General Comment

The Saguaro project poses a serious threat to the environment and to the well-being of coastal communities in the Gulf of Ulloa. It endangers a fragile marine ecosystem that is home to gray whales, sea turtles, and other protected species, while undermining the livelihoods of those who depend on sustainable fishing and healthy oceans.

When the ultra-wealthy have finished exploiting the Earth and disrupting the natural balance we all depend on, they will realize too late that they cannot eat, drink, or breathe their money.

This project must be stopped. True progress must respect biodiversity, protect ecosystems, and listen to the voices of local communities.
