General Comment

I am writing to express my total and unequivocal opposition to the Saguaro Project. This initiative poses a direct threat to biodiversity, fragile desert ecosystems, and the survival of many species — including prairie dogs, who play a vital role in their environment.

Furthermore, large-scale projects like this don't only affect land-based habitats. They cause cascading impacts that threaten marine life as well — including whales, sea turtles, and countless aquatic species — through pollution, disruption of migratory routes, and the breakdown of ecological food webs.

We cannot continue sacrificing wildlife in the name of “energy progress.” This is yet another form of extractivism disguised as sustainability. Destroying natural habitats to install industrial infrastructure is not a green solution — it is a contradiction.

I demand the immediate cancellation of this project and urge the prioritization of truly sustainable alternatives that respect life, ecosystems, and the territories we all depend on. There is no climate justice without ecological justice.
