General Comment

I stand firmly against the SAGUARO project — a violent act of environmental extractivism that threatens life, ecosystems, and the future of our planet.

This project is not development — it's destruction. It puts profit over biodiversity, and short-term gain over intergenerational justice. SAGUARO threatens marine ecosystems already under severe stress, including critical habitats for endangered whales and the last remaining vaquitas. It risks irreversible damage in one of the most ecologically rich regions of the world.

Extractivism is not progress. It's a colonial legacy that keeps sacrificing territories, species, and communities in the name of growth — while the real cost is paid by the most vulnerable.

We need science that heals, not harms. We need policies that protect, not extract. And we need collective action rooted in justice, ecology, and care for all forms of life.

SAGUARO must be stopped.
