Letter from John V. Montgomery, Freedom of Information Officer, OLM, to Ann T. Precourt (April 18, 2011) (Determination Letter). On May 4, 2011, the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) received Ms. Precourt's Appeal in which she requested an additional search for her mother's employment and dosimeter records. See Letter from Ann T. Precourt to OHA (Appeal Letter).

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't

of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, 28 DOE ¶ 80,239 (August 26, 2002) (Case No. VFA-0760).[1]

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted OLM to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. See E-mail from Janet R. H. Fishman, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, to John Montgomery, Freedom of Information Officer, OLM (May 9, 2011). OLM informed us that it conducted a thorough search of its electronic information systems database using Ms. Lemieux' name, social security number and the search terms "Attleboro, Metals and Controls, Metals, and Controls." See Email from John Montgomery, Freedom of Information Act Officer, OLM, to Avery R. Webster, Attorney-Examiner, OHA (May 19, 2011) (OLM Response to FOIA Appeal).[2] The OLM search revealed urinalysis and external dosimeter records for some M&C workers for the period of 1953-1967, but records for Ms. Lemieux were not found. Id. Additionally, OLM consulted with a Subject Matter Expert to aid in its processing and search activities for this request; however, its search yielded no responsive documentation. Id.

The courts in Truitt and Miller require that an agency responding to a FOIA request must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Based on the foregoing, we find that OLM performed a search reasonably calculated to reveal documents responsive to Ms. Precourt's request. Accordingly, the search was adequate under the FOIA and, therefore, Ms. Precourt's appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ms. Ann T. Precourt on May 4, 2011, OHA Case No. TFA-0475, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy of which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Sierra Club
Date of Filing:	June 3, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0476

On June 3, 2011, the Sierra Club (Appellant) filed an Appeal from an April 28, 2011 determination issued by the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EERE). In that determination, EERE responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. EERE released documents responsive to the Appellant's request, but withheld portions of those documents under Exemption 4. The Appellant challenges EERE's withholding of information from the documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require EERE to release the withheld information.

I. Background

On August 31, 2010, the Appellant filed a request with the DOE for all energy usage certification reports and compliance statements from manufacturers and private labelers of refrigerator-freezers and room air conditioners submitted to the DOE after July 1, 2001.*/ Request Letter, dated August 31, 2010, from Robert Ukeiley, Attorney for Appellant, to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE. Thereafter, the FOIA request was assigned to EERE, the office most likely to have responsive documents. On April 28, 2011, EERE released responsive documents to the Appellant. Determination Letter, dated April 28, 2011, from Kathleen B. Hogan, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Energy Efficiency, Office of Technology Development, EERE. EERE redacted information from those documents and withheld that information under Exemption 4. Id. EERE stated that the withheld information was brand names of the refrigerators, freezers, and room air conditioners. Id. at 2.

*/ The Appellant subsequently narrowed its request on October 18, 2010, by telephone. Appeal Letter at 1.

On June 3, 2011, the Appellant appealed, advancing two arguments in support of its Appeal. Appeal Letter received June 3, 2011, from Darin Schroeder, Counsel for Appellant, to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. First, the Appellant argues that the brand names do not fall within Exemption 4. Second, the Appellant argues that EERE withheld additional information but did not identify that information or explain how the exemption applies to that information. Id. at 1. Subsequent to our receipt of the Appeal, we contacted EERE to discuss the determination.

II. Analysis

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). Exemption 4 is at issue in this case.

A. The Brand Names

In support of its position that the brand names are not withholdable under Exemption 4, the Appellant claims the brand names are within the public domain. Appeal Letter at 2-3. To support this claim, the Appellant provided a "Google" search that revealed the withheld information. Id. at Attachment C. As further support for the claim that the information is not withholdable under Exemption 4, the Appellant claims that there is no showing of harm from release of the information and, therefore, such information is not confidential. Id. at 3. As final support for this argument, the Appellant claims that release of the information does not violate the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905.

The requested information was provided to the DOE in connection with DOE's program for certification of compliance with DOE's energy efficiency regulations. We contacted EERE concerning this Appeal, and EERE stated that it believed that the identity of the original equipment manufacturer (OEM) for a particular product was sensitive business information and, therefore, it had a choice of releasing the name of the OEM or the brand name. In the instant case, it decided to release the OEM and withhold the brand name. EERE recognized that DOE recently issued amendments to Part 429 that would require the release of the brand name, 10 C.F.R. Part 429—Certification, Compliance, and Enforcement For Consumer Products And Commercial And Industrial Equipment, 76 Fed. Reg. 12,422 (March 7, 2011), but EERE believed that the amendments did not become effective until July 5, 2011, and, therefore, did not apply to the instant request.

The rulemaking notice provides that the effective date of the amendments is April 6, 2011, but provides later dates for certain provisions. The relevant provision here is Section 429.7, entitled "Confidentiality," which falls within the general April 6, 2011, effective date. Accordingly, we have determined that this case should be remanded to EERE to consider whether the regulation requires the release of the brand names in this case. Because we believe this newly promulgated regulation may require release of the brand names, we will not address the Appellant's arguments at this time.

B. Other Redacted Information

The Appellant also advanced the argument that EERE failed to properly justify the withholding of information by claiming that EERE withheld more than the brand names, but never identified that information. In support, the Appellant states, "DOE states that 'the proprietary information being withheld include the brand names.' . . . The use of the word 'include' may allude to the fact that information other than the brand names was withheld." Appeal Letter at 4-5.

Our review of the redacted file indicates that EERE withheld more information than it identified in its determination, but it is unclear to this office precisely what information was withheld. On remand, EERE must identify all the withheld information and justify any withholding. If entire pages of information are being withheld, EERE must identify those pages and properly justify their withholding.

III. Conclusion

On remand, EERE must consider whether the recently issued amendments to Part 429 require the release of the brand names in this case. Also on remand, EERE must review the withheld information to determine if all the information being withheld was identified and justify any withholding. Therefore, we will grant the Appeal, in part, and remand the matter to EERE for a further determination.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Sierra Club, Case No. TFA-0476, is hereby granted as specified in Paragraph (2) below and is denied in all other respects.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy of the Department of Energy, which shall issue a new determination in accordance with the instructions set forth in the above Decision.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Institute for Research: Middle Eastern Policy

Date of Filing: June 8, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0477

On June 8, 2011, the Institute for Research: Middle Eastern Policy (IRmep) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on May 13, 2011, by the Department of Energy's Headquarters (DOE Headquarters) Office of the Executive Secretariat (ES), in Washington, D.C., in response to a request for documents that IRmep filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. ES, in its May 13, 2011, determination letter, informed IRmep that it was unable to locate any records responsive to its request. This Appeal, if granted, would require ES to perform an additional search for responsive records and to either release any newly discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In its February 7, 2011, FOIA request, IRmep asked for all documents relating to "classified U.S. transfers of nuclear materials to Israel from 1960-1970 possibly related to the Nuclear Materials and Equipment Corporation (NUMEC)."[1] Letter from Grant F. Smith, Director of Research, IRmep, to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE Headquarters (February 7, 2011) (Request) at 1. In its May 13 determination letter, ES informed IRmep that it found no responsive documents pertaining to its request.[2] IRmep contends in its Appeal that ES should have located documents responsive to its Request. Id.

[1] IRmep enclosed in its Request a document allegedly released pursuant to a FOIA Request to the Federal Bureau of Investigation which it claims provides evidence that "classified transfers of weapons grade uranium were made from the U.S. to Israel in the 1960's." Request at 1. IRmep asserts that the document indicates that the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) authorized the sale of 320 grams of plutonium to the Institute of Technology in Israel." Request at 1.

[2] In its Appeal, IRmep speculates that ES's determination letter might be a "Glomar" response to its FOIA Request. Appeal at 1. A "Glomar" response is an agency response to a FOIA Request, which states that the agency "can neither confirm or deny" the existence of responsive records because the confirmation or denial of the existence of responsive records would, in and of itself, reveal exempt information. See Phillippi v. CIA, 546 F.2d 1009, 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (raising issue of whether CIA could refuse to confirm or deny its ties to Howard Hughes' submarine retrieval ship, the Glomar Explorer). Our review of the letter indicates that it specifically states that ES could not locate responsive documents and thus the response cannot be considered a "Glomar" response.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010).[3]

In reviewing this Appeal, we contacted ES to ascertain the scope of its search for responsive documents. DOE Headquarters determined that ES is the DOE organization most likely to possess responsive documents and ES was assigned the responsibility of conducting the search. The search was conducted by an ES Historian in the ES History Division. See E-mail from Terry Fehner, Historian, ES, to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner (Hearing Officer) (June 16, 2011). The Historian reviewed the History Division's document finding aids, which include a card catalogue and a folder title index, to identify folders containing potentially responsive documents. The Historian conducted the review of the finding aids using relevant terms taken from the request, such as Israel, NUMEC, and plutonium. The Historian identified folders containing documents pertaining to Israel, NUMEC, and Materials (i.e., plutonium and uranium). The Historian then physically examined the identified folders and looked for documents relevant to the request. But he found none. E-mail from Terry Fehner, Historian, ES, to Richard Cronin, Attorney-Examiner (Hearing Officer) (June 16, 2011). The Historian noted that the attachment to the Request referenced documents maintained by the Materials Branch of the AEC.[4] However, to the best of the Historian's knowledge, all such AEC documents were destroyed before DOE received IRmep's Request. Memorandum of Telephone Conversation between Richard Cronin, OHA, and Terry Fehner, ES, (June 16, 2011).

Based on the information provided to us, we find that ES performed an extensive search reasonably calculated to reveal records responsive to IRmep's Request, despite the fact that the search did not yield the records that IRmep sought. Therefore, the search was adequate. Accordingly, the instant Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on June 8, 2011, by the Institute for Research: Middle Eastern Policy, OHA Case No. TFA-0477, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Petitioner: The National Security Archive

Filing Date: June 16, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0478

This Decision concerns the Appeal that The National Security Archive (NSA) filed from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR) issued to it on May 25, 2011. In that determination, the OIR responded to nine requests that the NSA filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. The OIR stated that no documents were found that are not publicly available. The NSA challenges the adequacy of the searches. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to conduct additional searches.

I. Background

The NSA is an independent, non-governmental research institute located at the George Washington University. Appeal Letter, June 16, 2011. It collects and publishes documents obtained through the FOIA. Id. The NSA submitted separate FOIA requests for documents relating to U.S. participation in the following nine Climate Change Conferences (with DOE FOIA tracking numbers in parenthesis):

1) Bonn, Germany, June 1-12, 2009 (HQ-2010-02036-F)
2) Bonn, Germany, Aug. 10-14, 2009 (HQ-2010-02050-F)
3) Bangkok, Thailand, Sept. 28 – Oct. 9, 2009 (HQ-2010-02073-F)
4) Barcelona, Spain, Nov. 2-6, 2009 (HQ-2010-02094-F)
5) Berlin, Germany, Mar. 28 – Apr. 7, 1995 (HQ-2010-02126-F)
6) Geneva, Switzerland, July 8-19, 1996 (HQ-2010-02146-F)
7) Kyoto, Japan, Dec. 1-11, 1997 (HQ-2010-02149-F)
8) Buenos Aires, Argentina, Nov. 2-13, 1998 (HQ-2011-00027-F)
9) Bonn, Germany, Oct. 25 – Nov. 5, 1999 (HQ-2011-00032-F)

Determination Letter, May 25, 2011.

All nine requests were assigned to the Office of Policy and International Affairs (OPIA). Three requests (HQ-2010-02126-F, HQ-2010-02146-F, and HQ-2010-02149-F) were also assigned to the Office of the Executive Secretariat (OES). The OPIA did not locate any documents that are not already publicly available. The OES had never maintained responsive documents. Id.

On Appeal, the NSA stated that the DOE should search additional program offices. To assist the DOE in its search, the NSA provided the names and titles of DOE officials who attended the conferences from additional program offices. Appeal Letter, June 16, 2011. The NSA also stated that the OPIA and other program offices should search their retired files held by the Washington National Records Center. Id.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, courts have established that an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents. . . ." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness . . . does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).[*]

We contacted the OIR to determine whether it should have routed the NSA's requests to additional program offices. After consulting the Chief Information Officer, the OIR determined that two requests should be assigned to the Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs (HQ-2010-2126-F and HQ-2010-2146-F); two requests should be re-assigned to the OES, including the Office of History and Heritage Resources (HQ-2010-02149-F and HQ-2011-00027-F); and two requests should be assigned to the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (HQ-2011-00027-F and HQ-2011-00032-F). Memorandum of Telephone Conversation with A.C. Morris, FOIA Officer, OIR, June 29, 2011; E-mail from Joan Ogbazghi, Information Access Specialist, OIR, July 1, 2011. In light of this information, we will remand this matter to the OIR so that it can re-assign these requests.

We also contacted the OPIA to determine whether it should have searched its retired files. It stated that it has retired files only once, in 1992. E-mail from Robert Marlay, Deputy Director, Office of Climate Change Policy and U.S. Climate Change Technology Program, OPIA, June 23, 2011. Since the files were retired before the subject conferences, the retired files could not contain responsive documents. Therefore, the OPIA need not have searched its retired files to conduct an adequate search.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by The National Security Archive, OHA Case No. TFA-0478, on June 16, 2011, is hereby granted in part, as described in Paragraph (2), below, and denied in all other respects.

[*] OHA decisions regarding the FOIA issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

(2) The matter is remanded to the Office of Information Resources so that five of the requests submitted by The National Security Archive may be assigned to DOE program offices to search for responsive documents, as described above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound

Date of Filing: June 22, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0479

On June 22, 2011, the Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound ("the Alliance") filed an appeal from determinations issued to it on May 23, 2011, and June 7, 2011, by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Loan Guarantee Program Office (LGPO). In each determination, LGPO responded to a request for documents that the Alliance submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In response to the Alliance's FOIA request, LGPO identified and released a number of responsive documents, but withheld portions of the documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 4, 5 and 6. This appeal, if granted, would require LGPO to release the withheld information to the Alliance.

I. BACKGROUND

On February 24, 2011, the Alliance filed a FOIA request for information pertaining to the Cape Wind Project, a proposed wind-generating facility to be built off the coast of Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Specifically, the Alliance requested "all documents regarding any communications (written or oral) regarding potential grants, loans, loan guarantees, or any other federal funding assistance for the Cape Wind Project proposed by Cape Wind Associates, LLC, ["Cape Wind"]." See Letter from Audra Parker, President and Executive Director, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, to Joan Ogbazghi, Information Access Specialist, DOE Office of Information Resources, February 24, 2011 (Request Letter). Given the large scope of the FOIA request, the Alliance and LGPO agreed that LGPO would provide partial responses to the February 24, 2011, request on a rolling basis, as documents were located, reviewed, and made ready for release. Two such partial responses are the subjects of the instant Appeal.

In a May 23, 2011, partial response, LGPO released three documents, with some information withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 of the FOIA. Those documents are: (1) The Cape Wind Project Cover Application; (2) The Cape Wind Data Elements Supplemental; and (3) The Cape Wind Project Application Part I Section 1.F.1.a. See Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Audra Parker, President and Executive Director, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, May 23, 2011 (May Determination). In a June 7, 2011, partial response, LGPO released correspondence responsive to the Alliance's request. Specifically, LGPO released: (1) Alistair Leslie, Environmental Protection Specialist, correspondence on Cape Wind, Sept. 30, 2010, through March 11, 2011; (2) Dan Tobin, Senior Investment Officer, correspondence on Cape Wind, Sept. 30, 2010, through March 11, 2011; (3) Mladen Nesic, Investment Analyst, correspondence on Cape Wind, Sept. 30, 2010, through March 11, 2011; and (4) Jim McCrea, Financial Consultant, correspondence on Cape Wind, Sept. 30, 2010, through March 11, 2011. See Letter from David G. Frantz, Director, LGPO, to Audra Parker, President and Executive Director, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, June 7, 2011 (June Determination). LGPO withheld portions of those documents pursuant to FOIA Exemptions 4, 5, and 6. Id.

In applying Exemption 4 to the information withheld in the May and June Determinations, LGPO identified the withheld information as "sensitive commercial information that is maintained in confidence by [Cape Wind] and not available in public sources," including "financing plans, business strategies, and procurement plans." See May Determination at 2; June Determination at 2. LGPO withheld the information because its release would cause substantial harm to Cape Wind's competitive interests. Id. Specifically, disclosing financing information and strategies "would provide an unfair advantage to competitors by enabling competing power suppliers to estimate supply costs and use this information to bid against [Cape Wind]." Id. Disclosure of procurement plans "would enable the applicant's power vendors to compete unfairly towards providing future goods and services to [Cape Wind], in addition to allowing vendors unlicensed use of [Cape Wind's] original work product." Id. Finally, public disclosure of financing information "would enable potential customers to exert undue leverage with regards to purchasing [Cape Wind's] product." Id. The LGPO identified the information withheld under Exemption 5 as information that "relates to the Government's deliberations concerning various matters. The documents were created during Government consideration of proposed actions and other matters and were prepared in order to assist Government decision-makers in arriving at their decisions." See June Determination at 2. Finally, LGPO indicated that the information withheld under Exemption 6 is personal information about individuals which is protected from release because "disclosure of such information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Id. at 3.

On June 22, 2011, the Alliance appealed the May and June Determinations, challenging the determinations on several grounds. See Letter from Audra Parker, President and Executive Director, Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, to Poli A. Marmolejos, Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals, June 22, 2011 (Appeal). First, the Alliance makes the following procedural arguments: (1) LGPO withheld information that it has previously released and which is, therefore, already in the public domain; (2) LGPO failed to cite an exemption for each withholding; (3) LGPO failed to provide attachments to various pieces of correspondence; and (4) LGPO failed to release documents in the Nesic and Leslie correspondence packets, noting only that the agency is "waiting on consultation." Id. at 2-3. Second, the Alliance also argues that LGPO improperly applied Exemptions 4 and 5 to certain withheld information.[1] Id.

II. ANALYSIS

[1] The Alliance did not challenge LGPO's withholding of information under Exemption 6. Therefore, the Exemption 6 withholdings are not relevant to the instant proceeding and will not be considered.

In considering the instant Appeal, we have reviewed unredacted versions of each of the documents at issue in this matter, as well as the redacted documents that were released to the Alliance. We address each of the Alliance's arguments below.

A. The Alliance's Procedural Arguments

1. Whether LGPO Redacted Information Already in the Public Domain

Among the Alliance's arguments is that the LGPO "excessively redacted information" in the documents it released in the May and June Determinations. Appeal at 2, 3. The Alliance maintains that LGPO withheld information in the May Determination pursuant to Exemption 4 on page 12 of Cape Wind's loan application regarding work to be performed by a contractor, but released "similar information" in a previous determination. Appeal at 2. The Alliance further argues that LGPO improperly redacted "public information" on pages 33-34 of Cape Wind's application regarding a power purchase agreement (PPA) with an electric company and on page 36 regarding job creation estimates and other federal grants. Appeal at 2.

In reviewing the Appeal, we contacted LGPO for additional information regarding the withholdings. LGPO informed us that the information withheld on page 12 of the application is much more specific than the information previously released, because it references specific contract terms, and is therefore not information already in the public domain. Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 19, 2011. As to the withholdings on page 33, LGPO informed us that the information withheld in the section entitled "Market Analysis" refers to specific terms raised during the negotiation process between Cape Wind and a particular electric company and "is not public information and should remain business confidential." Id. The information in the sections entitled "Phase One" and "Phase Two" is financial information "not related to the PPA." Id. With respect to some of the withheld information on page 36, LGPO informed us that it contains specific financial terms that it withheld under Exemption 4 as business confidential. However, while responding to our inquiries concerning this Appeal, LGPO discovered that some information that it withheld on pages 34 and 36 is public information and should be released. Id. LGPO informed us that it will provide the Alliance with copies of pages 34 and 36 in which that information is released as part of a subsequent release. See Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 20, 2011.

Similarly, the Alliance argues that, in the June Determination, LGPO withheld information on pages one and two of the Tobin correspondence packet, despite releasing the same information on pages one and two of the Nesic correspondence packet. Appeal at 3. We have reviewed the pages in question and find that the information they contain is different. The information on pages one and two of the Nesic correspondence is an email from a Cape Wind representative to a DOE employee forwarding a publicly available Cape Wind press release. Nesic Correspondence at 1-2. The material withheld on pages one and two of the Tobin correspondence packet is an email chain which contains some information which LGPO withheld pursuant to Exemption 4 and other information it withheld under Exemption 5. Tobin Correspondence at 1-2.

Based on our review of the documents, with the exception of the information on pages 34 and 36 of the Cape Wind application that LGPO will release to the Alliance as part of a subsequent release, we conclude that the information in question has not been previously released. We consider below whether LGPO properly applied Exemptions 4 and 5.

2. Whether LGPO Failed to Cite an Exemption for Each Withholding

In its Appeal, the Alliance alleges that LGPO failed to cite a FOIA exemption for each instance in which it withheld information. Specifically, the Alliance alleges that LGPO redacted portions of Cape Wind's application on pages 35 and 36, but did not cite an exemption. Our review of pages 35 and 36 indicates that each page contains multiple withholdings, and that Exemption 4 is noted once in the margin of each page. LGPO confirmed that on pages of the application where it withheld information multiple times pursuant to the same exemption, it noted the exemption once in the margin of the page. Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 19, 2011. On review of the documents, we find no instances in which LGPO withheld information without citing any exemption.

3. Whether LGPO Failed to Provide Attachments to Email Correspondence

The Alliance states in its Appeal that, although LGPO provided requested correspondence, it did not include several attachments to released emails. Specifically, the Alliance notes that attachments are missing from Nesic correspondence packet – pages 4, 23, and 40; Tobin correspondence packet – page 5; Leslie correspondence packet – pages 8 and 18; and McCrea correspondence packet – page 6. Appeal at 2. We contacted LGPO to determine the status of the email attachments. LGPO informed us that, in light of its agreement with the Alliance to provide partial responses to the Alliance's FOIA request on a rolling basis as documents are located, reviewed and prepared for release, it has been producing the correspondence without the attachments because the correspondence can be processed more quickly. Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 19, 2011. LGPO stated that it is producing the documents separately. Id. As such, the email attachments are not part of the May or June Determinations and, therefore, do not properly fall within the scope of this Appeal.

4. Whether LGPO Improperly Failed to Release Certain Documents

The Alliance also maintains that LGPO improperly failed to release certain documents in the June Determination. Specifically, LGPO did not release the Nesic correspondence packet, pages 15 to 22, and the Leslie correspondence packet, pages 27 to 35, stating that it was "waiting on consultation." Appeal at 2. Upon review of those documents, we note that they involve correspondence between the DOE and another agency. LGPO informed us that it requested comments from the other agency regarding whether the documents should be released and has not yet received that agency's "consultation packet." Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 19, 2011. LGPO noted that once it receives comments from the other agency, it will complete its review of the documents and will respond to the Alliance in a separate determination. Id. Given the Alliance's agreement with LGPO to receive responsive documents as they become available following agency review, LGPO's partial release of the documents it had reviewed, rather than delaying providing any response to the Alliance until it received comments from the other agency involved and completed a review of all of the relevant documents, was appropriate. We find that, because LGPO has not issued a determination with respect to these particular documents, the issue of whether they were properly withheld is not yet ripe for our consideration.

B. Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4); see also National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765, 770 (D.C. Cir. 1974). In interpreting this exemption, the federal courts have distinguished between documents that are voluntarily and involuntarily submitted to the government. In order to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, voluntarily submitted documents containing privileged or confidential commercial or financial information need only be of a type that the submitter would not customarily release to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. NRC, 975 F.2d 871 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1579 (1993). Involuntarily submitted documents, however, must meet a stricter standard of confidentiality in order to be exempt. Such documents are considered confidential for purposes of Exemption 4 if disclosure of the information is likely either to impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879.

In this case, Cape Wind was required to submit the documents in question as part of its participation in the agency's loan application process. Accordingly, we find that the withheld information was "involuntarily submitted" and, in order for the application of Exemption 4 to be proper, the National Parks test must be met.

Under Exemption 4, the first requirement is that the withheld information be "commercial or financial."[2] The information submitted by Cape Wind, i.e., financing plans, business strategies, and procurement plans, etc., clearly satisfies the definition of commercial or financial information. The second requirement is that the information be "obtained from a person." It is well-established that "person" refers to a wide-range of entities, including corporations and partnerships. See Comstock Int'l, Inc. v. Export-Import Bank, 464 F. Supp. 804, 806 (D.D.C. 1979); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., Case No. VFA-0591 (2000). Cape Wind, a limited liability company, satisfies that definition. Finally, in order to be exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4, the information must be "confidential." Under National Parks, involuntarily-submitted withheld information is confidential if its release would be likely to either (a) impair the government's ability to obtain such information in the future, or (b) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of submitters. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770. In this case, because the application process for the project required that the information be submitted, it is questionable that release of the information would impair DOE's ability to obtain similar information in the future. The question, then, turns to whether release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to the submitters of the information.

[2] Federal courts have held that these terms should be given their ordinary meanings and that records are commercial so long as the submitter has a "commercial interest" in them. Public Citizen Health Research Grp. v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (internal citation omitted).

LGPO determined that release of the commercial and financial information contained in Cape Wind's loan applications would likely cause the company substantial competitive harm by granting undue advantage to Cape Wind's competing power suppliers, power vendors and potential customers. Given the competitive aspect of the project and the very specific nature of the commercial and financial information contained in the loan application, we agree with LGPO's assessment that the release of the information would likely result in substantial competitive harm to Cape Wind. Therefore, we find that LGPO properly applied Exemption 4 to the withheld information in the released documents.

Turning to the Alliance's specific argument that LGPO applied Exemption 4 too broadly in withholding portions of Cape Wind's installation plan, we find the argument to be without merit. The Alliance maintains that LGPO excessively withheld information pursuant to Exemption 4 because it released some portions of Cape Wind's Installation Plan (specifically, the portions pertaining to "upland construction and transmission cable installation," "submarine transmission cables," "intra array cables," and "offshore wind turbine installation"), while withholding other portions of the Plan (portions pertaining to "ESP installation," "monopile installation," and "transition piece" installation). See Cape Wind Data Elements Supplemental at 15-16. The mere fact that certain steps of a process are considered non-proprietary does not render the entire process as such. In this case, Cape Wind has identified particular aspects of its installation process as confidential and proprietary business information. Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 19, 2011. Given that the Cape Wind project is the first of its kind, it is reasonable to conclude that portions of the installation process constitute proprietary information the release of which is likely to cause substantial harm to Cape Wind's competitive position.

C. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 protects from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5). Exemption 5 permits the withholding of responsive material that reflects advisory opinions, recommendations, and deliberations comprising part of the process by which government decisions and policies are formulated. NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1974). In order to be shielded by this privilege, a record must be both pre-decisional, i.e., generated before the adoption of agency policy, and deliberative, i.e., reflecting the give-and-take of the consultative process. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This privilege covers records that reflect the personal opinion of the writer rather than final agency policy. Id.

Pre-decisional materials are not exempt merely because they are prepared prior to a final agency action, policy, or interpretation. These materials must be a part of the agency's deliberative process by which decisions are made. Vaughn v. Rosen, 523 F.2d 1136, 1144 (D.C. Cir. 1975). The deliberative process privilege is intended to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions. EPA v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73, 87 (1973); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958).

In this case, the information withheld under Exemption 5 in the June Determination consists of written correspondence generated by DOE employees, DOE contractor employees, and consultants during the course of the agency's review of Cape Wind's application. The information contains, inter alia, opinions, recommendations and concerns raised by various parties throughout the review process. After reviewing the documents, we find that the material that LGPO withheld under Exemption 5 is pre-decisional and contains material that reflects DOE's deliberative process. Therefore, the information is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 5 of the FOIA.

The Alliance also alleges that LGPO improperly applied Exemption 5 in withholding communications that do not qualify as "inter-agency" or "intra-agency" memoranda or letters. Appeal at 2-3. Specifically, the Alliance states that on page 32 of the Nesic correspondence, LGPO withheld correspondence between a DOE employee and an outside party. Id. at 2. The Alliance further alleges that on page 39 of the Nesic correspondence LGPO improperly withheld correspondence between a DOE employee and a Cape Wind employee. Id. at 3. We contacted LGPO to ascertain the rationale for each of these withholdings. LGPO informed us that the correspondence on page 32 of the Nesic correspondence was between a DOE employee and a DOE contractor/consultant. See Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 19, 2011. As to the information on page 39, the Alliance's assertion that a recipient of the correspondence was a Cape Wind employee is incorrect. The correspondence was sent from a DOE employee to two other DOE employees and contains pre-decisional, deliberative material. See Email from LGPO to Diane DeMoura, Attorney-Examiner, OHA, July 19, 2011. Therefore, it was properly withheld under Exemption 5.

D. Public Interest in Disclosure

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal case law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2.

In cases involving material determined to be exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 4, we do not make the usual inquiry into whether release of the material would be in the public interest. Disclosure of confidential information that an agency may withhold pursuant to Exemption 4 would constitute a violation of the Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1905, and is therefore prohibited. See, e.g., Tom Marks, Case No. TFA-0379 (2010).[3] Accordingly, we may not consider whether the public interest warrants discretionary release of the information we have deemed properly withheld under Exemption 4. As to the material withheld under

[3] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996 may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

Exemption 5, the withheld information includes the pre-decisional opinions and recommendations offered by DOE employees, DOE contractor employees, and consultants during deliberations on policy. LGPO concluded, and we agree, that "the quality of governmental decisions would be adversely affected if frank, written discussions of policy matters were inhibited by the knowledge that the content of such discussions might be made public." June Determination at 2. We find that the release of such information could have a chilling effect on the agency's ability to obtain straightforward opinions and recommendations in the future.

E. Segregability

The FOIA also requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b); see Better Way for BPA, Case No. TFA-0378 (2010). We find that LGPO complied with the FOIA by releasing to the Alliance all factual, non-deliberative portions of the documents.

III. Conclusion

As discussed above, we find that LGPO properly withheld information pursuant to Exemptions 4 and 5 in the documents it released to the Alliance. Moreover, LGPO complied with the requirements of the FOIA by releasing to the Alliance all non-exempt portions of the responsive documents.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by the Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound, OHA Case Number TFA-0479, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Willard J. Faulkner
Date of Filing:	June 29, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0482

On June 29, 2011, Willard J. Faulkner (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on May 31, 2011, by the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. In its determination, Oak Ridge released copies of the Appellant's medical records, radiation exposure records, industrial hygiene records, and personnel records. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct another search for responsive information.

I. Background

On April 22, 2011, the Appellant requested copies of his medical records, chest x-rays, radiation exposure records, industrial hygiene records, personnel records, personnel security file and Office of Personnel Management (OPM) Background Investigation. Request Letter dated April 22, 2011, from Appellant to Amy Rothrock, Privacy Act Officer, Oak Ridge. On May 31, 2011, Oak Ridge responded to the request, releasing the Appellant's medical records, radiation exposure records, industrial hygiene records, and personnel records. Determination Letter dated May 31, 2011, from Elizabeth Dillon, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge, to Appellant. In its determination, Oak Ridge explained that it did not locate the Appellant's personnel security file or OPM background investigation because these records have been destroyed in accordance with the National Archives and Records Administration General Records Schedules. Id. On June 29, 2011, the Appellant appealed, challenging the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search and requesting a further search. Appeal Letter received June 29, 2011, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA).

II. Analysis

In assessing the adequacy of a search under the Privacy Act, courts apply the "adequacy of search" analysis from the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (FOIA), precedent. Sussman v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 03 Civ. 3618 DRH ETB, 2006 WL 2850608 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2006). See Shores v. FBI, 185 F. Supp. 2d 77, 82 (D.D.C. 2002); cf. Sneed v. U.S. Dep't of Labor, 14 Fed. Appx. 343, 345 (6th Cir. 2001). Under the FOIA, courts have determined that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. U.S. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. Miller v. U.S. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[1/]

In his Appeal, the Appellant first argues that the search was inadequate because it did not locate the OPM Background Investigation. When we contacted Oak Ridge concerning this request, it replied that the Appellant's employment ended in 1992 and that personnel security files are destroyed after five years in accordance with the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) General Records Schedules. Therefore, we find no basis for ordering Oak Ridge to search for the OPM Background Investigation.[2/]

Secondly, the Appellant argues that the search was inadequate because it did not locate documents concerning visits he made to the infirmary in 1979 for vision problems. Appeal Letter. He continued, "[i]n the summer of 1979, after being contaminated I reported to the infirmary for eye rinsing on several occasions." Id. He maintains that those documents should exist because the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations require that an employer maintain and preserve medical records on exposed workers for 30 years after they leave employment. 29 C.F.R. § 1910.1020.[3/] Id. As an initial matter, we note that a provision of those

[1/] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

[2/] Oak Ridge also advised us that OPM destroys its reports of background investigations after 10 years in accordance with NARA schedules, and therefore, Oak Ridge did not believe that OPM would have the record.

[3/] The Appellant incorrectly cited the provision as 29 C.F.R. § 1910.20. That section does not regulations states "[t]he medical record for each employee shall be preserved and maintained for at least the duration of employment plus thirty (30) years, except that the following types of records need not be retained for any specified period . . . first aid records . . . of one-time treatment and subsequent observation . . . which do not involve medical treatment, loss of consciousness, restriction of work or motion, or transfer to another job, if made on-site by a non-physician and if maintained separately from the employer's medical program." 29 C.F.R. § 1910.1020(d)(i)(B) (emphasis added). In any event, Oak Ridge has searched its database and located medical records responsive to the Appellant's request. For the year 1979, Oak Ridge specifically determined that the Appellant had a health evaluation and a pre-employment examination. Thus, Oak Ridge has maintained the Appellant's medical records but they do not contain a copy of the records he is requesting.

As the foregoing indicates, Oak Ridge searched the proper database for records pertaining to the Appellant. It conducted its search using appropriate keywords, i.e., the Appellant's name, Social Security number, and date of birth. Based on the foregoing, we believe that Oak Ridge's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Willard J. Faulkner, Case No. TFA-0482, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Mary Sams
Date of Filing:	June 29, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0483

On June 29, 2011, Tom Carpenter of Hanford Challenge filed an Appeal on behalf of Mary Sams (Mary Sams or Appellant) from a determination issued to her on June 1, 2011, by the Department of Energy's Headquarters Office of Information Resources (HQ). That determination was issued in response to a request for information that Ms. Sams' submitted under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. Ms. Sams asks that HQ conduct an additional search for documents responsive to her request.

I. Background

Ms. Sams filed a request for information with the DOE's Richland Operation Office in which she sought a copy of any and all records, electronic or otherwise, relating to, generated in connection with or pertaining to Mary Sams, a former employee of the Advanced Medical Hanford, Inc., Department of Energy, Hanford Site. The Richland Operations Office forwarded part of Ms. Sams' request to the DOE HQ for a search to be conducted from the files of the Office of Health, Safety and Security (HSS). On June 1, 2011, HQ issued a determination letter which stated that HSS had completed its search and located one automated record concerning Ms. Sams. The document was released to Ms. Sams in its entirety. In its determination letter, HQ further advised that security clearance records are destroyed ten years after the employee terminates his or her access authorization. According to HQ, the last access authorization held by Ms. Sams was terminated on June 8, 1993. Therefore, HQ stated that DOE no longer maintains the types of security records sought by Ms. Sams. On June 29, 2011, Ms. Sams filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In her Appeal, Ms. Sams challenges the reasonableness and adequacy of the search conducted by HQ. See Appeal Letter. She asks OHA to direct HQ to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

Under the Privacy Act, each federal agency must permit an individual access to information pertaining to him or her which is contained in any system of records maintained by the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The U.S. Department of Justice has issued guidance stating that an individual's access request for his own record maintained in a system of records should be processed under both the Privacy Act and the FOIA, regardless of the statute(s) cited. U.S. Department of Justice, Privacy Act Overview, May 2004. DOE requires a search for relevant records under the Privacy Act to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. See, e.g., Carla Mink, 28 DOE ¶ 80,251 (2002). */ Accordingly, in analyzing the adequacy of the search conducted by HSS, we are guided by the principles we have applied in similar cases under the FOIA.

We have stated on numerous occasions that a FOIA request deserves a thorough and conscientious search for responsive documents, and we have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (March 8, 2010). The FOIA, however, requires that a search be reasonable, not exhaustive. "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought material." Miller v. Department of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Weisberg v. Department of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1485 (D.C. Cir. 1984). The fact that the results of a search do not meet the requester's expectations does not necessarily mean that the search was inadequate. Instead, in evaluating the adequacy of a search, our inquiry generally focuses on the scope of the search that was performed. Joan S. Sherwood, Case No. TFA-0359 (March 16, 2010).

In her Appeal, Ms. Sams asserts that in 2009, HSS opened an inspection into the issue of beryllium at the Hanford site at the request of the Assistant Secretary of Energy for Environmental Management. See Appeal Letter at 3. According to the Appellant, in the course of this inspection, HSS team members met with Mary Sams on more than one occasion to interview her. In June 2010, HSS issued a report entitled, Independent Oversight Inspection of the Hanford Site Chronic Beryllium Disease Prevention Program, Office of Health, Safety and Security, June 2010. Id. Ms. Sams asserts that "there must have been notes of interviews, emails, and memoranda "relating to the meeting(s) with her." Consequently, Ms. Sams believes that HQ did not conduct an adequate or reasonable search in response to her request.

In reviewing the present Appeal, we contacted officials in HQ to ascertain the extent of the search that had been performed and to determine whether any other documents responsive to Ms. Sams' request might reasonably be located. Upon receiving Ms. Sams' request for information, HQ forwarded the request to HSS to search their files for responsive documents. HSS informed HQ that it sent the request to four separate offices to conduct a database search for records pertaining to Ms. Sams. It did not provide any other specificity with respect to how and exactly where the search was conducted. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Brenda Washington, HQ, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman, OHA (July 11, 2011). As stated earlier, HSS located one automated record concerning Ms. Sams. HQ officials informed us that when HSS conducted its search, the HSS report was not located in the search for Privacy Act records. See Record of Telephone Conversation between Brenda Washington, HQ, and Kimberly Jenkins-Chapman (July 14, 2011). HSS has now located the report and has informed HQ that the report is also available on the Web. Id.

Based on the foregoing, it is unclear whether there may exist notes of interviews, emails or other memoranda that reflect meetings with Ms. Sams. In addition, given the facts presented to us, including the lack of specificity with regard to the searches performed, we cannot find that HSS conducted an adequate search under both the Privacy Act and the FOIA which was reasonably calculated to discover documents responsive to Ms. Sams' request. In light of Ms. Sams' involvement in the HSS report issued in June 2010, we find that additional responsive information may exist pertaining to Ms. Sams. Consequently, as discussed below, we will remand this matter to HQ so that an additional search may be undertaken for responsive material.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tom Carpenter of Hanford Challenge on behalf of Mary Sams, OHA Case No. TFA-0483, on June 29, 2011, is hereby granted.

(2) This matter is hereby remanded to the Headquarters Office of Information Resources in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552a (g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	National Association of Home Builders
Date of Filing:	July 20, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0484

On July 20, 2011, the National Association of Home Builders (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to it on June 10, 2011, by the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, Oak Ridge released three documents as responsive to the Appellant's request, but withheld portions of one document under Exemption 4. The Appellant challenges Oak Ridge's withholding of information from that document. The Appellant also challenges the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to release the withheld information.

I. Background

On April 12, 2010, the Appellant filed a request with DOE Headquarters (DOE/HQ) essentially asking for any document that contains the formulas, equations or methodologies used by DOE to evaluate the projected energy savings to be obtained by incorporating DOE's proposals for changes to the 2012 International Energy Conservation Code (IECC).[1/] Request Letter dated April 12, 2010, from Appellant to

---

1/ The International Code Council (ICC) publishes every three years an updated edition of the IECC. The IECC is a model code that local governments and other stakeholders can use in developing local building codes and standards. Appeal at 2. A federal statute mandates that DOE participate in the model national codes development process and that DOE help states adopt and implement progressive energy codes. See 42 U.S.C. § 6833(d) (the Energy Conservation and Production Act, as amended). DOE is also required to review whether the proposed IECC revisions would improve energy efficiency in residential buildings as compared to the previous IECC edition and publish this determination in the Federal Register. 42 U.S.C. § 6833(a)(5)(A). See National Association of Home Builders, Case No. TSO-0401 (August 9, 2010), slip op. at 1 n.2.

Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE. Included in this request were the formulas, equations and methodologies used to calculate the increase in energy efficiency that the proposed 2012 IECC edition (incorporating DOE's proposals) would produce when compared to the 2006 IECC edition and the increase of energy efficiency that the 2009 IECC edition produced versus the 2006 IECC edition. Id. DOE/HQ subsequently transferred the request to Oak Ridge so that a search could be made of Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL) records. PNNL had performed the calculations regarding the proposed energy savings projected for the DOE proposals. Nat'l Ass'n of Home Builders, Case No. TFA-0428 (November 19, 2010).

On September 15, 2010, Oak Ridge responded to the request by providing the Appellant two Excel spreadsheet files copied onto a compact disk. On October 14, 2010, the Appellant appealed to this Office, challenging the extent of the search that was made for responsive documents. This Office remanded the Appeal to Oak Ridge to determine whether information responsive to the request could be extracted from an intermediate template file that had been located. NAHB, at 3-4.

On remand, Oak Ridge searched the one computer file that may have contained information responsive to the Appellant's request. Determination Letter from Paul M. Golan, Acting Manager, Oak Ridge, to Appellant. Oak Ridge released three documents to the Appellant, but withheld seven pages of one of those documents. Id. at 1. The withheld information is EnergyGauge software source code. The Appellant is challenging the withholding of those seven pages. July 20, 2011, Appeal Letter from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In addition, the Appellant is challenging Oak Ridge's search for responsive documents. Id. at 5.

II. Analysis

A. Adequacy of the Search

We addressed the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search in the previous Decision, NAHB, Case No. TFA-0428 (November 19, 2010). Except for one intermediate template file that was to be searched on remand for responsive information, we upheld Oak Ridge's search as adequate. On remand, Oak Ridge released that file to the Appellant. We will not address the adequacy of the search a second time.

B. Exemption 4

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Exemption 4 is at issue in this case.

Exemption 4 shields from mandatory disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). Accordingly, in order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." Nat'l Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines that the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. FDA, 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983). If the material does not constitute a "trade secret," a different analysis applies. The agency must determine whether the information in question is commercial or financial, "obtained from a person" and "privileged or confidential." Oak Ridge applied this analysis to the EnergyGauge software source code it withheld. EnergyGauge is a commercial product which is licensed to end-users. Appeal Letter at 6 (acknowledging that NAHB has a license for the EnergyGauge software).

We believe the initial question that must be answered is whether the information being withheld is a "trade secret." Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1288. There is limited case law regarding "software source code,"[2/] and whether it is a trade secret under Exemption 4. For purposes of Exemption 4, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has adopted a "common law" definition of the term "trade secret." Id. at 1280, 1288. In Public Citizen, "trade secret" was defined as "a secret, commercially valuable plan, formula, process, or device that is used for the making, preparing, compounding, or processing of trade commodities and that can be said to be the end product of either innovation or substantial effort." Id. at 1288. Trade secret protection has been recognized for product manufacturing and design information. Appleton v. FDA, 451 F. Supp. 2d 129, 142 & n. 7. (D.D.C. 2006). The software source code in this case properly fits under the trade secret analysis in that it is the plan or formula used for the process of running the EnergyGauge software. The process to develop software is both innovative and can require substantial effort. Therefore, we believe that the source code withheld by Oak Ridge is a trade secret within the meaning of Exemption 4. Accordingly, Oak Ridge's determination to withhold the source code under Exemption 4 was correct.

[2/] Courts have looked at the software's design and purpose to determine whether it is an agency record. Compare Gilmore v. Dep't of Energy, 4 F. Supp. 912, 920-21 (N.D. Cal 1998) (holding that video conferencing software developed by privately owned laboratory was not a record under FOIA because it was "not designed to be . . . responsive to any particular database" and "does not illuminate anything about [the agency's] structure or decision making process), with Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton v. HHS, 844 F. Supp 770, 781-82 (D.D.C. 1993) (concluding that a software program was a record because it was "uniquely suited to its underlying database" such that "the software's design and ability to manipulate the data reflect the [agency's study]," thereby "preserving information and 'perpetuating knowledge.'" (quoting DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542 (10th Cir. 1978))).

III. Conclusion

The Appellant argues that the search conducted by Oak Ridge was inadequate. We addressed this argument in its previous Appeal. We will not revisit the issue. The Appellant also argues that Exemption 4 does not apply to the information withheld. We disagree. We found that the software source code is a trade secret that should be withheld under Exemption 4. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by National Association of Home Builders, Case No. TFA-0484, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Ricky W. Ladd
Date of Filing:	July 21, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0485

On July 21, 2011, Ricky W. Ladd (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to him on June 14, 2011, by the Environmental Management Consolidated Business Center (EMCBC) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, EMCBC responded to a request for information that the Appellant had filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. In its determination, EMCBC released documents as responsive to the Appellant's request, but withheld portions of two documents under Exemptions 5 and 6. The Appellant challenges EMCBC's withholding of information from those documents. In addition, the Appellant challenges EMCBC's search for responsive documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require EMCBC to release the information withheld under Exemptions 5 and 6 and to conduct a further search for responsive information.

I. Background

On December 6, 2010, the Appellant filed a request with DOE asking for documents related to his termination and whistleblower complaint. Request dated December 6, 2010, from Appellant to Alexander Morris, FOIA Officer, DOE. The request was subsequently forwarded to EMCBC. On May 6, 2011, EMCBC sent a preliminary response to the Appellant, informing him that some of the documents identified as responsive to his request were still being reviewed. On June 14, 2011, EMCBC issued its final determination, releasing the remaining documents but withholding information from two of those documents under Exemptions 5 and 6. Determination Letter dated June 14, 2011, from Jack R. Craig, Director, EMCBC, to Appellant.

On July 21, 2011, the Appellant appealed to this Office, challenging the Exemption 5 and 6 withholdings and the extent of the search that was made for responsive documents.

II. Analysis

A. Exemptions 5 and 6

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). The DOE regulations further provide that documents exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA shall nonetheless be released to the public whenever the DOE determines that disclosure is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology v. Dep't of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1979) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. DOE, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). EMCBC applied Exemption 5 to withhold Document "hh" and Exemption 6 to withhold two attachments to Document "v."

1. Exemption 5

Exemption 5 of the FOIA exempts from mandatory disclosure documents which are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with an agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(5). The Supreme Court has held that this provision exempts "those documents, and only those documents, normally privileged in the civil discovery context." NLRB v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 132, 149 (1975) (Sears). The courts have identified three traditional privileges, among others, that fall under this definition of exclusion: the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work-product privilege, and the executive "deliberative process" or "pre-decisional" privilege. Coastal States, 617 F.2d at 862. Only the attorney-client privilege is at issue here.

An agency may withhold information under the attorney-client privilege if it is a "confidential communication[] between an attorney and his client relating to a legal matter for which the client has sought professional advice." Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Dep't of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242, 252 (D.C. Cir. 1977). The privilege protects only those communications necessary to obtain or provide legal advice. Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 403-04 (1976). It applies to facts that a client gives to the attorney and opinions that the attorney gives to the client. See, e.g., Jernigan v. Dep't of the Air Force,

No. 97-35930, 1998 WL 658662, at *2 (9th Cir. Sept. 17, 1998). The privilege protects the attorney-client relationship – it encourages full disclosure to attorneys so that they can render effective legal assistance. Tornay v. United States, 840 F.2d 1424, 1426 (9th Cir. 1988).

We find that the EMCBC properly invoked the attorney-client privilege to withhold Document "hh." The document proposes a course of action to address the Appellant's whistleblower complaint. The originator of the document was seeking legal advice from DOE attorneys. See Southern California Edison, Case No. VFA-0674 (June 20, 2001).[1/] This document was clearly a confidential communication between an attorney and his client made for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. Accordingly, this document is protected by the attorney-client privilege.

a. Segregability

Notwithstanding the above, the FOIA requires that "any reasonably segregable portion of a record shall be provided to any person requesting such record after deletion of the portions which are exempt under this subsection." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). We reviewed the withheld information and did not find any non-exempt, segregable information.

b. Public Interest

The DOE regulations provide that the DOE should release to the public material exempt from mandatory disclosure under the FOIA if the DOE determines that federal law permits disclosure and it is in the public interest. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.1. The Attorney General has indicated that whether or not there is a legally correct application of a FOIA exemption, it is the policy of the Department of Justice to defend the assertion of a FOIA exemption only in those cases where the agency articulates a reasonably foreseeable harm to an interest protected by that exemption. Memorandum from the Attorney General to Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies, Subject: The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (March 19, 2009) at 2. EMCBC concluded, and we agree, that disclosure of the requested information would cause an unreasonable harm to EMCBC's ongoing decision-making process. Therefore, release of the withheld information would not be in the public interest.

2. Exemption 6

EMCBC withheld two exhibits to Document "v," when it was released to the Appellant.

[1/] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

These two exhibits were withheld in their entirety and are witness statements. Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C. F. R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Dep't of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no significant privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d 873, 874 (D.C. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1078 (1990); see also Ripskis v. Dep't of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Dep't of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Federal Employees, 879 F.2d at 874.

a. Privacy Interest

In this case, EMCBC determined that release of the two witness statements attached to Document "v" would result in the invasion of significant personal privacy interests. Specifically, EMCBC found that the witnesses had a reasonable expectation of privacy when the statements were made and the release of their identities could subject them to harassment or intimidation. See Sandra M. Hart, Case No. VFA-0372 (February 27, 1998). EMCBC determined that withholding only the names of the witnesses was insufficient to protect the witnesses' privacy interest because only a small group of employees observed the incident described in Document "v." Under these circumstances, the facts set forth in the statements serve to identify the witnesses. For this reason, the witness statements were withheld in their entirety. We have previously held that because a person who is revealed as having participated in an investigation may be subject to coercion, harassment, or intimidation based on the mere fact of his or her participation or on the content of his or her statements to investigators, witnesses specifically named or identified maintain a substantial privacy interest in the continued confidentiality of the withheld material. If release of the document would disclose the identities of the witnesses, then the document can be withheld. See Robert D. Reilly, Case No. TFA-0166

(2006). In addition, we have held in the past that the potential for harassment of individuals is sufficient justification for withholding information under Exemption 6. Id.

b. Public Interest

Having identified a privacy interest in the withheld information, it is necessary to determine whether there is a public interest in the disclosure of the information. Information falls within the public interest if it contributes significantly to the public's understanding of the operations or activities of the government. See Reporters Committee, 489 U.S. at 775. Therefore, unless the public would learn something directly about the workings of government from the release of a document, its disclosure is not "affected with the public interest." Id.; see also Nat'l Ass'n of Retired Employees v. Horner, 879 F.2d at 879. In the present case, we find that the public interest in the withheld information at issue here is minimal at best. The Appellant has not established how release of the identities of the witnesses would serve any public interest. To the contrary, we find that release of the identifying information of the witnesses would reveal little, if anything, to the public about the workings of the government.

c. Balancing Test

After weighing the significant privacy interests present in this case against a minimal or even non-existent public interest, we find that release of information revealing the identities and other personal information of the witnesses would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Therefore, EMCBC properly withheld the information under Exemption 6.

B. Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).

We contacted EMCBC to determine what type of search was conducted. EMCBC replied that the two employees most familiar with the requested information performed the search for responsive information. Memorandum dated August 1, 2001, from Jack R. Craig, EMCBC, to Janet Fishman, OHA. They conducted both a computerized search and a paper search. Id. at 4-5. In conducting the computer search, they used the Appellant's name along with the terms "whistleblower," "OIG," "inquiry," "timeline," and "10 C.F.R. Part 708." Id. at 4.

As grounds for his claim that the search conducted by EMCBC was inadequate, the Appellant asserts that a number of documents are missing from the information released to him. EMCBC responded to our request for the status of the documents that the Appellant claims are missing.[2/] In light of EMCBC's response and based on EMCBC's explanation of its search, we believe that EMCBC's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information.

III. Conclusion

EMCBC properly withheld information under Exemptions 5 and 6. In addition, EMCBC conducted a search reasonably calculated to uncover the requested information. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

[2/] As stated above, as grounds for his claim that the search EMCBC conducted was inadequate, the Appellant asked why a number of documents were not released to him. EMCBC responded to the Appellant's questions regarding the whereabouts of these specific documents. First, EMCBC indicated that Document "q," which the Appellant believes is a timeline of events, was actually a set of responses to specific questions posed by another employee. August 1 Memorandum at 3. The e-mail posing the questions was released to the Appellant as Document "p." Id. Second, EMCBC indicated that timeline actually referenced in Document "q" was never located. Id. Third, EMCBC indicated that the supporting documents for Document "i" were released as Document "k." Id. at 4. Fourth, EMCBC stated that one of the drafts mentioned in Document "m" was included in the responsive documents as the second page to Document "m." Id. at 4. However, upon receipt of a copy of this Appeal, EMCBC determined that the "original draft" of Document "m" was omitted. Id. at 4. EMCBC has since provided that to the Appellant. Attachment to e-mail dated August 4, 2011, from Jay Jalovec, EMCBC, to Janet Fishman, OHA. Finally, EMCBC stated that the request from Uranium Disposition Services, LLC, to the DOE regarding dismissal of the Appellant's whistleblower complaint was provided as Document "v." Id. at 4.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Ricky W. Ladd, Case No. TFA-0485, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Kristopher Fair
Date of Filing:	July 26, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0486

This Decision concerns an Appeal that Kristopher Fair filed in response to a determination issued to him by the Office of Information Resources (hereinafter referred to as "OIR") of the Department of Energy (DOE). [1] In that determination, OIR denied a request for the waiver of fees associated with its processing of Mr. Fair's request for information that he filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to waive all applicable fees. In the alternative, Mr. Fair requests that he be assessed the fees charged to "educational and non-commercial scientific institution" requesters.

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. The FOIA also provides for the assessment of fees for the processing of requests for documents. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(i); see also 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a). The amount of fees assessed depends upon the category of the requester. "Commercial use requesters" are charged the full direct costs of searching for, reviewing for release, and copying the records sought. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b)(1). "Educational and non-commercial scientific institution" requesters and members of the news media are charged copying costs only, excluding charges for the first 100 pages. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b)(2). "All other requesters" are charged the full reasonable direct cost of searching for and copying responsive records, except that the first 100 pages of copying and the first two hours of searching are provided without cost. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(b)(4).

1/ Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA) are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine located at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

I. Background

In his request, Mr. Fair sought access to information from the years 1946 to 1960 relating to Chelyabinsk-40 and Chelyabinsk-65, two names that were given to a "secret" city in what was formerly known as the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (U.S.S.R.), where workers in the U.S.S.R.'s nuclear industry resided. Mr. Fair also asked that all fees associated with the processing of the request be waived. In the alternative, he requested that he be categorized as an "educational and non-commercial scientific institution" requester.

In its determination letter, OIR concluded that Mr. Fair's request for a waiver of fees did not satisfy the applicable criteria for granting such requests. Specifically, OIR determined that Mr. Fair had not shown that the information requested would contribute significantly to public understanding of operations or activities of the United States government. Consequently, OIR denied Mr. Fair's fee waiver request. OIR further found that Mr. Fair, who is a student at Hood College in Frederick, Maryland, had not submitted sufficient information to warrant classification as an "educational or non-commercial scientific institution" requester. OIR pointed out that, in order to qualify for this classification, > the request must serve a scholarly research goal of the institution, not an individual goal. Thus, a student seeking inclusion in this subcategory, who makes a request in furtherance of the completion of a course of instruction is carrying out an individual research goal, and would not qualify as an educational institution requester.

June 9, 2011, OIR determination letter at 1. OIR therefore placed Mr. Fair in the "all other requesters" fee category.

In his appeal, Mr. Fair argues that the requested information about a "secret" Soviet city would contribute significantly to public understanding of operations of the United States government because it would provide insight into the information gathering activities of federal agencies. Appeal at 2. With regard to the proper classification of his request, Mr. Fair states that his research is not associated with the completion of a course, but is instead in furtherance of a "Hood College-sponsored initiative created to conduct historical research." Appeal at 1. He therefore contests his classification in the "all other requesters" category.

II. Analysis

The DOE will grant a full or partial waiver of applicable fees if a requester can demonstrate that disclosure of the information sought in a FOIA request (i) is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government, and (ii) is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(A)(iii);

10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8). Both of these criteria must be satisfied before a fee waiver is granted. Id. Because we conclude that Mr. Fair has not demonstrated that disclosure of the information sought is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the government, we need not address the "commercial interest" prong of the fee waiver requirements.

The DOE regulations set forth specific guidelines that are to be used in fee waiver cases to determine whether disclosure of the information sought is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government. In making such a determination, we are required to consider (i) the subject of the request: whether the requested records concern the operations or activities of the government; (ii) the informative value of the information to be disclosed: whether the disclosure is likely to contribute to an understanding of governmental operations or activities; (iii) the contribution to an understanding by the general public of the subject likely to result from disclosure, and (iv) the significance of the contribution to public understanding: whether disclosure of the requested records is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of government operations or activities. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.9(a)(8)(I).

Central to these criteria, and indeed to the first prong of the fee waiver requirements itself, is that the information requested must concern the operations or activities of the United States government, and release of that information must be likely to contribute to public understanding of government operations or activities. In his appeal, Mr. Fair contends that release of the information will contribute to public understanding of the information gathering activities of the DOE's predecessor agencies. This contention fails for two reasons. First, the subject of the request is a "secret" Soviet city, which does not concern the operations of the United States government. In a number of previous cases, we have denied fee waivers where there has been no connection established between the subject matter of the request and a specific governmental activity. See, e.g., Barbara Schwarz, Case No. VFA-0646 (2001); IBEW, Case No. VFA-0250 (1997); Tod Rockefeller, Case No. VFA-0447 (1998). Second, Mr. Fair's argument sweeps too broadly. The collection of all of the information in the federal government's possession involved some level of governmental activity. If informing the public about the extent of information in the government's possession and how that information was gathered was sufficient to justify a waiver, it would render the first prong of the FOIA's fee waiver requirements meaningless. The OIR properly denied Mr. Fair's request for a fee waiver.

We reach a different conclusion, however, with regard to Mr. Fair's inclusion in the "all other requesters" fee category. Under the fee waiver guidelines promulgated by the Office of Management and Budget, the term "educational institution" includes institutions of higher learning that operate "a program or programs of scholarly research." 52 Fed. Reg. 10012, 10018 (1987). In order to qualify as an "educational and non-commercial scientific institution" requester, the request must serve a scholarly research goal of the institution, and not an individual goal. Id. We conclude that Mr. Fair's request satisfies these criteria. Mr. Fair is a Research Fellow participating as one of a team of researchers in the Summer Research Institute at Hood College, an institution of higher learning. His work directly furthers the research goals of the college, and is not for an individual course of study. Appeal at 1. The research team, which is headed by a Hood College professor, will produce an article for publication in a scholarly journal. Id. Furthermore, Mr. Fair's participation on the team is not a requirement for graduation, nor will he receive any academic credits for his work. See memorandum of August 17, 2011 telephone conversation between Robert Palmer, OHA Staff Attorney, and Mr. Fair. Mr. Fair should therefore be assessed the fees charged to "educational and non-commercial scientific institution" requesters.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed by Kristopher Fair, OHA Case Number TFA-0486, is hereby granted as set forth in paragraph (2) below, and is in all other respects denied.

(2) Mr. Fair shall be classified as an "educational and non-commercial scientific institution" requester, and shall be assessed fees consistent with that classification.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Gennady Ozeryansky

Date of Filing: August 17, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0487

On August 17, 2011, Gennady Ozeryansky (Appellant) perfected an Appeal from a determination issued to him on May 13, 2011, by the Department of Energy's Office of Inspector General (OIG), in Washington, D.C., in response to a request for documents that the Appellant filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the Department of Energy (DOE) in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. OIG, in its June 28, 2011, determination letter, informed the Appellant that it neither confirmed nor denied the existence of any records described in the Appellant's request. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIG to either release any discovered documents or issue a new determination letter justifying the withholding of those documents.

I. Background

In his June 15, 2011, FOIA request (Request), the Appellant asked for a copy of the "Inspector General investigation of Barry Sullivan." June 28, 2011, letter from John Hartman, Assistant Inspector General for Investigations, OIG, to Gennady Ozeryansky at 1 (Determination Letter). In its June 28, 2011, Determination Letter, OIG informed the Appellant that it neither confirmed or denied the existence of any such records described in the request.[1] Id. The Determination Letter, citing FOIA Exemption 7(C), 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C)[2] as support, went on to state that, lacking an individual's consent, an official acknowledgement of an investigation or an acknowledgment of the existence of investigatory records about an individual could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

[1] An agency response to a FOIA Request, which states that the agency "can neither confirm or deny" the existence of responsive records because the confirmation or denial of the existence of responsive records would, in and of itself, reveal exempt information or constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy is often called a Glomar response. See Phillippi v. CIA, 546 F.2d 1009, 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (raising issue of whether CIA could refuse to confirm or deny its ties to Howard Hughes' submarine retrieval ship, the Glomar Explorer). We will refer to OIG's response as a Glomar response.

[2] Exemption 7(c) of the FOIA protects records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes but only " to the extent that production of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7)(C); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(7)(iii).

II. Analysis

Courts have recognized, in the context of some FOIA requests, that even acknowledging that certain records are kept would jeopardize the privacy interests that FOIA Exemptions are designed to protect and that a Glomar response neither confirming nor denying the existence of responsive records is appropriate. See, e.g., Antonelli v. FBI, 721 F.2d 615, 617 (7th Cir. 1983) (Antonelli). In reviewing the interests to be balanced to justify Exemption 7(C) protection, it is apparent that the request at issue might reveal whether an individual is the subject of an OIG law enforcement investigation.[3] The courts and OHA have consistently held that individuals have a strong privacy interest in avoiding the stigma of being associated with a law enforcement investigation. See, e.g., Fitzgibbon v. CIA, 911 F.2d. 755, 767 (D.C. Cir. 1990); Massey v. FBI, 3 F.3d 620, 624 (2d Cir. 1993); Westinghouse Savannah River Co., LLC, Case No. VFA-0556 (March 13, 2000), slip op. at 3 (Westinghouse).[4] This strong interest is balanced against the fact that the Appellant has not referenced any specific public interest that would be furthered by the release of the requested documents. Given these interests, I find that the potential privacy interest threatened by release of any potentially responsive documents greatly outweighs any generalized, non-specific, public interest that would be furthered by release of such potential documents. See Beck v. Dep't of Justice, 997 F.2d 1489, 1492-94 (D.C. Cir. 1994); Massey, 3 F.3d at 624; McNamera v. Dep't of Justice, 974 F. Supp. 956, 957-60 (W.D. Tex. 1997); Westinghouse, slip op. at 3. Consequently, any potentially responsive documents would be protected by FOIA Exemption 7(C). Using this rationale, the courts and OHA have upheld the use of a Glomar response where a FOIA request might reveal Exemption 7(C) information disclosing the identity of individuals who are subjects of investigations or are otherwise mentioned in law enforcement records and who have not previously waived their privacy rights. See, e.g., Dep't of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for the Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 775 (1989); Massey; Antonelli; Westinghouse.

We have spoken to an OIG official who was familiar with the processing of the Appellant's FOIA Request. After reviewing the subject matter of the Request, the method by which the Request was processed, and the OIG justification offered in the determination letter, we find that OIG appropriately invoked its Glomar response. Thus, we agree that providing any other response to the FOIA Request would potentially constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, such as that protected by Exemption 7(C). Consequently, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed on August 17, 2011, by Gennady Ozeryansky, OHA Case No. TFA-0487, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district

[3] OHA has consistently held that OIG is a law enforcement body and its investigations and reports are records compiled for law enforcement purposes within the meaning of Exemption 7(C). See Westinghouse Savannah River Co., LLC, Case No. VFA-0556 (March 13, 2000), slip op. at 2.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Sierra Club
Date of Filing:	September 6, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0488

On September 6, 2011, the Sierra Club (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from an interim determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Information Resources (OIR), in response to a request for documents that the Appellant submitted under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require OIR to expedite the processing of the Appellant's FOIA request.

I. Background

The FOIA generally requires that documents held by federal agencies be released to the public on request. In the absence of unusual circumstances, agencies are required to issue a response to a FOIA request within 20 working days of receipt of the request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The FOIA also provides for expedited processing of requests in certain cases. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E).

On August 8, 2011, the Appellant filed a FOIA request with OIR for records pertaining to a decision by the state government of Kansas to shift DOE supplied funds from the "Efficiency Kansas Loan Program" to "three new biofuels projects." The Appellant identified itself as a representative of the news media and requested expedited processing contending "an urgency to inform the public concerning actual or alleged Federal Government exists." Request at 3. The Appellant further contends:

> It is our understanding that an environmental review, if required of the biofuels projects, to which the efficiency Kansas funds are being diverted, must be completed by September 1, 2011. No one in the public or even stakeholders in the Efficiency Kansas Program were notified of the planned diversion of funds until July 19. Thus no one has been given an opportunity to comment on the action or on the environmental review. Thus we need the requested information immediately in order to respond in a timely fashion.

Request at 3.

On August 11, 2011, OIR issued the Interim Determination Letter in which it denied the Appellant's request for expedited processing because the Appellant had not demonstrated a "compelling need" for expedited processing. The OIR agreed that the Appellant is "primarily engaged in disseminating information." However, OIR further found that the request did not identify "an actual activity that poses any particular urgency that requires the dissemination of information in an expedited manner." Interim Determination Letter at 1.

On September 6, 2011, the Appellant submitted the present Appeal.

II. Analysis

The only issue under consideration in the present Appeal is the Appellant's request for expedited processing. The Appellant has made a number of arguments in support of its contention that it has a compelling need for expedited processing of its request. In its request, the Appellant asserted:

(1) Release of the requested information will contribute to the public's understanding of "how and why the specified diversion of funds was allowed to happen, was justified or not justified, and whether a suitable environmental review was conducted." Request at 2;
(2) It requires the requested information in order to participate in the state of Kansas' environmental review process. That process is expected to be completed by September 1, 2011. Id. at 3.

In its Appeal, the Appellant asserts:

> We have an urgency and a compelling need to inform the public, in particular stakeholders in the Efficiency Kansas program who expended time and resources in the program that was summarily cut off by the Kansas Corporation Commission (KCC) without advance warning, thereby putting their investments in jeopardy, and to inform the citizens of Kansas who are concerned about the proper stewardship of public funds. The stakeholders are understandably concerned about their prospects for redress because of the deadline of April 1, 2012 set by DOE for the expenditure of funds under ARAR.

Appeal at 1. The Appeal further contends that "the inability of the Sierra Club to quickly obtain the information we need to participate in the NEPA process would clearly compromise our legal right to participate on a timely basis where our comments may be of some value." Id. at 2.

The Appellant has not demonstrated that it has a compelling need for expedited processing of its request. Agencies generally process FOIA requests on a "first in, first out" basis, according to the order in which they are received. When an agency grants a requester expedited processing, that requester receives preference over previous requesters, by having its request moved ahead in line therefore delaying the processing of earlier requests. Accordingly, the FOIA provides that expedited processing is to be offered when a requester is able to demonstrate "compelling need." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(i)(I).

Under the FOIA, "compelling need" means:

> (I) that a failure to obtain requested records on an expedited basis under this paragraph could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life of or physical safety of an individual; or
> (II) with respect to a request made by a person primarily engaged in disseminating information, urgency to inform the public concerning actual or alleged Federal Government activity.

5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v) (emphasis supplied). The relevant legislative history indicates that the "specified categories for compelling need are intended to be narrowly applied." H.R. Rep. No. 104-795 at 26 (1996).

The present case clearly does not involve information which could reasonably be expected to pose an imminent threat to the life or safety of an individual. It does involve a requester which the OIR has determined to be a "person primarily engaged in disseminating information." Determination Letter at 1. Therefore, the remaining question before us is whether the Appellant has demonstrated "urgency to inform." The legislative history states:

> The standard of "urgency to inform" requires that the information requested should pertain to a matter of a current exigency to the American public and that a reasonable person might conclude that the consequences of delaying a response to a FOIA request would compromise a significant recognized interest. The public's right to know, although a significant and important value, would not by itself be sufficient to satisfy this standard.

H.R. Rep. No. 104-795, at 26 (1996). Accordingly, the D.C. Circuit Court has ruled that in order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated an "urgency to inform" and, thus, a "compelling need," at least three factors should be considered: "(1) whether the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public; (2) whether the consequences of delaying a response would compromise a significant recognized interest; and (3) whether the request concerns federal government activity." Al-Fayed v. CIA, 254 F.3d 300, 310 (D.C. Cir. 2001). In previous cases before this office, we have applied these factors in order to determine whether a requester has demonstrated that its request is entitled to expedited processing. See e.g. Southeastern Legal Foundation, Inc., Case No. TFA-0389 (2010);[1] Center for Investigative Reporting, Case No. TFA-0200 (2007).

Applying these factors to the present case, we find that that the interests cited by the Appellant in both its request and its Appeal apply mainly to the "stakeholders in the Efficiency Kansas program" rather than to the American public at large. Moreover, the Appellant clearly seeks the requested information in order to timely participate in a process conducted by a state entity rather than a Federal government activity. These two factors strongly indicate that the appellant has not demonstrated an "urgency to inform."

Moreover, we note that the Appellant has repeatedly contended that it needs to obtain the requested information on an expedited basis in order to allow it to participate in a time-limited environmental review process. However, unless the failure to release information would pose an imminent threat to the life of or physical safety of an individual, the FOIA specifically states that "compelling needs" exist only when there exists an "urgency to inform the public." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(E)(v)(2) (emphasis supplied).

For the reasons set forth above, we cannot find that the request concerns a matter of current exigency to the American public or that processing the request within the time frame of a normal FOIA request would compromise a significant recognized interest. Accordingly, the Appeal should be denied.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Freedom of Information Act Appeal filed on September 6, 2011, by the Sierra Club, OHA Case No. TFA-0488, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant: Project On Government Oversight

Date of Filing: September 1, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0489

On September 1, 2011, the Project On Government Oversight (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a July 28, 2011, final determination issued by the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge Office (ORO). ORO responded to a Request for Information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004, filed by the Appellant with DOE Headquarters on July 11, 2011. ORO's July 28, 2011, determination indicated that a search of ORO's files did not locate any responsive documents. This Appeal, if granted, would require ORO to conduct an additional search for responsive material.

I. BACKGROUND

On July 11, 2011, the Appellant filed a request with DOE Headquarters seeking a "Report by Army Corps of Engineers on the Uranium Processing Facility planned at Oak Ridge National Laboratory." Request at 1. DOE Headquarters referred the request both to the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) which oversees the Y-12 facility at Oak Ridge, and to ORO, which oversees the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL).

On July 28, 2011, ORO issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) indicating that its search for responsive documents failed to locate the information requested by the Appellant.

On September 1, 2011, the Appellant filed the present Appeal.

II. ANALYSIS

In responding to a request for information filed under the FOIA, it is well established that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Todd J. Lemire, Case No. VFA-0760 (2002).

The Appeal correctly states that the report the Appellant seeks was cited in an article appearing on page 2 of the July 1, 2011, edition of the Nuclear Weapons & Materials Monitor. The Appellant also cites a determination letter issued by the Army Corps of Engineers (the Corps), in which the Corps states that the report was in ORNL's possession. August 18, 2011, letter from Bill D. Woodard, District Counsel, Nashville District, Corps of Engineers to the Appellant at 1. The Appellant, not unreasonably, believes that this information establishes that the report it seeks is in fact in ORO's possession.

However, the Uranium Processing Facility program is in fact located at the NNSA's Y-12 National Security Complex operated by NNSA. July 1, 2011, edition of the Nuclear Weapons & Materials Monitor at 2; July 15, 2011, email from J.T. Howell, Nuclear Fuel Supply to Amy Rothrock, ORO FOIA Officer.

While ORO has concluded its search, NNSA's search is still ongoing. ORO's obligation to search for responsive documents applies only to its own files. The Determination Letter issued by ORO on July 28, 2011, applies only to ORO's files and does not apply to the search currently being conducted by NNSA for responsive documents that may be located in the Y-12 Site Office files. The NNSA has informed us that it will be issuing a separate Determination Letter concerning the Y-12 Site Office. Memorandum of September 1, 2011, telephone conversation between Steven Fine, OHA and Ben Jaramillo, NNSA Office of Chief Counsel at 1.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the Project On Government Oversight, TFA-0489, is hereby denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Appellant:	Kaiser Eagle Mountain, LLC
Date of Filing:	September 1, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0491

On September 1, 2011, Kaiser Eagle Mountain LLC (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Golden Field Office (GFO). In that determination, GFO responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. GFO released a substantial amount of responsive information, but withheld responsive information under FOIA Exemption 4. This Appeal, if granted, would require GFO to release that information it has withheld to the Appellant.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant filed a request for information with GFO seeking "all applications and submittals made by or on behalf of Eagle Crest Energy Company [(ECEC)] seeking to obtain funding under DOE's Advanced Hydropower Grant program." Determination Letter at 1. On July 19, 2011, GFO issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing copies of ECEC's application and supporting documentation (the Application) to the Appellant. GFO however, withheld substantial portions of the Application under Exemption 4. Determination Letter at 1. On September 1, 2011, the Appellant filed the present appeal contending GFO had improperly withheld that information.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). "An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption." Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). Only Exemption 4 is at issue in the present case.

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential."[1]

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. In the present case, GFO correctly concluded that the Application was involuntarily submitted. The only basis supplied by GFO for its withholding of the Application under Exemption 4 was its finding that release of the withheld information would cause substantial harm to ECEC's competitive position.

In responding to FOIA requests, an agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the documents at issue. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009).[2] Accordingly, if the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1);

[1] In the present case, GFO does not contend that the information it is withholding is privileged, but rather contends that it is confidential.

[2] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976)(Kleppe). These requirements allow both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., Case No. VFA-0304 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's review of that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Moreover, it is well settled that if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, as in the present case, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Larson Associated, Inc., Case No. VFA-0155 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA"). In the present case, GFO merely parroted the language of the FOIA statute by stating, in conclusory fashion, that disclosure of the redacted information would result in substantial competitive harm. Determination Letter at 2. Such a statement does not provide a sufficient basis for a determination withholding information under Exemption 4. See e.g. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (remanding matter for a new determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to withheld material). If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999).

Turning to the present case, we find that GFO has not met the statutory and regulatory mandate that it specifically identify the information it is withholding. The Determination Letter's identification and description of that information it has withheld under Exemption 4 are limited simply to "confidential business practice and financial information." Determination Letter at 2. While some of the information GFO has redacted from the copy of the Application it released to the Appellant is clearly identified by this description (specifically that large portion of the withheld information consisting of financial information), much of the information it has withheld is not described by the conclusory and vague description provided by the Determination Letter: i.e. "confidential business practice information." Accordingly we find that those portions of the Application and supporting documents which consist solely of ECEC's financial information were properly described and properly withheld by GFO. See Gulf & Western Ind. v. United States, 615 F.2d 527, 530 (D.C. Cir. 1979).

The GFO has provided this office with both redacted and unredacted versions of the responsive document. Some information contained in the responsive document that was not adequately identified can clearly be properly withheld under Exemption 4's competitive harm standard, specifically that information which, if released, would reveal the identities of ECEC's proposed investors, employees, subcontractors or vendors.

Accordingly, we find that those portions of the Application and supporting documents which consist solely of such information were properly withheld by GFO.

GFO has withheld substantial portions of the section of the Application entitled "Project Narrative." Most of the information withheld from the Project Narrative section is not financial in nature, nor would its release reveal the identities of ECEC's proposed investors, employees, subcontractors or vendors. Accordingly, GFO has neither properly described such information nor explained how its release could result in substantial competitive harm to ECEC. Therefore, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to GFO. On remand, GFO should either release the information it has redacted from the Project Narrative section or issue a new determination in which it properly describes the information it is withholding and provides a sufficient explanation for concluding that its release would result in competitive harm.

We note that a substantial portion of the information GFO has withheld from the copy of the Application appears in ECEC's public submissions to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. It is therefore publicly available (and "customarily" disclosed to the public by the submitter). This fact rather convincingly undermines any claim that releasing such information under the FOIA would cause substantial competitive harm to its submitter. Many courts have held that if the information sought to be protected is itself publicly available through other sources, disclosure under the FOIA will not cause competitive harm and Exemption 4 is not applicable. See, e.g., Inner City Press/Cmty. on the Move v. Bd. of Governors of the Fed. Reserve Sys., 463 F.3d 239, 244 (2d Cir. 2006).

III. CONCLUSION

Our review of the information withheld by GFO under Exemption 4 has revealed that GFO failed to adequately describe some of the information it was withholding under Exemption 4 and failed to adequately justify its determination that release of the withheld information would likely result in competitive harm to its submitter. Accordingly, we are remanding this matter to GFO for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Kaiser Eagle Mountain, LLC, Case No. TFA-0491, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Golden Field Office for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Filing Date: September 7, 2011

Case Number: TFA-0492

This Decision concerns the Appeal that James R. Cromeenes filed from a determination that the Oak Ridge Office (ORO) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued to him on August 16, 2011. In that determination, the ORO responded to his request under the Privacy Act (PA), 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. This Appeal, if granted, would require the ORO to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered records or issue a new determination justifying its withholding of records.

I. Background

Mr. Cromeenes filed a PA request with the DOE's Office of Information Resources (OIR) for any records associated with his employment at the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant (Paducah). Because Paducah is administered by ORO, the OIR transferred his request to ORO. The ORO conducted a search for responsive documents and located one responsive document, a personnel security assurance card, which it released to Mr. Cromeenes. Determination Letter. Mr. Cromeenes then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), challenging the adequacy of the ORO's search. Appeal Letter.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA),[1] an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897

[1] Unlike the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which requires an agency to search all of its records, the Privacy Act (PA) requires only that the agency search its systems of records. However, we require a search for relevant records under the PA to be conducted with the same rigor that we require for searches under the FOIA. Martha J. McNeely, Case No. TFA-0371 (2010); Mitchell L. Rychtanek, Case No. TFA-0256 (2008). OHA decisions regarding the FOIA and the PA issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (2010) (remanding where the site office performed no search).

We contacted the ORO to gain additional information to evaluate the adequacy of its search. ORO informed us that it conducted an extensive search for documents responsive to his request. This search included files in the Records Holding Area, the K-25 facility, PGDP, Oak Ridge Associated Universities, Nuclear Regulatory Commission radiation exposure records, and the ORAU Radiation Registry. As a result, ORO did not locate any personnel, medical, radiation exposure, industrial hygiene, training, payroll, visitor log sign in, Former Worker Medical Screening Program, National Supplemental Screening Program (NSSP), NIOSH dose reconstruction, or EEOICPA claim records concerning Mr. Cromeenes, other than the one record previously produced in 2009 showing he had a security clearance in 1958. E-mail from Amy Rothrock, FOIA Officer, FOIA/ Privacy Act Office, ORO, September 16, 2011.

Based on the description of the ORO's search, we find that it conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant records and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal that James R. Cromeenes filed on September 7, 2011, OHA Case No. TFA-0492, is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner:	Stella L. Red
Date of Filing:	September 19, 2011
Case Number:	TFA-0493

On September 19, 2011, Stella L. Red (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination issued to her on August 16, 2011, by the Oak Ridge Office (Oak Ridge) of the Department of Energy (DOE). In that determination, Oak Ridge responded to a request for information the Appellant filed under the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1008. In its determination, Oak Ridge released copies of the Appellant's radiation exposure records and work history report from DOE's former K-25 plant. This Appeal, if granted, would require Oak Ridge to conduct another search for responsive information.

I. Background

On June 27, 2011, the Appellant requested copies of her Personnel Security Files, Personnel Radiation Exposure Records, and Personnel Records of Former Contractor Employees. Request dated June 27, 2011, from Appellant to Amy Rothrock, Privacy Act Officer, Oak Ridge. On August 16, 2011, Oak Ridge responded to the request, releasing the Appellant's radiation exposure records and work history report. Determination Letter dated August 16, 2011, from Elizabeth Dillon, FOIA Officer, Oak Ridge, to Appellant. In its determination, Oak Ridge explained that the Appellant's Personnel Security File is located at the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), which now holds jurisdiction over records from the DOE Y-12 National Security Complex. Id. On September 19, 2011, the Appellant appealed, challenging the adequacy of Oak Ridge's search and requesting a further search. Appeal Letter received September 19, 2011, from Appellant to Director, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA). In addition, the Appellant asks for additional copies of her personnel records [1/] and the source of a [1/] In her Appeal, the Appellant asks for additional copies of personnel records as the records previously sent to her were discarded. We have determined that she submitted a request to NNSA in August 2010. In response to that request, NNSA released responsive records to her. Although this is not the proper forum to consider a request for an additional copy of records already released to her, NNSA has indicated that it will comply with the request she made in her Appeal. Memorandum of September 22, 2011, Telephone Conversation held between

In assessing the adequacy of a search under the Privacy Act, courts apply the "adequacy of search" analysis from the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (FOIA), precedent. Sussman v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 03 Civ. 3618 DRH ETB, 2006 WL 2850608 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2006). See Shores v. FBI, 185 F. Supp. 2d 77, 82 (D.D.C. 2002); cf. Sneed v. U.S. Dep't of Labor, 14 Fed. Appx. 343, 345 (6th Cir. 2001). Under the FOIA, courts have determined that an agency must "conduct a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. U.S. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990). The standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials. Miller v. U.S. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where it is evident that the search conducted was in fact inadequate. See, e.g., Glen Bowers, Case No. TFA-0138 (2006); Doris M. Harthun, Case No. TFA-0015 (2003).[3/]

In her Appeal, the Appellant first argues that the search was inadequate because she received her Exposure History Record but not her Personnel Report. We contacted Oak Ridge to determine what type of search was conducted. We were informed that Oak Ridge asked UCOR, the present contractor responsible for records from the former K-25 plant, to conduct a search for responsive information. E-mail dated September 20, 2011, from Linda Chapman, Oak Ridge, to Janet R. H. Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. UCOR searched various computer databases for information

Benito Jaramillo, Acting FOIA Officer, NNSA, and Janet R. H. Fishman, Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), DOE. Therefore, we have determined that NNSA will be sending her an additional copy of her Personnel Security File after it completes a search for her Radiation Exposure Records, which she requested from Oak Ridge.

[2/] Under the FOIA, and therefore the Privacy Act, agencies are required only to release non-exempt, responsive documents; they are not required to answer questions. DiViaio v. Kelley, 571 F.2d 538, 542-43 (10th Cir. 1978). However, to simplify the process for the Appellant, we will answer the question she had regarding the source of a March 2011 letter to the OPM. The letter was generated by NNSA in response to a request she made for her personnel files in August 2010. When NNSA located responsive documents, it determined that some of those documents originated with OPM. The PA requires that the originating office, in this case OPM, make the determination regarding release of the documents. OPM received the request for review from NNSA on March 1, 2011, the date OPM referred to as the Appellant's request.

[3/] OHA FOIA decisions issued after November 19, 1996, may be accessed at http://www.oha.doe.gov/foia1.asp.

using the Appellant's name and Social Security Number. Id. Oak Ridge also asked its Access Authorization Branch to conduct a search, as it maintains the Personnel Security Files. Id. The Access Authorization Branch searched for information using the Appellant's Social Security Number. Id. The Access Authorization Branch located the Appellant's radiation exposure records. Id. Oak Ridge also informed us and the Appellant that any personnel records related to her employment at Y-12 would be located at the NNSA. Determination Letter; September 20, 2011, E-mail. Oak Ridge continued that it referred her request to NNSA. Id. NNSA is still processing that request. September 22, 2011, Telephone Memorandum.

As the foregoing indicates, Oak Ridge searched the proper database for records pertaining to the Appellant. It conducted its search using appropriate keywords, i.e., the Appellant's name and Social Security number. Based on the foregoing, we believe that Oak Ridge's search was reasonably calculated to uncover responsive information. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Stella L. Red, Case No. TFA-0493, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552a(g)(1). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

This Decision concerns the Appeal that Terry Constance (the Appellant) filed from a determination that the Department of Energy's (DOE) Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) issued to him on September 4, 2011. In that determination, BPA responded to his request filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as the DOE implemented in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. This Appeal, if granted, would require the BPA to perform an additional search and either release newly discovered records or issue a new determination justifying its withholding of records.

I. Background

The Appellant filed a request for:

> [C]opies of all emails, memos, meeting minutes, presentations delivered by all I-5 project opposition groups and hand written notes of Brian Silverstein, Larry Bekkedahl, Mark Korsness, Kathy Pierce and Luanna Grow taken before, during and after the meetings held with representatives of AnotherWayBPA on June 10, and June 28, 2011. The requested materials to include internal communications within BPA, BPA and DOE and BPA and representatives of EFSEC, whether > acting in a private or public capacity. The date range for this request is from May 1, 2011 through the date of receipt of this request.

Determination Letter at 1.

In response to this request, BPA conducted a search for responsive documents that indentified 48 responsive documents, which it released to the Appellant. October 12, 2011, email from Cheri Benson, BPA to Steve Fine, OHA. The Appellant then filed the present Appeal with the Office of Hearings and Appeals (OHA), challenging the adequacy of the BPA's search.

II. Analysis

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (2010) (remanding where the site office performed no search).

We contacted the BPA to gain additional information to evaluate the adequacy of its search. BPA informed us that it conducted an extensive search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request. To this end, BPA provided the following description of its search for responsive documents:

> The request for documents was circulated to all BPA staff that attended the meetings with AnotherWayBPA. Staff members are from Transmission, Environment, Fish and Wildlife and Public Affairs. . . . All such employees were canvassed in the course of fulfilling the request. The search was performed using e-mail, electronic databases and paper files. An e-mail was sent and conversations were held with each staff member to make sure they understood the FOIA request and how to search all electronic and paper files. If in doubt as to whether a record was responsive to the request, individuals were asked to provide the record for review and final determination by the FOIA Officer.
> The search terms included AnotherWayBPA, EFSEC and I-5, in addition to manually reviewing electronic and paper documents within that timeframe for possible responsiveness. All files that were reasonably expected to contain the requested records were searched and provided.

October 12, 2011, email from Cheri Benson, BPA to Steve Fine, OHA.

Based on the description of the BPA's search, we find that BPA conducted a search that was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant records and was therefore adequate. Therefore, we will deny the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Terry Constance on September 27, 2011, OHA Case No. TFA-0494, is hereby denied.

(2) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Appearance:

Decision and Order

On September 27, 2011, Russ Choma (the Appellant) filed an Appeal from a final determination issued by the Department of Energy's (DOE) Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EE). In that determination, EE responded to a Request for Information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552, as implemented by the DOE in 10 C.F.R. Part 1004. EE released a substantial amount of responsive information, but withheld responsive information under FOIA Exemptions 4 and 6. This Appeal, if granted, would require EE to release that information it has withheld to the Appellant, and to conduct a new search for responsive documents.

I. BACKGROUND

The Appellant filed a request for information with DOE Headquarters EE seeking "Any and all correspondence between any member of Congress and the DOE regarding funding for renewable energy under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act." Determination Letter at 1. DOE Headquarters referred the request to five separate Departmental elements including EE. On August 25, 2011, EE issued a determination letter (the Determination Letter) releasing 364 pages of documents to the Appellant. EE however, withheld portions of these documents under Exemptions 4 and 6.

Determination Letter at 1.[1] On September 27, 2011, the Appellant filed the present appeal contending EE had improperly withheld that information and had not conducted a reasonable search for responsive documents.

II. ANALYSIS

The FOIA generally requires that records held by federal agencies be released to the public upon request. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). However, the FOIA lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that an agency may withhold. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1)-(9); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1)-(9). These nine exemptions must be narrowly construed. Church of Scientology of California v. Department of the Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Bristol-Meyers Co. v. FTC, 424 F.2d. 935 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970)). It is well settled that the agency's burden of justification is substantial. Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Department of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 861 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (Coastal States). An agency seeking to withhold information under an exemption to the FOIA has the burden of proving that the information falls under the claimed exemption. Lewis v. IRS, 823 F.2d 375, 378 (9th Cir. 1987). Only Exemptions 4 and 6 are at issue in the present case.

Exemption 4

Exemption 4 exempts from mandatory public disclosure "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(4). In order to be withheld under Exemption 4, a document must contain either (a) trade secrets or (b) information that is "commercial" or "financial," "obtained from a person," and "privileged or confidential." National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Morton, 498 F.2d 765 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (National Parks). If the agency determines the material is a trade secret for the purposes of the FOIA, its analysis is complete and the material may be withheld under Exemption 4. Public Citizen Health Research Group v. Food & Drug Admin., 704 F.2d 1280, 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Public Citizen). If the material does not constitute a trade secret, the agency must then determine whether the information is "privileged or confidential."[2]

In order to determine whether the information is "confidential," the agency must first decide whether the information was either voluntarily or involuntarily submitted. If the information was voluntarily submitted, it may be withheld under Exemption 4 if the submitter would not customarily make such information available to the public. Critical Mass Energy Project v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 975 F.2d 871, 879 (D.C. Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 984 (1993) (Critical Mass). If the information was involuntarily submitted, the agency must show that release of the information is likely to [1] EE's August 25, 2011, Determination letter applies only to the search for responsive documents contained in EE files.

[2] In the present case, EE does not contend that the information it is withholding is privileged, but rather contends that it is confidential.

either (i) impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (ii) cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained. National Parks, 498 F.2d at 770; Critical Mass, 975 F.2d at 879. In the present case, EE concluded that the information at issue in the present case was involuntarily submitted. The only basis supplied by EE for its withholdings under Exemption 4 was its finding that

> The information being withheld [under Exemption 4] consists of any correspondence or information which has been submitted as confidential or normally would be treated as such or any correspondence or information which would relate to the involved party's competitive position. As such, this includes information on either successful or unsuccessful applicants under DOE funding opportunities.

Determination Letter at 1.

In responding to FOIA requests, an agency has an obligation to ensure that its determination letters adequately justify the withholding of documents by explaining briefly how the claimed exemption applies to the documents at issue. Without an adequately informative determination letter, the requester must speculate about the adequacy and appropriateness of the agency's determinations. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009).[3] Accordingly, if the DOE decides to withhold information, both the FOIA and the Department's regulations require the agency to (1) specifically identify the information it is withholding, (2) specifically identify the exemption under which it is withholding the information, and (3) provide a reasonably specific justification for its withholding. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.7(b)(1); Mead Data Central, Inc. v. Department of the Air Force, 566 F.2d 242 (D.C. Cir. 1977); National Parks & Conservation Ass'n v. Kleppe, 547 F.2d 673 (D.C. Cir. 1976)(Kleppe). These requirements allow both the requester and this Office to determine whether the claimed exemption was accurately applied. Tri-State Drilling, Inc., Case No. VFA-0304 (1997). It also aids the requester in formulating a meaningful appeal and facilitates this Office's review of that appeal. Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, 22 DOE ¶ 80,109 at 80,517 (1992).

Moreover, it is well settled that if an agency withholds material under Exemption 4 on the grounds that its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, as in the present case, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Kaiser Eagle Mountain, LLC, Case No. TFA-0491 (2011) (Kaiser); Larson Associated, Inc., Case No. VFA-0155 (1996); Milton L. Loeb, 23 DOE ¶ 80,124 (1993). Conclusory and generalized allegations of substantial competitive harm, on the other hand, are unacceptable and cannot support an agency's decision to withhold requested documents. Public Citizen, 704 F.2d at 1291; Kleppe, 547 F.2d at 680 ("conclusory and generalized allegations are indeed unacceptable as a means of sustaining the burden of nondisclosure under the FOIA"). In the present case, EE did not provide a sufficient basis for a determination withholding information under Exemption 4. See e.g. Environmental Defense Institute, Case No. TFA-0289 (2009) (remanding matter for a new determination explaining how Exemption 4 applies to withheld material). If an agency withholds commercial material under Exemption 4 because its disclosure is likely to cause substantial competitive harm, it must state the reasons for believing such harm will result. Kaiser, supra; Smith, Pachter, McWhorter & D'Ambrosio, Case No. VFA-0515 (1999).

Turning to the present case, we find that EE has not met the statutory and regulatory mandate that it specifically identify the information it is withholding. EE's identification and description of that information it has withheld under Exemption 4 is limited simply to "correspondence or information which has been submitted as confidential or normally would be treated as such or any correspondence or information which would relate to the involved party's competitive position." Determination Letter at 1. This description is inadequate for the purpose of justifying EE's withholdings under Exemption 4.

Therefore, we are remanding this portion of the Appeal to EE. On remand, EE should either release the information it has redacted and withheld under Exemption 4 or issue a new determination in which it properly describes the information it is withholding and provides a sufficient explanation for concluding that its release would result in substantial competitive harm.

Exemption 6

Exemption 6 shields from disclosure "[p]ersonnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(6). The purpose of Exemption 6 is to "protect individuals from the injury and embarrassment that can result from the unnecessary disclosure of personal information." Department of State v. Washington Post Co., 456 U.S. 595, 599 (1982).

In order to determine whether a record may be withheld under Exemption 6, an agency must undertake a three-step analysis. First, the agency must determine whether or not a significant privacy interest would be compromised by the disclosure of the record. If no privacy interest is identified, the record may not be withheld pursuant to this exemption. Ripskis v. Department of Hous. and Urban Dev., 746 F.2d 1, 3 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (Ripskis). Second, if privacy interests exist, the agency must determine whether or not release of the document would further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. See Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press v. Department of Justice, 489 U.S. 769, 773 (1989) (Reporters Committee). Finally, the agency must weigh the privacy interests it has identified against the public interest in order to determine whether release of the record would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See generally Ripskis, 746 F.2d at 3.

Turning to the present case, EE, invoking Exemption 6, has redacted personal information concerning members of the public such as those individual's private email addresses, personal telephone numbers, and information that would reveal those individual's identities. It is well settled that privacy interests of members of the public can be violated when information is released that can be identified as applying to them. Department of State v. Washington Post Co. 102 S.Ct. 1957, 1961 (1982) (Washington Post). Accordingly, when disclosure of information which applies to a particular individual is sought from Government records, an agency must determine whether release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of that person's privacy. Washington Post, 102 S.Ct. at 1961-62. Therefore, EE correctly concluded that the individuals whose personal information appears in the responsive documents have a privacy interest which would be invaded if the information was released to the public.

It is clear that release of this information would not further the public interest by shedding light on the operations and activities of the Government. Release of the names, e-mail addresses and phone numbers of members of the public would contribute little, if any, to public understanding of any matter of public concern. Because we have found a privacy interest in the names, e-mail addresses and phone numbers of members of the public and no public interest in their disclosure, we find that release of this information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

Adequacy of the Search

In responding to a request for information filed under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), an agency must "conduct[] a search reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents." Truitt v. Dep't of State, 897 F.2d 540, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "[T]he standard of reasonableness which we apply to agency search procedures does not require absolute exhaustion of the files; instead, it requires a search reasonably calculated to uncover the sought materials." Miller v. Dep't of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1384-85 (8th Cir. 1985); accord Truitt, 897 F.2d at 542. We have not hesitated to remand a case where the search was inadequate. Aurimas Svitojus, Case No. TFA-0349 (2010) (remanding where the site office performed no search).

We contacted EE to gain additional information to evaluate the adequacy of its search. EE informed us that it conducted an extensive search for documents responsive to the Appellant's request. This search included the written records of correspondence concerning funding of renewable energy programs between EE and Congress, and an electronic search of DOE's email database. An initial screening search located approximately 40,000 pages of documents. After further review of these documents, EE determined that 364 documents were responsive to the Appellant's request. Those documents were released to the Appellant in whole or in part. Many of the documents located during the initial screening process turned out to not be responsive because they related to energy efficiency matters and not to renewable energy.

After reviewing the search for responsive documents conducted by EE in response to the Appellant's initial request, we find that it was reasonably calculated to uncover any responsive documents and was therefore adequate.

III. CONCLUSION

Our review of the information withheld by EE under Exemption 4 has revealed that EE failed to adequately describe the information it was withholding under Exemption 4 and failed to adequately justify its determination that release of the withheld information would likely result in competitive harm to its submitter. Accordingly, we are remanding that portion of the Appeal to EE for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above. Because we have found that EE's withholdings under Exemption 6 were appropriate, and its search for responsive documents was sufficient, we require no further action by EE on those portions of the Appeal.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Russ Choma, Case No. TFA-0495, is hereby granted in part as set forth in Paragraph (2) and denied in all other aspects.

(2) The Appeal is hereby remanded to the Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy for further processing in accordance with the instructions set forth above.

(3) This is a final Order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: Michael Ravnitzky

Date of Filing: February 6, 2008

Case Number: TFC-0001

Michael Ravnitzky filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued on January 22, 2008. In that determination, NNSA denied in part a request for information that Mr. Ravnitzky had submitted on March 14, 2006, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. NNSA withheld information that was responsive to Mr. Ravnitzky's request after it determined that two responsive documents contained information that was either classified as Restricted Data or Formerly Restricted Data or met the definition of unclassified controlled nuclear information (UCNI). This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the portions of those two documents that it withheld pursuant to its January 22 determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On March 14, 2006, Mr. Ravnitzky requested copies of 12 audit reports issued by the DOE's Office of the Inspector General (IG). Among the documents the IG identified as responsive to Mr. Ravnitzky's request were Attachment 3 to Report IG-0714 (referred to as Document 2 in the January 22 letter) and Attachment C to Report IG-0619 (referred to as Document 9 in the January 22 letter). Documents 2 and 9 were among the material that the IG referred for a declassification review, and in June 2007 the Office of Document Reviews indicated to the IG which portions of the documents could not be released to Mr. Ravnitzky because they contained classified information or UCNI. Because these two documents originated with NNSA, the IG then forwarded the two documents to NNSA, so that NNSA could consider whether other portions of the documents as well required protection from disclosure pursuant to the FOIA.

NNSA completed its review of Documents 2 and 9 and, on January 22, 2008, provided Mr. Ravnitzky with copies of the two documents from which information had been deleted. In its determination letter, NNSA explained that the deleted portions of the documents "contained information about production of special nuclear material that has been classified as [Restricted Data] and/or nuclear weapons that has been classified as [Formerly Restricted Data] and/or determined to be UCNI pursuant to" the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2011 et seq. NNSA further explained that, because the Atomic Energy Act exempts these categories of information from public release, such information in Documents 2 and 9 warranted protection from disclosure under Exemption 3 of the FOIA, which provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . ."

The present Appeal seeks the disclosure of the two documents described above in their entirety. In his Appeal, Mr. Ravnitzky contends that the deletion of material from page 10 of Document 2 is "nonsensical." Mr. Ravnitzky also challenges, on several grounds, the invocation of Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA to withhold of material from pages 15 and 16 of Document 9. [*]

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); accord, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 12958, as amended by Executive Order 13292, is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification, declassification and safeguarding of national security information (NSI). When properly classified under this Executive Order, NSI is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information and UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). This authority has now been delegated to the Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed Documents 2 and 9.

[*] In its determination letter, NNSA invoked Exemption 3 alone to withheld information contained in Documents 2 and 9 from public disclosure. Mr. Ravnitzky claims in his Appeal that some information was deleted from pages 15 and 16 of Document 9 pursuant to Exemption 1. However, as noted below, appellate review of these documents has now determined that Exemption 1 is the proper basis for protecting portions of these documents from public disclosure.

The Deputy Chief reported the results of his review of Documents 2 and 9 in a memorandum dated March 3, 2009. In that review, he determined that, based on current DOE classification guidance, page 10 of Document 2 contains no classified information or UCNI. Pages 15 and 16, however, contain information that is properly classified as NSI by Executive Order 12958, as amended. The information that the Deputy Chief identified as NSI falls with section 1.4(f) of the Executive Order, which exempts from public disclosure information that reveals "United States Government programs for safeguarding nuclear materials or facilities." The Deputy Chief also determined, however, that the majority of the content on pages 15 and 16 of Document 9 is not NSI. The Deputy Chief has provided this Office with copies of those pages from which the NSI has been deleted. Beside each deletion, "DOE (b)(1)" has been written in the margin of the document. The denying official for these withholdings is Michael A. Kilpatrick, Deputy Director, Office of Security and Safety Performance Assurance, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Chief's review, we have determined that Executive Order 12958, as amended, requires the DOE to continue withholding portions of Document 9. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 1, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order. Therefore, those portions of the reviewed documents that the Deputy Chief has now determined to be properly identified as NSI must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Deputy Chief has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

In view of the Deputy Chief's findings, and at his suggestion, we have remanded these two documents to the NNSA for a new review. In that review, NNSA must consider whether it should withhold (a) any portions of page 10 of Document 2 and (b) any portions of pages 15 and 16 of Document 9 not determined to be NSI that were previously withheld from Mr. Ravnitzky. After completing its review, the NNSA should either release page 10 of Document 2 in its entirety and the currently redacted versions of pages 15 and 16 of Document 9, or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from those pages that it provides to Mr. Ravnitzky. Accordingly, Mr. Ravnitzky's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Michael Ravnitzky on February 6, 2008, Case No. TFC-0001, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The National Nuclear Security Administration shall review (a) page 10 of Attachment 3 to Report IG-0714, issued by the DOE's Office of the Inspector General, and (b) the redacted versions of pages 15 and 16 of Attachment C to Report IG-0619, also issued by the DOE's Office of the Inspector General, which bears markings indicating where all national security information has been properly deleted. Upon completing its review, the NNSA shall either release to Michael Ravnitzky page 10 described above in its entirety and the redacted versions of pages 15 and 16 described above in their entirety, or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from the copies it provides to Mr. Ravnitzky.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

DECISION AND ORDER
OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appeal

Name of Petitioner: The National Security Archive

Date of Filing: June 13, 2008

Case Number: TFC-0002

The National Security Archive (Appellant) filed an Appeal from a determination that the Office of Information Resources (OIR) of the Department of Energy (DOE) issued on May 20, 2008. In that determination, OIR denied in part a request for information that the Appellant had submitted pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. OIR withheld portions of six documents that were responsive to the Appellant's request after it determined that those portions contained classified information, as identified by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the Department of Defense (DoD). This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the portions of those documents that it withheld pursuant to its May 20, 2008, determination.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

The Appellant requested copies of six specified documents contained in the journal of former Atomic Energy Commissioner Glenn Seaborg. In chronological order, the requested documents are:

1. Meeting of the National Security Council, March 15, 1969 (Document 1);
2. Meeting of NSSM 28 Steering Committee, May 14, 1969 (Document 2);
3. Meeting of NSSM 28 Steering Committee, May 28, 1969 (Document 3);
4. Meeting of the National Security Council, June 18, 1969 (Document 4;
5. Meeting of NSSM 28 Steering Committee, June 23, 1969 (Document 5); and
6. Meeting of the National Security Council, June 25, 1969 (Document 6).[*]

[*] The Appellant requested a copy of a seventh document, Meeting of the National Security Council, April 30, 1969, which was released in its entirety as an attachment to the May 20, 2008, determination letter. Consequently, this document is not the subject of the current appeal.

The DOE's Office of Classification reviewed the above six documents to determine whether they contained any classified information that could not be released to the requester. As was explained in OIR's determination letter, the Office of Classification determined that those documents, which are located in the files of the DOE's Office of History and Heritage Resources, contained no DOE classified information. Nevertheless, the CIA and the DoD identified classified information in those documents, and OIR provided copies of the requested documents with portions deleted. In the determination letter, OIR stated that the deleted portions of the documents were withheld from the requester pursuant to Exemptions 1 and 3 of the FOIA.

In its Appeal, the Appellant seeks the disclosure of the six documents described above in their entirety. The Appellant contends that the DOE has applied the grounds for withholding information in an overly stringent manner, particularly because similar information has already been made public through other sources.

On March 9, 2011, the Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security, provided the Office of Hearings and Appeals with his appellate review of the above described six documents, together with an unredacted version of Document 1 and newly redacted versions of the remaining documents for release to the Appellant. Although the CIA and the DoD had not fully explained why they invoked Exemptions 1 and 3 in the report the Deputy Chief provided, we determined that we could nevertheless release the provided versions of the six documents to the Appellant in advance of receipt of the required information from those agencies, and did so on March 10, 2011. We recently received complete justifications from the CIA and the DoD regarding their application of Exemptions 1 and 3, and address them at this time.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); accord, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 13526 is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification, declassification and safeguarding of national security information (NSI). When properly classified under this Executive Order, NSI is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1.

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides for withholding material "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); accord, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). The Central Intelligence Agency

Act of 1949, which protects from disclosure "the organization, functions, names, official titles, salaries or numbers of personnel" employed by the CIA, 50 U.S.C. § 403g, has been held to meet the requirements of subpart B above. Larson v. Dep't of State, 565 F.3d 857, 865 n.2 (D.C. Cir. 2009).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information and UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). This authority has now been delegated to the Deputy Chief for Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed the six documents described above. Because the original review of the documents resulted in the CIA and the DoD identifying classified information in these documents, the Deputy Chief sent the six documents to those agencies for a coordinated appellate review.

The Deputy Chief reported the results of his coordinated review of the six documents in a memorandum dated March 2, 2011. In his memorandum, he concurred with the DOE's initial determination that the six documents contain no DOE classified or sensitive information. The CIA and DoD, however, determined in their respective appellate reviews that the five of the six documents under consideration contain classified information. Neither agency found any withholdable information in Document 1, and that document will be released in its entirety.

In its response to the Deputy Chief, the CIA indicated that three of the documents it reviewed contained CIA classified information. This information has been withheld from the copies of Documents 2, 3, and 5 that will be provided to the National Security Archive. The basis for each withheld portion is marked in the margin of the document at the site of redaction as follows. "CIA (b)(1)" indicates that the information was redacted pursuant to Section 1.4(c) of Executive Order 13526, which exempts from public disclosure information that reveals "intelligence activities (including covert action), intelligence sources or methods, or cryptology." "CIA (b)(3)" indicates that the information was redacted pursuant to Section 6 of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949. The denying official for these withholdings is Mr. Scott Koch, Acting Executive Secretary, Agency Release Panel, CIA.

In its appellate review, the DoD determined that three documents, Documents 4, 5, and 6, contained DoD classified information. Consequently, copies of those documents will be provided to the National Security Archive with portions deleted. Each DoD redaction is marked "DoD (b)(1)" in the margin of the document at the site of the redaction. The DoD's basis for withholding classified information is Section 3.3(b) of Executive Order 13526, which exempts from automatic declassification, under Section 3.3(a), "information the release of which would clearly and demonstrably be expected to . . . (5) reveal formally named or numbered U.S. military war plans that remain in effect, or reveal operational or tactical elements of prior plans that are contained in such active plans." The denying official for these withholdings is Mr. Mark Patrick, Chief, Information Management Division, Joint Staff, DoD.

Based on the Deputy Chief's review, we have determined that Executive Order 13526 and Section 6 of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 require the DOE to continue withholding portions of Documents 2 through 6. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemptions 1 and 3, the disclosure is prohibited by executive order or statute. Therefore, those portions of the reviewed documents that the Deputy Chief has now determined to be properly identified as classified information must continue to be withheld from disclosure. Because the CIA and the DoD have reduced the extent of the information previously withheld from the Appellant, its Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by the National Security Archive on June 13, 2008, Case No. TFC-0002, is hereby granted to the extent that certain portions of the documents withheld in the Department of Energy's May 20, 2008, Determination Letter have been released to the requester, as set forth in Paragraph 2 below, and is hereby denied in all other respects.

(2) An unredacted version of "Meeting of the National Security Council, March 15, 1969," contained in former Atomic Energy Commissioner Glenn Seaborg's journal, was provided to the National Security Archive on March 10, 2011. At the same time, newly redacted versions of the following documents contained in Commissioner Seaborg's journal, "Meeting of NSSM 28 Steering Committee, May 14, 1969," "Meeting of NSSM 28 Steering Committee, May 28, 1969," "Meeting of the National Security Council, June 18, 1969," "Meeting of NSSM 28 Steering Committee, June 23, 1969," and "Meeting of the National Security Council, June 25, 1969," were provided to the National Security Archive.

	)	Case No. TFC-0004

Issued: February 3, 2012

Decision and Order

Tri-Valley CARES filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued on June 2, 2010. In that determination, NNSA denied in part a request for information that Tri-Valley CARES had submitted on September 8, 2008, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. NNSA withheld information that was responsive to the request after it determined that the information was protected from mandatory disclosure under two provisions of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the portions of those documents responsive to Tri-Valley CARES's request that were withheld from disclosure due to their classified nature.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On September 8, 2008, Tri-Valley CARES requested a copy of "the Defense Programs Advisory Group's (DPAG) study of the secondary components of nuclear weapons." On June 2, 2010, NNSA issued a determination in which it released a copy of the "Secondary Lifetime Assessment Study," SAND2001-0063 (Study), from which information was redacted and withheld pursuant to Exemptions 3 and 6 of the FOIA. Tri-Valley CARES challenged those withholdings in an Appeal filed on July 19, 2010. We issued a decision regarding the information withheld from the Study pursuant to Exemption 6 on August 9, 2010 (Case No. TFA-0402).[1] In its Appeal, Tri-Valley CARES contends that the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 3 was withheld in an internally inconsistent manner, and therefore may have been improperly withheld from disclosure. It further maintains that every Significant Finding Investigation is assigned an unclassified title and number, which was improperly withheld from disclosure under Exemption 3. Because, as explained below, Exemption 3 concerns classified information, we referred the portion of the Appeal that challenged the withholdings under Exemption 3 to the Office of Health, Safety and Security (HSS), which reviewed the Exemption 3 withholdings to determine whether they were properly classified under current guidance. We have now received HSS's report.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides that an agency may withhold from disclosure information "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, Case No. TFA-0115 (2006).

The Director of the Office of Security has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). This authority has now been delegated to the Principal Deputy Chief for Mission Support Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed the Study, focusing on the applicability of Exemption 3 to its contents.

The Deputy Chief reported the results of his review in a memorandum dated January 20, 2012. In that review, he determined that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the information previously withheld as classified information may be released. Much of the information previously withheld as classified information, however, is still properly classified, and must continue to be withheld from disclosure. The information that the Deputy Chief identified as properly classified concerns design and design-related information regarding the secondary stages of nuclear weapons in the United States enduring stockpile that is classified as Restricted Data (RD) and Formerly Restricted Data (FRD). RD and FRD are forms of classified information the withholding of which is required under the Atomic Energy Act, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under Exemption 3.

[1] Decisions issued by the Office of Hearings and Appeals are available on the OHA website located at http://www.oha.doe.gov. The text of a cited decision may be accessed by entering the case number of the decision in the search engine at http://www.oha.doe.gov/search.htm.

The Deputy Chief has provided this Office with a copy of the Study from which the RD and FRD have been deleted. Beside or within each deletion, "DOE (b)(3)" has been written in the margin of the document. The denying official for these withholdings is William A. Eckroade, Principal Deputy Chief for Mission Support Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Chief's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the DOE to continue withholding portions of the Study pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the Study that the Deputy Chief has now determined to be properly identified as RD or FRD must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Deputy Chief has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

In view of the Deputy Chief's findings, we will remand the Study to NNSA for a new review. In that review, NNSA must consider whether it should withhold, under any other authority provided in the FOIA, any portions of the document not determined to be RD or FRD that were previously withheld as such from Tri-Valley CARES.[2] After completing its review, NNSA should either release those portions or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from the version of the Study that it provides to Tri-Valley CARES. Accordingly, Tri-Valley CARES's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Tri-Valley CARES on July 19, 2010, Case No. TFC-0004, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The National Nuclear Security Administration shall review the redacted version of the "Secondary Lifetime Assessment Study," SAND2001-0063, which bears markings indicating where all Restrict Data and Formerly Restricted Data have been properly deleted. Upon completing its review, the NNSA shall either release to Tri-Valley CARES the redacted version of the document described above, or issue a new determination that provides adequate justification for the withholding of any additional information from the version it provides to Tri-Valley CARES. It shall furthermore reach a determination, in accordance with the Decision and Order OHA issued in Case No. TFA-0402, regarding the information it previously withheld pursuant to Exemption 6, if it has not already done so, and either release all such information or provide adequate justification for withholding it in full or in part.

[2] The copy of the Study that the Deputy Chief has provided indicates the information that NNSA withheld pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA. In its Decision and Order in Case No. TFA-0402, OHA upheld the withholding of some of the information NNSA withheld under Exemption 6 and remanded the matter for further justification of its withholding of other information.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

Eric Schlosser filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued on July 7, 2010. In that determination, NNSA denied in part a request for information that Mr. Schlosser had submitted on September 24, 2008, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. NNSA withheld information that was responsive to the request after it determined that the information was protected from mandatory disclosure under two provisions of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release identified portions of those documents responsive to Mr. Schlosser's request that were withheld from disclosure due to their classified nature.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On September 24, 2008, Mr. Schlosser requested 12 documents from the Sandia National Laboratories archives. On July 7, 2010, NNSA issued a determination in which it released one of the requested documents in its entirety, released eight documents with portions withheld pursuant to either Exemption 3 or Exemption 6 of the FOIA, or both exemptions, and forwarded the remaining three documents to the Department of Defense for its review. Mr. Schlosser challenged certain withholdings taken pursuant to Exemption 3 in an Appeal filed on August 10, 2010.[1] In his Appeal, Mr. Schlosser contends that specified portions of six of the documents contain information withheld pursuant to Exemption 3 that should be released to him, because they relate to nuclear weapons no longer contained in our arsenal and safety issues that no longer exist, having been corrected through advances in design and technology. Because, as explained below, Exemption 3 concerns classified information, we referred the Appeal to the Office of Health, Safety and Security (HSS), which reviewed the Exemption 3 withholdings to determine whether they were properly classified under current guidance. We have now received HSS's report.

II. Analysis

Exemption 3 of the FOIA provides that an agency may withhold from disclosure information "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute . . . provided that such statute (A) requires that the matters be withheld from the public in such a manner as to leave no discretion on the issue, or (B) establishes particular criteria for withholding or refers to particular types of matter to be withheld." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3); see 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(3). We have previously determined that the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2011-2296, is a statute to which Exemption 3 is applicable. See, e.g., National Security Archive, Case No. TFA-0115 (2006).[2]

The Director of the Office of Security has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). This authority has now been delegated to the Principal Deputy Chief for Mission Support Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this Appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed those pages of six documents that Mr. Schlosser identified as containing information the withholding of which he was challenging in his Appeal.

The Deputy Chief reported the results of his review in a memorandum dated March 7, 2012. In that review, he determined that, based on current DOE classification guidance, some of the information previously withheld as classified information may be released. Much of the information previously withheld as classified information, however, is still properly classified, and must continue to be withheld from disclosure. The information that the Deputy Chief identified as properly classified relates to design and design-related information concerning nuclear weapons that is classified as Restricted Data (RD) and Formerly Restricted Data (FRD). RD and FRD are forms of classified information the withholding of which is required under the Atomic Energy Act, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under Exemption 3.

The Deputy Chief has provided this Office with copies of the pages that were reviewed, from which the RD and FRD have been deleted. Beside each deletion, "DOE (b)(3)" has been written in the margin of the page. The denying official for these withholdings is William A. Eckroade, Principal Deputy Chief for Mission Support Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security, Department of Energy.

Based on the Deputy Chief's review, we have determined that the Atomic Energy Act requires the DOE to continue withholding portions of the six documents pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA. Although a finding of exemption from mandatory disclosure generally requires our subsequent consideration of the public interest in releasing the information, such consideration is not permitted where, as in the application of Exemption 3, the disclosure is prohibited by statute. Therefore, those portions of the six documents that the Deputy Chief has now determined to be properly identified as RD or FRD must be withheld from disclosure. Nevertheless, the Deputy Chief has reduced the extent of the information previously deleted to permit releasing the maximum amount of information consistent with national security considerations.

In view of the Deputy Chief's findings, we will remand the reviewed portions of the six documents to NNSA. After deleting from those portions any information that it initially withheld from Mr. Schlosser pursuant to Exemption 6 of the FOIA, NNSA should release appropriately redacted versions of those portions to Mr. Schlosser. Accordingly, Mr. Schlosser's Appeal will be granted in part and denied in part.

It Is Therefore Ordered That:

(1) The Appeal filed by Eric Schlosser on August 10, 2010, Case No. TFC-0005, is hereby granted to the extent set forth in paragraph (2) below and denied in all other respects.

(2) The National Nuclear Security Administration shall release to Mr. Schlosser the newly redacted portions of six documents that were attached to a memorandum issued by the Principal Deputy Chief for Mission Support Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security, dated March 7, 2012, after further redacting any information initially deleted from those portions pursuant to Exemption 6 of the Freedom of Information Act.

(3) This is a final order of the Department of Energy from which any aggrieved party may seek judicial review pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(4)(B). Judicial review may be sought in the district in which the requester resides or has a principal place of business, or in which the agency records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

Decision and Order

Tri-Valley CARES filed an Appeal from a determination that the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) issued on January 14, 2011. In that determination, NNSA denied in part a request for information that Tri-Valley CARES had submitted on October 11, 2007, pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. NNSA withheld information that was responsive to the request after it determined that the information was protected from mandatory disclosure under three provisions of the FOIA. This Appeal, if granted, would require the DOE to release the portions of those documents responsive to Tri-Valley CARES's request that were withheld from disclosure due to their classified nature.

The FOIA requires that documents held by federal agencies generally be released to the public upon request. The FOIA, however, lists nine exemptions that set forth the types of information that may be withheld at the discretion of the agency. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). Those nine categories are repeated in the DOE regulations implementing the FOIA. 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b).

I. Background

On October 11, 2007, Tri-Valley CARES requested a number of documents concerning the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. NNSA issued its first determination in May 2008, providing some responsive documents, which are not the subject of this Appeal. On January 14, 2011, NNSA issued a second determination, in which it released a copy of the "Biological Risk and Threat Assessment for Building 368 Biological Safety Laboratory Level 3" issued by the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, July 14, 2005 (Risk Assessment), from which information was redacted and withheld pursuant to Exemptions 1, 2 and 6 of the FOIA. Tri-Valley CARES challenged those withholdings in an Appeal filed on February 25, 2011. We issued a decision regarding the information withheld from the Risk Assessment pursuant to Exemptions 2 and 6 on May 25, 2011 (Case No. TFA-0463). In its Appeal, Tri-Valley CARES contends that the information withheld pursuant to Exemption 1 was withheld in an internally inconsistent manner, and therefore may have been improperly withheld from disclosure. Because, as explained below, Exemption 1 concerns classified information, we referred the portion of the Appeal that challenged the withholdings under Exemption 1 to the Office of Health, Safety and Security (HSS), which reviewed the Exemption 1 withholdings to determine whether they were properly classified under current guidance. We have now received HSS's report.

II. Analysis

Exemption 1 of the FOIA provides that an agency may exempt from disclosure matters that are "(A) specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy and (B) are in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); accord, 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1). Executive Order 13526 is the current Executive Order that provides for the classification, declassification and safeguarding of national security information (NSI). When properly classified under this Executive Order, NSI is exempt from mandatory disclosure under Exemption 1. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(1); 10 C.F.R. § 1004.10(b)(1).

The Director of the Office of Security (the Director) has been designated as the official who shall make the final determination for the DOE regarding FOIA appeals involving the release of classified information and UCNI. DOE Delegation Order No. 00-030.00, Section 1.8 (December 6, 2001). This authority has now been delegated to the Principal Deputy Chief for Mission Support Operations, Office of Health, Safety and Security (Deputy Chief). Upon referral of this appeal from the Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Deputy Chief reviewed the Risk Assessment, focusing on the applicability of Exemption 1 to its contents.
