

Pacific Northwest National Laboratory

- PNNL has led technical assistance (TA) programs focused on deploying energy storage to advance equity, resilience, and affordability goals. Community-centered workforce development is a key component.
- The energy storage workforce contains a wide diversity of career paths.
- Developing the energy storage workforce as part of the energy transition can help address energy inequity.
- Challenges to local workforce development include project scale and skills gaps.
- Partnerships with community-serving educational institutions are investments in a just transition and can address gaps.

Devyn Powell
Energy Policy Analyst