General Comment

The Saguaro Project is not only a direct threat to whales and other marine species, but to the entire ecosystem on which life on this planet depends. This industrial megaproject endangers the biodiversity of Baja California Sur—a unique and fragile territory deeply connected to the health of our oceans worldwide. As a Mexican and a resident of Baja California Sur, I am deeply concerned and exhausted by the repeated prioritization of economic interests over life, water, and territory. We have already seen the devastating consequences of Canadian megamining operations. We cannot allow our sea—our home and source of sustenance—to become another sacrifice zone. I demand that the thousands of voices opposing this mass ecocide be heard. Our sea is not for sale; it must be defended. The life of the ocean is also our life.
