SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

Section 1817 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 requires that DOE, in consultation with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), conduct a study of the potential benefits of cogeneration and small power production. DOE also must analyze the impact of regulatory mandates, tariffs, rate structures and similar policies on the proliferation of distributed energy technologies. Section 1817 further requires that DOE recommend a methodology for valuing the benefits of distributed generation (DG).

To initiate the DG Study DOE published a "notice of inquiry and request for public comment" in the Federal Register on January 30, 2006 (71 FR 4904). The notice requested public input (such as narratives of experiences, data, case studies, reports and results of analyses, etc.) pertaining to the planning, installation, commissioning and operation of distributed energy systems. The notice also invited interested parties to submit case studies and similar information depicting the impact of regulations, statutes, codes, tariffs, rate structures and other similar policies on the various aspects of DG, combined heat and power (CHP) systems, and related distributed energy technologies. A copy of the January 30, 2006 notice is available on the OE Web page.

II. DG Study, Request for Public Review and Comment, and Report

A. DG Study

DOE has considered and analyzed comments and supporting information received in response to the notice of January 30, 2006, and has completed a DG Study. DOE is hereby announcing that the DG Study is available for public review and inviting all interested parties to submit comments on the DG Study.

B. Submission of Comments

In accordance with Section 1817, DOE requests written comments from interested parties on all aspects of the DG Study. DOE is especially interested in receiving comments from persons with particular knowledge of the legal, economic and technical elements related to the benefits and rate-related issues concerning distributed generation.

C. Report

At the end of the public review period specified in the DATES section of this Notice, DOE will issue a report describing the results of the DG Study and a summary of public comments received. The study may be revised to reflect comments as appropriate. The Secretary of Energy will present the report to the President and Congress. The DG Study report will be released for public distribution shortly thereafter.

The DG Study is available for public inspection at the Department of Energy, Freedom of Information Reading Room, Room 1E-190, 1000 Independence Avenue, SW., Washington, DC 20585 between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, except for holidays. The report, upon its completion and submission to the President and Congress, will be available at DOE's Freedom of Information Reading Room and at the OE Web site.

Issued in Washington, DC on February 26, 2007.

Director, Office of Electricity Delivery and Energy Reliability.
